Les halliers s’emplissaient pour toi de visions;
Tu voyais des lueurs, des formes, des rayons,
Cerbère se frotter, la queue entre les jambes,
A Bacchus, dieu des vins et père des ïambes;
Silène digérer dans sa grotte, pensif;
Et se glisser dans l’ombre, et s’enivrer, lascif,
Aux blanches nudités des nymphes peu vêtues,
Le faune aux pieds de chèvre, aux oreilles pointues!
Horace, quand grisé d’un petit vin sabin,
Tu surprenais Glycère ou Lycoris au bain,
Qui t’eût dit, ô Flaccus! quand tu peignais à Rome
Les jeunes chevaliers courant dans l’hippodrome,
Comme Molière a peint en France les marquis,
Que tu faisais ces vers charmants, profonds, exquis,
Pour servir, dans le siècle odieux où nous sommes,
D’instruments de torture à d’horribles bonshommes,
Mal peignés, mal vêtus, qui mâchent, lourds pédants,
Comme un singe une fleur, ton nom entre leurs dents!
Grimauds hideux qui n’ont, tant leur tête est vidée,
Jamais eu de maîtresse et jamais eu d’idée!

Puis j’ajoutais, farouche:
 — O cancres! qui mettez
Une soutane aux dieux de l’éther irrités,
Un béguin à Diane, et qui de vos tricornes
Coiffez sinistrement les olympiens mornes,
Eunuques, tourmenteurs, crétins, soyez maudits!
Car vous êtes les vieux, les noirs, les engourdis,
Car vous êtes l’hiver; car vous êtes, ô cruches!
L’ours qui va dans les bois cherchant un arbre à ruches,
L’ombre, le plomb, la mort, la tombe, le néant!
Nul ne vit près de vous dressé sur son séant;
Et vous pétrifiez d’une haleine sordide
Le jeune homme naïf, étincelant, splendide;

Et vous vous approchez de l’aurore, endormeurs!
A Pindare serein plein d’épiques rumeurs,
A Sophocle, à Térence, à Plaute, à l’ambroisie,
O traîtres, vous mêlez l’antique hypocrisie,
Vos ténèbres, vos moeurs, vos jougs, vos exeats,
Et l’assoupissement des noirs couvents béats;
Vos coups d’ongle rayant tous les sublimes livres,
Vos préjugés qui font vos yeux de brouillards ivres,
L’horreur de l’avenir, la haine du progrès;
Et vous faites, sans peur, sans pitié, sans regrets,
A la jeunesse, aux coeurs vierges, à l’espérance,
Boire dans votre nuit ce vieil opium rance!
O fermoirs de la bible humaine! sacristains
De l’art, de la science, et des maîtres lointains,
Et de la vérité que l’homme aux cieux épèle,
Vous changez ce grand temple en petite chapelle!
Guichetiers de l’esprit, faquins dont le goût sûr
Mène en laisse le beau; porte-clefs de l’azur,
Vous prenez Théocrite, Eschyle aux sacrés voiles,
Tibulle plein d’amour, Virgile plein d’étoiles;
Vous faites de l’enfer avec ces paradis!

Et, ma rage croissant, je reprenais:
— Maudits,
Ces monastères sourds! bouges! prisons haïes!
Oh! comme on fit jadis au pédant de Veïes,
Culotte bas, vieux tigre! Écoliers! écoliers!
Accourez par essaims, par bandes, par milliers,
Du gamin de Paris au groeculus de Rome,
Et coupez du bois vert, et fouaillez-moi cet homme!
Jeunes bouches, mordez le metteur de bâillons!
Le mannequin sur qui l’on drape des haillons
A tout autant d’esprit que ce cuistre en son antre,
Et tout autant de coeur; et l’un a dans le ventre
Du latin et du grec comme l’autre a du foin.
Ah! je prends Phyllodoce et Xantis à témoin
Que je suis amoureux de leurs claires tuniques;

Mais je hais l’affreux tas des vils pédants iniques!
Confier un enfant, je vous demande un peu,
A tous ces êtres noirs! autant mettre, morbleu!
La mouche en pension chez une tarentule!
Ces moines, expliquer Platon, lire Catulle,
Tacite racontant le grand Agricola,
Lucrèce! eux, déchiffrer Homère, ces gens-là!
Ces diacres! ces bedeaux dont le groin renifle!
Crânes d’où sort la nuit, pattes d’où sort la giffle,
Vieux dadais à l’air rogue, au sourcil triomphant,
Qui ne savent pas même épeler un enfant!
Ils ignorent comment l’âme naît et veut croître.
Cela vous a Laharpe et Nonotte pour cloître!
Ils en sont à l’A, B, C, D, du coeur humain;
Ils sont l’horrible Hier qui veut tuer Demain;
Ils offrent à l’aiglon leurs règles d’écrevisses.
Et puis ces noirs tessons ont une odeur de vices.
O vieux pots égueulés des soifs qu’on ne dit pas!
Le pluriel met une S à leurs meâs culpâs,
Les boucs mystérieux, en les voyant s’indignent,
Et, quand on dit: «Amour!» terre et cieux! ils se signent.
Leur vieux viscère mort insulte au coeur naissant.
Ils le prennent de haut avec l’adolescent,
Et ne tolèrent pas le jour entrant dans l’âme
Sous la forme pensée ou sous la forme femme.

Quand la muse apparaît, ces hurleurs de holà
Disent: «Qu’est-ce que c’est que cette folle-là?»
Et, devant ses beautés, de ses rayons accrues,
Ils reprennent: «Couleurs dures, nuances crues;
Vapeurs, illusions, rêves; et quel travers
Avez-vous de fourrer l’arc-en-ciel dans vos vers?»
Ils raillent les enfants, ils raillent les poëtes;
Ils font aux rossignols leurs gros yeux de chouettes:
L’enfant est l’ignorant, ils sont l’ignorantin;
Ils raturent l’esprit, la splendeur, le matin;
Ils sarclent l’idéal ainsi qu’un barbarisme,

Et ces culs de bouteille ont le dédain du prisme.

Ainsi l’on m’entendait dans ma geôle crier.

Le monologue avait le temps de varier.
Et je m’exaspérais, faisant la faute énorme,
Ayant raison au fond, d’avoir tort dans la forme.
Après l’abbé Tuet, je maudissais Bezout;
Car, outre les pensums où l’esprit se dissout,
J’étais alors en proie à la mathématique.
Temps sombre! enfant ému du frisson poétique,
Pauvre oiseau qui heurtais du crâne mes barreaux,
On me livrait tout vif aux chiffres, noirs bourreaux;
On me faisait de force ingurgiter l’algèbre;
On me liait au fond d’un Boisbertrand funèbre;
On me tordait, depuis les ailes jusqu’au bec.
Sur l’affreux chevalet des X et des Y;
Hélas! on me fourrait sous les os maxillaires
Le théorème orné de tous ses corollaires;
Et je me débattais, lugubre patient
Du diviseur prêtant main-forte au quotient.
De là mes cris.
Un jour, quand l’homme sera sage,
Lorsqu’on n’instruira plus les oiseaux par la cage,
Quand les sociétés difformes sentiront
Dans l’enfant mieux compris se redresser leur front,
Que, des libres essors ayant sondé les règles,
On connaîtra la loi de croissance des aigles,
Et que le plein midi rayonnera pour tous,
Savoir étant sublime, apprendre sera doux.
Alors, tout en laissant au sommet des études
Les grands livres latins et grecs, ces solitudes
Où l’éclair gronde, où luit la mer, où l’astre rit,
Et qu’emplissent les vents immenses de l’esprit,
C’est en les pénétrant d’explication tendre,
En les faisant aimer, qu’on les fera comprendre.

Homère emportera dans son vaste reflux
L’écolier ébloui; l’enfant ne sera plus
Une bête de somme attelée à Virgile;
Et l’on ne verra plus ce vif esprit agile
Devenir, sous le fouet d’un cuistre ou d’un abbé,
Le lourd cheval poussif du pensum embourbé.
Chaque village aura, dans un temple rustique,
Dans la lumière, au lieu du magister antique,
Trop noir pour que jamais le jour y pénétrât,
L’instituteur lucide et grave, magistrat
Du progrès, médecin de l’ignorance, et prêtre
De l’idée; et dans l’ombre on verra disparaître
L’éternel écolier et l’éternel pédant.
L’aube vient en chantant, et non pas en grondant.
Nos fils riront de nous dans cette blanche sphère;
Ils se demanderont ce que nous pouvions faire
Enseigner au moineau par le hibou hagard.
Alors, le jeune esprit et le jeune regard
Se lèveront avec une clarté sereine
Vers la science auguste, aimable et souveraine;
Alors, plus de grimoire obscur, fade, étouffant;
Le maître, doux apôtre incliné sur l’enfant,
Fera, lui versant Dieu, l’azur et l’harmonie,
Boire la petite âme à la coupe infinie.
Alors, tout sera vrai, lois, dogmes, droits, devoirs.
Tu laisseras passer dans tes jambages noirs
Une pure lueur, de jour en jour moins sombre,
O nature, alphabet des grandes lettres d’ombre!

A GRANVILLE, EN 1836

Voie juin. Le moineau raille
Dans les champs les amoureux;

Le rossignol de muraille
Chante dans son nid pierreux.

Les herbes et les branchages,
Pleins de soupirs et d’abois,
Font de charmants rabâchages
Dans la profondeur des bois.

La grive et la tourterelle
Prolongent, dans les nids sourds,
La ravissante querelle
Des baisers et des amours.

Sous les treilles de la plaine,
Dans l’antre où verdit l’osier,
Virgile enivre Silène,
Et Rabelais Grandgousier.

O Virgile, verse à boire!
Verse à boire, ô Rabelais!
La forêt est une gloire;
La caverne est un palais!

Il n’est pas de lac ni d’île
Qui ne nous prenne au gluau,
Qui n’improvise une idylle,
Ou qui ne chante un duo.

Car l’amour chasse aux bocages,
Et l’amour pêche aux ruisseaux,
Car les belles sont les cages
Dont nos coeurs sont les oiseaux.

De la source, sa cuvette,
La fleur, faisant son miroir,
Dit: «Bonjour,» à la fauvette,
Et dit au hibou: «Bonsoir.»

Le toit espère la gerbe,
Pain d’abord et chaume après;
La croupe du boeuf dans l’herbe
Semble un mont dans les forêts.

L’étang rit à la macreuse,
Le pré rit au loriot,
Pendant que l’ornière creuse
Gronde le lourd chariot.

L’or fleurit en giroflée;
L’ancien zéphir fabuleux
Souffle avec sa joue enflée
Au fond des nuages bleus.

Jersey, sur l’onde docile,
Se drape d’un beau ciel pur,
Et prend des airs de Sicile
Dans un grand haillon d’azur

Partout l’églogue est écrite:
Même en la froide Albion,
L’air est plein de Théocrite,
Le vent sait par coeur Bion,

Et redit, mélancolique,
La chanson que fredonna
Moschus, grillon bucolique
De la cheminée Etna.

L’hiver tousse, vieux phthisique,
Et s’en va; la brume fond;
Les vagues font la musique
Des vers que les arbres font.

Toute la nature sombre

Verse un mystérieux jour;
L’âme qui rêve a plus d’ombre
Et la fleur a plus d’amour.

L’herbe éclate en pâquerettes;
Les parfums, qu’on croit muets,
Content les peines secrètes
Des liserons aux bleuets.

Les petites ailes blanches
Sur les eaux et les sillons
S’abattent en avalanches;
Il neige des papillons.

Et sur la mer, qui reflète
L’aube au sourire d’émail,
La bruyère violette
Met au vieux mont un camail;

Afin qu’il puisse, à l’abîme
Qu’il contient et qu’il bénit,
Dire sa messe sublime
Sous sa mitre de granit.

Granville, juin 1836.

LA COCCINELLE

Elle me dit: «Quelque chose
Me tourmente.» Et j’aperçus
Son cou de neige, et, dessus,
Un petit insecte rose.

J’aurais dû, — mais, sage ou fou,
A seize ans, on est farouche, —

Voir le baiser sur sa bouche
Plus que l’insecte à son cou.

On eût dit un coquillage;
Dos rose et taché de noir.
Les fauvettes pour nous voir
Se penchaient dans le feuillage.

Sa bouche fraîche était là;
Je me courbai sur la belle,
Et je pris la coccinelle;
Mais le baiser s’envola.

«Fils, apprends comme on me nomme,»
Dit l’insecte du ciel bleu;
«Les bêtes sont au bon Dieu,
Mais la bêtise est à l’homme.»

VERS 1820

Denise, ton mari, notre vieux pédagogue,
Se promène; il s’en va troubler la fraîche églogue
Du bel adolescent Avril dans la forêt;
Tout tremble et tout devient pédant, dès qu’il paraît:
L’âne bougonne un thème au boeuf son camarade;
Le vent fait sa tartine, et l’arbre sa tirade;
L’églantier verdissant, doux garçon qui grandit,
Déclame le récit de Théramène, et dit:
Son front large est armé de cornes menaçantes.

Denise, cependant, tu rêves et tu chantes,
A l’âge où l’innocence ouvre sa vague fleur;
Et, d’un oeil ignorant, sans joie et sans douleur,

Sans crainte et sans désir, tu vois, à l’heure où rentre
L’étudiant en classe et le docteur dans l’antre,
Venir à toi, montant ensemble l’escalier,
L’ennui, maître d’école, et l’amour, écolier.

A M. FROMENT MEURICE

Nous sommes frères: la fleur
Par deux arts peut être faite.
Le poëte est ciseleur;
Le ciseleur est poëte.

Poëtes ou ciseleurs,
Par nous l’esprit se révèle.
Nous rendons les bons meilleurs,
Tu rends la beauté plus belle.

Sur son bras ou sur son cou,
Tu fais de tes rêveries,
Statuaire du bijou,
Des palais de pierreries!

Ne dis pas: «Mon art n’est rien...»
Sors de la route tracée,
Ouvrier magicien,
Et mêle à l’or la pensée!

Tous les penseurs, sans chercher
Qui finit ou qui commence,
Sculptent le même rocher:
Ce rocher, c’est l’art immense.

Michel-Ange, grand vieillard,
En larges blocs qu’il nous jette,
Le fait jaillir au hasard;

Benvenuto nous l’émiette.

Et, devant l’art infini,
Dont jamais la loi ne change,
La miette de Cellini
Vaut le bloc de Michel-Ange.

Tout est grand; sombre ou vermeil,
Tout feu qui brille est une âme.
L’étoile vaut le soleil;
L’étincelle vaut la flamme.

LES OISEAUX

Je rêvais dans un grand cimetière désert;
De mon âme et des morts j’écoutais le concert,
Parmi les fleurs de l’herbe et les croix de la tombe.
Dieu veut que ce qui naît sorte de ce qui tombe.
Et l’ombre m’emplissait.

Autour de moi, nombreux,
Gais, sans avoir souci de mon front ténébreux,
Dans ce champ, lit fatal de la sieste dernière,
Des moineaux francs faisaient l’école buissonnière.

C’était l’éternité que taquine l’instant.
Ils allaient et venaient, chantant, volant, sautant,
Égratignant la mort de leurs griffes pointues,
Lissant leur bec au nez lugubre des statues,
Becquetant les tombeaux, ces grains mystérieux.
Je pris ces tapageurs ailés au sérieux;
Je criai: — Paix aux morts! vous êtes des harpies.
— Nous sommes des moineaux, me dirent ces impies.

— Silence! allez-vous-en! repris-je, peu clément.
Ils s’enfuirent; j’étais le plus fort. Seulement,
Un d’eux resta derrière, et, pour toute musique,
Dressa la queue, et dit: — Quel est ce vieux classique?

Comme ils s’en allaient tous, furieux, maugréant,
Criant, et regardant de travers le géant,
Un houx noir qui songeait près d’une tombe, un sage,
M’arrêta brusquement par la manche au passage,
Et me dit: — Ces oiseaux sont dans leur fonction.
Laisse-les. Nous avons besoin de ce rayon.
Dieu les envoie. Ils font vivre le cimetière.
Homme, ils sont la gaîté de la nature entière;
Ils prennent son murmure au ruisseau, sa clarté
A l’astre, son sourire au matin enchanté;
Partout où rit un sage, ils lui prennent sa joie,
Et nous l’apportent; l’ombre en les voyant flamboie;
Ils emplissent leurs becs des cris des écoliers;
A travers l’homme et l’herbe, et l’onde, et les halliers,
Ils vont pillant la joie en l’univers immense.
Ils ont cette raison qui te semble démence.
Ils ont pitié de nous qui loin d’eux languissons;
Et, lorsqu’ils sont bien pleins de jeux et de chansons,
D’églogues, de baisers, de tous les commérages
Que les nids en avril font sous les verts ombrages,
Ils accourent, joyeux, charmants, légers, bruyants,
Nous jeter tout cela dans nos trous effrayants;
Et viennent, des palais, des bois, de la chaumière,
Vider dans notre nuit toute cette lumière!
Quand mai nous les ramène, ô songeur, nous disons:
«Les voilà!» tout s’émeut, pierres, tertres, gazons;
Le moindre arbrisseau parle, et l’herbe est en extase;
Le saule pleureur chante en achevant sa phrase;
Ils confessent les ifs, devenus babillards;
Ils jasent de la vie avec les corbillards;
Des linceuls trop pompeux ils décrochent l’agrafe;
Ils se moquent du marbre; ils savent l’orthographe;

Et, moi qui suis ici le vieux chardon boudeur,
Devant qui le mensonge étale sa laideur,
Et ne se gêne pas, me traitant comme un hôte,
Je trouve juste, ami, qu'en lisant à voix haute
L'épitaphe où le mort est toujours bon et beau,
Ils fassent éclater de rire le tombeau.

Paris, mai 1835.

VIEILLE CHANSON DU JEUNE TEMPS

Je ne songeais pas à Rose;
Rose au bois vint avec moi;
Nous parlions de quelque chose,
Mais je ne sais plus de quoi.

J'étais froid comme les marbres;
Je marchais à pas distraits;
Je parlais des fleurs, des arbres;
Son oeil semblait dire: «Après?»

La rosée offrait ses perles,
Les taillis ses parasols;
J'allais; j'écoutais les merles,
Et Rose les rossignols.

Moi, seize ans, et l'air morose;
Elle vingt; ses yeux brillaient.
Les rossignols chantaient Rose
Et les merles me sifflaient.

Rose, droite sur ses hanches,
Leva son beau bras tremblant
Pour prendre une mûre aux branches;
Je ne vis pas son bras blanc.

Une eau courait, fraîche et creuse
Sur les mousses de velours;
Et la nature amoureuse
Dormait dans les grands bois sourds.

Rose défit sa chaussure,
Et mit, d’un air ingénu,
Son petit pied dans l’eau pure;
Je ne vis pas son pied nu.

Je ne savais que lui dire;
Je la suivais dans le bois,
La voyant parfois sourire
Et soupirer quelquefois.

Je ne vis qu’elle était belle
Qu’en sortant des grands bois sourds.
«Soit; n’y pensons plus!» dit-elle.
Depuis, j’y pense toujours.

Paris, juin 1831.

A UN POËTE AVEUGLE

Merci, poëte! — au seuil de mes lares pieux,
Comme un hôte divin, tu viens et te dévoiles;
Et l’auréole d’or de tes vers radieux
Brille autour de mon nom comme un cercle d’étoiles.

Chante! Milton chantait; chante! Homère a chanté.
Le poëte des sens perce la triste brume;
L’aveugle voit dans l’ombre un monde de clarté.
Quand l’oeil du corps s’éteint, l’oeil de l’esprit s’allume.

ELLE ETAIT DECHAUSSEE, ELLE ETAIT DECOIFFEE

Elle était déchaussée, elle était décoiffée,
Assise, les pieds nus, parmi les joncs penchants;
Moi qui passais par là, je crus voir une fée,
Et je lui dis: Veux-tu t’en venir dans les champs?

Elle me regarda de ce regard suprême
Qui reste à la beauté quand nous en triomphons,
Et je lui dis: Veux-tu, c’est le mois où l’on aime,
Veux-tu nous en aller sous les arbres profonds?

Elle essuya ses pieds à l’herbe de la rive;
Elle me regarda pour la seconde fois,
Et la belle folâtre alors devint pensive.
Oh! comme les oiseaux chantaient au fond des bois!

Comme l’eau caressait doucement le rivage!
Je vis venir à moi, dans les grands roseaux verts,
La belle fille heureuse, effarée et sauvage,
Ses cheveux dans ses yeux, et riant au travers.

LA FÊTE CHEZ THÉRÈSE

La chose fut exquise et fort bien ordonnée.
C’était au mois d’avril, et dans une journée
Si douce, qu’on eût dit qu’amour l’eût faite exprès.

Thérèse la duchesse à qui je donnerais,
Si j’étais roi, Paris, si j’étais Dieu, le monde,
Quand elle ne serait que Thérèse la blonde;
Cette belle Thérèse, aux yeux de diamant,
Nous avait conviés dans son jardin charmant.
On était peu nombreux. Le choix faisait la fête.
Nous étions tous ensemble et chacun tête à tête.
Des couples pas à pas erraient de tous côtés.
C’étaient les fiers seigneurs et les rares beautés,
Les Amyntas rêvant auprès des Léonores,
Les marquises riant avec les monsignores;
Et l’on voyait rôder dans les grands escaliers
Un nain qui dérobait leur bourse aux cavaliers.

A midi, le spectacle avec la mélodie.
Pourquoi jouer Plautus la nuit? La comédie
Est une belle fille, et rit mieux au grand jour.
Or, on avait bâti, comme un temple d’amour,
Près d’un bassin dans l’ombre habité par un cygne,
Un théâtre en treillage où grimpait une vigne.
Un cintre à claire-voie en anse de panier,
Cage verte où sifflait un bouvreuil prisonnier,
Couvrait toute la scène, et, sur leurs gorges blanches,
Les actrices sentaient errer l’ombre des branches.
On entendait au loin de magiques accords;
Et, tout en haut, sortant de la frise à mi-corps,
Pour attirer la foule aux lazzis qu’il répète,
Le blanc Pulcinella sonnait de la trompette.
Deux faunes soutenaient le manteau d’Arlequin;
Trivelin leur riait au nez comme un faquin.
Parmi les ornements sculptés dans le treillage,
Colombine dormait dans un gros coquillage,
Et, quand elle montrait son sein et ses bras nus,
On eût cru voir la conque, et l’on eût dit Vénus.
Le seigneur Pantalon, dans une niche, à droite,
Vendait des limons doux sur une table étroite,
Et criait par instants: «Seigneurs, l’homme est divin.

Dieu n’avait fait que l’eau, mais l’homme a fait le vin.»
Scaramouche en un coin harcelait de sa batte
Le tragique Alcantor, suivi du triste Arbate;
Crispin, vêtu de noir, jouait de l’éventail;
Perché, jambe pendante, au sommet du portail,
Carlino se penchait, écoutant les aubades,
Et son pied ébauchait de rêveuses gambades.

Le soleil tenait lieu de lustre; la saison
Avait brodé de fleurs un immense gazon,
Vert tapis déroulé sous maint groupe folâtre.
Rangés des deux côtés de l’agreste théâtre,
Les vrais arbres du parc, les sorbiers, les lilas,
Les ébéniers qu’avril charge de falbalas,
De leur sève embaumée exhalant les délices,
Semblaient se divertir à faire les coulisses,
Et, pour nous voir, ouvrant leurs fleurs comme des yeux.
Joignaient aux violons leur murmure joyeux;
Si bien qu’à ce concert gracieux et classique,
La nature mêlait un peu de sa musique.

Tout nous charmait, les bois, le jour serein, l’air pur,
Les femmes tout amour, et le ciel tout azur.
Pour la pièce, elle était fort bonne, quoique ancienne,
C’était, nonchalamment assis sur l’avant-scène,
Pierrot qui haranguait, dans un grave entretien,
Un singe timbalier à cheval sur un chien.

Rien de plus. C’était simple et beau. — Par intervalles,
Le singe faisait rage et cognait ses timbales;
Puis Pierrot répliquait. — Écoutait qui voulait.
L’un faisait apporter des glaces au valet;
L’autre, galant drapé d’une cape fantasque,
Parlait bas à sa dame en lui nouant son masque;
Trois marquis attablés chantaient une chanson;
Thérèse était assise à l’ombre d’un buisson:
Les roses pâlissaient à côté de sa joue,

Et, la voyant si belle, un paon faisait la roue.

Moi, j’écoutais, pensif, un profane couplet
Que fredonnait dans l’ombre un abbé violet.

La nuit vint, tout se tut; les flambeaux s’éteignirent;
Dans les bois assombris les sources se plaignirent.
Le rossignol, caché dans son nid ténébreux,
Chanta comme un poëte et comme un amoureux.
Chacun se dispersa sous les profonds feuillages;
Les folles en riant entraînèrent les sages;
L’amante s’en alla dans l’ombre avec l’amant;
Et, troublés comme on l’est en songe, vaguement,
Il sentaient par degrés se mêler à leur âme,
A leurs discours secrets, à leurs regards de flamme,
A leur coeur, à leurs sens, à leur molle raison,
Le clair de lune bleu qui baignait l’horizon.

L’ENFANCE

L’enfant chantait; la mère au lit exténuée,
Agonisait, beau front dans l’ombre se penchant;
La mort au-dessus d’elle errait dans la nuée;
Et j’écoutais ce râle, et j’entendais ce chant.

L’enfant avait cinq ans, et, près de la fenêtre,
Ses rires et ses jeux faisaient un charmant bruit;
Et la mère, à côté de ce pauvre doux être
Qui chantait tout le jour, toussait toute la nuit.

La mère alla dormir sous les dalles du cloître;
Et le petit enfant se remit à chanter... —
La douleur est un fruit: Dieu ne le fait pas croître

Sur la branche trop faible encor pour le porter.

HEUREUX L’HOMME, OCCUPE DE L’ETERNEL DESTIN

Heureux l’homme, occupé de l’éternel destin,
Qui, tel qu’un voyageur qui part de grand matin,
Se réveille, l’esprit rempli de rêverie,
Et, dès l’aube du jour, se met à lire et prie!
A mesure qu’il lit, le jour vient lentement
Et se fait dans son âme ainsi qu’au firmament.
Il voit distinctement, à cette clarté blême,
Des choses dans sa chambre et d’autres en lui-même;
Tout dort dans la maison; il est seul, il le croit;
Et, cependant, fermant leur bouche de leur doigt,
Derrière lui, tandis que l’extase l’enivre,
Les anges souriants se penchent sur son livre.

UNITÉ

Par-dessus l’horizon aux collines brunies.
Le soleil, cette fleur des splendeurs infinies,
Se penchait sur la terre à l’heure du couchant;
Une humble marguerite, éclose au bord d’un champ,
Sur un mur gris, croulant parmi l’avoine folle,
Blanche épanouissait sa candide auréole;
Et la petite fleur, par-dessus le vieux mur,
Regardait fixement, dans l’éternel azur,

Le grand astre épanchant sa lumière immortelle.
«Et, moi, j’ai des rayons aussi!» lui disait-elle.

Granville, juillet 1836.

QUELQUES MOTS A UN AUTRE

On y revient; il faut y revenir moi-même.
Ce qu’on attaque en moi, c’est mon temps, et je l’aime.
Certes, on me laisserait en paix, passant obscur,
Si je ne contenais, atome de l’azur,
Un peu du grand rayon dont notre époque est faite.

Hier le citoyen, aujourd’hui le poëte;
Le «romantique» après le «libéral». — Allons,
Soit; dans mes deux sentiers mordez mes deux talons.
Je suis le ténébreux par qui tout dégénère.
Sur mon autre côté lancez l’autre tonnerre.

Vous aussi, vous m’avez vu tout jeune, et voici
Que vous me dénoncez, bonhomme, vous aussi;
Me déchirant le plus allègrement du monde,
Par attendrissement pour mon enfance blonde.
Vous me criez: «Comment, Monsieur! qu’est-ce que c’est?
La stance va nu-pieds! le drame est sans corset!
La muse jette au vent sa robe d’innocence!
Et l’art crève la règle et dit: «C’est la croissance!»
Géronte littéraire aux aboiements plaintifs,
Vous vous ébahissez, en vers rétrospectifs,
Que ma voix trouble l’ordre, et que ce romantique
Vive, et que ce petit, à qui l’Art Poétique
Avec tant de bonté donna le pain et l’eau,
Devienne si pesant aux genoux de Boileau!
Vous regardez mes vers, pourvus d’ongles et d’ailes,
Refusant de marcher derrière les modèles,

Comme après les doyens marchent les petits clercs;
Vous en voyez sortir de sinistres éclairs;
Horreur! et vous voilà poussant des cris d'hyène
A travers les barreaux de la Quotidienne.

Vous épuisez sur moi tout votre calepin,
Et le père Bouhours et le père Rapin;
Et m'écrasant avec tous les noms qu'on vénère,
Vous lâchez le grand mot: Révolutionnaire.

Et, sur ce, les pédants en choeur disent: Amen!
On m'empoigne; on me fait passer mon examen;
La Sorbonne bredouille et l'école griffonne;
De vingt plumes jaillit la colère bouffonne:
«Que veulent ces affreux novateurs? ça, des vers?
Devant leurs livres noirs, la nuit, dans l'ombre ouverts,
Les lectrices ont peur au fond de leurs alcôves.
Le Pinde entend rugir leurs rimes bêtes fauves,
Et frémit. Par leur faute aujourd'hui tout est mort;
L'alexandrin saisit la césure, et la mord;
Comme le sanglier dans l'herbe et dans la sauge,
Au beau milieu du vers l'enjambement patauge;
Que va-t-on devenir? Richelet s'obscurcit.
Il faut à toute chose un magister dixit.
Revenons à la règle, et sortons de l'opprobre;
L'hippocrène est de l'eau; donc, le beau, c'est le sobre.
Les vrais sages ayant la raison pour lien,
Ont toujours consulté, sur l'art, Quintilien;
Sur l'algèbre, Leibnitz; sur la guerre, Végèce.»

Quand l'impuissance écrit, elle signe: Sagesse.

Je ne vois pas pourquoi je ne vous dirais point
Ce qu'à d'autres j'ai dit sans leur montrer le poing.
Eh bien, démasquons-nous! c'est vrai, notre âme est noire;
Sortons du domino nommé forme oratoire.
On nous a vus, poussant vers un autre horizon

La langue, avec la rime entraînant la raison,
Lancer au pas de charge, en batailles rangées,
Sur Laharpe éperdu, toutes ces insurgées.
Nous avons au vieux style attaché ce brûlot:
Liberté! Nous avons, dans le même complot,
Mis l’esprit, pauvre diable, et le mot, pauvre hère;
Nous avons déchiré le capuchon, la haire,
Le froc, dont on couvrait l’Idée aux yeux divins.
Tous ont fait rage en foule. Orateurs, écrivains,
Poëtes, nous avons, du doigt avançant l’heure,
Dit à la rhétorique: — Allons, fille majeure,
Lève les yeux! — et j’ai, chantant, luttant, bravant,
Tordu plus d’une grille au parloir du couvent;
J’ai, torche en main, ouvert les deux battants du drame;
Pirates, nous avons, à la voile, à la rame,
De la triple unité pris l’aride archipel;
Sur l’Hélicon tremblant j’ai battu le rappel.
Tout est perdu! le vers vague sans muselière!
A Racine effaré nous préférons Molière;
O pédants! à Ducis nous préférons Rotrou.
Lucrèce Borgia sort brusquement d’un trou,
Et mêle des poisons hideux à vos guimauves;
Le drame échevelé fait peur à vos fronts chauves;
C’est horrible! oui, brigand, jacobin, malandrin,
J’ai disloqué ce grand niais d’alexandrin;
Les mots de qualité, les syllabes marquises,
Vivaient ensemble au fond de leurs grottes exquises,
Faisant la bouche en coeur et ne parlant qu’entre eux,
J’ai dit aux mots d’en bas: Manchots, boiteux, goîtreux,
Redressez-vous! planez, et mêlez-vous, sans règles,
Dans la caverne immense et farouche des aigles!
J’ai déjà confessé ce tas de crimes-là;
Oui, je suis Papavoine, Érostrate, Attila:
Après?
Emportez-vous, et criez à la garde,
Brave homme! tempêtez! tonnez! je vous regarde.
Nos progrès prétendus vous semblent outrageants;

Vous détestez ce siècle où, quand il parle aux gens,
Le vers des trois saluts d'usage se dispense;
Temps sombre où, sans pudeur, on écrit comme on pense,
Où l'on est philosophe et poëte crûment,
Où de ton vin sincère, adorable, écumant,
O sévère idéal, tous les songeurs sont ivres.
Vous couvrez d'abat-jour, quand vous ouvrez nos livres,
Vos yeux, par la clarté du mot propre brûlés;
Vous exécrez nos vers francs et vrais, vous hurlez
De fureur en voyant nos strophes toutes nues.
Mais où donc est le temps des nymphes ingénues,
Qui couraient dans les bois, et dont la nudité
Dansait dans la lueur des vagues soirs d'été?
Sur l'aube nue et blanche, entr'ouvrant sa fenêtre,
Faut-il plisser la brume honnête et prude, et mettre
Une feuille de vigne à l'astre dans l'azur?
Le flot, conque d'amour, est-il d'un goût peu sûr?
O Virgile, Pindare, Orphée! est-ce qu'on gaze,
Comme une obscénité, les ailes de Pégase,
Qui semble, les ouvrant au haut du mont béni,
L'immense papillon du baiser infini?
Est-ce que le soleil splendide est un cynique?
La fleur a-t-elle tort d'écarter sa tunique?
Calliope, planant derrière un pan des cieux,
Fait donc mal de montrer à Dante soucieux
Ses seins éblouissants à travers les étoiles?
Vous êtes un ancien d'hier. Libre et sans voiles,
Le grand Olympe nu vous ferait dire: Fi!
Vous mettez une jupe au Cupidon bouffi;
Au clinquant, aux neuf soeurs en atours, au Parnasse
De Titon du Tillet, votre goût est tenace;
Les Ménades pour vous danseraient le cancan;
Apollon vous ferait l'effet d'un Mohican;
Vous prendriez Vénus pour une sauvagesse.

L'âge — c'est là souvent toute notre sagesse —
A beau vous bougonner tout bas: «Vous avez tort,

Vous vous ferez tousser si vous criez si fort;
Pour quelques nouveautés sauvages et fortuites,
Monsieur, ne troublez pas la paix de vos pituites.
Ces gens-ci vont leur train; qu'est-ce que ça vous fait?
Ils ne trouvent que cendre au feu qui vous chauffait.
Pourquoi déclarez-vous la guerre à leur tapage?
Ce siècle est libéral comme vous fûtes page.
Fermez bien vos volets, tirez bien vos rideaux,
Soufflez votre chandelle, et tournez-lui le dos!
Qu'est l'âme du vrai sage? Une sourde-muette.
Que vous importe, à vous, que tel ou tel poëte,
Comme l'oiseau des cieux, veuille avoir sa chanson;
Et que tel garnement du Pinde, nourrisson
Des Muses, au milieu d'un bruit de corybante,
Marmot sombre, ait mordu leur gorge un peu tombante?»

Vous n'en tenez nul compte, et vous n'écoutez rien.
Voltaire, en vain, grand homme et peu voltairien,
Vous murmure à l'oreille: «Ami, tu nous assommes!»
— Vous écumez! — partant de ceci: que nous, hommes
De ce temps d'anarchie et d'enfer, nous donnons
L'assaut au grand Louis juché sur vingt grands noms;
Vous dites qu'après tout nous perdons notre peine,
Que haute est l'escalade et courte notre haleine;
Que c'est dit, que jamais nous ne réussirons;
Que Batteux nous regarde avec ses gros yeux ronds,
Que Tancrède est de bronze et qu'Hamlet est de sable.
Vous déclarez Boileau perruque indéfrisable;
Et, coiffé de lauriers, d'un coup d'oeil de travers,
Vous indiquez le tas d'ordures de nos vers,
Fumier où la laideur de ce siècle se guinde
Au pauvre vieux bon goût, ce balayeur du Pinde;
Et même, allant plus loin, vaillant, vous nous criez:
«Je vais vous balayer moi-même!»

Balayez.

OUI, JE SUIS LE REVEUR; JE SUIS LE CAMARADE

Oui, je suis le rêveur; je suis le camarade
Des petites fleurs d'or du mur qui se dégrade,
Et l'interlocuteur des arbres et du vent.
Tout cela me connaît, voyez-vous. J'ai souvent,
En mai, quand de parfums les branches sont gonflées,
Des conversations avec les giroflées;
Je reçois des conseils du lierre et du bleuet.
L'être mystérieux, que vous croyez muet,
Sur moi se penche, et vient avec ma plume écrire.
J'entends ce qu'entendit Rabelais; je vois rire
Et pleurer; et j'entends ce qu'Orphée entendit.
Ne vous étonnez pas de tout ce que me dit
La nature aux soupirs ineffables. Je cause
Avec toutes les voix de la métempsycose.
Avant de commencer le grand concert sacré,
Le moineau, le buisson, l'eau vive dans le pré,
La forêt, basse énorme, et l'aile et la corolle,
Tous ces doux instruments, m'adressent la parole;
Je suis l'habitué de l'orchestre divin;
Si je n'étais songeur, j'aurais été sylvain.
J'ai fini, grâce au calme en qui je me recueille,
A force de parler doucement à la feuille,
A la goutte de pluie, à la plume, au rayon,
Par descendre à ce point dans la création,
Cet abîme où frissonne un tremblement farouche,
Que je ne fais plus même envoler une mouche!
Le brin d'herbe, vibrant d'un éternel émoi,
S'apprivoise et devient familier avec moi,
Et, sans s'apercevoir que je suis là, les roses

Font avec les bourdons toutes sortes de choses;
Quelquefois, à travers les doux rameaux bénis,
J’avance largement ma face sur les nids,
Et le petit oiseau, mère inquiète et sainte,
N’a pas plus peur de moi que nous n’aurions de crainte,
Nous, si l’oeil du bon Dieu regardait dans nos trous;
Le lys prude me voit approcher sans courroux,
Quand il s’ouvre aux baisers du jour; la violette
La plus pudique fait devant moi sa toilette;
Je suis pour ces beautés l’ami discret et sûr
Et le frais papillon, libertin de l’azur,
Qui chiffonne gaîment une fleur demi-nue,
Si je viens à passer dans l’ombre, continue,
Et, si la fleur se veut cacher dans le gazon,
Il lui dit: «Es-tu bête! Il est de la maison.»

Les Roches, août 1835.

IL FAUT QUE LE POËTE, EPRIS D’OMBRE ET D’AZUR

Il faut que le poëte, épris d’ombre et d’azur,
Esprit doux et splendide, au rayonnement pur,
Qui marche devant tous, éclairant ceux qui doutent,
Chanteur mystérieux qu’en tressaillant écoutent
Les femmes, les songeurs, les sages, les amants,
Devienne formidable à de certains moments.
Parfois, lorsqu’on se met à rêver sur son livre,
Où tout berce, éblouit, calme, caresse, enivre,
Où l’âme, à chaque pas, trouve à faire son miel,
Où les coins les plus noirs ont des lueurs du ciel;
Au milieu de cette humble et haute poésie,
Dans cette paix sacrée où croît la fleur choisie,
Où l’on entend couler les sources et les pleurs,

Où les strophes, oiseaux peints de mille couleurs,
Volent chantant l’amour, l’espérance et la joie;
Il faut que, par instants, on frissonne, et qu’on voie
Tout à coup, sombre, grave et terrible au passant,
Un vers fauve sortir de l’ombre en rugissant!
Il faut que le poëte, aux semences fécondes,
Soit comme ces forêts vertes, fraîches, profondes,
Pleines de chants, amour du vent et du rayon,
Charmantes, où, soudain, l’on rencontre un lion.

HALTE EN MARCHANT

Une brume couvrait l’horizon; maintenant,
Voici le clair midi qui surgit rayonnant;
Le brouillard se dissout en perles sur les branches,
Et brille, diamant, au collier des pervenches.
Le vent souffle à travers les arbres, sur les toits
Du hameau noir cachant ses chaumes dans les bois;
Et l’on voit tressaillir, épars dans les ramées,
Le vague arrachement des tremblantes fumées;
Un ruisseau court dans l’herbe, entre deux hauts talus,
Sous l’agitation des saules chevelus;
Un orme, un hêtre, anciens du vallon, arbres frères
Qui se donnent la main des deux rives contraires,
Semblent, sous le ciel bleu, dire: A la bonne foi!
L’oiseau chante son chant plein d’amour et d’effroi,
Et du frémissement des feuilles et des ailes
L’étang luit sous le vol des vertes demoiselles.
Un bouge est là, montrant dans la sauge et le thym
Un vieux saint souriant parmi des brocs d’étain,
Avec tant de rayons et de fleurs sur la berge,
Que c’est peut-être un temple ou peut-être une auberge.
Que notre bouche ait soif, ou que ce soit le coeur,

Gloire au Dieu bon qui tend la coupe au voyageur!
Nous entrons. «Qu’avez-vous! — Des oeufs frais, de l’eau fraîche.»
On croit voir l’humble toit effondré d’une crèche.
A la source du pré, qu’abrite un vert rideau,
Une enfant blonde alla remplir sa jarre d’eau,
Joyeuse et soulevant son jupon de futaine.
Pendant qu’elle plongeait sa cruche à la fontaine,
L’eau semblait admirer, gazouillant doucement,
Cette belle petite aux yeux de firmament.
Et moi, près du grand lit drapé de vieilles serges,
Pensif, je regardais un Christ battu de verges.
Eh! qu’importe l’outrage aux martyrs éclatants,
Affront de tous les lieux, crachat de tous les temps,
Vaine clameur d’aveugle, éternelle huée
Où la foule toujours s’est follement ruée!

Plus tard, le vagabond flagellé devient Dieu.
Ce front noir et saignant semble fait de ciel bleu,
Et, dans l’ombre, éclairant palais, temple, masure,
Le crucifix blanchit et Jésus-Christ s’azure.
La foule un jour suivra vos pas; allez, saignez,
Souffrez, penseurs, des pleurs de vos bourreaux baignés!
Le deuil sacre les saints, les sages, les génies;
La tremblante auréole éclôt aux gémonies,
Et, sur ce vil marais, flotte, lueur du ciel,
Du cloaque de sang feu follet éternel.
Toujours au même but le même sort ramène:
Il est, au plus profond de notre histoire humaine,
Une sorte de gouffre, où viennent, tour à tour,
Tomber tous ceux qui sont de la vie et du jour,
Les bons, les purs, les grands, les divins, les célèbres,
Flambeaux échevelés au souffle des ténèbres;
Là se sont engloutis les Dantes disparus,
Socrate, Scipion, Milton, Thomas Morus,
Eschyle, ayant aux mains des palmes frissonnantes.
Nuit d’où l’on voit sortir leurs mémoires planantes!
Car ils ne sont complets qu’après qu’ils sont déchus.

De l’exil d’Aristide, au bûcher de Jean Huss,
Le genre humain pensif — c’est ainsi que nous sommes —
Rêve ébloui devant l’abîme des grands hommes.
Ils sont, telle est la loi des hauts destins penchant,
Tes semblables, soleil! leur gloire est leur couchant;
Et, fier Niagara dont le flot gronde et lutte,
Tes pareils: ce qu’ils ont de plus beau, c’est leur chute.

Un de ceux qui liaient Jésus-Christ au poteau,
Et qui, sur son dos nu, jetaient un vil manteau,
Arracha de ce front tranquille une poignée
De cheveux qu’inondait la sueur résignée,
Et dit: «Je vais montrer à Caïphe cela!»
Et, crispant son poing noir, cet homme s’en alla.
La nuit était venue et la rue était sombre;
L’homme marchait; soudain, il s’arrêta dans l’ombre,
Stupéfait, pâle, et comme en proie aux visions,
Frémissant! — Il avait dans la main des rayons.

LIVRE DEUXIÈME: L’AME EN FLEUR

I

PREMIER MAI

Tout conjugue le verbe aimer. Voici les roses.
Je ne suis pas en train de parler d’autres choses;
Premier mai! l’amour gai, triste, brûlant, jaloux,
Fait soupirer les bois, les nids, les fleurs, les loups;
L’arbre où j’ai, l’autre automne, écrit une devise,
La redit pour son compte, et croit qu’il l’improvise;
Les vieux antres pensifs, dont rit le geai moqueur,
Clignent leurs gros sourcils et font la bouche en coeur;
L’atmosphère, embaumée et tendre, semble pleine,
Des déclarations qu’au Printemps fait la plaine,
Et que l’herbe amoureuse adresse au ciel charmant.
A chaque pas du jour dans le bleu firmament,
La campagne éperdue, et toujours plus éprise,
Prodigue les senteurs, et, dans la tiède brise,
Envoie au renouveau ses baisers odorants;
Tous ses bouquets, azurs, carmins, pourpres, safrans,
Dont l’haleine s’envole en murmurant: Je t’aime!
Sur le ravin, l’étang, le pré, le sillon même,
Font des taches partout de toutes les couleurs;
Et, donnant les parfums, elle a gardé les fleurs;
Comme si ses soupirs et ses tendres missives
Au mois de mai, qui rit dans les branches lascives,
Et tous les billets doux de son amour bavard,
Avaient laissé leur trace aux pages du buvard!

Les oiseaux dans les bois, molles voix étouffées,
Chantent des triolets et des rondeaux aux fées;
Tout semble confier à l’ombre un doux secret;
Tout aime, et tout l’avoue à voix basse; on dirait
Qu’au nord, au sud brûlant, au couchant, à l’aurore,

La haie en fleur, le lierre et la source sonore,
Les monts, les champs, les lacs et les chênes mouvants
Répètent un quatrain fait par les quatre vents.

MES VERS FUIRAIENT, DOUX ET FRELES

Mes vers fuiraient, doux et frêles,
Vers votre jardin si beau,
Si mes vers avaient des ailes,
Des ailes comme l'oiseau.

Ils voleraient, étincelles,
Vers votre foyer qui rit,
Si mes vers avaient des ailes,
Des ailes comme l'esprit.

Près de vous, purs et fidèles,
Ils accourraient nuit et jour,
Si mes vers avaient des ailes,
Des ailes comme l'amour.

LE ROUET D'OMPHALE

Il est dans l'atrium, le beau rouet d'ivoire.
La roue agile est blanche, et la quenouille est noire;
La quenouille est d'ébène incrusté de lapis.
Il est dans l'atrium sur un riche tapis.

Un ouvrier d'Égine a sculpté sur la plinthe

Europe, dont un dieu n’écoute pas la plainte.
Le taureau blanc l’emporte. Europe, sans espoir,
Crie, et baissant les yeux, s’épouvante de voir
L’Océan monstrueux qui baise ses pieds roses.

Des aiguilles, du fil, des boites demi-closes,
Les laines de Milet, peintes de pourpre et d’or,
Emplissent un panier près du rouet qui dort.

Cependant, odieux, effroyables, énormes,
Dans le fond du palais, vingt fantômes difformes,
Vingt monstres tout sanglants, qu’on ne voit qu’à demi,
Errent en foule autour du rouet endormi:
Le lion néméen, l’hydre affreuse de Lerne,
Cacus, le noir brigand de la noire caverne,
Le triple Géryon, et les typhons des eaux,
Qui, le soir, à grand bruit, soufflent dans les roseaux;
De la massue au front tous ont l’empreinte horrible;
Et tous, sans approcher, rôdant d’un air terrible
Sur le rouet, où pend un fil souple et lié,
Fixent de loin, dans l’ombre, un oeil humilié.

CHANSON

Si vous n’avez rien à me dire,
Pourquoi venir auprès de moi?
Pourquoi me faire ce sourire
Qui tournerait la tête au roi?
Si vous n’avez rien à me dire,
Pourquoi venir auprès de moi?

Si vous n’avez rien à m’apprendre,
Pourquoi me pressez-vous la main?

Sur le rêve angélique et tendre,
Auquel vous songez en chemin,
Si vous n'avez rien à m'apprendre,
Pourquoi me pressez-vous la main?

Si vous voulez que je m'en aille,
Pourquoi passez-vous par ici?
Lorsque je vous vois, je tressaille:
C'est ma joie et c'est mon souci.
Si vous voulez que je m'en aille,
Pourquoi passez-vous par ici?

HIER AU SOIR

Hier, le vent du soir, dont le souffle caresse,
Nous apportait l'odeur des fleurs qui s'ouvrent tard;
La nuit tombait; l'oiseau dormait dans l'ombre épaisse.
Le printemps embaumait, moins que votre jeunesse;
Les astres rayonnaient, moins que votre regard.

Moi, je parlais tout bas. C'est l'heure solennelle
Où l'âme aime à chanter son hymne le plus doux.
Voyant la nuit si pure, et vous voyant si belle,
J'ai dit aux astres d'or: Versez le ciel sur elle!
Et j'ai dit à vos yeux: Versez l'amour sur nous!

LETTRE

Tu vois cela d'ici. Des ocres et des craies;

Plaines où les sillons croisent leurs mille raies,
Chaumes à fleur de terre et que masque un buisson;
Quelques meules de foin debout sur le gazon;
De vieux toits enfumant le paysage bistre;
Un fleuve qui n'est pas le Gange ou le Caystre,
Pauvre cours d'eau normand troublé de sels marins;
A droite, vers le nord, de bizarres terrains
Pleins d'angles qu'on dirait façonnés à la pelle;
Voilà les premiers plans; une ancienne chapelle
Y mêle son aiguille, et range à ses côtés
Quelques ormes tortus, aux profils irrités,
Qui semblent, fatigués du zéphyr qui s'en joue,
Faire une remontrance au vent qui les secoue.
Une grosse charrette, au coin de ma maison,
Se rouille; et, devant moi, j'ai le vaste horizon,
Dont la mer bleue emplit toutes les échancrures;
Des poules et des coqs, étalant leurs dorures,
Causent sous ma fenêtre, et les greniers des toits
Me jettent, par instants, des chansons en patois.
Dans mon allée habite un cordier patriarche,
Vieux qui fait bruyamment tourner sa roue, et marche
A reculons, son chanvre autour des reins tordu.
J'aime ces flots où court le grand vent éperdu;
Les champs à promener tout le jour me convient;
Les petits villageois, leur livre en main, m'envient,
Chez le maître d'école où je me suis logé,
Comme un grand écolier abusant d'un congé.
Le ciel rit, l'air est pur; tout le jour, chez mon hôte,
C'est un doux bruit d'enfants épelant à voix haute;
L'eau coule, un verdier passe; et, moi, je dis: Merci!
Merci, Dieu tout-puissant! — Ainsi je vis; ainsi,
Paisible, heure par heure, à petit bruit, j'épanche
Mes jours, tout en songeant à vous, ma beauté blanche!
J'écoute les enfants jaser, et, par moment,
Je vois en pleine mer, passer superbement,
Au-dessus des pignons du tranquille village,
Quelque navire ailé qui fait un long voyage,

Et fuit sur l’Océan, par tous les vents traqué,
Qui, naguère dormait au port, le long du quai,
Et que n’ont retenu, loin des vagues jalouses,
Ni les pleurs des parents, ni l’effroi des épouses,
Ni le sombre reflet des écueils dans les eaux,
Ni l’importunité des sinistres oiseaux.

NOUS ALLIONS AU VERGER CUEILLIR DES BIGARREAUX

Nous allions au verger cueillir des bigarreaux.
Avec ses beaux bras blancs en marbre de Paros,
Elle montait dans l’arbre et courbait une branche;
Les feuilles frissonnaient au vent; sa gorge blanche,
O Virgile, ondoyait dans l’ombre et le soleil;
Ses petits doigts allaient chercher le fruit vermeil,
Semblable au feu qu’on voit dans le buisson qui flambe.
Je montais derrière elle; elle montrait sa jambe,
Et disait: «Taisez-vous!» à mes regards ardents;
Et chantait. Par moments, entre ses belles dents,
Pareille, aux chansons près, à Diane farouche,
Penchée, elle m’offrait la cerise à sa bouche;
Et ma bouche riait, et venait s’y poser.
Et laissait la cerise et prenait le baiser.

TU PEUX, COMME IL TE PLAIT, ME FAIRE JEUNE OU VIEUX

Tu peux, comme il te plaît, me faire jeune ou vieux.
Comme le soleil fait serein ou pluvieux
L’azur dont il est l’âme et que sa clarté dore,
Tu peux m’emplir de brume ou m’inonder d’aurore.
Du haut de ta splendeur, si pure qu’en ses plis,
Tu sembles une femme enfermée en un lys,
Et qu’à d’autres moments, l’oeil qu’éblouit ton âme
Croit voir, en te voyant, un lys dans une femme.
Si tu m’as souri, Dieu! tout mon être bondit!
Si, Madame, au milieu de tous, vous m’avez dit,
A haute voix: «Bonjour, Monsieur», et bas: «Je t’aime!»
Si tu m’as caressé de ton regard suprême,
Je vis! je suis léger, je suis fier, je suis grand;
Ta prunelle m’éclaire en me transfigurant;
J’ai le reflet charmant des yeux dont tu m’accueilles;
Comme on sent dans un bois des ailes sous les feuilles,
On sent de la gaîté sous chacun de mes mots;
Je cours, je vais, je ris; plus d’ennuis, plus de maux;
Et je chante, et voilà sur mon front la jeunesse!
Mais que ton coeur injuste, un jour, me méconnaisse;
Qu’il me faille porter en moi, jusqu’à demain,
L’énigme de ta main retirée à ma main;
— Qu’ai-je fait? qu’avait-elle? Elle avait quelque chose.
Pourquoi, dans la rumeur du salon où l’on cause,
Personne n’entendant, me disait-elle vous? —
Si je ne sais quel froid dans ton regard si doux
A passé comme passe au ciel une nuée,
Je sens mon âme en moi toute diminuée;
Je m’en vais, courbé, las, sombre comme un aïeul;
Il semble que sur moi, secouant son linceul,
Se soit soudain penché le noir vieillard Décembre;
Comme un loup dans son trou, je rentre dans ma chambre;
Le chagrin — âge et deuil, hélas! ont le même air, —
Assombrit chaque trait de mon visage amer,
Et m’y creuse une ride avec sa main pesante.
Joyeux, j’ai vingt-cinq ans; triste, j’en ai soixante.

EN ÉCOUTANT LES OISEAUX

Oh! quand donc aurez-vous fini, petits oiseaux,
De jaser au milieu des branches et des eaux,
Que nous nous expliquions et que je vous querelle?
Rouge-gorge, verdier, fauvette, tourterelle,
Oiseaux, je vous entends, je vous connais. Sachez
Que je ne suis pas dupe, ô doux ténors cachés,
De votre mélodie et de votre langage.
Celle que j'aime est loin et pense à moi; je gage,
O rossignol dont l'hymne, exquis et gracieux,
Donne un frémissement à l'astre dans les cieux,
Que ce que tu dis là, c'est le chant de son âme.
Vous guettez les soupirs de l'homme et de la femme,
Oiseaux; quand nous aimons et quand nous triomphons,
Quand notre être, tout bas, s'exhale en chants profonds,
Vous, attentifs, parmi les bois inaccessibles,
Vous saisissez au vol ces strophes invisibles,
Et vous les répétez tout haut, comme de vous;
Et vous mêlez, pour rendre encor l'hymne plus doux,
A la chanson des coeurs, le battement des ailes;
Si bien qu'on vous admire, écouteurs infidèles,
Et que le noir sapin murmure aux vieux tilleuls:
«Sont-ils charmants d'avoir trouvé cela tout seuls!»
Et que l'eau, palpitant sous le chant qui l'effleure,
Baise avec un sanglot le beau saule qui pleure;
Et que le dur tronc d'arbre a des airs attendris;
Et que l'épervier rêve, oubliant la perdrix;
Et que les loups s'en vont songer auprès des louves!
«Divin!» dit le hibou; le moineau dit: «Tu trouves?»
Amour, lorsqu'en nos coeurs tu te réfugias,
L'oiseau vint y puiser; ce sont ces plagiats,
Ces chants qu'un rossignol, belles, prend sur vos bouches,

Qui font que les grands bois courbent leurs fronts farouches,
Et que les lourds rochers, stupides et ravis,
Se penchent, les laissant piller le chènevis,
Et ne distinguent plus, dans leurs rêves étranges,
La langue des oiseaux de la langue des anges.

MON BRAS PRESSAIT TA TAILLE FRELE

Mon bras pressait ta taille frêle
Et souple comme le roseau;
Ton sein palpitait comme l'aile
D'un jeune oiseau.

Longtemps muets, nous contemplâmes
Le ciel où s'éteignait le jour.
Que se passait-il dans nos âmes?
Amour! amour!

Comme un ange qui se dévoile,
Tu me regardais, dans ma nuit,
Avec ton beau regard d'étoile,
Qui m'éblouit.

LES FEMMES SONT SUR LA TERRE

Les femmes sont sur la terre
Pour tout idéaliser;
L'univers est un mystère
Que commente leur baiser.

C’est l’amour qui, pour ceinture,
A l’onde et le firmament,
Et dont toute la nature,
N’est, au fond, que l’ornement.

Tout ce qui brille, offre à l’âme
Son parfum ou sa couleur;
Si Dieu n’avait fait la femme,
Il n’aurait pas fait la fleur.

A quoi bon vos étincelles,
Bleus saphirs, sans les yeux doux?
Les diamants, sans les belles,
Ne sont plus que des cailloux;

Et, dans les charmilles vertes,
Les roses dorment debout,
Et sont des bouches ouvertes
Pour ne rien dire du tout.

Tout objet qui charme ou rêve
Tient des femmes sa clarté;
La perle blanche, sans Ève,
Sans toi, ma fière beauté,

Ressemblant, tout enlaidie,
A mon amour qui te fuit,
N’est plus que la maladie
D’une bête dans la nuit.

ÉGLOGUE

Nous errions, elle et moi, dans les monts de Sicile.
Elle est fière pour tous et pour moi seul docile.
Les cieux et nos pensers rayonnaient à la fois.
Oh! comme aux lieux déserts les coeurs sont peu farouches!
Que de fleurs aux buissons, que de baisers aux bouches,
Quand on est dans l'ombre des bois!

Pareils à deux oiseaux qui vont de cime en cime,
Nous parvînmes enfin tout au bord d'un abîme.
Elle osa s'approcher de ce sombre entonnoir;
Et, quoique mainte épine offensât ses mains blanches,
Nous tâchâmes, penchés et nous tenant aux branches,
D'en voir le fond lugubre et noir.

En ce même moment, un titan centenaire,
Qui venait d'y rouler sous vingt coups de tonnerre,
Se tordait dans ce gouffre où le jour n'ose entrer;
Et d'horribles vautours au bec impitoyable,
Attirés par le bruit de sa chute effroyable,
Commençaient à le dévorer.

Alors, elle me dit: «J'ai peur qu'on ne nous voie!
Cherchons un antre afin d'y cacher notre joie!
Vois ce pauvre géant! nous aurions notre tour!
Car les dieux envieux qui l'ont fait disparaître,
Et qui furent jaloux de sa grandeur, peut-être
Seraient jaloux de notre amour!»

VIENS! — UNE FLUTE INVISIBLE

Viens! — une flûte invisible
Soupire dans les vergers. —
La chanson la plus paisible

Est la chanson des bergers.

Le vent ride, sous l'yeuse,
Le sombre miroir des eaux. —
La chanson la plus joyeuse
Est la chanson des oiseaux.

Que nul soin ne te tourmente.
Aimons-nous! aimons toujours! —
La chanson la plus charmante
Est la chanson des amours.

BILLET DU MATIN

Si les liens des coeurs ne sont pas des mensonges,
Oh! dites, vous devez avoir eu de doux songes,
Je n'ai fait que rêver de vous toute la nuit.
Et nous nous aimions tant! vous me disiez: «Tout fuit,
Tout s'éteint, tout s'en va; ta seule image reste.»
Nous devions être morts dans ce rêve céleste;
Il semblait que c'était déjà le paradis.
Oh! oui, nous étions morts, bien sûr; je vous le dis.
Nous avions tous les deux la forme de nos âmes.
Tout ce que, l'un de l'autre, ici-bas nous aimâmes
Composait notre corps de flamme et de rayons,
Et, naturellement, nous nous reconnaissions.
Il nous apparaissait des visages d'aurore
Qui nous disaient: «C'est moi!» la lumière sonore
Chantait; et nous étions des frissons et des voix.
Vous me disiez: «Écoute!» et je répondais: «Vois!»
Je disais: «Viens-nous-en dans les profondeurs sombres;
Vivons; c'est autrefois que nous étions des ombres.»
Et, mêlant nos appels et nos cris: «Viens! oh! viens!

Et moi, je me rappelle, et toi, tu te souviens.»
Éblouis, nous chantions: — C'est nous-mêmes qui sommes
Tout ce qui nous semblait, sur la terre des hommes,
Bon, juste, grand, sublime, ineffable et charmant;
Nous sommes le regard et le rayonnement;
Le sourire de l'aube et l'odeur de la rose,
C'est nous; l'astre est le nid où notre aile se pose;
Nous avons l'infini pour sphère et pour milieu,
L'éternité pour l'âge; et, notre amour, c'est Dieu.

PAROLES DANS L'OMBRE

Elle disait: C'est vrai, j'ai tort de vouloir mieux;
Les heures sont ainsi très-doucement passées;
Vous êtes là; mes yeux ne quittent pas vos yeux,
Où je regarde aller et venir vos pensées.

Vous voir est un bonheur; je ne l'ai pas complet.
Sans doute, c'est encor bien charmant de la sorte!
Je veille, car je sais tout ce qui vous déplaît,
A ce que nul fâcheux ne vienne ouvrir la porte;

Je me fais bien petite, en mon coin, près de vous;
Vous êtes mon lion, je suis votre colombe;
J'entends de vos papiers le bruit paisible et doux;
Je ramasse parfois votre plume qui tombe;

Sans doute, je vous ai; sans doute, je vous voi.
La pensée est un vin dont les rêveurs sont ivres,
Je le sais; mais, pourtant, je veux qu'on songe à moi.
Quand vous êtes ainsi tout un soir dans vos livres,

Sans relever la tête et sans me dire un mot,

Une ombre reste au fond de mon coeur qui vous aime;
Et, pour que je vous voie entièrement, il faut
Me regarder un peu, de temps en temps, vous-même.

L'HIRONDELLE AU PRINTEMPS CHERCHE LES VIEILLES TOURS

L'hirondelle au printemps cherche les vieilles tours,
Débris où n'est plus l'homme, où la vie est toujours;
La fauvette en avril cherche, ô ma bien-aimée,
La forêt sombre et fraîche et l'épaisse ramée,
La mousse, et, dans les noeuds des branches, les doux toits
Qu'en se superposant font les feuilles des bois.
Ainsi fait l'oiseau. Nous, nous cherchons, dans la ville,
Le coin désert, l'abri solitaire et tranquille,
Le seuil qui n'a pas d'yeux obliques et méchants,
La rue où les volets sont fermés; dans les champs,
Nous cherchons le sentier du pâtre et du poëte;
Dans les bois, la clairière inconnue et muette
Où le silence éteint les bruits lointains et sourds.
L'oiseau cache son nid, nous cachons nos amours.

SOUS LES ARBRES

Ils marchaient à côté l'un de l'autre; des danses
Troublaient le bois joyeux; ils marchaient, s'arrêtaient,
Parlaient, s'interrompaient, et, pendant les silences,
Leurs bouches se taisant, leurs âmes chuchotaient.

Ils songeaient; ces deux coeurs, que le mystère écoute,
Sur la création au sourire innocent
Penchés, et s'y versant dans l'ombre goutte à goutte,
Disaient à chaque fleur quelque chose en passant.

Elle sait tous les noms des fleurs qu'en sa corbeille
Mai nous rapporte avec la joie et les beaux jours;
Elle les lui nommait comme eût fait une abeille,
Puis elle reprenait: «Parlons de nos amours.

«Je suis en haut, je suis en bas,» lui disait-elle,
«Et je veille sur vous, d'en bas comme d'en haut.»
Il demandait comment chaque plante s'appelle,
Se faisant expliquer le printemps mot à mot.

O champs! il savourait ces fleurs et cette femme.
O bois! ô prés! nature où tout s'absorbe en un,
Le parfum de la fleur est votre petite âme,
Et l'âme de la femme est votre grand parfum!

La nuit tombait; au tronc d'un chêne, noir pilastre,
Il s'adossait pensif; elle disait: «Voyez
Ma prière toujours dans vos cieux comme un astre,
Et mon amour toujours comme un chien à tes pieds.»

JE SAIS BIEN QU'IL EST D'USAGE

Je sais bien qu'il est d'usage
D'aller en tous lieux criant
Que l'homme est d'autant plus sage
Qu'il rêve plus de néant;

D’applaudir la grandeur noire,
Les héros, le fer qui luit,
Et la guerre, cette gloire
Qu’on fait avec de la nuit;

D’admirer les coups d’épée,
Et la fortune, ce char
Dont une roue est Pompée,
Dont l’autre roue est César;

Et Pharsale et Trasimène,
Et tout ce que les Nérons
Font voler de cendre humaine
Dans le souffle des clairons!

Je sais que c’est la coutume
D’adorer ces nains géants
Qui, parce qu’ils sont écume,
Se supposent océans;

Et de croire à la poussière,
A la fanfare qui fuit,
Aux pyramides de pierre,
Aux avalanches de bruit.

Moi, je préfère, ô fontaines!
Moi, je préfère, ô ruisseaux!
Au Dieu des grands capitaines,
Le Dieu des petits oiseaux!

O mon doux ange, en ces ombres
Où, nous aimant, nous brillons,
Au Dieu des ouragans sombres
Qui poussent les bataillons,

Au Dieu des vastes armées,
Des canons au lourd essieu,

Des flammes et des fumées,
Je préfère le bon Dieu!

Le bon Dieu, qui veut qu'on aime,
Qui met au coeur de l'amant
Le premier vers du poëme,
Le dernier au firmament!

Qui songe à l'aile qui pousse,
Aux oeufs blancs, au nid troublé,
Si la caille a de la mousse,
Et si la grive a du blé;

Et qui fait, pour les Orphées,
Tenir, immense et subtil,
Tout le doux monde des fées
Dans le vert bourgeon d'avril!

Si bien, que cela s'envole
Et se disperse au printemps,
Et qu'une vague auréole
Sort de tous les nids chantants!

Vois-tu, quoique notre gloire
Brille en ce que nous créons,
Et dans notre grande histoire
Pleine de grands panthéons;

Quoique nous ayons des glaives,
Des temples, Chéops, Babel,
Des tours, des palais, des rêves,
Et des tombeaux jusqu'au ciel;

Il resterait peu de choses
A l'homme, qui vit un jour,
Si Dieu nous ôtait les roses,
Si Dieu nous ôtait l'amour!

N’ENVIONS RIEN

O femme, pensée aimante
Et coeur souffrant,
Vous trouvez la fleur charmante
Et l’oiseau grand;

Vous enviez la pelouse
Aux fleurs de miel;
Vous voulez que je jalouse
L’oiseau du ciel.

Vous dites, beauté superbe
Au front terni,
Regardant tour à tour l’herbe
Et l’infini:

«Leur existence est la bonne;
Là, tout est beau;
Là, sur la fleur qui rayonne.
Plane l’oiseau!

«Près de vous, aile bénie,
Lys enchanté,
Qu’est-ce, hélas! que le génie
Et la beauté?

«Fleur pure, alouette agile,
A vous le prix!
Toi, tu dépasses Virgile;
Toi, Lycoris!

«Quel vol profond dans l’air sombre!
Quels doux parfums! — »
Et des pleurs brillent sous l’ombre
De vos cils bruns.

Oui, contemplez l’hirondelle,
Les liserons;
Mais ne vous plaignez pas, belle,
Car nous mourrons!

Car nous irons dans la sphère
De l’éther pur;
La femme y sera lumière,
Et l’homme azur;

Et les roses sont moins belles
Que les houris;
Et les oiseaux ont moins d’ailes
Que les esprits!

IL FAIT FROID

L’hiver blanchit le dur chemin.
Tes jours aux méchants sont en proie.
La bise mord ta douce main;
La haine souffle sur ta joie.

La neige emplit le noir sillon.
La lumière est diminuée... —
Ferme ta porte à l’aquilon!
Ferme ta vitre à la nuée!

Et puis laisse ton coeur ouvert!

Le coeur, c’est la sainte fenêtre.
Le soleil de brume est couvert;
Mais Dieu va rayonner peut-être!

Doute du bonheur, fruit mortel;
Doute de l’homme plein d’envie;
Doute du prêtre et de l’autel;
Mais crois à l’amour, ô ma vie!

Crois à l’amour, toujours entier,
Toujours brillant sous tous les voiles!
A l’amour, tison du foyer!
A l’amour rayon des étoiles!

Aime et ne désespère pas,
Dans ton âme où parfois je passe,
Où mes vers chuchotent tout bas,
Laisse chaque chose à sa place.

La fidélité sans ennui,
La paix des vertus élevées,
Et l’indulgence pour autrui,
Éponge des fautes lavées.

Dans ta pensée où tout est beau,
Que rien ne tombe ou ne recule.
Fais de ton amour ton flambeau.
On s’éclaire de ce qui brûle.

A ces démons d’inimitié,
Oppose ta douceur sereine,
Et reverse-leur en pitié
Tout ce qu’ils t’ont vomi de haine.

La haine, c’est l’hiver du coeur.
Plains-les! mais garde ton courage.
Garde ton sourire vainqueur;

Bel arc-en-ciel, sors de l’orage!

Garde ton amour éternel.
L’hiver, l’astre éteint-il sa flamme?
Dieu ne retire rien du ciel,
Ne retire rien de ton âme!

IL LUI DISAIT: «VOIS-TU, SI TOUS DEUX NOUS POUVIONS

Il lui disait: «Vois-tu, si tous deux nous pouvions,
L’âme pleine de foi, le coeur plein de rayons,
Ivres de douce extase et de mélancolie,
Rompre les mille noeuds dont la ville nous lie;
Si nous pouvions quitter ce Paris triste et fou,
Nous fuirions; nous irions quelque part, n’importe où,
Chercher loin des vains bruits, loin des haines jalouses,
Un coin où nous aurions des arbres, des pelouses;
«Une maison petite avec des fleurs, un peu
De solitude, un peu de silence, un ciel bleu,
La chanson d’un oiseau qui sur le toit se pose,
De l’ombre; — et quel besoin avons-nous d’autre chose?»

AIMONS TOUJOURS! AIMONS ENCORE!

Aimons toujours! aimons encore!
Quand l’amour s’en va, l’espoir fuit.
L’amour, c’est le cri de l’aurore,

L’amour, c’est l’hymne de la nuit.

Ce que le flot dit aux rivages,
Ce que le vent dit aux vieux monts,
Ce que l’astre dit aux nuages,
C’est le mot ineffable: Aimons!

L’amour fait songer, vivre et croire.
Il a, pour réchauffer le coeur,
Un rayon de plus que la gloire,
Et ce rayon, c’est le bonheur!

Aime! qu’on les loue ou les blâme,
Toujours les grands coeurs aimeront:
Joins cette jeunesse de l’âme
A la jeunesse de ton front!

Aime, afin de charmer tes heures!
Afin qu’on voie en tes beaux yeux
Des voluptés intérieures
Le sourire mystérieux!

Aimons-nous toujours davantage!
Unissons-nous mieux chaque jour.
Les arbres croissent en feuillage;
Que notre âme croisse en amour!

Soyons le miroir et l’image!
Soyons la fleur et le parfum!
Les amants, qui, seuls sous l’ombrage,
Se sentent deux et ne sont qu’un!

Les poëtes cherchent les belles.
La femme, ange aux chastes faveurs,
Aime à rafraîchir sous ses ailes
Ces grands fronts brûlants et rêveurs.

Venez à nous, beautés touchantes!
Viens à moi, toi, mon bien, ma loi!
Ange! viens à moi quand tu chantes,
Et, quand tu pleures, viens à moi!

Nous seuls comprenons vos extases;
Car notre esprit n’est point moqueur;
Car les poëtes sont les vases
Où les femmes versent leur coeur.

Moi qui ne cherche dans ce monde
Que la seule réalité,
Moi qui laisse fuir comme l’onde
Tout ce qui n’est que vanité,

Je préfère, aux biens dont s’enivre
L’orgueil du soldat ou du roi,
L’ombre que tu fais sur mon livre
Quand ton front se penche sur moi.

Toute ambition allumée
Dans notre esprit, brasier subtil,
Tombe en cendre ou vole en fumée,
Et l’on se dit: «Qu’en reste-t-il?»

Tout plaisir, fleur à peine éclose
Dans notre avril sombre et terni,
S’effeuille et meurt, lys, myrte ou rose,
Et l’on se dit: «C’est donc fini!»

L’amour seul reste. O noble femme,
Si tu veux, dans ce vil séjour,
Garder ta foi, garder ton âme,
Garder ton Dieu, garde l’amour!

Conserve en ton coeur, sans rien craindre,
Dusses-tu pleurer et souffrir,

La flamme qui ne peut s’éteindre
Et la fleur qui ne peut mourir!

APRÈS L’HIVER

Tout revit, ma bien-aimée!
Le ciel gris perd sa pâleur;
Quand la terre est embaumée,
Le coeur de l’homme est meilleur.

En haut, d’où l’amour ruisselle,
En bas, où meurt la douleur,
La même immense étincelle
Allume l’astre et la fleur.

L’hiver fuit, saison d’alarmes,
Noir avril mystérieux
Où l’âpre sève des larmes
Coule, et du coeur monte aux yeux.

O douce désuétude
De souffrir et de pleurer!
Veux-tu, dans la solitude,
Nous mettre à nous adorer?

La branche au soleil se dore
Et penche, pour l’abriter,
Ses boutons qui vont éclore
Sur l’oiseau qui va chanter.

L’aurore où nous nous aimâmes
Semble renaître à nos yeux;
Et mai sourit dans nos âmes

Comme il sourit dans les cieux.

On entend rire, on voit luire
Tous les êtres tour à tour,
La nuit, les astres bruire,
Et les abeilles, le jour.

Et partout nos regards lisent,
Et, dans l'herbe et dans les nids,
De petites voix nous disent:
«Les aimants sont les bénis!»

L'air enivre; tu reposes
A mon cou tes bras vainqueurs. —
Sur les rosiers que de roses!
Que de soupirs dans nos coeurs!

Comme l'aube, tu me charmes;
Ta bouche et tes yeux chéris
Ont, quand tu pleures, ses larmes,
Et ses perles quand tu ris.

La nature, soeur jumelle
D'Ève et d'Adam et du jour,
Nous aime, nous berce et mêle
Son mystère à notre amour.

Il suffit que tu paraisses
Pour que le ciel, t'adorant,
Te contemple; et, nos caresses,
Toute l'ombre nous les rend!

Clartés et parfums nous-mêmes,
Nous baignons nos coeurs heureux
Dans les effluves suprêmes
Des éléments amoureux.

Et, sans qu’un souci t’oppresse,
Sans que ce soit mon tourment,
J’ai l’étoile pour maîtresse;
Le soleil est ton amant;

Et nous donnons notre fièvre
Aux fleurs où nous appuyons
Nos bouches, et notre lèvre
Sent le baiser des rayons.

QUE LE SORT, QUEL QU’IL SOIT, VOUS TROUVE TOUJOURS GRANDE!

Que le sort, quel qu’il soit, vous trouve toujours grande!
Que demain soit doux comme hier!
Qu’en vous, ô ma beauté, jamais ne se répande
Le découragement amer,
Ni le fiel, ni l’ennui des coeurs qui se dénouent,
Ni cette cendre, hélas! que sur un front pâli,
Dans l’ombre, à petit bruit secouent
Les froides ailes de l’oubli!

Laissez, laissez brûler pour vous, ô vous que j’aime!
Mes chants dans mon âme allumés!
Vivez pour la nature, et le ciel, et moi-même!
Après avoir souffert, aimez!
Laissez entrer en vous, après nos deuils funèbres,
L’aube, fille des nuits, l’amour, fils des douleurs,
Tout ce qui luit dans les ténèbres,
Tout ce qui sourit dans les pleurs!

JE RESPIRE OU TU PALPITES

Je respire où tu palpites,
Tu sais; à quoi bon, hélas!
Rester là si tu me quittes,
Et vivre si tu t’en vas?

A quoi bon vivre, étant l’ombre
De cet ange qui s’enfuit!
A quoi bon, sous le ciel sombre,
N’être plus que de la nuit?

Je suis la fleur des murailles,
Dont avril est le seul bien.
Il suffit que tu t’en ailles
Pour qu’il ne reste plus rien.

Tu m’entoures d’auréoles;
Te voir est mon seul souci.
Il suffit que tu t’envoles
Pour que je m’envole aussi.

Si tu pars, mon front se penche;
Mon âme au ciel, son berceau,
Fuira, car dans ta main blanche
Tu tiens ce sauvage oiseau.

Que veux-tu que je devienne,
Si je n’entends plus ton pas?
Est-ce ta vie ou la mienne
Qui s’en va? Je ne sais pas.

Quand mon courage succombe,
J’en reprends dans ton coeur pur;

Je suis comme la colombe
Qui vient boire au lac d’azur.

L’amour fait comprendre à l’âme
L’univers, sombre et béni;
Et cette petite flamme
Seule éclaire l’infini.

Sans toi, toute la nature
N’est plus qu’un cachot fermé,
Où je vais à l’aventure,
Pâle et n’étant plus aimé.

Sans toi, tout s’effeuille et tombe;
L’ombre emplit mon noir sourcil;
Une fête est une tombe,
La patrie est un exil.

Je t’implore et te réclame;
Ne fuis pas loin de mes maux,
O fauvette de mon âme
Qui chantes dans mes rameaux!

De quoi puis-je avoir envie,
De quoi puis-je avoir effroi,
Que ferai-je de la vie,
Si tu n’es plus près de moi?

Tu portes dans la lumière,
Tu portes dans les buissons,
Sur une aile ma prière,
Et sur l’autre mes chansons.

Que dirai-je aux champs que voile
L’inconsolable douleur?
Que ferai-je de l’étoile?
Que ferai-je de la fleur?

Que dirai-je au bois morose
Qu'illuminait ta douceur?
Que répondrai-je à la rose
Disant: «Où donc est ma soeur?»

J'en mourrai; fuis, si tu l'oses.
A quoi bon, jours révolus!
Regarder toutes ces choses
Qu'elle ne regarde plus?

Que ferai-je de la lyre,
De la vertu, du destin?
Hélas! et, sans ton sourire,
Que ferai-je du matin?

Que ferai-je seul, farouche,
Sans toi, du jour et des cieux,
De mes baisers sans ta bouche,
Et de mes pleurs sans tes yeux!

CRÉPUSCULE

L'étang mystérieux, suaire aux blanches moires,
Frissonne; au fond du bois, la clairière apparaît;
Les arbres sont profonds et les branches sont noires;
Avez-vous vu Vénus à travers la forêt?

Avez-vous vu Vénus au sommet des collines?
Vous qui passez dans l'ombre, êtes-vous des amants?
Les sentiers bruns sont pleins de blanches mousselines;
L'herbe s'éveille et parle aux sépulcres dormants.

Que dit-il, le brin d’herbe? et que répond la tombe?
Aimez, vous qui vivez! on a froid sous les ifs.
Lèvre, cherche la bouche! aimez-vous! la nuit tombe;
Soyez heureux pendant que nous sommes pensifs.

Dieu veut qu’on ait aimé. Vivez! faites envie,
O couples qui passez sous le vert coudrier.
Tout ce que dans la tombe, en sortant de la vie,
On emporta d’amour, on l’emploie à prier.

Les mortes d’aujourd’hui furent jadis les belles.
Le ver luisant dans l’ombre erre avec son flambeau.
Le vent fait tressaillir, au milieu des javelles,
Le brin d’herbe, et Dieu fait tressaillir le tombeau.

La forme d’un toit noir dessine une chaumière;
On entend dans les prés le pas lourd du faucheur;
L’étoile aux cieux, ainsi qu’une fleur de lumière,
Ouvre et fait rayonner sa splendide fraîcheur.

Aimez-vous! c’est le mois où les fraises sont mûres.
L’ange du soir rêveur, qui flotte dans les vents,
Mêle, en les emportant sur ses ailes obscures,
Les prières des morts aux baisers des vivants.

LA NICHÉE SOUS LE PORTAIL

Oui, va prier à l’église,
Va; mais regarde en passant,
Sous la vieille voûte grise,
Ce petit nid innocent.

Aux grands temples où l’on prie,

Le martinet, frais et pur,
Suspend la maçonnerie
Qui contient le plus d’azur.

La couvée est dans la mousse
Du portail qui s’attendrit;
Elle sent la chaleur douce
Des ailes de Jésus-Christ.

L’église, où l’ombre flamboie,
Vibre, émue à ce doux bruit;
Les oiseaux sont pleins de joie,
La pierre est pleine de nuit.

Les saints, graves personnages
Sous les porches palpitants,
Aiment ces doux voisinages
Du baiser et du printemps.

Les vierges et les prophètes
Se penchent dans l’âpre tour,
Sur ces ruches d’oiseaux faites
Pour le divin miel amour.

L’oiseau se perche sur l’ange;
L’apôtre rit sous l’arceau.
«Bonjour, saint!» dit la mésange.
Le saint dit: «Bonjour, oiseau!»

Les cathédrales sont belles
Et hautes sous le ciel bleu;
Mais le nid des hirondelles
Est l’édifice de Dieu.

UN SOIR QUE JE REGARDAIS LE CIEL

Elle me dit, un soir, en souriant:
— Ami, pourquoi contemplez-vous sans cesse
Le jour qui fuit, ou l’ombre qui s’abaisse,
Ou l’astre d’or qui monte à l’orient?
Que font vos yeux là-haut? je les réclame.
Quittez le ciel; regardez dans mon âme!

Dans ce ciel vaste, ombre où vous vous plaisez,
Où vos regards démesurés vont lire,
Qu’apprendrez-vous qui vaille mon sourire?
Qu’apprendras-tu qui vaille nos baisers?
Oh! de mon coeur lève les chastes voiles.
Si tu savais comme il est plein d’étoiles!

Que de soleils! vois-tu, quand nous aimons,
Tout est en nous un radieux spectacle.
Le dévouement, rayonnant sur l’obstacle,
Vaut bien Vénus qui brille sur les monts.
Le vaste azur n’est rien, je te l’atteste;
Le ciel que j’ai dans l’âme est plus céleste!

C’est beau de voir un astre s’allumer.
Le monde est plein de merveilleuses choses.
Douce est l’aurore, et douces sont les roses.
Rien n’est si doux que le charme d’aimer!
La clarté vraie et la meilleure flamme,
C’est le rayon qui va de l’âme à l’âme!

L’amour vaut mieux, au fond des antres frais,
Que ces soleils qu’on ignore et qu’on nomme.
Dieu mit, sachant ce qui convient à l’homme,
Le ciel bien loin et la femme tout près.
Il dit à ceux qui scrutent l’azur sombre:
«Vivez! aimez! le reste, c’est mon ombre!»

Aimons! c’est tout. Et Dieu le veut ainsi.
Laisse ton ciel que de froids rayons dorent!
Tu trouveras, dans deux yeux qui t’adorent,
Plus de beauté, plus de lumière aussi!
Aimer, c’est voir, sentir, rêver, comprendre.
L’esprit plus grand s’ajoute au coeur plus tendre.

Viens! bien-aimé! n’entends-tu pas toujours
Dans nos transports une harmonie étrange?
Autour de nous la nature se change
En une lyre et chante nos amours!
Viens! aimons-nous! errons sur la pelouse.
Ne songe plus au ciel! j’en suis jalouse! —

Ma bien-aimée ainsi tout bas parlait,
Avec son front posé sur sa main blanche,
Et l’oeil rêveur d’un ange qui se penche,
Et sa voix grave, et cet air qui me plaît;
Belle et tranquille, et de me voir charmée,
Ainsi tout bas parlait ma bien-aimée.

Nos coeurs battaient; l’extase m’étouffait;
Les fleurs du soir entr’ouvraient leurs corolles....
Qu’avez-vous fait, arbres, de nos paroles?
De nos soupirs, rochers, qu’avez-vous fait?
C’est un destin bien triste que le nôtre,
Puisqu’un tel jour s’envole comme un autre!

O souvenir! trésor dans l’ombre accru!
Sombre horizon des anciennes pensées!
Chère lueur des choses éclipsées!
Rayonnement du passé disparu!
Comme du seuil et du dehors d’un temple,
L’oeil de l’esprit en rêvant vous contemple!

Quand les beaux jours font place aux jours amers,
De tout bonheur il faut quitter l’idée;

Quand l’espérance est tout à fait vidée,
Laissons tomber la coupe au fond des mers.
L’oubli! l’oubli! c’est l’onde où tout se noie;
C’est la mer sombre où l’on jette sa joie.

LIVRE TROISIÈME: LES LUTTES ET LES RÊVES

I

ÉCRIT SUR UN EXEMPLAIRE DE LA DIVINA COMMEDIA

Un soir, dans le chemin je vis passer un homme
Vêtu d’un grand manteau comme un consul de Rome,
Et qui me semblait noir sur la clarté des cieux.
Ce passant s’arrêta, fixant sur moi ses yeux
Brillants, et si profonds, qu’ils en étaient sauvages,
Et me dit: «J’ai d’abord été, dans les vieux âges,
Une haute montagne emplissant l’horizon;
Puis, âme encore aveugle et brisant ma prison,
Je montai d’un degré dans l’échelle des êtres,
Je fus un chêne, et j’eus des autels et des prêtres,
Et je jetai des bruits étranges dans les airs;
Puis je fus un lion rêvant dans les déserts,
Parlant à la nuit sombre avec sa voix grondante;
Maintenant, je suis homme, et je m’appelle Dante.»

MELANCHOLIA

Écoutez. Une femme au profil décharné,
Maigre, blême, portant un enfant étonné,
Est là qui se lamente au milieu de la rue.
La foule, pour l’entendre, autour d’elle se rue.
Elle accuse quelqu’un, une autre femme, ou bien
Son mari. Ses enfants ont faim. Elle n’a rien;

Pas d’argent; pas de pain; à peine un lit de paille.
L’homme est au cabaret pendant qu’elle travaille.
Elle pleure, et s’en va. Quand ce spectre a passé,
O penseurs, au milieu de ce groupe amassé,
Qui vient de voir le fond d’un coeur qui se déchire,
Qu’entendez-vous toujours? Un long éclat de rire.

Cette fille au doux front a cru peut-être, un jour,
Avoir droit au bonheur, à la joie, à l’amour.
Mais elle est seule, elle est sans parents, pauvre fille!
Seule! — n’importe! elle a du courage, une aiguille!
Elle travaille, et peut gagner dans son réduit,
En travaillant le jour, en travaillant la nuit,
Un peu de pain, un gîte, une jupe de toile.
Le soir, elle regarde en rêvant quelque étoile,
Et chante au bord du toit tant que dure l’été.
Mais l’hiver vient. Il fait bien froid, en vérité,
Dans ce logis mal clos tout en haut de la rampe;
Les jours sont courts, il faut allumer une lampe;
L’huile est chère, le bois est cher, le pain est cher.
O jeunesse! printemps! aube! en proie à l’hiver!
La faim passe bientôt sa griffe sous la porte,
Décroche un vieux manteau, saisit la montre, emporte
Les meubles, prend enfin quelque humble bague d’or;
Tout est vendu! L’enfant travaille et lutte encor;
Elle est honnête; mais elle a, quand elle veille,
La misère, démon, qui lui parle à l’oreille.
L’ouvrage manque, hélas! cela se voit souvent.
Que devenir? Un jour, ô jour sombre! elle vend
La pauvre croix d’honneur de son vieux père, et pleure;
Elle tousse, elle a froid. Il faut donc qu’elle meure!
A dix-sept ans! grand Dieu! mais que faire?... — Voilà
Ce qui fait qu’un matin la douce fille alla
Droit au gouffre, et qu’enfin, à présent, ce qui monte
A son front, ce n’est plus la pudeur, c’est la honte.
Hélas, et maintenant, deuil et pleurs éternels!
C’est fini. Les enfants, ces innocents cruels,

La suivent dans la rue avec des cris de joie.
Malheureuse! elle traîne une robe de soie,
Elle chante, elle rit... ah! pauvre âme aux abois!
Et le peuple sévère, avec sa grande voix,
Souffle qui courbe un homme et qui brise une femme,
Lui dit quand elle vient: «C’est toi? Va-t’en, infâme!»

Un homme s’est fait riche en vendant à faux poids;
La loi le fait juré. L’hiver, dans les temps froids,
Un pauvre a pris un pain pour nourrir sa famille.
Regardez cette salle où le peuple fourmille;
Ce riche y vient juger ce pauvre. Écoutez bien.
C’est juste, puisque l’un a tout et l’autre rien.
Ce juge, — ce marchand, — fâché de perdre une heure,
Jette un regard distrait sur cet homme qui pleure,
L’envoie au bagne, et part pour sa maison des champs.
Tous s’en vont en disant: «C’est bien!» bons et méchants,
Et rien ne reste là qu’un Christ pensif et pâle,
Levant les bras au ciel dans le fond de la salle.

Un homme de génie apparaît. Il est doux,
Il est fort, il est grand; il est utile à tous;
Comme l’aube au-dessus de l’océan qui roule,
Il dore d’un rayon tous les fronts de la foule;
Il luit; le jour qu’il jette est un jour éclatant;
Il apporte une idée au siècle qui l’attend;
Il fait son oeuvre; il veut des choses nécessaires,
Agrandir les esprits, amoindrir les misères;
Heureux, dans ses travaux dont les cieux sont témoins,
Si l’on pense un peu plus, si l’on souffre un peu moins!
Il vient. — Certes, on le va couronner! — On le hue!
Scribes, savants, rhéteurs, les salons, la cohue,
Ceux qui n’ignorent rien, ceux qui doutent de tout,
Ceux qui flattent le roi, ceux qui flattent l’égout,
Tous hurlent à la fois et font un bruit sinistre.
Si c’est un orateur ou si c’est un ministre,
On le siffle. Si c’est un poëte, il entend

Ce choeur: «Absurde! faux! monstrueux! révoltant!»
Lui, cependant, tandis qu’on bave sur sa palme,
Debout, les bras croisés, le front levé, l’oeil calme,
Il contemple, serein, l’idéal et le beau;
Il rêve; et, par moments, il secoue un flambeau
Qui, sous ses pieds, dans l’ombre, éblouissant la haine,
Éclaire tout à coup le fond de l’âme humaine;
Ou, ministre, il prodigue et ses nuits et ses jours;
Orateur, il entasse efforts, travaux, discours;
Il marche, il lutte! Hélas! l’injure ardente et triste,
A chaque pas qu’il fait, se transforme et persiste.
Nul abri. Ce serait un ennemi public,
Un monstre fabuleux, dragon ou basilic,
Qu’il serait moins traqué de toutes les manières,
Moins entouré de gens armés de grosses pierres,
Moins haï! — Pour eux tous et pour ceux qui viendront,
Il va semant la gloire, il recueille l’affront.
Le progrès est son but, le bien est sa boussole;
Pilote, sur l’avant du navire il s’isole;
Tout marin, pour dompter les vents et les courants,
Met tour à tour le cap sur des points différents,
Et, pour mieux arriver, dévie en apparence;
Il fait de même; aussi blâme et cris; l’ignorance
Sait tout, dénonce tout; il allait vers le nord,
Il avait tort; il va vers le sud, il a tort;
Si le temps devient noir, que de rage et de joie!
Cependant, sous le faix sa tête à la fin ploie,
L’âge vient, il couvait un mal profond et lent,
Il meurt. L’envie alors, ce démon vigilant,
Accourt, le reconnaît, lui ferme la paupière,
Prend soin de le clouer de ses mains dans la bière,
Se penche, écoute, épie en cette sombre nuit
S’il est vraiment bien mort, s’il ne fait pas de bruit,
S’il ne peut plus savoir de quel nom on le nomme

Où vont tous ces enfants dont pas un seul ne rit?
Ces doux êtres pensifs, que la lièvre maigrit?

Ces filles de huit ans qu’on voit cheminer seules?
Ils s’en vont travailler quinze heures sous des meules;
Ils vont, de l’aube au soir, faire éternellement
Dans la même prison le même mouvement.
Accroupis sous les dents d’une machine sombre,
Monstre hideux qui mâche on ne sait quoi dans l’ombre,
Innocents dans un bagne, anges dans un enfer,
Ils travaillent. Tout est d’airain, tout est de fer.
Jamais on ne s’arrête et jamais on ne joue.
Aussi quelle pâleur! la cendre est sur leur joue.
Il fait à peine jour, ils sont déjà bien las.
Ils ne comprennent rien à leur destin, hélas!
Ils semblent dire à Dieu: «Petits comme nous sommes,
Notre père, voyez ce que nous font les hommes!»
O servitude infâme imposée à l’enfant!
Rachitisme! travail dont le souffle étouffant
Défait ce qu’a fait Dieu: qui tue, oeuvre insensée,
La beauté sur les fronts, dans les coeurs la pensée,
Et qui ferait — c’est là son fruit le plus certain —
D’Apollon un bossu, de Voltaire un crétin!

Travail mauvais qui prend l’âge tendre en sa serre,
Qui produit la richesse en créant la misère,
Qui se sert d’un enfant ainsi que d’un outil!
Progrès dont on demande: «Où va-t-il? que veut-il?»
Qui brise la jeunesse en fleur! qui donne, en somme,
Une âme à la machine et la retire à l’homme!
Que ce travail, haï des mères, soit maudit!
Maudit comme le vice où l’on s’abâtardit,
Maudit comme l’opprobre et comme le blasphème!
O Dieu! qu’il soit maudit au nom du travail même,
Au nom du vrai travail, saint, fécond, généreux,
Qui fait le peuple libre et qui rend l’homme heureux!

Le pesant chariot porte une énorme pierre;
Le limonier, suant du mors à la croupière,
Tire, et le roulier fouette, et le pavé glissant

Monte, et le cheval triste a le poitrail en sang.
Il tire, traîne, geint, tire encore et s'arrête;
Le fouet noir tourbillonne au-dessus de sa tête;
C'est lundi; l'homme hier buvait aux Porcherons
Un vin plein de fureur, de cris et de jurons;
Oh! quelle est donc la loi formidable qui livre
L'être à l'être, et la bête effarée à l'homme ivre!
L'animal éperdu ne peut plus faire un pas;
Il sent l'ombre sur lui peser; il ne sait pas,
Sous le bloc qui l'écrase et le fouet qui l'assomme,
Ce que lui veut la pierre et ce que lui veut l'homme.
Et le roulier n'est plus qu'un orage de coups
Tombant sur ce forçat qui traîne des licous,
Qui souffre et ne connaît ni repos ni dimanche.
Si la corde se casse, il frappe avec le manche,
Et, si le fouet se casse, il frappe avec le pié;
Et le cheval, tremblant, hagard, estropié,
Baisse son cou lugubre et sa tête égarée;
On entend, sous les coups de la botte ferrée,
Sonner le ventre nu du pauvre être muet!
Il râle; tout à l'heure encore il remuait;
Mais il ne bouge plus, et sa force est finie;
Et les coups furieux pleuvent; son agonie
Tente un dernier effort; son pied fait un écart,
Il tombe, et le voilà brisé sous le brancard;
Et, dans l'ombre, pendant que son bourreau redouble,
Il regarde Quelqu'un de sa prunelle trouble;
Et l'on voit lentement s'éteindre, humble et terni,
Son oeil plein des stupeurs sombres de l'infini,
Où luit vaguement l'âme effrayante des choses.
Hélas!

Cet avocat plaide toutes les causes;
Il rit des généreux qui désirent savoir
Si blanc n'a pas raison avant de dire noir;
Calme, en sa conscience il met ce qu'il rencontre,
Ou le sac d'argent Pour, ou le sac d'argent Contre;

Le sac pèse pour lui ce que la cause vaut.
Embusqué, plume au poing, dans un journal dévot,
Comme un bandit tuerait, cet écrivain diffame.
La foule hait cet homme et proscrit cette femme;
Ils sont maudits. Quel est leur crime? Ils ont aimé.
L’opinion rampante accable l’opprimé,
Et, chatte aux pieds des forts, pour le faible est tigresse.
De l’inventeur mourant le parasite engraisse.
Le monde parle, assure, affirme, jure, ment,
Triche, et rit d’escroquer la dupe Dévouement.
Le puissant resplendit et du destin se joue;
Derrière lui, tandis qu’il marche et fait la roue,
Sa fiente épanouie engendre son flatteur.
Les nains sont dédaigneux de toute leur hauteur.
O hideux coin de rue où le chiffonnier morne
Va, tenant à la main sa lanterne de corne,
Vos tas d’ordures sont moins noirs que les vivants!
Qui, des vents ou des coeurs, est le plus sûr? Les vents.
Cet homme ne croit rien et fait semblant de croire;
Il a l’oeil clair, le front gracieux, l’âme noire;
Il se courbe; il sera votre maître demain.

Tu casses des cailloux, vieillard, sur le chemin;
Ton feutre humble et troué s’ouvre à l’air qui le mouille;
Sous la pluie et le temps ton crâne nu se rouille;
Le chaud est ton tyran, le froid est ton bourreau;
Ton vieux corps grelottant tremble sous ton sarrau;
Ta cahute, au niveau du fossé de la route,
Offre son toit de mousse à la chèvre qui broute;
Tu gagnes dans ton jour juste assez de pain noir
Pour manger le matin et pour jeûner le soir;
Et, fantôme suspect devant qui l’on recule,
Regardé de travers quand vient le crépuscule,
Pauvre au point d’alarmer les allants et venants,
Frère sombre et pensif des arbres frissonnants,
Tu laisses choir tes ans ainsi qu’eux leur feuillage;
Autrefois, homme alors dans la force de l’âge,

Quand tu vis que l'Europe implacable venait,
Et menaçait Paris et notre aube qui naît,
Et, mer d'hommes, roulait vers la France effarée,
Et le Russe et le Hun sur la terre sacrée
Se ruer, et le nord revomir Attila,
Tu te levas, tu pris ta fourche; en ces temps-là,
Tu fus, devant les rois qui tenaient la campagne,
Un des grands paysans de la grande Champagne.
C'est bien. Mais, vois, là-bas, le long du vert sillon,
Une calèche arrive, et, comme un tourbillon,
Dans la poudre du soir qu'à ton front tu secoues,
Mêle l'éclair du fouet au tonnerre des roues.
Un homme y dort. Vieillard, chapeau bas! Ce passant
Fit sa fortune à l'heure où tu versais ton sang;
Il jouait à la baisse, et montait à mesure
Que notre chute était plus profonde et plus sûre;
Il fallait un vautour à nos morts; il le fut;
Il fit, travailleur âpre et toujours à l'affût,
Suer à nos malheurs des châteaux et des rentes;
Moscou remplit ses prés de meules odorantes;
Pour lui, Leipsick payait des chiens et des valets,
Et la Bérésina charriait un palais;
Pour lui, pour que cet homme ait des fleurs, des charmilles,
Des parcs dans Paris même ouvrant leurs larges grilles,
Des jardins où l'on voit le cygne errer sur l'eau,
Un million joyeux sortit de Waterloo;
Si bien que du désastre il a fait sa victoire,
Et que, pour la manger, et la tordre, et la boire,
Ce Shaylock, avec le sabre de Blucher,
A coupé sur la France une livre de chair.
Or, de vous deux, c'est toi qu'on hait, lui qu'on vénère;
Vieillard, tu n'es qu'un gueux, et ce millionnaire,
C'est l'honnête homme. Allons, debout, et chapeau bas!

Les carrefours sont pleins de chocs et de combats.
Les multitudes vont et viennent dans les rues.
Foules! sillons creusés par ces mornes charrues:

Nuit, douleur, deuil! champ triste où souvent a germé
Un épi qui fait peur à ceux qui l’ont semé!
Vie et mort! onde où l’hydre à l’infini s’enlace!
Peuple océan jetant l’écume populace!
Là sont tous les chaos et toutes les grandeurs;
Là, fauve, avec ses maux, ses horreurs, ses laideurs,
Ses larves, désespoirs, haines, désirs, souffrances,
Qu’on distingue à travers de vagues transparences,
Ses rudes appétits, redoutables aimants,
Ses prostitutions, ses avilissements,
Et la fatalité de ses moeurs imperdables,
La misère épaissit ses couches formidables.
Les malheureux sont là, dans le malheur reclus.
L’indigence, flux noir, l’ignorance, reflux,
Montent, marée affreuse, et, parmi les décombres,
Roulent l’obscur filet des pénalités sombres.
Le besoin fuit le mal qui le tente et le suit,
Et l’homme cherche l’homme à tâtons; il fait nuit;
Les petits enfants nus tendent leurs mains funèbres;
Le crime, antre béant, s’ouvre dans ces ténèbres;
Le vent secoue et pousse, en ses froids tourbillons,
Les âmes en lambeaux dans les corps en haillons;
Pas de coeur où ne croisse une aveugle chimère.
Qui grince des dents? L’homme. Et qui pleure? La mère.
Qui sanglote? La vierge aux yeux hagards et doux.
Qui dit: «J’ai froid?» L’aïeule. Et qui dit: «J’ai faim?» Tous!
Et le fond est horreur, et la surface est joie.
Au-dessus de la faim, le festin qui flamboie,
Et sur le pâle amas des cris et des douleurs,
Les chansons et le rire et les chapeaux de fleurs!
Ceux-là sont les heureux. Ils n’ont qu’une pensée:
A quel néant jeter la journée insensée?
Chiens, voitures, chevaux! centre au reflet vermeil!
Poussière dont les grains semblent d’or au soleil!
Leur vie est aux plaisirs sans fin, sans but, sans trêve,
Et se passe à tâcher d’oublier dans un rêve
L’enfer au-dessous d’eux et le ciel au-dessus.

Quand on voile Lazare, on efface Jésus.
Ils ne regardent pas dans les ombres moroses.
Ils n’admettent que l’air tout parfumé de roses,
La volupté, l’orgueil, l’ivresse, et le laquais
Ce spectre galonné du pauvre, à leurs banquets.
Les fleurs couvrent les seins et débordent des vases.
Le bal, tout frissonnant de souffles et d’extases,
Rayonne, étourdissant ce qui s’évanouit;
Éden étrange fait de lumière et de nuit.
Les lustres aux plafonds laissent pendre leurs flammes,
Et semblent la racine ardente et pleine d’âmes
De quelque arbre céleste épanoui plus haut.
Noir paradis dansant sur l’immense cachot!
Ils savourent, ravis, l’éblouissement sombre
Des beautés, des splendeurs, des quadrilles sans nombre,
Des couples, des amours, des yeux bleus, des yeux noirs.
Les valses, visions, passent dans les miroirs.
Parfois, comme aux forêts la fuite des cavales,
Les galops effrénés courent; par intervalles,
Le bal reprend haleine; on s’interrompt, on fuit,
On erre, deux à deux, sous les arbres sans bruit;
Puis, folle, et rappelant les ombres éloignées;
La musique, jetant les notes à poignées,
Revient, et les regards s’allument, et l’archet,
Bondissant, ressaisit la foule qui marchait.
O délire! et d’encens et de bruit enivrées,
L’heure emporte en riant les rapides soirées,
Et les nuits et les jours, feuilles mortes des deux.
D’autres, toute la nuit, roulent les dés joyeux,
Ou bien, âpre, et mêlant les cartes qu’ils caressent,
Où des spectres riants ou sanglants apparaissent,
Leur soif de l’or, penchée autour d’un tapis vert,
Jusqu’à ce qu’au volet le jour bâille entr’ouvert,
Poursuit le pharaon, le lansquenet ou l’hombre,
Et, pendant qu’on gémit et qu’on frémit dans l’ombre,
Pendant que les greniers grelottent sous les toits,
Que les fleuves, passants pleins de lugubres voix,

Heurtent aux grands quais blancs les glaçons qu'ils charrient.
Tous ces hommes contents de vivre, boivent, rient,
Chantent; et, par moments, on voit, au-dessus d'eux,
Deux poteaux soutenant un triangle hideux,
Qui sortent lentement du noir pavé des villes... —

O forêts! bois profonds! solitudes! asiles!

SATURNE

I

Il est des jours de brume et de lumière vague,
Où l'homme, que la vie à chaque instant confond,
Étudiant la plante, ou l'étoile, ou la vague,
S'accoude au bord croulant du problème sans fond;

Où le songeur, pareil aux antiques augures,
Cherchant Dieu, que jadis plus d'un voyant surprit,
Médite en regardant fixement les figures
Qu'on a dans l'ombre de l'esprit;

Où, comme en s'éveillant on voit, en reflets sombres.
Des spectres du dehors errer sur le plafond,
Il sonde le destin, et contemple les ombres
Que nos rêves jetés parmi les choses font!

Des heures où, pourvu qu'on ait à sa fenêtre
Une montagne, un bois, l'océan qui dit tout,
Le jour prêt à mourir ou l'aube prête à naître,
En soi-même on voit tout à coup

Sur l'amour, sur les biens qui tous nous abandonnent,
Sur l'homme, masque vide et fantôme rieur,

Éclore des clartés effrayantes qui donnent
Des éblouissements à l’oeil intérieur;

De sorte qu’une fois que ces visions glissent
Devant notre paupière en ce vallon d’exil,
Elles n’en sortent plus et pour jamais emplissent
L’arcade sombre du sourcil!

II

Donc, puisque j’ai parlé de ces heures de doute
Où l’on trouve le calme et l’autre le remords,
Je ne cacherai pas au peuple qui m’écoute
Que je songe souvent à ce que font les morts;

Et que j’en suis venu — tant la nuit étoilée
A fatigué de fois mes regards et mes voeux,
Et tant une pensée inquiète est mêlée
Aux racines de mes cheveux! —

A croire qu’à la mort, continuant sa route,
L’âme, se souvenant de son humanité,
Envolée à jamais sous la céleste voûte,
A franchir l’infini passait l’éternité!

Et que les morts voyaient l’extase et la prière,
Nos deux rayons, pour eux grandir bien plus encore,
Et qu’ils étaient pareils à la mouche ouvrière,
Au vol rayonnant, aux pieds d’or,

Qui, visitant les fleurs pleines de chastes gouttes,
Semble une âme visible en ce monde réel,
Et, leur disant tout bas quelque mystère à toutes,
Leur laisse le parfum en leur prenant le miel!

Et qu’ainsi, faits vivants par le sépulcre même,
Nous irions tous un jour, dans l’espace vermeil,

Lire l’oeuvre infinie et l’éternel poëme,
Vers à vers, soleil à soleil!

Admirer tout système en ses formes fécondes,
Toute création dans sa variété,
Et, comparant à Dieu chaque face des mondes,
Avec l’âme de tout confronter leur beauté!

Et que chacun ferait ce voyage des âmes,
Pourvu qu’il ait souffert, pourvu qu’il ait pleuré.
Tous! hormis les méchants, dont les esprits infâmes
Sont comme un livre déchiré.

Ceux-là, Saturne, un globe horrible et solitaire,
Les prendra pour le temps où Dieu voudra punir,
Châtiés à la fois par le ciel et la terre,
Par l’aspiration et par le souvenir!

III

Saturne! sphère énorme! astre aux aspects funèbres!
Bagne du ciel! prison dont le soupirail luit!
Monde en proie à la brume, aux souffles, aux ténèbres!
Enfer fait d’hiver et de nuit!

Son atmosphère flotte en zones tortueuses.
Deux anneaux flamboyants, tournant avec fureur,
Font, dans son ciel d’airain, deux arches monstrueuses
D’où tombe une éternelle et profonde terreur.

Ainsi qu’une araignée au centre de sa toile,
Il tient sept lunes d’or qu’il lie à ses essieux;
Pour lui, notre soleil, qui n’est plus qu’une étoile,
Se perd, sinistre, au fond des cieux!

Les autres univers, l’entrevoyant dans l’ombre,
Se sont épouvantés de ce globe hideux.

Tremblants, ils l’ont peuplé de chimères sans nombre,
En le voyant errer formidable autour d’eux!

IV

Oh! ce serait vraiment un mystère sublime
Que ce ciel si profond, si lumineux, si beau,
Qui flamboie à nos yeux ouvert comme un abîme,
Fût l’intérieur du tombeau!

Que tout se révélât à nos paupières closes!
Que, morts, ces grands destins nous fussent réservés!...
Qu’en est-il de ce rêve et de bien d’autres choses?
Il est certain, Seigneur, que seul vous le savez.

V

Il est certain aussi que, jadis, sur la terre,
Le patriarche, ému d’un redoutable effroi,
Et les saints qui peuplaient la Thébaïde austère
Ont fait des songes comme moi;

Que, dans sa solitude auguste, le prophète
Voyait, pour son regard plein d’étranges rayons,
Par la même fêlure aux réalités faite,
S’ouvrir le monde obscur des pâles visions;

Et qu’à l’heure où le jour devant la nuit recule,
Ces sages que jamais l’homme, hélas! ne comprit,
Mêlaient, silencieux, au morne crépuscule
Le trouble de leur sombre esprit;

Tandis que l’eau sortait des sources cristallines,
Et que les grands lions, de moments en moments,
Vaguement apparus au sommet des collines,
Poussaient dans le désert de longs rugissements!

ÉCRIT AU BAS D’UN CRUCIFIX

Vous qui pleurez, venez à ce Dieu, car il pleure.
Vous qui souffrez, venez à lui, car il guérit.
Vous qui tremblez, venez à lui, car il sourit.
Vous qui passez, venez à lui, car il demeure.

QUIA PULVIS ES

Ceux-ci partent, ceux-là demeurent.
Sous le sombre aquilon, dont les mille voix pleurent,
Poussière et genre humain, tout s’envole à la fois.
Hélas! le même vent souffle, en l’ombre où nous sommes,
Sur toutes les têtes des hommes,
Sur toutes les feuilles des bois.

Ceux qui restent à ceux qui passent
Disent: — Infortunés! déjà vos fronts s’effacent.
Quoi! vous n’entendrez plus la parole et le bruit!
Quoi! vous ne verrez plus ni le ciel ni les arbres!
Vous allez dormir sous les marbres!
Vous allez tomber dans la nuit! —

Ceux qui passent à ceux qui restent
Disent: — Vous n’avez rien à vous! vos pleurs l’attestent!
Pour vous, gloire et bonheur sont des mots décevants,
Dieu donne aux morts les biens réels, les vrais royaumes.
Vivants! vous êtes des fantômes;
C’est nous qui sommes les vivants! —

LA SOURCE

Un lion habitait près d’une source; un aigle
Y venait boire aussi.
Or, deux héros, un jour, deux rois — souvent Dieu règle
La destinée ainsi —

Vinrent à cette source où des palmiers attirent
Le passant hasardeux,
Et, s’étant reconnus, ces hommes se battirent
Et tombèrent tous deux.

L’aigle, comme ils mouraient, vint planer sur leurs têtes,
Et leur dit, rayonnant:
— Vous trouviez l’univers trop petit, et vous n’êtes
Qu’une ombre maintenant!

O princes! et vos os, hier pleins de jeunesse,
Ne seront plus demain
Que des cailloux mêlés, sans qu’on les reconnaisse,
Aux pierres du chemin!

Insensés! à quoi bon cette guerre âpre et rude,
Ce duel, ce talion!... —
Je vis en paix, moi, l’aigle, en cette solitude
Avec lui, le lion.

Nous venons tous deux boire à la même fontaine,
Rois dans les mêmes lieux;
Je lui laisse le bois, la montagne et la plaine,
Et je garde les cieux.

LA STATUE

Quand l’empire romain tomba désespéré,
— Car, ô Rome, l’abîme où Carthage a sombré
Attendait que tu la suivisses! —
Quand, n’ayant rien en lui de grand qu’il n’eût brisé,
Ce monde agonisa, triste, ayant épuisé
Tous les Césars et tous les vices;

Quand il expira, vide et riche comme Tyr;
Tas d’esclaves ayant pour gloire de sentir
Le pied du maître sur leurs nuques;
Ivre de vin, de sang et d’or; continuant
Caton par Tigellin, l’astre par le néant,
Et les géants par les eunuques;

Ce fut un noir spectacle et dont on s’enfuyait.
Le pâle cénobite y songeait, inquiet,
Dans les antres visionnaires;
Et, pendant trois cents ans, dans l’ombre on entendit
Sur ce monde damné, sur ce festin maudit,
Un écroulement de tonnerres.

Et Luxure, Paresse, Envie, Orgie, Orgueil,
Avarice et Colère, au-dessus de ce deuil,
Planèrent avec des huées;
Et, comme des éclairs sous le plafond des soirs,
Les glaives monstrueux des sept archanges noirs
Flamboyèrent dans les nuées.

Juvénal, qui peignit ce gouffre universel,
Est statue aujourd’hui; la statue est de sel,
Seule sous le nocturne dôme;

Pas un arbre à ses pieds; pas d’herbe et de rameaux
Et dans son oeil sinistre on lit ces sombres mots:
Pour avoir regardé Sodôme.

JE LISAIS. QUE LISAIS-JE?

Je lisais. Que lisais-je? Oh! le vieux livre austère,
Le poëme éternel! — La Bible? — Non, la terre.
Platon, tous les matins, quand revit le ciel bleu,
Lisait les vers d’Homère, et moi les fleurs de Dieu.
J’épèle les buissons, les brins d’herbe, les sources;
Et je n’ai pas besoin d’emporter dans mes courses
Mon livre sous mon bras, car je l’ai sous mes pieds.
Je m’en vais devant moi dans les lieux non frayés,
Et j’étudie à fond le texte, et je me penche,
Cherchant à déchiffrer la corolle et la branche.
Donc, courbé, — c’est ainsi qu’en marchant je traduis
La lumière en idée, en syllabes les bruits, —
J’étais en train de lire un champ, page fleurie.
Je fus interrompu dans cette rêverie;
Un doux martinet noir avec un ventre blanc
Me parlait; il disait: — O pauvre homme, tremblant
Entre le doute morne et la foi qui délivre,
Je t’approuve. Il est bon de lire dans ce livre.
Lis toujours, lis sans cesse, ô penseur agité,
Et que les champs profonds t’emplissent de clarté!
Il est sain de toujours feuilleter la nature,
Car c’est la grande lettre et la grande écriture;
Car la terre, cantique où nous nous abîmons,
A pour versets les bois et pour strophes les monts!
Lis. Il n’est rien dans tout ce que peut sonder l’homme
Qui, bien questionné par l’âme, ne se nomme.
Médite. Tout est plein de jour, même la nuit;

Et tout ce qui travaille, éclaire, aime ou détruit,
A des rayons: la roue au dur moyeu, l’étoile,
La fleur, et l’araignée au centre de sa toile.
Rends-toi compte de Dieu. Comprendre, c’est aimer.
Les plaines où le ciel aide l’herbe à germer,
L’eau, les prés, sont autant de phrases où le sage
Voit serpenter des sens qu’il saisit au passage.
Marche au vrai. Le réel, c’est le juste, vois-tu;
Et voir la vérité, c’est trouver la vertu.
Bien lire l’univers, c’est bien lire la vie.
Le monde est l’oeuvre où rien ne ment et ne dévie,
Et dont les mots sacrés répandent de l’encens.
L’homme injuste est celui qui fait des contre-sens.
Oui, la création tout entière, les choses,
Les êtres, les rapports, les éléments, les causes,
Rameaux dont le ciel clair perce le réseau noir,
L’arabesque des bois sur les cuivres du soir,
La bête, le rocher, l’épi d’or, l’aile peinte,
Tout cet ensemble obscur, végétation sainte,
Compose en se croisant ce chiffre énorme: DIEU.
L’éternel est écrit dans ce qui dure peu;
Toute l’immensité, sombre, bleue, étoilée,
Traverse l’humble fleur, du penseur contemplée;
On voit les champs, mais c’est de Dieu qu’on s’éblouit.
Le lys que tu comprends en toi s’épanouit;
Les roses que tu lis s’ajoutent à ton âme.
Les fleurs chastes, d’où sort une invisible flamme,
Sont les conseils que Dieu sème sur le chemin;
C’est l’âme qui les doit cueillir, et non la main.
Ainsi tu fais; aussi l’aube est sur ton front sombre;
Aussi tu deviens bon, juste et sage; et dans l’ombre
Tu reprends la candeur sublime du berceau. —
Je répondis: — Hélas! tu te trompes, oiseau.
Ma chair, faite de cendre, à chaque instant succombe;
Mon âme ne sera blanche que dans la tombe;
Car l’homme, quoi qu’il fasse, est aveugle ou méchant.
Et je continuai la lecture du champ.

JEUNE FILLE, LA GRACE EMPLIT TES DIX-SEPT ANS.

Jeune fille, la grâce emplit tes dix-sept ans.
Ton regard dit: Matin, et ton front dit: Printemps.
Il semble que ta main porte un lys invisible.
Don Juan te voit passer et murmure: «Impossible!»
Sois belle. Sois bénie, enfant, dans ta beauté.
La nature s'égaye à toute ta clarté;
Tu fais une lueur sous les arbres; la guêpe
Touche ta joue en fleur de son aile de crêpe;
La mouche à tes yeux vole ainsi qu'à des flambeaux.
Ton souffle est un encens qui monte au ciel. Lesbos
Et les marins d'Hydra, s'ils te voyaient sans voiles,
Te prendraient pour l'Aurore aux cheveux pleins d'étoiles.
Les êtres de l'azur froncent leur pur sourcil,
Quand l'homme, spectre obscur du mal et de l'exil,
Ose approcher ton âme, aux rayons fiancée.
Sois belle. Tu te sens par l'ombre caressée,
Un ange vient baiser ton pied quand il est nu,
Et c'est ce qui te fait ton sourire ingénu.

AMOUR

Amour! «Loi,» dit Jésus. «Mystère,» dit Platon.
Sait-on quel fil nous lie au firmament? Sait-on Ce que les mains de Dieu dans l'immensité sèment?
Est-on maître d'aimer? pourquoi deux êtres s'aiment,
Demande à l'eau qui court, demande à l'air qui fuit,

Au moucheron qui vole à la flamme la nuit,
Au rayon d’or qui veut baiser la grappe mûre!
Demande à ce qui chante, appelle, attend, murmure!
Demande aux nids profonds qu’avril met en émoi
Le coeur éperdu crie: Est-ce que je sais, moi?
Cette femme a passé: je suis fou. C’est l’histoire.
Ses cheveux étaient blonds, sa prunelle était noire;
En plein midi, joyeuse, une fleur au corset,
Illumination du jour, elle passait;
Elle allait, la charmante, et riait, la superbe;
Ses petits pieds semblaient chuchoter avec l’herbe;
Un oiseau bleu volait dans l’air, et me parla;
Et comment voulez-vous que j’échappe à cela?
Est-ce que je sais, moi? c’était au temps des roses;
Les arbres se disaient tout bas de douces choses;
Les ruisseaux l’ont voulu, les fleurs l’ont comploté.
J’aime! — O Rodin, Vouglans, Delancre! prévôté,
Bailliage, châtelet, grand’chambre, saint-office,
Demandez le secret de ce doux maléfice
Aux vents, au frais printemps chassant l’hiver hagard,
Au philtre qu’un regard boit dans l’autre regard,
Au sourire qui rêve, à la voix qui caresse,
A ce magicien, à cette charmeresse!
Demandez aux sentiers traîtres qui, dans les bois,
Vous font recommencer les mêmes pas cent fois,
A la branche de mai, cette Armide qui guette,
Et fait tourner sur nous en cercle sa baguette!
Demandez à la vie, à la nature, aux cieux,
Au vague enchantement des champs mystérieux!
Exorcisez le pré tentateur, l’antre, l’orme!
Faites, Cujas au poing, un bon procès en forme
Aux sources dont le coeur écoute les sanglots,
Au soupir éternel des forêts et des flots.
Dressez procès-verbal contre les pâquerettes
Qui laissent les bourdons froisser leurs collerettes;
Instrumentez; tonnez. Prouvez que deux amants
Livraient leur âme aux fleurs, aux bois, aux lacs dormants,

Et qu’ils ont fait un pacte avec la lune sombre,
Avec l’illusion, l’espérance aux yeux d’ombre,
Et l’extase chantant des hymnes inconnus,
Et qu’ils allaient tous deux, dès que brillait Vénus,
Sur l’herbe que la brise agite par bouffées,
Danser au bleu sabbat de ces nocturnes fées,
Éperdus, possédés d’un adorable ennui,
Elle n’étant plus elle et lui n’étant plus lui!
Quoi! nous sommes encore aux temps où la Tournelle,
Déclarant la magie impie et criminelle,
Lui dressait un bûcher par arrêt de la cour,
Et le dernier sorcier qu’on brûle, c’est l’Amour!

OU LES VIVANTS PENSIFS TRAVAILLENT TRISTEMENT

Où les vivants pensifs travaillent tristement,
Et qui donne à regret à cette race humaine
Un peu de pain pour tant de labeur et de peine;
Des hommes durs, éclos sur ces sillons ingrats;
Des cités d’où s’en vont, en se tordant les bras,
La charité, la paix, la foi, soeurs vénérables;
L’orgueil chez les puissants et chez les misérables;
La haine au coeur de tous; la mort, spectre sans yeux,
Frappant sur les meilleurs des coups mystérieux;
Sur tous les hauts sommets des brumes répandues;
Deux vierges, la justice et la pudeur, vendues;
Toutes les passions engendrant tous les maux;
Des forêts abritant des loups sous leurs rameaux;
Là le désert torride, ici les froids polaires;
Des océans émus de subites colères,
Pleins de mâts frissonnants qui sombrent dans la nuit;

Des continents couverts de fumée et de bruit,
Où, deux torches aux mains, rugit la guerre infâme,
Où toujours quelque part fume une ville en flamme,
Où se heurtent sanglants les peuples furieux; —

Et que tout cela fasse un astre dans les cieux!

EXPLICATION

La terre est au soleil ce que l’homme est à l’ange.
L’un est fait de splendeur; l’autre est pétri de fange.
Toute étoile est soleil; tout astre est paradis.
Autour des globes purs sont les mondes maudits;
Et dans l’ombre, où l’esprit voit mieux que la lunette,
Le soleil paradis traîne l’enfer planète.

L’ange habitant de l’astre est faillible; et, séduit,
Il peut devenir l’homme habitant de la nuit.
Voilà ce que le vent m’a dit sur la montagne.

Tout globe obscur gémit; toute terre est un bagne
Où la vie en pleurant, jusqu’au jour du réveil,
Vient écrouer l’esprit qui tombe du soleil.
Plus le globe est lointain, plus le bagne est terrible.
La mort est là, vannant les âmes dans un crible,
Qui juge, et, de la vie invisible témoin,
Rapporte l’ange à l’astre ou le jette plus loin.

O globes sans rayons et presque sans aurores!
Énorme Jupiter fouetté de météores,
Mars qui semble de loin la bouche d’un volcan,
O nocturne Uranus! ô Saturne au carcan!
Châtiments inconnus! rédemptions! mystères!

Deuils! ô lunes encor plus mortes que les terres!
Ils souffrent; ils sont noirs; et qui sait ce qu'ils font?
L'ombre entend par moments leur cri rauque et profond,
Comme on entend, le soir, la plainte des cigales.
Mondes spectres, tirant des chaînes inégales,
Ils vont, blêmes, pareils au rêve qui s'enfuit.
Rougis confusément d'un reflet dans la nuit,
Implorant un messie, espérant des apôtres,
Seuls, séparés, les uns en arrière des autres,
Tristes, échevelés par des souffles hagards,
Jetant à la clarté de farouches regards,
Ceux-ci, vagues, roulant dans les profondeurs mornes,
Ceux-là, presque engloutis dans l'infini sans bornes,
Ténébreux, frissonnants, froids, glacés, pluvieux,
Autour du paradis ils tournent envieux;
Et, du soleil, parmi les brumes et les ombres,
On voit passer au loin toutes ces faces sombres.

LA CHOUETTE

Une chouette était sur la porte clouée;
Larve de l'ombre au toit des hommes échouée.
La nature, qui mêle une âme aux rameaux verts,
Qui remplit tout, et vit, à des degrés divers,
Dans la bête sauvage et la bête de somme,
Toujours en dialogue avec l'esprit de l'homme,
Lui donne à déchiffrer les animaux, qui sont
Ses signes, alphabet formidable et profond;
Et, sombre, ayant pour mots l'oiseau, le ver, l'insecte,
Parle deux langues: l'une, admirable et correcte,
L'autre, obscur bégaîment. L'éléphant aux pieds lourds,
Le lion, ce grand front de l'antre, l'aigle, l'ours,
Le taureau, le cheval, le tigre au bond superbe,

Sont le langage altier et splendide, le verbe;
Et la chauve-souris, le crapaud, le putois,
Le crabe, le hibou, le porc, sont le patois.
Or, j’étais là, pensif, bienveillant, presque tendre,
Épelant ce squelette, et tâchant de comprendre
Ce qu’entre les trois clous où son spectre pendait,
Aux vivants, aux souffrants, au boeuf triste, au baudet,
Disait, hélas! la pauvre et sinistre chouette,
Du côté noir de l’être informe silhouette.

Elle disait:
«Sur son front sombre
Comme la brume se répand!
Il remplit tout le fond de l’ombre.
Comme sa tête morte pend!
De ses yeux coulent ses pensées.
Ses pieds troués, ses mains percées

Bleuissent à l’air glacial.
Oh! comme il saigne dans le gouffre!
Lui qui faisait le bien, il souffre
Comme moi qui faisais le mal.

«Une lumière à son front tremble.»
Et la nuit dit au vent: «Soufflons
Sur cette flamme!» et, tous ensemble,
Les ténèbres, les aquilons,
La pluie et l’horreur, froides bouches,
Soufflent, hagards, hideux, farouches,
Et dans la tempête et le bruit
La clarté reparaît grandie... —
Tu peux éteindre un incendie,
Mais pas une auréole, ô nuit!

«Cette âme arriva sur la terre,
Qu’assombrit le soir incertain;
Elle entra dans l’obscur mystère

Que l’ombre appelle son destin;
Au mensonge, aux forfaits sans nombre,
A tout l’horrible essaim de l’ombre,
Elle livrait de saints combats;
Elle volait, et ses prunelles
Semblaient deux lueurs éternelles
Qui passaient dans la nuit d’en bas.

«Elle allait parmi les ténèbres,
Poursuivant, chassant, dévorant
Les vices, ces taupes funèbres,
Le crime, ce phalène errant;
Arrachant de leurs trous la haine,
L’orgueil, la fraude qui se traîne,
L’âpre envie, aspic du chemin,
Les vers de terre et les vipères,
Que la nuit cache dans les pierres
Et le mal dans le coeur humain!

«Elle cherchait ces infidèles,
L’Achab, le Nemrod, le Mathan,
Que, dans son temple et sous ses ailes,
Réchauffe le faux dieu Satan,
Les vendeurs cachés sous les porches,
Le brûleur allumant ses torches
Au même feu que l’encensoir;
Et, quand elle l’avait trouvée,
Toute la sinistre couvée
Se hérissait sous l’autel noir.

«Elle allait, délivrant les hommes
De leurs ennemis ténébreux;
Les hommes, noirs comme nous sommes,
Prirent l’esprit luttant pour eux;
Puis ils clouèrent, les infâmes,
L’âme qui défendait leurs âmes,
L’être dont l’oeil jetait du jour;

Et leur foule, dans sa démence,
Railla cette chouette immense
De la lumière et de l’amour!

«Race qui frappes et lapides,
Je te plains! hommes, je vous plains!
Hélas! je plains vos poings stupides,
D’affreux clous et de marteaux pleins!
Vous persécutez pêle-mêle
Le mal, le bien, la griffe et l’aile,
Chasseurs sans but, bourreaux sans yeux!
Vous clouez de vos mains mal sûres
Les hiboux au seuil des masures,
Et Christ sur la porte des cieux!»

A LA MÈRE DE L’ENFANT MORT

Oh! vous aurez trop dit au pauvre petit ange
Qu’il est d’autres anges là-haut,
Que rien ne souffre au ciel, que jamais rien n’y change,
Qu’il est doux d’y rentrer bientôt;

Que le ciel est un dôme aux merveilleux pilastres,
Une tente aux riches couleurs,
Un jardin bleu rempli de lys qui sont des astres,
Et d’étoiles qui sont des fleurs;

Que c’est un lieu joyeux plus qu’on ne saurait dire,
Où toujours, se laissant charmer,
On a les chérubins pour jouer et pour rire,
Et le bon Dieu pour nous aimer;

Qu’il est doux d’être un coeur qui brûle comme un cierge,

Et de vivre, en toute saison,
Près de l’enfant Jésus et de la sainte Vierge
Dans une si belle maison!

Et puis vous n’aurez pas assez dit, pauvre mère,
A ce fils si frêle et si doux,
Que vous étiez à lui dans cette vie amère,
Mais aussi qu’il était à vous;

Que, tant qu’on est petit, la mère sur nous veille,
Mais que plus tard on la défend;
Et qu’elle aura besoin, quand elle sera vieille,
D’un homme qui soit son enfant;

Vous n’aurez point assez dit à cette jeune âme
Que Dieu veut qu’on reste ici-bas,
La femme guidant l’homme et l’homme aidant la femme,
Pour les douleurs et les combats;

Si bien qu’un jour, ô deuil! irréparable perte!
Le doux être s’en est allé!... —
Hélas! vous avez donc laissé la cage ouverte,
Que votre oiseau s’est envolé!

ÉPITAPHE

Il vivait, il jouait, riante créature.
Que te sert d’avoir pris cet enfant, ô nature?
N’as-tu pas les oiseaux peints de mille couleurs,
Les astres, les grands bois, le ciel bleu, l’onde amère?
Que te sert d’avoir pris cet enfant à sa mère,
Et de l’avoir caché sous des touffes de fleurs?

Pour cet enfant de plus tu n'es pas plus peuplée,
Tu n'es pas plus joyeuse, ô nature étoilée!
Et le coeur de la mère en proie à tant de soins,
Ce coeur où toute joie engendre une torture,
Cet abîme aussi grand que toi-même, ô nature,
Est vide et désolé pour cet enfant de moins!

LE MAITRE D'ÉTUDES

Ne le tourmentez pas, il souffre. Il est celui
Sur qui, jusqu'à ce jour, pas un rayon n'a lui;
Oh! ne confondez pas l'esclave avec le maître!
Et, quand vous le voyez dans vos rangs apparaître,
Humble et calme, et s'asseoir la tête dans ses mains,
Ayant peut-être en lui l'esprit des vieux Romains
Dont il vous dit les noms, dont il vous lit les livres,
Écoliers, frais enfants de joie et d'aurore ivres,
Ne le tourmentez pas! soyez doux, soyez bons.
Tous nous portons la vie et tous nous nous courbons
Mais, lui, c'est le flambeau qui la nuit se consomme;
L'ombre le tient captif, et ce pâle jeune homme,
Enfermé plus que vous, plus que vous enchaîné,
Votre frère, écoliers, et votre frère aîné,
Destin tronqué, matin noyé dans les ténèbres,
Ayant l'ennui sans fin devant ses yeux funèbres,
Indigent, chancelant, et cependant vainqueur,
Sans oiseaux dans son ciel, sans amours dans son coeur,
A l'heure du plein jour, attend que l'aube naisse.
Enfance, ayez pitié de la sombre jeunesse!

Apprenez à connaître, enfants qu'attend l'effort,
Les inégalités des âmes et du sort;
Respectez-le deux fois, dans le deuil qui le mine,

Puisque de deux sommets, enfant, il vous domine,
Puisqu’il est le plus pauvre et qu’il est le plus grand.
Songez que, triste, en butte au souci dévorant,
A travers ses douleurs, ce fils de la chaumière
Vous verse la raison, le savoir, la lumière,
Et qu’il vous donne l’or, et qu’il n’a pas de pain.
Oh! dans la longue salle aux tables de sapin,
Enfants, faites silence à la lueur des lampes!
Voyez, la morne angoisse a fait blêmir ses tempes:
Songez qu’il saigne, hélas! sous ses pauvres habits.
L’herbe que mord la dent cruelle des brebis,
C’est lui; vous riez, vous, et vous lui rongez l’âme.
Songez qu’il agonise, amer, sans air, sans flamme;
Que sa colère dit: Plaignez-moi; que ses pleurs
Ne peuvent pas couler devant vos yeux railleurs!
Aux heures du travail votre ennui le dévore,
Aux heures du plaisir vous le rongez encore;
Sa pensée, arrachée et froissée, est à vous,
Et, pareille au papier qu’on distribue à tous,
Page blanche d’abord, devient lentement noire.
Vous feuilletez son coeur, vous videz sa mémoire;
Vos mains, jetant chacune un bruit, un trouble, un mot,
Et raturant l’idée en lui dès qu’elle éclôt,
Toutes en même temps dans son esprit écrivent.
Si des rêves, parfois, jusqu’à son front arrivent,
Vous répandez votre encre à flots sur cet azur;
Vos plumes, tas d’oiseaux hideux au vol obscur,
De leurs mille becs noirs lui fouillent la cervelle.
Le nuage d’ennui passe et se renouvelle.
Dormir, il ne le peut; penser, il ne le peut.
Chaque enfant est un fil dont son coeur sent le noeud.
Oui, s’il veut songer, fuir, oublier, franchir l’ombre,
Laisser voler son âme aux chimères sans nombre,
Ces écoliers joueurs, vifs, légers, doux, aimants,
Pèsent sur lui, de l’aube au soir, à tous moments,
Et le font retomber des voûtes immortelles;
Et tous ces papillons sont le plomb de ses ailes.

Saint et grave martyr changeant de chevalet,
Crucifié par vous, bourreaux charmants, il est
Votre souffre-douleurs et votre souffre-joies;
Ses nuits sont vos hochets et ses jours sont vos proies,
Il porte sur son front votre essaim orageux;
Il a toujours vos bruits, vos rires et vos jeux,
Tourbillonnant sur lui comme une âpre tempête.
Hélas! il est le deuil dont vous êtes la fête;
Hélas! il est le cri dont vous êtes le chant.

Et, qui sait? sans rien dire, austère, et se cachant
De sa bonne action comme d’une mauvaise,
Ce pauvre être qui rêve accoudé sur sa chaise,
Mal nourri, mal vêtu, qu’un mendiant plaindrait,
Peut-être a des parents qu’il soutient en secret,
Et fait de ses labeurs, de sa faim, de ses veilles,
Des siècles dont sa voix vous traduit les merveilles,
Et de cette sueur qui coule sur sa chair,
Des rubans au printemps, un peu de feu l’hiver,
Pour quelque jeune soeur ou quelque vieille mère;
Changeant en goutte d’eau la sombre larme amère;
De sorte que, vivant à son ombre sans bruit,
Une colombe vient la boire dans la nuit!
Songez que pour cette oeuvre, enfants, il se dévoue,
Brûle ses yeux, meurtrit son coeur, tourne la roue,
Traîne la chaîne! hélas, pour lui, pour son destin,
Pour ses espoirs perdus à l’horizon lointain,
Pour ses voeux, pour son âme aux fers, pour sa prunelle,
Votre cage d’un jour est prison éternelle!
Songez que c’est sur lui que marchent tous vos pas!
Songez qu’il ne rit pas, songez qu’il ne vit pas!
L’avenir, cet avril plein de fleurs, vous convie;
Vous vous envolerez demain en pleine vie;
Vous sortirez de l’ombre, il restera. Pour lui,
Demain sera muet et sourd comme aujourd’hui;
Demain, même en juillet, sera toujours décembre,
Toujours l’étroit préau, toujours la pauvre chambre,

Toujours le ciel glacé, gris, blafard, pluvieux;
Et, quand vous serez grands, enfants, il sera vieux.
Et, si quelque heureux vent ne souffle et ne l'emporte,
Toujours il sera là, seul sous la sombre porte,
Gardant les beaux enfants sous ce mur redouté,
Ayant tout de leur peine et rien de leur gaîté.
Oh! que votre pensée aime, console, encense
Ce sublime forçat du bagne d'innocence!
Pesez ce qu'il prodigue avec ce qu'il reçoit.
Oh! qu'il se transfigure à vos yeux, et qu'il soit
Celui qui vous grandit, celui qui vous élève,
Qui donne à vos raisons les deux tranchants du glaive,
Art et science, afin qu'en marchant au tombeau,
Vous viviez pour le vrai, vous luttiez pour le beau!
Oh! qu'il vous soit sacré dans cette tâche auguste
De conduire à l'utile, au sage, au grand, au juste,
Vos âmes en tumulte à qui le ciel sourit!
Quand les coeurs sont troupeau, le berger est esprit.

Et, pendant qu'il est là, triste, et que dans la classe
Un chuchotement vague endort son âme lasse,
Oh! des poëtes purs entr'ouverts sur vos bancs,
Qu'il sorte, dans le bruit confus des soirs tombants,
Qu'il sorte de Platon, qu'il sorte d'Euripide,
Et de Virgile, cygne errant du vers limpide,
Et d'Eschyle, lion du drame monstrueux,
Et d'Horace et d'Homère à demi dans les cieux,
Qu'il sorte, pour sa tête aux saints travaux baissée,
Pour l'humble défricheur de la jeune pensée,
Qu'il sorte, pour ce front qui se penche et se fend
Sur ce sillon humain qu'on appelle l'enfant,
De tous ces livres pleins de hautes harmonies,
La bénédiction sereine des génies!

CHOSE VUE

UN JOUR DE PRINTEMPS

Entendant des sanglots, je poussai cette porte.

Les quatre enfants pleuraient et la mère était morte.
Tout dans ce lieu lugubre effrayait le regard.
Sur le grabat gisait le cadavre hagard;
C’était déjà la tombe et déjà le fantôme.
Pas de feu; le plafond laissait passer le chaume.

Les quatre enfants songeaient comme quatre vieillards.
On voyait, comme une aube à travers des brouillards,
Aux lèvres de la morte un sinistre sourire;
Et l’aîné, qui n’avait que six ans, semblait dire:
«Regardez donc cette ombre où le sort nous a mis!»

Un crime en cette chambre avait été commis.
Ce crime, le voici: — Sous le ciel qui rayonne,
Une femme est candide, intelligente, bonne;
Dieu, qui la suit d’en haut d’un regard attendri,
La fit pour être heureuse. Humble, elle a pour mari
Un ouvrier; tous deux, sans aigreur, sans envie,
Tirent d’un pas égal le licou de la vie.
Le choléra lui prend son mari; la voilà
Veuve avec la misère et quatre enfants qu’elle a.
Alors, elle se met au labeur comme un homme.
Elle est active, propre, attentive, économe;
Pas de drap à son lit, pas d’âtre à son foyer;
Elle ne se plaint pas, sert qui veut l’employer,
Ravaude de vieux bas, fait des nattes de paille,
Tricote, file, coud, passe les nuits, travaille
Pour nourrir ses enfants; elle est honnête enfin.

Oui, les buissons étaient remplis de rouges-gorges,
Les lourds marteaux sonnaient dans la lueur des forges,
Les masques abondaient dans les bals, et partout

Les baisers soulevaient la dentelle du loup;
Tout vivait; les marchands comptaient de grosses sommes:
On entendait rouler les chars, rire les hommes;
Les wagons ébranlaient les plaines; le steamer
Secouait son panache au-dessus de la mer;
Et, dans cette rumeur de joie et de lumière,
Cette femme étant seule au fond de sa chaumière,
La faim, goule effarée aux hurlements plaintifs,
Maigre et féroce, était entrée à pas furtifs,
Sans bruit, et l'avait prise à la gorge, et tuée.

La faim, c'est le regard de la prostituée,
C'est le bâton ferré du bandit, c'est la main
Du pâle enfant volant un pain sur le chemin,
C'est la fièvre du pauvre oublié, c'est le râle
Du grabat naufragé dans l'ombre sépulcrale.
O Dieu! la sève abonde, et, dans ses flancs troublés,
La terre est pleine d'herbe et de fruits et de blés,
Dès que l'arbre a fini, le sillon recommence;
Et, pendant que tout vit, ô Dieu, dans ta clémence,
Que la mouche connaît la feuille du sureau,
Pendant que l'étang donne à boire au passereau,
Pendant que le tombeau nourrit les vautours chauves,
Pendant que la nature, en ses profondeurs fauves,
Fait manger le chacal, l'once et le basilic.
L'homme expire! — Oh! la faim, c'est le crime public;
C'est l'immense assassin qui sort de nos ténèbres.

Dieu! pourquoi l'orphelin, dans ses langes funèbres,
Dit-il: «J'ai faim!» L'enfant, n'est-ce pas un oiseau?
Pourquoi le nid a-t-il ce qui manque au berceau?

INTÉRIEUR

La querelle irritée, amère, à l'oeil ardent,
Vipère dont la haine empoisonne la dent,
Siffle et trouble le toit d'une pauvre demeure.
Les mots heurtent les mots. L'enfant s'effraie et pleure.
La femme et le mari laissent l'enfant crier.

— D'où viens-tu? — Qu'as-tu fait? — Oh! mauvais ouvrier!
Il vit dans la débauche et mourra sur la paille.
— Femme vaine et sans coeur qui jamais ne travaille!
— Tu sors du cabaret? — Quelque amant est venu?
— L'enfant pleure, l'enfant a faim, l'enfant est nu.
Pas de pain. — Elle a peur de salir ses mains blanches!
— Où cours-tu tous les jours? — Et toi, tous les dimanches?
— Va boire! — Va danser! — Il n'a ni feu ni lieu!
— Ta fille seulement ne sait pas prier Dieu!
— Et ta mère, bandit, c'est toi qui l'as tuée!
— Paix! — Silence, assassin! — Tais-toi, prostituée!

Un beau soleil couchant, empourprant le taudis,
Embrasait la fenêtre et le plafond, tandis
Que ce couple hideux, que rend deux fois infâme
La misère du coeur et la laideur de l'âme,
Étalait son ulcère et ses difformités
Sans honte, et sans pudeur montrait ses nudités.
Et leur vitre, où pendait un vieux haillon de toile,
Était, grâce au soleil, une éclatante étoile
Qui, dans ce même instant, vive et pure lueur,
Éblouissait au loin quelque passant rêveur!

BARAQUES DE LA FOIRE

Lion! j'étais pensif, ô bête prisonnière,

Devant la majesté de ta grave crinière;
Du plafond de ta cage elle faisait un dais.
Nous songions tous les deux, et tu me regardais.
Ton regard était beau, lion. Nous autres hommes,
Le peu que nous faisons et le rien que nous sommes,
Emplit notre pensée, et dans nos regards vains
Brillent nos plans chétifs que nous croyons divins,
Nos voeux, nos passions que notre orgueil encense,
Et notre petitesse, ivre de sa puissance;
Et, bouffis d'ignorance ou gonflés de venin,
Notre prunelle éclate et dit: Je suis ce nain!
Nous avons dans nos yeux notre moi misérable.
Mais la bête qui vit sous le chêne et l'érable,
Qui paît le thym, ou fuit dans les halliers profonds,
Qui dans les champs, où nous, hommes, nous étouffons,
Respire, solitaire, avec l'astre et la rose,
L'être sauvage, obscur et tranquille qui cause
Avec la roche énorme et les petites fleurs,
Qui, parmi les vallons et les sources en pleurs,
Plonge son mufle roux aux herbes non foulées,
La brute qui rugit sous les nuits constellées,
Qui rêve et dont les pas fauves et familiers
De l'antre formidable ébranlent les piliers,
Et qui se sent à peine en ces profondeurs sombres,
A sous son fier sourcil les monts, les vastes ombres,
Les étoiles, les prés, le lac serein, les cieux,
Et le mystère obscur des bois silencieux,
Et porte en son oeil calme, où l'infini commence,
Le regard éternel de la nature immense.

INSOMNIE

Quand une lueur pâle à l'orient se lève,

Quand la porte du jour, vague et pareille au rêve,
Commence à s'entr'ouvrir et blanchit l'horizon,
Comme l'espoir blanchit le seuil d'une prison,
Se réveiller, c'est bien, et travailler, c'est juste.
Quand le matin à Dieu chante son hymne auguste,
Le travail, saint tribut dû par l'homme mortel,
Est la strophe sacrée au pied du sombre autel;
Le soc murmure un psaume; et c'est un chant sublime
Qui, dès l'aurore, au fond des forêts, sur l'abîme,
Au bruit de la cognée, au choc des avirons,
Sort des durs matelots et des noirs bûcherons.

Mais, au milieu des nuits, s'éveiller! quel mystère!
Songer, sinistre et seul, quand tout dort sur la terre!
Quand pas un oeil vivant ne veille, pas un feu;
Quand les sept chevaux d'or du grand chariot bleu
Rentrent à l'écurie et descendent au pôle,
Se sentir dans son lit soudain toucher l'épaule
Par quelqu'un d'inconnu qui dit: Allons! c'est moi!
Travaillons! — La chair gronde et demande pourquoi.
— Je dors. Je suis très-las de la course dernière;
Ma paupière est encor du somme prisonnière;
Maître mystérieux, grâce! que me veux-tu?
Certes, il faut que tu sois un démon bien têtu
De venir m'éveiller toujours quand tout repose!
Aie un peu de raison. Il est encor nuit close;
Regarde, j'ouvre l'oeil puisque cela te plaît;
Pas la moindre lueur aux fentes du volet;
Va-t'en! je dors, j'ai chaud, je rêve à ma maîtresse.
Elle faisait flotter sur moi sa longue tresse,
D'où pleuvaient sur mon front des astres et des fleurs.
Va-t'en, tu reviendras demain, au jour, ailleurs.
Je te tourne le dos, je ne veux pas! décampe!
Ne pose pas ton doigt de braise sur ma tempe.
La biche illusion me mangeait dans le creux
De la main; tu l'as fait enfuir. J'étais heureux,
Je ronflais comme un boeuf; laisse-moi. C'est stupide.

Ciel! déjà ma pensée, inquiète et rapide,
Fil sans bout, se dévide et tourne à ton fuseau.
Tu m’apportes un vers, étrange et fauve oiseau
Que tu viens de saisir dans les pâles nuées.
Je n’en veux pas. Le vent, de ses tristes huées,
Emplit l’antre des cieux; les souffles, noirs dragons,
Passent en secouant ma porte sur ses gonds.
— Paix là! va-t’en, bourreau! quant au vers, je le lâche.
Je veux toute la nuit dormir comme un vieux lâche;
Voyons, ménage un peu ton pauvre compagnon.
Je suis las, je suis mort, laisse-moi dormir!

— Non!
Est-ce que je dors, moi? dit l’idée implacable.
Penseur, subis ta loi; forçat, tire ton câble.
Quoi! cette bête a goût au vil foin du sommeil!
L’orient est pour moi toujours clair et vermeil.
Que m’importe le corps! qu’il marche, souffre et meure!
Horrible esclave, allons, travaille! c’est mon heure.

Et l’ange étreint Jacob, et l’âme tient le corps;
Nul moyen de lutter; et tout revient alors,
Le drame commencé dont l’ébauche frissonne,
Ruy-Blas, Marion, Job, Sylva, son cor qui sonne,
Ou le roman pleurant avec des yeux humains,
Ou l’ode qui s’enfonce en deux profonds chemins,
Dans l’azur près d’Horace, et dans l’ombre avec Dante;
Il faut dans ces labeurs rentrer la tête ardente;
Dans ces grands horizons subitement rouverts,
Il faut de strophe en strophe, il faut de vers en vers,
S’en aller devant soi, pensif, ivre de l’ombre;
Il faut, rêveur nocturne en proie à l’esprit sombre,
Gravir le dur sentier de l’inspiration;
Poursuivre la lointaine et blanche vision,
Traverser, effaré, les clairières désertes,
Le champ plein de tombeaux, les eaux, les herbes vertes,
Et franchir la forêt, le torrent, le hallier,

Noir cheval galopant sous le noir cavalier.

ÉCRIT SUR LA PLINTHE D'UN BAS-RELIEF ANTIQUE

A MADEMOISELLE LOUISE B.

La musique est dans tout. Un hymne sort du monde.
Rumeur de la galère aux flancs lavés par l'onde,
Bruits des villes, pitié de la soeur pour la soeur,
Passion des amants jeunes et beaux, douceur
Des vieux époux usés ensemble par la vie,
Fanfare de la plaine émaillée et ravie,
Mots échangés le soir sur les seuils fraternels,
Sombre tressaillement des chênes éternels,
Vous êtes l'harmonie et la musique même!
Vous êtes les soupirs qui font le chant suprême!
Pour notre âme, les jours, la vie et les saisons,
Les songes de nos coeurs, les plis des horizons,
L'aube et ses pleurs, le soir et ses grands incendies,
Flottent dans un réseau de vagues mélodies;
Une voix dans les champs nous parle, une autre voix
Dit à l'homme autre chose et chante dans les bois.
Par moment, un troupeau bêle, une cloche tinte.
Quand par l'ombre, la nuit, la colline est atteinte,
De toutes parts on voit danser et resplendir,
Dans le ciel étoilé du zénith au nadir,
Dans la voix des oiseaux, dans le cri des cigales,
Le groupe éblouissant des notes inégales.
Toujours avec notre âme un doux bruit s'accoupla;
La nature nous dit: Chante! et c'est pour cela
Qu'un statuaire ancien sculpta sur cette pierre
Un pâtre sur sa flûte abaissant sa paupière.

LA CLARTE DU DEHORS NE DISTRAIT PAS MON AME.

La clarté du dehors ne distrait pas mon âme.
La plaine chante et rit comme une jeune femme;
Le nid palpite dans les houx;
Partout la gaîté luit dans les bouches ouvertes;
Mai, couché dans la mousse au fond des grottes vertes,
Fait aux amoureux les yeux doux.

Dans les champs de luzerne et dans les champs de fèves,
Les vagues papillons errent pareils aux rêves;
Le blé vert sort des sillons bruns;
Et les abeilles d’or courent à la pervenche,
Au thym, au liseron, qui tend son urne blanche
A ces buveuses de parfums.

La nue étale au ciel ses pourpres et ses cuivres;
Les arbres, tout gonflés de printemps, semblent ivres;
Les branches, dans leurs doux ébats,
Se jettent les oiseaux du bout de leurs raquettes;
Le bourdon galonné fait aux roses coquettes
Des propositions tout bas.

Moi, je laisse voler les senteurs et les baumes,
Je laisse chuchoter les fleurs, ces doux fantômes,
Et l’aube dire: Vous vivrez!
Je regarde en moi-même, et, seul, oubliant l’heure,
L’oeil plein des visions de l’ombre intérieure,
Je songe aux morts, ces délivrés!

Encore un peu de temps, encore, ô mer superbe,
Quelques reflux; j'aurai ma tombe aussi dans l'herbe,
Blanche au milieu du frais gazon,
A l'ombre de quelque arbre où le lierre s'attache;
On y lira: — Passant, cette pierre te cache
La ruine d'une prison.

LE REVENANT

Mères en deuil, vos cris là-haut sont entendus.
Dieu, qui tient dans sa main tous les oiseaux perdus,
Parfois au même nid rend la même colombe.
O mères! le berceau communique à la tombe.
L'éternité contient plus d'un divin secret.

La mère dont je vais vous parler demeurait
A Blois; je l'ai connue en un temps plus prospère;
Et sa maison touchait à celle de mon père.
Elle avait tous les biens que Dieu donne ou permet.
On l'avait mariée à l'homme qu'elle aimait.
Elle eut un fils; ce fut une ineffable joie.

Ce premier-né couchait dans un berceau de soie;
Sa mère l'allaitait; il faisait un doux bruit
A côté du chevet nuptial; et, la nuit,
La mère ouvrait son âme aux chimères sans nombre,
Pauvre mère, et ses yeux resplendissaient dans l'ombre,
Quand, sans souffle, sans voix, renonçant au sommeil,
Penchée, elle écoutait dormir l'enfant vermeil.
Dès l'aube, elle chantait, ravie et toute fière.

Elle se renversait sur sa chaise en arrière,
Son fichu laissant voir son sein gonflé de lait,

Et souriait au faible enfant, et l’appelait
Ange, trésor, amour; et mille folles choses.
Oh! comme elle baisait ces beaux petits pieds roses!
Comme elle leur parlait! l’enfant, charmant et nu,
Riait, et, par ses mains sous les bras soutenu,
Joyeux, de ses genoux montait jusqu’à sa bouche.

Tremblant comme le daim qu’une feuille effarouche,
Il grandit. Pour l’enfant, grandir, c’est chanceler.
Il se mit à marcher, il se mit à parler,
Il eut trois ans; doux âge, où déjà la parole,
Comme le jeune oiseau, bat de l’aile et s’envole.
Et la mère disait: «Mon fils!» et reprenait:
«Voyez comme il est grand! il apprend; il connaît
Ses lettres. C’est un diable! Il veut que je l’habille
En homme; il ne veut plus de ses robes de fille;
C’est déjà très-méchant, ces petits hommes-là!
C’est égal, il lit bien; il ira loin; il a
De l’esprit; je lui fais épeler l’Évangile.» —
Et ses yeux adoraient cette tête fragile,
Et, femme heureuse, et mère au regard triomphant,
Elle sentait son coeur battre dans son enfant.

Un jour, — nous avons tous de ces dates funèbres! —
Le croup, monstre hideux, épervier des ténèbres,
Sur la blanche maison brusquement s’abattit,
Horrible, et, se ruant sur le pauvre petit,
Le saisit à la gorge; ô noire maladie!
De l’air par qui l’on vit sinistre perfidie!
Qui n’a vu se débattre, hélas! ces doux enfants
Qu’étreint le croup féroce en ses doigts étouffants!
Ils luttent; l’ombre emplit lentement leurs yeux d’ange.
Et de leur bouche froide il sort un râle étrange,
Et si mystérieux, qu’il semble qu’on entend,
Dans leur poitrine, où meurt le souffle haletant,
L’affreux coq du tombeau chanter son aube obscure.
Tel qu’un fruit qui du givre a senti la piqûre,

L’enfant mourut. La mort entra comme un voleur
Et le prit. — Une mère, un père, la douleur,
Le noir cercueil, le front qui se heurte aux murailles,
Les lugubres sanglots qui sortent des entrailles,
Oh! la parole expire où commence le cri;
Silence aux mots humains!
La mère au coeur meurtri,
Pendant qu’à ses côtés pleurait le père sombre,
Resta trois mois sinistre, immobile dans l’ombre,
L’oeil fixe, murmurant on ne sait quoi d’obscur,
Et regardant toujours le même angle du mur.
Elle ne mangeait pas; sa vie était sa fièvre;
Elle ne répondait à personne; sa lèvre
Tremblait; on l’entendait, avec un morne effroi,
Qui disait à voix basse à quelqu’un: — Rends-le-moi!
Et le médecin dit au père: — Il faut distraire
Ce coeur triste, et donner à l’enfant mort un frère. —
Le temps passa; les jours, les semaines, les mois.

Elle se sentit mère une seconde fois.

Devant le berceau froid de son ange éphémère,
Se rappelant l’accent dont il disait: — Ma mère, —
Elle songeait, muette, assise sur son lit.
Le jour où, tout à coup, dans son flanc tressaillit
L’être inconnu promis à notre aube mortelle,
Elle pâlit. — Quel est cet étranger? dit-elle.
Puis elle cria, sombre et tombant à genoux:
— Non, non, je ne veux pas! non! tu serais jaloux!
O mon doux endormi, toi que la terre glace,
Tu dirais: «On m’oublie; un autre a pris ma place;
Ma mère l’aime, et rit; elle le trouve beau,
Elle l’embrasse, et, moi, je suis dans mon tombeau!»
Non, non! —

Ainsi pleurait cette douleur profonde.

Le jour vint; elle mit un autre enfant au monde,
Et le père joyeux cria: — C’est un garçon.
Mais le père était seul joyeux dans la maison;
La mère restait morne, et la pâle accouchée,
Sur l’ancien souvenir tout entière penchée,
Rêvait; on lui porta l’enfant sur un coussin;
Elle se laissa faire et lui donna le sein;
Et tout à coup, pendant que, farouche, accablée,
Pensant au fils nouveau moins qu’à l’âme envolée,
Hélas! et songeant moins aux langes qu’au linceul,
Elle disait: — Cet ange en son sépulcre est seul!

— O doux miracle! ô mère au bonheur revenue! —
Elle entendit, avec une voix bien connue,
Le nouveau-né parler dans l’ombre entre ses bras,
Et tout bas murmurer: — C’est moi. Ne le dis pas.

AUX ARBRES

Arbres de la forêt, vous connaissez mon âme!
Au gré des envieux la foule loue et blâme;
Vous me connaissez, vous! — vous m’avez vu souvent,
Seul dans vos profondeurs, regardant et rêvant.
Vous le savez, la pierre où court un scarabée,
Une humble goutte d’eau de fleur en fleur tombée.
Un nuage, un oiseau, m’occupent tout un jour.
La contemplation m’emplit le coeur d’amour.
Vous m’avez vu cent fois, dans la vallée obscure,
Avec ces mots que dit l’esprit à la nature,
Questionner tout bas vos rameaux palpitants,
Et du même regard poursuivre en même temps,
Pensif, le front baissé, l’oeil dans l’herbe profonde,
L’étude d’un atome et l’étude du monde.

Attentif à vos bruits qui parlent tous un peu,
Arbres, vous m'avez vu fuir l'homme et chercher Dieu!
Feuilles qui tressaillez à la pointe des branches,
Nids dont le vent au loin sème les plumes blanches,
Clairières, vallons verts, déserts sombres et doux,
Vous savez que je suis calme et pur comme vous.
Comme au ciel vos parfums, mon culte à Dieu s'élance,
Et je suis plein d'oubli comme vous de silence!
La haine sur mon nom répand en vain son fiel;
Toujours, — je vous atteste, ô bois aimés du ciel! —
J'ai chassé loin de moi toute pensée amère,
Et mon coeur est encor tel que le fit ma mère!

Arbres de ces grands bois qui frissonnez toujours,
Je vous aime, et vous, lierre au seuil des antres sourds,
Ravins où l'on entend filtrer les sources vives,
Buissons que les oiseaux pillent, joyeux convives!
Quand je suis parmi vous, arbres de ces grands bois,
Dans tout ce qui m'entoure et me cache à la fois,
Dans votre solitude où je rentre en moi-même,
Je sens quelqu'un de grand qui m'écoute et qui m'aime!

Aussi, taillis sacrés où Dieu même apparaît,
Arbres religieux, chênes, mousses, forêt,
Forêt! c'est dans votre ombre et dans votre mystère,
C'est sous votre branchage auguste et solitaire,
Que je veux abriter mon sépulcre ignoré,
Et que je veux dormir quand je m'endormirai.

L'ENFANT, VOYANT L'AÏEULE A FILER OCCUPEE,

L’enfant, voyant l’aïeule à filer occupée,
Veut faire une quenouille à sa grande poupée.
L’aïeule s’assoupit un peu; c’est le moment.
L’enfant vient par derrière et tire doucement
Un brin de la quenouille où le fuseau tournoie,
Puis s’enfuit triomphante, emportant avec joie
La belle laine d’or que le safran jaunit,
Autant qu’en pourrait prendre un oiseau pour son nid.

JOIES DU SOIR

Le soleil, dans les monts où sa clarté s’étale,
Ajuste à son arc d’or sa flèche horizontale;
Les hauts taillis sont pleins de biches et de faons;
Là rit dans les rochers, veinés comme des marbres,
Une chaumière heureuse; en haut, un bouquet d’arbres.
Au-dessous, un bouquet d’enfants.

C’est l’instant de songer aux choses redoutables.
On entend les buveurs danser autour des tables;
Tandis que, gais, joyeux, heurtant les escabeaux,
Ils mêlent aux refrains leurs amours peu farouches,
Les lettres des chansons qui sortent de leurs bouches
Vont écrire autour d’eux leurs noms sur leurs tombeaux.

Mourir! demandons-nous, à toute heure, en nous-même:
— Comment passerons-nous le passage suprême? —
Finir avec grandeur est un illustre effort.
Le moment est lugubre et l’âme est accablée;
Quel pas que la sortie! — Oh! l’affreuse vallée
Que l’embuscade de la mort!

Quel frisson dans les os de l’agonisant blême!

Autour de lui tout marche et vit, tout rit, tout aime;
La fleur luit, l’oiseau chante en son palais d’été,
Tandis que le mourant en qui décroît la flamme,
Frémit sous ce grand ciel, précipice de l’âme,
Abîme effrayant d’ombre et de tranquillité!

Souvent, me rappelant le front étrange et pâle
De tous ceux que j’ai vus à cette heure fatale,
Êtres qui ne sont plus, frères, amis, parents,
Aux instants où l’esprit à rêver se hasarde,
Souvent je me suis dit: Qu’est-ce donc qu’il regarde
Cet oeil effaré des mourants?

Que voit-il?... — O terreur! de ténébreuses routes,
Un chaos composé de spectres et de doutes,
La terre vision, le ver réalité,
Un jour oblique et noir qui, troublant l’âme errante,
Mêle au dernier rayon de la vie expirante
Ta première lueur, sinistre éternité!

On croit sentir dans l’ombre une horrible piqûre.
Tout ce qu’on fit s’en va comme une fête obscure,
Et tout ce qui riait devient peine ou remord.
Quel moment, même, hélas! pour l’âme la plus haute,
Quand le vrai tout à coup paraît, quand la vie ôte
Son masque, et dit: «Je suis la mort!»

Ah! si tu fais trembler même un coeur sans reproche,
Sépulcre! le méchant avec horreur t’approche.
Ton seuil profond lui semble une rougeur de feu;
Sur ton vide pour lui quand ta pierre se lève,
Il s’y penche; il y voit, ainsi que dans un rêve,
La face vague et sombre et l’oeil fixe de Dieu.

J’AIME L’ARAIGNEE ET J’AIME L’ORTIE

J’aime l’araignée et j’aime l’ortie,
Parce qu’on les hait;
Et que rien n’exauce et que tout châtie
Leur morne souhait;

Parce qu’elles sont maudites, chétives,
Noirs êtres rampants;
Parce qu’elles sont les tristes captives
De leur guet-apens;

Parce qu’elles sont prises dans leur oeuvre;
O sort! fatals noeuds!
Parce que l’ortie est une couleuvre,
L’araignée un gueux;

Parce qu’elles ont l’ombre des abîmes,
Parce qu’on les fuit,
Parce qu’elles sont toutes deux victimes
De la sombre nuit.

Passants, faites grâce à la plante obscure,
Au pauvre animal.
Plaignez la laideur, plaignez la piqûre,
Oh! plaignez le mal!

Il n’est rien qui n’ait sa mélancolie;
Tout veut un baiser.
Dans leur fauve horreur, pour peu qu’on oublie
De les écraser,

Pour peu qu’on leur jette un oeil moins superbe,
Tout bas, loin du jour,
La vilaine bête et la mauvaise herbe
Murmurent: Amour!

LE POËTE

Shakspeare songe; loin du Versailles éclatant,
Des buis taillés, des ifs peignés, où l'on entend
Gémir la tragédie éplorée et prolixe,
Il contemple la foule avec son regard fixe,
Et toute la forêt frissonne devant lui.
Pâle, il marche, au dedans de lui-même ébloui;
Il va, farouche, fauve, et, comme une crinière,
Secouant sur sa tête un haillon de lumière.
Son crâne transparent est plein d'âmes, de corps,
De rêves, dont on voit la lueur du dehors;
Le monde tout entier passe à travers son crible;
Il tient toute la vie en son poignet terrible;
Il fait sortir de l'homme un sanglot surhumain,
Dans ce génie étrange où l'on perd son chemin,
Comme dans une mer, notre esprit parfois sombre;
Nous sentons, frémissants, dans son théâtre sombre,
Passer sur nous le vent de sa bouche soufflant,
Et ses doigts nous ouvrir et nous fouiller le flanc.
Jamais il ne recule; il est géant, il dompte
Richard-Trois, léopard, Caliban, mastodonte;
L'idéal est le vin que verse ce Bacchus.
Les sujets monstrueux qu'il a pris et vaincus
Râlent autour de lui, splendides ou difformes;
Il étreint Lear, Brutus, Hamlet, êtres énormes,
Capulet, Montaigu, César, et, tour à tour,
Les stryges dans le bois, le spectre sur la tour;
Et, même après Eschyle, effarant Melpomène,
Sinistre, ayant aux mains des lambeaux d'âme humaine,
De la chair d'Othello, des restes de Macbeth,
Dans son oeuvre, du drame effrayant alphabet,
Il se repose; ainsi le noir lion des jongles

S’endort dans l’antre immense avec du sang aux ongles.

LA NATURE

La terre est de granit, les ruisseaux sont de marbre;
C’est l’hiver; nous avons bien froid. Veux-tu, bon arbre,
Être dans mon foyer la bûche de Noël?
— Bois, je viens de la terre, et, feu, je monte au ciel.
Frappe, bon bûcheron. Père, aïeul, homme, femme,
Chauffez au feu vos mains, chauffez à Dieu votre âme.
Aimez, vivez. — Veux-tu, bon arbre, être timon
De charrue? — Oui, je veux creuser le noir limon,
Et tirer l’épi d’or de la terre profonde.
Quand le soc a passé, la plaine devient blonde,
La paix aux doux yeux sort du sillon entr’ouvert,
Et l’aube en pleurs sourit. — Veux-tu, bel arbre vert,
Arbre du hallier sombre où le chevreuil s’échappe,
De la maison de l’homme être le pilier? — Frappe.
Je puis porter les toits, ayant porté les nids.
Ta demeure est sacrée, homme, et je la bénis;
Là, dans l’ombre et l’amour, pensif, tu te recueilles;
Et le bruit des enfants ressemble au bruit des feuilles.
— Veux-tu, dis-moi, bon arbre, être mât de vaisseau?
— Frappe, bon charpentier. Je veux bien être oiseau.
Le navire est pour moi, dans l’immense mystère,
Ce qu’est pour vous la tombe; il m’arrache à la terre,
Et, frissonnant, m’emporte à travers l’infini.
J’irai voir ces grands cieux d’où l’hiver est banni,
Et dont plus d’un essaim me parle en son passage.
Pas plus que le tombeau n’épouvante le sage,
Le profond Océan, d’obscurité vêtu,
Ne m’épouvante point: oui, frappe. — Arbre, veux-tu
Être gibet? — Silence, homme! va-t’en, cognée!

J’appartiens à la vie, à la vie indignée!
Va-t’en, bourreau! va-t’en, juge! fuyez, démons!
Je suis l’arbre des bois, je suis l’arbre des monts;
Je porte les fruits mûrs, j’abrite les pervenches;
Laissez-moi ma racine et laissez-moi mes branches!
Arrière! homme, tuez, ouvriers du trépas,
Soyez sanglants, mauvais, durs; mais ne venez pas,
Ne venez pas, traînant des cordes et des chaînes,
Vous chercher un complice au milieu des grands chênes!
Ne faites pas servir à vos crimes, vivants,
L’arbre mystérieux à qui parlent les vents!
Vos lois portent la nuit sur leurs ailes funèbres.
Je suis fils du soleil, soyez fils des ténèbres.
Allez-vous-en! laissez l’arbre dans ses déserts.
A vos plaisirs, aux jeux, aux festins, aux concerts,
Accouplez l’échafaud et le supplice; faites.
Soit. Vivez et tuez. Tuez, entre deux fêtes,
Le malheureux, chargé de fautes et de maux;
Moi, je ne mêle pas de spectre à mes rameaux!

MAGNITUDO PARVI

I

Le jour mourait; j’étais près des mers, sur la grève.
Je tenais par la main ma fille, enfant qui rêve,
Jeune esprit qui se tait!
La terre, s’inclinant comme un vaisseau qui sombre,
En tournant dans l’espace allait plongeant dans l’ombre;
La pâle nuit montait.

La pâle nuit levait son front dans les nuées;
Les choses s’effaçaient, blêmes, diminuées,
Sans forme et sans couleur;

Quand il monte de l’ombre, il tombe de la cendre;
On sentait à la fois la tristesse descendre
Et monter la douleur.

Ceux dont les yeux pensifs contemplent la nature
Voyaient l’urne d’en haut, vague rondeur obscure,
Se pencher dans les cieux,
Et verser sur les monts, sur les campagnes blondes,
Et sur les flots confus pleins de rumeurs profondes,
Le soir silencieux!

Les nuages rampaient le long des promontoires;
Mon âme, où se mêlaient ces ombres et ces gloires,
Sentait confusément
De tout cet océan, de toute cette terre,
Sortir sous l’oeil de Dieu je ne sais quoi d’austère,
D’auguste et de charmant!

J’avais à mes côtés ma fille bien-aimée.
La nuit se répandait ainsi qu’une fumée.
Rêveur, ô Jéhovah,
Je regardais en moi, les paupières baissées,
Cette ombre qui se fait aussi dans nos pensées
Quant ton soleil s’en va!

Soudain l’enfant bénie, ange au regard de femme,
Dont je tenais la main et qui tenait mon âme,
Me parla, douce voix!
Et, me montrant l’eau sombre et la rive âpre et brune,
Et deux points lumineux qui tremblaient sur la dune:
— Père, dit-elle, vois!

Vois donc, là-bas, où l’ombre aux flancs des coteaux rampe,
Ces feux jumeaux briller comme une double lampe
Qui remuerait au vent!
Quels sont ces deux foyers qu’au loin la brume voile?
— L’un est un feu de pâtre et l’autre est une étoile;

Deux mondes, mon enfant!

II

Deux mondes! — l’un est dans l’espace,
Dans les ténèbres de l’azur,
Dans l’étendue où tout s’efface.
Radieux gouffre! abîme obscur!
Enfant, comme deux hirondelles,
Oh, si tous deux, âmes fidèles,
Nous pouvions fuir à tire-d’ailes.
Et plonger dans cette épaisseur
D’où la création découle,
Où flotte, vit, meurt, brille et roule
L’astre imperceptible à la foule,
Incommensurable au penseur;

Si nous pouvions franchir ces solitudes mornes;
Si nous pouvions passer les bleus septentrions,
Si nous pouvions atteindre au fond des cieux sans bornes
Jusqu’à ce qu’à la fin, éperdus, nous voyions,
Comme un navire en mer croît, monte et semble éclore,
Cette petite étoile, atome de phosphore,
Devenir par degrés un monstre de rayons;

S’il nous était donné de faire
Ce voyage démesuré,
Et de voler, de sphère en sphère,
A ce grand soleil ignoré;
Si, par un archange qui l’aime,
L’homme aveugle, frémissant, blême,
Dans les profondeurs du problème,
Vivant, pouvait être introduit;
Si nous pouvions fuir notre centre,
Et, forçant l’ombre où Dieu seul entre,
Aller voir de près dans leur antre
Ces énormités de la nuit;

Ce qui t’apparaîtrait te ferait trembler, ange!
Rien, pas de vision, pas de songe insensé,
Qui ne fût dépassé par ce spectacle étrange,
Monde informe, et d’un tel mystère composé,
Que son rayon fondrait nos chairs, cire vivante,
Et qu’il ne resterait de nous dans l’épouvante
Qu’un regard ébloui sous un front hérissé!

O contemplation splendide!
Oh! de pôles, d’axes, de feux,
De la matière et du fluide,
Balancement prodigieux!
D’aimant qui lutte, d’air qui vibre,
De force esclave et d’éther libre,
Vaste et magnifique équilibre!
Monde rêve! idéal réel!
Lueurs! tonnerres! jets de soufre!
Mystère qui chante et qui souffre!
Formule nouvelle du gouffre!
Mot nouveau du noir livre ciel!

Tu verrais! — un soleil, autour de lui des mondes,
Centres eux-mêmes, ayant des lunes autour d’eux;
Là, des fourmillements de sphères vagabondes;
Là, des globes jumeaux qui tournent deux à deux;
Au milieu, cette étoile, effrayante, agrandie;
D’un coin de l’infini formidable incendie,
Rayonnement sublime ou flamboiement hideux!

Regardons, puisque nous y sommes!
Plus rien des choses que tu nommes!
Un autre monde! une autre loi!
La terre a fui dans l’étendue;
Derrière nous elle est perdue!
Jour nouveau! nuit inattendue!

D’autres groupes d’astres au ciel!
Une nature qu’on ignore,
Qui, s’ils voyaient sa fauve aurore,
Ferait accourir Pythagore
Et reculer Ézéchiel!

Ce qu’on prend pour un mont est une hydre; ces arbres
Sont des bêtes; ces rocs hurlent avec fureur;
Le feu chante; le sang coule aux veines des marbres.
Ce monde est-il le vrai? le nôtre est-il l’erreur?
O possibles qui sont pour nous les impossibles!
Réverbérations des chimères visibles!
Le baiser de la vie ici nous fait horreur.

Et, si nous pouvions voir les hommes
Les ébauches, les embryons,
Qui sont là ce qu’ailleurs nous sommes,
Comme, eux et nous, nous frémirions
Rencontre inexprimable et sombre!
Nous nous regarderions dans l’ombre
De monstre à monstre, fils du nombre
Et du temps qui s’évanouit;
Et, si nos langages funèbres
Pouvaient échanger leurs algèbres,
Nous dirions: «Qu’êtes-vous, ténèbres?»
Ils diraient: «D’où venez-vous, nuit?»
•
Sont-ils aussi des coeurs, des cerveaux, des entrailles?
Cherchent-ils comme nous le mot jamais trouvé?
Ont-ils des Spinosa qui frappent aux murailles,
Des Lucrèce niant tout ce qu’on a rêvé,
Qui, du noir infini feuilletant les registres,
Ont écrit: Rien, au bas de ses pages sinistres;
Et, penchés sur l’abîme, ont dit: «L’oeil est crevé!»

Tous ces êtres, comme nous-même,
S’en vont en pâles tourbillons;

La création mêle et sème
Leur cendre à de nouveaux sillons;
Un vient, un autre le remplace,
Et passe sans laisser de trace;
Le souffle les crée et les chasse;
Le gouffre en proie aux quatre vents,
Comme la mer aux vastes lames,
Mêle éternellement ses flammes
A ce sombre écroulement d’âmes,
De fantômes et de vivants!

L’abîme semble fou sous l’ouragan de l’être.
Quelle tempête autour de l’astre radieux!
Tout ne doit que surgir, flotter et disparaître,
Jusqu’à ce que la nuit ferme à son tour ses yeux;
Car, un jour, il faudra que l’étoile aussi tombe,
L’étoile voit neiger les âmes dans la tombe,
L’âme verra neiger les astres dans les cieux!
•
Par instant, dans le vague espace,
Regarde, enfant! tu vas la voir!
Une brusque planète passe;
C’est d’abord au loin un point noir;
Plus prompte que la trombe folle,
Elle vient, court, approche, vole;
A peine a lui son auréole,
Que déjà, remplissant le ciel,
Sa rondeur farouche commence
A cacher le gouffre en démence,
Et semble ton couvercle immense,
O puits du vertige éternel!

C’est elle! éclair! voilà sa livide surface
Avec tous les frissons de ses océans verts!
Elle apparaît, s’en va, décroît, pâlit, s’efface,
Et rentre, atome obscur, aux cieux d’ombre couverts,
Et tout s’évanouit, vaste aspect, bruit sublime... —

Quel est ce projectile inouï de l’abîme?
O boulets monstrueux qui sont des univers!

Dans un éloignement nocturne,
Roule avec un râle effrayant
Quelque épouvantable Saturne
Tournant son anneau flamboyant;
La braise en pleut comme d’un crible;
Jean de Patmos, l’esprit terrible,
Vit en songe cet astre horrible
Et tomba presque évanoui:
Car, rêvant sa noire épopée,
Il crut, d’éclairs enveloppée,
Voir fuir une roue, échappée
Au sombre char d’Adonaï!

Et, par instants encor, — tout va-t-il se dissoudre? —
Parmi ces mondes, fauve, accourant à grand bruit,
Une comète aux crins de flamme, aux yeux de foudre,
Surgit, et les regarde, et, blême, approche et luit;
Puis s’évade en hurlant, pâle et surnaturelle,
Traînant sa chevelure éparse derrière elle,
Comme une Canidie affreuse qui s’enfuit.

Quelques-uns de ces globes meurent;
Dans le semoun et le mistral
Leurs mers sanglotent, leurs flots pleurent;
Leur flanc crache un brasier central.
Sphères par la neige engourdies,
Ils ont d’étranges maladies,
Pestes, déluges, incendies,
Tremblements profonds et fréquents;
Leur propre abîme les consume;
Leur haleine flamboie et fume;
On entend de loin dans leur brume
La toux lugubre des volcans.

Ils sont! ils vont! ceux-ci brillants, ceux-là difformes,
Tous portant des vivants et des créations!
Ils jettent dans l’azur des cônes d’ombre énormes,
Ténèbres qui des cieux traversent les rayons,
Où le regard, ainsi que des flambeaux farouches
L’un après l’autre éteints par d’invisibles bouches,
Voit plonger tour à tour les constellations!

Quel Zorobabel formidable,
Quel Dédale vertigineux,
Cieux! a bâti dans l’insondable
Tout ce noir chaos lumineux?
Soleils, astres aux larges queues,
Gouffres! ô millions de lieues!
Sombres architectures bleues!
Quel bras a fait, créé, produit
Ces tours d’or que nuls yeux ne comptent,
Ces firmaments qui se confrontent,
Ces Babels d’étoiles qui montent
Dans ces Babylones de nuit?

Qui, dans l’ombre vivante et l’aube sépulcrale,
Qui, dans l’horreur fatale et dans l’amour profond,
A tordu ta splendide et sinistre spirale,
Ciel, où les univers se font et se défont?
Un double précipice à la fois les réclame.
«Immensité!» dit l’être. «Éternité!» dit l’âme.
A jamais! le sans fin roule dans le sans fond.
•
L’inconnu, celui dont maint sage
Dans la brume obscure a douté,
L’immobile et muet visage,
Le voile de l’éternité,
A, pour montrer son ombre au crime,
Sa flamme au juste magnanime,
Jeté pêle-mêle à l’abîme
Tous ses masques, noirs ou vermeils;

Dans les éthers inaccessibles,
Ils flottent, cachés ou visibles;
Et ce sont ces masques terribles
Que nous appelons les soleils!
Et les peuples ont vu passer dans les ténèbres
Ces spectres de la nuit que nul ne pénétra;
Et flamines, santons, brahmanes, mages, guèbres,
Ont crié: Jupiter! Allah! Vishnou! Mithra!
Un jour, dans les lieux bas, sur les hauteurs suprêmes,
Tous ces masques hagards s'effaceront d'eux-mêmes;
Alors, la face immense et calme apparaîtra!

III

Enfant! l'autre de ces deux mondes,
C'est le coeur d'un homme! — parfois,
Comme une perle au fond des ondes,
Dieu cache une âme au fond des bois.

Dieu cache un homme sous les chênes;
Et le sacre en d'austères lieux
Avec le silence des plaines,
L'ombre des monts, l'azur des cieux!

O ma fille, avec son mystère
Le soir envahit pas à pas
L'esprit d'un prêtre involontaire,
Près de ce feu qui luit là-bas!

Cet homme, dans quelque ruine,
Avec la ronce et le lézard,
Vit sous la brume et la bruine,
Fruit tombé de l'arbre hasard!

Il est devenu presque fauve;
Son bâton est son seul appui.
En le voyant, l'homme se sauve;

La bête seule vient à lui.

Il est l’être crépusculaire.
On a peur de l’apercevoir;
Pâtre tant que le jour l’éclaire,
Fantôme dès que vient le soir.

La faneuse dans la clairière
Le voit quand il fait, par moment,
Comme une ombre hors de sa bière,
Un pas hors de l’isolement.

Son vêtement dans ces décombres,
C’est un sac de cendre et de deuil,
Linceul troué par les clous sombres
De la misère, ce cercueil.

Le pommier lui jette ses pommes;
Il vit dans l’ombre enseveli;
C’est un pauvre homme loin des hommes,
C’est un habitant de l’oubli;

C’est un indigent sous la bure,
Un vieux front de la pauvreté,
Un haillon dans une masure,
Un esprit dans l’immensité!
•
Dans la nature transparente,
C’est l’oeil des regards ingénus,
Un penseur à l’âme ignorante,
Un grave marcheur aux pieds nus!

Oui, c’est un coeur, une prunelle,
C’est un souffrant, c’est un songeur,
Sur qui la lueur éternelle
Fait trembler sa vague rougeur.

Il est là, l’âme aux cieux ravie,
Et près d’un branchage enflammé.
Pense, lui-même par la vie
Tison à demi consumé.

Il est calme en cette ombre épaisse;
Il aura bien toujours un peu
D’herbe pour que son bétail paisse,
De bois pour attiser son feu.

Nos luttes, nos chocs, nos désastres,
Il les ignore; il ne veut rien
Que, la nuit, le regard des astres,
Le jour, le regard de son chien.

Son troupeau gît sur l’herbe unie;
Il est là, lui, pasteur, ami,
Seul éveillé, comme un génie
A côté d’un peuple endormi.

Ses brebis, d’un rien remuées,
Ouvrant l’oeil près du feu qui luit,
Aperçoivent sous les nuées
Sa forme droite dans la nuit;

Et, bouc qui bêle, agneau qui danse,
Dorment dans les bois hasardeux
Sous ce grand spectre Providence
Qu’ils sentent debout auprès d’eux.
•
Le pâtre songe, solitaire,
Pauvre et nu, mangeant son pain bis;
Il ne connaît rien de la terre
Que ce que broute la brebis.

Pourtant, il sait que l’homme souffre;
Mais il sonde l’éther profond.

Toute solitude est un gouffre,
Toute solitude est un mont.

Dès qu’il est debout sur ce faîte,
Le ciel reprend cet étranger;
La Judée avait le prophète,
La Chaldée avait le berger.

Ils tâtaient le ciel l’un de l’autre;
Et, plus tard, sous le feu divin,
Du prophète naquit l’apôtre,
Du pâtre naquit le devin.

La foule raillait leur démence;
Et l’homme dut, aux jours passés,
A ces ignorants la science,
La sagesse à ces insensés.

La nuit voyait, témoin austère,
Se rencontrer sur les hauteurs,
Face à face dans le mystère,
Les prophètes et les pasteurs.

— Où marchez-vous, tremblants prophètes?
— Où courez-vous, pâtres troublés?
Ainsi parlaient ces sombres têtes,
Et l’ombre leur criait: Allez!

Aujourd’hui, l’on ne sait plus même
Qui monta le plus de degrés
Des Zoroastres au front blême
Ou des Abrahams effarés.

Et, quand nos yeux, qui les admirent,
Veulent mesurer leur chemin,
Et savoir quels sont ceux qui mirent
Le plus de jour dans l’oeil humain,

Du noir passé perçant les voiles,
Notre esprit flotte sans repos
Entre tous ces compteurs d’étoiles
Et tous ces compteurs de troupeaux.

Dans nos temps, où l’aube enfin dore
Les bords du terrestre ravin,
Le rêve humain s’approche encore
Plus près de l’idéal divin.
•
L’homme que la brume enveloppe,
Dans le ciel que Jésus ouvrit,
Comme à travers un télescope
Regarde à travers son esprit.

L’âme humaine, après le Calvaire,
A plus d’ampleur et de rayon;
Le grossissement de ce verre
Grandit encor la vision.

La solitude vénérable
Mène aujourd’hui l’homme sacré
Plus avant dans l’impénétrable,
Plus loin dans le démesuré.

Oui, si dans l’homme, que le nombre
Et le temps trompent tour à tour,
La foule dégorge de l’ombre,
La solitude fait le jour.

Le désert au ciel nous convie.
O seuil de l’azur! l’homme seul,
Vivant qui voit hors de la vie,
Lève d’avance son linceul.

Il parle aux voix que Dieu fit taire,

Mêlant sur son front pastoral
Aux lueurs troubles de la terre
Le serein rayon sépulcral.

Dans le désert, l’esprit qui pense
Subit par degrés sous les cieux
La dilatation immense
De l’infini mystérieux.

Il plonge au fond. Calme, il savoure
Le réel, le vrai, l’élément.
Toute la grandeur qui l’entoure
Le pénètre confusément.

Sans qu’il s’en doute, il va, se dompte,
Marche, et, grandissant en raison,
Croît comme l’herbe aux champs, et monte
Comme l’aurore à l’horizon.

Il voit, il adore, il s’effare;
Il entend le clairon du ciel,
Et l’universelle fanfare
Dans le silence universel.

Avec ses fleurs au pur calice,
Avec sa mer pleine de deuil,
Qui donne un baiser de complice
A l’âpre bouche de l’écueil,

Avec sa plaine, vaste bible,
Son mont noir, son brouillard fuyant,
Regards du visage, invisible,
Syllabes du mot flamboyant;

Avec sa paix, avec son trouble,
Son bois voilé, son rocher nu,
Avec son écho qui redouble

Toutes les voix de l’inconnu,

La solitude éclaire, enflamme,
Attire l’homme aux grands aimants,
Et lentement compose une âme
De tous les éblouissements!

L’homme en son sein palpite et vibre,
Ouvrant son aile, ouvrant ses yeux,
Étrange oiseau d’autant plus libre
Que le mystère le tient mieux.

Il sent croître en lui, d’heure en heure,
L’humble foi, l’amour recueilli,
Et la mémoire antérieure
Qui le remplit d’un vaste oubli.

Il a des soifs inassouvies;
Dans son passé vertigineux,
Il sent revivre d’autres vies;
De son âme il compte les noeuds.

Il cherche au fond des sombres dômes
Sous quelles formes il a lui;
Il entend ses propres fantômes
Qui lui parlent derrière lui.

Il sent que l’humaine aventure
N’est rien qu’une apparition;
Il se dit: — Chaque créature
Est toute la création. —

Il se dit: — Mourir, c’est connaître;
Nous cherchons l’issue à tâtons.
J’étais, je suis, et je dois être.
L’ombre est une échelle. Montons. —

Il se dit: — Le vrai, c’est le centre,
Le reste est apparence ou bruit.
Cherchons le lion, et non l’antre;
Allons où l’oeil fixe reluit. —

Il sent plus que l’homme en lui naître;
Il sent, jusque dans ses sommeils,
Lueur à lueur, dans son être,
L’infiltration des soleils.

Ils cessent d’être son problème;
Un astre est un voile. Il veut mieux;
Il reçoit de leur rayon même
Le regard qui va plus loin qu’eux.
•
Pendant que, nous, hommes des villes,
Nous croyons prendre un vaste essor
Lorsqu’entre en nos prunelles viles
Le spectre d’une étoile d’or;

Que, savants dont la vue est basse,
Nous nous ruons et nous brûlons
Dans le premier astre qui passe,
Comme aux lampes les papillons,

Et qu’oubliant le nécessaire,
Nous contentant de l’incomplet,
Croyant éclairés, ô misère!
Ceux qu’éclaire le feu follet,

Prenant pour l’être et pour l’essence
Les fantômes du ciel profond,
Voulant nous faire une science
Avec des formes qui s’en vont,

Ne comprenant, pour nous distraire
De la terre, où l’homme est damné,

Qu’un autre monde, sombre frère
De notre globe infortuné,

Comme l’oiseau né dans la cage,
Qui, s’il fuit, n’a qu’un vol étroit,
Ne sait pas trouver le bocage,
Et va d’un toit à l’autre toit;

Chercheurs que le néant captive,
Qui, dans l’ombre, avons en passant,
La curiosité chétive
Du ciron pour le ver luisant,

Poussière admirant la poussière,
Nous poursuivons obstinément,
Grains de cendre, un grain de lumière
En fuite dans le firmament!

Pendant que notre âme humble et lasse
S’arrête au seuil du ciel béni,
Et va becqueter dans l’espace
Une miette de l’infini,

Lui, ce berger, ce passant frêle,
Ce pauvre gardeur de bétail
Que la cathédrale éternelle
Abrite sous son noir portail,

Cet homme qui ne sait pas lire,
Cet hôte des arbres mouvants,
Qui ne connaît pas d’autre lyre
Que les grands bois et les grands vents,

Lui, dont l’âme semble étouffée,
Il s’envole, et, touchant le but,
Boit avec la coupe d’Orphée
A la source où Moïse but!

Lui, ce pâtre, en sa Thébaïde,
Cet ignorant, cet indigent,
Sans docteur, sans maître, sans guide,
Fouillant, scrutant, interrogeant

De sa roche où la paix séjourne,
Les cieux noirs, les bleus horizons,
Double ornière où sans cesse tourne
La roue énorme des saisons;

Seul, quand mai vide sa corbeille,
Quand octobre emplit son panier;
Seul, quand l'hiver à notre oreille
Vient siffler, gronder, et nier;

Quand sur notre terre, où se joue
Le blanc flocon flottant sans bruit,
La mort, spectre vierge, secoue,
Ses ailes pâles dans la nuit;

Quand, nous glaçant jusqu'aux vertèbres,
Nous jetant la neige en rêvant,
Ce sombre cygne des ténèbres
Laisse tomber sa plume au vent;

Quand la mer tourmente la barque;
Quand la plaine est là, ressemblant
A la morte dont un drap marque
L'obscur profil sinistre et blanc;

Seul sur cet âpre monticule,
A l'heure où, sous le ciel dormant,
Les Méduses du crépuscule
Montrent leur face vaguement;

Seul la nuit, quand dorment ses chèvres,

Quand la terre et l’immensité
Se referment comme deux lèvres
Après que le psaume est chanté;

Seul, quand renaît le jour sonore,
À l’heure où sur le mont lointain
Flamboie et frissonne l’aurore,
Crête rouge du coq matin;

Seul, toujours seul, l’été, l’automne;
Front sans remords et sans effroi
À qui le nuage qui tonne
Dit tout bas: Ce n’est pas pour toi!

Oubliant dans ces grandes choses
Les trous de ses pauvres habits,
Comparant la douceur des roses
À la douceur de la brebis,

Sondant l’être, la loi fatale;
L’amour, la mort, la fleur, le fruit;
Voyant l’auréole idéale
Sortir de toute cette nuit,

Il sent, faisant passer le monde
Par sa pensée à chaque instant,
Dans cette obscurité profonde
Son oeil devenir éclatant;

Et, dépassant la créature,
Montant toujours, toujours accru,
Il regarde tant la nature,
Que la nature a disparu!

Car, des effets allant aux causes,
L’oeil perce et franchit le miroir,
Enfant; et contempler les choses,

C’est finir par ne plus les voir.

La matière tombe détruite
Devant l’esprit aux yeux de lynx;
Voir, c’est rejeter; la poursuite
De l’énigme est l’oubli du sphynx.

Il ne voit plus le ver qui rampe,
La feuille morte émue au vent,
Le pré, la source où l’oiseau trempe
Son petit pied rose en buvant;

Ni l’araignée, hydre étoilée,
Au centre du mal se tenant,
Ni l’abeille, lumière ailée,
Ni la fleur, parfum rayonnant;

Ni l’arbre où sur l’écorce dure
L’amant grave un chiffre d’un jour,
Que les ans font croître à mesure
Qu’ils font décroître son amour.

Il ne voit plus la vigne mûre,
La ville, large toit fumant,
Ni la campagne, ce murmure,
Ni la mer, ce rugissement;

Ni l’aube dorant les prairies,
Ni le couchant aux longs rayons,
Ni tous ces tas de pierreries
Qu’on nomme constellations,

Que l’éther de son ombre couvre,
Et qu’entrevoit notre oeil terni
Quand la nuit curieuse entr’ouvre
Le sombre écrin de l’infini;

Il ne voit plus Saturne pâle,
Mars écarlate, Arcturus bleu,
Sirius, couronne d’opale,
Aldebaran, turban de feu;

Ni les mondes, esquifs sans voiles,
Ni, dans le grand ciel sans milieu,
Toute cette cendre d’étoiles;
Il voit l’astre unique; il voit Dieu!
•
Il le regarde, il le contemple;
Vision que rien n’interrompt!
Il devient tombe, il devient temple;
Le mystère flambe à son front.

Oeil serein dans l’ombre ondoyante,
Il a conquis, il a compris,
Il aime; il est l’âme voyante
Parmi nos ténébreux esprits.

Il marche, heureux et plein d’aurore,
De plain-pied avec l’élément;
Il croit, il accepte. Il ignore
Le doute, notre escarpement;

Le doute, qu’entourent les vides,
Bord que nul ne peut enjamber,
Où nous nous arrêtons stupides,
Disant: Avancer, c’est tomber!

Le doute, roche où nos pensées
Errent loin du pré qui fleurit,
Où vont et viennent, dispersées,
Toutes ces chèvres de l’esprit!

Quand Hobbes dit: «Quelle est la base?»
Quand Locke dit: «Quelle est la loi?»

Que font à sa splendide extase
Ces dialogues de l’effroi?

Qu’importe à cet anachorète
De la caverne Vérité,
L’homme qui dans l’homme s’arrête,
La nuit qui croit à sa clarté?

Que lui fait la philosophie,
Calcul, algèbre, orgueil puni,
Que sur les cimes pétrifie
L’effarement de l’infini!

Lueurs que couvre la fumée!
Sciences disant: Que sait-on?
Qui, de l’aveugle Ptolémée,
Montent au myope Newton!

Que lui font les choses bornées,
Grands, petits, couronnes, carcans?
L’ombre qui sort des cheminées
Vaut l’ombre qui sort des volcans.

Que lui font la larve et la cendre,
Et, dans les tourbillons mouvants,
Toutes les formes que peut prendre
L’obscur nuage des vivants?

Que lui fait l’assurance triste
Des créatures dans leurs nuits?
La terre s’écriant: J’existe!
Le soleil répliquant: Je suis!

Quand le spectre, dans le mystère,
S’affirme à l’apparition,
Qu’importe à cet oeil solitaire
Qui s’éblouit du seul rayon?

Que lui fait l’astre, autel et prêtre
De sa propre religion,
Qui dit: Rien hors de moi! — quand l’être
Se nomme Gouffre et Légion!

Que lui font, sur son sacré faîte,
Les démentis audacieux
Que donne aux soleils la comète,
Cette hérésiarque des cieux?

Que lui fait le temps, cette brume?
L’espace, cette illusion?
Que lui fait l’éternelle écume
De l’océan Création?

Il boit, hors de l’inabordable,
Du surhumain, du sidéral,
Les délices du formidable,
L’âpre ivresse de l’idéal;

Son être, dont rien ne surnage,
S’engloutit dans le gouffre bleu;
Il fait ce sublime naufrage;
Et, murmurant sans cesse: — Dieu, —

Parmi les feuillages farouches,
Il songe, l’âme et l’oeil là-haut,
À l’imbécillité des bouches
Qui prononcent un autre mot!
•
Il le voit, ce soleil unique,
Fécondant, travaillant, créant,
Par le rayon qu’il communique
Égalant l’atome au géant,

Semant de feux, de souffles, d’ondes,

Les tourbillons d’obscurité,
Emplissant d’étincelles mondes
L’épouvantable immensité,

Remuant, dans l’ombre et les brumes,
De sombres forces dans les cieux
Qui font comme des bruits d’enclumes
Sous des marteaux mystérieux,

Doux pour le nid du rouge-gorge,
Terrible aux satans qu’il détruit;
Et, comme aux lueurs d’une forge,
Un mur s’éclaire dans la nuit,

On distingue en l’ombre où nous sommes,
On reconnaît dans ce bas lieu,
À sa clarté parmi les hommes,
L’âme qui réverbère Dieu!

Et ce pâtre devient auguste;
Jusqu’à l’auréole monté,
Étant le sage, il est le juste;
O ma fille, cette clarté

Soeur du grand flambeau des génies,
Faite de tous les rayons purs
Et de toutes les harmonies
Qui flottent dans tous les azurs,

Plus belle dans une chaumière,
Éclairant hier par demain,
Cette éblouissante lumière,
Cette blancheur du coeur humain

S’appelle en ce monde, où l’honnête
Et le vrai des vents est battu,
Innocence avant la tempête,

Après la tempête vertu!
•
Voilà donc ce que fait la solitude à l’homme;
Elle lui montre Dieu, le dévoile et le nomme;
Sacre l’obscurité,
Pénètre de splendeur le pâtre qui s’y plonge,
Et, dans les profondeurs de son immense songe,
T’allume, ô vérité!

Elle emplit l’ignorant de la science énorme;
Ce que le cèdre voit, ce que devine l’orme,
Ce que le chêne sent,
Dieu, l’être, l’infini, l’éternité, l’abîme,
Dans l’ombre elle le mêle à la candeur sublime
D’un pâtre frémissant.

L’homme n’est qu’une lampe, elle en fait une étoile.
Et ce pâtre devient, sous son haillon de toile,
Un mage; et, par moments,
Aux fleurs, parfums du temple, aux arbres, noirs pilastres,
Apparaît couronné d’une tiare d’astres,
Vêtu de flamboiements!

Il ne se doute pas de cette grandeur sombre:
Assis près de son feu que la broussaille encombre,
Devant l’être béant,
Humble, il pense; et, chétif, sans orgueil, sans envie,
Il se courbe, et sent mieux, près du gouffre de vie,
Son gouffre de néant.

Quand il sort de son rêve, il revoit la nature.
Il parle à la nuée, errant à l’aventure,
Dans l’azur émigrant;
Il dit: «Que ton encens est chaste, ô clématite!»
Il dit au doux oiseau: «Que ton aile est petite,
Mais que ton vol est grand!»

Le soir, quand il voit l’homme aller vers les villages,
Glaneuses, bûcherons qui traînent des feuillages,
Et les pauvres chevaux
Que le laboureur bat et fouette avec colère,
Sans songer que le vent va le rendre à son frère
Le marin sur les flots;

Quand il voit les forçats passer, portant leur charge,
Les soldats, les pêcheurs pris par la nuit au large,
Et hâtant leur retour,
Il leur envoie à tous, du haut du mont nocturne,
La bénédiction qu’il a puisée à l’urne
De l’insondable amour!

Et, tandis qu’il est là, vivant sur sa colline,
Content, se prosternant dans tout ce qui s’incline,
Doux rêveur bienfaisant,
Emplissant le vallon, le champ, le toit de mousse,
Et l’herbe et le rocher de la majesté douce
De son coeur innocent,

S’il passe par hasard, près de sa paix féconde,
Un de ces grands esprits en butte aux flots du monde
Révolté devant eux,
Qui craignent à la fois, sur ces vagues funèbres,
La terre de granit et le ciel de ténèbres,
L’homme ingrat, Dieu douteux;

Peut-être, à son insu, que ce pasteur paisible,
Et dont l’obscurité rend la lueur visible,
Homme heureux sans effort,
Entrevu par cette âme en proie au choc de l’onde,
Va lui jeter soudain quelque clarté profonde
Qui lui montre le port!

Ainsi ce feu peut-être, aux flancs du rocher sombre,
Là-bas est aperçu par quelque nef qui sombre

Entre le ciel et l’eau;
Humble, il la guide au loin de son reflet rougeâtre,
Et du même rayon dont il réchauffe un pâtre,
Il sauve un grand vaisseau!

IV

Et je repris, montrant à l’enfant adorée
L’obscur feu du pasteur et l’étoile sacrée:

De ces deux feux, perçant le soir qui s’assombrit
L’un révèle un soleil, l’autre annonce un esprit,
C’est l’infini que notre oeil sonde;
Mesurons tout à Dieu, qui seul crée et conçoit!
C’est l’astre qui le prouve et l’esprit qui le voit;
Une âme est plus grande qu’un monde.

Enfant, ce feu de pâtre à une âme mêlé,
Et cet astre, splendeur du plafond constellé
Que l’éclair et la foudre gardent,
Ces deux phares du gouffre où l’être flotte et fuit,
Ces deux clartés du deuil, ces deux yeux de la nuit,
Dans l’immensité se regardent.

Ils se connaissent; l’astre envoie au feu des bois
Toute l’énormité de l’abîme à la fois,
Les baisers de l’azur superbe,
Et l’éblouissement des visions d’Endor;
Et le doux feu de pâtre envoie à l’astre d’or
Le frémissement du brin d’herbe.

Le feu de pâtre dit: — La mère pleure, hélas!
L’enfant a froid, le père a faim, l’aïeul est las;
Tout est noir; la montée est rude;
Le pas tremble, éclairé par un tremblant flambeau;
L’homme au berceau chancelle et trébuche au tombeau.
L’étoile répond: Certitude!

De chacun d’eux s’envole un rayon fraternel,
L’un plein d’humanité, l’autre rempli de ciel;
Dieu les prend, et joint leur lumière,
Et sa main, sous qui l’âme, aigle de flamme, éclôt,
Fait du rayon d’en bas et du rayon d’en haut
Les deux ailes de la prière.

LIVRE QUATRIÈME: PAUCA MEÆ

I

PURE INNOCENCE! VERTU SAINTE!

Pure Innocence! Vertu sainte!
O les deux sommets d’ici-bas!
Où croissent, sans ombre et sans crainte,
Les deux palmes des deux combats!

Palme du combat Ignorance!
Palme du combat Vérité!
L’âme, à travers sa transparence,
Voit trembler leur double clarté.

Innocence! Vertu! sublimes
Même pour l’oeil mort du méchant!
On voit dans l’azur ces deux cimes,
L’une au levant, l’autre au couchant.

Elles guident la nef qui sombre;
L’une est phare, et l’autre est flambeau;
L’une a le berceau dans son ombre,
L’autre en son ombre a le tombeau.

C’est sous la terre infortunée
Que commence, obscure à nos yeux,
La ligne de la destinée;
Elles l’achèvent dans les cieux.

Elles montrent, malgré les voiles
Et l’ombre du fatal milieu,
Nos âmes touchant les étoiles
Et la candeur mêlée au bleu.

Elles éclairent les problèmes;
Elles disent le lendemain;
Elles sont les blancheurs suprêmes
De tout le sombre gouffre humain.

L'archange effleure de son aile
Ce faîte où Jéhovah s'assied;
Et sur cette neige éternelle
On voit l'empreinte d'un seul pied.

Cette trace qui nous enseigne,
Ce pied blanc, ce pied fait de jour,
Ce pied rose, hélas! car il saigne,
Ce pied nu, c'est le tien, amour!

Janvier 1843.

15 FÉVRIER 1843

Aime celui qui t'aime, et sois heureuse en lui.
— Adieu! — sois son trésor, ô toi qui fus le nôtre!
Va, mon enfant béni, d'une famille à l'autre.
Emporte le bonheur et laisse-nous l'ennui!

Ici, l'on te retient; là-bas, on te désire.
Fille, épouse, ange, enfant, fais ton double devoir.
Donne-nous un regret, donne-leur un espoir,
Sors avec une larme! entre avec un sourire!

Dans l'église, 15 février 1843.

TROIS ANS APRÈS

Il est temps que je me repose;
Je suis terrassé par le sort.
Ne me parlez pas d'autre chose
Que des ténèbres où l'on dort!

Que veut-on que je recommence?
Je ne demande désormais
À la création immense
Qu'un peu de silence et de paix!

Pourquoi m'appelez-vous encore?
J'ai fait ma tâche et mon devoir.
Qui travaillait avant l'aurore,
Peut s'en aller avant le soir.

À vingt ans, deuil et solitude!
Mes yeux, baissés vers le gazon,
Perdirent la douce habitude
De voir ma mère à la maison.

Elle nous quitta pour la tombe;
Et vous savez bien qu'aujourd'hui
Je cherche, en cette nuit qui tombe,
Un autre ange qui s'est enfui!

Vous savez que je désespère,
Que ma force en vain se défend,
Et que je souffre comme père,
Moi qui souffris tant comme enfant!

Mon oeuvre n'est pas terminée,
Dites-vous. Comme Adam banni,
Je regarde ma destinée,
Et je vois bien que j'ai fini.

L’humble enfant que Dieu m’a ravie
Rien qu’en m’aimant savait m’aider;
C’était le bonheur de ma vie
De voir ses yeux me regarder.

Si ce Dieu n’a pas voulu clore
L’oeuvre qu’il me fit commencer,
S’il veut que je travaille encore,
Il n’avait qu’à me la laisser!

Il n’avait qu’à me laisser vivre
Avec ma fille à mes côtés,
Dans cette extase où je m’enivre
De mystérieuses clartés!

Ces clartés, jour d’une autre sphère,
O Dieu jaloux, tu nous les vends!
Pourquoi m’as-tu pris la lumière
Que j’avais parmi les vivants?

As-tu donc pensé, fatal maître,
Qu’à force de te contempler,
Je ne voyais plus ce doux être,
Et qu’il pouvait bien s’en aller!

T’es-tu dit que l’homme, vaine ombre,
Hélas! perd son humanité
A trop voir cette splendeur sombre
Qu’on appelle la vérité?

Qu’on peut le frapper sans qu’il souffre,
Que son coeur est mort dans l’ennui,
Et qu’à force de voir le gouffre,
Il n’a plus qu’un abîme en lui?

Qu’il va, stoïque, où tu l’envoies,
Et que désormais, endurci,

N’ayant plus ici-bas de joies,
Il n’a plus de douleurs aussi?

As-tu pensé qu’une âme tendre
S’ouvre à toi pour se mieux fermer,
Et que ceux qui veulent comprendre
Finissent par ne plus aimer?

O Dieu! vraiment, as-tu pu croire
Que je préférais, sous les cieux,
L’effrayant rayon de ta gloire
Aux douces lueurs de ses yeux!

Si j’avais su tes lois moroses,
Et qu’au même esprit enchanté
Tu ne donnes point ces deux choses,
Le bonheur et la vérité,

Plutôt que de lever tes voiles,
Et de chercher, coeur triste et pur,
A te voir au fond des étoiles,
O Dieu sombre d’un monde obscur,

J’eusse aimé mieux, loin de ta face,
Suivre, heureux, un étroit chemin,
Et n’être qu’un homme qui passe
Tenant son enfant par la main!

Maintenant, je veux qu’on me laisse!
J’ai fini! le sort est vainqueur.
Que vient-on rallumer sans cesse
Dans l’ombre qui m’emplit le coeur?

Vous qui me parlez, vous me dites
Qu’il faut, rappelant ma raison,
Guider les foules décrépites
Vers les lueurs de l’horizon;

Qu’à l’heure où les peuples se lèvent
Tout penseur suit un but profond;
Qu’il se doit à tous ceux qui rêvent,
Qu’il se doit à tous ceux qui vont!

Qu’une âme, qu’un feu pur anime,
Doit hâter, avec sa clarté,
L’épanouissement sublime
De la future humanité;

Qu’il faut prendre part, coeurs fidèles,
Sans redouter les océans,
Aux fêtes des choses nouvelles,
Aux combats des esprits géants!

Vous voyez des pleurs sur ma joue,
Et vous m’abordez mécontents,
Comme par le bras on secoue
Un homme qui dort trop longtemps.

Mais songez à ce que vous faites!
Hélas! cet ange au front si beau,
Quand vous m’appelez à vos fêtes,
Peut-être a froid dans son tombeau.

Peut-être, livide et pâlie,
Dit-elle dans son lit étroit:
«Est-ce que mon père m’oublie
Et n’est plus là, que j’ai si froid?»

Quoi! lorsqu’à peine je résiste
Aux choses dont je me souviens,
Quand je suis brisé, las et triste,
Quand je l’entends qui me dit: «Viens!»

Quoi! vous voulez que je souhaite,

Moi, plié par un coup soudain,
La rumeur qui suit le poëte,
Le bruit que fait le paladin!

Vous voulez que j'aspire encore
Aux triomphes doux et dorés!
Que j'annonce aux dormeurs l'aurore!
Que je crie: «Allez! espérez!»

Vous voulez que, dans la mêlée,
Je rentre ardent parmi les forts,
Les yeux à la voûte étoilée... —
Oh! l'herbe épaisse où sont les morts!

OH! JE FUS COMME FOU DANS LE PREMIER MOMENT

Oh! je fus comme fou dans le premier moment,
Hélas! et je pleurai trois jours amèrement.
Vous tous à qui Dieu prit votre chère espérance,
Pères, mères, dont l'âme a souffert ma souffrance.
Tout ce que j'éprouvais, l'avez-vous éprouvé?
Je voulais me briser le front sur le pavé;
Puis je me révoltais, et, par moments, terrible,
Je fixais mes regards sur cette chose horrible,
Et je n'y croyais pas, et je m'écriais: Non!
— Est-ce que Dieu permet de ces malheurs sans nom
Qui font que dans le coeur le désespoir se lève? —
Il me semblait que tout n'était qu'un affreux rêve,
Qu'elle ne pouvait pas m'avoir ainsi quitté,
Que je l'entendais rire en la chambre à côté,
Que c'était impossible enfin qu'elle fût morte,

Et que j'allais la voir entrer par cette porte!

Oh! que de fois j'ai dit: Silence! elle a parlé!
Tenez! voici le bruit de sa main sur la clé!
Attendez! elle vient! laissez-moi, que j'écoute!
Car elle est quelque part dans la maison sans doute!

Jersey, Marine-Terrace, 4 septembre 1852.

V

ELLE AVAIT PRIS CE PLI DANS SON AGE ENFANTIN

Elle avait pris ce pli dans son âge enfantin
De venir dans ma chambre un peu chaque matin
Je l'attendais ainsi qu'un rayon qu'on espère;
Elle entrait et disait: «Bonjour, mon petit père;»
Prenait ma plume, ouvrait mes livres, s'asseyait
Sur mon lit, dérangeait mes papiers, et riait,
Puis soudain s'en allait comme un oiseau qui passe.
Alors, je reprenais, la tête un peu moins lasse,
Mon oeuvre interrompue, et, tout en écrivant,
Parmi mes manuscrits je rencontrais souvent
Quelque arabesque folle et qu'elle avait tracée,
Et mainte page blanche entre ses mains froissée
Où, je ne sais comment, venaient mes plus doux vers.
Elle aimait Dieu, les fleurs, les astres, les prés verts,
Et c'était un esprit avant d'être une femme.
Son regard reflétait la clarté de son âme.
Elle me consultait sur tout à tous moments.
Oh! que de soirs d'hiver radieux et charmants,
Passés à raisonner langue, histoire et grammaire,
Mes quatre enfants groupés sur mes genoux, leur mère
Tout près, quelques amis causant au coin du feu!
J'appelais cette vie être content de peu!

Et dire qu'elle est morte! hélas! que Dieu m'assiste!
Je n'étais jamais gai quand je la sentais triste;
J'étais morne au milieu du bal le plus joyeux
Si j'avais, en partant, vu quelque ombre en ses yeux.

Novembre 1846, jour des morts.

QUAND NOUS HABITIONS TOUS ENSEMBLE

Quand nous habitions tous ensemble
Sur nos collines d'autrefois,
Où l'eau court, où le buisson tremble,
Dans la maison qui touche aux bois,

Elle avait dix ans, et moi trente;
J'étais pour elle l'univers.
Oh! comme l'herbe est odorante
Sous les arbres profonds et verts!

Elle faisait mon sort prospère,
Mon travail léger, mon ciel bleu.
Lorsqu'elle me disait: Mon père,
Tout mon coeur s'écriait: Mon Dieu!

A travers mes songes sans nombre,
J'écoutais son parler joyeux,
Et mon front s'éclairait dans l'ombre
A la lumière de ses yeux.

Elle avait l'air d'une princesse
Quand je la tenais par la main;
Elle cherchait des fleurs sans cesse
Et des pauvres dans le chemin.

Elle donnait comme on dérobe,

En se cachant aux yeux de tous.
Oh! la belle petite robe
Qu’elle avait, vous rappelez-vous?

Le soir, auprès de ma bougie,
Elle jasait à petit bruit,
Tandis qu’à la vitre rougie
Heurtaient les papillons de nuit.

Les anges se miraient en elle.
Que son bonjour était charmant!
Le ciel mettait dans sa prunelle
Ce regard qui jamais ne ment.

Oh! je l’avais, si jeune encore,
Vue apparaître en mon destin!
C’était l’enfant de mon aurore,
Et mon étoile du matin!

Quand la lune claire et sereine
Brillait aux cieux, dans ces beaux mois,
Comme nous allions dans la plaine!
Comme nous courions dans les bois!

Puis, vers la lumière isolée
Étoilant le logis obscur,
Nous revenions par la vallée
En tournant le coin du vieux mur;

Nous revenions, coeurs pleins de flamme,
En parlant des splendeurs du ciel.
Je composais cette jeune âme
Comme l’abeille fait son miel.

Doux ange aux candides pensées,
Elle était gaie en arrivant... —
Toutes ces choses sont passées

Comme l’ombre et comme le vent!

Villequier, 4 septembre 1844.

VII

ELLE ETAIT PALE, ET POURTANT ROSE,

Elle était pâle, et pourtant rose,
Petite avec de grands cheveux.
Elle disait souvent: Je n’ose,
Et ne disait jamais: Je veux.

Le soir, elle prenait ma Bible
Pour y faire épeler sa soeur,
Et, comme une lampe paisible,
Elle éclairait ce jeune coeur.

Sur le saint livre que j’admire,
Leurs yeux purs venaient se fixer;
Livre où l’une apprenait à lire,
Où l’autre apprenait à penser!

Sur l’enfant, qui n’eût pas lu seule,
Elle penchait son front charmant,
Et l’on aurait dit une aïeule
Tant elle parlait doucement!

Elle lui disait: «Sois bien sage!»
Sans jamais nommer le démon;
Leurs mains erraient de page en page
Sur Moïse et sur Salomon,

Sur Cyrus qui vint de la Perse,
Sur Moloch et Leviathan,
Sur l’enfer que Jésus traverse,
Sur l’éden où rampe Satan!

Moi, j’écoutais... — O joie immense
De voir la soeur près de la soeur!
Mes yeux s’enivraient en silence
De cette ineffable douceur.

Et dans la chambre humble et déserte
Où nous sentions, cachés tous trois,
Entrer par la fenêtre ouverte
Les souffles des nuits et des bois,

Tandis que, dans le texte auguste,
Leurs coeurs, lisant avec ferveur,
Puisaient le beau, le vrai, le juste,
Il me semblait, à moi, rêveur,

Entendre chanter des louanges
Autour de nous, comme au saint lieu,
Et voir sous les doigts de ces anges
Tressaillir le livre de Dieu!

A QUI DONC SOMMES-NOUS? QUI NOUS A? QUI NOUS MENE?

A qui donc sommes-nous? Qui nous a? qui nous mène?
Vautour fatalité, tiens-tu la race humaine?
Oh! parlez, cieux vermeils,
L’âme sans fond tient-elle aux étoiles sans nombre?
Chaque rayon d’en haut est-il un fil de l’ombre
Liant l’homme aux soleils?

Est-ce qu’en nos esprits, que l’ombre a pour repaires,

Nous allons voir rentrer les songes de nos pères?
Destin, lugubre assaut!
O vivants, serions-nous l’objet d’une dispute?
L’un veut-il notre gloire, et l’autre notre chute?
Combien sont-ils là-haut?

Jadis, au fond du ciel, aux yeux du mage sombre,
Deux joueurs effrayants apparaissaient dans l’ombre.
Qui craindre? qui prier?
Les Manès frissonnants, les pâles Zoroastres
Voyaient deux grandes mains qui déplaçaient les astres
Sur le noir échiquier.

Songe horrible! le bien, le mal, de cette voûte
Pendent-ils sur nos fronts? Dieu, tire-moi du doute
O sphinx, dis-moi le mot!
Cet affreux rêve pèse à nos yeux qui sommeillent,
Noirs vivants! heureux ceux qui tout à coup s’éveillent
Et meurent en sursaut!

Villequier, 4 septembre 1845.

IX

O SOUVENIRS! PRINTEMPS! AURORE!

O souvenirs! printemps! aurore!
Doux rayon triste et réchauffant!
— Lorsqu’elle était petite encore,
Que sa soeur était tout enfant... —

Connaissez-vous sur la colline
Qui joint Montlignon à Saint-Leu,
Une terrasse qui s’incline
Entre un bois sombre et le ciel bleu?

C’est là que nous vivions. — Pénètre,

Mon coeur, dans ce passé charmant! —
Je l’entendais sous ma fenêtre
Jouer le matin doucement.

Elle courait dans la rosée,
Sans bruit, de peur de m’éveiller;
Moi, je n’ouvrais pas ma croisée,
De peur de la faire envoler.

Ses frères riaient... — Aube pure!
Tout chantait sous ces frais berceaux,
Ma famille avec la nature,
Mes enfants avec les oiseaux! —

Je toussais, on devenait brave;
Elle montait à petits pas,
Et me disait d’un air très-grave:
«J’ai laissé les enfants en bas.»

Qu’elle fût bien ou mal coiffée,
Que mon coeur fût triste ou joyeux,
Je l’admirais. C’était ma fée,
Et le doux astre de mes yeux!

Nous jouions toute la journée.
O jeux charmants! chers entretiens!
Le soir, comme elle était l’aînée,
Elle me disait: «Père, viens!

«Nous allons t’apporter ta chaise,
Conte-nous une histoire, dis!» —
Et je voyais rayonner d’aise
Tous ces regards du paradis.

Alors, prodiguant les carnages,
J’inventais un conte profond
Dont je trouvais les personnages

Parmi les ombres du plafond.

Toujours, ces quatre douces têtes
Riaient, comme à cet âge on rit,
De voir d’affreux géants très-bêtes
Vaincus par des nains pleins d’esprit.

J’étais l’Arioste et l’Homère
D’un poëme éclos d’un seul jet;
Pendant que je parlais, leur mère
Les regardait rire, et songeait.

Leur aïeul, qui lisait dans l’ombre,
Sur eux parfois levait les yeux,
Et, moi, par la fenêtre sombre
J’entrevoyais un coin des cieux!

Villequier, 4 septembre 1846.

PENDANT QUE LE MARIN, QUI CALCULE ET QUI DOUTE

Pendant que le marin, qui calcule et qui doute,
Demande son chemin aux constellations;
Pendant que le berger, l’oeil plein de visions,
Cherche au milieu des bois son étoile et sa route;
Pendant que l’astronome, inondé de rayons,

Pèse un globe à travers des millions de lieues,
Moi, je cherche autre chose en ce ciel vaste et pur.
Mais que ce saphir sombre est un abîme obscur!
On ne peut distinguer, la nuit, les robes bleues
Des anges frissonnants qui glissent dans l’azur.

ON VIT, ON PARLE, ON A LE CIEL ET LES NUAGES

On vit, on parle, on a le ciel et les nuages
Sur la tête; on se plaît aux livres des vieux sages;
On lit Virgile et Dante; on va joyeusement
En voiture publique à quelque endroit charmant,
En riant aux éclats de l’auberge et du gîte;
Le regard d’une femme en passant vous agite;
On aime, on est aimé, bonheur qui manque aux rois!
On écoute le chant des oiseaux dans les bois
Le matin, on s’éveille, et toute une famille
Vous embrasse, une mère, une soeur, une fille!

On déjeune en lisant son journal. Tout le jour
On mêle à sa pensée espoir, travail, amour;
La vie arrive avec ses passions troublées;
On jette sa parole aux sombres assemblées;
Devant le but qu’on veut et le sort qui vous prend,
On se sent faible et fort, on est petit et grand;
On est flot dans la foule, âme dans la tempête;
Tout vient et passe; on est en deuil, on est en fête;
On arrive, on recule, on lutte avec effort... —
Puis, le vaste et profond silence de la mort!

A QUOI SONGEAIENT

LES DEUX CAVALIERS DANS LA FORÊT

La nuit était fort noire et la forêt très-sombre.
Hermann à mes côtés me paraissait une ombre.
Nos chevaux galopaient. A la garde de Dieu!
Les nuages du ciel ressemblaient à des marbres.
Les étoiles volaient dans les branches des arbres
Comme un essaim d'oiseaux de feu.

Je suis plein de regrets. Brisé par la souffrance,
L'esprit profond d'Hermann est vide d'espérance.
Je suis plein de regrets. O mes amours, dormez!
Or, tout en traversant ces solitudes vertes,
Hermann me dit: «Je songe aux tombes entr'ouvertes;»
Et je lui dis: «Je pense aux tombeaux refermés.»

Lui regarde eu avant: je regarde en arrière,
Nos chevaux galopaient à travers la clairière;
Le vent nous apportait de lointains angelus;
dit: «Je songe à ceux que l'existence afflige,
A ceux qui sont, à ceux qui vivent. — Moi,» lui dis-je,
«Je pense à ceux qui ne sont plus!»

Les fontaines chantaient. Que disaient les fontaines?
Les chênes murmuraient. Que murmuraient les chênes?
Les buissons chuchotaient comme d'anciens amis.
Hermann me dit: «Jamais les vivants ne sommeillent.
En ce moment, des yeux pleurent, d'autres yeux veillent.»
Et je lui dis: «Hélas! d'autres sont endormis!»

Hermann reprit alors: «Le malheur, c'est la vie.
Les morts ne souffrent plus. Ils sont heureux! j'envie
Leur fosse où l'herbe pousse, où s'effeuillent les bois.
«Car la nuit les caresse avec ses douces flammes;
Car le ciel rayonnant calme toutes les âmes
Dans tous les tombeaux à la fois!»

Et je lui dis: «Tais-toi! respect au noir mystère!
Les morts gisent couchés sous nos pieds dans la terre.

Les morts, ce sont les coeurs qui t'aimaient autrefois
C'est ton ange expiré! c'est ton père et ta mère!
Ne les attristons point par l'ironie amère.
Comme à travers un rêve ils entendent nos voix.»

Octobre 1853.

XIII

VENI, VIDI, VIXI

J'ai bien assez vécu, puisque dans mes douleurs
Je marche, sans trouver de bras qui me secourent,
Puisque je ris à peine aux enfants qui m'entourent,
Puisque je ne suis plus réjoui par les fleurs;

Puisqu'au printemps, quand Dieu met la nature en fête,
J'assiste, esprit sans joie, à ce splendide amour;
Puisque je suis à l'heure où l'homme fuit le jour,
Hélas! et sent de tout la tristesse secrète;

Puisque l'espoir serein dans mon âme est vaincu;
Puisqu'en cette saison des parfums et des roses,
O ma fille! j'aspire à l'ombre où tu reposes,
Puisque mon coeur est mort, j'ai bien assez vécu.

Je n'ai pas refusé ma tâche sur la terre.
Mon sillon? Le voilà. Ma gerbe? La voici.
J'ai vécu souriant, toujours plus adouci,
Debout, mais incliné du côté du mystère.

J'ai fait ce que j'ai pu; j'ai servi, j'ai veillé,
Et j'ai vu bien souvent qu'on riait de ma peine.
Je me suis étonné d'être un objet de haine,
Ayant beaucoup souffert et beaucoup travaillé.

Dans ce bagne terrestre où ne s'ouvre aucune aile,

Sans me plaindre, saignant, et tombant sur les mains,
Morne, épuisé, raillé par les forçats humains,
J'ai porté mon chaînon de la chaîne éternelle.

Maintenant, mon regard ne s'ouvre qu'à demi;
Je ne me tourne plus même quand on me nomme;
Je suis plein de stupeur et d'ennui, comme un homme
Qui se lève avant l'aube et qui n'a pas dormi.

Je ne daigne plus même, en ma sombre paresse,
Répondre à l'envieux dont la bouche me nuit.
O Seigneur! ouvrez-moi les portes de la nuit
Afin que je m'en aille et que je disparaisse!

Avril 1848.

DEMAIN, DES L'AUBE, A L'HEURE OU BLANCHIT LA CAMPAGNE

Demain, dès l'aube, à l'heure où blanchit la campagne,
Je partirai. Vois-tu, je sais que tu m'attends.
J'irai par la forêt, j'irai par la montagne.
Je ne puis demeurer loin de toi plus longtemps.

Je marcherai les yeux fixés sur mes pensées,
Sans rien voir au dehors, sans entendre aucun bruit,
Seul, inconnu, le dos courbé, les mains croisées,
Triste, et le jour pour moi sera comme la nuit.

Je ne regarderai ni l'or du soir qui tombe,
Ni les voiles au loin descendant vers Harfleur,
Et, quand j'arriverai, je mettrai sur ta tombe
Un bouquet de houx vert et de bruyère en fleur.

A VILLEQUIER

Maintenant que Paris, ses pavés et ses marbres,
Et sa brume et ses toits sont bien loin de mes yeux;
Maintenant que je suis sous les branches des arbres,
Et que je puis songer à la beauté des cieux;

Maintenant que du deuil qui m'a fait l'âme obscure
Je sors, pâle et vainqueur,
Et que je sens la paix de la grande nature
Qui m'entre dans le coeur;

Maintenant que je puis, assis au bord des ondes,
Ému par ce superbe et tranquille horizon,
Examiner en moi les vérités profondes
Et regarder les fleurs qui sont dans le gazon;

Maintenant, ô mon Dieu! que j'ai ce calme sombre
De pouvoir désormais
Voir de mes yeux la pierre où je sais que dans l'ombre
Elle dort pour jamais;

Maintenant qu'attendri par ces divins spectacles,
Plaines, forêts, rochers, vallons, fleuve argenté,
Voyant ma petitesse et voyant vos miracles,
Je reprends ma raison devant l'immensité;

Je viens à vous, Seigneur, père auquel il faut croire;
Je vous porte, apaisé,
Les morceaux de ce coeur tout plein de votre gloire
Que vous avez brisé;

Je viens à vous, Seigneur! confessant que vous êtes

Bon, clément, indulgent et doux, ô Dieu vivant!
Je conviens que vous seul savez ce que vous faites,
Et que l’homme n’est rien qu’un jonc qui tremble au vent;

Je dis que le tombeau qui sur les morts se ferme
Ouvre le firmament;
Et que ce qu’ici-bas nous prenons pour le terme
Est le commencement;

Je conviens à genoux que vous seul, père auguste,
Possédez l’infini, le réel, l’absolu;
Je conviens qu’il est bon, je conviens qu’il est juste
Que mon coeur ait saigné, puisque Dieu l’a voulu!

Je ne résiste plus à tout ce qui m’arrive
Par votre volonté.
L’âme de deuils en deuils, l’homme de rive en rive,
Roule à l’éternité.

Nous ne voyons jamais qu’un seul côté des choses;
L’autre plonge en la nuit d’un mystère effrayant.
L’homme subit le joug sans connaître les causes.
Tout ce qu’il voit est court, inutile et fuyant.

Vous faites revenir toujours la solitude
Autour de tous ses pas.
Vous n’avez pas voulu qu’il eût la certitude
Ni la joie ici-bas!

Dès qu’il possède un bien, le sort le lui retire.
Rien ne lui fut donné, dans ses rapides jours,
Pour qu’il s’en puisse faire une demeure, et dire:
C’est ici ma maison, mon champ et mes amours!

Il doit voir peu de temps tout ce que ses yeux voient;
Il vieillit sans soutiens.
Puisque ces choses sont, c’est qu’il faut qu’elles soient;

J’en conviens, j’en conviens!

Le monde est sombre, ô Dieu! l’immuable harmonie
Se compose des pleurs aussi bien que des chants;
L’homme n’est qu’un atome en cette ombre infinie,
Nuit où montent les bons, où tombent les méchants.

Je sais que vous avez bien autre chose à faire
Que de nous plaindre tous,
Et qu’un enfant qui meurt, désespoir de sa mère,
Ne vous fait rien, à vous!

Je sais que le fruit tombe au vent qui le secoue;
Que l’oiseau perd sa plume et la fleur son parfum;
Que la création est une grande roue
Qui ne peut se mouvoir sans écraser quelqu’un;

Les mois, les jours, les flots des mers, les yeux qui pleurent,
Passent sous le ciel bleu;
Il faut que l’herbe pousse et que les enfants meurent;
Je le sais, ô mon Dieu!

Dans vos cieux, au delà de la sphère des nues,
Au fond de cet azur immobile et dormant,
Peut-être faites-vous des choses inconnues
Où la douleur de l’homme entre comme élément.

Peut-être est-il utile à vos desseins sans nombre
Que des êtres charmants
S’en aillent, emportés par le tourbillon sombre
Des noirs événements.

Nos destins ténébreux vont sous des lois immenses
Que rien ne déconcerte et que rien n’attendrit.
Vous ne pouvez avoir de subites démences
Qui dérangent le monde, ô Dieu, tranquille esprit!

Je vous supplie, ô Dieu! de regarder mon âme,
Et de considérer
Qu’humble comme un enfant et doux comme une femme
Je viens vous adorer!

Considérez encor que j’avais, dès l’aurore,
Travaillé, combattu, pensé, marché, lutté,
Expliquant la nature à l’homme qui l’ignore,
Éclairant toute chose avec votre clarté;

Que j’avais, affrontant la haine et la colère,
Fait ma tâche ici-bas,
Que je ne pouvais pas m’attendre à ce salaire,
Que je ne pouvais pas

Prévoir que, vous aussi, sur ma tête qui ploie,
Vous appesantiriez votre bras triomphant,
Et que, vous qui voyiez comme j’ai peu de joie,
Vous me reprendriez si vite mon enfant!

Qu’une âme ainsi frappée à se plaindre est sujette,
Que j’ai pu blasphémer,
Et vous jeter mes cris comme un enfant qui jette
Une pierre à la mer!

Considérez qu’on doute, ô mon Dieu! quand on souffre,
Que l’oeil qui pleure trop finit par s’aveugler.
Qu’un être que son deuil plonge au plus noir du gouffre,
Quand il ne vous voit plus, ne peut vous contempler,

Et qu’il ne se peut pas que l’homme, lorsqu’il sombre
Dans les afflictions,
Ait présente à l’esprit la sérénité sombre
Des constellations!

Aujourd’hui, moi qui fus faible comme une mère,
Je me courbe à vos pieds devant vos cieux ouverts.

Je me sens éclairé dans ma douleur amère
Par un meilleur regard jeté sur l'univers.

Seigneur, je reconnais que l'homme est en délire,
S'il ose murmurer;
Je cesse d'accuser, je cesse de maudire,
Mais laissez-moi pleurer!

Hélas! laissez les pleurs couler de ma paupière,
Puisque vous avez fait les hommes pour cela!
Laissez-moi me pencher sur cette froide pierre
Et dire à mon enfant: Sens-tu que je suis là?

Laissez-moi lui parler, incliné sur ses restes,
Le soir, quand tout se tait,
Comme si, dans sa nuit rouvrant ses yeux célestes,
Cet ange m'écoutait!

Hélas! vers le passé tournant un oeil d'envie,
Sans que rien ici-bas puisse m'en consoler,
Je regarde toujours ce moment de ma vie
Où je l'ai vue ouvrir son aile et s'envoler!

Je verrai cet instant jusqu'à ce que je meure,
L'instant, pleurs superflus!
Où je criai: L'enfant que j'avais tout à l'heure,
Quoi donc! je ne l'ai plus!

Ne vous irritez pas que je sois de la sorte,
O mon Dieu! cette plaie a si longtemps saigné!
L'angoisse dans mon âme est toujours la plus forte,
Et mon coeur est soumis, mais n'est pas résigné.

Ne vous irritez pas! fronts que le deuil réclame,
Mortels sujets aux pleurs,
Il nous est malaisé de retirer notre âme
De ces grandes douleurs.

Voyez-vous, nos enfants nous sont bien nécessaires,
Seigneur; quand on a vu dans sa vie, un matin,
Au milieu des ennuis, des peines, des misères,
Et de l’ombre que fait sur nous notre destin,

Apparaître un enfant, tête chère et sacrée,
Petit être joyeux,
Si beau, qu’on a cru voir s’ouvrir à son entrée
Une porte des cieux;

Quand on a vu, seize ans, de cet autre soi-même
Croître la grâce aimable et la douce raison,
Lorsqu’on a reconnu que cet enfant qu’on aime
Fait le jour dans notre âme et dans notre maison,

Que c’est la seule joie ici-bas qui persiste
De tout ce qu’on rêva,
Considérez que c’est une chose bien triste
De le voir qui s’en va!

MORS

Je vis cette faucheuse. Elle était dans son champ.
Elle allait à grands pas moissonnant et fauchant,
Noir squelette laissant passer le crépuscule.
Dans l’ombre où l’on dirait que tout tremble et recule,
L’homme suivait des yeux les lueurs de la faulx.
Et les triomphateurs sous les arcs triomphaux
Tombaient; elle changeait en désert Babylone,
Le trône en l’échafaud et l’échafaud en trône,
Les roses en fumier, les enfants en oiseaux,
L’or en cendre, et les yeux des mères en ruisseaux.

Et les femmes criaient: — Rends-nous ce petit être.
Pour le faire mourir, pourquoi l'avoir fait naître? —
Ce n'était qu'un sanglot sur terre, en haut, en bas;
Des mains aux doigts osseux sortaient des noirs grabats;
Un vent froid bruissait dans les linceuls sans nombre;
Les peuples éperdus semblaient sous la faulx sombre
Un troupeau frissonnant qui dans l'ombre s'enfuit;
Tout était sous ses pieds deuil, épouvante et nuit.
Derrière elle, le front baigné de douces flammes,
Un ange souriant portait la gerbe d'âmes.

CHARLES VACQUERIE

Il ne sera pas dit que ce jeune homme, ô deuil!
Se sera de ses mains ouvert l'affreux cercueil
Où séjourne l'ombre abhorrée,
Hélas! et qu'il aura lui-même dans la mort
De ses jours généreux, encor pleins jusqu'au bord,
Renversé la coupe dorée,

Et que sa mère, pâle et perdant la raison,
Aura vu rapporter au seuil de sa maison,
Sous un suaire aux plis funèbres,
Ce fils, naguère encor pareil au jour qui naît,
Maintenant blême et froid, tel que la mort venait
De le faire pour les ténèbres;

Il ne sera pas dit qu'il sera mort ainsi,
Qu'il aura, coeur profond et par l'amour saisi,
Donné sa vie à ma colombe,
Et qu'il l'aura suivie au lieu morne et voilé,
Sans que la voix du père à genoux ait parlé

À cette âme dans cette tombe!

En présence de tant d’amour et de vertu,
Il ne sera pas dit que je me serai tu,
Moi qu’attendent les maux sans nombre!
Que je n’aurai point mis sur sa bière un flambeau,
Et que je n’aurai pas devant son noir tombeau
Fait asseoir une strophe sombre!

N’ayant pu la sauver, il a voulu mourir.
Sois béni, toi qui, jeune, à l’âge où vient s’offrir
L’espérance joyeuse encore,
Pouvant rester, survivre, épuiser tes printemps,
Ayant devant les yeux l’azur de tes vingt ans
Et le sourire de l’aurore,

À tout ce que promet la jeunesse, aux plaisirs,
Aux nouvelles amours, aux oublieux désirs
Par qui toute peine est bannie,
À l’avenir, trésor des jours à peine éclos,
À la vie, au soleil, préféras sous les flots
L’étreinte de cette agonie!

Oh! quelle sombre joie à cet être charmant
De se voir embrassée au suprême moment,
Par ton doux désespoir fidèle!
La pauvre âme a souri dans l’angoisse, en sentant
À travers l’eau sinistre et l’effroyable instant
Que tu t’en venais avec elle!

Leurs âmes se parlaient sous les vagues rumeurs.
— Que fais-tu? disait-elle. — Et lui disait: — Tu meurs
Il faut bien aussi que je meure! —
Et, les bras enlacés, doux couple frissonnant,
Ils se sont en allés dans l’ombre; et maintenant,
On entend le fleuve qui pleure.

Puisque tu fus si grand, puisque tu fus si doux
Que de vouloir mourir, jeune homme, amant, époux,
Qu’à jamais l’aube en ta nuit brille!
Aie à jamais sur toi l’ombre de Dieu penché!
Sois béni sous la pierre où te voilà couché!
Dors, mon fils, auprès de ma fille!

Sois béni! que la brise et que l’oiseau des bois,
Passants mystérieux, de leur plus douce voix
Te parlent dans ta maison sombre!
Que la source te pleure avec sa goutte d’eau!
Que le frais liseron se glisse en ton tombeau
Comme une caresse de l’ombre!

Oh! s’immoler, sortir avec l’ange qui sort,
Suivre ce qu’on aima dans l’horreur de la mort,
Dans le sépulcre ou sur les claies,
Donner ses jours, son sang et ses illusions!... —
Jésus baise en pleurant ces saintes actions
Avec les lèvres de ses plaies.

Rien n’égale ici-bas, rien n’atteint sous les cieux
Ces héros, doucement saignants et radieux,
Amour, qui n’ont que toi pour règle;
Le génie à l’oeil fixe, au vaste élan vainqueur,
Lui-même est dépassé par ces essors du coeur;
L’ange vole plus haut que l’aigle.

Dors! — O mes douloureux et sombres bien-aimés!
Dormez le chaste hymen du sépulcre! dormez!
Dormez au bruit du flot qui gronde,
Tandis que l’homme souffre, et que le vent lointain
Chasse les noirs vivants à travers le destin,
Et les marins à travers l’onde!

Ou plutôt, car la mort n’est pas un lourd sommeil,
Envolez-vous tous deux dans l’abîme vermeil,

Dans les profonds gouffres de joie,
Où le juste qui meurt semble un soleil levant,
Où la mort au front pâle est comme un lys vivant,
Où l’ange frissonnant flamboie!

Fuyez, mes doux oiseaux! évadez-vous tous deux
Loin de notre nuit froide et loin du mal hideux!
Franchissez l’éther d’un coup d’aile!
Volez loin de ce monde, âpre hiver sans clarté,
Vers cette radieuse et bleue éternité,
Dont l’âme humaine est l’hirondelle!

O chers êtres absents, on ne vous verra plus
Marcher au vert penchant des coteaux chevelus,
Disant tout bas de douces choses!
Dans le mois des chansons, des nids et des lilas,
Vous n’irez plus semant des sourires, hélas!
Vous n’irez plus cueillant des roses!

On ne vous verra plus, dans ces sentiers joyeux,
Errer, et, comme si vous évitiez les yeux
De l’horizon vaste et superbe,
Chercher l’obscur asile et le taillis profond
Où passent des rayons qui tremblent et qui font
Des taches de soleil sur l’herbe!

Villequier, Caudebec, et tous ces frais vallons,
Ne vous entendront plus vous écrier: «Allons,
Le vent est bon, la Seine est belle!»
Comme ces lieux charmants vont être pleins d’ennui!
Les hardis goëlands ne diront plus: C’est lui!
Les fleurs ne diront plus: C’est elle!

Dieu, qui ferme la vie et rouvre l’idéal,
Fait flotter à jamais votre lit nuptial
Sous le grand dôme aux clairs pilastres;
En vous prenant la terre, il vous prit les douleurs;

Ce père souriant, pour les champs pleins de fleurs,
Vous donne les cieux remplis d’astres!

Allez des esprits purs accroître la tribu.
De cette coupe amère où vous n’avez pas bu,
Hélas! nous viderons le reste.
Pendant que nous pleurons, de sanglots abreuvés,
Vous, heureux, enivrés de vous-mêmes, vivez
Dans l’éblouissement céleste!

Vivez! aimez! ayez les bonheurs infinis.
Oh! les anges pensifs, bénissant et bénis,
Savent seuls, sous les sacrés voiles,
Ce qu’il entre d’extase, et d’ombre, et de ciel bleu,
Dans l’éternel baiser de deux âmes que Dieu
Tout à coup change en deux étoiles!

LIVRE CINQUIÈME: EN MARCHE

À AUG. V.

Et toi, son frère, sois le frère de mes fils.
Coeur fier, qui du destin relèves les défis,
Suis à côté de moi la voie inexorable.
Que ta mère au front gris soit ma soeur vénérable!
Ton frère dort couché dans le sépulcre noir;
Nous, dans la nuit du sort, dans l'ombre du devoir,
Marchons à la clarté qui sort de cette pierre.
Qu'il dorme, voyant l'aube à travers sa paupière!
Un jour, quand on lira nos temps mystérieux,
Les songeurs attendris promèneront leurs yeux
De toi, le dévouement, à lui, le sacrifice.
Nous habitons du sphinx le lugubre édifice;
Nous sommes, coeurs liés au morne piédestal,
Tous la fatale énigme et tous le mot fatal.
Ah! famille! ah! douleur! ô soeur! ô mère! ô veuve!
O sombres lieux, qu'emplit le murmure du fleuve!
Chaste tombe jumelle au pied du coteau vert!
Poëte, quand mon sort s'est brusquement ouvert,
Tu n'as pas reculé devant les noires portes,
Et, sans pâlir, avec le flambeau que tu portes,
Tes chants, ton avenir que l'absence interrompt,
Et le frémissement lumineux de ton front,
Trouvant la chute belle et le malheur propice,
Calme, tu t'es jeté dans le grand précipice!
Hélas! c'est par les deuils que nous nous enchaînons.
O frères, que vos noms soient mêlés à nos noms!
Dieu vous fait des rayons de toutes nos ténèbres.
Car vous êtes entrés sous nos voûtes funèbres;
Car vous avez été tous deux vaillants et doux;
Car vous avez tous deux, vous rapprochant de nous
À l'heure où vers nos fronts roulait le gouffre d'ombre,
Accepté notre sort dans ce qu'il a de sombre,

Et suivi, dédaignant l'abîme et le péril,
Lui, la fille au tombeau, toi, le père à l'exil!

Jersey, Marine-Terrace, 4 septembre 1852.

AU FILS D'UN POËTE

Enfant, laisse aux mers inquiètes
Le naufragé, tribun ou roi;
Laisse s'en aller les poëtes!
La poésie est près de toi.

Elle t'échauffe, elle t'inspire,
O cher enfant, doux alcyon,
Car ta mère en est le sourire,
Et ton père en est le rayon.

Les yeux en pleurs, tu me demandes
Où je vais, et pourquoi je pars.
Je n'en sais rien; les mers sont grandes;
L'exil s'ouvre de toutes parts.

Ce que Dieu nous donne, il nous l'ôte.
Adieu, patrie! adieu, Sion!
Le proscrit n'est pas même un hôte,
Enfant, c'est une vision.

Il entre, il s'assied, puis se lève,
Reprend son bâton et s'en va.
Sa vie erre de grève en grève
Sous le souffle de Jéhovah.

Il fuit sur les vagues profondes,
Sans repos, toujours en avant.
Qu'importe ce qu'en font les ondes!

Qu’importe ce qu’en fait le vent

Garde, enfant, dans ta jeune tête
Ce souvenir mystérieux,
Tu l’as vu dans une tempête
Passer comme l’éclair des deux.

Son âme aux chocs habituée
Traversait l’orage et le bruit.
D’où sortait-il? De la nuée.
Où s’enfonçait-il? Dans la nuit.

Paris, juillet 1838.

ÉCRIT EN 1846

«... Je vous ai vu enfant, monsieur, chez votre respectable mère, et nous sommes même un peu parents, je crois. J’ai applaudi à vos premières odes, la Vendée, Louis XVII... Dès 1827, dans votre ode dite À la colonne, vous désertiez les saines doctrines, vous abjuriez la légitimité; la faction libérale battait des mains à votre apostasie. J’en gémissais... Vous êtes aujourd’hui, monsieur, en démagogie pure, en plein jacobinisme. Votre discours d’anarchiste sur les affaires de Gallicie est plus digne du tréteau d’une Convention que de la tribune d’une chambre des pairs. Vous en êtes à la carmagnole... Vous vous perdez, je vous le dis. Quelle est donc votre ambition? Depuis ces beaux jours de votre adolescence monarchique, qu’avez-vous fait? où allez-vous?...»

(Le marquis du C. d’E... — Lettre à Victor Hugo, Paris, 1846.)

I

Marquis, je m’en souviens, vous veniez chez ma mère.
Vous me faisiez parfois réciter ma grammaire;
Vous m’apportiez toujours quelque bonbon exquis;
Et nous étions cousins quand on était marquis.
Vous étiez vieux, j’étais enfant; contre vos jambes
Vous me preniez, et puis, entre deux dithyrambes
En l’honneur de Coblentz et des rois, vous contiez
Quelque histoire de loups, de peuples châtiés,
D’ogres, de jacobins, authentique et formelle,
Que j’avalais avec vos bonbons, pêle-mêle,
Et que je dévorais de fort bon appétit
Quand j’étais royaliste et quand j’étais petit.

J’étais un doux enfant, le grain d’un honnête homme.
Quand, plein d’illusions, crédule, simple, en somme,
Droit et pur, mes deux yeux sur l’idéal ouverts,
Je bégayais, songeur naïf, mes premiers vers,
Marquis, vous leur trouviez un arrière-goût fauve,
Les Grâces vous ayant nourri dans leur alcôve;
Mais vous disiez: «Pas mal! bien! c’est quelqu’un qui naît!»
Et, souvenir sacré! ma mère rayonnait.

Je me rappelle encor de quel accent ma mère
Vous disait: «Bonjour.» Aube! avril! joie éphémère!
Où donc est ce sourire? où donc est cette voix?
Vous fuyez donc ainsi que les feuilles des bois,
O baisers d’une mère! aujourd’hui, mon front sombre,
Le même front, est là, pensif, avec de l’ombre,
Et les baisers de moins et les rides de plus!

Vous aviez de l’esprit, marquis. Flux et reflux,
Heur, malheur, vous avaient laissé l’âme assez nette;
Riche, pauvre, écuyer de Marie-Antoinette,
Émigré, vous aviez, dans ce temps incertain,

Bien supporté le chaud et le froid du destin.
Vous haïssiez Rousseau, mais vous aimiez Voltaire.
Pigault-Lebrun allait à votre goût austère,
Mais Diderot était digne du pilori.
Vous détestiez, c’est vrai, madame Dubarry,
Tout en divinisant Gabrielle d’Estrée.
Pas plus que Sévigné, la marquise lettrée,
Ne s’étonnait de voir, douce femme rêvant,
Blêmir au clair de lune et trembler dans le vent,
Aux arbres du chemin, parmi les feuilles jaunes,
Les paysans pendus par ce bon duc de Chaulnes,
Vous ne preniez souci des manants qu’on abat
Par la force, et du pauvre écrasé sous le bât.
Avant quatre-vingt-neuf, galant incendiaire,
Vous portiez votre épée en quart de civadière;
La poudre blanchissait votre dos de velours;
Vous marchiez sur le peuple à pas légers — et lourds.

Quoique les vieux abus n’eussent rien qui vous blesse,
Jeune, vous aviez eu, vous, toute la noblesse,
Montmorency, Choiseul, Noaille, esprits charmants,
Avec la royauté des querelles d’amants;
Brouilles, roucoulements; Bérénice avec Tite.
La Révolution vous plut toute petite;
Vous emboîtiez le pas derrière Talleyrand;
Le monstre vous sembla d’abord fort transparent,
Et vous l’aviez tenu sur les fonts de baptême.
Joyeux, vous aviez dit au nouveau-né: Je t’aime!
Ligue ou Fronde, remède au déficit, protêt,
Vous ne saviez pas trop au fond ce que c’était;
Mais vous battiez des mains gaîment, quand Lafayette
Fit à Léviathan sa première layette.
Plus tard, la peur vous prit quand surgit le flambeau.
Vous vîtes la beauté du tigre Mirabeau.
Vous nous disiez, le soir, près du feu qui pétille,
Paris de sa poitrine arrachant la Bastille,
Le faubourg Saint-Antoine accourant en sabots,

Et ce grand peuple, ainsi qu'un spectre des tombeaux,
Sortant, tout effaré, de son antique opprobre,
Et le vingt juin, le dix août, le six octobre,
Et vous nous récitiez les quatrains que Boufflers,
Mêlait en souriant à ces blêmes éclairs.

Car vous étiez de ceux qui, d'abord, ne comprirent
Ni le flot, ni la nuit, ni la France, et qui rirent;
Qui prenaient tout cela pour des jeux innocents;
Qui, dans l'amas plaintif des siècles rugissants
Et des hommes hagards, ne voyaient qu'une meute;
Qui, légers, à la foule, à la faim, à l'émeute,
Donnaient à deviner l'énigme du salon;
Et qui, quand le ciel noir s'emplissait d'aquilon,
Quand, accroupie au seuil du mystère insondable
La Révolution se dressait formidable,
Sceptiques, sans voir l'ongle et l'oeil fauve qui luit,
Distinguant mal sa face étrange dans la nuit,
Presque prêts à railler l'obscurité difforme,
Jouaient à la charade avec le sphinx énorme.

Vous nous disiez: «Quel deuil! les gueux, les mécontents,
Ont fait rage; on n'a pas su s'arrêter à temps.
Une transaction eût tout sauvé peut-être.
Ne peut-on être libre et le roi rester maître?
Le peuple conservant le trône eût été grand.»
Puis vous deveniez triste et morne; et, murmurant:
«Les plus sages n'ont pu sauver ce bon vieux trône.
Tout est mort; ces grands rois, ce Paris Babylone,
Montespan et Marly, Maintenon et Saint-Cyr!»
Vous pleuriez. — Et, grand Dieu! pouvaient-ils réussir,
Ces hommes qui voulaient, combinant vingt régimes
La loi qui nous froissa, l'abus dont nous rougîmes,
Vieux codes, vieilles moeurs, droit divin, nation,
Chausser de royauté la Révolution?
La patte du lion creva cette pantoufle!

II

Puis vous m'avez perdu de vue; un vent qui souffle
Disperse nos destins, nos jours, notre raison,
Nos coeurs, aux quatre coins du livide horizon;
Chaque homme dans sa nuit s'en va vers sa lumière.
La seconde âme en nous se greffe à la première;
Toujours la même tige avec une autre fleur.
J'ai connu le combat, le labeur, la douleur,
Les faux amis, ces noeuds qui deviennent couleuvres;
J'ai porté deuils sur deuils; j'ai mis oeuvres sur oeuvres;
Vous ayant oublié, je ne le cache pas,
Marquis; soudain j'entends dans ma maison un pas,
C'est le vôtre, et j'entends une voix, c'est la vôtre,
Qui m'appelle apostat, moi qui me crus apôtre!
Oui, c'est bien vous; ayant peur jusqu'à la fureur,
Fronsac vieux, le marquis happé par la Terreur,
Haranguant à mi-corps dans l'hydre qui l'avale.
L'âge ayant entre nous conservé l'intervalle
Oui fait que l'homme reste enfant pour le vieillard,
Ne me voyant d'ailleurs qu'à travers un brouillard,
Vous criez, l'oeil hagard et vous fâchant tout rouge:
«Ah çà! qu'est-ce que c'est que ce brigand? Il bouge!»
Et du poing, non du doigt, vous montrez vos aïeux;
Et vous me rappelez ma mère, furieux.
— Je vous baise, ô pieds froids de ma mère endormie! —
Et, vous exclamant: «Honte! anarchie! infamie!
Siècle effroyable où nul ne veut se tenir coi!»
Me demandant comment, me demandant pourquoi,
Remuant tous les morts qui gisent sous la pierre,
Citant Lambesc, Marat, Charette et Robespierre,
Vous me dites d'un ton qui n'a plus rien d'urbain:
«Ce gueux est libéral! ce monstre est jacobin!
Sa voix à des chansons de carrefour s'éraille.
Pourquoi regardes-tu par-dessus la muraille?
Où vas-tu? d'où viens-tu? qui te rend si hardi?
Depuis qu'on ne t'a vu, qu'as-tu fait?»

J’ai grandi.

Quoi! parce que je suis né dans un groupe d’hommes
Qui ne voyaient qu’enfers, Gomorrhes et Sodomes,
Hors des anciennes moeurs et des antiques fois;
Quoi! parce que ma mère, en Vendée autrefois,
Sauva dans un seul jour la vie à douze prêtres;
Parce qu’enfant sorti de l’ombre des ancêtres,
Je n’ai su tout d’abord que ce qu’ils m’ont appris,
Qu’oiseau dans le passé comme en un filet pris,
Avant de m’échapper à travers le bocage,
J’ai dû laisser pousser mes plumes dans ma cage;
Parce que j’ai pleuré, — j’en pleure encor, qui sait? —
Sur ce pauvre petit nommé Louis Dix-Sept;
Parce qu’adolescent, âme à faux jour guidée,
J’ai trop peu vu la France et trop vu la Vendée;
Parce que j’ai loué l’héroïsme breton,
Chouan et non Marceau, Stofflet et non Danton,
Que les grands paysans m’ont caché les grands hommes,
Et que j’ai fort mal lu, d’abord, l’ère où nous sommes,
Parce que j’ai vagi des chants de royauté,
Suis-je à toujours rivé dans l’imbécillité?
Dois-je crier: Arrière! à mon siècle; — à l’idée:
Non! — à la vérité: Va-t’en, dévergondée! —
L’arbre doit-il pour moi n’être qu’un goupillon?
Au sein de la nature, immense tourbillon,
Dois-je vivre, portant l’ignorance en écharpe,
Cloîtré dans Loriquet et muré dans Laharpe!
Dois-je exister sans être et regarder sans voir?
Et faut-il qu’à jamais pour moi, quand vient le soir,
Au lieu de s’étoiler le ciel se fleurdelise?

III

Car le roi masque Dieu même dans son église,
L’azur.

IV

Écoutez-moi. J’ai vécu; j’ai songé.
La vie en larmes m’a doucement corrigé.
Vous teniez mon berceau dans vos mains, et vous fîtes
Ma pensée et ma tête en vos rêves confites.
Hélas! j’étais la roue et vous étiez l’essieu.
Sur la vérité sainte, et la justice, et Dieu,
Sur toutes les clartés que la raison nous donne,
Par vous, par vos pareils, — et je vous le pardonne,
Marquis, — j’avais été tout de travers placé.
J’étais en porte-à-faux, je me suis redressé.
La pensée est le droit sévère de la vie.
Dieu prend par la main l’homme enfant, et le convie
A la classe qu’au fond des champs, au sein des bois,
Il fait dans l’ombre à tous les êtres à la fois.
J’ai pensé. J’ai rêvé près des flots, dans les herbes,
Et les premiers courroux de mes odes imberbes
Sont d’eux-mêmes en marchant tombés derrière moi.
La nature devient ma joie et mon effroi;
Oui, dans le même temps où vous faussiez ma lyre,
Marquis, je m’échappais et j’apprenais à lire
Dans cet hiéroglyphe énorme: l’univers.
Oui, j’allais feuilleter les champs tout grands ouverts;
Tout enfant, j’essayais d’épeler cette bible
Où se mêle, éperdu, le charmant au terrible:
Livre écrit dans l’azur, sur l’onde et le chemin,
Avec la fleur, le vent, l’étoile; et qu’en sa main
Tient la création au regard de statue;
Prodigieux poëme où la foudre accentue
La nuit, où l’océan souligne l’infini.
Aux champs, entre les bras du grand chêne béni,
J’étais plus fort, j’étais plus doux, j’étais plus libre;
Je me mettais avec le monde en équilibre;
Je tâchais de savoir, tremblant, pâle, ébloui,
Si c’est Non que dit l’ombre à l’astre qui dit Oui;

Je cherchais à saisir le sens des phrases sombres
Qu’écrivaient sous mes yeux les formes et les nombres;
J’ai vu partout grandeur, vie, amour, liberté;
Et j’ai dit: — Texte: Dieu; contre-sens: royauté. —

La nature est un drame avec des personnages:
J’y vivais: j’écoutais, comme des témoignages,
L’oiseau, le lys, l’eau vive et la nuit qui tombait.
Puis je me suis penché sur l’homme, autre alphabet.

Le mal m’est apparu, puissant, joyeux, robuste,
Triomphant; je n’avais qu’une soif: être juste;
Comme on arrête un gueux volant sur le chemin,
Justicier indigné, j’ai pris le coeur humain
Au collet, et j’ai dit: Pourquoi le fiel, l’envie,
La haine? Et j’ai vidé les poches de la vie.
Je n’ai trouvé dedans que deuil, misère, ennui.
J’ai vu le loup mangeant l’agneau, dire: Il m’a nui!
Le vrai boitant; l’erreur haute de cent coudées;
Tous les cailloux jetés à toutes les idées.
Hélas! j’ai vu la nuit reine, et, de fers chargés,
Christ, Socrate, Jean Huss, Colomb; les préjugés
Sont pareils aux buissons que dans la solitude
On brise pour passer: toute la multitude
Se redresse et vous mord pendant qu’on en courbe un.
Ah! malheur à l’apôtre et malheur au tribun!
On avait eu bien soin de me cacher l’histoire;
J’ai lu; j’ai comparé l’aube avec la nuit noire
Et les quatre-vingt-treize aux Saint-Barthélemy;
Car ce quatre-vingt-treize où vous avez frémi,
Qui dut être, et que rien ne peut plus faire éclore,
C’est la lueur de sang qui se mêle à l’aurore.
Les Révolutions, qui viennent tout venger,
Font un bien éternel dans leur mal passager.
Les Révolutions ne sont que la formule
De l’horreur qui, pendant vingt règnes s’accumule.
Quand la souffrance a pris de lugubres ampleurs;

Quand les maîtres longtemps ont fait, sur l’homme en pleurs
Tourner le Bas-Empire avec le Moyen Age,
Du midi dans le nord formidable engrenage;
Quand l’histoire n’est plus qu’un tas noir de tombeaux,
De Crécys, de Rosbachs, becquetés des corbeaux;
Quand le pied des méchants règne et courbe la tête
Du pauvre partageant dans l’auge avec la bête;
Lorsqu’on voit aux deux bouts de l’affreuse Babel
Louis Onze et Tristan, Louis Quinze et Lebel;
Quand le harem est prince et l’échafaud ministre;
Quand toute chair gémit; quand la lune sinistre
Trouve qu’assez longtemps l’herbe humaine a fléchi,
Et qu’assez d’ossements aux gibets ont blanchi;
Quand le sang de Jésus tombe en vain, goutte à goutte,
Depuis dix-huit cents ans, dans l’ombre qui l’écoute;
Quand l’ignorance a même aveuglé l’avenir;
Quand, ne pouvant plus rien saisir et rien tenir,
L’espérance n’est plus que le tronçon de l’homme;
Quand partout le supplice à la fois se consomme,
Quand la guerre est partout, quand la haine est partout,
Alors, subitement, un jour, debout, debout!
Les réclamations de l’ombre misérable,
La géante douleur, spectre incommensurable,
Sortent du gouffre; un cri s’étend sur les hauteurs;
Les mondes sociaux heurtent leurs équateurs;
Tout le bagne effrayant des parias se lève;
Et l’on entend sonner les fouets, les fers, le glaive,
Le meurtre, le sanglot, la faim, le hurlement,
Tout le bruit du passé, dans ce déchaînement!
Dieu dit au peuple: Va! l’ardent tocsin qui râle,
Secoue avec sa corde obscure et sépulcrale
L’église et son clocher, le Louvre et son beffroi;
Luther brise le pape et Mirabeau le roi!
Tout est dit. C’est ainsi que les vieux mondes croulent.
Oh! l’heure vient toujours! des flots sourds au loin roulent.
À travers les rumeurs, les cadavres, les deuils,
L’écume, et les sommets qui deviennent écueils,

Les siècles devant eux poussent, désespérées,
Les révolutions, monstrueuses marées,
Océans faits des pleurs de tout le genre humain.

V

Ce sont les rois qui font les gouffres; mais la main
Qui sema ne veut pas accepter la récolte,
Le fer dit que le sang qui jaillit, se révolte.

Voilà ce que m’apprit l’histoire. Oui, c’est cruel,
Ma raison a tué mon royalisme en duel.
Me voici jacobin. Que veut-on que j’y fasse?
Le revers du louis dont vous aimez la face,
M’a fait peur. En allant librement devant moi,
En marchant, je le sais, j’afflige votre foi,
Votre religion, votre cause éternelle,
Vos dogmes, vos aïeux, vos dieux, votre flanelle,
Et dans vos bons vieux os, faits d’immobilité,
Le rhumatisme antique appelé royauté.

Je n’y puis rien. Malgré menins et majordomes,
Je ne crois plus aux rois, propriétaires d’hommes;
N’y croyant plus, je fais mon devoir, je le dis.
Marc-Aurèle écrivait: «Je me trompai jadis;
Mais je ne laisse pas, allant au juste, au sage,
Mes erreurs d’autrefois me barrer le passage.»
Je ne suis qu’un atome et je fais comme lui;
Marquis, depuis vingt ans, je n’ai, comme aujourd’hui,
Qu’une idée en l’esprit: servir la cause humaine.
La vie est une cour d’assises; on amène
Les faibles à la barre accouplés aux pervers.
J’ai, dans le livre, avec le drame, en prose, en vers
Plaidé pour les petits et pour les misérables,
Suppliant les heureux et les inexorables;
J’ai réhabilité le bouffon, l’histrion,
Tous les damnés humains, Triboulet, Marion,

Le laquais, le forçat et la prostituée;
Et j'ai collé ma bouche à toute âme tuée,
Comme font les enfants, anges aux cheveux d'or,
Sur la mouche qui meurt, pour qu'elle vole encor.
Je me suis incliné sur tout ce qui chancelle,
Tendre, et j'ai demandé la grâce universelle;
Et, comme j'irritais beaucoup de gens ainsi,
Tandis qu'en bas peut-être on me disait: Merci,
J'ai recueilli souvent, passant dans les nuées,
L'applaudissement fauve et sombre des huées;
J'ai réclamé des droits pour la femme et l'enfant;
J'ai tâché d'éclairer l'homme en le réchauffant;
J'allais criant: Science! écriture! parole!
Je voulais résorber le bagne par l'école;
Les coupables pour moi n'étaient que des témoins.
Rêvant tous les progrès, je voyais luire moins
Que le front de Paris la tiare de Rome.
J'ai vu l'esprit humain libre, et le coeur de l'homme
Esclave; et j'ai voulu l'affranchir à son tour,
Et j'ai tâché de mettre en liberté l'amour.
Enfin, j'ai fait la guerre à la Grève homicide,
J'ai combattu la mort, comme l'antique Alcide;
Et me voilà; marchant toujours, ayant conquis,
Perdu, lutté, souffert. — Encore un mot, marquis,
Puisque nous sommes là causant entre deux portes.
On peut être appelé renégat de deux sortes:
En se faisant païen, en se faisant chrétien.
L'erreur est d'un aimable et galant entretien.
Qu'on la quitte, elle met les deux poings sur sa hanche.
La vérité, si douce aux bons, mais rude et franche,
Quand pour l'or, le pouvoir, la pourpre qu'on revêt,
On la trahit, devient le spectre du chevet.
L'une est la harengère, et l'autre est l'euménide.
Et ne nous fâchons point. Bonjour, Épiménide.

Le passé ne veut pas s'en aller. Il revient
Sans cesse sur ses pas, reveut, reprend, retient,

Use à tout ressaisir ses ongles noirs; fait rage;
Il gonfle son vieux flot, souffle son vieil orage,
Vomit sa vieille nuit, crie: À bas! crie: À mort!
Pleure, tonne, tempête, éclate, hurle, mord.
L’avenir souriant lui dit: Passe, bonhomme.

L’immense renégat d’Hier, marquis, se nomme
Demain; mai tourne bride et plante là l’hiver;
Qu’est-ce qu’un papillon? le déserteur du ver;
Falstaff se range? il est l’apostat des ribotes;
Mes pieds, ces renégats, quittent mes vieilles bottes;
Ah! le doux renégat des haines, c’est l’amour.
À l’heure où, débordant d’incendie et de jour,
Splendide, il s’évada de leurs cachots funèbres,
Le soleil frémissant renia les ténèbres.

O marquis peu semblable aux anciens barons loups,
O Français renégat du Celte, embrassons-nous.
Vous voyez bien, marquis, que vous aviez trop d’ire.

VI

Rien, au fond de mon coeur, puisqu’il faut le redire,
Non, rien n’a varié; je suis toujours celui
Qui va droit au devoir, dès que l’honnête a lui,
Qui, comme Job, frissonne aux vents, fragile arbuste,
Mais veut le bien, le vrai, le beau, le grand, le juste.
Je suis cet homme-là, je suis cet enfant-là.
Seulement, un matin, mon esprit s’envola,
Je vis l’espace large et pur qui nous réclame;
L’horizon a changé, marquis, mais non pas l’âme.
Rien au dedans de moi, mais tout autour de moi.
L’histoire m’apparut, et je compris la loi
Des générations, cherchant Dieu, portant l’arche,
Et montant l’escalier immense marche à marche.
Je restai le même oeil, voyant un autre ciel.
Est-ce ma faute, à moi, si l’azur éternel

Est plus grand et plus bleu qu'un plafond de Versailles?
Est-ce ma faute, à moi, mon Dieu, si tu tressailles
Dans mon coeur frémissant, à ce cri: Liberté!
L'oeil de cet homme a plus d'aurore et de clarté,
Tant pis! prenez-vous-en à l'aube solennelle.
C'est la faute au soleil et non à la prunelle.
Vous dites: Où vas-tu? Je l'ignore; et j'y vais.
Quand le chemin est droit, jamais il n'est mauvais.
J'ai devant moi le jour et j'ai la nuit derrière;
Et cela me suffit; je brise la barrière.
Je vois, et rien de plus; je crois, et rien de moins.
Mon avenir à moi n'est pas un de mes soins.
Les hommes du passé, les combattants de l'ombre,
M'assaillent; je tiens tête, et sans compter leur nombre,
À ce choc inégal et parfois hasardeux.
Mais Longwood et Goritz [1] m'en sont témoins tous deux,
Jamais je n'outrageai la proscription sainte.
Le malheur, c'est la nuit; dans cette auguste enceinte,
Les hommes et les cieux paraissent étoilés.
Les derniers rois l'ont su quand ils s'en sont allés.
Jamais je ne refuse, alors que le soir tombe,
Mes larmes à l'exil, mes genoux à la tombe;
J'ai toujours consolé qui s'est évanoui;
Et, dans leurs noirs cercueils, leur tête me dit oui.
Ma mère aussi le sait! et de plus, avec joie,
Elle sait les devoirs nouveaux que Dieu m'envoie;
Car, étant dans la fosse, elle aussi voit le vrai.
Oui, l'homme sur la terre est un ange à l'essai;
Aimons! servons! aidons! luttons! souffrons! Ma mère
Sait qu'à présent je vis hors de toute chimère;
Elle sait que mes yeux au progrès sont ouverts,
Que j'attends les périls, l'épreuve, les revers,
Que je suis toujours prêt, et que je hâte l'heure
De ce grand lendemain: l'humanité meilleure!
Qu'heureux, triste, applaudi, chassé, vaincu, vainqueur,
Rien de ce but profond ne distraira mon coeur,
Ma volonté, mes pas, mes cris, mes voeux, ma flamme!

O saint tombeau, tu vois dans le fond de mon âme!

Oh! jamais, quel que soit le sort, le deuil, l’affront,
La conscience en moi ne baissera le front;
Elle marche, sereine, indestructible et fière;
Car j’aperçois toujours, conseil lointain, lumière,
À travers mon destin, quel que soit le moment,
Quel que soit le désastre ou l’éblouissement,
Dans le bruit, dans le vent orageux qui m’emporte,
Dans l’aube, dans la nuit, l’oeil de ma mère morte!

Paris, juin 1846.

ÉCRIT EN 1855

J’ajoute un post-scriptum après neuf ans. J’écoute:
Êtes-vous toujours là? Vous êtes mort sans doute,
Marquis; mais d’où je suis on peut parler aux morts.
Ah! votre cercueil s’ouvre: — Où donc es-tu? — Dehors.
Comme vous. — Es-tu mort? — Presque. J’habite l’ombre;
Je suis sur un rocher qu’environne l’eau sombre,
Écueil rongé des flots, de ténèbres chargé,
Où s’assied, ruisselant, le blême naufragé.
— Eh bien, me dites-vous, après? — La solitude
Autour de moi toujours a la même attitude;
Je ne vois que l’abîme, et la mer, et les cieux,
Et les nuages noirs qui vont silencieux;
Mon toit, la nuit, frissonne, et l’ouragan le mêle
Aux souffles effrénés de l’onde et de la grêle;
Quelqu’un semble clouer un crêpe à l’horizon;
L’insulte bat de loin le seuil de ma maison;
Le roc croule sous moi dès que mon pied s’y pose;
Le vent semble avoir peur de m’approcher, et n’ose
Me dire qu’en baissant la voix et qu’à demi
L’adieu mystérieux que me jette un ami.
La rumeur des vivants s’éteint diminuée.

Tout ce que j’ai rêvé s’est envolé, nuée!
Sur mes jours devenus fantômes, pâle et seul,
Je regarde tomber l’infini, ce linceul. —
Et vous dites: — Après? — Sous un mont qui surplombe,
Près des flots, j’ai marqué la place de ma tombe;
Ici, le bruit du gouffre est tout ce qu’on entend;
Tout est horreur et nuit. — Après? — Je suis content.

Jersey, janvier 1855.

La source tombait du rocher
Goutte à goutte à la mer affreuse.
L’Océan, fatal au nocher,
Lui dit: «Que me veux-tu, pleureuse?

«Je suis la tempête et l’effroi;
Je finis où le ciel commence.
Est-ce que j’ai besoin de toi,
Petite, moi qui suis l’immense?»

La source dit au gouffre amer:
«Je te donne, sans bruit ni gloire,
Ce qui te manque, ô vaste mer!
Une goutte d’eau qu’on peut boire.»

À MADEMOISELLE LOUISE B.

Ô vous l’âme profonde! ô vous la sainte lyre!
Vous souvient-il des temps d’extase et de délire,
Et des jeux triomphants,
Et du soir qui tombait des collines prochaines?
Vous souvient-il des jours? Vous souvient-il des chênes

Et des petits enfants?

Et vous rappelez-vous les amis et la table,
Et le rire éclatant du père respectable,
Et nos cris querelleurs,
Le pré, l’étang, la barque, et la lune, et la brise,
Et les chants qui sortaient de votre coeur, Louise,
En attendant les pleurs!

Le parc avait des fleurs et n’avait pas de marbres.
Oh! comme il était beau, le vieillard sous les arbres!
Je le voyais parfois
Dès l’aube sur un banc s’asseoir tenant un livre;
Je sentais, j’entendais l’ombre autour de lui vivre
Et chanter dans les bois!

Il lisait, puis dormait au baiser de l’aurore;
Et je le regardais dormir, plus calme encore
Que ce paisible lieu,
Avec son front serein d’où sortait une flamme,
Son livre ouvert devant le soleil, et son âme
Ouverte devant Dieu!

Et du fond de leur nid, sous l’orme et sous l’érable,
Les oiseaux admiraient sa tête vénérable,
Et, gais chanteurs tremblants,
Ils guettaient, s’approchaient, et souhaitaient dans l’ombre
D’avoir, pour augmenter la douceur du nid sombre,
Un de ses cheveux blancs!

Puis il se réveillait, s’en allait vers la grille,
S’arrêtait pour parler à ma petite fille,
Et ces temps sont passés!
Le vieillard et l’enfant jasaient de mille choses ...
Vous ne voyiez donc pas ces deux êtres, ô roses,
Que vous refleurissez!

Avez-vous bien le coeur, ô roses, de renaître
Dans le même bosquet, sous la même fenêtre?
Où sont-ils, ces fronts purs?
N’était-ce pas vos soeurs, ces deux âmes perdues
Qui vivaient, et se sont si vite confondues
Aux éternels azurs!

Est-ce que leur sourire, est-ce que leurs paroles,
Ô roses, n’allaient pas réjouir vos corolles
Dans l’air silencieux,
Et ne s’ajoutaient pas à vos chastes délices,
Et ne devenaient pas parfums dans vos calices,
Et rayons dans vos cieux?

Ingrates! vous n’avez ni regrets, ni mémoire.
Vous vous réjouissez dans toute votre gloire;
Vous n’avez point pâli.
Ah! je ne suis qu’un homme et qu’un roseau qui ploie
Mais je ne voudrais pas, quant à moi, d’une joie
Faite de tant d’oubli!

Oh! qu’est-ce que le sort a fait de tout ce rêve?
Où donc a-t-il jeté l’humble coeur qui s’élève,
Le foyer réchauffant,
Ô Louise, et la vierge, et le vieillard prospère,
Et tous ces voeux profonds, de moi pour votre père,
De vous pour mon enfant!

Où sont-ils, les amis de ce temps que j’adore?
Ceux qu’a pris l’ombre, et ceux qui ne sont pas encore
Tombés au flot sans bords;
Eux, les évanouis, qu’un autre ciel réclame,
Et vous, les demeurés, qui vivez dans mon âme,
Mais pas plus que les morts!

Quelquefois, je voyais, de la colline en face,
Mes quatre enfants jouer, tableau que rien n’efface!

Et j'entendais leurs chants;
Émumu, je contemplais ces aubes de moi-même
Qui se levaient là-bas dans la douceur suprême
Des vallons et des champs!

Ils couraient, s'appelaient dans les fleurs; et les femmes
Se mêlaient à leurs jeux comme de blanches âmes;
Et tu riais, Armand!
Et, dans l'hymen obscur qui sans fin se consomme,
La nature sentait que ce qui sort de l'homme
Est divin et charmant!

Où sont-ils? Mère, frère, à son tour chacun sombre.
Je saigne et vous saignez. Mêmes douleurs! même ombre!
Ô jours trop tôt décrus!
Ils vont se marier; faites venir un prêtre;
Qu'il revienne! ils sont morts. Et, le temps d'apparaître,
Les voilà disparus!

Nous vivons tous penchés sur un océan triste.
L'onde est sombre. Qui donc survit? qui donc existe?
Ce bruit sourd, c'est le glas.
Chaque flot est une âme; et tout fuit. Rien ne brille.
Un sanglot dit: Mon père! un sanglot dit: Ma fille!
Un sanglot dit: Hélas!

Marine-Terrace, juin 1855.

À VOUS QUI ÊTES LÀ

Vous, qui l'avez suivi dans sa blême vallée,
Au bord de cette mer d'écueils noirs constellée,
Sous la pâle nuée éternelle qui sort
Des flots, de l'horizon, de l'orage et du sort;
Vous qui l'avez suivi dans cette Thébaïde,

Sur cette grève nue, aigre, isolée et vide,
Où l'on ne voit qu'espace âpre et silencieux,
Solitude sur terre et solitude aux cieux;
Vous qui l'avez suivi dans ce brouillard qu'épanche
Sur le roc, sur la vague et sur l'écume blanche,
La profonde tempête aux souffles inconnus,
Recevez, dans la nuit où vous êtes venus,
Ô chers êtres! coeurs vrais, lierres de ses décombres,
La bénédiction de tous ces déserts sombres!
Ces désolations vous aiment; ces horreurs,
Ces brisants, cette mer où les vents laboureurs
Tirent sans fin le soc monstrueux des nuages,
Ces houles revenant comme de grands rouages,
Vous aiment; ces exils sont joyeux de vous voir;
Recevez la caresse immense du lieu noir!
Ô forçats de l'amour! ô compagnons, compagnes,
Qui l'aidez à traîner son boulet dans ces bagnes,
Ô groupe indestructible et fidèle entre tous
D'âmes et de bons coeurs et d'esprits fiers et doux,
Mère, fille, et vous, fils, vous ami, vous encore,
Recevez le soupir du soir vague et sonore,
Recevez le sourire et les pleurs du matin,
Recevez la chanson des mers, l'adieu lointain
Du pauvre mât penché parmi les lames brunes!
Soyez les bienvenus pour l'âpre fleur des dunes,
Et pour l'aigle qui fuit les hommes importuns,
Âmes, et que les champs vous rendent vos parfums,
Et que, votre clarté, les astres vous la rendent!
Et qu'en vous admirant, les vastes flots demandent:
Qu'est-ce donc que ces coeurs qui n'ont pas de reflux!

Ô tendres survivants de tout ce qui n'est plus!
Rayonnements masquant la grande éclipse à l'âme!
Sourires éclairant, comme une douce flamme,
L'abîme qui se fait, hélas! dans le songeur!
Gaîtés saintes chassant le souvenir rongeur!
Quand le proscrit saignant se tourne, âme meurtrie

Vers l’horizon, et crie en pleurant: «La patrie!»
La famille, mensonge auguste, dit: «C’est moi!»

Oh! suivre hors du jour, suivre hors de la loi,
Hors du monde, au delà de la dernière porte,
L’être mystérieux qu’un vent fatal emporte,
C’est beau. C’est beau de suivre un exilé! le jour
Où ce banni sortit de France, plein d’amour
Et d’angoisse, au moment de quitter cette mère,
Il s’arrêta longtemps sur la limite amère;
Il voyait, de sa course à venir déjà las,
Que dans l’oeil des passants il n’était plus, hélas!
Qu’une ombre, et qu’il allait entrer au sourd royaume
Où l’homme qui s’en va flotte et devient fantôme;
Il disait aux ruisseaux: «Retiendrez-vous mon nom,
Ruisseaux?» Et les ruisseaux coulaient en disant: «Non.»
Il disait aux oiseaux de France: «Je vous quitte,
Doux oiseaux; je m’en vais aux lieux où l’on meurt vite,
Au noir pays d’exil où le ciel est étroit;
Vous viendrez, n’est-ce pas, vous nicher dans mon toit?»
Et les oiseaux fuyaient au fond des brumes grises.
Il disait aux forêts: «M’enverrez-vous vos brises?»
Les arbres lui faisaient des signes de refus.
Car le proscrit est seul; la foule aux pas confus
Ne comprend que plus tard, d’un rayon éclairée,
Cet habitant du gouffre et de l’ombre sacrée.

POUR L’ERREUR, ECLAIRER, C’EST APOSTASIER

Pour l’erreur, éclairer, c’est apostasier.
Aujourd’hui ne naît pas impunément d’hier.

L’aube sort de la nuit, qui la déclare ingrate.
Anitus criait: «Mort à l’apostat Socrate!»
Caïphe disait: «Mort au renégat Jésus!»
Courbant son front pendant que l’on crache dessus,
Galilée, apostat à la terre immobile,
Songe et la sent frémir sous son genou débile.
Destin! sinistre éclat de rire! En vérité,
J’admire, ô cieux profonds! que ç’ait toujours été
La volonté de Dieu qu’en ce monde où nous sommes
On donnât sa pensée et son labeur aux hommes,
Ses entrailles, ses jours et ses nuits, sa sueur,
Son sommeil, ce qu’on a dans les yeux de lueur,
Et son coeur et son âme, et tout ce qu’on en tire,
Sans reculer devant n’importe quel martyre,
Et qu’on se répandît, et qu’on se prodiguât,
Pour être au fond du gouffre appelé renégat!

Marine-Terrace, novembre 1854.

A JULES J.

Je dormais en effet, et tu me réveillas.
Je te criai: «Salut!» et tu me dis: «Hélas!»
Et cet instant fut doux, et nous nous embrassâmes;
Nous mêlâmes tes pleurs, mon sourire et nos âmes.

Ces temps sont déjà loin; où donc alors roulait
Ma vie? et ce destin sévère qui me plaît,
Qu’est-ce donc qu’il faisait de cette feuille morte
Que je suis, et qu’un vent pousse, et qu’un vent remporte?

J’habitais au milieu des hauts pignons flamands;
Tout le jour, dans l’azur, sur les vieux toits fumants,
Je regardais voler les grands nuages ivres;
Tandis que je songeais, le coude sur mes livres,

De moments en moments, ce noir passant ailé,
Le temps, ce sourd tonnerre à nos rumeurs mêlé,
D’où les heures s’en vont en sombres étincelles,
Ébranlait sur mon font le beffroi de Bruxelles.
Tout ce qui peut tenter un coeur ambitieux
Était là, devant moi, sur terre et dans les cieux;
Sous mes yeux, dans l’austère et gigantesque place,
J’avais les quatre points cardinaux de l’espace,
Qui font songer à l’aigle, à l’astre, au flot, au mont,
Et les quatre pavés de l’échafaud d’Egmont.

Aujourd’hui, dans une île, en butte aux eaux sans nombre,
Où l’on ne me voit plus, tant j’y suis couvert d’ombre,
Au milieu de la vaste aventure des flots,
Des rocs, des mers, brisant barques et matelots,
Debout, échevelé sur le cap ou le môle
Par le souffle qui sort de la bouche du pôle,
Parmi les chocs, les bruits, les naufrages profonds,
Morne histoire d’écueils, de gouffres, de typhons,
Dont le vent est la plume et la nuit le registre,
J’erre, et de l’horizon je suis la voix sinistre.

Et voilà qu’à travers ces brumes et ces eaux,
Tes volumes exquis m’arrivent, blancs oiseaux,
M’apportant le rameau qu’apportent les colombes
Aux arches, et le chant que le cygne offre aux tombes,
Et jetant à mes rocs tout l’éblouissement
De Paris glorieux et de Paris charmant!
Et je lis, et mon front s’éclaire, et je savoure
Ton style, ta gaîté, ta douleur, ta bravoure.
Merci, toi dont le coeur aima, sentit, comprit!
Merci, devin! merci, frère, poëte, esprit,
Qui viens chanter cet hymne à côté de ma vie!
Qui vois mon destin sombre et qui n’a pas d’envie!
Et qui, dans cette épreuve où je marche, portant
L’abandon à chaque heure et l’ombre à chaque instant,
M’as vu boire le fiel sans y mêler la haine!

Tu changes en blancheur la nuit de ma géhenne,
Et tu fais un autel de lumière inondé
Du tas de pierres noir dont on m'a lapidé.

Je ne suis rien; je viens et je m'en vais; mais gloire
À ceux qui n'ont pas peur des vaincus de l'histoire
Et des contagions du malheur toujours fui!
Gloire aux fermes penseurs inclinés sur celui
Que le sort, geôlier triste, au fond de l'exil pousse!
Ils ressemblent à l'aube, ils ont la force douce,
Ils sont grands; leur esprit parfois, avec un mot,
Dore en arc triomphal la voûte du cachot!

Le ciel s'est éclairci sur mon île sonore,
Et ton livre en venant a fait venir l'aurore;
Seul aux bois avec toi, je lis, et me souviens,
Et je songe, oubliant les monts diluviens,
L'onde, et l'aigle de mer qui plane sur mon aire;
Et, pendant que je lis, mon oeil visionnaire,
À qui tout apparaît comme dans un réveil,
Dans les ombres que font les feuilles au soleil,
Sur tes pages où rit l'idée, où vit la grâce,
Croit voir se dessiner le pur profil d'Horace,
Comme si, se mirant au livre où je te voi,
Ce doux songeur ravi lisait derrière moi!

Marine-Terrace, décembre 1854.

LE MENDIANT

Un pauvre homme passait dans le givre et le vent.
Je cognai sur ma vitre; il s'arrêta devant
Ma porte, que j'ouvris d'une façon civile.
Les ânes revenaient du marché de la ville,
Portant les paysans accroupis sur leurs bâts.

C’était le vieux qui vit dans une niche au bas
De la montée, et rêve, attendant, solitaire,
Un rayon du ciel triste, un liard de la terre,
Tendant les mains pour l’homme et les joignant pour Dieu.
Je lui criai: «Venez vous réchauffer un peu.
«Comment vous nommez-vous?» Il me dit: «Je me nomme
Le pauvre.» Je lui pris la main: «Entrez, brave homme.»
Et je lui fis donner une jatte de lait.
Le vieillard grelottait de froid; il me parlait,
Et je lui répondais, pensif et sans l’entendre.
«Vos habits sont mouillés,» dis-je, «il faut les étendre
Devant la cheminée.» Il s’approcha du feu.
Son manteau, tout mangé des vers, et jadis bleu,
Étalé largement sur la chaude fournaise,
Piqué de mille trous par la lueur de braise,
Couvrait l’âtre, et semblait un ciel noir étoilé.
Et, pendant qu’il séchait ce haillon désolé
D’où ruisselait la pluie et l’eau des fondrières,
Je songeais que cet homme était plein de prières,
Et je regardais, sourd à ce que nous disions,
Sa bure où je voyais des constellations.

AUX FEUILLANTINES

Mes deux frères et moi, nous étions tout enfants.
Notre mère disait: «Jouez, mais je défends
Qu’on marche dans les fleurs et qu’on monte aux échelles.»

Abel était l’aîné, j’étais le plus petit.
Nous mangions notre pain de si bon appétit,
Que les femmes riaient quand nous passions près d’elles.

Nous montions pour jouer au grenier du couvent.

Et, là, tout en jouant, nous regardions souvent,
Sur le haut d’une armoire, un livre inaccessible.

Nous grimpâmes un jour jusqu’à ce livre noir;
Je ne sais pas comment nous fîmes pour l’avoir,
Mais je me souviens bien que c’était une Bible.

Ce vieux livre sentait une odeur d’encensoir.
Nous allâmes ravis dans un coin nous asseoir;
Des estampes partout! quel bonheur! quel délire!

Nous l’ouvrîmes alors tout grand sur nos genoux,
Et, dès le premier mot, il nous parut si doux,
Qu’oubliant de jouer, nous nous mîmes à lire.

Nous lûmes tous les trois ainsi tout le matin,
Joseph, Ruth et Booz, le bon Samaritain,
Et, toujours plus charmés, le soir nous le relûmes,

Tels des enfants, s’ils ont pris un oiseau des cieux,
S’appellent en riant et s’étonnent, joyeux,
De sentir dans leur main la douceur de ses plumes.

PONTO

Je dis à mon chien noir: «Viens, Ponto, viens-nous-en!»
Et je vais dans les bois, mis comme un paysan;
Je vais dans les grands bois, lisant dans les vieux livres.
L’hiver, quand la ramée est un écrin de givres,
Ou l’été, quand tout rit, même l’aurore en pleurs,
Quand toute l’herbe n’est qu’un triomphe de fleurs,
Je prends Froissard, Montluc, Tacite, quelque histoire,
Et je marche, effaré des crimes de la gloire.

Hélas! l’horreur partout, même chez les meilleurs!
Toujours l’homme en sa nuit trahi par ses veilleurs!
Toutes les grandes mains, hélas! de sang rougies!
Alexandre ivre et fou, César perdu d’orgies,
Et, le poing sur Didier, le pied sur Vitikind,
Charlemagne souvent semblable à Charles-Quint;
Caton de chair humaine engraissant la murène;
Titus crucifiant Jérusalem; Turenne,
Héros, comme Bayard et comme Catinat,
À Nordlingue, bandit dans le Palatinat;
Le duel de Jarnac, le duel de Carrouge;
Louis Neuf tenaillant les langues d’un fer rouge;
Cromwell trompant Milton, Calvin brûlant Servet.
Que de spectres, ô gloire! autour de ton chevet!
Ô triste humanité, je fuis dans la nature!
Et, pendant que je dis: «Tout est leurre, imposture,
Mensonge, iniquité, mal de splendeur vêtu!»
Mon chien Ponto me suit. Le chien, c’est la vertu
Qui, ne pouvant se faire homme, s’est faite bête.
Et Ponto me regarde avec son oeil honnête.

DOLOROSÆ

Mère, voilà douze ans que notre fille est morte;
Et depuis, moi le père et vous la femme forte,
Nous n’avons pas été, Dieu le sait, un seul jour
Sans parfumer son nom de prière et d’amour.
Nous avons pris la sombre et charmante habitude
De voir son ombre vivre en notre solitude,
De la sentir passer et de l’entendre errer,
Et nous sommes restés à genoux à pleurer.
Nous avons persisté dans cette douleur douce,
Et nous vivons penchés sur ce cher nid de mousse

Emporté dans l’orage avec les deux oiseaux.
Mère, nous n’avons pas plié, quoique roseaux,
Ni perdu la bonté vis-à-vis l’un de l’autre,
Ni demandé la fin de mon deuil et du vôtre
À cette lâcheté qu’on appelle l’oubli.
Oui, depuis ce jour triste où pour nous ont pâli
Les cieux, les champs, les fleurs, l’étoile, l’aube pure,
Et toutes les splendeurs de la sombre nature,
Avec les trois enfants qui nous restent, trésor
De courage et d’amour que Dieu nous laisse encor,
Nous avons essuyé des fortunes diverses,
Ce qu’on nomme malheur, adversité, traverses,
Sans trembler, sans fléchir, sans haïr les écueils,
Donnant aux deuils du coeur, à l’absence, aux cercueils,
Aux souffrances dont saigne ou l’âme ou la famille,
Aux êtres chers enfuis ou morts, à notre fille,
Aux vieux parents repris par un monde meilleur,
Nos pleurs, et le sourire à toute autre douleur.

PAROLES SUR LA DUNE

Maintenant que mon temps décroît comme un flambeau,
Que mes tâches sont terminées;
Maintenant que voici que je touche au tombeau
Par les deuils et par les années,

Et qu’au fond de ce ciel que mon essor rêva,
Je vois fuir, vers l’ombre entraînées,
Comme le tourbillon du passé qui s’en va,
Tant de belles heures sonnées;

Maintenant que je dis: — Un jour, nous triomphons;
Le lendemain, tout est mensonge! —

Je suis triste, et je marche au bord des flots profonds,
Courbé comme celui qui songe.

Je regarde, au-dessus du mont et du vallon,
Et des mers sans fin remuées,
S’envoler sous le bec du vautour aquilon,
Toute la toison des nuées;

J’entends le vent dans l’air, la mer sur le récif,
L’homme liant la gerbe mûre;
J’écoute, et je confronte en mon esprit pensif
Ce qui parle à ce qui murmure;

Et je reste parfois couché sans me lever
Sur l’herbe rare de la dune.
Jusqu’à l’heure où l’on voit apparaître et rêver
Les yeux sinistres de la lune.

Elle monte, elle jette un long rayon dormant
À l’espace, au mystère, au gouffre;
Et nous nous regardons tous les deux fixement
Elle qui brille et moi qui souffre.

Où donc s’en sont allés mes jours évanouis?
Est-il quelqu’un qui me connaisse?
Ai-je encor quelque chose en mes yeux éblouis,
De la clarté de ma jeunesse?

Tout s’est-il envolé? Je suis seul, je suis las;
J’appelle sans qu’on me réponde;
Ô vents! ô flots! ne suis-je aussi qu’un souffle, hélas!
Hélas! ne suis-je aussi qu’une onde?

Ne verrai-je plus rien de tout ce que j’aimais?
Au dedans de moi le soir tombe.
Ô terre, dont la brume efface les sommets,
Suis-je le spectre, et toi la tombe?

Ai-je donc vidé tout, vie, amour, joie, espoir?
J’attends, je demande, j’implore;
Je penche tour à tour mes urnes pour avoir
De chacune une goutte encore!

Comme le souvenir est voisin du remord!
Comme à pleurer tout nous ramène!
Et que je te sens froide en te touchant, ô mort,
Noir verrou de la porte humaine!

Et je pense, écoutant gémir le vent amer,
Et l’onde aux plis infranchissables;
L’été rit, et l’on voit sur le bord de la mer
Fleurir le chardon bleu des sables.

CLAIRE P.

Quel âge hier? Vingt ans. Et quel âge aujourd’hui?
L’éternité. Ce front pendant une heure a lui.
Elle avait les doux chants et les grâces superbes;
Elle semblait porter de radieuses gerbes;
Rien qu’à la voir passer, on lui disait: Merci!
Qu’est-ce donc que la vie, hélas! pour mettre ainsi
Les êtres les plus purs et les meilleurs en fuite?
Et, moi, je l’avais vue encor toute petite.
Elle me disait vous, et je lui disais tu.
Sou accent ineffable avait cette vertu
De faire en mon esprit, douces voix éloignées,
Chanter le vague choeur de mes jeunes années.
Il n’a brillé qu’un jour, ce beau front ingénu.
Elle était fiancée à l’hymen inconnu.
À qui mariez-vous, mon Dieu, toutes ces vierges?

Un vague et pur reflet de la lueur des cierges
Flottait dans son regard céleste et rayonnant;
Elle était grande et blanche et gaie; et, maintenant,
Allez à Saint-Mandé, cherchez dans le champ sombre,
Vous trouverez le lit de sa noce avec l’ombre;
Vous trouverez la tombe où gît ce lys vermeil;
Et c’est là que tu fais ton éternel sommeil,
Toi qui, dans ta beauté naïve et recueillie,
Mêlais à la madone auguste d’Italie
La Flamande qui rit à travers les houblons,
Douce Claire aux yeux noirs avec des cheveux blonds.

Elle s’en est allée avant d’être une femme;
N’étant qu’un ange encor; le ciel a pris son âme
Pour la rendre en rayons à nos regards en pleurs,
Et l’herbe, sa beauté, pour nous la rendre en fleurs.

Les êtres étoilés que nous nommons archanges
La bercent dans leurs bras au milieu des louanges;
Et, parmi les clartés, les lyres, les chansons,
D’en haut elle sourit à nous qui gémissons.
Elle sourit, et dit aux anges sous leurs voiles:
Est-ce qu’il est permis de cueillir des étoiles?
Et chante, et, se voyant elle-même flambeau,
Murmure dans l’azur: Comme le ciel est beau!
Mais cela ne fait rien à sa mère qui pleure;
La mère ne veut pas que son doux enfant meure
Et s’en aille, laissant ses fleurs sur le gazon,
Hélas! et le silence au seuil de la maison!

Son père, le sculpteur, s’écriait: — Qu’elle est belle!
Je ferai sa statue aussi charmante qu’elle.
C’est pour elle qu’avril fleurit les verts sentiers.
Je la contemplerai pendant des mois entiers
Et je ferai venir du marbre de Carrare.
Ce bloc prendra sa forme éblouissante et rare;
Elle restera chaste et candide à côté.

On dira: «Le sculpteur a deux filles: Beauté
Et Pudeur; Ombre et Jour; la Vierge et la Déesse;
Quel est cet ouvrier de Rome ou de la Grèce
Qui, trouvant dans son art des secrets inconnus,
En copiant Marie, a su faire Vénus?»

Le marbre restera dans la montagne blanche,
Hélas! car c'est à l'heure où tout rit, que tout penche;
Car nos mains gardent mal tout ce qui nous est cher;
Car celle qu'on croyait d'azur était de chair;
Et celui qui taillait le marbre était de verre;
Et voilà que le vent a soufflé, Dieu sévère,
Sur la vierge au front pur, sur le maître au bras fort;
Et que la fille est morte, et que le père est mort!
Claire, tu dors. Ta mère, assise sur ta fosse,
Dit: — Le parfum des fleurs est faux, l'aurore est fausse,
L'oiseau qui chante au bois ment, et le cygne ment,
L'étoile n'est pas vraie au fond du firmament,
Le ciel n'est pas le ciel et là-haut rien ne brille,
Puisque, lorsque je crie à ma fille: «Ma fille,
Je suis là. Lève-toi!» quelqu'un le lui défend;
Et que je ne puis pas réveiller mon enfant! —

À ALEXANDRE D.

(Réponse à la dédicace de son drame LA CONSCIENCE)
Merci du bord des mers à celui qui se tourne
Vers la rive où le deuil, tranquille et noir, séjourne,
Qui défait de sa tête, où le rayon descend,
La couronne, et la jette au spectre de l'absent,
Et qui, dans le triomphe et la rumeur, dédie
Son drame à l'immobile et pâle tragédie!

Je n’ai pas oublié le quai d’Anvers, ami,
Ni le groupe vaillant, toujours plus raffermi,
D’amis chers, de fronts purs, ni toi, ni cette foule.
Le canot du steamer soulevé par la houle
Vint me prendre, et ce fut un long embrassement.
Je montai sur l’avant du paquebot fumant,
La roue ouvrit la vague, et nous nous appelâmes:
— Adieu! — Puis, dans les vents, dans les flots, dans les larmes.
Toi debout sur le quai, moi debout sur le pont,
Vibrant comme deux luths dont la voix se répond,
Aussi longtemps qu’on put se voir, nous regardâmes
L’un vers l’autre, faisant comme un échange d’âmes;
Et le vaisseau fuyait, et la terre décrut;
L’horizon entre nous monta, tout disparut;
Une brume couvrit l’onde incommensurable;
Tu rentras dans ton oeuvre éclatante, innombrable,
Multiple, éblouissante, heureuse, où le jour luit:
Et, moi, dans l’unité sinistre de la nuit.

Marine-Terrace, décembre 1854.

LUEUR AU COUCHANT

Lorsque j’étais en France, et que le peuple en fête
Répandait dans Paris sa grande joie honnête,
Si c’était un des jours glorieux et vainqueurs
Où les fiers souvenirs, désaltérant les coeurs,
S’offrent à notre soif comme de larges coupes,
J’allais errer tout seul parmi les riants groupes,
Ne parlant à personne et pourtant calme et doux,
Trouvant ainsi moyen d’être un et d’être tous,
Et d’accorder en moi, pour une double étude,
L’amour du peuple avec mon goût de solitude.
Rêveur, j’étais heureux; muet, j’étais présent.
Parfois je m’asseyais un livre en main, lisant

Virgile, Horace, Eschyle, ou bien Dante, leur frère;
Puis je m'interrompais, et, me laissant distraire
Des poëtes par toi, poésie, et content,
Je savourais l'azur, le soleil éclatant,
Paris, les seuils sacrés, et la Seine qui coule,
Et cette auguste paix qui sortait de la foule.
Dès lors pourtant des voix murmuraient: Anankè.
Je passais; et partout, sur le pont, sur le quai,
Et jusque dans les champs, étincelait le rire,
Haillon d'or que la joie en bondissant déchire.
Le Panthéon brillait comme une vision.
La gaîté d'une altière et libre nation
Dansait sous le ciel bleu dans les places publiques;
Un rayon qui semblait venir des temps bibliques
Illuminait Paris calme et patriarcal;
Ce lion dont l'oeil met en fuite le chacal,
Le peuple des faubourgs se promenait tranquille.
Le soir, je revenais; et dans toute la ville,
Les passants, éclatant en strophes, en refrains,
Ayant leurs doux instincts de liberté pour freins,
Du Louvre au Champ-de-Mars, de Chaillot à la Grève,
Fourmillaient; et, pendant que mon esprit, qui rêve
Dans la sereine nuit des penseurs étoilés,
Et dresse ses rameaux à leurs lueurs mêlés,
S'ouvrait à tous ces cris charmants comme l'aurore,
À toute cette ivresse innocente et sonore,
Paisibles, se penchant, noirs et tout semés d'yeux
Sous le ciel constellé, sur le peuple joyeux,
Les grands arbres pensifs des vieux Champs-Élysées,
Pleins d'astres, consentaient à s'emplir de fusées.
Et j'allais, et mon coeur chantait; et les enfants
Embarrassaient mes pas de leurs jeux triomphants,
Où s'épanouissaient les mères de famille;
Le frère avec la soeur, le père avec la fille,
Causaient; je contemplais tous ces hauts monuments
Qui semblent au songeur rayonnants ou fumants,
Et qui font de Paris la deuxième des Romes;

J’entendais près de moi rire les jeunes hommes
Et les graves vieillards dire: «Je me souviens.»
Ô patrie! ô concorde entre les citoyens!

Marine Terrace, juillet 1855.

MUGITUSQUE BOUM

Mugissement des boeufs, au temps du doux Virgile,
Comme aujourd’hui, le soir, quand fuit la nuit agile,
Ou, le matin, quand l’aube aux champs extasiés
Verse à flots la rosée et le jour, vous disiez:
«Mûrissez, blés mouvants! prés, emplissez-vous d’herbes!
Que la terre, agitant son panache de gerbes,
Chante dans l’onde d’or d’une riche moisson!
Vis, bête; vis, caillou; vis, homme; vis, buisson;
À l’heure où le soleil se couche, où l’herbe est pleine
Des grands fantômes noirs des arbres de la plaine
Jusqu’aux lointains coteaux rampant et grandissant,
Quand le brun laboureur des collines descend
Et retourne à son toit d’où sort une fumée,
Que la soif de revoir sa femme bien-aimée
Et l’enfant qu’en ses bras hier il réchauffait,
Que ce désir, croissant à chaque pas qu’il fait,
Imite dans son coeur l’allongement de l’ombre!
Êtres! choses! vivez! sans peur, sans deuil, sans nombre
Que tout s’épanouisse en sourire vermeil!
Que l’homme ait le repos et le boeuf le sommeil!
Vivez! croissez! semez le grain à l’aventure!
Qu’on sente frissonner dans toute la nature,
Sous la feuille des nids, au seuil blanc des maisons,
Dans l’obscur tremblement des profonds horizons,
Un vaste emportement d’aimer, dans l’herbe verte,
Dans l’antre, dans l’étang, dans la clairière ouverte,
D’aimer sans fin, d’aimer toujours, d’aimer encor,

Sous la sérénité des sombres astres d’or!
Faites tressaillir l’air, le flot, l’aile, la bouche,
Ô palpitations du grand amour farouche!
Qu’on sente le baiser de l’être illimité!
Et, paix, vertu, bonheur, espérance, bonté,
Ô fruits divins, tombez des branches éternelles!»

Ainsi vous parliez, voix, grandes voix solennelles;
Et Virgile écoutait comme j’écoute, et l’eau
Voyait passer le cygne auguste, et le bouleau
Le vent, et le rocher l’écume, et le ciel sombre
L’homme... Ô nature! abîme! immensité de l’ombre!

Marine-Terrace, juillet 1855.

APPARITION

Je vis un ange blanc qui passait sur ma tête;
Son vol éblouissant apaisait la tempête,
Et faisait taire au loin la mer pleine de bruit.
— Qu’est-ce que tu viens faire, ange, dans cette nuit?
Lui dis-je. Il répondit: — Je viens prendre ton âme.
Et j’eus peur, car je vis que c’était une femme;
Et je lui dis, tremblant et lui tendant les bras:
— Que me restera-t-il? car tu t’envoleras.
Il ne répondit pas; le ciel que l’ombre assiége
S’éteignait... — Si tu prends mon âme, m’écriai-je,
Où l’emporteras-tu? montre-moi dans quel lieu.
Il se taisait toujours. — Ô passant du ciel bleu,
Es-tu la mort? lui dis-je, ou bien es-tu la vie?
Et la nuit augmentait sur mon âme ravie,
Et l’ange devint noir, et dit: — Je suis l’amour.
Mais son front sombre était plus charmant que le jour,
Et je voyais, dans l’ombre où brillaient ses prunelles,
Les astres à travers les plumes de ses ailes.

AU POËTE QUI M’ENVOIE UNE PLUME D’AIGLE

Oui, c’est une heure solennelle!
Mon esprit en ce jour serein
Croit qu’un peu de gloire éternelle
Se mêle au bruit contemporain,

Puisque, dans mon humble retraite,
Je ramasse, sans me courber,
Ce qu’y laisse choir le poëte,
Ce que l’aigle y laisse tomber!

Puisque sur ma tête fidèle
Ils ont jeté, couple vainqueur,
L’un, une plume de son aile,
L’autre, une strophe de son coeur!

Oh! soyez donc les bienvenues,
Plume! strophe! envoi glorieux!
Vous avez erré dans les nues,
Vous avez plané dans les cieux!

CÉRIGO

I

Tout homme qui vieillit est ce roc solitaire
Et triste, Cérigo, qui fut jadis Cythère,
Cythère aux nids charmants, Cythère aux myrtes verts,
La conque de Cypris sacrée au sein des mers.
La vie auguste, goutte à goutte, heure par heure,
S’épand sur ce qui passe et sur ce qui demeure;
Là-bas, la Grèce brille agonisante, et l’oeil
S’emplit en la voyant de lumière et de deuil:
La terre luit; la nue est de l’encens qui fume;
Des vols d’oiseaux de mer se mêlent à l’écume;
L’azur frissonne; l’eau palpite; et les rumeurs
Sortent des vents, des flots, des barques, des rameurs;
Au loin court quelque voile hellène ou candiote.
Cythère est là, lugubre, épuisée, idiote,
Tête de mort du rêve amour, et crâne nu
Du plaisir, ce chanteur masqué, spectre inconnu.
C’est toi? qu’as-tu donc fait de ta blanche tunique?
Cache ta gorge impure et ta laideur cynique,
O sirène ridée et dont l’hymne s’est tu!
Où donc êtes-vous, âme? étoile, où donc es-tu
L’île qu’on adorait de Lemnos à Lépante,
Où se tordait d’amour la chimère rampante,
Où la brise baisait les arbres frémissants,
Où l’ombre disait: J’aime! où l’herbe avait des sens,
Qu’en a-t-on fait? où donc sont-ils, où donc sont-elles,
Eux, les olympiens, elles, les immortelles?
Où donc est Mars? où donc Éros? où donc Psyché?
Où donc le doux oiseau bonheur, effarouché?
Qu’en as-tu fait, rocher, et qu’as-tu fait des roses?
Qu’as-tu fait des chansons dans les soupirs écloses,
Des danses, des gazons, des bois mélodieux,
De l’ombre que faisait le passage des dieux?
Plus d’autels; ô passé! splendeurs évanouies!
Plus de vierges au seuil des antres éblouies;
Plus d’abeilles buvant la rosée et le thym.
Mais toujours le ciel bleu. C’est-à-dire, ô destin!
Sur l’homme, jeune ou vieux, harmonie ou souffrance,

Toujours la même mort et la même espérance.
Cérigo, qu’as-tu fait de Cythère? Nuit! deuil!
L’éden s’est éclipsé, laissant à nu l’écueil.
O naufragée, hélas! c’est donc là que tu tombes!
Les hiboux même ont peur de l’île des colombes.
Île, ô toi qu’on cherchait! ô toi que nous fuyons,
O spectre des baisers, masure des rayons,
Tu t’appelles oubli! tu meurs, sombre captive!
Et, tandis qu’abritant quelque yole furtive,
Ton cap, où rayonnaient les temples fabuleux,
Voit passer à son ombre et sur les grands flots bleus
Le pirate qui guette ou le pêcheur d’éponges
Qui rôde, à l’horizon Vénus fuit dans les songes.

II

Vénus! que parles-tu de Vénus? elle est là.
Lève les yeux. Le jour où Dieu la dévoila
Pour la première fois dans l’aube universelle,
Elle ne brillait pas plus qu’elle n’étincelle.
Si tu veux voir l’étoile, homme, lève les yeux.
L’île des mers s’éteint, mais non l’île des cieux;
Les astres sont vivants et ne sont pas des choses
Qui s’effeuillent, un soir d’été, comme les roses.
Oui, meurs, plaisir, mais vis, amour! ô vision,
Flambeau, nid de l’azur dont l’ange est l’alcyon,
Beauté de l’âme humaine et de l’âme divine,
Amour, l’adolescent dans l’ombre te devine,
O splendeur! et tu fais le vieillard lumineux.
Chacun de tes rayons tient un homme en ses noeuds.
Oh! vivez et brillez dans la brume qui tremble,
Hymens mystérieux, coeurs vieillissant ensemble,
Malheurs de l’un par l’autre avec joie adoptés,
Dévouement, sacrifice, austères voluptés,
Car vous êtes l’amour, la lueur éternelle!
L’astre sacré que voit l’âme, sainte prunelle,
Le phare de toute heure, et, sur l’horizon noir,

L’étoile du matin et l’étoile du soir!
Ce monde inférieur, où tout rampe et s’altère,
A ce qui disparaît et s’efface, Cythère,
Le jardin qui se change en rocher aux flancs nus;
La terre a Cérigo; mais le ciel a Vénus.

A PAUL M.

Auteur du drame PARIS

Tu graves au fronton sévère de ton oeuvre
Un nom proscrit que mord en sifflant la couleuvre;
Au malheur, dont le flanc saigne et dont l’oeil sourit,
A la proscription, et non pas au proscrit,
— Car le proscrit n’est rien que de l’ombre, moins noire
Que l’autre ombre qu’on nomme éclat, bonheur, victoire; —
A l’exil pâle et nu, cloué sur des débris,
Tu donnes ton grand drame où vit le grand Paris,
Cette cité de feu, de nuit, d’airain, de verre,
Et tu fais saluer par Rome le Calvaire.
Sois loué, doux penseur, toi qui prends dans ta main
Le passé, l’avenir, tout le progrès humain,
La lumière, l’histoire, et la ville, et la France,
Tous les dictâmes saints qui calment la souffrance,
Raison, justice, espoir, vertu, foi, vérité,
Le parfum poésie et le vin liberté,
Et qui sur le vaincu, coeur meurtri, noir fantôme,
Te penches, et répands l’idéal comme un baume!
Paul, il me semble, grâce à ce fier souvenir
Dont tu viens nous bercer, nous sacrer, nous bénir,
Que dans ma plaie, où dort la douleur, ô poëte!
Je sens de la charpie avec un drapeau faite.

J E PAYAI LE PECHEUR QUI PASSA SON CHEMIN

Je payai le pêcheur qui passa son chemin,
Et je pris cette bête horrible dans ma main;
C'était un être obscur comme l'onde en apporte,
Qui, plus grand, serait hydre, et, plus petit, cloporte;
Sans forme comme l'ombre, et, comme Dieu, sans nom.
Il ouvrait une bouche affreuse, un noir moignon
Sortait de son écaille; il tâchait de me mordre;
Dieu, dans l'immensité formidable de l'ordre,
Donne une place sombre à ces spectres hideux;
Il tâchait de me mordre, et nous luttions tous deux;
Ses dents cherchaient mes doigts qu'effrayait leur approche;
L'homme qui me l'avait vendu tourna la roche;
Comme il disparaissait, le crabe me mordit;
Je lui dis: «Vis! et sois béni, pauvre maudit!»
Et je le rejetai dans la vague profonde,
Afin qu'il allât dire à l'océan qui gronde,
Et qui sert au soleil de vase baptismal,
Que l'homme rend le bien au monstre pour le mal.

PASTEURS ET TROUPEAUX

A MADAME LOUISE C.
Le vallon où je vais tous les jours est charmant;
Serein, abandonné, seul sous le firmament,
Plein de ronces en fleurs; c'est un sourire triste.
Il vous fait oublier que quelque chose existe,

Et, sans le bruit des champs remplis de travailleurs.
On ne saurait plus là si quelqu'un vit ailleurs.
Là, l'ombre fait l'amour; l'idylle naturelle
Rit; le bouvreuil avec le verdier s'y querelle,
Et la fauvette y met de travers son bonnet;
C'est tantôt l'aubépine et tantôt le genêt;
De noirs granits bourrus, puis des mousses riantes;
Car Dieu fait un poëme avec des variantes;
Comme le vieil Homère, il rabâche parfois,
Mais c'est avec les fleurs, les monts, l'onde et les bois!
Une petite mare est là, ridant sa face,
Prenant des airs de flot pour la fourmi qui passe,
Ironie étalée au milieu du gazon,
Qu'ignore l'océan grondant à l'horizon.
J'y rencontre parfois sur la roche hideuse
Un doux être; quinze ans, yeux bleus, pieds nus, gardeuse
De chèvres, habitant, au fond d'un ravin noir,
Un vieux chaume croulant qui s'étoile le soir;
Ses soeurs sont au logis et filent leur quenouille;
Elle essuie aux roseaux ses pieds que l'étang mouille;
Chèvres, brebis, béliers, paissent; quand, sombre esprit,
J'apparais, le pauvre ange a peur, et me sourit;
Et moi, je la salue, elle étant l'innocence.
Ses agneaux, dans le pré plein de fleurs qui l'encense,
Bondissent, et chacun, au soleil s'empourprant,
Laisse aux buissons, à qui la bise le reprend,
Un peu de sa toison, comme un flocon d'écume.
Je passe; enfant, troupeau, s'effacent dans la brume;
Le crépuscule étend sur les longs sillons gris
Ses ailes de fantôme et de chauve-souris;
J'entends encore au loin dans la plaine ouvrière
Chanter derrière moi la douce chevrière,
Et, là-bas, devant moi, le vieux gardien pensif
De l'écume, du flot, de l'algue, du récif,
Et des vagues sans trêve et sans fin remuées,
Le pâtre promontoire au chapeau de nuées,
S'accoude et rêve au bruit de tous les infinis,

Et dans l’ascension des nuages bénis,
Regarde se lever la lune triomphale,
Pendant que l’ombre tremble, et que l’âpre rafale
Disperse à tous les vents avec son souffle amer
La laine des moulons sinistres de la mer.

J’AI CUEILLI CETTE FLEUR POUR TOI SUR LA COLLINE

J’ai cueilli cette fleur pour toi sur la colline.
Dans l’âpre escarpement qui sur le flot s’incline,
Que l’aigle connaît seul et peut seul approcher,
Paisible, elle croissait aux fentes du rocher.
L’ombre baignait les flancs du morne promontoire
Je voyais, comme on dresse au lieu d’une victoire
Un grand arc de triomphe éclatant et vermeil,
A l’endroit où s’était englouti le soleil,
La sombre nuit bâtir un porche de nuées.
Des voiles s’enfuyaient, au loin diminuées
Quelques toits, s’éclairant au fond d’un entonnoir,
Semblaient craindre de luire et de se laisser voir.
J’ai cueilli cette fleur pour toi, ma bien-aimée.
Elle est pâle et n’a pas de corolle embaumée.
Sa racine n’a pris sur la crête des monts
Que l’amère senteur des glauques goëmons;
Moi, j’ai dit: «Pauvre fleur, du haut de cette cime,
Tu devais t’en aller dans cet immense abîme
Où l’algue et le nuage et les voiles s’en vont.
Va mourir sur un coeur, abîme plus profond.
Fane-toi sur ce sein en qui palpite un monde.
Le ciel, qui te créa pour t’effeuiller dans l’onde,
Te fit pour l’océan, je te donne à l’amour.»

Le vent mêlait les flots; il ne restait du jour
Qu'une vague lueur, lentement effacée.
Oh! comme j'étais triste au fond de ma pensée
Tandis que je songeais, et que le gouffre noir
M'entrait dans l'âme avec tous les frissons du soir!

Ile de Serk, août 1855.

O STROPHE DU POËTE, AUTREFOIS, DANS LES FLEURS

O strophe du poëte, autrefois, dans les fleurs,
Jetant mille baisers à leurs mille couleurs,
Tu jouais, et d'avril tu pillais la corbeille,
Papillon pour la rose et pour la ruche abeille,
Tu semais de l'amour et tu faisais du miel;
Ton âme bleue était presque mêlée au ciel;
Ta robe était d'azur et ton oeil de lumière;
Tu criais aux chansons, tes soeurs: «Venez chaumière,
Hameau, ruisseau, forêt, tout chante. L'aube a lui!»
Et, douce, tu courais et tu riais. Mais lui,
Le sévère habitant de la blême caverne
Qu'en haut le jour blanchit, qu'en bas rougit l'Averne,
Le poëte qu'ont fait avant l'heure vieillard
La douleur dans la vie et le drame dans l'art,
Lui, le chercheur du gouffre obscur, le chasseur d'ombres,
Il a levé la tête un jour hors des décombres,
Et t'a saisie au vol dans l'herbe et dans les blés,
Et, malgré tes effrois et tes cris redoublés,
Toute en pleurs, il t'a prise à l'idylle joyeuse;
Il t'a ravie aux champs, à la source, à l'yeuse,
Aux amours dans les bois près des nids palpitants;
Et maintenant, captive et reine en même temps,
Prisonnière au plus noir de son âme profonde,

Parmi les visions qui flottent comme l’onde,
Sous son crâne à la fois céleste et souterrain,
Assise, et t’accoudant sur un trône d’airain,
Voyant dans ta mémoire, ainsi qu’une ombre vaine,
Fuir l’éblouissement du jour et de la plaine,
Par le maître gardée, et calme et sans espoir,
Tandis que, près de toi, les drames, groupe noir,
Des sombres passions feuillettent le registre,
Tu rêves dans sa nuit, Proserpine sinistre.

LES MALHEUREUX

A MES ENFANTS

Puisque déjà l’épreuve aux luttes vous convie,
O mes enfants! parlons un peu de cette vie.
Je me souviens qu’un jour, marchant dans un bois noir
Où des ravins creusaient un farouche entonnoir,
Dans un de ces endroits où sous l’herbe et la ronce
Le chemin disparaît et le ruisseau s’enfonce,
Je vis, parmi les grès, les houx, les sauvageons,
Fumer un toit bâti de chaumes et de joncs.

La fumée avait peine à monter dans les branches;
Les fenêtres étaient les crevasses des planches;
On eût dit que les rocs cachaient avec ennui
Ce logis tremblant, triste, humble; et que c’était lui
Que les petits oiseaux, sous le hêtre et l’érable,
Plaignaient, tant il était chétif et misérable!
Pensif, dans les buissons j’en cherchais le sentier.
Comme je regardais ce chaume, un muletier
Passa, chantant, fouettant quelques bêtes de somme.
«Qui donc demeure là?» demandai-je à cet homme.
L’homme, tout en chantant, me dit: «Un malheureux.»

J’allai vers la masure au fond du ravin creux;
Un arbre, de sa branche où brillait une goutte,
Sembla se faire un doigt pour m’en montrer la route,
Et le vent m’en ouvrit la porte; et j’y trouvai
Un vieux, vêtu de bure, assis sur un pavé.
Ce vieillard, près d’un âtre où séchaient quelques toiles,
Dans ce bouge aux passants ouvert, comme aux étoiles,
Vivait, seul jour et nuit, sans clôture, sans chien,
Sans clef; la pauvreté garde ceux qui n’ont rien.

J’entrai; le vieux soupait d’un peu d’eau, d’une pomme;
Sans pain; et je me mis à plaindre ce pauvre homme.
— Comment pouvait-il vivre ainsi? Qu’il était dur
De n’avoir même pas un volet à son mur;
L’hiver doit être affreux dans ce lieu solitaire;
Et pas même un grabat! il couchait donc à terre?
Là, sur ce tas de paille, et dans ce coin étroit!
Vous devez être mal, vous devez avoir froid,
Bon père, et c’est un sort bien triste que le vôtre!

« — Fils,» dit-il doucement, «allez en plaindre un autre.
Je suis dans ces grands bois et sous le ciel vermeil,
Et je n’ai pas de lit, fils, mais j’ai le sommeil.
Quand l’aube luit pour moi, quand je regarde vivre
Toute cette forêt dont la senteur m’enivre,
Ces sources et ces fleurs, je n’ai pas de raison
De me plaindre, je suis le fils de la maison.
Je n’ai point fait de mal. Calme, avec l’indigence
Et les haillons, je vis en bonne intelligence,
Et je fais bon ménage avec Dieu mon voisin.
Je le sens près de moi dans le nid, dans l’essaim,
Dans les arbres profonds où parle une voix douce,
Dans l’azur où la vie à chaque instant nous pousse,
Et dans cette ombre vaste et sainte où je suis né.
Je ne demande à Dieu rien de trop, car je n’ai
Pas grande ambition, et, pourvu que j’atteigne

Jusqu’à la branche où pend la mûre ou la châtaigne,
Il est content de moi, je suis content de lui.
Je suis heureux.»
J’étais jadis, comme aujourd’hui,
Le passant qui regarde en bas, l’homme des songes.
Mes enfants, à travers les brumes, les mensonges,
Les lueurs des tombeaux, les spectres des chevets,
Les apparences d’ombre et de clarté, je vais
Méditant, et toujours un instinct me ramène
A connaître le fond de la souffrance humaine.
L’abîme des douleurs m’attire. D’autres sont
Les sondeurs frémissants de l’océan profond;
Ils fouillent, vent des cieux, l’onde que tu balaies;
Ils plongent dans les mers; je plonge dans les plaies.
Leur gouffre est effrayant, mais pas plus que le mien.
Je descends plus bas qu’eux, ne leur enviant rien,
Sachant qu’à tout chercheur Dieu garde une largesse,
Content s’ils ont la perle et si j’ai la sagesse.

Or, il semble, à qui voit tout ce gouffre en rêvant,
Que les justes, parmi la nuée et le vent,
Sont un vol frissonnant d’aigles et de colombes.
J’ai souvent, à genoux que je suis sur les tombes,
La grande vision du sort; et par moment
Le destin m’apparaît, ainsi qu’un firmament
Où l’on verrait, au lieu des étoiles, des âmes.
Tout ce qu’on nomme angoisse, adversité, les flammes,
Les brasiers, les billots, bien souvent tout cela
Dans mon noir crépuscule, enfants, étincela.
J’ai vu, dans cette obscure et morne transparence,
Passer l’homme de Rome et l’homme de Florence,
Caton au manteau blanc, et Dante au fier sourcil,
L’un ayant le poignard au flanc, l’autre l’exil;
Caton était joyeux et Dante était tranquille.
J’ai vu Jeanne au poteau qu’on brûlait dans la ville,
Et j’ai dit: Jeanne d’Arc, ton noir bûcher fumant

A moins de flamboiement que de rayonnement.
J’ai vu Campanella songer dans la torture,
Et faire à sa pensée une âpre nourriture
Des chevalets, des crocs, des pinces, des réchauds
Et de l’horreur qui flotte au plafond des cachots.
J’ai vu Thomas Morus, Lavoisier, Loiserolle,
Jane Gray, bouche ouverte ainsi qu’une corolle,
Toi, Charlotte Corday, vous, madame Roland,
Camille Desmoulins, saignant et contemplant,
Robespierre à l’oeil froid, Danton aux cris superbes;
J’ai vu Jean qui parlait au désert, Malesherbes,
Egmont, André Chénier, rêveur des purs sommets,
Et mes yeux resteront éblouis à jamais
Du sourire serein de ces têtes coupées.
Coligny, sous l’éclair farouche des épées,
Resplendissait devant mon regard éperdu.
Livide et radieux, Socrate m’a tendu
Sa coupe en me disant: — As-tu soif? bois la vie.
Huss, me voyant pleurer, m’a dit: — Est-ce d’envie?
Et Thraséas, s’ouvrant les veines dans son bain,
Chantait: — Rome est le fruit du vieux rameau sabin;
Le soleil est le fruit de ces branches funèbres
Que la nuit sur nous croise et qu’on nomme ténèbres,
Et la joie est le fruit du grand arbre douleur. —
Colomb, l’envahisseur des vagues, l’oiseleur
Du sombre aigle Amérique, et l’homme que Dieu mène,
Celui qui donne un monde et reçoit une chaîne,
Colomb aux fers criait: — Tout est bien. En avant!
Saint-Just sanglant m’a dit: — Je suis libre et vivant.
Phocion m’a jeté, mourant, cette parole:
— Je crois, et je rends grâce aux Dieux! — Savonarole,
Comme je m’approchais du brasier d’où sa main
Sortait, brûlée et noire et montrant le chemin,
M’a dit, en faisant signe aux flammes de se taire:
— Ne crains pas de mourir. Qu’est-ce que cette terre?
Est-ce ton corps qui fait ta joie et qui t’est cher?
La véritable vie est où n’est plus la chair.

Ne crains pas de mourir. Créature plaintive,
Ne sens-tu pas en toi comme une aile captive?
Sous ton crâne, caveau muré, ne sens-tu pas
Comme un ange enfermé qui sanglote tout bas?
Qui meurt, grandit. Le corps, époux impur de l’âme,
Plein des vils appétits d’où naît le vice infâme,
Pesant, fétide, abject, malade à tous moments,
Branlant sur sa charpente affreuse d’ossements,
Gonflé d’humeurs, couvert d’une peau qui se ride,
Souffrant le froid, le chaud, la faim, la soif aride,
Traîne un ventre hideux, s’assouvit, mange et dort.
Mais il vieillit enfin, et, lorsque vient la mort,
L’âme, vers la lumière éclatante et dorée,
S’envole, de ce monstre horrible délivrée. —

Une nuit que j’avais, devant mes yeux obscurs,
Un fantôme de ville et des spectres de murs,
J’ai, comme au fond d’un rêve où rien n’a plus de forme,
Entendu, près des tours d’un temple au dôme énorme,
Une voix qui sortait de dessous un monceau
De blocs noirs d’où le sang coulait en long ruisseau;
Cette voix murmurait des chants et des prières.
C’était le lapidé qui bénissait les pierres;
Étienne le martyr, qui disait: — O mon front,
Rayonne! Désormais les hommes s’aimeront;
Jésus règne. O mon Dieu, récompensez les hommes!
Ce sont eux qui nous font les élus que nous sommes.
Joie! amour! pierre à pierre, ô Dieu, je vous le dis,
Mes frères m’ont jeté le seuil du paradis!
•
Elle était là debout, la mère douloureuse.
L’obscurité farouche, aveugle, sourde, affreuse,
Pleurait de toutes parts autour du Golgotha.
Christ, le jour devint noir quand on vous en ôta,
Et votre dernier souffle emporta la lumière.
Elle était là debout près du gibet, la mère!
Et je me dis: Voilà la douleur! et je vins.

— Qu’avez-vous donc, lui dis-je, entre vos doigts divins?
Alors, aux pieds du fils saignant du coup de lance,
Elle leva sa droite et l’ouvrit en silence,
Et je vis dans sa main l’étoile du matin.

Quoi! ce deuil-là, Seigneur, n’est pas même certain!
Et la mère, qui râle au bas de la croix sombre,
Est consolée, ayant les soleils dans son ombre,
Et, tandis que ses yeux hagards pleurent du sang,
Elle sent une joie immense en se disant:
— Mon fils est Dieu! mon fils sauve la vie au monde! —
Et pourtant où trouver plus d’épouvante immonde,
Plus d’effroi, plus d’angoisse et plus de désespoir
Que dans ce temps lugubre où le genre humain noir,
Frissonnant du banquet autant que du martyre,
Entend pleurer Marie et Trimalcion rire!
•
Mais la foule s’écrie: — Oui, sans doute, c’est beau,
Le martyre, la mort, quand c’est un grand tombeau!
Quand on est un Socrate, un Jean Huss, un Messie!
Quand on s’appelle vie, avenir, prophétie!
Quand l’encensoir s’allume au feu qui vous brûla,
Quand les siècles, les temps et les peuples sont là
Qui vous dressent, parmi leurs brumes et leurs voiles,
Un cénotaphe énorme au milieu des étoiles,
Si bien que la nuit semble être le drap du deuil,
Et que les astres sont les cierges du cercueil!
Le billot tenterait même le plus timide
Si sa bière dormait sous une pyramide.
Quand on marche à la mort, recueillant en chemin
La bénédiction de tout le genre humain,
Quand des groupes en pleurs baisent vos traces fières,
Quand on s’entend crier par les murs, par les pierres,
Et jusque par les gonds du seuil de sa prison:
«Tu vas de ta mémoire éclairer l’horizon;
Fantôme éblouissant, tu vas dorer l’histoire,
Et, vêtu de ta mort comme d’une victoire,

T’asseoir au fronton bleu des hommes immortels!»
Lorsque les échafauds ont des aspects d’autels,
Qu’on se sent admiré du bourreau qui vous tue.
Que le cadavre va se relever statue,
Mourant plein de clarté, d’aube, de firmament,
D’éclat, d’honneur, de gloire, on meurt facilement!
L’homme est si vaniteux, qu’il rit à la torture
Quand c’est une royale et tragique aventure,
Quand c’est une tenaille immense qui le mord.
Quand les durs instruments d’agonie et de mort
Sortent de quelque forge inouïe et géante,
Notre orgueil, oubliant la blessure béante,
Se console des clous en voyant le marteau.
Avoir une montagne auguste pour poteau,
Être battu des flots ou battu des nuées,
Entendre l’univers plein de vagues huées
Murmurer: — Regardez ce colosse! les noeuds,
Les fers et les carcans le font plus lumineux!
C’est le vaincu Rayon, le damné Météore!
Il a volé la foudre et dérobé l’aurore! —
Être un supplicié du gouffre illimité,
Être un titan cloué sur une énormité,
Cela plaît. On veut bien des maux qui sont sublimes;
Et l’on se dit: Souffrons, mais souffrons sur les cimes!

Eh bien, non! — Le sublime est en bas. Le grand choix,
C’est de choisir l’affront. De même que parfois
La pourpre est déshonneur, souvent la fange est lustre.
La boue imméritée atteignant l’âme illustre,
L’opprobre, ce cachot d’où l’auréole sort,
Le cul de basse-fosse où nous jette le sort,
Le fond noir de l’épreuve où le malheur nous traîne,
Sont le comble éclatant de la grandeur sereine.
Et, quand, dans le supplice où nous devons lutter,
Le lâche destin va jusqu’à nous insulter,
Quand sur nous il entasse outrage, rire, blâme,
Et tant de contre-sens entre le sort et l’âme

Que notre vie arrive à la difformité,
La laideur de l’épreuve en devient la beauté.
C’est Samson à Gaza, c’est Épictète à Rome;
L’abjection du sort fait la gloire de l’homme.
Plus de brume ne fait que couvrir plus d’azur.
Ce que l’homme ici-bas peut avoir de plus pur,
De plus beau, de plus noble en ce monde où l’on pleure,
C’est chute, abaissement, misère extérieure,
Acceptés pour garder la grandeur du dedans.
Oui, tous les chiens de l’ombre, autour de vous grondants,
Le blâme ingrat, la haine aux fureurs coutumière,
Oui, tomber dans la nuit quand c’est pour la lumière,
Faire horreur, n’être plus qu’un ulcère, indigner
L’homme heureux, et qu’on raille en vous voyant saigner,
Et qu’on marche sur vous, qu’on vous crache au visage,
Quand c’est pour la vertu, pour le vrai, pour le sage,
Pour le bien, pour l’honneur, il n’est rien de plus doux.
Quelle splendeur qu’un juste abandonné de tous,
N’ayant plus qu’un haillon dans le mal qui le mine,
Et jetant aux dédains, au deuil, à la vermine,
A sa plaie, aux douleurs, de tranquilles défis!
Même quand Prométhée est là, Job, tu suffis
Pour faire le fumier plus haut que le Caucase.

Le juste, méprisé comme un ver qu’on écrase,
M’éblouit d’autant plus que nous le blasphémons.
Ce que les froids bourreaux à faces de démons
Mêlent avec leur main monstrueuse et servile
A l’exécution pour la rendre plus vile,
Grandit le patient au regard de l’esprit.
O croix! les deux voleurs sont deux rayons du Christ!
•
Ainsi, tous les souffrants m’ont apparu splendides,
Satisfaits, radieux, doux, souverains, candides,
Heureux, la plaie au sein, la joie au coeur; les uns
Jetés dans la fournaise et devenant parfums,
Ceux-là jetés aux nuits et devenant aurores;

Les croyants, dévorés dans les cirques sonores,
Râlaient un chant, aux pieds des bêtes étouffés;
Les penseurs souriaient aux noirs autodafés,
Aux glaives, aux carcans, aux chemises de soufre;
Et je me suis alors écrié: Qui donc souffre?
Pour qui donc, si le sort, ô Dieu, n’est pas moqueur,
Toute cette pitié que tu m’as mise au coeur?
Qu’en dois-je faire? à qui faut-il que je la garde?
Où sont les malheureux? — et Dieu m’a dit: — Regarde.

•

Et j’ai vu des palais, des fêtes, des festins,
Des femmes qui mêlaient leurs blancheurs aux satins,
Des murs hautains ayant des jaspes pour écorces,
Des serpents d’or roulés dans des colonnes torses,
Avec de vastes dais pendant aux grands plafonds;
Et j’entendais chanter: — Jouissons! triomphons! —
Et les lyres, les luths, les clairons dont le cuivre
A l’air de se dissoudre en fanfare et de vivre,
Et l’orgue, devant qui l’ombre écoute et se tait,
Tout un orchestre énorme et monstrueux chantait;
Et ce triomphe était rempli d’hommes superbes
Qui riaient et portaient toute la terre en gerbes,
Et dont les fronts dorés, brillants, audacieux,
Fiers, semblaient s’achever en astres dans les cieux.
Et, pendant qu’autour d’eux des voix criaient: — Victoire
A jamais! à jamais force, puissance et gloire!
Et fête dans la ville! et joie à la maison! —
Je voyais, au-dessus du livide horizon,
Trembler le glaive immense et sombre de l’archange.

Ils s’épanouissaient dans une aurore étrange,
Ils vivaient dans l’orgueil comme dans leur cité,
Et semblaient ne sentir que leur félicité.
Et Dieu les a tous pris alors l’un après l’autre,
Le puissant, le repu, l’assouvi qui se vautre,
Le czar dans son Kremlin, l’iman au bord du Nil,
Comme on prend les petits d’un chien dans un chenil,

Et, comme il fait le jour sous les vagues marines,
M’ouvrant avec ses mains ces profondes poitrines,
Et, fouillant de son doigt de rayons pénétré
Leurs entrailles, leur foie et leurs reins, m’a montré
Des hydres qui rongeaient le dedans de ces âmes.

Et j’ai vu tressaillir ces hommes et ces femmes;
Leur visage riant comme un masque est tombé,
Et leur pensée, un monstre effroyable et courbé,
Une naine hagarde, inquiète, bourrue,
Assise sous leur crâne affreux, m’est apparue.
Alors, tremblant, sentant chanceler mes genoux,
Je leur ai demandé: «Mais qui donc êtes-vous?»
Et ces êtres n’ayant presque plus face d’homme
M’ont dit: «Nous sommes ceux qui font le mal; et comme
C’est nous qui le faisons, c’est nous qui le souffrons!»
•
Oh! le nuage vain des pleurs et des affronts
S’envole, et la douleur passe en criant: Espère!
Vous me l’avez fait voir et toucher, ô vous, Père,
Juge, vous le grand juste et vous le grand clément!
Le rire du succès et du triomphe ment;
Un invisible doigt caressant se promène
Sous chacun des chaînons de la misère humaine;
L’adversité soutient ceux qu’elle fait lutter;
L’indigence est un bien pour qui sait la goûter;
L’harmonie éternelle autour du pauvre vibre
Et le berce; l’esclave, étant une âme, est libre,
Et le mendiant dit: Je suis riche, ayant Dieu.
L’innocence aux tourments jette ce cri: C’est peu.
La difformité rit dans Ésope, et la fièvre
Dans Scarron; l’agonie ouvre aux hymnes sa lèvre;
Quand je dis: «La douleur est-elle un mal?» Zénon
Se dresse devant moi paisible, et me dit: «Non.»
Oh! le martyre est joie et transport, le supplice
Est volupté, les feux du bûcher sont délice,
La souffrance est plaisir, la torture est bonheur;

Il n’est qu’un malheureux: c’est le méchant, Seigneur.
•
Aux premiers jours du monde, alors que la nuée,
Surprise, contemplait chaque chose créée,
Alors que sur le globe, où le mal avait crû,
Flottait une lueur de l’Éden disparu,
Quand tout encor semblait être rempli d’aurore,
Quand sur l’arbre du temps les ans venaient d’éclore,
Sur la terre, où la chair avec l’esprit se fond,
Il se faisait le soir un silence profond,
Et le désert, les bois, l’onde aux vastes rivages,
Et les herbes des champs, et les bêtes sauvages,
Émus, et les rochers, ces ténébreux cachots,
Voyaient, d’un antre obscur couvert d’arbres si hauts
Que nos chênes auprès sembleraient des arbustes,
Sortir deux grands vieillards, nus, sinistres, augustes.
C’étaient Ève aux cheveux blanchis, et son mari,
Le pâle Adam, pensif, par le travail meurtri,
Ayant la vision de Dieu sous sa paupière.
Ils venaient tous les deux s’asseoir sur une pierre,
En présence des monts fauves et soucieux,
Et de l’éternité formidable des cieux.
Leur oeil triste rendait la nature farouche,
Et là, sans qu’il sortit un souffle de leur bouche,
Les mains sur leurs genoux et se tournant le dos,
Accablés comme ceux qui portent des fardeaux,
Sans autre mouvement de vie extérieure
Que de baisser plus bas la tête d’heure en heure,
Dans une stupeur morne et fatale absorbés,
Froids, livides, hagards, ils regardaient, courbés
Sous l’être illimité sans figure et sans nombre,
L’un, décroître le jour, et l’autre, grandir l’ombre;
Et, tandis que montaient les constellations,
Et que la première onde aux premiers alcyons
Donnait sous l’infini le long baiser nocturne,
Et qu’ainsi que des fleurs tombant à flots d’une urne
Les astres fourmillants emplissaient le ciel noir,

Ils songeaient, et, rêveurs, sans entendre, sans voir,
Sourds aux rumeurs des mers d’où l’ouragan s’élance,
Toute la nuit, dans l’ombre, ils pleuraient en silence;
Ils pleuraient tous les deux, aïeux du genre humain,
Le père sur Abel, la mère sur Caïn.

LIVRE SIXIÈME: AU BORD DE L'INFINI

I

LE PONT

J'avais devant les yeux les ténèbres. L'abîme
Qui n'a pas de rivage et qui n'a pas de cime,
Était là, morne, immense; et rien n'y remuait.
Je me sentais perdu dans l'infini muet.
Au fond, à travers l'ombre, impénétrable voile,
On apercevait Dieu comme une sombre étoile.
Je m'écriai: — Mon âme, ô mon âme! il faudrait,
Pour traverser ce gouffre où nul bord n'apparaît,
Et pour qu'en cette nuit jusqu'à ton Dieu tu marches,
Bâtir un pont géant sur des millions d'arches.
Qui le pourra jamais! Personne! ô deuil! effroi!
Pleure! — Un fantôme blanc se dressa devant moi
Pendant que je jetais sur l'ombre un oeil d'alarme,
Et ce fantôme avait la forme d'une larme;
C'était un front de vierge avec des mains d'enfant;
Il ressemblait au lys que la blancheur défend;
Ses mains en se joignant faisaient de la lumière.
Il me montra l'abîme où va toute poussière,
Si profond, que jamais un écho n'y répond;
Et me dit: — Si tu veux je bâtirai le pont.
Vers ce pâle inconnu je levai ma paupière.
— Quel est ton nom? lui dis-je. Il me dit: — La prière.

Jersey, décembre 1852.

II

IBO

Dites, pourquoi, dans l'insondable

Au mur d’airain,
Dans l’obscurité formidable
Du ciel serein,

Pourquoi, dans ce grand sanctuaire
Sourd et béni,
Pourquoi, sous l’immense suaire
De l’infini,

Enfouir vos lois éternelles
Et vos clartés?
Vous savez bien que j’ai des ailes,
O vérités!

Pourquoi vous cachez-vous dans l’ombre
Qui nous confond?
Pourquoi fuyez-vous l’homme sombre
Au vol profond?

Que le mal détruise ou bâtisse,
Rampe ou soit roi,
Tu sais bien que j’irai, Justice,
J’irai vers toi!

Beauté sainte, Idéal qui germes
Chez les souffrants,
Toi par qui les esprits sont fermes
Et les coeurs grands,

Vous le savez, vous que j’adore,
Amour, Raison,
Qui vous levez comme l’aurore
Sur l’horizon,

Foi, ceinte d’un cercle d’étoiles,
Droit, bien de tous,
J’irai, Liberté qui te voiles,

J’irai vers vous!

Vous avez beau, sans fin, sans borne
Lueurs de Dieu,
Habiter la profondeur morne
Du gouffre bleu,

Ame à l’abîme habituée
Dès le berceau,
Je n’ai pas peur de la nuée;
Je suis oiseau.

Je suis oiseau comme cet être
Qu’Amos rêvait,
Que saint Marc voyait apparaître
A son chevet,

Qui mêlait sur sa tête fière,
Dans les rayons,
L’aile de l’aigle à la crinière
Des grands lions.

J’ai des ailes. J’aspire au faîte;
Mon vol est sûr;
J’ai des ailes pour la tempête
Et pour l’azur.

Je gravis les marches sans nombre.
Je veux savoir;
Quand la science serait sombre
Comme le soir!

Vous savez bien que l’âme affronte
Ce noir degré,
Et que, si haut qu’il faut qu’on monte,
J’y monterai!

Vous savez bien que l’âme est forte
Et ne craint rien
Quand le souffle de Dieu l’emporte!
Vous savez bien

Que j’irai jusqu’aux bleus pilastres,
Et que mon pas,
Sur l’échelle qui monte aux astres,
Ne tremble pas!

L’homme en cette époque agitée,
Sombre océan,
Doit faire comme Prométhée
Et comme Adam.

Il doit ravir au ciel austère
L’éternel feu;
Conquérir son propre mystère,
Et voler Dieu.

L’homme a besoin, dans sa chaumière,
Des vents battu,
D’une loi qui soit sa lumière
Et sa vertu.

Toujours ignorance et misère!
L’homme en vain fuit,
Le sort le tient; toujours la serre!
Toujours la nuit!

Il faut que le peuple s’arrache
Au dur décret,
Et qu’enfin ce grand martyr sache
Le grand secret!

Déjà l’amour, dans l’ère obscure
Qui va finir,

Dessine la vague figure
De l’avenir.

Les lois de nos destins sur terre,
Dieu les écrit;
Et, si ces lois sont le mystère,
Je suis l’esprit.

Je suis celui que rien n’arrête
Celui qui va,
Celui dont l’âme est toujours prête
A Jéhovah;

Je suis le poëte farouche,
L’homme devoir,
Le souffle des douleurs, la bouche
Du clairon noir;

Le rêveur qui sur ses registres
Met les vivants,
Qui mêle des strophes sinistres
Aux quatre vents;

Le songeur ailé, l’âpre athlète
Au bras nerveux,
Et je traînerais la comète
Par les cheveux.

Donc, les lois de notre problème,
Je les aurai;
J’irai vers elles, penseur blême,
Mage effaré!

Pourquoi cacher ces lois profondes?
Rien n’est muré.
Dans vos flammes et dans vos ondes
Je passerai;

J’irai lire la grande bible;
J’entrerai nu
Jusqu’au tabernacle terrible
De l’inconnu,

Jusqu’au seuil de l’ombre et du vide,
Gouffres ouverts
Que garde la meute livide
Des noirs éclairs,

Jusqu’aux portes visionnaires
Du ciel sacré;
Et, si vous aboyez, tonnerres,
Je rugirai.

Au dolmen de Rozel, janvier 1853.

UN SPECTRE M’ATTENDAIT DANS UN GRAND ANGLE D’OMBRE

Un spectre m’attendait dans un grand angle d’ombre,
Et m’a dit:
— Le muet habite dans le sombre.
L’infini rêve, avec un visage irrité.
L’homme parle et dispute avec l’obscurité,
Et la larme de l’oeil rit du bruit de la bouche.
Tout ce qui vous emporte est rapide et farouche.
Sais-tu pourquoi tu vis? sais-tu pourquoi tu meurs?
Les vivants orageux passent dans les rumeurs,
Chiffres tumultueux, flots de l’océan Nombre,
Vous n’avez rien à vous qu’un souffle dans de l’ombre;
L’homme est à peine né, qu’il est déjà passé,
Et c’est avoir fini que d’avoir commencé.

Derrière le mur blanc, parmi les herbes vertes,
La fosse obscure attend l’homme, lèvres ouvertes.
La mort est le baiser de la bouche tombeau.
Tâche de faire un peu de bien, coupe un lambeau
D’une bonne action dans cette nuit qui gronde;
Ce sera ton linceul dans la terre profonde.
Beaucoup s’en sont allés qui ne reviendront plus
Qu’à l’heure de l’immense et lugubre reflux;
Alors, on entendra des cris. Tâche de vivre;
Crois. Tant que l’homme vit, Dieu pensif lit son livre.
L’homme meurt quand Dieu fait au coin du livre un pli.
L’espace sait, regarde, écoute. Il est rempli
D’oreilles sous la tombe, et d’yeux dans les ténèbres.
Les morts ne marchant plus, dressent leurs pieds funèbres;
Les feuilles sèches vont et roulent sous les cieux.
Ne sens-tu pas souffler le vent mystérieux?

Au dolmen de Rozel, avril 1853.

ÉCOUTEZ. JE SUIS JEAN. J’AI VU DES CHOSES SOMBRES

J’ai vu l’ombre infinie où se perdent les nombres,
J’ai vu les visions que les réprouvés font,
Les engloutissements de l’abîme sans fond;
J’ai vu le ciel, l’éther, le chaos et l’espace.
Vivants! puisque j’en viens, je sais ce qui s’y passe;
Je vous affirme à tous, écoutez bien ma voix,
J’affirme même à ceux qui vivent dans les bois,
Que le Seigneur, le Dieu des esprits, des prophètes,
Voit ce que vous pensez et sait ce que vous faites.
C’est bien. Continuez, grands, petits, jeunes, vieux!
Que l’avare soit tout à l’or, que l’envieux
Rampe et morde en rampant, que le glouton dévore,

Que celui qui faisait le mal, le fasse encore,
Que celui qui fut lâche et vil, le soit toujours!
Voyant vos passions, vos fureurs, vos amours,
J’ai dit à Dieu: «Seigneur, jugez où nous en sommes.
Considérez la terre et regardez les hommes.
Ils brisent tous les noeuds qui devaient les unir.»
Et Dieu m’a répondu: «Certes, je vais venir!»

Serk, juillet 1853.

V

CROIRE; MAIS PAS EN NOUS

Parce qu’on a porté du pain, du linge blanc,
A quelque humble logis sous les combles tremblant
Comme le nid parmi les feuilles inquiètes;
Parce qu’on a jeté ses restes et ses miettes
Au petit enfant maigre, au vieillard pâlissant,
Au pauvre qui contient l’éternel tout-puissant;
Parce qu’on a laissé Dieu manger sous sa table,
On se croit vertueux, on se croit charitable!
On dit: «Je suis parfait! louez-moi; me voilà!»
Et, tout en blâmant Dieu de ceci, de cela,
De ce qu’il pleut, du mal dont on le dit la cause,
Du chaud, du froid, on fait sa propre apothéose.
Le riche qui, gorgé, repu, fier, paresseux,
Laisse un peu d’or rouler de son palais sur ceux
Que le noir janvier glace et que la faim harcèle,
Ce riche-là, qui brille et donne une parcelle
De ce qu’il a de trop à qui n’a pas assez,
Et qui, pour quelques sous du pauvre ramassés,
S’admire et ferme l’oeil sur sa propre misère,
S’il a le superflu, n’a pas le nécessaire:
La justice; et le loup rit dans l’ombre en marchant
De voir qu’il se croit bon pour n’être pas méchant.
Nous bons! nous fraternels! ô fange et pourriture!

Mais tournez donc vos yeux vers la mère nature!
Que sommes-nous, coeurs froids où l’égoïsme bout,
Auprès de la bonté suprême éparse en tout?
Toutes nos actions ne valent pas la rose.
Dès que nous avons fait par hasard quelque chose,
Nous nous vantons, hélas! vains souffles qui fuyons!
Dieu donne l’aube au ciel sans compter les rayons,
Et la rosée aux fleurs sans mesurer les gouttes;
Nous sommes le néant; nos vertus tiendraient toutes
Dans le creux de la pierre où vient boire l’oiseau.
L’homme est l’orgueil du cèdre emplissant le roseau.
Le meilleur n’est pas bon, vraiment, tant l’homme est frêle;
Et tant notre fumée à nos vertus se mêle!
Le bienfait par nos mains pompeusement jeté
S’évapore aussitôt dans notre vanité;
Même en le prodiguant aux pauvres d’un air tendre,
Nous avons tant d’orgueil que notre or devient cendre;
Le bien que nous faisons est spectre comme nous.
L’Incréé, seul vivant, seul terrible et seul doux,
Qui juge, aime, pardonne, engendre, construit, fonde,
Voit nos hauteurs avec une pitié profonde.
Ah! rapides passants! ne comptons pas sur nous,
Comptons sur lui. Pensons et vivons à genoux;
Tâchons d’être sagesse, humilité, lumière;
Ne faisons point un pas qui n’aille à la prière;
Car nos perfections rayonneront bien peu
Après la mort, devant l’étoile et le ciel bleu.
Dieu seul peut nous sauver. C’est un rêve de croire
Que nos lueurs d’en bas sont là-haut de la gloire;
Si lumineux qu’il ait paru dans notre horreur,
Si doux qu’il ait été pour nos coeurs pleins d’erreur,
Quoi qu’il ait fait, celui que sur la terre on nomme
Juste, excellent, pur, sage et grand, là-haut est l’homme,
C’est-à-dire la nuit en présence du jour;
Son amour semble haine auprès du grand amour;
Et toutes ses splendeurs, poussant des cris funèbres,
Disent en voyant Dieu: Nous sommes les ténèbres!

Dieu, c’est le seul azur dont le monde ait besoin.
L’abîme en en parlant prend l’atome à témoin.
Dieu seul est grand! c’est là le psaume du brin d’herbe;
Dieu seul est vrai! c’est là l’hymne du flot superbe;
Dieu seul est bon! c’est là le murmure des vents;
Ah! ne vous faites pas d’illusions, vivants!
Et d’où sortez-vous donc, pour croire que vous êtes
Meilleurs que Dieu, qui met les astres sur vos têtes,
Et qui vous éblouit, à l’heure du réveil,
De ce prodigieux sourire, le soleil!

Marine-Terrace, décembre 1854.

VI

PLEURS DANS LA NUIT

I

Je suis l’être incliné qui jette ce qu’il pense;
Qui demande à la nuit le secret du silence;
Dont la brume emplit l’oeil;
Dans une ombre sans fond mes paroles descendent,
Et les choses sur qui tombent mes strophes rendent
Le son creux du cercueil.

Mon esprit, qui du doute a senti la piqûre,
Habite, âpre songeur, la rêverie obscure
Aux flots plombés et bleus,
Lac hideux où l’horreur tord ses bras, pâle nymphe,
Et qui fait boire une eau morte comme la lymphe
Aux rochers scrofuleux.

Le Doute, fils bâtard de l’aïeule Sagesse,
Crie: — A quoi bon? — devant l’éternelle largesse,
Nous fait tout oublier,
S’offre à nous, morne abri, dans nos marches sans nombre,

Nous dit: — Es-tu las? Viens! — et l’homme dort à l’ombre
De ce mancenilier.

L’effet pleure et sans cesse interroge la cause.
La création semble attendre quelque chose.
L’homme à l’homme est obscur.
Où donc commence l’âme? où donc finit la vie?
Nous voudrions, c’est là notre incurable envie,
Voir par-dessus le mur.

Nous rampons, oiseaux pris sous le filet de l’être;
Libres et prisonniers, l’immuable pénètre
Toutes nos volontés;
Captifs sous le réseau des choses nécessaires,
Nous sentons se lier des fils à nos misères
Dans les immensités.

II

Nous sommes au cachot; la porte est inflexible;
Mais, dans une main sombre, inconnue, invisible,
Qui passe par moment,
A travers l’ombre, espoir des âmes sérieuses,
On entend le trousseau des clefs mystérieuses
Sonner confusément.

La vision de l’être emplit les yeux de l’homme.
Un mariage obscur sans cesse se consomme
De l’ombre avec le jour;
Ce monde, est-ce un éden tombé dans la géhenne?
Nous avons dans le coeur des ténèbres de haine
Et des clartés d’amour.

La création n’a qu’une prunelle trouble.
L’être éternellement montre sa face double,
Mal et bien, glace et feu;
L’homme sent à la fois, âme pure et chair sombre,

La morsure du ver de terre au fond de l’ombre
Et le baiser de Dieu.

Mais à de certains jours, l’âme est comme une veuve.
Nous entendons gémir les vivants dans l’épreuve.
Nous doutons, nous tremblons,
Pendant que l’aube épand ses lumières sacrées
Et que mai sur nos seuils mêle les fleurs dorées
Avec les enfants blonds.

Qu’importe la lumière, et l’aurore, et les astres,
Fleurs des chapiteaux bleus, diamants des pilastres
Du profond firmament,
Et mai qui nous caresse, et l’enfant qui nous charme,
Si tout n’est qu’un soupir, si tout n’est qu’une larme,
Si tout n’est qu’un moment!

III

Le sort nous use au jour, triste meule qui tourne.
L’homme inquiet et vain croit marcher, il séjourne;
Il expire en créant.
Nous avons la seconde et nous rêvons l’année;
Et la dimension de notre destinée,
C’est poussière et néant.

L’abîme, où les soleils sont les égaux des mouches,
Nous tient; nous n’entendons que des sanglots farouches
Ou des rires moqueurs;
Vers la cible d’en haut qui dans l’azur s’élève,
Nous lançons nos projets, nos voeux, l’espoir, le rêve,
Ces flèches de nos coeurs.

Nous voulons durer, vivre, être éternels. O cendre!
Où donc est la fourmi qu’on appelle Alexandre?
Où donc le ver César?
En tombant sur nos fronts, la minute nous tue.

Nous passons, noir essaim, foule de deuil vêtue,
Comme le bruit d’un char.

Nous montons à l’assaut du temps comme une armée.
Sur nos groupes confus que voile la fumée
Des jours évanouis,
L’énorme éternité luit, splendide et stagnante;
Le cadran, bouclier de l’heure rayonnante.
Nous terrasse éblouis!

IV

A l’instant où l’on dit: Vivons! tout se déchire.
Les pleurs subitement descendent sur le rire.
Tête nue! à genoux!
Tes fils sont morts, mon père est mort, leur mère est morte.
O deuil! qui passe là? C’est un cercueil qu’on porte.
A qui le portez-vous?

Ils le portent à l’ombre, au silence, à la terre;
Ils le portent au calme obscur, à l’aube austère,
A la brume sans bords,
Au mystère qui tord ses anneaux sous des voiles,
Au serpent inconnu qui lèche les étoiles
Et qui baise les morts!

V

Ils le portent aux vers, au néant, à Peut-Être!
Car la plupart d’entre eux n’ont point vu le jour naître;
Sceptiques et bornés,
La négation morne et la matière hostile,
Flambeaux d’aveuglement, troublent l’âme inutile
De ces infortunés.

Pour eux le ciel ment, l’homme est un songe et croit vivre;
Ils ont beau feuilleter page à page le livre,

Ils ne comprennent pas;
Ils vivent en hochant la tête, et, dans le vide,
L’écheveau ténébreux que le doute dévide
Se mêle sous leurs pas.

Pour eux l’âme naufrage avec le corps qui sombre.
Leur rêve a les yeux creux et regarde de l’ombre;
Rien est le mot du sort;
Et chacun d’eux, riant de la voûte étoilée,
Porte en son coeur, au lieu de l’espérance ailée,
Une tête de mort.

Sourds à l’hymne des bois, au sombre cri de l’orgue,
Chacun d’eux est un champ plein de cendre, une morgue
Où pendent des lambeaux,
Un cimetière où l’oeil des frémissants poëtes
Voit planer l’ironie et toutes ses chouettes,
L’ombre et tous ses corbeaux.

Quand l’astre et le roseau leur disent: Il faut croire;
Ils disent au jonc vert, à l’astre en sa nuit noire:
Vous êtes insensés!
Quand l’arbre leur murmure à l’oreille: Il existe;
Ces fous répondent: Non! et, si le chêne insiste,
Ils lui disent: Assez!

Quelle nuit! le semeur nié par la semence!
L’univers n’est pour eux qu’une vaste démence,
Sans but et sans milieu;
Leur âme, en agitant l’immensité profonde,
N’y sent même pas l’être, et dans le grelot monde
N’entend pas sonner Dieu!

VI

Le corbillard franchit le seuil du cimetière.
Le gai matin, qui rit à la nature entière,

Resplendit sur ce deuil;
Tout être a son mystère où l’on sent l’âme éclore,
Et l’offre à l’infini; l’astre apporte l’aurore,
Et l’homme le cercueil.

Le dedans de la fosse apparaît, triste crèche.
Des pierres par endroits percent la terre fraîche;
Et l’on entend le glas;
Elles semblent s’ouvrir ainsi que des paupières,
Et le papillon blanc dit: «Qu’ont donc fait ces pierres?»
Et la fleur dit: «Hélas!»

VII

Est-ce que par hasard ces pierres sont punies,
Dieu vivant, pour subir de telles agonies?
Ah! ce que nous souffrons
N’est rien... — Plus bas que l’arbre en proie aux froides bises,
Sous cette forme horrible, est-ce que les Cambyses,
Est-ce que les Nérons,

Après avoir tenu les peuples dans leur serre,
Et crucifié l’homme au noir gibet misère,
Mis le monde en lambeaux,
Souillé l’âme, et changé, sous le vent des désastres,
L’univers en charnier, et fait monter aux astres
La vapeur des tombeaux,

Après avoir passé joyeux dans la victoire,
Dans l’orgueil, et partout imprimé sur l’histoire
Leurs ongles furieux,
Et, monstres qu’entrevoit l’homme en ses léthargies.
Après avoir sur terre été des effigies
Du mal mystérieux,

Après avoir peuplé les prisons élargies,
Et versé tant de meurtre aux vastes mers rougies,

Tant de morts, glaive au flanc,
Tant d’ombre, et de carnage, et d’horreurs inconnues,
Que le soleil, le soir, hésitait dans les nues
Devant ce bain sanglant!

Après avoir mordu le troupeau que Dieu mène,
Et tourné tour à tour de la torture humaine
L’atroce cabestan,
Et régné sous la pourpre et sous le laticlave,
Et plié six mille ans Adam, le vieil esclave,
Sous le vieux roi Satan,

Est-ce que le chasseur Nemrod, Sforce le pâtre,
Est-ce que Messaline, est-ce que Cléopâtre,
Caligula, Macrin,
Et les Achabs, par qui renaissaient les Sodomes,
Et Phalaris, qui fit du hurlement des hommes
La clameur de l’airain,

Est-ce que Charles Neuf, Constantin, Louis Onze,
Vitellius, la fange, et Busiris, le bronze,
Les Cyrus dévorants,
Les Égystes montrés du doigt par les Électres,
Seraient dans cette nuit, d’hommes devenus spectres,
Et pierres de tyrans?

Est-ce que ces cailloux, tout pénétrés de crimes,
Dans l’horreur étouffés, scellés dans les abîmes,
Enviant l’ossement,
Sans air, sans mouvement, sans jour, sans yeux, sans bouche,
Entre l’herbe sinistre et le cercueil farouche,
Vivraient affreusement?

Est-ce que ce seraient des âmes condamnées,
Des maudits qui, pendant des millions d’années,
Seuls avec le remords,
Au lieu de voir, des yeux de l’astre solitaire,

Sortir les rayons d’or, verraient les vers de terre
Sortir des yeux des morts?

Homme et roche, exister, noir dans l’ombre vivante!
Songer, pétrifié dans sa propre épouvante!
Rêver l’éternité!
Dévorer ses fureurs, confusément rugies!
Être pris, ouragan de crimes et d’orgies,
Dans l’immobilité!

Punition! problème obscur! questions sombres!
Quoi! ce caillou dirait: — J’ai mis Thèbe en décombres!
J’ai vu Suze à genoux!
J’étais Bélus à Tyr! j’étais Sylla dans Rome! —
Noire captivité des vieux démons de l’homme!
O pierres, qu’êtes-vous?

Qu’a fait ce bloc, béant dans la fosse insalubre?
Glacé du froid profond de la terre lugubre,
Informe et châtié,
Aveugle, même aux feux que la nuit réverbère,
Il pense et se souvient... — Quoi! ce n’est que Tibère!
Seigneur, ayez pitié!

Ce dur silex noyé dans la terre, âpre, fruste,
Couvert d’ombre, pendant que le ciel s’ouvre au juste
Qui s’y réfugia,
Jaloux du chien qui jappe et de l’âne qui passe,
Songe et dit: Je suis là! — Dieu vivant, faites grâce!
Ce n’est que Borgia!

O Dieu bon, penchez-vous sur tous ces misérables!
Sauvez ces submergés, aimez ces exécrables!
Ouvrez les soupiraux.
Au nom des innocents, Dieu, pardonnez aux crimes.
Père, fermez l’enfer. Juge, au nom des victimes,
Grâce pour les bourreaux!

De toutes parts s’élève un cri: Miséricorde!
Les peuples nus, liés, fouettés à coups de corde,
Lugubres travailleurs,
Voyant leur maître en proie aux châtiments sublimes,
Ont pitié du despote, et, saignant de ses crimes,
Pleurent de ses douleurs;

Les pâles nations regardent dans le gouffre,
Et ces grands suppliants, pour le tyran qui souffre,
T’implorent, Dieu jaloux;
L’esclave mis en croix, l’opprimé sur la claie,
Plaint le satrape au fond de l’abîme, et la plaie
Dit: Grâce pour les clous!

Dieu serein, regardez d’un regard salutaire
Ces reclus ténébreux qu’emprisonne la terre
Pleine d’obscurs verrous,
Ces forçats dont le bagne est le dedans des pierres,
Et levez, à la voix des justes en prières,
Ces effrayants écrous.

Père, prenez pitié du monstre et de la roche.
De tous les condamnés que le pardon s’approche!
Jadis, roi des combats,
Ces bandits sur la terre ont fait une tempête;
Étant montés plus haut dans l’horreur que la bête,
Ils sont tombés plus bas.

Grâce pour eux! démence, espoir, pardon, refuge,
Au jonc qui fut un prince, au ver qui fut un juge!
Le méchant, c’est le fou.
Dieu, rouvrez au maudit! Dieu, relevez l’infâme!
Rendez à tous l’azur. Donnez au tigre une âme,
Des ailes au caillou!

Mystère! obsession de tout esprit qui pense!

Échelle de la peine et de la récompense!
Nuit qui monte en clarté!
Sourire épanoui sur la torture amère!
Vision du sépulcre! êtes-vous la chimère,
Ou la réalité?

VIII

La fosse, plaie au flanc de la terre, est ouverte,
Et, béante, elle fait frissonner l’herbe verte
Et le buisson jauni;
Elle est là, froide, calme, étroite, inanimée,
Et l’âme en voit sortir, ainsi qu’une fumée,
L’ombre de l’infini.

Et les oiseaux de l’air, qui, planant sur les cimes,
Volant sous tous les cieux, comparent les abîmes
Dans les courses qu’ils font,
Songent au noir Vésuve, à l’Océan superbe,
Et disent, en voyant cette fosse dans l’herbe:
Voici le plus profond!

IX

L’âme est partie, on rend le corps à la nature.
La vie a disparu sous cette créature;
Mort, où sont tes appuis?
Le voilà hors du temps, de l’espace et du nombre.
On le descend avec une corde dans l’ombre
Comme un seau dans un puits.

Que voulez-vous puiser dans ce puits formidable?
Et pourquoi jetez-vous la sonde à l’insondable?
Qu’y voulez-vous puiser?
Est-ce l’adieu lointain et doux de ceux qu’on aime?
Est-ce un regard? hélas! est-ce un soupir suprême?
Est-ce un dernier baiser?

Qu’y voulez-vous puiser, vivants, essaim frivole?
Est-ce un frémissement du vide où tout s’envole,
Un bruit, une clarté,
Une lettre du mot que Dieu seul peut écrire?
Est-ce, pour le mêler à vos éclats de rire,
Un peu d’éternité?

Dans ce gouffre où la larve entr’ouvre son oeil terne,
Dans cette épouvantable et livide citerne,
Abîme de douleurs,
Dans ce cratère obscur des muettes demeures,
Que voulez-vous puiser, ô passants de peu d’heures,
Hommes de peu de pleurs?

Est-ce le secret sombre? est-ce la froide goutte
Qui, larme du néant, suinte de l’âpre voûte
Sans aube et sans flambeau?
Est-ce quelque lueur effarée et hagarde?
Est-ce le cri jeté par tout ce qui regarde
Derrière le tombeau?

Vous ne puiserez rien. Les morts tombent. La fosse
Les voit descendre, avec leur âme juste ou fausse,
Leur nom, leurs pas, leur bruit.
Un jour, quand souffleront les célestes haleines,
Dieu seul remontera toutes ces urnes pleines
De l’éternelle nuit.

X

Et la terre, agitant la ronce à sa surface,
Dit: — L’homme est mort; c’est bien; que veut-on que j’en fasse?
Pourquoi me le rend-on?
Terre! fais-en des fleurs! des lys que l’aube arrose!
De cette bouche aux dents béantes, fais la rose
Entr’ouvrant son bouton!

Fais ruisseler ce sang dans tes sources d’eaux vives,
Et fais-le boire aux boeufs mugissants, tes convives;
Prends ces chairs en haillons;
Fais de ces seins bleuis sortir des violettes,
Et couvre de ces yeux que t’offrent les squelettes
L’aile des papillons.

Fais avec tous ces morts une joyeuse vie.
Fais-en le fier torrent qui gronde et qui dévie,
La mousse aux frais tapis!
Fais-en des rocs, des joncs, des fruits, des vignes mûres,
Des brises, des parfums, des bois pleins de murmures,
Des sillons pleins d’épis!

Fais-en des buissons verts, fais-en de grandes herbes!
Et qu’en ton sein profond d’où se lèvent les gerbes,
A travers leur sommeil,
Les effroyables morts sans souffle et sans paroles
Se sentent frissonner dans toutes ces corolles
Qui tremblent au soleil!

XI

La terre, sur la bière où le mort pâle écoute,
Tombe, et le nid gazouille, et, là-bas, sur la route
Siffle le paysan;
Et ces fils, ces amis que le regret amène,
N’attendent même pas que la fosse soit pleine
Pour dire: Allons-nous-en!

Le fossoyeur, payé par ces douleurs hâtées,
Jette sur le cercueil la terre à pelletées.
Toi qui, dans ton linceul,
Rêvais le deuil sans fin, cette blanche colombe,
Avec cet homme allant et venant sur ta tombe,
O mort, te voilà seul!

Commencement de l’âpre et morne solitude!
Tu ne changeras plus de lit ni d’attitude;
L’heure aux pas solennels
Ne sonne plus pour toi; l’ombre te fait terrible;
L’immobile suaire a sur ta forme horrible
Mis ses plis éternels.

Et puis le fossoyeur s’en va boire la fosse.
Il vient de voir des dents que la terre déchausse,
Il rit, il mange, il mord;
Et prend, en murmurant des chansons hébétées,
Un verre dans ses mains à chaque instant heurtées
Aux choses de la mort.

Le soir vient; l’horizon s’emplit d’inquiétude;
L’herbe tremble et bruit comme une multitude;
Le fleuve blanc reluit;
Le paysage obscur prend les veines des marbres;
Ces hydres que, le jour, on appelle des arbres,
Se tordent dans la nuit.

Le mort est seul. Il sent la nuit qui le dévore.
Quand naît le doux matin, tout l’azur de l’aurore,
Tous ses rayons si beaux,
Tout l’amour des oiseaux et leurs chansons sans nombre,
Vont aux berceaux dorés; et, la nuit, toute l’ombre
Aboutit aux tombeaux.

Il entend des soupirs dans les fosses voisines,
Il sent la chevelure affreuse des racines
Entrer dans son cercueil;
Il est l’être vaincu dont s’empare la chose;
Il sent un doigt obscur, sous sa paupière close,
Lui retirer son oeil.

Il a froid; car le soir, qui mêle à son haleine

Les ténèbres, l’horreur, le spectre et le phalène,
Glace ces durs grabats;
Le cadavre, lié de bandelettes blanches,
Grelotte, et dans sa bière entend les quatre planches
Qui lui parlent tout bas.

L’une dit: — Je fermais ton coffre-fort. — Et l’autre
Dit: — J’ai servi de porte au toit qui fut le nôtre. —
L’autre dit: — Aux beaux jours,
La table où rit l’ivresse et que le vin encombre,
C’était moi. — L’autre dit: — J’étais le chevet sombre
Du lit de tes amours.

Allez, vivants! riez, chantez; le jour flamboie.
Laissez derrière vous, derrière votre joie
Sans nuage et sans pli,
Derrière la fanfare et le bal qui s’élance,
Tous ces morts qu’enfouit dans la fosse silence
Le fossoyeur oubli!

XII

Tous y viendront.

XIII

Assez! et levez-vous de table.
Chacun prend à son tour la route redoutable;
Chacun sort en tremblant;
Chantez, riez; soyez heureux, soyez célèbres;
Chacun de vous sera bientôt dans les ténèbres
Le spectre au regard blanc.

La foule vous admire et l’azur vous éclaire;
Vous êtes riche, grand, glorieux, populaire,
Puissant, fier, encensé;
Vos licteurs devant vous, graves, portent la hache;

Et vous vous en irez sans que personne sache
Où vous avez passé.

Jeunes filles, hélas! qui donc croit à l’aurore?
Votre lèvre pâlit pendant qu’on danse encore
Dans le bal enchanté;
Dans les lustres blêmis on voit grandir le cierge;
La mort met sur vos fronts ce grand voile de vierge
Qu’on nomme éternité.

Le conquérant, debout dans une aube enflammée,
Penche, et voit s’en aller son épée en fumée;
L’amante avec l’amant
Passe; le berceau prend une voix sépulcrale;
L’enfant rose devient larve horrible, et le râle
Sort du vagissement.

Ce qu’ils disaient hier, le savent-ils eux-mêmes?
Des chimères, des voeux, des cris, de vains problèmes!
O néant inouï!
Rien ne reste; ils ont tout oublié dans la fuite
Des choses que Dieu pousse et qui courent si vite
Que l’homme est ébloui!

O promesses! espoirs! cherchez-les dans l’espace.
La bouche qui promet est un oiseau qui passe.
Fou qui s’y confierait!
Les promesses s’en vont où va le vent des plaines,
Où vont les flots, où vont les obscures haleines
Du soir dans la forêt!

Songe à la profondeur du néant où nous sommes.
Quand tu seras couché sous la terre où les hommes
S’enfoncent pas à pas,
Tes enfants, épuisant les jours que Dieu leur compte,
Seront dans la lumière ou seront dans la honte;
Tu ne le sauras pas!

Ce que vous rêvez tombe avec ce que vous faites.
Voyez ces grands palais; voyez ces chars de fêtes
Aux tournoyants essieux;
Voyez ces longs fusils qui suivent le rivage;
Voyez ces chevaux, noirs comme un héron sauvage
Qui vole sous les cieux,

Tout cela passera comme une voix chantante.
Pyramide, à tes pieds tu regardes la tente,
Sous l’éclatant zénith;
Tu l’entends frissonner au vent comme une voile,
Chéops, et tu te sens, en la voyant de toile,
Fière d’être en granit;

Et toi, tente, tu dis: Gloire à la pyramide!
Mais, un jour, hennissant comme un cheval numide,
L’ouragan libyen
Soufflera sur ce sable où sont les tentes frêles,
Et Chéops roulera pêle-mêle avec elles
En s’écriant: Eh bien!

Tu périras, malgré ton enceinte murée,
Et tu ne seras plus, ville, ô ville sacrée,
Qu’un triste amas fumant,
Et ceux qui t’ont servie et ceux qui t’ont aimée
Frapperont leur poitrine en voyant la fumée
De ton embrasement.

Ils diront: — O douleur! ô deuil! guerre civile!
Quelle ville a jamais égalé cette ville?
Ses tours montaient dans l’air;
Elle riait aux chants de ses prostituées;
Elle faisait courir ainsi que des nuées
Ses vaisseaux sur la mer.

Ville! où sont tes docteurs qui t’enseignaient à lire?

Tes dompteurs de lions qui jouaient de la lyre,
Tes lutteurs jamais las?
Ville! est-ce qu’un voleur, la nuit, t’a dérobée?
Où donc est Babylone? Hélas! elle est tombée!
Elle est tombée, hélas!

On n’entend plus chez toi le bruit que fait la meule.
Pas un marteau n’y frappe un clou. Te voilà seule.
Ville, où sont tes bouffons?
Nul passant désormais ne montera tes rampes;
Et l’on ne verra plus la lumière des lampes
Luire sous tes plafonds.

Brillez pour disparaître et montez pour descendre.
Le grain de sable dit dans l’ombre au grain de cendre:
Il faut tout engloutir.
Où donc est Thèbes? dit Babylone pensive.
Thèbes demande: Où donc est Ninive? et Ninive
S’écrie: Où donc est Tyr?

En laissant fuir les mots de sa langue prolixe,
L’homme s’agite et va, suivi par un oeil fixe;
Dieu n’ignore aucun toit;
Tous les jours d’ici-bas ont des aubes funèbres;
Malheur à ceux qui font le mal dans les ténèbres;
En disant: Qui nous voit?

Tous tombent; l’un au bout d’une course insensée,
L’autre à son premier pas; l’homme sur sa pensée,
La mère sur son nid;
Et le porteur de sceptre et le joueur de flûte
S’en vont; et rien ne dure; et le père qui lutte
Suit l’aïeul qui bénit.

Les races vont au but qu’ici-bas tout révèle.
Quand l’ancienne commence à pâlir, la nouvelle
A déjà le même air;

Dans l’éternité, gouffre où se vide la tombe,
L’homme coule sans fin, sombre fleuve qui tombe
Dans une sombre mer.

Tout escalier, que l’ombre ou la splendeur le couvre,
Descend au tombeau calme, et toute porte s’ouvre
Sur le dernier moment;
Votre sépulcre emplit la maison où vous êtes;
Et tout plafond, croisant ses poutres sur nos têtes,
Est fait d’écroulement.

Veillez! veillez! Songez à ceux que vous perdîtes;
Parlez moins haut, prenez garde à ce que vous dites,
Contemplez à genoux;
L’aigle trépas du bout de l’aile nous effleure;
Et toute notre vie, en fuite heure par heure,
S’en va derrière nous.

O coups soudains! départs vertigineux! mystère!
Combien qui ne croyaient parler que pour la terre,
Front haut, coeur fier, bras fort,
Tout à coup, comme un mur subitement s’écroule,
Au milieu d’une phrase adressée à la foule,
Sont entrés dans la mort,

Et, sous l’immensité qui n’est qu’un oeil sublime,
Ont pâli, stupéfaits de voir, dans cet abîme
D’astres et de ciel bleu,
Où le masqué se montre, où l’inconnu se nomme,
Que le mot qu’ils avaient commencé devant l’homme
S’achevait devant Dieu!

Un spectre au seuil de tout tient le doigt sur sa bouche.
Les morts partent. La nuit de sa verge les touche.
Ils vont, l’antre est profond,
Nus, et se dissipant, et l’on ne voit rien luire.
Où donc sont-ils allés? On n’a rien à vous dire.

Ceux qui s’en vont, s’en vont.

Sur quoi donc marchent-ils? sur l’énigme, sur l’ombre,
Sur l’être. Ils font un pas: comme la nef qui sombre,
Leur blancheur disparaît;
Et l’on n’entend plus rien dans l’ombre inaccessible,
Que le bruit sourd que fait dans le gouffre invisible
L’invisible forêt.

L’infini, route noire et de brume remplie,
Et qui joint l’âme à Dieu, monte, fuit, multiplie
Ses cintres tortueux,
Et s’efface... — et l’horreur effare nos pupilles
Quand nous entrevoyons les arches et les piles
De ce pont monstrueux.

O sort! obscurité! nuée! on rêve, on souffre,
Les êtres, dispersés à tous les vents du gouffre,
Ne savent ce qu’ils font.
Les vivants sont hagards. Les morts sont dans leurs couches.
Pendant que nous songeons, des pleurs, gouttes farouches,
Tombent du noir plafond.

XIV

On brave l’immuable; et l’un se réfugie
Dans l’assoupissement, et l’autre dans l’orgie.
Cet autre va criant:
— A bas vertu, devoir et foi! l’homme est un ventre! —
Dans ce lugubre esprit, comme un tigre en son antre,
Habite le néant.

Écoutez-le: — Jouir est tout. L’heure est rapide.
Le sacrifice est fou, le martyre est stupide;
Vivre est l’essentiel.
L’immensité ricane et la tombe grimace.
La vie est un caillou que le sage ramasse

Pour lapider le ciel. —

Il souffle, forçat noir, sa vermine sur l'ange.
Il est content, il est hideux; il boit, il mange;
Il rit, la lèvre en feu,
Tous les rires que peut inventer la démence;
Il dit tout ce que peut dire en sa haine immense
Le ver de terre à Dieu.

Il dit: Non! à celui sous qui tremble le pôle.
Soudain l'ange muet met la main sur l'épaule
Du railleur effronté;
La mort derrière lui surgit pendant qu'il chante;
Dieu remplit tout à coup cette bouche crachante
Avec l'éternité.

XV

Qu'est-ce que tu feras de tant d'herbes fauchées,
O vent? que feras-tu des pailles desséchées
Et de l'arbre abattu?
Que feras-tu de ceux qui s'en vont avant l'heure,
Et de celui qui rit et de celui qui pleure,
O vent, qu'en feras-tu?

Que feras-tu des coeurs! que feras-tu des âmes?
Nous aimâmes, hélas! nous crûmes, nous pensâmes:
Un moment nous brillons;
Puis, sur les panthéons ou sur les ossuaires,
Nous frissonnons, ceux-ci drapeaux, ceux-là suaires,
Tous, lambeaux et haillons!

Et ton souffle nous tient, nous arrache et nous ronge!
Et nous étions la vie, et nous sommes le songe!
Et voilà que tout fuit!
Et nous ne savons plus qui nous pousse et nous mène,
Et nous questionnons en vain notre âme pleine

De tonnerre et de nuit!

O vent, que feras-tu de ces tourbillons d’êtres,
Hommes, femmes, vieillards, enfants, esclaves, maîtres,
Souffrant, priant, aimant,
Doutant, peut-être cendre et peut-être semence,
Qui roulent, frémissants et pâles, vers l’immense
Évanouissement!

XVI

L’arbre Éternité vit sans faîte et sans racines.
Ses branches sont partout, proches du ver, voisines
Du grand astre doré;
L’espace voit sans fin croître la branche Nombre,
Et la branche Destin, végétation sombre,
Emplit l’homme effaré.

Nous la sentons ramper et grandir sous nos crânes,
Lier Deutz à Judas, Nemrod à Schinderhannes
Tordre ses mille noeuds,
Et, passants pénétrés de fibres éternelles,
Tremblants, nous la voyons croiser dans nos prunelles
Ses fils vertigineux.

Et nous apercevons, dans le plus noir de l’arbre,
Les Hobbes contemplant avec des yeux de marbre,
Les Kant aux larges fronts;
Leur cognée à la main, le pied sur les problèmes,
Immobiles; la mort a fait des spectres blêmes
De tous ces bûcherons.

Ils sont là, stupéfaits et chacun sur sa branche.
L’un se redresse, et l’autre, épouvanté, se penche.
L’un voulut, l’autre osa,
Tous se sont arrêtés en voyant le mystère.
Zénon rêve tourné vers Pyrrhon, et Voltaire

Regarde Spinosa.

Qu’avez-vous donc trouvé, dites, chercheurs sublimes?
Quels nids avez-vous vus, noirs comme des abîmes,
Sur ces rameaux noueux?
Cachaient-ils des essaims d’ailes sombres ou blanches?
Dites, avez-vous fait envoler de ces branches
Quelque aigle monstrueux?

De quelqu’un qui se tait nous sommes les ministres;
Le noir réseau du sort trouble nos yeux sinistres;
Le vent nous courbe tous;
L’ombre des mêmes nuits mêle toutes les têtes.
Qui donc sait le secret? le savez-vous, tempêtes?
Gouffres, en parlez-vous?

Le problème muet gonfle la mer sonore,
Et, sans cesse oscillant, va du soir à l’aurore
Et de la taupe au lynx;
L’énigme aux yeux profonds nous regarde obstinée;
Dans l’ombre nous voyons sur notre destinée
Les deux griffes du sphynx.

Le mot, c’est Dieu. Ce mot luit dans les âmes veuves,
Il tremble dans la flamme; onde, il coule en tes fleuves,
Homme, il coule en ton sang;
Les constellations le disent au silence;
Et le volcan, mortier de l’infini, le lance
Aux astres en passant.

Ne doutons pas. Croyons. Emplissons l’étendue
De notre confiance, humble, ailée, éperdue.
Soyons l’immense Oui.
Que notre cécité ne soit pas un obstacle;
A la création donnons ce grand spectacle
D’un aveugle ébloui.

Car, je vous le redis, votre oreille étant dure,
Non est un précipice. O vivants! rien ne dure;
La chair est aux corbeaux;
La vie autour de vous croule comme un vieux cloître;
Et l'herbe est formidable, et l'on y voit moins croître
De fleurs que de tombeaux.

Tout, dès que nous doutons, devient triste et farouche.
Quand il veut, spectre gai, le sarcasme à la bouche
Et l'ombre dans les yeux,
Rire avec l'infini, pauvre âme aventurière,
L'homme frissonnant voit les arbres en prière
Et les monts sérieux;

Le chêne ému fait signe au cèdre qui contemple;
Le rocher rêveur semble un prêtre dans le temple
Pleurant un déshonneur;
L'araignée, immobile au centre de ses toiles,
Médite; et le lion, songeant sous les étoiles,
Rugit: Pardon, Seigneur!

Jersey, cimetière de Saint-Jean, avril 1854.

UN JOUR, LE MORNE ESPRIT, LE PROPHETE SUBLIME

Un jour, le morne esprit, le prophète sublime
Qui rêvait à Patmos,
Et lisait, frémissant, sur le mur de l'abîme
De si lugubres mots,

Dit à son aigle: «O monstre! il faut que tu m'emportes.
Je veux voir Jéhovah.»
L'aigle obéit. Des cieux ils franchirent les portes;

Enfin, Jean arriva;

Il vit l'endroit sans nom dont nul archange n'ose
Traverser le milieu,
Et ce lieu redoutable était plein d'ombre, à cause
De la grandeur de Dieu.

Jersey, septembre 1855.

CLAIRE

Quoi donc! la vôtre aussi! la vôtre suit la mienne!
O mère au coeur profond, mère, vous avez beau
Laisser la porte ouverte afin qu'elle revienne,
Cette pierre là-bas dans l'herbe est un tombeau!

La mienne disparut dans les flots qui se mêlent;
Alors, ce fut ton tour, Claire, et tu t'envolas.
Est-ce donc que là-haut dans l'ombre elles s'appellent,
Qu'elles s'en vont ainsi l'une après l'autre, hélas?

Enfant qui rayonnais, qui chassais la tristesse,
Que ta mère jadis berçait de sa chanson,
Qui d'abord la charmas avec ta petitesse
Et plus tard lui remplis de clarté l'horizon,

Voilà donc que tu dors sous cette pierre grise!
Voilà que tu n'es plus, ayant à peine été!
L'astre attire le lys, et te voilà reprise,
O vierge, par l'azur, cette virginité!

Te voilà remontée au firmament sublime,
Échappée aux grands cieux comme la grive aux bois,
Et, flamme, aile, hymne, odeur, replongée à l'abîme
Des rayons, des amours, des parfums et des voix!

Nous ne t’entendrons plus rire en notre nuit noire.
Nous voyons seulement, comme pour nous bénir,
Errer dans notre ciel et dans notre mémoire
Ta figure, nuage, et ton nom, souvenir!

Pressentais-tu déjà ton sombre épithalame?
Marchant sur notre monde à pas silencieux,
De tous les idéals tu composais ton âme,
Comme si tu faisais un bouquet pour les cieux!

En te voyant si calme et toute lumineuse,
Les coeurs les plus saignants ne haïssaient plus rien.
Tu passais parmi nous comme Ruth la glaneuse,
Et, comme Ruth l’épi, tu ramassais le bien.

La nature, ô front pur, versait sur toi sa grâce,
L’aurore sa candeur, et les champs leur bonté;
Et nous retrouvions, nous sur qui la douleur passe,
Toute cette douceur dans toute ta beauté!

Chaste, elle paraissait ne pas être autre chose
Que la forme qui sort des deux éblouissants,
Et de tous les rosiers elle semblait la rose,
Et de tous les amours elle semblait l’encens.

Ceux qui n’ont pas connu cette charmante fille
Ne peuvent pas savoir ce qu’était ce regard
Transparent comme l’eau qui s’égaye et qui brille
Quand l’étoile surgit sur l’océan hagard.

Elle était simple, franche, humble, naïve et bonne;
Chantant à demi-voix son chant d’illusion,
Ayant je ne sais quoi dans toute sa personne
De vague et de lointain comme la vision.

On sentait qu’elle avait peu de temps sur la terre,

Qu’elle n’apparaissait que pour s’évanouir,
Et qu’elle acceptait peu sa vie involontaire;
Et la tombe semblait par moments l’éblouir.

Elle a passé dans l’ombre où l’homme se résigne;
Le vent sombre soufflait; elle a passé sans bruit,
Belle, candide, ainsi qu’une plume de cygne
Qui reste blanche, même en traversant la nuit!

Elle s’en est allée à l’aube qui se lève,
Lueur dans le matin, vertu dans le ciel bleu,
Bouche qui n’a connu que le baiser du rêve,
Âme qui n’a dormi que dans le lit de Dieu!

Nous voici maintenant en proie aux deuils sans bornes,
Mère, à genoux tous deux sur des cercueils sacrés,
Regardant à jamais dans les ténèbres mornes
La disparition des êtres adorés!

Croire qu’ils resteraient! quel songe! Dieu les presse.
Même quand leurs bras blancs sont autour de nos cous,
Un vent du ciel profond fait frissonner sans cesse
Ces fantômes charmants que nous croyons à nous.

Ils sont là, près de nous, jouant sur notre route;
Ils ne dédaignent pas notre soleil obscur,
Et derrière eux, et sans que leur candeur s’en doute,
Leurs ailes font parfois de l’ombre sur le mur.

Ils viennent sous nos toits; avec nous ils demeurent;
Nous leur disons: Ma fille! ou: Mon fils! ils sont doux,
Riants, joyeux, nous font une caresse, et meurent. —
O mère, ce sont là les anges, voyez-vous!

C’est une volonté du sort, pour nous sévère
Qu’ils rentrent vite au ciel resté pour eux ouvert;
Et qu’avant d’avoir mis leur lèvre à notre verre,

Avant d'avoir rien fait et d'avoir rien souffert,

Ils partent radieux; et qu'ignorant l'envie,
L'erreur, l'orgueil, le mal, la haine, la douleur,
Tous ces êtres bénis s'envolent de la vie
A l'âge où la prunelle innocente est en fleur!

Nous qui sommes démons ou qui sommes apôtres,
Nous devons travailler, attendre, préparer;
Pensifs, nous expions pour nous-même ou pour d'autres;
Notre chair doit saigner, nos yeux doivent pleurer.

Eux, ils sont l'air qui fuit, l'oiseau qui ne se pose
Qu'un instant, le soupir qui vole, avril vermeil
Qui brille et passe; ils sont le parfum de la rose
Qui va rejoindre, aux cieux le rayon du soleil!

Ils ont ce grand dégoût mystérieux de l'âme
Pour notre chair coupable et pour notre destin;
Ils ont, êtres rêveurs qu'un autre azur réclame,
Je ne sais quelle soif de mourir le matin!

Ils sont l'étoile d'or se couchant dans l'aurore,
Mourant pour nous, naissant pour l'autre firmament;
Car la mort, quand un astre en son sein vient éclore,
Continue, au delà, l'épanouissement!

Oui, mère, ce sont là les élus du mystère,
Les envoyés divins, les ailés, les vainqueurs,
A qui Dieu n'a permis que d'effleurer la terre
Pour faire un peu de joie à quelques pauvres coeurs.

Comme l'ange à Jacob, comme Jésus à Pierre,
Ils viennent jusqu'à nous qui loin d'eux étouffons,
Beaux, purs, et chacun d'eux portant sous sa paupière
La sereine clarté des paradis profonds.

Puis, quand ils ont, pieux, baisé toutes les plaies,
Pansé notre douleur, azuré nos raisons,
Et fait luire un moment l'aube à travers nos claies,
Et chanté la chanson du ciel dans nos maisons,

Ils retournent là-haut parler à Dieu des hommes,
Et, pour lui faire voir quel est notre chemin,
Tout ce que nous souffrons et tout ce que nous sommes,
S'en vont avec un peu de terre dans la main.

Ils s'en vont; c'est tantôt l'éclair qui les emporte,
Tantôt un mal plus fort que nos soins superflus.
Alors, nous, pâles, froids, l'oeil fixé sur la porte,
Nous ne savons plus rien, sinon qu'ils ne sont plus.

Nous disons: — A quoi bon l'âtre sans étincelles?
A quoi bon la maison où ne sont plus leurs pas?
A quoi bon la ramée où ne sont plus les ailes:
Qui donc attendons-nous s'ils ne reviendront pas? —

Ils sont partis, pareils au bruit qui sort des lyres.
Et nous restons là, seuls, près du gouffre où tout fuit,
Tristes; et la lueur de leurs charmants sourires
Parfois nous apparaît vaguement dans la nuit.

Car ils sont revenus, et c'est là le mystère;
Nous entendons quelqu'un flotter, un souffle errer,
Des robes effleurer notre seuil solitaire,
Et cela fait alors que nous pouvons pleurer.

Nous sentons frissonner leurs cheveux dans notre ombre;
Nous sentons, lorsqu'ayant la lassitude en nous,
Nous nous levons après quelque prière sombre,
Leurs blanches mains toucher doucement nos genoux.

Ils nous disent tout bas de leur voix la plus tendre:
«Mon père! encore un peu! ma mère! encore un jour!

M’entends-tu? Je suis là, je reste pour t’attendre
Sur l’échelon d’en bas de l’échelle d’amour.

«Je t’attends pour pouvoir nous en aller ensemble.
Cette vie est amère, et tu vas en sortir.
Pauvre coeur, ne crains rien, Dieu vit! la mort rassemble.
Tu redeviendras ange ayant été martyr.»

Oh! quand donc viendrez-vous? vous retrouver, c’est naître.
Quand verrons-nous, ainsi qu’un idéal flambeau,
La douce étoile mort, rayonnante, apparaître
A ce noir horizon qu’on nomme le tombeau?

Quand nous en irons-nous où vous êtes, colombes!
Où sont les enfants morts et les printemps enfuis,
Et tous les chers amours dont nous sommes les tombes,
Et toutes les clartés dont nous sommes les nuits?

Vers ce grand ciel clément où sont tous les dictames,
Les aimés, les absents, les êtres purs et doux,
Les baisers des esprits et les regards des âmes,
Quand nous en irons-nous? quand nous en irons-nous?

Quand nous en irons-nous où sont l’aube et la foudre?
Quand verrons-nous, déjà libres, hommes encor,
Notre chair ténébreuse en rayons se dissoudre,
Et nos pieds faits de nuit éclore en ailes d’or?

Quand nous enfuirons-nous dans la joie infinie
Où les hymnes vivants sont des anges voilés,
Où l’on voit, à travers l’azur de l’harmonie,
La strophe bleue errer sur les luths étoilés?

Quand viendrez-vous chercher notre humble coeur qui sombre,
Quand nous reprendrez-vous à ce monde charnel,
Pour nous bercer ensemble aux profondeurs de l’ombre,
Sous l’éblouissement du regard éternel?

Décembre 1846.

IX

À LA FENÊTRE PENDANT LA NUIT

I

Les étoiles, points d’or, percent les branches noires;
Le flot huileux et lourd décompose ses moires
Sur l’océan blêmi;
Les nuages ont l’air d’oiseaux prenant la fuite;
Par moments le vent parle, et dit des mots sans suite,
Comme un homme endormi.

Tout s’en va. La nature est l’urne mal fermée.
La tempête est écume et la flamme est fumée.
Rien n’est hors du moment,
L’homme n’a rien qu’il prenne, et qu’il tienne, et qu’il garde.
Il tombe heure par heure, et, ruine, il regarde
Le monde, écroulement.

L’astre est-il le point fixe en ce mouvant problème?
Ce ciel que nous voyons fut-il toujours le même?
Le sera-t-il toujours?
L’homme a-t-il sur son front des clartés éternelles?
Et verra-t-il toujours les mêmes sentinelles
Monter aux mêmes tours?

II

Nuits, serez-vous pour nous toujours ce que vous êtes?
Pour toute vision, aurons-nous sur nos têtes
Toujours les mêmes cieux?
Dis, larve Aldebaran, réponds, spectre Saturne,
Ne verrons-nous jamais sur le masque nocturne
S’ouvrir de nouveaux yeux?

Ne verrons-nous jamais briller de nouveaux astres?
Et des cintres nouveaux, et de nouveaux pilastres
Luire à notre oeil mortel,
Dans cette cathédrale aux formidables porches
Dont le septentrion éclaire avec sept torches,
L’effrayant maître-autel?

A-t-il cessé, le vent qui fit naître ces roses,
Sirius, Orion, toi, Vénus, qui reposes
Notre oeil dans le péril?
Ne verrons-nous jamais sous ces grandes haleines
D’autres fleurs de lumière éclore dans les plaines
De l’éternel avril?

Savons-nous où le monde en est de son mystère?
Qui nous dit, à nous, joncs du marais, vers de terre
Dont la bave reluit,
A nous qui n’avons pas nous-mêmes notre preuve,
Que Dieu ne va pas mettre une tiare neuve
Sur le front de la nuit?

III

Dieu n’a-t-il plus de flamme à ses lèvres profondes?
N’en fait-il plus jaillir des tourbillons de mondes?
Parlez, Nord et Midi!
N’emplit-il plus de lui sa création sainte?
Et ne souffle-t-il plus que d’une bouche éteinte
Sur l’être refroidi?

Quand les comètes vont et viennent, formidables,
Apportant la lueur des gouffres insondables,
A nos fronts soucieux,
Brûlant, volant, peut-être âmes, peut-être mondes,
Savons-nous ce que font toutes ces vagabondes
Qui courent dans nos cieux?

Qui donc a vu la source et connaît l’origine?
Qui donc, ayant sondé l’abîme, s’imagine
En être mage et roi?
Ah! fantômes humains, courbés sous les désastres!
Qui donc a dit: — C’est bien, Éternel. Assez d’astres.
N’en fais plus. Calme-toi! —

L’effet séditieux limiterait la cause?
Quelle bouche ici-bas peut dire à quelque chose:
Tu n’iras pas plus loin?
Sous l’élargissement sans fin, la borne plie;
La création vit, croît et se multiplie;
L’homme n’est qu’un témoin.

L’homme n’est qu’un témoin frémissant d’épouvante.
Les firmaments sont pleins de la sève vivante
Comme les animaux.
L’arbre prodigieux croise, agrandit, transforme,
Et mêle aux cieux profonds, comme une gerbe énorme,
Ses ténébreux rameaux.

Car la création est devant, Dieu derrière.
L’homme, du côté noir de l’obscure barrière,
Vit, rôdeur curieux;
Il suffit que son front se lève pour qu’il voie
A travers la sinistre et morne claire-voie
Cet oeil mystérieux.

IV

Donc ne nous disons pas: — Nous avons nos étoiles. —
Des flottes de soleils peut-être à pleines voiles
Viennent en ce moment;
Peut-être que demain le Créateur terrible,
Refaisant notre nuit, va contre un autre crible
Changer le firmament.

Qui sait? que savons-nous? sur notre horizon sombre,
Que la création impénétrable encombre
De ses taillis sacrés,
Muraille obscure où vient battre le flot de l'être,
Peut-être allons-nous voir brusquement apparaître
Des astres effarés;

Des astres éperdus arrivant des abîmes,
Venant des profondeurs ou descendant des cimes,
Et, sous nos noirs arceaux,
Entrant en foule, épars, ardents, pareils au rêve,
Comme dans un grand vent s'abat sur une grève
Une troupe d'oiseaux;

Surgissant, clairs flambeaux, feux purs, rouges fournaises,
Aigrettes de rubis ou tourbillons de braises,
Sur nos bords, sur nos monts,
Et nous pétrifiant de leurs aspects étranges,
Car dans le gouffre énorme il est des mondes anges
Et des soleils démons!

Peut-être en ce moment, du fond des nuits funèbres,
Montant vers nous, gonflant ses vagues de ténèbres
Et ses flots de rayons,
Le muet Infini, sombre mer ignorée,
Roule vers notre ciel une grande marée
De constellations!

Marine-Terrace, avril 1854.

X

ÉCLAIRCIE

L'Océan resplendit sous sa vaste nuée.
L'onde, de son combat sans fin exténuée,

S’assoupit, et, laissant l’écueil se reposer,
Fait de toute la rive un immense baiser.
On dirait qu’en tous lieux, en même temps, la vie
Dissout le mal, le deuil, l’hiver, la nuit, l’envie,
Et que le mort couché dit au vivant debout:
Aime! et qu’une âme obscure, épanouie en tout,
Avance doucement sa bouche vers nos lèvres.
L’être, éteignant dans l’ombre et l’extase ses fièvres,
Ouvrant ses flancs, ses seins, ses yeux, ses coeurs épars,
Dans ses pores profonds reçoit de toutes parts
La pénétration de la sève sacrée.
La grande paix d’en haut vient comme une marée.
Le brin d’herbe palpite aux fentes du pavé;
Et l’âme a chaud. On sent que le nid est couvé.
L’infini semble plein d’un frisson de feuillée.
On croit être à cette heure où la terre éveillée
Entend le bruit que fait l’ouverture du jour,
Le premier pas du vent, du travail, de l’amour,
De l’homme, et le verrou de la porte sonore,
Et le hennissement du blanc cheval aurore.
Le moineau d’un coup d’aile, ainsi qu’un fol esprit,
Vient taquiner le flot monstrueux qui sourit;
L’air joue avec la mouche et l’écume avec l’aigle;
Le grave laboureur fait ses sillons et règle
La page où s’écrira le poëme des blés;
Des pêcheurs sont là-bas sous un pampre attablés;
L’horizon semble un rêve éblouissant où nage
L’écaille de la mer, la plume du nuage,
Car l’Océan est hydre et le nuage oiseau.
Une lueur, rayon vague, part du berceau
Qu’une femme balance au seuil d’une chaumière,
Dore les champs, les fleurs, l’onde et devient lumière
En touchant un tombeau qui dort près du clocher.
Le jour plonge au plus noir du gouffre, et va chercher
L’ombre, et la baise au front sous l’eau sombre et hagarde.
Tout est doux, calme, heureux, apaisé; Dieu regarde.

OH! PAR NOS VILS PLAISIRS, NOS APPETITS, NOS FANGES

Oh! par nos vils plaisirs, nos appétits, nos fanges,
Que de fois nous devons vous attrister, archanges!
C’est vraiment une chose amère de songer
Qu’en ce monde où l’esprit n’est qu’un morne étranger
Où la volupté rit, jeune, et si décrépite!
Où dans les lits profonds l’aile d’en bas palpite,
Quand, pâmé, dans un nimbe ou bien dans un éclair,
On tend sa bouche ardente aux coupes de la chair,
A l’heure ou l’on s’enivre aux lèvres d’une femme,
De ce qu’on croit l’amour, de ce qu’on prend pour l’âme,
Sang du coeur, vin des sens âcre et délicieux,
On fait rougir là-haut quelque passant des cieux!

Juin 1855.

AUX ANGES QUI NOUS VOIENT
— Passant, qu’es-tu? je te connais.
Mais, étant spectre, ombre et nuage,
Tu n’as plus de sexe ni d’âge.
— Je suis ta mère, et je venais!

— Et toi dont l’aile hésite et brille,
Dont l’oeil est noyé de douceur,
Qu’es-tu, passant? — Je suis ta soeur
— Et toi, qu’es-tu? — Je suis ta fille.

— Et toi, qu’es-tu, passant? — Je suis
Celle à qui tu disais: «Je t’aime!»

— Et toi? — Je suis ton âme même. —
Oh! cachez-moi, profondes nuits!

CADAVER

O mort! heure splendide! ô rayons mortuaires!
Avez-vous quelquefois soulevé des suaires?
Et, pendant qu'on pleurait, et qu'au chevet du lit,
Frères, amis, enfants, la mère qui pâlit,
Éperdus, sanglotaient dans le deuil qui les navre,
Avez-vous regardé sourire le cadavre?
Tout à l'heure il râlait, se tordait, étouffait;
Maintenant il rayonne. Abîme! qui donc fait
Cette lueur qu'a l'homme en entrant dans les ombres?
Qu'est-ce que le sépulcre? et d'où vient, penseurs sombres,
Cette sérénité formidable des morts?
C'est que le secret s'ouvre et que l'être est dehors;
C'est que l'âme — qui voit, puis brille, puis flamboie, —
Rit, et que le corps même a sa terrible joie.
La chair se dit: — Je vais être terre, et germer,
Et fleurir comme sève, et, comme fleur, aimer!
Je vais me rajeunir dans la jeunesse énorme
Du buisson, de l'eau vive, et du chêne, et de l'orme,
Et me répandre aux lacs, aux flots, aux monts, aux prés,
Aux rochers, aux splendeurs des grands couchants pour prés,
Aux ravins, aux halliers, aux brises de la nue,
Aux murmures profonds de la vie inconnue!
Je vais être oiseau, vent, cri des eaux, bruit des cieux,
Et palpitation du tout prodigieux! —
Tous ces atomes las, dont l'homme était le maître,
Sont joyeux d'être mis en liberté dans l'être,
De vivre, et de rentrer au gouffre qui leur plaît.
L'haleine, que la fièvre aigrissait et brûlait,

Va devenir parfum, et la voix harmonie;
Le sang va retourner à la veine infinie,
Et couler, ruisseau clair, aux champs où le boeuf roux
Mugit le soir avec l'herbe jusqu'aux genoux;
Les os ont déjà pris la majesté des marbres;
La chevelure sent le grand frisson des arbres,
Et songe aux cerfs errants, au lierre, aux nids chantants
Qui vont l'emplir du souffle adoré du printemps.
Et voyez le regard, qu'une ombre étrange voile,
Et qui, mystérieux, semble un lever d'étoile!

Oui, Dieu le veut, la mort, c'est l'ineffable chant
De l'âme et de la bête à la fin se lâchant;
C'est une double issue ouverte à l'être double.
Dieu disperse, à cette heure inexprimable et trouble,
Le corps dans l'univers et l'âme dans l'amour.
Une espèce d'azur que dore un vague jour,
L'air de l'éternité, puissant, calme, salubre,
Frémit et resplendit sous le linceul lugubre;
Et des plis du drap noir tombent tous nos ennuis.
La mort est bleue. O mort! ô paix! l'ombre des nuits,
Le roseau des étangs, le roc du monticule,
L'épanouissement sombre du crépuscule,
Le vent, souffle farouche ou providentiel,
L'air, la terre, le feu, l'eau, tout, même le ciel,
Se mêle à cette chair qui devient solennelle.
Un commencement d'astre éclôt dans la prunelle.

Au cimetière, août 1855.

Ô GOUFFRE! L'AME PLONGE ET RAPPORTE LE DOUTE

Ô gouffre! l'âme plonge et rapporte le doute.

Nous entendons sur nous les heures, goutte à goutte,
Tomber comme l’eau sur les plombs;
L’homme est brumeux, le monde est noir, le ciel est sombre;
Les formes de la nuit vont et viennent dans l’ombre;
Et nous, pâles, nous contemplons.

Nous contemplons l’obscur, l’inconnu, l’invisible.
Nous sondons le réel, l’idéal, le possible,
L’être, spectre toujours présent.
Nous regardons trembler l’ombre indéterminée.
Nous sommes accoudés sur notre destinée,
L’oeil fixe et l’esprit frémissant.

Nous épions des bruits dans ces vides funèbres;
Nous écoutons le souffle, errant dans les ténèbres,
Dont frissonne l’obscurité;
Et, par moment, perdus dans les nuits insondables,
Nous voyons s’éclairer de lueurs formidables
La vitre de l’éternité.

Marine-Terrace, septembre 1853.

XV

A CELLE QUI EST VOILÉE

Tu me parles du fond d’un rêve
Comme une âme parle aux vivants.
Comme l’écume de la grève,
Ta robe flotte dans les vents.

Je suis l’algue des flots sans nombre,
Le captif du destin vainqueur;
Je suis celui que toute l’ombre
Couvre sans éteindre son coeur.

Mon esprit ressemble à cette île,

Et mon sort à cet océan;
Et je suis l'habitant tranquille
De la foudre et de l'ouragan.

Je suis le proscrit qui se voile,
Qui songe, et chante loin du bruit,
Avec la chouette et l'étoile,
La sombre chanson de la nuit.

Toi, n'es-tu pas, comme moi-même,
Flambeau dans ce monde âpre et vif,
Ame, c'est-à-dire problème,
Et femme, c'est-à-dire exil?

Sors du nuage, ombre charmante.
O fantôme, laisse-toi voir!
Sois un phare dans ma tourmente,
Sois un regard dans mon ciel noir!

Cherche-moi parmi les mouettes!
Dresse un rayon sur mon récif,
Et, dans mes profondeurs muettes,
La blancheur de l'ange pensif!

Sois l'aile qui passe et se mêle
Aux grandes vagues en courroux.
Oh! viens! tu dois être bien belle,
Car ton chant lointain est bien doux;

Car la nuit engendre l'aurore;
C'est peut-être une loi des cieux
Que mon noir destin fasse éclore
Ton sourire mystérieux!

Dans ce ténébreux monde où j'erre,
Nous devons nous apercevoir,
Toi, toute faite de lumière,

Moi, tout composé de devoir!

Tu me dis de loin que tu m’aimes,
Et que, la nuit, à l’horizon,
Tu viens voir sur les grèves blêmes
Le spectre blanc de ma maison.

Là, méditant sous le grand dôme,
Près du flot sans trêve agité,
Surprise de trouver l’atome
Ressemblant à l’immensité,

Tu compares, sans me connaître,
L’onde à l’homme, l’ombre au banni,
Ma lampe étoilant ma fenêtre
A l’astre étoilant l’infini!

Parfois, comme au fond d’une tombe,
Je te sens sur mon front fatal,
Bouche de l’inconnu d’où tombe
Le pur baiser de l’Idéal.

A ton souffle, vers Dieu poussées,
Je sens en moi, douce frayeur,
Frissonner toutes mes pensées,
Feuilles de l’arbre intérieur.

Mais tu ne veux pas qu’on te voie;
Tu viens et tu fuis tour à tour;
Tu ne veux pas te nommer joie,
Ayant dit: Je m’appelle amour.

Oh, fais un pas de plus! viens, entre,
Si nul devoir ne le défend;
Viens voir mon âme dans son antre,
L’esprit lion, le coeur enfant;

Viens voir le désert où j’habite,
Seul sous mon plafond effrayant;
Sois l’ange chez le cénobite,
Sois la clarté chez le voyant.

Change en perles dans mes décombres
Toutes mes gouttes de sueur!
Viens poser sur mes oeuvres sombres
Ton doigt d’où sort une lueur!

Du bord des sinistres ravines
Du rêve et de la vision,
J’entrevois les choses divines... —
Complète l’apparition!

Viens voir le songeur qui s’enflamme
A mesure qu’il se détruit,
Et de jour en jour dans son âme
A plus de mort et moins de nuit!

Viens! viens dans ma brume hagarde,
Où naît la foi, d’où l’esprit sort,
Où confusément je regarde
Les formes obscures du sort.

Tout s’éclaire aux lueurs funèbres;
Dieu, pour le penseur attristé,
Ouvre toujours dans les ténèbres
De brusques gouffres de clarté.

Avant d’être sur cette terre,
Je sens que jadis j’ai plané;
J’étais l’archange solitaire,
Et mon malheur, c’est d’être né.

Sur mon âme, qui fut colombe,
Viens, toi qui des cieux as le sceau.

Quelquefois une plume tombe
Sur le cadavre d'un oiseau.

Oui, mon malheur irréparable,
C'est de pendre aux deux éléments,
C'est d'avoir en moi, misérable,
De la fange et des firmaments!

Hélas! hélas! c'est d'être un homme;
C'est de songer que j'étais beau,
D'ignorer comment je me nomme,
D'être un ciel et d'être un tombeau!

C'est d'être un forçat qui promène
Son vil labeur sous le ciel bleu;
C'est de porter la hotte humaine
Où j'avais vos ailes, mon Dieu!

C'est de traîner de la matière;
C'est d'être plein, moi, fils du jour,
De la terre du cimetière,
Même quand je m'écrie: Amour!

Marine-Terrace, janvier 1854.

HORROR

I

Esprit mystérieux qui, le doigt sur ta bouche,
Passes... ne t'en va pas! parle à l'homme farouche
Ivre d'ombre et d'immensité,
Parle-moi, toi, front blanc, qui dans ma nuit te penches;
Réponds-moi, toi qui luis et marches sous les branches,
Comme un souffle de la clarté!

Est-ce toi que chez moi minuit parfois apporte?
Est-ce toi qui heurtais l'autre nuit à ma porte,
Pendant que je ne dormais pas?
C'est donc vers moi que vient lentement ta lumière?
La pierre de mon seuil peut-être est la première
Des sombres marches du trépas.

Peut-être qu'à ma porte ouvrant sur l'ombre immense,
L'invisible escalier des ténèbres commence;
Peut-être, ô pâles échappés,
Quand vous montez du fond de l'horreur sépulcrale,
O morts, quand vous sortez de la froide spirale,
Est-ce chez moi que vous frappez!

Car la maison d'exil, mêlée aux catacombes,
Est adossée au mur de la ville des tombes.
Le proscrit est celui qui sort;
Il flotte submergé comme la nef qui sombre;
Le jour le voit à peine et dit: Quelle est cette ombre?
Et la nuit dit: Quel est ce mort?

Sois la bienvenue, ombre! ô ma soeur! ô figure
Qui me fais signe alors que sur l'énigme obscure
Je me penche, sinistre et seul;
Et qui viens, m'effrayant de ta lueur sublime,
Essuyer sur mon front la sueur de l'abîme
Avec un pan de ton linceul!

II

Oh! que le gouffre est noir et que l'oeil est débile!
Nous avons devant nous le silence immobile.
Qui sommes-nous? où sommes-nous?
Faut-il jouir? faut-il pleurer? Ceux qu'on rencontre
Passent. Quelle est la loi? La prière nous montre
L'écorchure de ses genoux.

D’où viens-tu? — Je ne sais. — Où vas-tu? — Je l’ignore.
L’homme ainsi parle à l’homme et l’onde au flot sonore.
Tout va, tout vient, tout ment, tout fuit.
Parfois nous devenons pâles, hommes et femmes,
Comme si nous sentions se fermer sur nos âmes
La main de la géante nuit.

Nous voyons fuir la flèche et l’ombre est sur la cible.
L’homme est lancé. Par qui? vers qui? Dans l’invisible.
L’arc ténébreux siffle dans l’air.
En voyant ceux qu’on aime en nos bras se dissoudre,
Nous demandons si c’est pour la mort, coup de foudre,
Qu’est faite, hélas! la vie éclair!

Nous demandons, vivants douteux qu’un linceul couvre,
Si le profond tombeau qui devant nous s’entr’ouvre,
Abîme, espoir, asile, écueil,
N’est pas le firmament plein d’étoiles sans nombre,
Et si tous les clous d’or qu’on voit au ciel dans l’ombre
Ne sont pas les clous du cercueil?

Nous sommes là; nos dents tressaillent, nos vertèbres
Frémissent; on dirait parfois que les ténèbres,
O terreur! sont pleines de pas.
Qu’est-ce que l’ouragan, nuit? — C’est quelqu’un qui passe.
Nous entendons souffler les chevaux de l’espace
Traînant le char qu’on ne voit pas.

L’ombre semble absorbée en une idée unique.
L’eau sanglote; à l’esprit la forêt communique
Un tremblement contagieux;
Et tout semble éclairé, dans la brume où tout penche,
Du reflet que ferait la grande pierre blanche
D’un sépulcre prodigieux.

III

La chose est pour la chose ici-bas un problème.
L’être pour l’être est sphinx. L’aube au jour paraît blême
L’éclair est noir pour le rayon.
Dans la création vague et crépusculaire,
Les objets effarés qu’un jour sinistre éclaire
Sont l’un pour l’autre vision.

La cendre ne sait pas ce que pense le marbre;
L’écueil écoute en vain le flot; la branche d’arbre
Ne sait pas ce que dit le vent.
Qui punit-on ici? Passez sans vous connaître!
Est-ce toi le coupable, enfant qui viens de naître?
O mort, est-ce toi le vivant?

Nous avons dans l’esprit des sommets, nos idées,
Nos rêves, nos vertus, d’escarpements bordées,
Et nos espoirs construits si tôt;
Nous tâchons d’appliquer à ces cimes étranges
L’âpre échelle de feu par où montent les anges;
Job est en bas, Christ est en haut.

Nous aimons. A quoi bon? Nous souffrons. Pour quoi faire?
Je préfère mourir et m’en aller. Préfère.
Allez, choisissez vos chemins.
L’être effrayant se tait au fond du ciel nocturne,
Et regarde tomber de la bouche de l’urne
Le flot livide des humains.

Nous pensons. Après? Rampe, esprit! garde tes chaînes.
Quand vous vous promenez le soir parmi les chênes
Et les rochers aux vagues yeux,
Ne sentez-vous pas l’ombre où vos regards se plongent
Reculer? Savez-vous seulement à quoi songent
Tous ces muets mystérieux?

Nous jugeons. Nous dressons l’échafaud. L’homme tue
Et meurt. Le genre humain, foule d’erreur vêtue,

Condamne, extermine, détruit,
Puis s'en va. Le poteau du gibet, ô démence!
O deuil! est le bâton de cet aveugle immense
Marchant dans cette immense nuit.

Crime! enfer! quel zénith effrayant que le nôtre,
Où les douze Césars toujours l'un après l'autre
Reviennent, noirs soleils errants!
L'homme, au-dessus de lui, du fond des maux sans borne,
Voit éternellement tourner dans son ciel morne
Ce zodiaque de tyrans.

IV

Depuis quatre mille ans que, courbé sous la haine,
Perçant sa tombe avec les débris de sa chaîne,
Fouillant le bas, creusant le haut,
Il cherche à s'évader à travers la nature,
L'esprit forçat n'a pas encor fait d'ouverture
A la voûte du ciel cachot.

Oui, le penseur en vain, dans ses essors funèbres,
Heurte son âme d'ombre au plafond de ténèbres;
Il tombe, il meurt; son temps est court;
Et nous n'entendons rien, dans la nuit qu'il nous lègue
Que ce que dit tout bas la création bègue
A l'oreille du tombeau sourd.

Nous sommes les passants, les foules et les races.
Nous sentons, frissonnants, des souffles sur nos faces.
Nous sommes le gouffre agité;
Nous sommes ce que l'air chasse au vent de son aile;
Nous sommes les flocons de la neige éternelle
Dans l'éternelle obscurité.

Pour qui luis-tu, Vénus? Où roules-tu, Saturne?
Ils vont: rien ne répond dans l'éther taciturne.

L’homme grelotte, seul et nu.
L’étendue aux flots noirs déborde, d’horreur pleine;
L’énigme a peur du mot; l’infini semble à peine
Pouvoir contenir l’inconnu.

Toujours la nuit! jamais l’azur! jamais l’aurore!
Nous marchons. Nous n’avons point fait un pas encore!
Nous rêvons ce qu’Adam rêva;
La création flotte et fuit, des vents battue;
Nous distinguons dans l’ombre une immense statue
Et nous lui disons: Jéhovah!

Marine-Terrace, nuit du 30 mars 1854.

XVII

DOLOR

Création! figure en deuil! Isis austère!
Peut-être l’homme est-il son trouble et son mystère?
Peut-être qu’elle nous craint tous,
Et qu’à l’heure où, ployés sous notre loi mortelle,
Hagards et stupéfaits, nous tremblons devant elle,
Elle frissonne devant nous!

Ne riez point. Souffrez gravement. Soyons dignes,
Corbeaux, hiboux, vautours, de redevenir cygnes!
Courbons-nous sous l’obscure loi.
Ne jetons pas le doute aux flots comme une sonde.
Marchons sans savoir où, parlons sans qu’on réponde,
Et pleurons sans savoir pourquoi.

Homme, n’exige pas qu’on rompe le silence;
Dis-toi: Je suis puni. Baisse la tête et pense.
C’est assez de ce que tu vois.
Une parole peut sortir du puits farouche;
Ne la demande pas. Si l’abîme est la bouche,

Ô Dieu, qu’est-ce donc que la voix?

Ne nous irritons pas. Il n’est pas bon de faire,
Vers la clarté qui luit au centre de la sphère,
A travers les cieux transparents,
Voler l’affront, les cris, le rire et la satire,
Et que le chandelier à sept branches attire
Tous ces noirs phalènes errants.

Nais, grandis, rêve, souffre, aime, vis, vieillis, tombe.
L’explication sainte et calme est dans la tombe.
O vivants, ne blasphémons point.
Qu’importe à l’Incréé, qui, soulevant ses voiles,
Nous offre le grand ciel, les mondes, les étoiles,
Qu’une ombre lui montre le poing?

Nous figurons-nous donc qu’à l’heure où tout le prie,
Pendant qu’il crée et vit, pendant qu’il approprie
A chaque astre une humanité,
Nous pouvons de nos cris troubler sa plénitude,
Cracher notre néant jusqu’en sa solitude,
Et lui gâter l’éternité?

Être! quand dans l’éther tu dessinas les formes,
Partout où tu traças les orbites énormes
Des univers qui n’étaient pas,
Des soleils ont jailli, fleurs de flamme, et sans nombre,
Des trous qu’au firmament, en s’y posant dans l’ombre,
Fit la pointe de ton compas!

Qui sommes-nous? La nuit, la mort, l’oubli, personne.
Il est. Cette splendeur suffit pour qu’on frissonne.
C’est lui l’amour, c’est lui le feu.
Quand les fleurs en avril éclatent pêle-mêle,
C’est lui. C’est lui qui gonfle, ainsi qu’une mamelle,
La rondeur de l’océan bleu.

Le penseur cherche l’homme et trouve de la cendre.
Il trouve l’orgueil froid, le mal, l’amour à vendre,
L’erreur, le sac d’or effronté,
La haine et son couteau, l’envie et son suaire,
En mettant au hasard la main dans l’ossuaire
Que nous nommons humanité.

Parce que nous souffrons, noirs et sans rien connaître,
Stupide, l’homme dit: — Je ne veux pas de l’Être!
Je souffre; donc, l’Être n’est pas! —
Tu n’admires que toi, vil passant, dans ce monde!
Tu prends pour de l’argent, ô ver, ta bave immonde
Marquant la place où tu rampas!

Notre nuit veut rayer ce jour qui nous éclaire;
Nous crispons sur ce nom nos doigts pleins de colère;
Rage d’enfant qui coûte cher!
Et nous nous figurons, race imbécile et dure,
Que nous avons un peu de Dieu dans notre ordure
Entre notre ongle et notre chair!

Nier l’Être! à quoi bon? L’ironie âpre et noire
Peut-elle se pencher sur le gouffre et le boire,
Comme elle boit son propre fiel?
Quand notre orgueil le tait, notre douleur le nomme.
Le sarcasme peut-il, en crevant l’oeil à l’homme,
Crever les étoiles au ciel?

Ah! quand nous le frappons, c’est pour nous qu’est la plaie.
Pensons, croyons. Voit-on l’océan qui bégaie,
Mordre avec rage son bâillon?
Adorons-le dans l’astre, et la fleur, et la femme.
O vivants, la pensée est la pourpre de l’âme;
Le blasphème en est le haillon.

Ne raillons pas. Nos coeurs sont les pavés du temple.
Il nous regarde, lui que l’infini contemple.

Insensé qui nie et qui mord!
Dans un rire imprudent, ne faisons pas, fils d’Ève,
Apparaître nos dents devant son oeil qui rêve,
Comme elles seront dans la mort.

La femme nue, ayant les hanches découvertes,
Chair qui tente l’esprit, rit sous les feuilles vertes;
N’allons pas rire à son côté.
Ne chantons pas: — Jouir est tout. Le ciel est vide. —
La nuit a peur, vous dis-je! elle devient livide
En contemplant l’immensité.

O douleur! clef des deux, l’ironie est fumée.
L’expiation rouvre une porte fermée;
Les souffrances sont des faveurs.
Regardons, au-dessus des multitudes folles,
Monter vers les gibets et vers les auréoles
Les grands sacrifiés rêveurs.

Monter, c’est s’immoler. Toute cime est sévère.
L’Olympe lentement se transforme en Calvaire;
Partout le martyre est écrit;
Une immense croix gît dans notre nuit profonde;
Et nous voyons saigner aux quatre coins du monde
Les quatre clous de Jésus-Christ.

Ah! vivants, vous doutez! ah! vous riez, squelettes!
Lorsque l’aube apparaît, ceinte de bandelettes
D’or, d’émeraude et de carmin,
Vous huez, vous prenez, larves que le jour dore,
Pour la jeter au front céleste de l’aurore,
De la cendre dans votre main.

Vous criez: — Tout est mal. L’aigle vaut le reptile;
Tout ce que nous voyons n’est qu’une ombre inutile.
La vie au néant nous vomit.
Rien avant, rien après. Le sage doute et raille. —

Et, pendant ce temps-là, le brin d’herbe tressaille,
L’aube pleure, et le vent gémit.

Chaque fois qu’ici-bas l’homme, en proie aux désastres,
Rit, blasphème, et secoue, en regardant les astres,
Le sarcasme, ce vil lambeau,
Les morts se dressent froids au fond du caveau sombre,
Et de leur doigt de spectre écrivent — DIEU — dans l’ombre,
Sous la pierre de leur tombeau.

Marine-Terrace, 31 mars 1854.

XVIII

HELAS! TOUT EST SEPULCRE. ON EN SORT, ON Y TOMBE

Hélas! tout est sépulcre. On en sort, on y tombe:
La nuit est la muraille immense de la tombe.
Les astres, dont luit la clarté,
Orion, Sirius, Mars, Jupiter, Mercure,
Sont les cailloux qu’on voit dans ta tranchée obscure,
O sombre fosse Éternité!

Une nuit, un esprit me parla dans un rêve,
Et me dit: — Je suis aigle en un ciel où se lève
Un soleil qui t’est inconnu.
J’ai voulu soulever un coin du vaste voile;
J’ai voulu voir de près ton ciel et ton étoile;
Et c’est pourquoi je suis venu;

Et, quand j’ai traversé les cieux grands et terribles,
Quand j’ai vu le monceau des ténèbres horribles
Et l’abîme énorme où l’oeil fuit,
Je me suis demandé si cette ombre où l’on souffre
Pourrait jamais combler ce puits, et si ce gouffre

Pourrait contenir cette nuit!

Et, moi, l’aigle lointain, épouvanté, j’arrive.
Et je crie, et je viens m’abattre sur ta rive,
Près de toi, songeur sans flambeau.
Connais-tu ces frissons, cette horreur, ce vertige,
Toi, l’autre aigle de l’autre azur? — Je suis, lui dis-je,
L’autre ver de l’autre tombeau.

Au dolmen de la Corbière, juin 1855.

VOYAGE DE NUIT

On conteste, on dispute, on proclame, on ignore.
Chaque religion est une tour sonore;
Ce qu’un prêtre édifie, un prêtre le détruit;
Chaque temple, tirant sa corde dans la nuit,
Fait, dans l’obscurité sinistre et solennelle,
Rendre un son différent à la cloche éternelle.
Nul ne connaît le fond, nul ne voit le sommet.
Tout l’équipage humain semble en démence; on met
Un aveugle en vigie, un manchot à la barre;
A peine a-t-on passé du sauvage au barbare,
A peine a-t-on franchi le plus noir de l’horreur,
A peine a-t-on, parmi le vertige et l’erreur,
Dans ce brouillard où l’homme attend, songe et soupire,
Sans sortir du mauvais, fait un pas hors du pire,
Que le vieux temps revient et nous mord les talons,
Et nous crie: Arrêtez! Socrate dit: Allons!
Jésus-Christ dit: Plus loin! et le sage et l’apôtre
S’en vont se demander dans le ciel l’un à l’autre
Quel goût a la ciguë et quel goût a le fiel.
Par moments, voyant l’homme ingrat, fourbe et cruel,
Satan lui prend la main sous le linceul de l’ombre.
Nous appelons science un tâtonnement sombre.

L’abîme, autour de nous, lugubre tremblement,
S’ouvre et se ferme; et l’oeil s’effraie également
De ce qui s’engloutit et de ce qui surnage.
Sans cesse le progrès, roue au double engrenage,
Fait marcher quelque chose en écrasant quelqu’un.
Le mal peut être joie, et le poison parfum.
Le crime avec la loi, morne et mélancolique,
Lutte; le poignard parle, et l’échafaud réplique.
Nous entendons, sans voir la source ni la fin,
Derrière notre nuit, derrière notre faim,
Rire l’ombre Ignorance et la larve Misère.
Le lys a-t-il raison? et l’astre est-il sincère?
Je dis oui, tu dis non. Ténèbres et rayons
Affirment à la fois. Doute, Adam! nous voyons
De la nuit dans l’enfant, de la nuit dans la femme;
Et sur notre avenir nous querellons notre âme;
Et, brûlé, puis glacé, chaos, semoun, frimas,
L’homme de l’infini traverse les climats.
Tout est brume; le vent souffle avec des huées,
Et de nos passions arrache des nuées;
Rousseau dit: L’homme monte; et de Maistre: Il descend!
Mais, ô Dieu! le navire énorme et frémissant,
Le monstrueux vaisseau sans agrès et sans voiles,
Qui flotte, globe noir, dans la mer des étoiles,
Et qui porte nos maux, fourmillement humain,
Va, marche, vogue et roule, et connaît son chemin;
Le ciel sombre, où parfois la blancheur semble éclore,
A l’effrayant roulis mêle un frisson d’aurore,
De moment en moment le sort est moins obscur,
Et l’on sent bien qu’on est emporté vers l’azur.

RELLIGIO

L’ombre venait; le soir tombait, calme et terrible.
Hermann me dit: — Quelle est ta foi, quelle est ta bible?
Parle. Es-tu ton propre géant?
Si tes vers ne sont pas de vains flocons d’écume,
Si ta strophe n’est pas un tison noir qui fume
Sur le tas de cendre Néant,

Si tu n’es pas une âme en l’abîme engloutie,
Quel est donc ton ciboire et ton eucharistie?
Quelle est donc la source où tu bois?
Je me taisais; il dit: — Songeur qui civilises,
Pourquoi ne vas-tu pas prier dans les églises? —
Nous marchions tous deux dans les bois.

Et je lui dis: — Je prie. — Hermann dit: — Dans quel temple?
Quel est le célébrant que ton âme contemple,
Et l’autel qu’elle réfléchit?
Devant quel confesseur la fais-tu comparaître?
— L’église, c’est l’azur, lui dis-je; et quant au prêtre... —
En ce moment le ciel blanchit.

La lune à l’horizon montait, hostie énorme;
Tout avait le frisson, le pin, le cèdre et l’orme,
Le loup, et l’aigle, et l’alcyon;
Lui montrant l’astre d’or sur la terre obscurcie,
Je lui dis: — Courbe-toi. Dieu lui-même officie,
Et voici l’élévation.

SPES

De partout, de l’abîme où n’est pas Jéhovah,
Jusqu’au zénith, plafond où l’espérance va
Se casser l’aile et d’où redescend la prière,

En bas, en haut, au fond, en avant, en arrière,
L’énorme obscurité qu’agitent tous les vents,
Enveloppe, linceul, les morts et les vivants,
Et sur le monstrueux, sur l’impur, sur l’horrible,
Laisse tomber les pans de son rideau terrible;
Si l’on parle à la brume effrayante qui fuit,
L’immensité dit: Mort! L’éternité dit: Nuit!

L’âme, sans lire un mot, feuillette un noir registre;
L’univers tout entier est un géant sinistre;
L’aveugle est d’autant plus affreux qu’il est plus grand;
Tout semble le chevet d’un immense mourant;
Tout est l’ombre; pareille au reflet d’une lampe,
Au fond, une lueur imperceptible rampe;
C’est à peine un coin blanc, pas même une rougeur.
Un seul homme debout, qu’ils nomment le songeur,
Regarde la clarté du haut de la colline;
Et tout, hormis le coq à la voix sibylline,
Raille et nie; et, passant confus, marcheurs nombreux,
Toute la foule éclate en rires ténébreux
Quand ce vivant, qui n’a d’autre signe lui-même
Parmi tous ces fronts noirs que d’être le front blême,
Dit en montrant ce point vague et lointain qui luit:
Cette blancheur est plus que toute cette nuit!

CE QUE C’EST QUE LA MORT

Ne dites pas: mourir; dites: naître. Croyez.
On voit ce que je vois et ce que vous voyez;
On est l’homme mauvais que je suis, que vous êtes;
On se rue aux plaisirs, aux tourbillons, aux fêtes;
On tâche d’oublier le bas, la fin, l’écueil,
La sombre égalité du mal et du cercueil;

Quoique le plus petit vaille le plus prospère;
Car tous les hommes sont les fils du même père;
Ils sont la même larme et sortent du même oeil.
On vit, usant ses jours à se remplir d’orgueil;
On marche, on court, on rêve, on souffre, on penche, on tombe,
On monte. Quelle est donc cette aube? C’est la tombe.
Où suis-je? Dans la mort. Viens! Un vent inconnu
Vous jette au seuil des cieux. On tremble; on se voit nu,
Impur, hideux, noué des mille noeuds funèbres
De ses torts, de ses maux honteux, de ses ténèbres;
Et soudain on entend quelqu’un dans l’infini
Qui chante, et par quelqu’un on sent qu’on est béni,
Sans voir la main d’où tombe à notre âme méchante
L’amour, et sans savoir quelle est la voix qui chante.
On arrive homme, deuil, glaçon, neige; on se sent
Fondre et vivre; et, d’extase et d’azur s’emplissant,
Tout notre être frémit de la défaite étrange
Du monstre qui devient dans la lumière un ange.

Au dolmen de la tour Blanche, jour des Morts, novembre 1854.

LES MAGES

I

Pourquoi donc faites-vous des prêtres
Quand vous en avez parmi vous?
Les esprits conducteurs des êtres
Portent un signe sombre et doux.
Nous naissons tous ce que nous sommes.
Nous naissons tous ce que nous sommes.
Dieu de ses mains sacre des hommes
Dans les ténèbres des berceaux;
Son effrayant doigt invisible
Écrit sous leur crâne la bible

Des arbres, des monts et des eaux.

Ces hommes, ce sont les poëtes;
Ceux dont l’aile monte et descend;
Toutes les bouches inquiètes
Qu’ouvre le verbe frémissant;
Les Virgiles, les Isaïes;
Toutes les âmes envahies
Par les grandes brumes du sort;
Tous ceux en qui Dieu se concentre;
Tous les yeux où la lumière entre,
Tous les fronts d’où le rayon sort.

Ce sont ceux qu’attend Dieu propice
Sur les Horebs et les Thabors;
Ceux que l’horrible précipice
Retient blêmissants à ses bords;
Ceux qui sentent la pierre vivre;
Ceux que Pan formidable enivre;
Ceux qui sont tout pensifs devant
Les nuages, ces solitudes
Où passent en mille attitudes
Les groupes sonores du vent.

Ce sont les sévères artistes
Que l’aube attire à ses blancheurs,
Les savants, les inventeurs tristes,
Les puiseurs d’ombre, les chercheurs,
Qui ramassent dans les ténèbres
Les faits, les chiffres, les algèbres,
Le nombre où tout est contenu,
Le doute où nos calculs succombent,
Et tous les morceaux noirs qui tombent
Du grand fronton de l’inconnu!

Ce sont les têtes fécondées
Vers qui monte et croît pas à pas

L’océan confus des idées,
Flux que la foule ne voit pas,
Mer de tous les infinis pleine,
Que Dieu suit, que la nuit amène.
Qui remplit l’homme de clarté,
Jette aux rochers l’écume amère,
Et lave les pieds nus d’Homère
Avec un flot d’éternité!

Le poëte s’adosse à l’arche.
David chante et voit Dieu de près;
Hésiode médite et marche,
Grand prêtre fauve des forêts,
Moïse, immense créature,
Étend ses mains sur la nature;
Manès parle au gouffre puni,
Écouté des astres sans nombre... —
Génie! ô tiare de l’ombre!
Pontificat de l’infini!

L’un à Patmos, l’autre à Tyane;
D’autres criant: Demain! demain!
D’autres qui sonnent la diane
Dans les sommeils du genre humain;
L’un fatal, l’autre qui pardonne;
Eschyle en qui frémit Dodone,
Milton, songeur de Whitehall,
Toi, vieux Shakspeare, âme éternelle;
Ô figures dont la prunelle
Est la vitre de l’idéal!

Avec sa spirale sublime,
Archimède sur son sommet
Rouvrirait le puits de l’abîme
Si jamais Dieu le refermait;
Euclide a les lois sous sa garde;
Kopernic éperdu regarde,

Dans les grands cieux aux mers pareils,
Gouffre où voguent des nefs sans proues,
Tourner toutes ces sombres roues
Dont les moyeux sont des soleils.

Les Thalès puis les Pythagores;
Et l’homme, parmi ses erreurs,
Comme dans l’herbe les fulgores,
Voit passer ces grands éclaireurs.
Aristophane rit des sages;
Lucrèce, pour franchir les âges,
Crée un poëme dont l’oeil luit,
Et donne à ce monstre sonore
Toutes les ailes de l’aurore,
Toutes les griffes de la nuit.

Rites profonds de la nature!
Quelques-uns de ces inspirés
Acceptent l’étrange aventure
Des monts noirs et des bois sacrés;
Ils vont aux Thébaïdes sombres,
Et, là, blêmes dans les décombres,
Ils courbent le tigre fuyant,
L’hyène rampant sur le ventre,
L’océan, la montagne et l’antre,
Sous leur sacerdoce effrayant!

Tes cheveux sont gris sur l’abîme,
Jérôme, ô vieillard du désert!
Élie, un pâle esprit t’anime,
Un ange épouvanté te sert.
Amos, aux lieux inaccessibles,
Des sombres clairons invisibles
Ton oreille entend les accords;
Ton âme, sur qui Dieu surplombe,
Est déjà toute dans la tombe,
Et tu vis absent de ton corps.

Tu gourmandes l’âme échappée,
Saint Paul, ô lutteur redouté,
Immense apôtre de l’épée,
Grand vaincu de l’éternité!
Tu luis, tu frappes, tu réprouves;
Et tu chasses du doigt ces louves,
Cythérée, Isis, Astarté;
Tu veux punir et non absoudre,
Géant, et tu vois dans la foudre
Plus de glaive que de clarté.

Orphée est courbé sur le monde;
L’éblouissant est ébloui;
La création est profonde
Et monstrueuse autour de lui;
Les rochers, ces rudes hercules,
Combattent dans les crépuscules
L’ouragan, sinistre inconnu;
La mer en pleurs dans la mêlée
Tremble, et la vague échevelée
Se cramponne à leur torse nu.

Baruch au juste dans la peine
Dit: — Frère! vos os sont meurtris;
Votre vertu dans nos murs traîne
La chaîne affreuse du mépris;
Mais comptez sur la délivrance,
Mettez en Dieu votre espérance,
Et de cette nuit du destin,
Demain, si vous avez su croire,
Vous vous lèverez plein de gloire,
Comme l’étoile du matin! —

L’âme des Pindares se hausse
A la hauteur des Pélions;
Daniel chante dans la fosse

Et fait sortir Dieu des lions.
Tacite sculpte l’infamie;
Perse, Archiloque et Jérémie
Ont le même éclair dans les yeux;
Car le crime à sa suite attire
Les âpres chiens de la satire
Et le grand tonnerre des cieux.

Et voilà les prêtres du rire,
Scarron, noué dans les douleurs,
Ésope, que le fouet déchire,
Cervante aux fers, Molière en pleurs!
Le désespoir et l’espérance!
Entre Démocrite et Térence,
Rabelais, que nul ne comprit;
Il berce Adam pour qu’il s’endorme,
Et son éclat de rire énorme
Est un des gouffres de l’esprit!

Et Plaute, à qui parlent les chèvres,
Arioste chantant Médor,
Catulle, Horace, dont les lèvres
Font venir les abeilles d’or;
Comme le double Dioscure,
Anacréon près d’Épicure,
Bion, tout pénétré de jour,
Moschus, sur qui l’Etna flamboie,
Voilà les prêtres de la joie!
Voilà les prêtres de l’amour!

Gluck et Beethoven sont à l’aise
Sous l’ange où Jacob se débat;
Mozart sourit, et Pergolèse
Murmure ce grand mot: Stabat!
Le noir cerveau de Piranèse
Est une béante fournaise
Où se mêlent l’arche et le ciel,

L’escalier, la tour, la colonne;
Où croît, monte, s’enfle et bouillonne
L’incommensurable Babel!

L’envie à leur ombre ricane.
Ces demi-dieux signent leur nom,
Bramante sur la Vaticane,
Phidias sur le Parthénon;
Sur Jésus dans sa crèche blanche,
L’altier Buonarotti se penche
Comme un mage et comme un aïeul,
Et dans tes mains, ô Michel-Ange,
L’enfant devient spectre, et le lange
Est plus sombre que le linceul!

Chacun d’eux écrit un chapitre
Du rituel universel;
Les uns sculptent le saint pupitre,
Les autres dorent le missel;
Chacun fait son verset du psaume;
Lysippe, debout sur l’Ithome,
Fait sa strophe en marbre serein,
Rembrandt à l’ardente paupière,
En toile, Primatice en pierre,
Job en fumier, Dante en airain.

Et toutes ces strophes ensemble
Chantent l’être et montent à Dieu;
L’une adore et luit, l’autre tremble;
Toutes sont les griffons de feu;
Toutes sont le cri des abîmes,
L’appel d’en bas, la voix des cimes,
Le frisson de notre lambeau,
L’hymne instinctif ou volontaire,
L’explication du mystère
Et l’ouverture du tombeau!

A nous qui ne vivons qu'une heure,
Elles font voir les profondeurs,
Et la misère intérieure,
Ciel, à côté de vos grandeurs!
L'homme, esprit captif, les écoute,
Pendant qu'en son cerveau le doute,
Bête aveugle aux lueurs d'en haut,
Pour y prendre l'âme indignée,
Suspend sa toile d'araignée
Au crâne, plafond du cachot.

Elles consolent, aiment, pleurent,
Et, mariant l'idée aux sens,
Ceux qui restent à ceux qui meurent,
Les grains de cendre aux grains d'encens,
Mêlant le sable aux pyramides,
Rendent en même temps humides,
Rappelant à l'un que tout fuit,
A l'autre sa splendeur première,
L'oeil de l'astre dans la lumière,
Et l'oeil du monstre dans la nuit!

II

Oui, c'est un prêtre que Socrate!
Oui, c'est un prêtre que Caton!
Quand Juvénal fuit Rome ingrate,
Nul sceptre ne vaut son bâton;
Ce sont des prêtres, les Tyrtées,
Les Solons aux lois respectées,
Les Platons et les Raphaëls!
Fronts d'inspirés, d'esprits, d'arbitres!
Plus resplendissants que les mitres
Dans l'auréole des Noëls!

Vous voyez, fils de la nature,
Apparaître à votre flambeau

Des faces de lumière pure,
Larves du vrai, spectres du beau;
Le mystère, en Grèce, en Chaldée,
Penseurs, grave à vos fronts l’idée
Et l’hiéroglyphe à vos murs;
Et les Indes et les Égyptes
Dans les ténèbres de vos cryptes
S’enfoncent en porches obscurs!

Quand les cigognes du Caystre
S’envolent aux souffles des soirs;
Quand la lune apparaît sinistre
Derrière les grands dômes noirs;
Quand la trombe aux vagues s’appuie;
Quand l’orage, l’horreur, la pluie,
Que tordent les bises d’hiver,
Répandent avec des huées
Toutes les larmes des nuées
Sur tous les sanglots de la mer;

Quand dans les tombeaux les vents jouent
Avec les os des rois défunts;
Quand les hautes herbes secouent
Leur chevelure de parfums;
Quand sur nos deuils et sur nos fêtes
Toutes les cloches des tempêtes
Sonnent au suprême beffroi;
Quand l’aube étale ses opales,
C’est pour ces contemplateurs pâles
Penchés dans l’éternel effroi!

Ils savent ce que le soir calme
Pense des morts qui vont partir;
Et ce que préfère la palme,
Du conquérant ou du martyr;
Ils entendent ce que murmure
La voile, la gerbe, l’armure,

Ce que dit, dans le mois joyeux
Des longs jours et des fleurs écloses,
La petite bouche des roses
A l’oreille immense des cieux.

Les vents, les flots, les cris sauvages,
L’azur, l’horreur du bois jauni,
Sont les formidables breuvages
De ces altérés d’infini;
Ils ajoutent, rêveurs austères,
A leur âme tous les mystères,
Toute la matière à leurs sens;
Ils s’enivrent de l’étendue;
L’ombre est une coupe tendue
Où boivent ces sombres passants.

Comme ils regardent, ces messies!
Oh! comme ils songent effarés!
Dans les ténèbres épaissies
Quels spectateurs démesurés!
Oh! que de têtes stupéfaites!
Poëtes, apôtres, prophètes,
Méditant, parlant, écrivant,
Sous des suaires, sous des voiles,
Les plis des robes pleins d’étoiles,
Les barbes au gouffre du vent!

III

Savent-ils ce qu’ils font eux-même,
Ces acteurs du drame profond?
Savent-ils leur propre problème?
Ils sont. Savent-ils ce qu’ils sont?
Ils sortent du grand vestiaire
Où, pour s’habiller de matière,
Parfois l’ange même est venu.
Graves, tristes, joyeux, fantasques,

Ne sont-ils pas les sombres masques
De quelque prodige inconnu?

La joie ou la douleur les farde;
Ils projettent confusément,
Plus loin que la terre blafarde,
Leurs ombres sur le firmament;
Leurs gestes étonnent l’abîme;
Pendant qu’aux hommes, tourbe infime,
Ils parlent le langage humain,
Dans des profondeurs qu’on ignore,
Ils font surgir l’ombre ou l’aurore,
Chaque fois qu’ils lèvent la main.

Ils ont leur rôle; ils ont leur forme;
Ils vont, vêtus d’humanité,
Jouant la comédie énorme
De l’homme et de l’éternité;
Ils tiennent la torche ou la coupe;
Nous tremblerions si dans leur groupe,
Nous, troupeau, nous pénétrions!
Les astres d’or et la nuit sombre
Se font des questions dans l’ombre
Sur ces splendides histrions.

IV

Ah! ce qu’ils font est l’oeuvre auguste.
Ces histrions sont les héros!
Ils sont le vrai, le saint, le juste,
Apparaissant à nos barreaux.
Nous sentons, dans la nuit mortelle,
La cage en même temps que l’aile;
Ils nous font espérer un peu;
Ils sont lumière et nourriture;
Ils donnent aux coeurs la pâture,
Ils émiettent aux âmes Dieu!

Devant notre race asservie
Le ciel se tait, et rien n’en sort.
Est-ce le rideau de la vie?
Est-ce le voile de la mort?
Ténèbres! l’âme en vain s’élance,
L’Inconnu garde le silence,
Et l’homme, qui se sent banni,
Ne sait s’il redoute ou s’il aime
Cette lividité suprême
De l’énigme et de l’infini.

Eux, ils parlent à ce mystère!
Ils interrogent l’éternel,
Ils appellent le solitaire,
Ils montent, ils frappent au ciel,
Disent: Es-tu là? dans la tombe,
Volent, pareils à la colombe
Offrant le rameau qu’elle tient,
Et leur voix est grave, humble ou tendre,
Et par moments on croit entendre
Le pas sourd de quelqu’un qui vient.

V

Nous vivons, debout à l’entrée
De la mort, gouffre illimité,
Nus, tremblants, la chair pénétrée
Du frisson de l’énormité;
Nos morts sont dans cette marée;
Nous entendons, foule égarée
Dont le vent souffle le flambeau,
Sans voir de voiles ni de rames,
Le bruit que font ces vagues d’âmes
Sous la falaise du tombeau.

Nous regardons la noire écume,

L’aspect hideux, le fond bruni;
Nous regardons la nuit, la brume,
L’onde du sépulcre infini;
Comme un oiseau de mer effleure
La haute rive où gronde et pleure
L’océan plein de Jéhovah,
De temps en temps, blanc et sublime
Par-dessus le mur de l’abîme
Un ange paraît et s’en va.

Quelquefois une plume tombe
De l’aile où l’ange se berçait;
Retourne-t-elle dans la tombe?
Que devient-elle? On ne le sait.
Se mêle-t-elle à notre fange?
Et qu’a donc crié cet archange?
A-t-il dit non? a-t-il dit oui?
Et la foule cherche, accourue,
En bas la plume disparue,
En haut l’archange évanoui!

Puis, après qu’ont fui comme un rêve
Bien des coeurs morts, bien des yeux clos,
Après qu’on a vu sur la grève
Passer des flots, des flots, des flots,
Dans quelque grotte fatidique,
Sous un doigt de feu qui l’indique,
On trouve un homme surhumain
Traçant des lettres enflammées
Sur un livre plein de fumées,
La plume de l’ange à la main!

Il songe, il calcule, il soupire,
Son poing puissant sous son menton;
Et l’homme dit: Je suis Shakspeare.
Et l’homme dit: Je suis Newton.
L’homme dit: Je suis Ptolémée;

Et dans sa grande main fermée
Il tient le globe de la nuit.
L’homme dit: Je suis Zoroastre;
Et son sourcil abrite un astre,
Et sous son crâne un ciel bleuit!

VI

Oui, grâce aux penseurs, à ces sages,
A ces fous qui disent: Je vois!
Les ténèbres sont des visages,
Le silence s’emplit de voix!
L’homme, comme âme, en Dieu palpite,
Et, comme être, se précipite
Dans le progrès audacieux;
Le muet renonce à se taire;
Tout luit; la noirceur de la terre
S’éclaire à la blancheur des cieux.

Ils tirent de la créature
Dieu par l’esprit et le scalpel;
Le grand caché de la nature
Vient hors de l’antre à leur appel;
A leur voix, l’ombre symbolique
Parle, le mystère s’explique,
La nuit est pleine d’yeux de lynx;
Sortant, de force, le problème
Ouvre les ténèbres lui-même,
Et l’énigme éventre le sphinx.

Oui, grâce à ces hommes suprêmes,
Grâce à ces poëtes vainqueurs,
Construisant des autels poëmes
Et prenant pour pierres les coeurs,
Comme un fleuve d’âme commune,
Du blanc pilône à l’âpre rune,
Du brahme au flamine romain,

De l’hiérophante au druide,
Une sorte de Dieu fluide
Coule aux veines du genre humain.

VII

Le noir cromlech, épars dans l’herbe,
Est sur le mont silencieux;
L’archipel est sur l’eau superbe;
Les pléiades sont dans les cieux;
O mont! ô mer! voûte sereine!
L’herbe, la mouette, l’âme humaine,
Que l’hiver désole ou poursuit,
Interrogent, sombres proscrites,
Ces trois phrases dans l’ombre écrites
Sur les trois pages de la nuit.

— O vieux cromlech de la Bretagne,
Qu’on évite comme un récif,
Qu’écris-tu donc sur la montagne?
— Nuit! répond le cromlech pensif.
— Archipel où la vague fume,
Quel mot jettes-tu dans la brume?
— Mort! dit la roche à l’alcyon.
— Pléiades qui percez nos voiles,
Qu’est-ce que disent vos étoiles?
— Dieu! dit la constellation.

C’est, ô noirs témoins de l’espace,
Dans trois langues le même mot!
Tout ce qui s’obscurcit, vit, passe,
S’effeuille et meurt, tombe là-haut.
Nous faisons tous la même course.
Être abîme, c’est être source.
Le crêpe de la nuit en deuil,
La pierre de la tombe obscure,
Le rayon de l’étoile pure

Sont les paupières du même oeil!

L’unité reste, l’aspect change;
Pour becqueter le fruit vermeil,
Les oiseaux volent à l’orange
Et les comètes au soleil;
Tout est l’atome et tout est l’astre;
La paille porte, humble pilastre,
L’épi d’où naissent les cités;
La fauvette à la tête blonde
Dans la goutte d’eau boit un monde... —
Immensités! immensités!

Seul, la nuit, sur sa plate-forme,
Herschell poursuit l’être central
A travers la lentille énorme,
Cristallin de l’oeil sidéral;
Il voit en haut Dieu dans les mondes
Tandis que, des hydres profondes
Scrutant les monstrueux combats,
Le microscope formidable,
Plein de l’horreur de l’insondable,
Regarde l’infini d’en bas!

VIII

Dieu, triple feu, triple harmonie,
Amour, puissance, volonté,
Prunelle énorme d’insomnie,
De flamboiement et de bonté,
Vu dans toute l’épaisseur noire,
Montrant ses trois faces de gloire
A l’âme, à l’être, au firmament,
Effarant les yeux et les bouches,
Emplit les profondeurs farouches
D’un immense éblouissement.

Tous ces mages, l’un qui réclame,
L’autre qui voulut ou couva,
Ont un rayon qui de leur âme
Va jusqu’à l’oeil de Jéhovah;
Sur leur trône leur esprit songe;
Une lueur qui d’en haut plonge,
Qui descend du ciel sur les monts
Et de Dieu sur l’homme qui souffre,
Rattache au triangle du gouffre
L’escarboucle des Salomons.

IX

Ils parlent à la solitude,
Et la solitude comprend;
Ils parlent à la multitude,
Et font écumer ce torrent;
Ils font vibrer les édifices;
Ils inspirent les sacrifices
Et les inébranlables fois;
Sombres, ils ont en eux, pour muse,
La palpitation confuse
De tous les êtres à la fois.

Comment naît un peuple? Mystère!
A de certains moments, tout bruit
A disparu; toute la terre
Semble une plaine de la nuit;
Toute lueur s’est éclipsée;
Pas de verbe, pas de pensée,
Rien dans l’ombre et rien dans le ciel,
Pas un oeil n’ouvre ses paupières... —
Le désert blême est plein de pierres,
Ézéchiel! Ézéchiel!

Mais un vent sort des cieux sans bornes,
Grondant comme les grandes eaux,

Et souffle sur ces pierres mornes,
Et de ces pierres fait des os;
Ces os frémissent, tas sonore;
Et le vent souffle, et souffle encore
Sur ce triste amas agité,
Et de ces os il fait des hommes,
Et nous nous levons et nous sommes,
Et ce vent, c’est la liberté!

Ainsi s’accomplit la genèse
Du grand rien d’où naît le grand tout.
Dieu pensif dit: Je suis bien aise
Que ce qui gisait soit debout.
Le néant dit: J’étais souffrance;
La douleur dit: Je suis la France!
O formidable vision!
Ainsi tombe le noir suaire;
Le désert devient ossuaire,
Et l’ossuaire nation.

X

Tout est la mort, l’horreur, la guerre;
L’homme par l’ombre est éclipsé;
L’Ouragan par toute la terre
Court comme un enfant insensé.
Il brise à l’hiver les feuillages,
L’éclair aux cimes, l’onde aux plages,
A la tempête le rayon;
Car c’est l’ouragan qui gouverne
Toute cette étrange caverne
Que nous nommons Création.

L’ouragan, qui broie et torture,
S’alimente, monstre croissant,
De tout ce que l’âpre nature
A d’horrible et de menaçant;

La lave en feu le désaltère;
Il va de Quito, blanc cratère
Qu’entoure un éternel glaçon,
Jusqu’à l’Hékla, mont, gouffre et geôle,
Bout de la mamelle du pôle
Que tette ce noir nourrisson!

L’ouragan est la force aveugle,
L’agitateur du grand linceul;
Il rugit, hurle, siffle, beugle,
Étant toute l’hydre à lui seul;
Il flétrit ce qui veut éclore;
Il dit au printemps, à l’aurore,
A la paix, à l’amour: Va-t’en!
Il est rage et foudre; il se nomme
Barbarie et crime pour l’homme,
Nuit pour les cieux, pour Dieu Satan.

C’est le souffle de la matière,
De toute la nature craint;
L’Esprit, ouragan de lumière,
Le poursuit, le saisit, l’étreint;
L’Esprit terrasse, abat, dissipe
Le principe par le principe;
Il combat, en criant: Allons!
Les chaos par les harmonies,
Les éléments par les génies,
Par les aigles les aquilons!

Ils sont là, hauts de cent coudées,
Christ en tête, Homère au milieu,
Tous les combattants des idées,
Tous les gladiateurs de Dieu;
Chaque fois qu’agitant le glaive,
Une forme du mal se lève
Comme un forçat dans son préau,
Dieu, dans leur phalange complète,

Désigne quelque grand athlète
De la stature du fléau.

Surgis, Volta! dompte en ton aire
Les Fluides, noir phlégéton!
Viens, Franklin! voici le Tonnerre.
Le Flot gronde; parais, Fulton!
Rousseau! prends corps à corps la Haine.
L’Esclavage agite sa chaîne;
O Voltaire! aide au paria!
La Grève rit, Tyburn flamboie,
L’affreux chien Montfaucon aboie,
On meurt... — Debout, Beccaria!

Il n’est rien que l’homme ne tente.
La foudre craint cet oiseleur.
Dans la blessure palpitante
Il dit: Silence! à la douleur.
Sa vergue peut-être est une aile;
Partout où parvient sa prunelle,
L’âme emporte ses pieds de plomb;
L’étoile, dans sa solitude,
Regarde avec inquiétude
Blanchir la voile de Colomb.

Près de la science l’art flotte,
Les yeux sur le double horizon;
La poésie est un pilote;
Orphée accompagne Jason.
Un jour, une barque perdue
Vit à la fois dans l’étendue
Un oiseau dans l’air spacieux,
Un rameau dans l’eau solitaire;
Alors, Gama cria: La terre!
Et Camoëns cria: Les cieux!

Ainsi s’entassent les conquêtes.

Les songeurs sont les inventeurs.
Parlez, dites ce que vous êtes,
Forces, ondes, aimants, moteurs!
Tout est stupéfait dans l’abîme,
L’ombre, de nous voir sur la cime,
Les monstres, qu’on les ait bravés
Dans les cavernes étonnées,
Les perles, d’être devinées,
Et les mondes d’être trouvés!

Dans l’ombre immense du Caucase,
Depuis des siècles, en rêvant,
Conduit par les hommes d’extase,
Le genre humain marche en avant;
Il marche sur la terre; il passe,
Il va, dans la nuit, dans l’espace,
Dans l’infini, dans le borné,
Dans l’azur, dans l’onde irritée,
A la lueur de Prométhée,
Le libérateur enchaîné!

XI

Oh! vous êtes les seuls pontifes,
Penseurs, lutteurs des grands espoirs,
Dompteurs des fauves hippogriffes,
Cavaliers des pégases noirs!
Ames devant Dieu toutes nues,
Voyant des choses inconnues,
Vous savez la religion!
Quand votre esprit veut fuir dans l’ombre,
La nuée aux croupes sans nombre
Lui dit: Me voici, Légion!

Et, quand vous sortez du problème,
Célébrateurs, révélateurs!
Quand, rentrant dans la foule blême,

Vous redescendez des hauteurs,
Hommes que le jour divin gagne,
Ayant mêlé sur la montagne
Où montent vos chants et nos voeux,
Votre front au front de l’aurore,
O géants! vous avez encore
De ses rayons dans les cheveux!

Allez tous à la découverte!
Entrez au nuage grondant!
Et rapportez à l’herbe verte,
Et rapportez au sable ardent,
Rapportez, quel que soit l’abîme,
A l’Enfer, que Satan opprime,
Au Tartare, où saigne Ixion,
Aux coeurs bons, à l’âme méchante
À tout ce qui rit, mord ou chante,
La grande bénédiction!

Oh! tous à la fois, aigles, âmes,
Esprits, oiseaux, essors, raisons,
Pour prendre en vos serres les flammes,
Pour connaître les horizons,
A travers l’ombre et les tempêtes,
Ayant au-dessus de vos têtes
Mondes et soleils, au-dessous
Inde, Égypte, Grèce et Judée,
De la montagne et de l’idée,
Envolez-vous! envolez-vous!

N’est-ce pas que c’est ineffable
De se sentir immensité,
D’éclairer ce qu’on croyait fable
A ce qu’on trouve vérité,
De voir le fond du grand cratère,
De sentir en soi du mystère
Entrer tout le frisson obscur,

D’aller aux astres, étincelle,
Et de se dire: Je suis l’aile!
Et de se dire: J’ai l’azur!

Allez, prêtres! allez, génies!
Cherchez la note humaine, allez,
Dans les suprêmes symphonies
Des grands abîmes étoilés!
En attendant l’heure dorée,
L’extase de la mort sacrée,
Loin de nous, troupeaux soucieux,
Loin des lois que nous établîmes,
Allez goûter, vivants sublimes,
L’évanouissement des cieux!

Janvier 1856.

EN FRAPPANT A UNE PORTE

J’ai perdu mon père et ma mère,
Mon premier né, bien jeune, hélas!
Et pour moi la nature entière
Sonne le glas.

Je dormais entre mes deux frères;
Enfants, nous étions trois oiseaux;
Hélas! le sort change en deux bières
Leurs deux berceaux.

Je t’ai perdue, ô fille chère,
Toi qui remplis, ô mon orgueil,
Tout mon destin de la lumière
De ton cercueil!

J’ai su monter, j’ai su descendre.

J’ai vu l’aube et l’ombre en mes cieux.
J’ai connu la pourpre, et la cendre
Qui me va mieux.

J’ai connu les ardeurs profondes,
J’ai connu les sombres amours;
J’ai vu fuir les ailes; les ondes,
Les vents, les jours.

J’ai sur ma tête des orfraies;
J’ai sur tous mes travaux l’affront,
Aux pieds la poudre, au coeur des plaies,
L’épine au front.

J’ai des pleurs à mon oeil qui pense,
Des trous à ma robe en lambeau;
Je n’ai rien à la conscience;
Ouvre, tombeau.

Marine-Terrace, 4 septembre 1855.

NOMEN, NUMEN, LUMEN

Quand il eut terminé, quand les soleils épars,
Éblouis, du chaos montant de toutes parts,
Se furent tous rangés à leur place profonde,
Il sentit le besoin de se nommer au monde;
Et l’être formidable et serein se leva;
Il se dressa sur l’ombre et cria: JÉHOVAH!
Et dans l’immensité ces sept lettres tombèrent;
Et ce sont, dans les cieux que nos yeux réverbèrent,
Au-dessus de nos fronts tremblants sous leur rayon,
Les sept astres géants du noir septentrion.

Minuit, au dolmen du Faldouet, mars 1855.

CE QUE DIT LA BOUCHE D’OMBRE

L’homme en songeant descend au gouffre universel.
J’errais près du dolmen qui domine Rozel,
A l’endroit où le cap se prolonge en presqu’île.
Le spectre m’attendait; l’être sombre et tranquille
Me prit par les cheveux dans sa main qui grandit,
M’emporta sur le haut du rocher, et me dit:
Sache que tout connaît sa loi, son but, sa route;
Que, de l’astre au ciron, l’immensité s’écoute;
Que tout a conscience en la création;
Et l’oreille pourrait avoir sa vision,
Car les choses et l’être ont un grand dialogue.
Tout parle; l’air qui passe et l’alcyon qui vogue,
Le brin d’herbe, la fleur, le germe, l’élément.
T’imaginais-tu donc l’univers autrement?
Crois-tu que Dieu, par qui la forme sort du nombre,
Aurait fait à jamais sonner la forêt sombre,
L’orage, le torrent roulant de noirs limons,
Le rocher dans les flots, la bête dans les monts,
La mouche, le buisson, la ronce où croît la mûre,
Et qu’il n’aurait rien mis dans l’éternel murmure?
Crois-tu que l’eau du fleuve et les arbres des bois,
S’ils n’avaient rien à dire, élèveraient la voix?
Prends-tu le vent des mers pour un joueur de flûte?
Crois-tu que l’océan, qui se gonfle et qui lutte,
Serait content d’ouvrir sa gueule jour et nuit
Pour souffler dans le vide une vapeur de bruit,
Et qu’il voudrait rugir, sous l’ouragan qui vole,
Si son rugissement n’était une parole?
Crois-tu que le tombeau, d’herbe et de nuit vêtu,
Ne soit rien qu’un silence? et te figures-tu
Que la création profonde, qui compose

Sa rumeur des frissons du lys et de la rose,
De la foudre, des flots, des souffles du ciel bleu,
Ne sait ce qu’elle dit quand elle parle à Dieu?
Crois-tu qu’elle ne soit qu’une langue épaissie?
Crois-tu que la nature énorme balbutie,
Et que Dieu se serait, dans son immensité,
Donné pour tout plaisir, pendant l’éternité,
D’entendre bégayer une sourde-muette?
Non, l’abîme est un prêtre et l’ombre est un poëte;
Non, tout est une voix et tout est un parfum;
Tout dit dans l’infini quelque chose à quelqu’un;
Une pensée emplit le tumulte superbe.
Dieu n’a pas fait un bruit sans y mêler le Verbe.
Tout, comme toi, gémit ou chante comme moi;
Tout parle. Et maintenant, homme, sais-tu pourquoi
Tout parle? Écoute bien. C’est que vents, ondes, flamme
Arbres, roseaux, rochers, tout vit!
Tout est plein d’âmes.

Mais comment! Oh! voilà le mystère inouï.
Puisque tu ne t’es pas en route évanoui,
Causons.

Dieu n’a créé que l’être impondérable.
Il le fit radieux, beau, candide, adorable,
Mais imparfait; sans quoi, sur la même hauteur,
La créature étant égale au créateur,
Cette perfection, dans l’infini perdue,
Se serait avec Dieu mêlée et confondue,
Et la création, à force de clarté,
En lui serait rentrée et n’aurait pas été.
La création sainte où rêve le prophète,
Pour être, ô profondeur! devait être imparfaite.

Donc, Dieu fit l’univers, l’univers fit le mal.

L’être créé, paré du rayon baptismal,

En des temps dont nous seuls conservons la mémoire,
Planait dans la splendeur sur des ailes de gloire;
Tout était chant, encens, flamme, éblouissement;
L’être errait, aile d’or, dans un rayon charmant,
Et de tous les parfums tour à tour était l’hôte;
Tout nageait, tout volait.

Or, la première faute
Fut le premier poids.

Dieu sentit une douleur.
Le poids prit une forme, et, comme l’oiseleur
Fuit emportant l’oiseau qui frissonne et qui lutte,
Il tomba, traînant l’ange éperdu dans sa chute.
Le mal était fait. Puis tout alla s’aggravant;
Et l’éther devint l’air, et l’air devint le vent;
L’ange devint l’esprit, et l’esprit devint l’homme.
L’âme tomba, des maux multipliant la somme,
Dans la brute, dans l’arbre, et même, au-dessous d’eux,
Dans le caillou pensif, cet aveugle hideux.
Êtres vils qu’à regret les anges énumèrent!
Et de tous ces amas des globes se formèrent,
Et derrière ces blocs naquit la sombre nuit.
Le mal, c’est la matière. Arbre noir, fatal fruit.
•
Ne réfléchis-tu pas lorsque tu vois ton ombre?
Cette forme de toi, rampante, horrible, sombre,
Qui liée à tes pas comme un spectre vivant,
Va tantôt en arrière et tantôt en avant,
Qui se mêle à la nuit, sa grande soeur funeste,
Et qui contre le jour, noire et dure, proteste,
D’où vient-elle? De toi, de ta chair, du limon
Dont l’esprit se revêt en devenant démon;
De ce corps qui, créé par ta faute première,
Ayant rejeté Dieu, résiste à la lumière;
De ta matière, hélas! de ton iniquité.
Cette ombre dit: — Je suis l’être d’infirmité;

Je suis tombé déjà; je puis tomber encore. —
L’ange laisse passer à travers lui l’aurore;
Nul simulacre obscur ne suit l’être aromal;
Homme, tout ce qui fait de l’ombre a fait le mal.
•
Maintenant, c’est ici le rocher fatidique,
Et je vais t’expliquer tout ce que je t’indique;
Je vais t’emplir les yeux de nuit et de lueurs.
Prépare-toi, front triste, aux funèbres sueurs.
Le vent d’en haut sur moi passe, et, ce qu’il m’arrache,
Je te le jette; prends, et vois.
Et, d’abord, sache
Que le monde où tu vis est un monde effrayant
Devant qui le songeur, sous l’infini ployant,
Lève les bras au ciel et recule terrible.
Ton soleil est lugubre et ta terre est horrible.
Vous habitez le seuil du monde châtiment.
Mais vous n’êtes pas hors de Dieu complétement;
Dieu, soleil dans l’azur, dans la cendre étincelle,
N’est hors de rien, étant la fin universelle;
L’éclair est son regard, autant que le rayon;
Et tout, même le mal, est la création,
Car le dedans du masque est encor la figure.

— O sombre aile invisible à l’immense envergure
Esprit! esprit! esprit! m’écriai-je éperdu.
Le spectre poursuivit sans m’avoir entendu:
•
Faisons un pas de plus dans ces choses profondes.

Homme, tu veux, tu fais, tu construis et tu fondes,
Et tu dis: — Je suis seul, car je suis le penseur.
L’univers n’a que moi dans sa morne épaisseur.
En deçà, c’est la nuit; au-delà, c’est le rêve.
L’idéal est un oeil que la science crève.
C’est moi qui suis la fin et qui suis le sommet. —
Voyons; observes-tu le boeuf qui se soumet?

Écoutes-tu le bruit de ton pas sur les marbres?
Interroges-tu l’onde? et, quand tu vois des arbres,
Parles-tu quelquefois à ces religieux?
Comme sur le versant d’un mont prodigieux,
Vaste mêlée aux bruits confus, du fond de l’ombre,
Tu vois monter à toi la création sombre.
Le rocher est plus loin, l’animal est plus près.
Comme le faîte altier et vivant, tu parais!
Mais, dis, crois-tu que l’être illogique nous trompe?
L’échelle que tu vois, crois-tu qu’elle se rompe?
Crois-tu, toi dont les sens d’en haut sont éclairés,
Que la création qui, lente et par degrés,
S’élève à la lumière, et, dans sa marche entière,
Fait de plus de clarté luire moins de matière
Et mêle plus d’instincts au monstre décroissant,
Crois-tu que cette vie énorme, remplissant
De souffles le feuillage et de lueurs la tête,
Qui va du roc à l’arbre et de l’arbre à la bête,
Et de la pierre à toi monte insensiblement,
S’arrête sur l’abîme à l’homme, escarpement?
Non, elle continue, invincible, admirable,
Entre dans l’invisible et dans l’impondérable,
Y disparaît pour toi, chair vile, emplit l’azur
D’un monde éblouissant, miroir du monde obscur,
D’êtres voisins de l’homme et d’autres qui s’éloignent,
D’esprits purs, de voyants dont les splendeurs témoignent
D’anges faits de rayons comme l’homme d’instincts;
Elle plonge à travers les deux jamais atteints,
Sublime ascension d’échelles étoilées,
Des démons enchaînés monte aux âmes ailées,
Fait toucher le front sombre au radieux orteil,
Rattache l’astre esprit à l’archange soleil,
Relie, en traversant des millions de lieues,
Les groupes constellés et les légions bleues,
Peuple le haut, le bas, les bords et le milieu,
Et dans les profondeurs s’évanouit en Dieu!

Cette échelle apparaît vaguement dans la vie
Et dans la mort. Toujours les justes l’ont gravie:
Jacob en la voyant, et Caton sans la voir.
Ses échelons sont deuil, sagesse, exil, devoir.

Et cette échelle vient de plus loin que la terre.
Sache qu’elle commence aux mondes du mystère,
Aux mondes des terreurs et des perditions;
Et qu’elle vient, parmi les pâles visions,
Du précipice où sont les larves et les crimes,
Où la création, effrayant les abîmes,
Se prolonge dans l’ombre en spectre indéfini.
Car, au-dessous du globe où vit l’homme banni,
Hommes, plus bas que vous, dans le nadir livide,
Dans cette plénitude horrible qu’on croit vide,
Le mal, qui par la chair, hélas! vous asservit,
Dégorge une vapeur monstrueuse qui vit!
Là, sombre et s’engloutit, dans des flots de désastres,
L’hydre Univers tordant son corps écaillé d’astres;
Là, tout flotte et s’en va dans un naufrage obscur;
Dans ce gouffre sans bord, sans soupirail, sans mur,
De tout ce qui vécut pleut sans cesse la cendre;
Et l’on voit tout au fond, quand l’oeil ose y descendre,
Au delà de la vie, et du souffle et du bruit,
Un affreux soleil noir d’où rayonne la nuit!
•
Donc, la matière pend à l’idéal, et tire
L’esprit vers l’animal, l’ange vers le satyre,
Le sommet vers le bas, l’amour vers l’appétit.
Avec le grand qui croule elle fait le petit.

Comment de tant d’azur tant de terreur s’engendre,
Comment le jour fait l’ombre et le feu pur la cendre,
Comment la cécité peut naître du voyant,
Comment le ténébreux descend du flamboyant,
Comment du monstre esprit naît le monstre matière,
Un jour, dans le tombeau, sinistre vestiaire,

Tu le sauras; la tombe est faite pour savoir;
Tu verras; aujourd’hui, tu ne peux qu’entrevoir;
Mais, puisque Dieu permet que ma voix t’avertisse,
Je te parle.
Et, d’abord, qu’est-ce que la justice?
Qui la rend? qui la fait? où? quand? à quel moment?
Qui donc pèse la faute? et qui le châtiment?
•
L’être créé se meut dans la lumière immense.

Libre, il sait où le bien cesse, où le mal commence;
Il a ses actions pour juges.
Il suffit
Qu’il soit méchant ou bon; tout est dit. Ce qu’on fit,
Crime, est notre geôlier, ou, vertu, nous délivre.
L’être ouvre à son insu de lui-même le livre;
Sa conscience calme y marque avec le doigt
Ce que l’ombre lui garde ou ce que Dieu lui doit.
On agit, et l’on gagne ou l’on perd à mesure;
On peut être étincelle ou bien éclaboussure;
Lumière ou fange, archange au vol d’aigle ou bandit;
L’échelle vaste est là. Comme je te l’ai dit,
Par des zones sans fin la vie universelle
Monte, et par des degrés innombrables ruisselle,
Depuis l’infâme nuit jusqu’au charmant azur.
L’être en la traversant devient mauvais ou pur.
En haut plane la joie; en bas l’horreur se traîne.
Selon que l’âme, aimante, humble, bonne, sereine,
Aspire à la lumière et tend vers l’idéal,
Ou s’alourdit, immonde, au poids croissant du mal,
Dans la vie infinie on monte et l’on s’élance,
Ou l’on tombe; et tout être est sa propre balance.

Dieu ne nous juge point. Vivant tous à la fois,
Nous pesons, et chacun descend selon son poids.
•
Hommes! nous n’approchons que les paupières closes,

De ces immensités d’en bas.
Viens, si tu l’oses!
Regarde dans ce puits morne et vertigineux,
De la création compte les sombres noeuds,
Viens, vois, sonde:
Au-dessous de l’homme qui contemple,
Qui peut être un cloaque ou qui peut être un temple,
Être en qui l’instinct vit dans la raison dissous,
Est l’animal courbé vers la terre; au-dessous
De la brute est la plante inerte, sans paupière
Et sans cris; au-dessous de la plante est la pierre;

Au-dessous de la pierre est le chaos sans nom.

Avançons dans cette ombre et sois mon compagnon.
•
Toute faute qu’on fait est un cachot qu’on s’ouvre
Les mauvais, ignorant quel mystère les couvre,
Les êtres de fureur, de sang, de trahison,
Avec leurs actions bâtissent leur prison;
Tout bandit, quand la mort vient lui toucher l’épaule
Et l’éveille, hagard, se retrouve en la geôle
Que lui fit son forfait derrière lui rampant;
Tibère en un rocher, Séjan dans un serpent.

L’homme marche sans voir ce qu’il fait dans l’abîme.
L’assassin pâlirait s’il voyait sa victime;
C’est lui. L’oppresseur vil, le tyran sombre et fou,
En frappant sans pitié sur tous, forge le clou
Qui le clouera dans l’ombre au fond de la matière.

Les tombeaux sont les trous du crible cimetière,
D’où tombe, graine obscure en un ténébreux champ,

L’effrayant tourbillon des âmes.
•
Tout méchant

Fait naître en expirant le monstre de sa vie,
Qui le saisit. L’horreur par l’horreur est suivie.
Nemrod gronde enfermé dans la montagne à pic;
Quand Dalila descend dans la tombe, un aspic
Sort des plis du linceul, emportant l’âme fausse;
Phryné meurt, un crapaud saute hors de la fosse;
Ce scorpion au fond d’une pierre dormant,
C’est Clytemnestre aux bras d’Égysthe son amant;
Du tombeau d’Anitus il sort une ciguë;
Le houx sombre et l’ortie à la piqûre aiguë
Pleurent quand l’aquilon les fouette, et l’aquilon
Leur dit: Tais-toi, Zoïle! et souffre, Ganelon!
Dieu livre, choc affreux dont la plaine au loin gronde,
Au cheval Brunehaut le pavé Frédégonde;
La pince qui rougit dans le brasier hideux
Est faite du duc d’Albe et de Philippe Deux;
Farinace est le croc des noires boucheries;
L’orfraie au fond de l’ombre a les yeux de Jeffryes;
Tristan est au secret dans le bois d’un gibet.
Quand tombent dans la mort tous ces brigands, Macbeth,
Ezzelin, Richard Trois, Carrier, Ludovic Sforce,
La matière leur met la chemise de force.
Oh! comme en son bonheur, qui masque un sombre arrêt,
Messaline ou l’horrible Isabeau frémirait
Si, dans ses actions du sépulcre voisines,
Cette femme sentait qu’il lui vient des racines,
Et qu’ayant été monstre, elle deviendra fleur!
A chacun son forfait! à chacun sa douleur!
Claude est l’algue que l’eau traîne de havre en havre;
Xercès est excrément, Charles Neuf est cadavre;
Hérode, c’est l’osier des berceaux vagissants;
L’âme du noir Judas, depuis dix-huit cents ans,
Se disperse et renaît dans les crachats des hommes;
Et le vent qui jadis soufflait sur les Sodomes
Mêle, dans l’âtre abject et sous le vil chaudron,
La fumée Érostrate à la flamme Néron.

Et tout, bête, arbre et roche, étant vivant sur terre,
Tout est monstre, excepté l’homme, esprit solitaire.

L’âme que sa noirceur chasse du firmament
Descend dans les degrés divers du châtiment
Selon que plus ou moins d’obscurité la gagne.
L’homme en est la prison, la bête en est le bagne,
L’arbre en est le cachot, la pierre en est l’enfer.
Le ciel d’en haut, le seul qui soit splendide et clair,
La suit des yeux dans l’ombre, et, lui jetant l’aurore,
Tâche, en la regardant, de l’attirer encore.
O chute! dans la bête, à travers les barreaux
De l’instinct, obstruant de pâles soupiraux,
Ayant encor la voix, l’essor et la prunelle,
L’âme entrevoit de loin la lueur éternelle;
Dans l’arbre elle frissonne, et, sans jour et sans yeux,
Sent encor dans le vent quelque chose des cieux;
Dans la pierre elle rampe, immobile, muette,
Ne voyant même plus l’obscure silhouette
Du monde qui s’éclipse et qui s’évanouit,
Et face à face avec son crime dans la nuit,
L’âme en ces trois cachots traîne sa faute noire.
Comme elle en a la forme, elle en a la mémoire;
Elle sait ce qu’elle est; et, tombant sans appuis,
Voit la clarté décroître à la paroi du puits;
Elle assiste à sa chute; et, dur caillou qui roule,
Pense: Je suis Octave; et, vil chardon qu’on foule,
Crie au talon: Je suis Attila le géant;
Et, ver de terre au fond du charnier, et rongeant
Un crâne infect et noir, dit: Je suis Cléopâtre.
Et, hibou, malgré l’aube, ours, en bravant le pâtre,
Elle accomplit la loi qui l’enchaîne d’en haut;
Pierre, elle écrase; épine, elle pique; il le faut.
Le monstre est enfermé dans son horreur vivante.
Il aurait beau vouloir dépouiller l’épouvante;
Il faut qu’il reste horrible et reste châtié;
O mystère! le tigre a peut-être pitié!

Le tigre sur son dos, qui peut-être eut une aile,
A l’ombre des barreaux de la cage éternelle;
Un invisible fil lie aux noirs échafauds
Le noir corbeau dont l’aile est en forme de faulx;
L’âme louve ne peut s’empêcher d’être louve,
Car le monstre est tenu, sous le ciel qui l’éprouve,
Dans l’expiation par la fatalité.
Jadis, sans la comprendre et d’un oeil hébété,
L’Inde a presque entrevu cette métempsychose.
La ronce devient griffe, et la feuille de rose
Devient langue de chat, et, dans l’ombre et les cris,
Horrible, lèche et boit le sang de la souris;
Qui donc connaît le monstre appelé mandragore?
Qui sait ce que, le soir, éclaire le fulgore,
Être en qui la laideur devient une clarté?
Ce qui se passe en l’ombre où croît la fleur d’été
Efface la terreur des antiques avernes.
Étages effrayants! cavernes sur cavernes.
Ruche obscure du mal, du crime et du remord!

Donc, une bête va, vient, rugit, hurle, mord;
Un arbre est là, dressant ses branches hérissées,
Une dalle s’effondre au milieu des chaussées
Que la charrette écrase et que l’hiver détruit,
Et, sous ces épaisseurs de matière et de nuit,
Arbre, bête, pavé, poids que rien ne soulève,
Dans cette profondeur terrible, une âme rêve!
Que fait-elle? Elle songe à Dieu!
•
Fatalité!
Echéance! retour! revers! autre côté!
O loi! pendant qu’assis à table, joyeux groupes,
Les pervers, les puissants, vidant toutes les coupes,
Oubliant qu’aujourd’hui par demain est guetté,
Étalent leur mâchoire en leur folle gaîté,
Voilà ce qu’en sa nuit muette et colossale,
Montrant comme eux ses dents tout au fond de la salle,

Leur réserve la mort, ce sinistre rieur!

Nous avons, nous, voyants du ciel supérieur,
Le spectacle inouï de vos régions basses.
O songeur, fallait-il qu'en ces nuits tu tombasses!
Nous écoutons le cri de l'immense malheur.
Au-dessus d'un rocher, d'un loup ou d'une fleur,
Parfois nous apparaît l'âme à mi-corps sortie,
Pauvre ombre en pleurs qui lutte, hélas! presque engloutie;
Le loup la tient, le roc étreint ses pieds qu'il tord,
Et la fleur implacable et féroce la mord.
Nous entendons le bruit du rayon que Dieu lance,
La voix de ce que l'homme appelle le silence,
Et vos soupirs profonds, cailloux désespérés!
Nous voyons la pâleur de tous les fronts murés.
A travers la matière, affreux caveau sans portes,
L'ange est pour nous visible avec ses ailes mortes.
Nous assistons aux deuils, au blasphème, aux regrets,
Aux fureurs; et, la nuit, nous voyons les forêts,
D'où cherchent à s'enfuir les larves enfermées,
S'écheveler dans l'ombre en lugubres fumées.
Partout, partout, partout! dans les flots, dans les bois,
Dans l'herbe en fleurs, dans l'or qui sert de sceptre aux rois,
Dans le jonc dont Hermès se fait une baguette,
Partout le châtiment contemple, observe ou guette,
Sourd aux questions, triste, affreux, pensif, hagard;
Et tout est l'oeil d'où sort ce terrible regard.

O châtiment! dédale aux spirales funèbres!
Construction d'en bas qui cherche les ténèbres,
Plonge au-dessous du monde et descend dans la nuit,
Et, Babel renversée, au fond de l'ombre fuit!

L'homme qui plane et rampe, être crépusculaire,
En est le milieu.
•
L'homme est clémence et colère;

Fond vil du puits, plateau radieux de la tour;
Degré d’en haut pour l’ombre, et d’en bas pour le jour.
L’ange y descend, la bête après la mort y monte;
Pour la bête, il est gloire, et, pour l’ange, il est honte;
Dieu mêle en votre race, hommes infortunés,
Les demi-dieux punis aux monstres pardonnés.

De là vient que, parfois, — mystère que Dieu mène! —
On entend d’une bouche en apparence humaine
Sortir des mots pareils à des rugissements,
Et que, dans d’autres lieux et dans d’autres moments,
On croit voir sur un front s’ouvrir des ailes d’anges.

Roi forçat, l’homme, esprit, pense, et, matière, mange.
L’âme en lui ne se peut dresser sur son séant.
L’homme, comme la brute abreuvé de néant,
Vide toutes les nuits le verre noir du somme.
La chaîne de l’enfer, liée au pied de l’homme,
Ramène chaque jour vers le cloaque impur
La beauté, le génie, envolés dans l’azur,
Mêle la peste au souffle idéal des poitrines,
Et traîne, avec Socrate, Aspasie aux latrines.
•
Par un côté pourtant l’homme est illimité.
Le monstre a le carcan, l’homme a la liberté.
Songeur, retiens ceci: l’homme est un équilibre.
L’homme est une prison où l’âme reste libre.
L’âme, dans l’homme, agit, fait le bien, fait le mal,
Remonte vers l’esprit, retombe à l’animal;
Et, pour que, dans son vol vers les cieux, rien ne lie
Sa conscience ailée et de Dieu seul remplie,
Dieu, quand une âme éclôt dans l’homme au bien poussé,
Casse en son souvenir le fil de son passé;
De là vient que la nuit en sait plus que l’aurore.
Le monstre se connaît lorsque l’homme s’ignore.
Le monstre est la souffrance, et l’homme est l’action.
L’homme est l’unique point de la création

Où, pour demeurer libre en se faisant meilleure,
L’âme doive oublier sa vie antérieure.
Mystère! au seuil de tout l’esprit rêve ébloui.
•
L’homme ne voit pas Dieu, mais peut aller à lui,
En suivant la clarté du bien, toujours présente;
Le monstre, arbre, rocher ou bête rugissante,
Voit Dieu, c’est là sa peine, et reste enchaîné loin.

L’homme a l’amour pour aile, et pour joug le besoin.
L’ombre est sur ce qu’il voit par lui-même semée;
La nuit sort de son oeil ainsi qu’une fumée;
Homme, tu ne sais rien; tu marches, pâlissant!
Parfois le voile obscur qui te couvre, ô passant!
S’envole et flotte au vent soufflant d’une autre sphère,
Gonfle un moment ses plis jusque dans la lumière,
Puis retombe sur toi, spectre, et redevient noir.
Tes sages, tes penseurs ont essayé de voir;
Qu’ont-ils vu? qu’ont-ils fait? qu’ont-ils dit, ces fils d’Ève?
Rien.
Homme! autour de toi la création rêve.
Mille êtres inconnus t’entourent dans ton mur.
Tu vas, tu viens, tu dors sous leur regard obscur,
Et tu ne les sens pas vivre autour de ta vie:
Toute une légion d’âmes t’est asservie;
Pendant qu’elle te plaint, tu la foules aux pieds.
Tous tes pas vers le jour sont par l’ombre épiés.
Ce que tu nommes chose, objet, nature morte,
Sait, pense, écoute, entend. Le verrou de ta porte
Voit arriver ta faute et voudrait se fermer.
Ta vitre connaît l’aube, et dit: Voir! croire! aimer!
Les rideaux de ton lit frissonnent de tes songes.
Dans les mauvais desseins quand, rêveur, tu te plonges,
La cendre dit au fond de l’âtre sépulcral:
Regarde-moi; je suis ce qui reste du mal.
Hélas! l’homme imprudent trahit, torture, opprime.
La bête en son enfer voit les deux bouts du crime;

Un loup pourrait donner des conseils à Néron.
Homme! homme! aigle aveuglé, moindre qu’un moucheron!
Pendant que dans ton Louvre ou bien dans ta chaumière,
Tu vis, sans même avoir épelé la première
Des constellations, sombre alphabet qui luit
Et tremble sur la page immense de la nuit,
Pendant que tu maudis et pendant que tu nies,
Pendant que tu dis: Non! aux astres; aux génies:
Non! à l’idéal: Non! à la vertu: Pourquoi?
Pendant que tu te tiens en dehors de la loi,
Copiant les dédains inquiets ou robustes
De ces sages qu’on voit rêver dans les vieux bustes,
Et que tu dis: Que sais-je? amer, froid, mécréant,
Prostituant ta bouche au rire du néant,
A travers le taillis de la nature énorme,
Flairant l’éternité de son museau difforme,
Là, dans l’ombre, à tes pieds, homme, ton chien voit Dieu.

Ah! je t’entends. Tu dis: — Quel deuil! la bête est peu,
L’homme n’est rien. O loi misérable! ombre! abîme! —
.
O songeur! cette loi misérable et sublime.
Il faut donc tout redire à ton esprit chétif!
A la fatalité, loi du monstre captif,
Succède le devoir, fatalité de l’homme.
Ainsi de toutes parts l’épreuve se consomme,
Dans le monstre passif, dans l’homme intelligent,
La nécessité morne en devoir se changeant,
Et l’âme, remontant à sa beauté première,
Va de l’ombre fatale à la libre lumière.
Or, je te le redis, pour se transfigurer,
Et pour se racheter, l’homme doit ignorer.
Il doit être aveuglé par toutes les poussières.
Sans quoi, comme l’enfant guidé par des lisières,
L’homme vivrait, marchant droit à la vision.
Douter est sa puissance et sa punition.
Il voit la rose, et nie; il voit l’aurore, et doute;

Où serait le mérite à retrouver sa route,
Si l’homme, voyant clair, roi de sa volonté,
Avait la certitude, ayant la liberté?
Non. Il faut qu’il hésite en la vaste nature,
Qu’il traverse du choix l’effrayante aventure,
Et qu’il compare au vice agitant son miroir,
Au crime, aux voluptés, l’oeil en pleurs du devoir;
Il faut qu’il doute! Hier croyant, demain impie;
Il court du mal au bien; il scrute, sonde, épie,
Va, revient, et, tremblant, agenouillé, debout,
Les bras étendus, triste, il cherche Dieu partout;
Il tâte l’infini jusqu’à ce qu’il l’y sente;
Alors, son âme ailée éclate frémissante;
L’ange éblouissant luit dans l’homme transparent.
Le doute le fait libre, et la liberté, grand.
La captivité sait; la liberté suppose,
Creuse, saisit l’effet, le compare à la cause,
Croit vouloir le bien-être et veut le firmament;
Et, cherchant le caillou, trouve le diamant.
C’est ainsi que du ciel l’âme à pas lents s’empare.

Dans le monstre, elle expie; en l’homme, elle répare.
Oui, ton fauve univers est le forçat de Dieu.
Les constellations, sombres lettres de feu,
Sont les marques du bagne à l’épaule du monde.
Dans votre région tant d’épouvante abonde,
Que, pour l’homme, marqué lui-même du fer chaud,
Quand il lève les yeux vers les astres, là-haut,
Le cancer resplendit, le scorpion flamboie,
Et dans l’immensité le chien sinistre aboie!
Ces soleils inconnus se groupent sur son front
Comme l’effroi, le deuil, la menace et l’affront;
De toutes parts s’étend l’ombre incommensurable;
En bas l’obscur, l’impur, le mauvais, l’exécrable,
Le pire, tas hideux, fourmillent; tout au fond,
Ils échangent entre eux dans l’ombre ce qu’ils font;

Typhon donne l’horreur, Satan donne le crime;
Lugubre intimité du mal et de l’abîme!
Amours de l’âme monstre et du monstre univers!
Baiser triste! et l’informe engendré du pervers,
La matière, le bloc, la fange, la géhenne,
L’écume, le chaos, l’hiver, nés de la haine,
Les faces de beauté qu’habitent des démons,
Tous les êtres maudits, mêlés aux vils limons,
Pris par la plante fauve et la bête féroce,
Le grincement de dents, la peur, le rire atroce,
L’orgueil, que l’infini courbe sous son niveau,
Rampent, noirs prisonniers, dans la nuit, noir caveau.
La porte, affreuse et faite avec de l’ombre, est lourde;
Par moments, on entend, dans la profondeur sourde,
Les efforts que les monts, les flots, les ouragans,
Les volcans, les forêts, les animaux brigands,
Et tous les monstres font pour soulever le pêne;
Et sur cet amas d’ombre, et de crime, et de peine,
Ce grand ciel formidable est le scellé de Dieu.

Voilà pourquoi, songeur dont la mort est le voeu,
Tant d’angoisse est empreinte au front des cénobites!

Je viens de te montrer le gouffre. Tu l’habites.
•
Les mondes, dans la nuit que vous nommez l’azur,
Par les brèches que fait la mort blême à leur mur,
Se jettent en fuyant l’un à l’autre des âmes.

Dans votre globe où sont tant de geôles infâmes,
Vous avez des méchants de tous les univers,
Condamnés qui, venus des cieux les plus divers,
Rêvent dans vos rochers, ou dans vos arbres ploient;
Tellement stupéfaits de ce monde qu’ils voient,
Qu’eussent-ils la parole, ils ne pourraient parler.
On en sent quelques-uns frissonner et trembler.
De là les songes vains du bronze et de l’augure.

Donc, représente-toi cette sombre figure:
Ce gouffre, c’est l’égout du mal universel.
Ici vient aboutir de tous les points du ciel
La chute des punis, ténébreuse traînée.
Dans cette profondeur, morne, âpre, infortunée,
De chaque globe il tombe un flot vertigineux
D’âmes, d’esprits malsains et d’êtres vénéneux,
Flot que l’éternité voit sans fin se répandre.
Chaque étoile au front d’or qui brille, laisse pendre
Sa chevelure d’ombre en ce puits effrayant.
Ame immortelle, vois, et frémis en voyant:
Voilà le précipice exécrable où tu sombres.

·

Oh! qui que vous soyez, qui passez dans ces ombres,
Versez votre pitié sur ces douleurs sans fond!
Dans ce gouffre, où l’abîme en l’abîme se fond,
Se tordent les forfaits, transformés en supplices,
L’effroi, le deuil, le mal, les ténèbres complices,
Les pleurs sous la toison, le soupir expiré
Dans la fleur, et le cri dans la pierre muré!
Oh! qui que vous soyez, pleurez sur ces misères!
Pour Dieu seul, qui sait tout, elles sont nécessaires;
Mais vous pouvez pleurer sur l’énorme cachot
Sans déranger le sombre équilibre d’en haut!
Hélas! hélas! hélas! tout est vivant! tout pense!
La mémoire est la peine, étant la récompense.
Oh! comme ici l’on souffre et comme on se souvient!
Torture de l’esprit que la matière tient!
La brute et le granit, quel chevalet pour l’âme!
Ce mulet fut sultan, ce cloporte était femme.
L’arbre est un exilé, la roche est un proscrit.
Est-ce que, quelque part, par hasard, quelqu’un rit
Quand ces réalités sont là, remplissant l’ombre?
La ruine, la mort, l’ossement, le décombre,
Sont vivants. Un remords songe dans un débris.
Pour l’oeil profond qui voit, les antres sont des cris.

Hélas! le cygne est noir, le lys songe à ses crimes;
La perle est nuit; la neige est la fange des cimes;
Le même gouffre, horrible et fauve, et sans abri,
S’ouvre dans la chouette et dans le colibri;
La mouche, âme, s’envole et se brûle à la flamme;
Et la flamme, esprit, brûle avec angoisse une âme;
L’horreur fait frissonner les plumes de l’oiseau;
Tout est douleur.
Les fleurs souffrent sous le ciseau
Et se ferment ainsi que des paupières closes:
Toutes les femmes sont teintes du sang des roses;
La vierge au bal, qui danse, ange aux fraîches couleurs,
Et qui porte en sa main une touffe de fleurs,
Respire en souriant un bouquet d’agonies.
Pleurez sur les laideurs et les ignominies,
Pleurez sur l’araignée immonde, sur le ver,
Sur la limace au dos mouillé comme l’hiver,
Sur le vil puceron qu’on voit aux feuilles pendre,
Sur le crabe hideux, sur l’affreux scolopendre,
Sur l’effrayant crapaud, pauvre monstre aux doux yeux,
Qui regarde toujours le ciel mystérieux!
Plaignez l’oiseau de crime et la bête de proie.
Ce que Domitien, César, fit avec joie,
Tigre, il le continue avec horreur. Verrès,
Qui fut loup sous la pourpre, est loup dans les forêts;
Il descend, réveillé, l’autre côté du rêve:
Son rire, au fond des bois, en hurlement s’achève;
Pleurez sur ce qui hurle et pleurez sur Verrès.
Sur ces tombeaux vivants, marqués d’obscurs arrêts,
Penchez-vous attendri! versez votre prière!
La pitié fait sortir des rayons de la pierre.
Plaignez le louveteau, plaignez le lionceau.
La matière, affreux bloc, n’est que le lourd monceau
Des effets monstrueux, sortis des sombres causes.
Ayez pitié! voyez des âmes dans les choses.
Hélas! le cabanon subit aussi l’écrou;
Plaignez le prisonnier, mais plaignez le verrou;

Plaignez la chaîne au fond des bagnes insalubres;
La hache et le billot sont deux êtres lugubres;
La hache souffre autant que le corps, le billot
Souffre autant que la tête; ô mystères d’en haut!
Ils se livrent une âpre et hideuse bataille;
Il ébrèche la hache et la hache l’entaille;
Ils se disent tout bas l’un à l’autre: Assassin!
Et la hache maudit les hommes, sombre essaim,
Quand, le soir, sur le dos du bourreau, son ministre,
Elle revient dans l’ombre, et luit, miroir sinistre,
Ruisselante de sang et reflétant les cieux;
Et, la nuit, dans l’état morne et silencieux,
Le cadavre au cou rouge, effrayant, glacé, blême,
Seul, sait ce que lui dit le billot, tronc lui-même.
Oh! que la terre est froide et que les rocs sont durs!
Quelle muette horreur dans les halliers obscurs!
Les pleurs noirs de la nuit sur la colombe blanche
Tombent; le vent met nue et torture la branche;
Quel monologue affreux dans l’arbre aux rameaux verts!
Quel frisson dans l’herbe! Oh! quels yeux fixes ouverts
Dans les cailloux profonds, oubliettes des âmes!
C’est une âme que l’eau scie en ses froides lames;
C’est une âme que fait ruisseler le pressoir.
Ténèbres! l’univers est hagard. Chaque soir,
Le noir horizon monte et la nuit noire tombe;
Tous deux, à l’occident, d’un mouvement de tombe;
Ils vont se rapprochant, et, dans le firmament,
O terreur! sur le jour, écrasé lentement,
La tenaille de l’ombre effroyable se ferme.
Oh! les berceaux font peur. Un bagne est dans un germe.
Ayez pitié, vous tous et qui que vous soyez!
Les hideux châtiments, l’un sur l’autre broyés,
Roulent, submergeant tout, excepté les mémoires.

Parfois on voit passer dans ces profondeurs noires
Comme un rayon lointain de l’éternel amour;
Alors, l’hyène Atrée et le chacal Timour,

Et l’épine Caïphe et le roseau Pilate,
Le volcan Alaric à la gueule écarlate,
L’ours Henri Huit, pour qui Morus en vain pria,
Le sanglier Selim et le porc Borgia,
Poussent des cris vers l’Être adorable; et les bêtes
Qui portèrent jadis des mitres sur leurs têtes,
Les grains de sable rois, les brins d’herbe empereurs,
Tous les hideux orgueils et toutes les fureurs,
Se brisent; la douceur saisit le plus farouche;
Le chat lèche l’oiseau, l’oiseau baise la mouche;
Le vautour dit dans l’ombre au passereau: Pardon!
Une caresse sort du houx et du chardon;
Tous les rugissements se fondent en prières;
On entend s’accuser de leurs forfaits les pierres;
Tous ces sombres cachots qu’on appelle les fleurs
Tressaillent; le rocher se met à fondre en pleurs.
Des bras se lèvent hors de la tombe dormante;
Le vent gémit, la nuit se plaint, l’eau se lamente,
Et sous l’oeil attendri qui regarde d’en haut,
Tout l’abîme n’est plus qu’un immense sanglot.
•
Espérez! espérez! espérez, misérables!
Pas de deuil infini, pas de maux incurables,
Pas d’enfer éternel!
Les douleurs vont à Dieu, comme la flèche aux cibles;
Les bonnes actions sont les gonds invisibles
De la porte du ciel.

Le deuil est la vertu, le remords est le pôle
Des monstres garrottés dont le gouffre est la geôle;
Quand, devant Jéhovah,
Un vivant reste pur dans les ombres charnelles,
La mort, ange attendri, rapporte ses deux ailes
A l’homme qui s’en va

Les enfers se refont édens; c’est là leur tâche.
Tout globe est un oiseau que le mal tient et lâche.

Vivants, je vous le dis,
Les vertus, parmi vous, font ce labeur auguste
D’augmenter sur vos fronts le ciel; quiconque est juste
Travaille au paradis.

L’heure approche. Espérez. Rallumez l’âme éteinte!
Aimez-vous! aimez-vous, car c’est la chaleur sainte,
C’est le feu du vrai jour.
Le sombre univers, froid, glacé, pesant, réclame
La sublimation de l’être par la flamme,
De l’homme par l’amour!

Déjà, dans l’océan d’ombre que Dieu domine,
L’archipel ténébreux des bagnes s’illumine;
Dieu, c’est le grand aimant;
Et les globes, ouvrant leur sinistre prunelle,
Vers les immensités de l’aurore éternelle
Se tournent lentement!

Oh! comme vont chanter toutes les harmonies,
Comme rayonneront dans les sphères bénies
Les faces de clarté,
Comme les firmaments se fondront en délires,
Comme tressailleront toutes les grandes lyres
De la sérénité,

Quand, du monstre matière ouvrant toutes les serres,
Faisant évanouir en splendeurs les misères,
Changeant l’absinthe en miel,
Inondant de beauté la nuit diminuée,
Ainsi que le soleil tire à lui la nuée
Et l’emplit d’arcs-en-ciel,

Dieu, de son regard fixe attirant les ténèbres,
Voyant vers lui, du fond des cloaques funèbres
Où le mal le pria,
Monter l’énormité, bégayant des louanges,

Fera rentrer, parmi les univers archanges,
L’univers paria!

On verra palpiter les fanges éclairées;
Et briller les laideurs les plus désespérées
Au faîte le plus haut,
L’araignée éclatante au seuil des bleus pilastres,
Luire, et se redresser, portant des épis d’astres,
La paille du cachot!

La clarté montera dans tout comme une sève;
On verra rayonner au front du boeuf qui rêve
Le céleste croissant;
Le charnier chantera dans l’horreur qui l’encombre,
Et sur tous les fumiers apparaîtra dans l’ombre
Un Job resplendissant!

O disparition de l’antique anathème!
La profondeur disant à la hauteur: Je t’aime!
O retour du banni!
Quel éblouissement au fond des cieux sublimes!
Quel surcroît de clarté que l’ombre des abîmes
S’écriant: Sois béni!

On verra le troupeau des hydres formidables
Sortir, monter du fond des brumes insondables
Et se transfigurer;
Des étoiles éclore aux trous noirs de leurs crânes,
Dieu juste! et, par degrés devenant diaphanes,
Les monstres s’azurer!

Ils viendront, sans pouvoir ni parler ni répondre,
Éperdus! on verra des auréoles fondre
Les cornes de leur front;
Ils tiendront dans leur griffe, au milieu des cieux calmes,
Des rayons frissonnants semblables à des palmes;
Les gueules baiseront!

Ils viendront! ils viendront, tremblants, brisés d’extase,
Chacun d’eux débordant de sanglots comme un vase
Mais pourtant sans effroi;
On leur tendra les bras de la haute demeure,
Et Jésus, se penchant sur Bélial qui pleure,
Lui dira: C’est donc toi!

Et vers Dieu par la main il conduira ce frère!
Et, quand ils seront près des degrés de lumière
Par nous seuls aperçus,
Tous deux seront si beaux, que Dieu dont l’oeil flamboie
Ne pourra distinguer, père ébloui de joie,
Bélial de Jésus!

Tout sera dit. Le mal expirera, les larmes
Tariront; plus de fers, plus de deuils, plus d’alarmes;
L’affreux gouffre inclément
Cessera d’être sourd, et bégaiera: Qu’entends-je?
Les douleurs finiront dans toute l’ombre: un ange
Criera: Commencement!

Jersey, 1855.

FIN

A CELLE QUI EST RESTÉE EN FRANCE

Mets-toi sur ton séant, lève tes yeux, dérange
Ce drap glacé qui fait des plis sur ton front d’ange,
Ouvre tes mains, et prends ce livre: il est à toi.

Ce livre où vit mon âme, espoir, deuil, rêve, effroi
Ce livre qui contient le spectre de ma vie,
Mes angoisses, mon aube, hélas! de pleurs suivie
L’ombre et son ouragan, la rose et son pistil,

Ce livre azuré, triste, orageux, d’où sort-il?
D’où sort le blême éclair qui déchire la brume?
Depuis quatre ans, j’habite un tourbillon d’écume;
Ce livre en a jailli. Dieu dictait, j’écrivais;
Car je suis paille au vent: Va! dit l’esprit. Je vais.
Et, quand j’eus terminé ces pages, quand ce livre
Se mit à palpiter, à respirer, à vivre,
Une église des champs que le lierre verdit,
Dont la tour sonne l’heure à mon néant, m’a dit:
Ton cantique est fini; donne-le-moi, poëte.
Je le réclame, a dit la forêt inquiète;
Et le doux pré fleuri m’a dit: Donne-le-moi.
La mer, en le voyant frémir, m’a dit: Pourquoi
Ne pas me le jeter, puisque c’est une voile!
C’est à moi qu’appartient cet hymne, a dit l’étoile.
Donne-le-nous, songeur, ont crié les grands vents.
Et les oiseaux m’ont dit: Vas-tu pas aux vivants
Offrir ce livre, éclos si loin de leurs querelles?
Laisse-nous l’emporter dans nos nids sur nos ailes!
Mais le vent n’aura point mon livre, ô cieux profonds!
Ni la sauvage mer, livrée aux noirs typhons,
Ouvrant et refermant ses flots, âpres embûches;
Ni la verte forêt qu’emplit un bruit de ruches,
Ni l’église où le temps fait tourner son compas;
Le pré ne l’aura pas, l’astre ne l’aura pas,
L’oiseau ne l’aura pas, qu’il soit aigle ou colombe,
Les nids ne l’auront pas; je le donne à la tombe.

II

Autrefois, quand septembre en larmes revenait,
Je partais, je quittais tout ce qui me connaît,
Je m’évadais; Paris s’effaçait; rien, personne!
J’allais, je n’étais plus qu’une ombre qui frissonne,
Je fuyais, seul, sans voir, sans penser, sans parler,
Sachant bien que j’irais où je devais aller;
Hélas! je n’aurais pu même dire: Je souffre!

Et, comme subissant l’attraction d’un gouffre,
Que le chemin fût beau, pluvieux, froid, mauvais,
J’ignorais, je marchais devant moi, j’arrivais.
O souvenirs! ô forme horrible des collines!
Et, pendant que la mère et la soeur, orphelines,
Pleuraient dans la maison, je cherchais le lieu noir
Avec l’avidité morne du désespoir;
Puis j’allais au champ triste à côté de l’église;
Tète nue, à pas lents, les cheveux dans la bise,
L’oeil aux cieux, j’approchais; l’accablement soutient
Les arbres murmuraient: C’est le père qui vient!
Les ronces écartaient leurs branches desséchées;
Je marchais à travers les humbles croix penchées,
Disant je ne sais quels doux et funèbres mots;
Et je m’agenouillais au milieu des rameaux
Sur la pierre qu’on voit blanche dans la verdure.
Pourquoi donc dormais-tu d’une façon si dure,
Que tu n’entendais pas lorsque je t’appelais?

Et les pêcheurs passaient en traînant leurs filets,
Et disaient: Qu’est-ce donc que cet homme qui songe?
Et le jour, et le soir, et l’ombre qui s’allonge,
Et Vénus, qui pour moi jadis étincela,
Tout avait disparu que j’étais encor là.
J’étais là, suppliant celui qui nous exauce;
J’adorais, je laissais tomber sur cette fosse,
Hélas! où j’avais vu s’évanouir mes cieux,
Tout mon coeur goutte à goutte en pleurs silencieux;
J’effeuillais de la sauge et de la clématite;
Je me la rappelais quand elle était petite,
Quand elle m’apportait des lys et des jasmins,
Ou quand elle prenait ma plume dans ses mains,
Gaie, et riant d’avoir de l’encre à ses doigts roses;
Je respirais les fleurs sur cette cendre écloses,
Je fixais mon regard sur ces froids gazons verts,
Et par moments, ô Dieu, je voyais, à travers
La pierre du tombeau, comme une lueur d’âme!

Oui, jadis, quand cette heure en deuil qui me réclame
Tintait dans le ciel triste et dans mon coeur saignant,
Rien ne me retenait, et j'allais; maintenant,
Hélas!... — O fleuve! ô bois! vallons dont je fus l'hôte,
Elle sait, n'est-ce pas? que ce n'est pas ma faute
Si, depuis ces quatre ans, pauvre coeur sans flambeau,
Je ne suis pas allé prier sur son tombeau!

III

Ainsi, ce noir chemin que je faisais, ce marbre
Que je contemplais, pâle, adossé contre un arbre,
Ce tombeau sur lequel mes pieds pouvaient marcher,
La nuit, que je voyais lentement approcher,
Ces ifs, ce crépuscule avec ce cimetière,
Ces sanglots, qui du moins tombaient sur cette pierre,
O mon Dieu, tout cela, c'était donc du bonheur!

Dis, qu'as-tu fait pendant tout ce temps-là? — Seigneur,
Qu'a-t-elle fait? — Vois-tu la vie en vos demeures?
A quelle horloge d'ombre as-tu compté les heures?
As-tu sans bruit parfois poussé l'autre endormi?
Et t'es-tu, m'attendant, réveillée à demi?
T'es-tu, pâle, accoudée à l'obscure fenêtre
De l'infini, cherchant dans l'ombre à reconnaître
Un passant, à travers le noir cercueil mal joint,
Attentive, écoutant si tu n'entendais point
Quelqu'un marcher vers toi dans l'éternité sombre?
Et t'es-tu recouchée ainsi qu'un mât qui sombre,
En disant: Qu'est-ce donc? mon père ne vient pas!
Avez-vous tous les deux parlé de moi tout bas?

Que de fois j'ai choisi, tout mouillés de rosée,
Des lys dans mon jardin, des lys dans ma pensée!
Que de fois j'ai cueilli de l'aubépine en fleur!
Que de fois j'ai, là-bas, cherché la tour d'Harfleur,

Murmurant: C’est demain que je pars! et, stupide,
Je calculais le vent et la voile rapide,
Puis ma main s’ouvrait triste, et je disais: Tout fuit!
Et le bouquet tombait, sinistre, dans la nuit!
Oh! que de fois, sentant qu’elle devait m’attendre,
J’ai pris ce que j’avais dans le coeur de plus tendre
Pour en charger quelqu’un qui passerait par là!

Lazare ouvrit les yeux quand Jésus l’appela;
Quand je lui parle, hélas! pourquoi les ferme-t-elle?
Où serait donc le mal quand de l’ombre mortelle
L’amour violerait deux fois le noir secret,
Et quand, ce qu’un dieu fit, un père le ferait?

IV

Que ce livre, du moins, obscur message, arrive,
Murmure, à ce silence, et, flot, à cette rive!
Qu’il y tombe, sanglot, soupir, larme d’amour!
Qu’il entre en ce sépulcre où sont entrés un jour
Le baiser, la jeunesse, et l’aube, et la rosée,
Et le rire adoré de la fraîche épousée,
Et la joie, et mon coeur, qui n’est pas ressorti!
Qu’il soit le cri d’espoir qui n’a jamais menti,
Le chant du deuil, la voix du pâle adieu qui pleure,
Le rêve dont on sent l’aile qui nous effleure!
Qu’elle dise: Quelqu’un est là; j’entends du bruit!
Qu’il soit comme le pas de mon âme en sa nuit!

Ce livre, légion tournoyante et sans nombre
D’oiseaux blancs dans l’aurore et d’oiseaux noirs dans l’ombre,
Ce vol de souvenirs fuyant à l’horizon,
Cet essaim que je lâche au seuil de ma prison,
Je vous le confie, air, souffles, nuée, espace!
Que ce fauve océan qui me parle à voix basse,
Lui soit clément, l’épargne et le laisse passer!
Et que le vent ait soin de n’en rien disperser,

Et jusqu’au froid caveau fidèlement apporte
Ce don mystérieux de l’absent à la morte!

O Dieu! puisqu’en effet, dans ces sombres feuillets,
Dans ces strophes qu’au fond de vos cieux je cueillais,
Dans ces chants murmurés comme un épithalame
Pendant que vous tourniez les pages de mon âme,
Puisque j’ai, dans ce livre, enregistré mes jours,
Mes maux, mes deuils, mes cris dans les problèmes sourds,
Mes amours, mes travaux, ma vie heure par heure;
Puisque vous ne voulez pas encor que je meure,
Et qu’il faut bien pourtant que j’aille lui parler;
Puisque je sens le vent de l’infini souffler
Sur ce livre qu’emplit l’orage et le mystère;
Puisque j’ai versé là toutes vos ombres, terres,
Humanité, douleur, dont je suis le passant;
Puisque de mon esprit, de mon coeur, de mon sang,
J’ai fait l’âcre parfum de ces versets funèbres,
Va-t’en, livre, à l’azur, à travers les ténèbres!
Fuis vers la brume où tout à pas lents est conduit!
Oui, qu’il vole à la fosse, à la tombe, à la nuit,
Comme une feuille d’arbre ou comme une âme d’homme!
Qu’il roule au gouffre où va tout ce que la voix nomme!
Qu’il tombe au plus profond du sépulcre hagard,
A côté d’elle, ô mort! et que, là, le regard,
Près de l’ange qui dort, lumineux et sublime,
Le voie épanoui, sombre fleur de l’abîme!

V

O doux commencements d’azur qui me trompiez!
O bonheurs! je vous ai durement expiés;
J’ai le droit aujourd’hui d’être, quand la nuit tombe,
Un de ceux qui se font écouter de la tombe,
Et qui font, en parlant aux morts blêmes et seuls,
Remuer lentement les plis noirs des linceuls,
Et dont la parole, âpre ou tendre, émeut les pierres,

Les grains dans les sillons, les ombres dans les bières,
La vague et la nuée, et devient une voix
De la nature, ainsi que la rumeur des bois.
Car voilà, n’est-ce pas, tombeaux? bien des années,
Que je marche au milieu des croix infortunées,
Échevelé parmi les ifs et les cyprès,
L’âme au bord de la nuit, et m’approchant tout près;
Et que je vais, courbé sur le cercueil austère,
Questionnant le plomb, les clous, le ver de terre
Qui pour moi sort des yeux de la tête de mort,
Le squelette qui rit, le squelette qui mord,
Les mains aux doigts noueux, les crânes, les poussières,
Et les os des genoux qui savent des prières!

Hélas! j’ai fouillé tout. J’ai voulu voir le fond,
Pourquoi le mal en nous avec le bien se fond,
J’ai voulu le savoir. J’ai dit: Que faut-il croire?
J’ai creusé la lumière, et l’aurore, et la gloire,
L’enfant joyeux, la vierge et sa chaste frayeur,
Et l’amour, et la vie, et l’âme, — fossoyeur.

Qu’ai-je appris? J’ai, pensif, tout saisi sans rien prendre;
J’ai vu beaucoup de nuit et fait beaucoup de cendre.
Qui sommes nous? que veut dire ce mot: Toujours?
J’ai tout enseveli, songes, espoirs, amours,
Dans la fosse que j’ai creusée en ma poitrine.
Qui donc a la science? où donc est la doctrine?
Oh! que ne suis-je encor le rêveur d’autrefois,
Qui s’égarait dans l’herbe, et les prés, et les bois,
Qui marchait souriant, le soir, quand le ciel brille,
Tenant la main petite et blanche de sa fille,
Et qui, joyeux, laissant luire le firmament,
Laissant l’enfant parler, se sentait lentement
Emplir de cet azur et de cette innocence!

Entre Dieu qui flamboie et l’ange qui l’encense,
J’ai vécu, j’ai lutté, sans crainte, sans remord.

Puis ma porte soudain s’ouvrit devant la mort,
Cette visite brusque et terrible de l’ombre.
Tu passes en laissant le vide et le décombre,
O spectre! tu saisis mon ange et tu frappas.
Un tombeau fut dès lors le but de tous mes pas.

VI

Je ne puis plus reprendre aujourd’hui dans la plaine
Mon sentier d’autrefois qui descend vers la Seine;
Je ne puis plus aller où j’allais; je ne puis,
Pareil à la laveuse assise au bord du puits,
Que m’accouder au mur de l’éternel abîme;
Paris m’est éclipsé par l’énorme Solime;
La haute Notre-Dame à présent, qui me luit,
C’est l’ombre ayant deux tours, le silence et la nuit,
Et laissant des clartés trouer ses fatals voiles;
Et je vois sur mon front un panthéon d’étoiles;
Si j’appelle Rouen, Villequier, Caudebec,
Toute l’ombre me crie: Horeb, Cédron, Balbeck!
Et, si je pars, m’arrête à la première lieue,
Et me dit: Tourne-toi vers l’immensité bleue!
Et me dit: Les chemins où tu marchais sont clos.
Penche-toi sur les nuits, sur les vents, sur les flots!
A quoi penses-tu donc? que fais-tu, solitaire?
Crois-tu donc sous tes pieds avoir encor la terre?
Où vas-tu de la sorte et machinalement?
O songeur! penche-toi sur l’être et l’élément!
Écoute la rumeur des âmes dans les ondes!
Contemple, s’il te faut de la cendre, les mondes;
Cherche au moins la poussière immense, si tu veux
Mêler de la poussière à tes sombres cheveux,
Et regarde, en dehors de ton propre martyre,
Le grand néant, si c’est le néant qui t’attire!
Sois tout à ces soleils où tu remonteras!
Laisse là ton vil coin de terre. Tends les bras,
O proscrit de l’azur, vers les astres patries!

Revois-y refleurir tes aurores flétries;
Deviens le grand oeil fixe ouvert sur le grand tout.
Penche-toi sur l’énigme où l’être se dissout,
Sur tout ce qui naît, vit, marche, s’éteint, succombe,
Sur tout le genre humain et sur toute la tombe!

Mais mon coeur toujours saigne et du même côté.
C’est en vain que les cieux, les nuits, l’éternité,
Veulent distraire une âme et calmer un atome.
Tout l’éblouissement des lumières du dôme
M’ôte-t-il une larme? Ah! l’étendue a beau
Me parler, me montrer l’universel tombeau,
Les soirs sereins, les bois rêveurs, la lune amie;
J’écoute, et je reviens à la douce endormie.

VII

Des fleurs! oh! si j’avais des fleurs! si je pouvais
Aller semer des lys sur ces deux froids chevets!
Si je pouvais couvrir de fleurs mon ange pâle!
Les fleurs sont l’or, l’azur, l’émeraude, l’opale!
Le cercueil au milieu des fleurs veut se coucher;
Les fleurs aiment la mort, et Dieu les fait toucher
Par leur racine aux os, par leur parfum aux âmes!
Puisque je ne le puis, aux lieux que nous aimâmes,
Puisque Dieu ne veut pas nous laisser revenir,
Puisqu’il nous fait lâcher ce qu’on croyait tenir,
Puisque le froid destin, dans ma geôle profonde,
Sur la première porte en scelle une seconde,
Et, sur le père triste et sur l’enfant qui dort,
Ferme l’exil après avoir fermé la mort,
Puisqu’il est impossible à présent que je jette
Même un brin de bruyère à sa fosse muette,
C’est bien le moins qu’elle ait mon âme, n’est-ce pas?
O vent noir dont j’entends sur mon plafond le pas!
Tempête, hiver, qui bats ma vitre de ta grêle!
Mers, nuits! et je l’ai mise en ce livre pour elle!

Prends ce livre; et dis-toi: Ceci vient du vivant
Que nous avons laissé derrière nous, rêvant.
Prends. Et quoique de loin, reconnais ma voix, âme!
Oh! ta cendre est le lit de mon reste de flamme;
Ta tombe est mon espoir, ma charité, ma foi;
Ton linceul toujours flotte entre la vie et moi.
Prends ce livre, et fais-en sortir un divin psaume!
Qu'entre tes vagues mains il devienne fantôme!
Qu'il blanchisse, pareil à l'aube qui pâlit,
A mesure que l'oeil de mon ange le lit,
Et qu'il s'évanouisse, et flotte, et disparaisse,
Ainsi qu'un âtre obscur qu'un souffle errant caresse,
Ainsi qu'une lueur qu'on voit passer le soir,
Ainsi qu'un tourbillon de feu de l'encensoir,
Et que, sous ton regard éblouissant et sombre,
Chaque page s'en aille en étoiles dans l'ombre!

VIII

Oh! quoi que nous fassions et quoi que nous disions,
Soit que notre âme plane au vent des visions,
Soit qu'elle se cramponne à l'argile natale,
Toujours nous arrivons à ta grotte fatale,
Gethsémani, qu'éclaire une vague lueur!
O rocher de l'étrange et funèbre sueur!
Cave où l'esprit combat le destin! ouverture
Sur les profonds effrois de la sombre nature!
Antre d'où le lion sort rêveur, en voyant
Quelqu'un de plus sinistre et de plus effrayant,
La douleur, entrer, pâle, amère, échevelée!
O chute! asile! ô seuil de la trouble vallée
D'où nous apercevons nos ans fuyants et courts,
Nos propres pas marqués dans la fange des jours,
L'échelle où le mal pèse et monte, spectre louche,
L'âpre frémissement de la palme farouche,
Les degrés noirs tirant en bas les blancs degrés,

Et les frissons aux fronts des anges effarés!

Toujours nous arrivons à cette solitude,
Et, là, nous nous taisons, sentant la plénitude!

Paix à l’Ombre! Dormez! dormez! dormez! dormez!
Êtres, groupes confus lentement transformés!
Dormez, les champs! dormez, les fleurs! dormez les tombes!
Toits, murs, seuils des maisons, pierres des catacombes,
Feuilles au fond des bois, plumes au fond des nids,
Dormez! dormez, brins d’herbe, et dormez, infinis!
Calmez-vous, forêt, chêne, érable, frêne, yeuse!
Silence sur la grande horreur religieuse,
Sur l’Océan qui lutte et qui ronge son mors,
Et sur l’apaisement insondable des morts!
Paix à l’obscurité muette et redoutée!
Paix au doute effrayant, à l’immense ombre athée,
A toi, nature, cercle et centre, âme et milieu,
Fourmillement de tout, solitude de Dieu!
O générations aux brumeuses haleines,
Reposez-vous! pas noirs qui marchez dans les plaines!
Dormez, vous qui saignez; dormez, vous qui pleurez!
Douleurs, douleurs, douleurs, fermez vos yeux sacrés!
Tout est religion et rien n’est imposture.
Que sur toute existence et toute créature,
Vivant du souffle humain ou du souffle animal,
Debout au seuil du bien, croulante au bord du mal,
Tendre ou farouche, immonde ou splendide, humble ou grande,
La vaste paix des cieux de toutes parts descende!
Que les enfers dormants rêvent les paradis!
Assoupissez-vous, flots, mers, vents, âmes, tandis
Qu’assis sur la montagne en présence de l’Être,
Précipice où l’on voit pêle-mêle apparaître
Les créations, l’astre et l’homme, les essieux
De ces chars de soleils que nous nommons les cieux,
Les globes, fruits vermeils des divines ramées,
Les comètes d’argent dans un champ noir semées,

Larmes blanches du drap mortuaire des nuits,
Les chaos, les hivers, ces lugubres ennuis,
Pâle, ivre d’ignorance, ébloui de ténèbres,
Voyant dans l’infini s’écrire des algèbres,
Le contemplateur, triste et meurtri, mais serein,
Mesure le problème aux murailles d’airain,
Cherche à distinguer l’aube à travers les prodiges,
Se penche, frémissant, au puits des grands vertiges,
Suit de l’oeil des blancheurs qui passent, alcyons,
Et regarde, pensif, s’étoiler de rayons,
De clartés, de lueurs, vaguement enflammées,
Le gouffre monstrueux plein d’énormes fumées.

LA LÉGENDE DES SIÈCLES: PREMIERE SERIE

This collection of poems was conceived as a grand epic, intended to portray the history and evolution of humanity. Written between 1855 and 1876, during Hugo's exile in Guernsey, the poems were published in three series: in 1859, in 1877, and in 1883. Due to a monumental poetic achievement unparalleled in French poetry, these works are now considered by many to be the only 'true' French epic.

PREFACE

Les personnes qui voudront bien jeter un coup d’œil sur ce livre ne s’en feraient pas une idée précise, si elles y voyaient autre chose qu’un commencement.

Ce livre est-il donc un fragment? Non. Il existe à part. Il a, comme on le verra, son exposition, son milieu et sa fin.

Mais, en même temps, il est, pour ainsi dire, la première page d’un autre livre.

Un commencement peut-il être un tout? Sans doute. Un péristyle est un édifice.

L’arbre, commencement de la forêt, est un tout. Il appartient à la vie isolée, par la racine, et à la vie en commun, par la sève. À lui seul, il ne prouve que l’arbre, mais il annonce la forêt.

Ce livre, s’il n’y avait pas quelque affectation dans des comparaisons de cette nature, aurait, lui aussi, ce double caractère. Il existe solitairement et forme un tout; il existe solidairement et fait partie d’un ensemble.

Cet ensemble, que sera-t-il?

Exprimer l’humanité dans une espèce d’œuvre cyclique; la peindre successivement et simultanément sous tous ses aspects, histoire, fable, philosophie, religion, science, lesquels se résument en un seul et immense mouvement d’ascension vers la lumière; faire apparaître, dans une sorte de miroir sombre et clair — que l’interruption naturelle des travaux terrestres brisera probablement avant qu’il ait la dimension rêvée par l’auteur — cette grande figure une et multiple, lugubre et rayonnante, fatale et sacrée, l’Homme; voilà de quelle pensée, de quelle ambition, si l’on veut, est sortie la Légende des Siècles.

Les deux volumes qu’on va lire n’en contiennent que la première partie, la première série, comme dit le titre.

Les poëmes qui composent ces deux volumes ne sont donc autre chose que des empreintes successives du profil humain, de date en date, depuis Ève, mère des hommes, jusqu’à la Révolution, mère des peuples; empreintes prises, tantôt sur la barbarie, tantôt sur la civilisation, presque toujours sur le vif de l’histoire; empreintes moulées sur le masque des siècles.

Quand d’autres volumes se seront joints à ceux-ci, de façon à rendre l’œuvre un peu moins incomplète, cette série d’empreintes, vaguement disposées dans un certain ordre chronologique, pourra former une sorte de galerie de la médaille humaine.

Pour le poëte comme pour l’historien, pour l’archéologue comme pour le philosophe, chaque siècle est un changement de physionomie de l’humanité. On trouvera dans ces deux volumes, qui, nous le répétons, seront continués et complétés, le reflet de quelques-uns de ces changements de physionomie.

On y trouvera quelque chose du passé, quelque chose du présent (XIII. Maintenant), et comme un vague mirage de l’avenir. Du reste, ces poëmes, divers par le sujet, mais inspirés par la même pensée, n’ont entre eux d’autre nœud qu’un fil, ce fil qui s’atténue quelquefois au point de devenir invisible, mais qui ne casse jamais, le grand fil mystérieux du labyrinthe humain, le Progrès.

Comme dans une mosaïque, chaque pierre a sa couleur et sa forme propre; l’ensemble donne une figure. La figure de ce livre, on l’a dit plus haut, c’est l’homme.

Ces deux volumes d’ailleurs, qu’on veuille bien ne pas l’oublier, sont à l’ouvrage dont ils font partie, et qui sera mis au jour plus tard, ce que serait à une symphonie l’ouverture. Ils n’en peuvent donner l’idée exacte et complète, mais ils contiennent une lueur de l’œuvre entière.

Le poëme que l’auteur a dans l’esprit, n’est ici qu’entr’ouvert.

Quant à ces deux volumes pris en eux-mêmes, l’auteur n’a qu’un mot à en dire: le genre humain, considéré comme un grand individu collectif accomplissant d’époque en époque une série d’actes sur la terre, a deux aspects: l’aspect historique et l’aspect légendaire. Le second n’est pas moins vrai que le premier; le premier n’est pas moins conjectural que le second.

Qu’on ne conclue pas de cette dernière ligne — disons-le en passant — qu’il puisse entrer dans la pensée de l’auteur d’amoindrir la haute valeur de l’enseignement historique. Pas une gloire, parmi les splendeurs du génie humain, ne dépasse celle du grand historien philosophe. L’auteur, seulement, sans diminuer la portée de l’histoire, veut constater la portée de la légende. Hérodote fait l’histoire, Homère fait la légende.

C’est l’aspect légendaire qui prévaut dans ces deux volumes et qui en colore les poëmes. Ces poëmes se passent l’un à l’autre le flambeau de la tradition humaine. Quasi cursores. C'est ce flambeau, dont la flamme est le vrai, qui fait l'unité de ce livre. Tous ces poëmes, ceux du moins qui résument le passé, sont de la réalité historique condensée ou de la réalité historique devinée. La fiction parfois, la falsification jamais; aucun grossissement de lignes; fidélité absolue à la couleur des temps et à l'esprit des civilisations diverses. Pour citer des exemples, la décadence romaine (tome 1er page 49) n'a pas un détail qui ne soit rigoureusement exact; la barbarie mahométane ressort de Cantemir, à travers l'enthousiasme de l'historiographe turc, telle qu'elle est exposée dans les premières pages de Zim-Zizimi et de Sultan Mourad.

Du reste, les personnes auxquelles l'étude du passé est familière, reconnaîtront, l'auteur n'en doute pas, l'accent réel et sincère de tout ce livre. Un de ces poëmes (Première rencontre du Christ avec le tombeau) est tiré, l'auteur pourrait dire traduit, de l'Évangile. Deux autres (le Mariage de Roland, Aymerillot) sont des feuillets détachés de la colossale épopée du moyen âge (Charlemagne, emperor à la barbe florie). Ces deux poëmes jaillissent directement des livres de geste de la chevalerie. C'est de l'histoire écoutée aux portes de la légende.

Quant au mode de formation de plusieurs des autres poëmes dans la pensée de l'auteur, on pourra s'en faire une idée en lisant les quelques lignes placées en note à la page 126 du tome II, lignes d'où est sortie la pièce intitulée: les Raisons du Momotombo. L'auteur en convient, un rudiment imperceptible, perdu dans la chronique ou dans la tradition, à peine visible à l'œil nu, lui a souvent suffi. Il n'est pas défendu au poëte et au philosophe d'essayer sur les faits sociaux ce que le naturaliste essaye sur les faits zoologiques: la reconstruction du monstre d'après l'empreinte de l'ongle ou l'alvéole de la dent.

Ici lacune, là étude complaisante et approfondie d'un détail, tel est l'inconvénient de toute publication fractionnée. Ces défauts de proportion peuvent n'être qu'apparents. Le lecteur trouvera certainement juste d'attendre, pour les apprécier définitivement, que la Légende des Siècles ait paru en entier. Les usurpations, par exemple, jouent un tel rôle dans la construction des royautés au moyen âge, et mêlent tant de crimes à la complication des investitures, que l'auteur a cru devoir les présenter sous leurs trois principaux aspects dans les trois drames: le Petit Roi de Galice, Eviradnus, la Confiance du marquis Fabrice. Ce qui peut sembler aujourd'hui un développement excessif s'ajustera plus tard à l'ensemble.

Les tableaux riants sont rares dans ce livre; cela tient à ce qu’ils ne sont pas fréquents dans l’histoire.

Comme on le verra, l’auteur, en racontant le genre humain, ne l’isole pas de son entourage terrestre. Il mêle quelquefois à l’homme, il heurte à l’âme humaine, afin de lui faire rendre son véritable son, ces êtres différents de l’homme que nous nommons bêtes, choses, nature morte, et qui remplissent on ne sait quelles fonctions fatales dans l’équilibre vertigineux de la création.

Tel est ce livre. L’auteur l’offre au public sans rien se dissimuler de sa profonde insuffisance. C’est une tentative vers l’idéal. Rien de plus.

Ce dernier mot a besoin peut-être d’être expliqué.

Plus tard, nous le croyons, lorsque plusieurs autres parties de ce livre auront été publiées, on apercevra le lien qui, dans la conception de l’auteur, rattache la Légende des Siècles à deux autres poëmes, presque terminés à cette heure, et qui en sont, l’un le dénoûment, l’autre le couronnement: la Fin de Satan, et Dieu.

L’auteur, du reste, pour compléter ce qu’il a dit plus haut, ne voit aucune difficulté à faire entrevoir dès à présent qu’il a esquissé dans la solitude une sorte de poëme d’une certaine étendue où se réverbère le problème unique, l’Être, sous sa triple face: l’Humanité, le Mal, l’Infini; le progressif, le relatif, l’absolu; en ce qu’on pourrait appeler trois chants, la Légende des Siècles, la Fin de Satan, Dieu.

Il publie aujourd’hui un premier carton de cette esquisse. Les autres suivront.

Nul ne peut répondre d’achever ce qu’il a commencé, pas une minute de continuation certaine n’est assurée à l’œuvre ébauchée; la solution de continuité, hélas! c’est tout l’homme; mais il est permis, même au plus faible, d’avoir une bonne intention et de la dire.

Or, l’intention de ce livre est bonne.

L’épanouissement du genre humain de siècle en siècle, l’homme montant des ténèbres à l’idéal, la transfiguration paradisiaque de l’enfer terrestre, l’éclosion lente et suprême de la liberté, droit pour cette vie, responsabilité pour l’autre; une espèce d’hymne religieux à mille strophes, ayant dans ses entrailles une foi profonde et sur son sommet une haute prière; le drame de la création éclairé par le visage du créateur, voilà ce que sera, terminé, ce poëme dans son ensemble; si Dieu, maître des existences humaines, y consent.

I. Le Sacre de la femme

D’Ève à Jésus

I

L’aurore apparaissait; quelle aurore? Un abîme
D’éblouissement, vaste, insondable, sublime;
Une ardente lueur de paix et de bonté.
    C’était aux premiers temps du globe; et la clarté
    Brillait sereine au front du ciel inaccessible,
    Étant tout ce que Dieu peut avoir de visible;
    Tout s’illuminait, l’ombre et le brouillard obscur;
    Des avalanches d’or s’écroulaient dans l’azur;
    Le jour en flamme, au fond de la terre ravie,
    Embrasait les lointains splendides de la vie;
    Les horizons pleins d’ombre et de rocs chevelus,
    Et d’arbres effrayants que l’homme ne voit plus,
    Luisaient comme le songe et comme le vertige,
    Dans une profondeur d’éclair et de prodige;
    L’Éden pudique et nu s’éveillait mollement;
    Les oiseaux gazouillaient un hymne si charmant,
    Si frais, si gracieux, si suave et si tendre,
    Que les anges distraits se penchaient pour l’entendre;
    Le seul rugissement du tigre était plus doux;
    Les halliers où l’agneau paissait avec les loups,
    Les mers où l’hydre aimait l’alcyon, et les plaines
    Où les ours et les daims confondaient leurs haleines,
    Hésitaient, dans le chœur des concerts infinis,
    Entre le cri de l’antre et la chanson des nids.
    La prière semblait à la clarté mêlée;
    Et sur cette nature encore immaculée
    Qui du verbe éternel avait gardé l’accent,
    Sur ce monde céleste, angélique, innocent,
    Le matin, murmurant une sainte parole,
    Souriait, et l’aurore était une auréole.

Tout avait la figure intègre du bonheur;
Pas de bouche d’où vînt un souffle empoisonneur;
Pas un être qui n’eût sa majesté première;
Tout ce que l’infini peut jeter de lumière
Éclatait pêle-mêle à la fois dans les airs;
Le vent jouait avec cette gerbe d’éclairs
Dans le tourbillon libre et fuyant des nuées;
L’enfer balbutiait quelques vagues huées
Qui s’évanouissaient dans le grand cri joyeux
Des eaux, des monts, des bois, de la terre et des cieux!
Les vents et les rayons semaient de tels délires
Que les forêts vibraient comme de grandes lyres;
De l’ombre à la clarté, de la base au sommet,
Une fraternité vénérable germait;
L’astre était sans orgueil et le ver sans envie;
On s’adorait d’un bout à l’autre de la vie;
Une harmonie égale à la clarté, versant
Une extase divine au globe adolescent,
Semblait sortir du cœur mystérieux du monde;
L’herbe en était émue, et le nuage, et l’onde,
Et même le rocher qui songe et qui se tait;
L’arbre, tout pénétré de lumière, chantait;
Chaque fleur, échangeant son souffle et sa pensée
Avec le ciel serein d’où tombe la rosée,
Recevait une perle et donnait un parfum;
L’Être resplendissait, Un dans Tout, Tout dans Un;
Le paradis brillait sous les sombres ramures
De la vie ivre d’ombre et pleine de murmures,
Et la lumière était faite de vérité;
Et tout avait la grâce, ayant la pureté;
Tout était flamme, hymen, bonheur, douceur, clémence,
Tant ces immenses jours avaient une aube immense!

II

Ineffable lever du premier rayon d’or!
Du jour éclairant tout sans rien savoir encor!

Ô Matin des matins! amour! joie effrénée
De commencer le temps, l’heure, le mois, l’année!
Ouverture du monde! instant prodigieux!
La nuit se dissolvait dans les énormes cieux
Où rien ne tremble, où rien ne pleure, où rien ne souffre;
Autant que le chaos la lumière était gouffre;
Dieu se manifestait dans sa calme grandeur,
Certitude pour l’âme et pour les yeux splendeur;
De faîte en faîte, au ciel et sur terre, et dans toutes
Les épaisseurs de l’être aux innombrables voûtes,
On voyait l’évidence adorable éclater;
Le monde s’ébauchait; tout semblait méditer;
Les types primitifs, offrant dans leur mélange
Presque la brute informe et rude et presque l’ange,
Surgissaient, orageux, gigantesques, touffus;
On sentait tressaillir sous leurs groupes confus
La terre, inépuisable et suprême matrice;
La création sainte, à son tour créatrice,
Modelait vaguement des aspects merveilleux,
Faisait sortir l’essaim des êtres fabuleux
Tantôt des bois, tantôt des mers, tantôt des nues,
Et proposait à Dieu des formes inconnues
Que le temps, moissonneur pensif, plus tard changea;
On sentait sourdre, et vivre, et végéter déjà
Tous les arbres futurs, pins, érables, yeuses,
Dans des verdissements de feuilles monstrueuses;
Une sorte de vie excessive gonflait
La mamelle du monde au mystérieux lait;
Tout semblait presque hors de la mesure éclore;
Comme si la nature, en étant proche encore,
Eût pris, pour ses essais sur la terre et les eaux,
Une difformité splendide au noir chaos.

Les divins paradis, pleins d’une étrange sève,
Semblent au fond des temps reluire dans le rêve,
Et, pour nos yeux obscurs, sans idéal, sans foi,

Leur extase aujourd’hui serait presque l’effroi;
Mais qu’importe à l’abîme, à l’âme universelle
Qui dépense un soleil au lieu d’une étincelle,
Et qui, pour y pouvoir poser l’ange azuré,
Fait croître jusqu’aux cieux l’Éden démesuré!

Jours inouïs! le bien, le beau, le vrai, le juste,
Coulaient dans le torrent, frissonnaient dans l’arbuste;
L’aquilon louait Dieu de sagesse vêtu;
L’arbre était bon; la fleur était une vertu;
C’est trop peu d’être blanc, le lis était candide;
Rien n’avait de souillure et rien n’avait de ride;
Jours purs! rien ne saignait sous l’ongle et sous la dent;
La bête heureuse était l’innocence rôdant;
Le mal n’avait encor rien mis de son mystère
Dans le serpent, dans l’aigle altier, dans la panthère;
Le précipice ouvert dans l’animal sacré
N’avait pas d’ombre, étant jusqu’au fond éclairé;
La montagne était jeune et la vague était vierge;
Le globe, hors des mers dont le flot le submerge,
Sortait beau, magnifique, aimant, fier, triomphant,
Et rien n’était petit quoique tout fût enfant;
La terre avait, parmi ses hymnes d’innocence,
Un étourdissement de sève et de croissance;
L’instinct fécond faisait rêver l’instinct vivant;
Et, répandu partout, sur les eaux, dans le vent,
L’amour épars flottait comme un parfum s’exhale;
La nature riait, naïve et colossale;
L’espace vagissait ainsi qu’un nouveau-né.
L’aube était le regard du soleil étonné.

III

Or, ce jour-là, c’était le plus beau qu’eût encore
Versé sur l’univers la radieuse aurore;
Le même séraphique et saint frémissement
Unissait l’algue à l’onde et l’être à l’élément;
L’éther plus pur luisait dans les cieux plus sublimes;
Les souffles abondaient plus profonds sur les cimes;
Les feuillages avaient de plus doux mouvements;
Et les rayons tombaient caressants et charmants
Sur un frais vallon vert, où, débordant d’extase,
Adorant ce grand ciel que la lumière embrase,
Heureux d’être, joyeux d’aimer, ivres de voir,
Dans l’ombre, au bord d’un lac, vertigineux miroir,
Étaient assis, les pieds effleurés par la lame,
Le premier homme auprès de la première femme.

L’époux priait, ayant l’épouse à son côté.

IV

Ève offrait au ciel bleu la sainte nudité;
Ève blonde admirait l’aube, sa sœur vermeille.

Chair de la femme! argile idéale! ô merveille!
Ô pénétration sublime de l’esprit
Dans le limon que l’Être ineffable pétrit!
Matière où l’âme brille à travers son suaire!
Boue où l’on voit les doigts du divin statuaire!
Fange auguste appelant le baiser et le cœur,
Si sainte, qu’on ne sait, tant l’amour est vainqueur,
Tant l’âme est vers ce lit mystérieux poussée,
Si cette volupté n’est pas une pensée,
Et qu’on ne peut, à l’heure où les sens sont en feu,
Étreindre la beauté sans croire embrasser Dieu!

Ève laissait errer ses yeux sur la nature.

Et, sous les verts palmiers à la haute stature,
Autour d’Ève, au-dessus de sa tête, l’œillet
Semblait songer, le bleu lotus se recueillait,
Le frais myosotis se souvenait; les roses
Cherchaient ses pieds avec leurs lèvres demi-closes;
Un souffle fraternel sortait du lys vermeil;
Comme si ce doux être eût été leur pareil,
Comme si de ces fleurs, ayant toutes une âme,
La plus belle s’était épanouie en femme.

V

Pourtant, jusqu’à ce jour, c’était Adam, l’élu
Qui dans le ciel sacré le premier avait lu,
C’était le Marié tranquille et fort, que l’ombre
Et la lumière, et l’aube, et les astres sans nombre,
Et les bêtes des bois, et les fleurs du ravin
Suivaient ou vénéraient comme l’aîné divin,
Comme le front ayant la lueur la plus haute;
Et, quand tous deux, la main dans la main, côte à côte,
Erraient dans la clarté de l’Éden radieux,
La nature sans fond, sous ses millions d’yeux,
À travers les rochers, les rameaux, l’onde et l’herbe,
Couvait, avec amour pour le couple superbe,
Avec plus de respect pour l’homme, être complet,
Ève qui regardait, Adam qui contemplait.

Mais, ce jour-là, ces yeux innombrables qu’entr’ouvre
L’infini sous les plis du voile qui le couvre,
S’attachaient sur l’épouse et non pas sur l’époux,
Comme si, dans ce jour religieux et doux,

Béni parmi les jours et parmi les aurores,
Aux nids ailés perdus sous les branches sonores,
Au nuage, aux ruisseaux, aux frissonnants essaims,
Aux bêtes, aux cailloux, à tous ces êtres saints
Que de mots ténébreux la terre aujourd’hui nomme,
La femme eût apparu plus auguste que l’homme!

VI

Pourquoi ce choix? pourquoi cet attendrissement
Immense du profond et divin firmament?
Pourquoi tout l’univers penché sur une tête?
Pourquoi l’aube donnant à la femme une fête?
Pourquoi ces chants? Pourquoi ces palpitations
Des flots dans plus de joie et dans plus de rayons?
Pourquoi partout l’ivresse et la hâte d’éclore,
Et les antres heureux de s’ouvrir à l’aurore,
Et plus d’encens sur terre et plus de flamme aux cieux?

Le beau couple innocent songeait silencieux.

VII

Cependant la tendresse inexprimable et douce
De l’astre, du vallon, du lac, du brin de mousse,
Tressaillait plus profonde à chaque instant autour
D’Ève, que saluait du haut des cieux le jour;
Le regard qui sortait des choses et des êtres,
Des flots bénis, des bois sacrés, des arbres prêtres,
Se fixait, plus pensif de moment en moment,
Sur cette femme au front vénérable et charmant;
Un long rayon d’amour lui venait des abîmes,
De l’ombre, de l’azur, des profondeurs, des cimes,
De la fleur, de l’oiseau chantant, du roc muet.
Et, pâle, Ève sentit que son flanc remuait.

La Conscience

Lorsque avec ses enfants vêtus de peaux de bêtes,
Échevelé, livide au milieu des tempêtes,
Caïn se fut enfui de devant Jéhovah,
Comme le soir tombait, l’homme sombre arriva
Au bas d’une montagne en une grande plaine;
Sa femme fatiguée et ses fils hors d’haleine
Lui dirent: « Couchons-nous sur la terre, et dormons.”
Caïn, ne dormant pas, songeait au pied des monts.
Ayant levé la tête, au fond des cieux funèbres,
Il vit un œil, tout grand ouvert dans les ténèbres,
Et qui le regardait dans l’ombre fixement.
«Je suis trop près,” dit-il avec un tremblement.
Il réveilla ses fils dormant, sa femme lasse,
Et se remit à fuir sinistre dans l’espace.
Il marcha trente jours, il marcha trente nuits.
Il allait, muet, pâle et frémissant aux bruits,
Furtif, sans regarder derrière lui, sans trêve,
Sans repos, sans sommeil; il atteignit la grève
Des mers dans le pays qui fut depuis Assur.
«Arrêtons-nous, dit-il, car cet asile est sûr.
Restons-y. Nous avons du monde atteint les bornes.”
Et, comme il s’asseyait, il vit dans les cieux mornes
L’œil à la même place au fond de l’horizon.
Alors il tressaillit en proie au noir frisson.
«Cachez-moi!” cria-t-il; et, le doigt sur la bouche,
Tous ses fils regardaient trembler l’aïeul farouche.
Caïn dit à Jabel, père de ceux qui vont
Sous des tentes de poil dans le désert profond:
«Étends de ce côté la toile de la tente.”
Et l’on développa la muraille flottante;
Et, quand on l’eut fixée avec des poids de plomb,
«Vous ne voyez plus rien?” dit Tsilla, l’enfant blond,
La fille de ses fils, douce comme l’aurore;
Et Caïn répondit: « Je vois cet œil encore!”
Jubal, père de ceux qui passent dans les bourgs

Soufflant dans des clairons et frappant des tambours,
Cria: « Je saurai bien construire une barrière.”
Il fit un mur de bronze et mit Caïn derrière.
Et Caïn dit: « Cet œil me regarde toujours!”
Hénoch dit: « Il faut faire une enceinte de tours
Si terrible, que rien ne puisse approcher d’elle.
Bâtissons une ville avec sa citadelle,
Bâtissons une ville, et nous la fermerons.”
Alors Tubalcaïn, père des forgerons,
Construisit une ville énorme et surhumaine.
Pendant qu’il travaillait, ses frères, dans la plaine,
Chassaient les fils d’Énos et les enfants de Seth;
Et l’on crevait les yeux à quiconque passait;
Et, le soir, on lançait des flèches aux étoiles.
Le granit remplaça la tente aux murs de toiles,
On lia chaque bloc avec des nœuds de fer,
Et la ville semblait une ville d’enfer;
L’ombre des tours faisait la nuit dans les campagnes;
Ils donnèrent aux murs l’épaisseur des montagnes;
Sur la porte on grava: « Défense à Dieu d’entrer.”
Quand ils eurent fini de clore et de murer,
On mit l’aïeul au centre en une tour de pierre;
Et lui restait lugubre et hagard. « Ô mon père!
L’œil a-t-il disparu?” dit en tremblant Tsilla.
Et Caïn répondit: « Non, il est toujours là.”
Alors il dit: « Je veux habiter sous la terre
Comme dans son sépulcre un homme solitaire;
Rien ne me verra plus, je ne verrai plus rien.”
On fit donc une fosse, et Caïn dit: « C’est bien!”
Puis il descendit seul sous cette voûte sombre;
Quand il se fut assis sur sa chaise dans l’ombre
Et qu’on eut sur son front fermé le souterrain,
L’œil était dans la tombe et regardait Caïn.

Puissance égale bonté

Au commencement, Dieu vit un jour dans l’espace

Iblis venir à lui; Dieu dit: « Veux-tu ta grâce?
— Non, dit le Mal. — Alors que me demandes-tu?
— Dieu, répondit Iblis de ténèbres vêtu,
Joutons à qui créera la chose la plus belle.”
L’Être dit: « J’y consens. — Voici, dit le Rebelle:
Moi, je prendrai ton œuvre et la transformerai.
Toi, tu féconderas ce que je t’offrirai;
Et chacun de nous deux soufflera son génie
Sur la chose par l’autre apportée et fournie.
— Soit. Que te faut-il? Prends, dit l’Être avec dédain.
— La tête du cheval et les cornes du daim.
— Prends.” Le monstre hésitant que la brume enveloppe
Reprit: « J’aimerais mieux celle de l’antilope.
— Va, prends.” Iblis entra dans son antre et forgea.
Puis il dressa le front. « Est-ce fini déjà?
— Non. — Te faut-il encor quelque chose? dit l’Être.
— Les yeux de l’éléphant, le cou du taureau, maître.
— Prends. — Je demande, en outre, ajouta le Rampant,
Le ventre du cancer, les anneaux du serpent,
Les cuisses du chameau, les pattes de l’autruche.
— Prends.” Ainsi qu’on entend l’abeille dans la ruche,
On entendait aller et venir dans l’enfer
Le démon remuant des enclumes de fer.
Nul regard ne pouvait voir à travers la nue
Ce qu’il faisait au fond de la cave inconnue.
Tout à coup, se tournant vers l’Être, Iblis hurla:
«Donne-moi la couleur de l’or.” Dieu dit: « Prends-la.”
Et, grondant et râlant comme un bœuf qu’on égorge,
Le démon se remit à battre dans sa forge;
Il frappait du ciseau, du pilon, du maillet,
Et toute la caverne horrible tressaillait;
Les éclairs des marteaux faisaient une tempête;
Ses yeux ardents semblaient deux braises dans sa tête;
Il rugissait; le feu lui sortait des naseaux,
Avec un bruit pareil au bruit des grandes eaux
Dans la saison livide où la cigogne émigre.
Dieu dit: « Que te faut-il encor? — Le bond du tigre.

— Prends. — C’est bien, dit Iblis debout dans son volcan.
— Viens m’aider à souffler,” dit-il à l’ouragan.
L’âtre flambait; Iblis, suant à grosses gouttes,
Se courbait, se tordait, et, sous les sombres voûtes,
On ne distinguait rien qu’une sombre rougeur
Empourprant le profil du monstrueux forgeur.
Et l’ouragan l’aidait, étant démon lui-même.
L’Être, parlant du haut du firmament suprême,
Dit: « Que veux-tu de plus?” Et le grand paria,
Levant sa tête énorme et triste, lui cria:
«Le poitrail du lion et les ailes de l’aigle.”
Et Dieu jeta, du fond des éléments qu’il règle,
À l’ouvrier d’orgueil et de rébellion
L’aile de l’aigle avec le poitrail du lion.
Et le démon reprit son œuvre sous les voiles.
«Quelle hydre fait-il donc?” demandaient les étoiles.
Et le monde attendait, grave, inquiet, béant,
Le colosse qu’allait enfanter ce géant;
Soudain, on entendit dans la nuit sépulcrale
Comme un dernier effort jetant un dernier râle;
L’Etna, fauve atelier du forgeron maudit,
Flamboya; le plafond de l’enfer se fendit,
Et, dans une clarté blême et surnaturelle,
On vit des mains d’Iblis jaillir la sauterelle.
Et l’infirme effrayant, l’être ailé, mais boiteux,
Vit sa création et n’en fut pas honteux,
L’avortement étant l’habitude de l’ombre.
Il sortit à mi-corps de l’éternel décombre,
Et, croisant ses deux bras, arrogant, ricanant,
Cria dans l’infini: « Maître, à toi maintenant!”
Et ce fourbe, qui tend à Dieu même une embûche,
Reprit: « Tu m’as donné l’éléphant et l’autruche,
Et l’or pour dorer tout; et ce qu’ont de plus beau
Le chameau, le cheval, le lion, le taureau,
Le tigre et l’antilope, et l’aigle et la couleuvre;
C’est mon tour de fournir la matière à ton œuvre;
Voici tout ce que j’ai. Je te le donne. Prends.”

Dieu, pour qui les méchants mêmes sont transparents,
Tendit sa grande main de lumière baignée
Vers l’ombre, et le démon lui donna l’araignée.

Et Dieu prit l’araignée et la mit au milieu
Du gouffre qui n’était pas encor le ciel bleu;
Et l’Esprit regarda la bête; sa prunelle,
Formidable, versait la lueur éternelle;
Le monstre, si petit qu’il semblait un point noir,
Grossit alors, et fut soudain énorme à voir;
Et Dieu le regardait de son regard tranquille;
Une aube étrange erra sur cette forme vile;
L’affreux ventre devint un globe lumineux;
Et les pattes, changeant en sphères d’or leurs nœuds,
S’allongèrent dans l’ombre en grands rayons de flamme;
Iblis leva les yeux, et tout à coup l’infâme,
Ébloui, se courba sous l’abîme vermeil;
Car Dieu, de l’araignée, avait fait le soleil.

Les Lions

Les lions dans la fosse étaient sans nourriture.
Captifs, ils rugissaient vers la grande nature
Qui prend soin de la brute au fond des antres sourds.
Les lions n’avaient pas mangé depuis trois jours.
Ils se plaignaient de l’homme, et, pleins de sombres haines,
À travers leur plafond de barreaux et de chaînes,
Regardaient du couchant la sanglante rougeur;
Leur voix grave effrayait au loin le voyageur
Marchant à l’horizon dans les collines bleues.

Tristes, ils se battaient le ventre de leurs queues;
Et les murs du caveau tremblaient, tant leurs yeux roux
À leur gueule affamée ajoutaient de courroux!

La fosse était profonde; et, pour cacher leur fuite,
Og et ses vastes fils l’avaient jadis construite;

Ces enfants de la terre avaient creusé pour eux
Ce palais colossal dans le roc ténébreux;
Leurs têtes en ayant crevé la large voûte,
La lumière y tombait et s’y répandait toute,
Et ce cachot de nuit pour dôme avait l’azur.
Nabuchodonosor, qui régnait dans Assur,
En avait fait couvrir d’un dallage le centre;
Et ce roi fauve avait trouvé bon que cet antre,
Qui jadis vit les Chams et les Deucalions,
Bâti par les géants, servît pour les lions.

Ils étaient quatre, et tous affreux. Une litière
D’ossements tapissait le vaste bestiaire;
Les rochers étageaient leur ombre au-dessus d’eux;
Ils marchaient, écrasant sur le pavé hideux
Des carcasses de bête et des squelettes d’homme.

Le premier arrivait du désert de Sodome;
Jadis, quand il avait sa fauve liberté,
Il habitait le Sin, tout à l’extrémité
Du silence terrible et de la solitude;
Malheur à qui tombait sous sa patte au poil rude!
Et c’était un lion des sables.

Le second
Sortait de la forêt de l’Euphrate fécond;
Naguère, en le voyant vers le fleuve descendre,
Tout tremblait; on avait eu du mal à le prendre,
Car il avait fallu les meutes de deux rois;
Il grondait; et c’était une bête des bois.

Et le troisième était un lion des montagnes.
Jadis il avait l’ombre et l’horreur pour compagnes;
Dans ce temps-là, parfois, vers les ravins bourbeux
Se ruaient des galops de moutons et de bœufs;
Tous fuyaient, le pasteur, le guerrier et le prêtre;
Et l’on voyait sa face effroyable apparaître.

Le quatrième, monstre épouvantable et fier,
Était un grand lion des plages de la mer.
Il rôdait près des flots avant son esclavage.
Gur, cité forte, était alors sur le rivage;
Ses toits fumaient; son port abritait un amas
De navires mêlant confusément leurs mâts;
Le paysan portant son gomor plein de manne
S’y rendait; le prophète y venait sur son âne;
Ce peuple était joyeux comme un oiseau lâché;
Gur avait une place avec un grand marché,
Et l’Abyssin venait y vendre des ivoires;
L’Amorrhéen, de l’ambre et des chemises noires;
Ceux d’Ascalon, du beurre, et ceux d’Aser, du blé.
Du vol de ses vaisseaux l’abîme était troublé.
Or, ce lion était gêné par cette ville;
Il trouvait, quand le soir il songeait immobile,
Qu’elle avait trop de peuple et faisait trop de bruit.
Gur était très-farouche et très-haute; la nuit,
Trois lourds barreaux fermaient l’entrée inabordable;
Entre chaque créneau se dressait, formidable,
Une corne de buffle ou de rhinocéros;
Le mur était solide et droit comme un héros;
Et l’Océan roulait à vagues débordées
Dans le fossé, profond de soixante coudées.
Au lieu de dogues noirs jappant dans le chenil,
Deux dragons monstrueux pris dans les joncs du Nil
Et dressés par un mage à la garde servile,
Veillaient des deux côtés de la porte de ville.
Or, le lion s’était une nuit avancé,
Avait franchi d’un bond le colossal fossé,
Et broyé, furieux, entre ses dents barbares,
La porte de la ville avec ses triples barres,
Et, sans même les voir, mêlé les deux dragons
Au vaste écrasement des verrous et des gonds;
Et, quand il s’en était retourné vers la grève,
De la ville et du peuple il ne restait qu’un rêve,

Et, pour loger le tigre et nicher les vautours,
Quelques larves de murs sous des spectres de tours.

Celui-là se tenait accroupi sur le ventre.
Il ne rugissait pas, il bâillait; dans cet antre
Où l’homme misérable avait le pied sur lui,
Il dédaignait la faim, ne sentant que l’ennui.

Les trois autres allaient et venaient; leur prunelle,
Si quelque oiseau battait leurs barreaux de son aile,
Le suivait; et leur faim bondissait, et leur dent
Mâchait l’ombre à travers leur cri rauque et grondant.

Soudain, dans l’angle obscur de la lugubre étable,
La grille s’entr’ouvrit; sur le seuil redoutable,
Un homme que poussaient d’horribles bras tremblants,
Apparut; il était vêtu de linceuls blancs;
La grille referma ses deux battants funèbres;
L’homme avec les lions resta dans les ténèbres.
Les monstres, hérissant leur crinière, écumant,
Se ruèrent sur lui, poussant ce hurlement
Effroyable, où rugit la haine et le ravage
Et toute la nature irritée et sauvage
Avec son épouvante et ses rébellions;
Et l’homme dit: « La paix soit avec vous, lions!”
L’homme dressa la main; les lions s’arrêtèrent.

Les loups qui font la guerre aux morts et les déterrent,
Les ours au crâne plat, les chacals convulsifs
Qui pendant le naufrage errent sur les récifs,
Sont féroces; l’hyène infâme est implacable;
Le tigre attend sa proie et d’un seul bond l’accable;
Mais le puissant lion, qui fait de larges pas,
Parfois lève sa griffe et ne la baisse pas,
Étant le grand rêveur solitaire de l’ombre.

Et les lions, groupés dans l’immense décombre,

Se mirent à parler entre eux, délibérant;
On eût dit des vieillards réglant un différend
Au froncement pensif de leurs moustaches blanches.
Un arbre mort pendait, tordant sur eux ses branches.

Et, grave, le lion des sables dit: « Lions,
Quand cet homme est entré, j'ai cru voir les rayons
De midi dans la plaine où l'ardent semoun passe,
Et j'ai senti le souffle énorme de l'espace;
Cet homme vient à nous de la part du désert.”

Le lion des bois dit: « Autrefois, le concert
Du figuier, du palmier, du cèdre et de l'yeuse,
Emplissait jour et nuit ma caverne joyeuse;
Même à l'heure où l'on sent que le monde se tait,
Le grand feuillage vert autour de moi chantait.
Quand cet homme a parlé, sa voix m'a semblé douce
Comme le bruit qui sort des nids d'ombre et de mousse;
Cet homme vient à nous de la part des forêts.”

Et celui qui s'était approché le plus près,
Le lion noir des monts dit: « Cet homme ressemble
Au Caucase, où jamais une roche ne tremble;
Il a la majesté de l'Atlas; j'ai cru voir,
Quand son bras s'est levé, le Liban se mouvoir
Et se dresser, jetant l'ombre immense aux campagnes;
Cet homme vient à nous de la part des montagnes.”

Le lion qui, jadis, au bord des flots rôdant,
Rugissait aussi haut que l'Océan grondant,
Parla le quatrième, et dit: « Fils, j'ai coutume,
En voyant la grandeur, d'oublier l'amertume,
Et c'est pourquoi j'étais le voisin de la mer.
J'y regardais — laissant les vagues écumer —
Apparaître la lune et le soleil éclore,
Et le sombre infini sourire dans l'aurore;
Et j'ai pris, ô lions, dans cette intimité,

L’habitude du gouffre et de l’éternité;
Or, sans savoir le nom dont la terre le nomme,
J’ai vu luire le ciel dans les yeux de cet homme;
Cet homme au front serein vient de la part de Dieu.”

Quand la nuit eut noirci le grand firmament bleu,
Le gardien voulut voir la fosse, et cet esclave,
Collant sa face pâle aux grilles de la cave,
Dans la profondeur vague aperçut Daniel
Qui se tenait debout et regardait le ciel,
Et songeait, attentif aux étoiles sans nombre,
Pendant que les lions léchaient ses pieds dans l’ombre.

Le Temple

Moïse pour l’autel cherchait un statuaire;
Dieu dit: « Il en faut deux;” et dans le sanctuaire
Conduisit Oliab avec Béliséel.
L’un sculptait l’idéal et l’autre le réel.

Booz endormi

Booz s’était couché de fatigue accablé;
Il avait tout le jour travaillé dans son aire;
Puis avait fait son lit à sa place ordinaire;
Booz dormait auprès des boisseaux pleins de blé.

Ce vieillard possédait des champs de blés et d’orge;
Il était, quoique riche, à la justice enclin;
Il n’avait pas de fange en l’eau de son moulin;
Il n’avait pas d’enfer dans le feu de sa forge.

Sa barbe était d’argent comme un ruisseau d’avril.
Sa gerbe n’était point avare ni haineuse;
Quand il voyait passer quelque pauvre glaneuse;
«Laissez tomber exprès des épis,” disait-il.

Cet homme marchait pur loin des sentiers obliques,
Vêtu de probité candide et de lin blanc;
Et, toujours du côté des pauvres ruisselant,
Ses sacs de grains semblaient des fontaines publiques.

Booz était bon maître et fidèle parent;
Il était généreux, quoiqu’il fût économe;
Les femmes regardaient Booz plus qu’un jeune homme,
Car le jeune homme est beau, mais le vieillard est grand.

Le vieillard, qui revient vers la source première,
Entre aux jours éternels et sort des jours changeants;
Et l’on voit de la flamme aux yeux des jeunes gens.
Mais dans l’œil du vieillard on voit de la lumière.

*

Donc, Booz dans la nuit dormait parmi les siens.
Près des meules, qu’on eût prises pour des décombres,
Les moissonneurs couchés faisaient des groupes sombres;
Et ceci se passait dans des temps très-anciens.

Les tribus d’Israël avaient pour chef un juge;
La terre, où l’homme errait sous la tente, inquiet
Des empreintes de pieds de géants qu’il voyait,
Était encor mouillée et molle du déluge.

*

Comme dormait Jacob, comme dormait Judith,
Booz, les yeux fermés, gisait sous la feuillée;
Or, la porte du ciel s’étant entre-bâillée
Au-dessus de sa tête, un songe en descendit.

Et ce songe était tel, que Booz vit un chêne

Qui, sorti de son ventre, allait jusqu’au ciel bleu;
Une race y montait comme une longue chaîne;
Un roi chantait en bas, en haut mourait un Dieu.

Et Booz murmurait avec la voix de l’âme
«Comment se pourrait-il que de moi ceci vînt?
Le chiffre de mes ans a passé quatre-vingt.
Et je n’ai pas de fils, et je n’ai plus de femme.

“ Voilà longtemps que celle avec qui j’ai dormi,
Ô Seigneur! a quitté ma couche pour la vôtre;
Et nous sommes encor tout mêlés l’un à l’autre,
Elle à demi vivante et moi mort à demi.

“ Une race naîtrait de moi! Comment le croire?
Comment se pourrait-il que j’eusse des enfants?
Quand on est jeune, on a des matins triomphants;
Le jour sort de la nuit comme d’une victoire;

“ Mais, vieux, on tremble ainsi qu’à l’hiver le bouleau;
Je suis veuf, je suis seul, et sur moi le soir tombe.
Et je courbe, ô mon Dieu! mon âme vers la tombe,
Comme un bœuf ayant soif penche son front vers l’eau.”

Ainsi parlait Booz dans le rêve et l’extase.
Tournant vers Dieu ses yeux par le sommeil noyés;
Le cèdre ne sent pas une rose à sa base,
Et lui ne sentait pas une femme à ses pieds.

*

Pendant qu’il sommeillait, Ruth, une moabite,
S’était couchée aux pieds de Booz, le sein nu,
Espérant on ne sait quel rayon inconnu,
Quand viendrait du réveil la lumière subite.

Booz ne savait point qu’une femme était là.
Et Ruth ne savait point ce que Dieu voulait d’elle.
Un frais parfum sortait des touffes d’asphodèle;
Les souffles de la nuit flottaient sur Galgala.

L’ombre était nuptiale, auguste et solennelle;
Les anges y volaient sans doute obscurément.
Car on voyait passer dans la nuit, par moment,
Quelque chose de bleu qui paraissait une aile.

La respiration de Booz qui dormait,
Se mêlait au bruit sourd des ruisseaux sur la mousse.
On était dans le mois où la nature est douce,
Les collines ayant des lys sur leur sommet.

Ruth songeait et Booz dormait; l’herbe était noire;
Les grelots des troupeaux palpitaient vaguement;
Une immense bonté tombait du firmament;
C’était l’heure tranquille où les lions vont boire.

Tout reposait dans Ur et dans Jérimadeth;
Les astres émaillaient le ciel profond et sombre;
Le croissant fin et clair parmi ces fleurs de l’ombre
Brillait à l’occident, et Ruth se demandait,

Immobile, ouvrant l’œil à moitié sous ses voiles,
Quel dieu, quel moissonneur de l’éternel été,
Avait, en s’en allant, négligemment jeté
Cette faucille d’or dans le champ des étoiles.

Dieu invisible au philosophe

Le philosophe allait sur son âne; prophète,
Prunelle devant l’ombre horrible stupéfaite,
Il allait, il pensait.

Devin des nations,
Il vendait aux païens des malédictions,
Sans savoir si des mains dans les ténèbres blêmes
S’ouvraient pour recevoir ses vagues anathèmes.
Il venait de Phétor; il allait chez Balac,
Fils des Gomorrhéens qui dorment sous le lac,
Mage d’Assur et roi du peuple moabite.
Il avait quitté l’ombre où l’épouvante habite,
Et le hideux abri des chênes chevelus
Que l’ouragan secoue en ses larges reflux.
Morne, il laissait marcher au hasard sa monture,
Son esprit cheminant dans une autre aventure;
Il se demandait: « Tout est-il vide? et le fond
N’est-il que de l’abîme où des spectres s’en vont?
L’ombre prodigieuse est-elle une personne?
Le flot qui murmure, est-ce une voix qui raisonne?
Depuis quatre-vingts ans, je vis dans un réduit,
Regardant la sueur des antres de la nuit,
Écoutant les sanglots de l’air dans les nuées.
Le gouffre est-il vivant? Larves exténuées,
Qu’est-ce que nous cherchons? Je sais l’assyrien,
L’arabe, le persan, l’hébreu; je ne sais rien.
De quel profond néant sommes-nous les ministres?…»
Ainsi, pâle, il songeait sous les branches sinistres,
Les cheveux hérissés par les souffles des bois.
L’âne s’arrêta court et lui dit: « Je le vois.”

Première rencontre du Christ avec le tombeau

En ce temps-là, Jésus était dans la Judée;
Il avait délivré la femme possédée,
Rendu l’ouïe aux sourds et guéri les lépreux;
Les prêtres l’épiaient et parlaient bas entre eux.
Comme il s’en retournait vers la ville bénie,
Lazare, homme de bien, mourut à Béthanie.
Marthe et Marie étaient ses sœurs; Marie, un jour,
Pour laver les pieds nus du maître plein d’amour,

Avait été chercher son parfum le plus rare.
Or, Jésus aimait Marthe et Marie et Lazare.
Quelqu’un lui dit: « Lazare est mort.”

Le lendemain,
Comme le peuple était venu sur son chemin,
Il expliquait la loi, les livres, les symboles,
Et, comme Élie et Job, parlait par paraboles.
Il disait: « Qui me suit, aux anges est pareil.
Quand un homme a marché tout le jour au soleil
Dans un chemin sans puits et sans hôtellerie,
S’il ne croit pas, quand vient le soir, il pleure, il crie,
Il est las: sur la terre il tombe haletant;
S’il croit en moi, qu’il prie, il peut au même instant
Continuer sa route avec des forces triples.”
Puis il s’interrompit, et dit à ses disciples:
«Lazare, notre ami, dort; je vais l’éveiller.”
Eux dirent: « Nous irons, maître, où tu veux aller.”
Or, de Jérusalem, où Salomon mit l’arche,
Pour gagner Béthanie, il faut trois jours de marche.
Jésus partit. Durant cette route souvent,
Tandis qu’il marchait seul et pensif en avant,
Son vêtement parut blanc comme la lumière.

Quand Jésus arriva, Marthe vint la première,
Et, tombant à ses pieds, s’écria tout d’abord:
«Si nous t’avions eu, maître, il ne serait pas mort.”
Puis reprit en pleurant: « Mais il a rendu l’âme.
Tu viens trop tard.” Jésus lui dit: « Qu’en sais-tu, femme?
Le moissonneur est seul maître de la moisson.”

Marie était restée assise à la maison.

Marthe lui cria: « Viens, le maître te réclame.”
Elle vint. Jésus dit: « Pourquoi pleures-tu, femme?”
Et Marie à genoux lui dit: « Toi seul es fort.
Si nous t’avions eu, maître, il ne serait pas mort.”

Jésus reprit: « Je suis la lumière et la vie.
Heureux celui qui voit ma trace et l’a suivie!
Qui croit en moi vivra, fût-il mort et gisant.”
Et Thomas, appelé Didyme, était présent.

Et le seigneur, dont Jean et Pierre suivaient l’ombre,
Dit aux Juifs accourus pour le voir en grand nombre:
«Où donc l’avez-vous mis?” Ils répondirent: « Vois.”
Lui montrant de la main, dans un champ, près d’un bois,
À côté d’un torrent qui dans les pierres coule,
Un sépulcre.

Et Jésus pleura.

Sur quoi, la foule
Se prit à s’écrier: « Voyez comme il l’aimait!
Lui qui chasse, dit-on, Satan, et le soumet,
Eût-il, s’il était Dieu, comme on nous le rapporte,
Laissé mourir quelqu’un qu’il aimait de la sorte?”

Or, Marthe conduisit au sépulcre Jésus.
Il vint. On avait mis une pierre dessus.
«Je crois en vous, dit Marthe, ainsi que Jean et Pierre;
Mais voilà quatre jours qu’il est sous cette pierre.”

Et Jésus dit: « Tais-toi, femme, car c’est le lieu
Où tu vas, si tu crois, voir la gloire de Dieu.”
Puis il reprit: « Il faut que cette pierre tombe.”
La pierre ôtée, on vit le dedans de la tombe.

Jésus leva les yeux au ciel et marcha seul
Vers cette ombre où le mort gisait dans son linceul,
Pareil au sac d’argent qu’enfouit un avare.
Et, se penchant, il dit à haute voix: « Lazare!”

Alors le mort sortit du sépulcre; ses pieds
Des bandes du linceul étaient encor liés;

Il se dressa debout le long de la muraille;
Jésus dit: « Déliez cet homme, et qu’il s’en aille.”
Ceux qui virent cela crurent en Jésus-Christ.

Or, les prêtres, selon qu’au livre il est écrit,
S’assemblèrent, troublés, chez le préteur de Rome;
Sachant que Christ avait ressuscité cet homme,
Et que tous avaient vu le sépulcre s’ouvrir,
Ils dirent: « Il est temps de le faire mourir.”

II. Décadence de Rome

Au lion d’Androclès

La ville ressemblait à l’univers. C’était
Cette heure où l’on dirait que toute âme se tait,
Que tout astre s’éclipse et que le monde change.
Rome avait étendu sa pourpre sur la fange.
Où l’aigle avait plané, rampait le scorpion.
Trimalcion foulait les os de Scipion.
Rome buvait, gaie, ivre et la face rougie;
Et l’odeur du tombeau sortait de cette orgie.
L’amour et le bonheur, tout était effrayant.
Lesbie, en se faisant coiffer, heureuse, ayant
Son Tibulle à ses pieds qui chantait leurs tendresses,
Si l’esclave persane arrangeait mal ses tresses,
Lui piquait les seins nus de son épingle d’or.
Le mal à travers l’homme avait pris son essor;
Toutes les passions sortaient de leurs orbites.
Les fils aux vieux parents faisaient des morts subites.
Les rhéteurs disputaient les tyrans aux bouffons.
La boue et l’or régnaient. Dans les cachots profonds,
Les bourreaux s’accouplaient à des martyres mortes.
Rome horrible chantait. Parfois, devant ses portes,
Quelque Crassus, vainqueur d’esclaves et de rois,
Plantait le grand chemin de vaincus mis en croix,
Et, quand Catulle, amant que notre extase écoute,
Errait avec Délie, aux deux bords de la route,
Six mille arbres humains saignaient sur leurs amours.
La gloire avait hanté Rome dans les grands jours;
Toute honte à présent était la bienvenue.
Messaline en riant se mettait toute nue,
Et sur le lit public, lascive, se couchait.
Épaphrodite avait un homme pour hochet
Et brisait en jouant les membres d’Épictète.
Femme grosse, vieillard débile, enfant qui tette,

Captifs, gladiateurs, chrétiens, étaient jetés
Aux bêtes, et, tremblants, blêmes, ensanglantés,
Fuyaient, et l’agonie effarée et vivante
Se tordait dans le cirque, abîme d’épouvante.
Pendant que l’ours grondait, et que les éléphants,
Effroyables, marchaient sur les petits enfants,
La vestale songeait dans sa chaise de marbre.
Par moments, le trépas, comme le fruit d’un arbre,
Tombait du front pensif de la pâle beauté;
Le même éclair de meurtre et de férocité
Passait de l’œil du tigre au regard de la vierge.
Le monde était le bois, l’empire était l’auberge.
De noirs passants trouvaient le trône en leur chemin,
Entraient, donnaient un coup de dent au genre humain,
Puis s’en allaient. Néron venait après Tibère.
César foulait aux pieds le Hun, le Goth, l’Ibère;
Et l’empereur, pareil aux fleurs qui durent peu,
Le soir était charogne à moins qu’il ne fût dieu.
Le porc Vitellius roulait aux gémonies.
Escalier des grandeurs et des ignominies,
Bagne effrayant des morts, pilori des néants,
Saignant, fumant, infect, ce charnier de géants
Semblait fait pour pourrir le squelette du monde.
Des torturés râlaient sur cette rampe immonde,
Juifs sans langue, poltrons sans poings, larrons sans yeux;
Ainsi que dans le cirque atroce et furieux
L’agonie était là, hurlant sur chaque marche.
Le noir gouffre cloaque au fond ouvrait son arche
Où croulait Rome entière; et, dans l’immense égout,
Quand le ciel juste avait foudroyé coup sur coup,
Parfois deux empereurs, chiffres du fatal nombre,
Se rencontraient, vivants encore, et, dans cette ombre,
Où les chiens sur leurs os venaient mâcher leur chair,
Le César d’aujourd’hui heurtait celui d’hier.
Le crime sombre était l’amant du vice infâme.
Au lieu de cette race en qui Dieu mit sa flamme,
Au lieu d’Ève et d’Adam, si beaux, si purs tous deux,

Une hydre se traînait dans l’univers hideux;
L’homme était une tête et la femme était l’autre.
Rome était la truie énorme qui se vautre.
La créature humaine, importune au ciel bleu,
Faisait une ombre affreuse à la cloison de Dieu;
Elle n’avait plus rien de sa forme première;
Son œil semblait vouloir foudroyer la lumière,
Et l’on voyait, c’était la veille d’Attila,
Tout ce qu’on avait eu de sacré jusque-là
Palpiter sous son ongle; et pendre à ses mâchoires
D’un côté les vertus et de l’autre les gloires.
Les hommes rugissaient quand ils croyaient parler.
L’âme du genre humain songeait à s’en aller;
Mais, avant de quitter à jamais notre monde,
Tremblante, elle hésitait sous la voûte profonde,
Et cherchait une bête où se réfugier.
On entendait la tombe appeler et crier.
Au fond, la pâle Mort riait sinistre et chauve.
Ce fut alors que toi, né dans le désert fauve,
Où le soleil est seul avec Dieu, toi, songeur
De l’antre que le soir emplit de sa rougeur,
Tu vins dans la cité toute pleine de crimes;
Tu frissonnas devant tant d’ombre et tant d’abîmes;
Ton œil fit, sur ce monde horrible et châtié,
Flamboyer tout à coup l’amour et la pitié,
Pensif, tu secouas ta crinière sur Rome,
Et, l’homme étant le monstre, ô lion, tu fus l’homme.

III. L’Islam

L’An neuf de l’Hégire

Comme s’il pressentait que son heure était proche,
Grave, il ne faisait plus à personne un reproche;
Il marchait en rendant aux passants leur salut;
On le voyait vieillir chaque jour, quoiqu’il eût
À peine vingt poils blancs à sa barbe encor noire;
Il s’arrêtait parfois pour voir les chameaux boire,
Se souvenant du temps qu’il était chamelier.

Il songeait longuement devant le saint pilier;
Par moments, il faisait mettre une femme nue
Et la regardait, puis il contemplait la nue,
Et disait: « La beauté sur terre, au ciel le jour.”

Il semblait avoir vu l’Éden, l’âge d’amour,
Les temps antérieurs, l’ère immémoriale.
Il avait le front haut, la joue impériale,
Le sourcil chauve, l’œil profond et diligent,
Le cou pareil au col d’une amphore d’argent,
L’air d’un Noé qui sait le secret du déluge.
Si des hommes venaient le consulter, ce juge
Laissant l’un affirmer, l’autre rire et nier,
Écoutait en silence et parlait le dernier.
Sa bouche était toujours en train d’une prière;
Il mangeait peu, serrant sur son ventre une pierre;
Il s’occupait lui-même à traire ses brebis;
Il s’asseyait à terre et cousait ses habits.

Il jeûnait plus longtemps qu’autrui les jours de jeûne,
Quoiqu’il perdît sa force et qu’il ne fût plus jeune.

À soixante-trois ans, une fièvre le prit.
Il relut le Koran de sa main même écrit,

Puis il remit au fils de Séid la bannière,
En lui disant: « Je touche à mon aube dernière,
Il n’est pas d’autre Dieu que Dieu. Combats pour lui.”
Et son œil, voilé d’ombre, avait ce morne ennui
D’un vieux aigle forcé d’abandonner son aire.
Il vint à la mosquée à son heure ordinaire,
Appuyé sur Ali, le peuple le suivant;
Et l’étendard sacré se déployait au vent.
Là, pâle, il s’écria, se tournant vers la foule:
«Peuple, le jour s’éteint, l’homme passe et s’écoule;
La poussière et la nuit, c’est nous. Dieu seul est grand.
Peuple, je suis l’aveugle et je suis l’ignorant.
Sans Dieu je serais vil plus que la bête immonde.”
Un scheik lui dit:« Ô chef des vrais croyants! le monde,
Sitôt qu’il t’entendit, en ta parole crut;
Le jour où tu naquis une étoile apparut,
Et trois tours du palais de Chosroès tombèrent.”
Lui, reprit: « Sur ma mort les anges délibèrent;
L’heure arrive. Écoutez. Si j’ai de l’un de vous
Mal parlé, qu’il se lève, ô peuple, et devant tous
Qu’il m’insulte et m’outrage avant que je m’échappe;
Si j’ai frappé quelqu’un, que celui-là me frappe.”
Et, tranquille, il tendit aux passants son bâton.
Une vieille, tondant la laine d’un mouton,
Assise sur un seuil, lui cria: « Dieu t’assiste!”

Il semblait regarder quelque vision triste,
Et songeait; tout à coup, pensif, il dit: « Voilà,
Vous tous: je suis un mot dans la bouche d’Allah;
Je suis cendre comme homme et feu comme prophète.
J’ai complété d’Issa la lumière imparfaite.
Je suis la force, enfants; Jésus fut la douceur.
Le soleil a toujours l’aube pour précurseur.
Jésus m’a précédé, mais il n’est pas la Cause.
Il est né d’une vierge aspirant une rose.
Moi, comme être vivant, retenez bien ceci,
Je ne suis qu’un limon par les vices noirci;

J’ai de tous les péchés subi l’approche étrange;
Ma chair a plus d’affront qu’un chemin n’a de fange,
Et mon corps par le mal est tout déshonoré;
Ô vous tous, je serai bien vite dévoré
Si dans l’obscurité du cercueil solitaire
Chaque faute de l’homme engendre un ver de terre.
Fils, le damné renaît au fond du froid caveau,
Pour être par les vers dévoré de nouveau;
Toujours sa chair revit, jusqu’à ce que la peine,
Finie, ouvre à son vol l’immensité sereine.
Fils, je suis le champ vil des sublimes combats,
Tantôt l’homme d’en haut, tantôt l’homme d’en bas,
Et le mal dans ma bouche avec le bien alterne
Comme dans le désert le sable et la citerne;
Ce qui n’empêche pas que je n’aie, ô croyants!
Tenu tête dans l’ombre aux anges effrayants
Qui voudraient replonger l’homme dans les ténèbres;
J’ai parfois dans mes poings tordu leurs bras funèbres;
Souvent, comme Jacob, j’ai la nuit, pas à pas,
Lutté contre quelqu’un que je ne voyais pas;
Mais les hommes surtout ont fait saigner ma vie;
Ils ont jeté sur moi leur haine et leur envie,
Et, comme je sentais en moi la vérité,
Je les ai combattus, mais sans être irrité;
Et, pendant le combat, je criais: « Laissez faire!
» Je suis seul, nu, sanglant, blessé; je le préfère.
» Qu’ils frappent sur moi tous! que tout leur soit permis!
» Quand même, se ruant sur moi, mes ennemis
» Auraient, pour m’attaquer dans cette voie étroite,
» Le soleil à leur gauche et la lune à leur droite,
» Ils ne me feraient point reculer!” C’est ainsi
Qu’après avoir lutté quarante ans, me voici
Arrivé sur le bord de la tombe profonde,
Et j’ai devant moi Dieu, derrière moi le monde.
Quant à vous qui m’avez dans l’épreuve suivi,
Comme les Grecs Hermès et les Hébreux Lévi,
Vous avez bien souffert, mais vous verrez l’aurore.

Après la froide nuit, vous verrez l'aube éclore;
Peuple, n'en doutez pas; celui qui prodigua
Les lions aux ravins du Jebel-Kronnega,
Les perles à la mer et les astres à l'ombre,
Peut bien donner un peu de joie à l'homme sombre."

Il ajouta: « Croyez, veillez; courbez le front.
Ceux qui ne sont ni bons ni mauvais resteront
Sur le mur qui sépare Éden d'avec l'abîme,
Étant trop noirs pour Dieu, mais trop blancs pour le crime;
Presque personne n'est assez pur de péchés
Pour ne pas mériter un châtiment; tâchez,
En priant, que vos corps touchent partout la terre;
L'enfer ne brûlera dans son fatal mystère
Que ce qui n'aura point touché la cendre, et Dieu
À qui baise la terre obscure, ouvre un ciel bleu;
Soyez hospitaliers; soyez saints; soyez justes;
Là-haut sont les fruits purs dans les arbres augustes,
Les chevaux sellés d'or, et, pour fuir aux sept cieux,
Les chars vivants ayant des foudres pour essieux;
Chaque houri, sereine, incorruptible, heureuse,
Habite un pavillon fait d'une perle creuse;
Le Gehennam attend les réprouvés; malheur!
Ils auront des souliers de feu dont la chaleur
Fera bouillir leur tête ainsi qu'une chaudière.
La face des élus sera charmante et fière."

Il s'arrêta, donnant audience à l'esprit.
Puis, poursuivant sa marche à pas lents, il reprit:
«Ô vivants! je répète à tous que voici l'heure
Où je vais me cacher dans une autre demeure;
Donc, hâtez-vous. Il faut, le moment est venu,
Que je sois dénoncé par ceux qui m'ont connu,
Et que, si j'ai des torts, on me crache au visage."

La foule s'écartait muette à son passage.
Il se lava la barbe au puits d'Aboulféia.

Un homme réclama trois drachmes, qu’il paya,
Disant: « Mieux vaut payer ici que dans la tombe.”
L’œil du peuple était doux comme un œil de colombe
En regardant cet homme auguste, son appui;
Tous pleuraient; quand, plus tard, il fut rentré chez lui,
Beaucoup restèrent là sans fermer la paupière,
Et passèrent la nuit couchés sur une pierre.
Le lendemain matin, voyant l’aube arriver:
«Aboubèkre, dit-il, je ne puis me lever,
Tu vas prendre le livre et faire la prière.”
Et sa femme Aïscha se tenait en arrière;
Il écoutait pendant qu’Aboubèkre lisait,
Et souvent à voix basse achevait le verset;
Et l’on pleurait pendant qu’il priait de la sorte.
Et l’ange de la mort vers le soir à la porte
Apparut, demandant qu’on lui permît d’entrer.
«Qu’il entre.” On vit alors son regard s’éclairer
De la même clarté qu’au jour de sa naissance;
Et l’ange lui dit: « Dieu désire ta présence.
— Bien,” dit-il. Un frisson sur ses tempes courut,
Un souffle ouvrit sa lèvre, et Mahomet mourut.

Mahomet

Le divin Mahomet enfourchait tour à tour
Son mulet Daïdol et son âne Yafour;
Car le sage lui-même a, selon l’occurrence,
Son jour d’entêtement et son jour d’ignorance.

Le Cèdre

Omer, scheik de l’Islam et de la loi nouvelle
Que Mahomet ajoute à ce qu’Issa révèle,
Marchant, puis s’arrêtant, et sur son long bâton,
Par moments, comme un pâtre, appuyant son menton,

Errait près de Djeddah la sainte, sur la grève
De la mer Rouge, où Dieu luit comme au fond d'un rêve,
Dans le désert jadis noir de l'ombre des cieux,
Où Moïse voilé passait mystérieux.
Tout en marchant ainsi, plein d'une grave idée,
Par-dessus le désert, l'Égypte et la Judée,
À Pathmos, au penchant d'un mont, chauve sommet,
Il vit Jean qui, couché sur le sable, dormait.

Car saint Jean n'est pas mort, l'effrayant solitaire;
Dieu le tient en réserve; il reste sur la terre
Ainsi qu'Énoch le Juste, et, comme il est écrit,
Ainsi qu'Élie, afin de vaincre l'Antéchrist.

Jean dormait; ces regards étaient fermés qui virent
Les océans du songe où les astres chavirent;
L'obscur sommeil couvrait cet œil illuminé,
Le seul chez les vivants auquel il fut donné
De regarder, par l'âpre ouverture du gouffre,
Les anges noirs vêtus de cuirasses de soufre,
Et de voir les Babels pencher, et les Sions
Tomber, et s'écrouler les blêmes visions,
Et les religions rire prostituées,
Et des noms de blasphème errer dans les nuées.

Jean dormait, et sa tête était nue au soleil.

Omer, le puissant prêtre, aux prophètes pareil,
Aperçut, tout auprès de la mer Rouge, à l'ombre
D'un santon, un vieux cèdre au grand feuillage sombre
Croissant dans un rocher qui bordait le chemin;
Scheik Omer étendit à l'horizon sa main
Vers le nord habité par les aigles rapaces,
Et, montrant au vieux cèdre, au delà des espaces,
La mer Égée, et Jean endormi dans Pathmos,
Il poussa du doigt l'arbre et prononça ces mots:

«Va, cèdre! va couvrir de ton ombre cet homme.”

Le blanc spectre de sel qui regarde Sodome
N’est pas plus immobile au bord du lac amer
Que ne le fut le cèdre à qui parlait Omer;
Plus rétif que l’onagre à la voix de son maître,
L’arbre n’agita pas une branche.

Le prêtre
Dit: « Va donc!” et frappa l’arbre de son bâton.

Le cèdre, enraciné sous le mur du santon,
N’eut pas même un frisson et demeura paisible.

Le scheik alors tourna ses yeux vers l’invisible,
Fit trois pas, puis, ouvrant sa droite et la levant:
«Va! cria-t-il, va, cèdre, au nom du Dieu vivant!

— Que n’as-tu prononcé ce nom plus tôt?” dit l’arbre.
Et, frissonnant, brisant le dur rocher de marbre,
Dressant ses bras ainsi qu’un vaisseau ses agrès,
Fendant la vieille terre aïeule des forêts,
Le grand cèdre, arrachant aux profondes crevasses
Son tronc et sa racine et ses ongles vivaces,
S’envola comme un sombre et formidable oiseau.
Il passa le mont Gour posé comme un boisseau
Sur la rouge lueur des forgerons d’Érèbe;
Laissa derrière lui Gophna, Jéricho, Thèbe,
L’Égypte aux dieux sans nombre, informe panthéon,
Le Nil, fleuve d’Éden, qu’Adam nommait Gehon,
Le champ de Galgala plein de couteaux de pierre,
Ur, d’où vint Abraham, Bethsad, où naquit Pierre,
Et, quittant le désert d’où sortent les fléaux,
Traversa Chanaan d’Arphac à Borcéos;
Là, retrouvant la mer, vaste, obscure, sublime,
Il plongea dans la nue énorme de l’abîme,
Et, franchissant les flots, sombre gouffre ennemi,

Vint s’abattre à Pathmos près de Jean endormi.

Jean, s’étant réveillé, vit l’arbre, et le prophète
Songea, surpris d’avoir de l’ombre sur sa tête;
Puis il dit, redoutable en sa sérénité:
«Arbre, que fais-tu là? Pourquoi t’es-tu hâté
De sourdre, de germer, de grandir dans une heure?
Pourquoi donner de l’ombre au roc où je demeure?
L’ordre éternel n’a point de ces rapidités;
Jéhovah, dont les yeux s’ouvrent de tous côtés,
Veut que l’œuvre soit lente, et que l’arbre se fonde
Sur un pied fort, scellé dans l’argile profonde;
Pendant qu’un arbre naît, bien des hommes mourront;
La pluie est sa servante, et, par le bois du tronc,
La racine aux rameaux frissonnants distribue
L’eau qui se change en séve aussitôt qu’elle est bue.
Dieu le nourrit de terre, et, l’en rassasiant,
Veut que l’arbre soit dur, solide et patient,
Pour qu’il brave, à travers sa rude carapace,
Les coups de fouet du vent tumultueux qui passe,
Pour qu’il porte le temps comme l’âne son bât,
Et qu’on puisse compter, quand la hache l’abat,
Les ans de sa durée aux anneaux de sa séve;
Un cèdre n’est pas fait pour croître comme un rêve;
Ce que l’heure a construit, l’instant peut le briser.”
Le cèdre répondit: « Jean, pourquoi m’accuser?
Jean, si je suis ici, c’est par l’ordre d’un homme.”
Et Jean, fauve songeur qu’en frémissant on nomme,
Reprit: « Quel est cet homme à qui tout se soumet?”
L’arbre dit: « C’est Omer, prêtre de Mahomet.
J’étais près de Djeddah depuis des ans sans nombre;
Il m’a dit de venir te couvrir de mon ombre.”
Alors Jean, oublié par Dieu chez les vivants,
Se tourna vers le sud et cria dans les vents
Par-dessus le rivage austère de son île:
«Nouveaux venus, laissez la nature tranquille.”

IV. Le Cycle héroïque chrétien

Le Parricide

n jour, Kanut, à l’heure où l’assoupissement
Ferme partout les yeux sous l’obscur firmament,
Ayant pour seul témoin la nuit, l’aveugle immense,
Vit son père Swéno, vieillard presque en démence,
Qui dormait, sans un garde à ses pieds, sans un chien;
Il le tua, disant: « Lui-même n’en sait rien.”
Puis il fut un grand roi.

Toujours vainqueur, sa vie
Par la prospérité fidèle fut suivie;
Il fut plus triomphant que la gerbe des blés;
Quand il passait devant les vieillards assemblés,
Sa présence éclairait ces sévères visages;
Par la chaîne des mœurs pures et des lois sages
À son cher Danemark natal il enchaîna
Vingt îles, Fionie, Arnhout, Folster, Mona;
Il bâtit un grand trône en pierres féodales;
Il vainquit les Saxons, les Pictes, les Vandales,
Le Celte, et le Borusse, et le Slave aux abois,
Et les peuples hagards qui hurlent dans les bois;
Il abolit l’horreur idolâtre, et la rune,
Et le menhir féroce où le soir, à la brune,
Le chat sauvage vient frotter son dos hideux;
Il disait en parlant du grand César: « Nous deux;”
Une lueur sortait de son cimier polaire;
Les monstres expiraient partout sous sa colère;
Il fut, pendant vingt ans qu’on l’entendit marcher,
Le cavalier superbe et le puissant archer;
L’hydre morte, il mettait le pied sur la portée;
Sa vie, en même temps bénie et redoutée,
Dans la bouche du peuple était un fier récit;
Rien que dans un hiver, ce chasseur détruisit

Trois dragons en Écosse, et deux rois en Scanie;
Il fut héros, il fut géant, il fut génie;
Le sort de tout un monde au sien semblait lié;
Quant à son parricide, il l’avait oublié.
Il mourut. On le mit dans un cercueil de pierre;
Et l’évêque d’Aarhus vint dire une prière,
Et chanter sur sa tombe un hymne, déclarant
Que Kanut était saint, que Kanut était grand,
Qu’un céleste parfum sortait de sa mémoire,
Et qu’ils le voyaient, eux, les prêtres, dans la gloire,
Assis comme un prophète à la droite de Dieu.

Le soir vint; l’orgue en deuil se tut dans le saint lieu;
Et les prêtres, quittant la haute cathédrale,
Laissèrent le roi mort dans la paix sépulcrale.
Alors il se leva, rouvrit ses yeux obscurs,
Prit son glaive, et sortit de la tombe, les murs
Et les portes étant brumes pour les fantômes;
Il traversa la mer qui reflète les dômes
Et les tours d’Altona, d’Aarhus et d’Elseneur;
L’ombre écoutait les pas de ce sombre seigneur;
Mais il marchait sans bruit étant lui-même un songe;
Il alla droit au mont Savo que le temps ronge,
Et Kanut s’approcha de ce farouche aïeul,
Et lui dit: « Laisse-moi, pour m’en faire un linceul,
Ô Montagne Savo que la tourmente assiége,
Me couper un morceau de ton manteau de neige.”
Le mont le reconnut et n’osa refuser.
Kanut prit son épée impossible à briser,
Et sur le mont, tremblant devant ce belluaire,
Il coupa de la neige et s’en fit un suaire;
Puis il cria: « Vieux mont, la mort éclaire peu;
De quel côté faut-il aller pour trouver Dieu?”
Le mont au flanc difforme, aux gorges obstruées,
Noir, triste dans le vol éternel des nuées,
Lui dit: « Je ne sais pas, spectre; je suis ici.”
Kanut quitta le mont par les glaces saisi;

Et, le front haut, tout blanc dans son linceul de neige,
Il entra, par delà l’Islande et la Norvége,
Seul dans le grand silence et dans la grande nuit;
Derrière lui le monde obscur s’évanouit;
Il se trouva, lui, spectre, âme, roi sans royaume,
Nu, face à face avec l’immensité fantôme;
Il vit l’infini, porche horrible et reculant
Où l’éclair, quand il entre, expire triste et lent,
L’ombre, hydre dont les nuits sont les pâles vertèbres,
L’informe se mouvant dans le noir; les Ténèbres;
Là, pas d’astre; et pourtant on ne sait quel regard
Tombe de ce chaos immobile et hagard;
Pour tout bruit, le frisson lugubre que fait l’onde
De l’obscurité, sourde, effarée et profonde;
Il avança disant: « C’est la tombe; au delà
C’est Dieu.” Quand il eut fait trois pas, il appela;
Mais la nuit est muette ainsi que l’ossuaire,
Et rien ne répondit: sous son blême suaire
Kanut continua d’avancer; la blancheur
Du linceul rassurait le sépulcral marcheur;
Il allait; tout à coup, sur son livide voile
Il vit poindre et grandir comme une noire étoile;
L’étoile s’élargit lentement, et Kanut,
La tâtant de sa main de spectre, reconnut
Qu’une goutte de sang était sur lui tombée;
Sa tête, que la peur n’avait jamais courbée,
Se redressa; terrible, il regarda la nuit,
Et ne vit rien; l’espace était noir; pas un bruit;
«En avant!” dit Kanut levant sa tête fière;
Une seconde tache auprès de la première
Tomba, puis s’élargit; et le chef cimbrien
Regarda l’ombre épaisse et vague, et ne vit rien;
Comme un limier à suivre une piste s’attache,
Morne, il reprit sa route; une troisième tache
Tomba sur le linceul. Il n’avait jamais fui;
Kanut pourtant cessa de marcher devant lui,
Et tourna du côté du bras qui tient le glaive;

Une goutte de sang, comme à travers un rêve,
Tomba sur le suaire et lui rougit la main;
Pour la seconde fois il changea de chemin,
Comme en lisant on tourne un feuillet d'un registre,
Et se mit à marcher vers la gauche sinistre;
Une goutte de sang tomba sur le linceul;
Et Kanut recula, frémissant d'être seul,
Et voulut regagner sa couche mortuaire;
Une goutte de sang tomba sur le suaire;
Alors il s'arrêta livide, et ce guerrier,
Blême, baissa la tête et tâcha de prier;
Une goutte de sang tomba sur lui. Farouche,
La prière effrayée expirant dans sa bouche,
Il se remit en marche; et, lugubre, hésitant,
Hideux, ce spectre blanc passait; et, par instant,
Une goutte de sang se détachait de l'ombre,
Implacable, et tombait sur cette blancheur sombre.
Il voyait, plus tremblant qu'au vent le peuplier,
Ces taches s'élargir et se multiplier;
Une autre, une autre, une autre, une autre, ô cieux funèbres!
Leur passage rayait vaguement les ténèbres;
Ces gouttes, dans les plis du linceul, finissant
Par se mêler, faisaient des nuages de sang;
Il marchait, il marchait; de l'insondable voûte
Le sang continuait à pleuvoir goutte à goutte,
Toujours, sans fin, sans bruit, et comme s'il tombait
De ces pieds noirs qu'on voit la nuit pendre au gibet;
Hélas! qui donc pleurait ces larmes formidables?
L'infini. Vers les cieux, pour le juste abordables,
Dans l'océan de nuit sans flux et sans reflux,
Kanut s'avançait, pâle et ne regardant plus;
Enfin, marchant toujours comme en une fumée,
Il arriva devant une porte fermée
Sous laquelle passait un jour mystérieux;
Alors sur son linceul il abaissa les yeux;
C'était l'endroit sacré, c'était l'endroit terrible;
On ne sait quel rayon de Dieu semble visible;

De derrière la porte on entend l'hosanna.

Le linceul était rouge et Kanut frissonna.

Et c'est pourquoi Kanut, fuyant devant l'aurore
Et reculant, n'a pas osé paraître encore
Devant le juge au front duquel le soleil luit;
C'est pourquoi ce roi sombre est resté dans la nuit,
Et, sans pouvoir rentrer dans sa blancheur première,
Sentant, à chaque pas qu'il fait vers la lumière,
Une goutte de sang sur sa tête pleuvoir,
Rôde éternellement sous l'énorme ciel noir.

Le Mariage de Roland

Ils se battent — combat terrible! — corps à corps.
Voilà déjà longtemps que leurs chevaux sont morts;
Ils sont là seuls tous deux dans une île du Rhône,
Le fleuve à grand bruit roule un flot rapide et jaune,
Le vent trempe en sifflant les brins d'herbe dans l'eau.
L'archange saint Michel attaquant Apollo
Ne ferait pas un choc plus étrange et plus sombre;
Déjà, bien avant l'aube, ils combattaient dans l'ombre.
Qui, cette nuit, eût vu s'habiller ces barons,
Avant que la visière eût dérobé leurs fronts,
Eût vu deux pages blonds, roses comme des filles.
Hier, c'étaient deux enfants riant à leurs familles,
Beaux, charmants; — aujourd'hui, sur ce fatal terrain,
C'est le duel effrayant de deux spectres d'airain,
Deux fantômes auxquels le démon prête une âme,
Deux masques dont les trous laissent voir de la flamme.
Ils luttent, noirs, muets, furieux, acharnés.
Les bateliers pensifs qui les ont amenés,
Ont raison d'avoir peur et de fuir dans la plaine,
Et d'oser, de bien loin, les épier à peine,
Car de ces deux enfants, qu'on regarde en tremblant,

L’un s’appelle Olivier et l’autre a nom Roland.

Et, depuis qu’ils sont là, sombres, ardents, farouches,
Un mot n’est pas encor sorti de ces deux bouches.

Olivier, sieur de Vienne et comte souverain,
A pour père Gérard et pour aïeul Garin.
Il fut pour ce combat habillé par son père.
Sur sa targe est sculpté Bacchus faisant la guerre
Aux Normands, Rollon ivre et Rouen consterné,
Et le dieu souriant par des tigres traîné
Chassant, buveur de vin, tous ces buveurs de cidre.
Son casque est enfoui sous les ailes d’une hydre;
Il porte le haubert que portait Salomon;
Son estoc resplendit comme l’œil d’un démon;
Il y grava son nom afin qu’on s’en souvienne;
Au moment du départ, l’archevêque de Vienne
A béni son cimier de prince féodal.

Roland a son habit de fer, et Durandal.

Ils luttent de si près avec de sourds murmures,
Que leur souffle âpre et chaud s’empreint sur leurs armures;
Le pied presse le pied; l’île à leurs noirs assauts
Tressaille au loin; l’acier mord le fer; des morceaux
De heaume et de haubert, sans que pas un s’émeuve,
Sautent à chaque instant dans l’herbe et dans le fleuve.
Leurs brassards sont rayés de longs filets de sang
Qui coule de leur crâne et dans leurs yeux descend.
Soudain, sire Olivier, qu’un coup affreux démasque,
Voit tomber à la fois son épée et son casque.
Main vide et tête nue, et Roland l’œil en feu!
L’enfant songe à son père et se tourne vers Dieu.
Durandal sur son front brille. Plus d’espérance!
«Çà, dit Roland, je suis neveu du roi de France,
Je dois me comporter en franc neveu de roi.
Quand j’ai mon ennemi désarmé devant moi,

Je m’arrête. Va donc chercher une autre épée,
Et tâche, cette fois, qu’elle soit bien trempée.
Tu feras apporter à boire en même temps,
Car j’ai soif.

— Fils, merci, dit Olivier.

— J’attends,

Dit Roland, hâte-toi.”

Sire Olivier appelle
Un batelier caché derrière une chapelle.

«Cours à la ville, et dis à mon père qu’il faut
Une autre épée à l’un de nous, et qu’il fait chaud.”

Cependant les héros, assis dans les broussailles,
S’aident à délacer leurs capuchons de mailles,
Se lavent le visage et causent un moment.
Le batelier revient; il a fait promptement;
L’homme a vu le vieux comte; il rapporte une épée
Et du vin, de ce vin qu’aimait le grand Pompée
Et que Tournon récolte au flanc de son vieux mont.
L’épée est cette illustre et fière Closamont
Que d’autres quelquefois appellent Haute-Claire.
L’homme a fui. Les héros achèvent sans colère
Ce qu’ils disaient; le ciel rayonne au-dessus d’eux;
Olivier verse à boire à Roland; puis tous deux
Marchent droit l’un vers l’autre, et le duel recommence.
Voilà que par degrés de sa sombre démence
Le combat les enivre; il leur revient au cœur
Ce je ne sais quel dieu qui veut qu’on soit vainqueur,
Et qui, s’exaspérant aux armures frappées,
Mêle l’éclair des yeux aux lueurs des épées.

Ils combattent, versant à flots leur sang vermeil.

Le jour entier se passe ainsi. Mais le soleil
Baisse vers l’horizon. La nuit vient.

«Camarade,
Dit Roland, je ne sais, mais je me sens malade.
Je ne me soutiens plus, et je voudrais un peu
De repos.

— Je prétends, avec l’aide de Dieu,
Dit le bel Olivier, le sourire à la lèvre,
Vous vaincre par l’épée et non point par la fièvre.
Dormez sur l’herbe verte, et cette nuit, Roland,
Je vous éventerai de mon panache blanc.
Couchez-vous, et dormez.

— Vassal, ton âme est neuve,
Dit Roland. Je riais, je faisais une épreuve.
Sans m’arrêter et sans me reposer, je puis
Combattre quatre jours encore, et quatre nuits.”

Le duel reprend. La mort plane, le sang ruisselle.
Durandal heurte et suit Closamont; l’étincelle
Jaillit de toutes parts sous leurs coups répétés.
L’ombre autour d’eux s’emplit de sinistres clartés.
Ils frappent; le brouillard du fleuve monte et fume;
Le voyageur s’effraye et croit voir dans la brume
D’étranges bûcherons qui travaillent la nuit.

Le jour naît, le combat continue à grand bruit;
La pâle nuit revient, ils combattent; l’aurore
Reparaît dans les cieux, ils combattent encore.

Nul repos. Seulement, vers le troisième soir,
Sous un arbre, en causant, ils sont allés s’asseoir;
Puis ont recommencé.

Le vieux Gérard dans Vienne

Attend depuis trois jours que son enfant revienne.
Il envoie un devin regarder sur les tours;
Le devin dit: « Seigneur, ils combattent toujours.”

Quatre jours sont passés, et l’île et le rivage
Tremblent sous ce fracas monstrueux et sauvage.
Ils vont, viennent, jamais fuyant, jamais lassés,
Froissent le glaive au glaive et sautent les fossés,
Et passent, au milieu des ronces remuées,
Comme deux tourbillons et comme deux nuées.
Ô chocs affreux! terreur! tumulte étincelant!
Mais, enfin, Olivier saisit au corps Roland
Qui de son propre sang en combattant s’abreuve,
Et jette d’un revers Durandal dans le fleuve.

«C’est mon tour maintenant, et je vais envoyer
Chercher un autre estoc pour vous, dit Olivier.
Le sabre du géant Sinnagog est à Vienne.
C’est, après Durandal, le seul qui vous convienne.
Mon père le lui prit alors qu’il le défit.
Acceptez-le.”

Roland sourit. « Il me suffit
De ce bâton.” Il dit, et déracine un chêne.

Sire Olivier arrache un orme dans la plaine
Et jette son épée, et Roland, plein d’ennui,
L’attaque. Il n’aimait pas qu’on vînt faire après lui
Les générosités qu’il avait déjà faites.

Plus d’épée en leurs mains, plus de casque à leurs têtes,
Ils luttent maintenant, sourds, effarés, béants,
À grands coups de troncs d’arbre, ainsi que des géants.

Pour la cinquième fois, voici que la nuit tombe.
Tout à coup, Olivier, aigle aux yeux de colombe,
S’arrête, et dit:

«Roland, nous n’en finirons point.
Tant qu’il nous restera quelque tronçon au poing,
Nous lutterons ainsi que lions et panthères.
Ne vaudrait-il pas mieux que nous devinssions frères?
Écoute, j’ai ma sœur, la belle Aude au bras blanc, Épouse-la.

— Pardieu! je veux bien, dit Roland.
Et maintenant buvons, car l’affaire était chaude.”

C’est ainsi que Roland épousa la belle Aude.

Aymerillot

Charlemagne, empereur à la barbe fleurie,
Revient d’Espagne; il a le cœur triste, il s’écrie:
«Roncevaux! Roncevaux! ô traître Ganelon!”
Car son neveu Roland est mort dans ce vallon
Avec les douze pairs et toute son armée.
Le laboureur des monts qui vit sous la ramée
Est rentré chez lui, grave et calme, avec son chien;
Il a baisé sa femme au front, et dit: « C’est bien.”
Il a lavé sa trompe et son arc aux fontaines;
Et les os des héros blanchissent dans les plaines.

Le bon roi Charle est plein de douleur et d’ennui;
Son cheval syrien est triste comme lui.
Il pleure; l’empereur pleure de la souffrance
D’avoir perdu ses preux, ses douze pairs de France,
Ses meilleurs chevaliers qui n’étaient jamais las,
Et son neveu Roland, et la bataille, hélas!
Et surtout de songer, lui, vainqueur des Espagnes,
Qu’on fera des chansons dans toutes ces montagnes
Sur ses guerriers tombés devant des paysans,
Et qu’on en parlera plus de quatre cents ans!

Cependant, il chemine; au bout de trois journées
Il arrive au sommet des hautes Pyrénées.
Là, dans l’espace immense il regarde en rêvant;
Et sur une montagne, au loin, et bien avant
Dans les terres, il voit une ville très forte,
Ceinte de murs avec deux tours à chaque porte.
Elle offre à qui la voit ainsi dans le lointain
Trente maîtresses tours avec des toits d’étain
Et des mâchicoulis de forme sarrasine
Encor tout ruisselants de poix et de résine.
Au centre est un donjon si beau, qu’en vérité,
On ne le peindrait pas dans tout un jour d’été.
Ses créneaux sont scellés de plomb; chaque embrasure
Cache un archer dont l’œil toujours guette et mesure;
Ses gargouilles font peur; à son faîte vermeil
Rayonne un diamant gros comme le soleil,
Qu’on ne peut regarder fixement de trois lieues.

Sur la gauche est la mer aux grandes ondes bleues
Qui, jusqu’à cette ville, apporte ses dromons.

Charle, en voyant ces tours, tressaille sur les monts.

«Mon sage conseiller, Naymes, duc de Bavière,
Quelle est cette cité près de cette rivière?
Qui la tient la peut dire unique sous les cieux.
Or, je suis triste, et c’est le cas d’être joyeux.
Oui, dussé-je rester quatorze ans dans ces plaines,
Ô gens de guerre, archers, compagnons, capitaines,
Mes enfants! mes lions! saint Denis m’est témoin
Que j’aurai cette ville avant d’aller plus loin!”

Le vieux Naymes frissonne à ce qu’il vient d’entendre.

«Alors, achetez-la, car nul ne peut la prendre.
Elle a pour se défendre, outre ses béarnais,
Vingt mille turcs ayant chacun double harnais.

Quant à nous, autrefois, c’est vrai, nous triomphâmes;
Mais, aujourd’hui, vos preux ne valent pas des femmes,
Ils sont tous harassés et du gîte envieux,
Et je suis le moins las, moi qui suis le plus vieux.
Sire, je parle franc et je ne farde guère.
D’ailleurs, nous n’avons point de machines de guerre;
Les chevaux sont rendus, les gens rassasiés;
Je trouve qu’il est temps que vous vous reposiez,
Et je dis qu’il faut être aussi fou que vous l’êtes
Pour attaquer ces tours avec des arbalètes.”

L’empereur répondit au duc avec bonté:
«Duc, tu ne m’as pas dit le nom de la cité?

— On peut bien oublier quelque chose à mon âge.
Mais, sire, ayez pitié de votre baronnage;
Nous voulons nos foyers, nos logis, nos amours.
C’est ne jouir jamais que conquérir toujours.
Nous venons d’attaquer bien des provinces, sire.
Et nous en avons pris de quoi doubler l’empire.
Ces assiégés riraient de vous du haut des tours.
Ils ont, pour recevoir sûrement des secours
Si quelque insensé vient heurter leurs citadelles,
Trois souterrains creusés par les turcs infidèles,
Et qui vont, le premier, dans le val de Bastan,
Le second, à Bordeaux, le dernier, chez Satan.”

L’empereur, souriant, reprit d’un air tranquille:
«Duc, tu ne m’as pas dit le nom de cette ville?

— C’est Narbonne.

— Narbonne est belle, dit le roi,
Et je l’aurai; je n’ai jamais vu, sur ma foi,
Ces belles filles-là sans leur rire au passage,
Et me piquer un peu les doigts à leur corsage.”

Alors, voyant passer un comte de haut lieu,
Et qu'on appelait Dreus de Montdidier: « Pardieu!
Comte, ce bon duc Nayme expire de vieillesse!
Mais vous, ami, prenez Narbonne, et je vous laisse
Tout le pays d'ici jusques à Montpellier;
Car vous êtes le fils d'un gentil chevalier;
Votre oncle, que j'estime, était abbé de Chelles;
Vous même êtes vaillant; donc, beau sire, aux échelles!
L'assaut!

— Sire empereur, répondit Montdidier,
Je ne suis désormais bon qu'à congédier;
J'ai trop porté haubert, maillot, casque et salade;
J'ai besoin de mon lit, car je suis fort malade;
J'ai la fièvre; un ulcère aux jambes m'est venu;
Et voilà plus d'un an que je n'ai couché nu.
Gardez tout ce pays, car je n'en ai que faire."

L'empereur ne montra ni trouble ni colère.
Il chercha du regard Hugo de Cotentin.
Ce seigneur était brave et comte palatin.

«Hugues, dit-il, je suis aise de vous apprendre
Que Narbonne est à vous; vous n'avez qu'à la prendre."

Hugo de Cotentin salua l'empereur.

«Sire, c'est un manant heureux qu'un laboureur!
Le drôle gratte un peu la terre brune ou rouge,
Et, quand sa tâche est faite, il rentre dans son bouge.
Moi, j'ai vaincu Tryphon, Thessalus, Gaïffer;
Par le chaud, par le froid, je suis vêtu de fer;
Au point du jour, j'entends le clairon pour antienne;
Je n'ai plus à ma selle une boucle qui tienne;
Voilà longtemps que j'ai pour unique destin
De m'endormir fort tard pour m'éveiller matin,
De recevoir des coups pour vous et pour les vôtres.

Je suis très-fatigué. Donnez Narbonne à d’autres.”

Le roi laissa tomber sa tête sur son sein.
Chacun songeait, poussant du coude son voisin.
Pourtant Charle, appelant Richer de Normandie:
«Vous êtes grand seigneur et de race hardie,
Duc; ne voudrez-vous pas prendre Narbonne un peu?

— Empereur, je suis duc par la grâce de Dieu.
Ces aventures-là vont aux gens de fortune.
Quand on a ma duché, roi Charle, on n’en veut qu’une.”

L’empereur se tourna vers le comte de Gand:

«Tu mis jadis à bas Maugiron le brigand.
Le jour où tu naquis sur la plage marine,
L’audace avec le souffle entra dans ta poitrine:
Bavon, ta mère était de fort bonne maison;
Jamais on ne t’a fait choir que par trahison;
Ton âme après la chute était encor meilleure.
Je me rappellerai jusqu’à ma dernière heure
L’air joyeux qui parut dans ton œil hasardeux,
Un jour que nous étions en marche seuls tous deux,
Et que nous entendions dans les plaines voisines
Le cliquetis confus des lances sarrasines.
Le péril fut toujours de toi bien accueilli,
Comte; eh bien, prends Narbonne, et je t’en fais bailli.

— Sire, dit le Gantois, je voudrais être en Flandre.
J’ai faim, mes gens ont faim; nous venons d’entreprendre
Une guerre à travers un pays endiablé;
Nous y mangions, au lieu de farine de blé,
Des rats et des souris, et, pour toutes ribotes,
Nous avons dévoré beaucoup de vieilles bottes.
Et puis votre soleil d’Espagne m’a hâlé
Tellement, que je suis tout noir et tout brûlé;
Et, quand je reviendrai de ce ciel insalubre

Dans ma ville de Gand avec ce front lugubre,
Ma femme, qui déjà peut-être a quelque amant,
Me prendra pour un maure et non pour un flamand!
J’ai hâte d’aller voir là-bas ce qui se passe.
Quand vous me donneriez, pour prendre cette place,
Tout l’or de Salomon et tout l’or de Pépin,
Non! je m’en vais en Flandre, où l’on mange du pain.

— Ces bons flamands, dit Charle, il faut que cela mange!”

Il reprit:

«Ça, je suis stupide. Il est étrange
Que je cherche un preneur de ville, ayant ici
Mon vieil oiseau de proie, Eustache de Nancy.
Eustache, à moi! Tu vois, cette Narbonne est rude;
Elle a trente châteaux, trois fossés, et l’air prude;
À chaque porte un camp, et, pardieu! j’oubliais,
Là-bas, six grosses tours en pierre de liais.
Ces douves-là nous font parfois si grise mine
Qu’il faut recommencer à l’heure où l’on termine,
Et que, la ville prise, on échoue au donjon.
Mais qu’importe! es-tu pas le grand aigle?

— Un pigeon,
Un moineau, dit Eustache, un pinson dans la haie!
Roi, je me sauve au nid. Mes gens veulent leur paye;
Or, je n’ai pas le sou; sur ce, pas un garçon
Qui me fasse crédit d’un coup d’estramaçon;
Leurs yeux me donneront à peine une étincelle
Par sequin qu’ils verront sortir de l’escarcelle.
Tas de gueux! Quant à moi, je suis très-ennuyé;
Mon vieux poing tout sanglant n’est jamais essuyé;
Je suis moulu. Car, sire, on s’échine à la guerre;
On arrive à haïr ce qu’on aimait naguère,
Le danger qu’on voyait tout rose, on le voit noir;
On s’use, on se disloque, on finit par avoir

La goutte aux reins, l’entorse aux pieds, aux mains l’ampoule,
Si bien, qu’étant parti vautour, on revient poule.
Je désire un bonnet de nuit. Foin du cimier!
J’ai tant de gloire, ô roi, que j’aspire au fumier.”

Le bon cheval du roi frappait du pied la terre
Comme s’il comprenait; sur le mont solitaire
Les nuages passaient. Gérard de Roussillon
Était à quelques pas avec son bataillon;
Charlemagne en riant vint à lui.

«Vaillant homme,
Vous êtes dur et fort comme un Romain de Rome;
Vous empoignez le pieu sans regarder aux clous;
Gentilhomme de bien, cette ville est à vous!”

Gérard de Roussillon regarda d’un air sombre
Son vieux gilet de fer rouillé, le petit nombre
De ses soldats marchant tristement devant eux,
Sa bannière trouée et son cheval boiteux.

«Tu rêves, dit le roi, comme un clerc en Sorbonne.
Faut-il donc tant songer pour accepter Narbonne?

— Roi, dit Gérard, merci, j’ai des terres ailleurs.”

Voilà comme parlaient tous ces fiers batailleurs
Pendant que les torrents mugissaient sous les chênes.

L’empereur fit le tour de tous ses capitaines;
Il appela les plus hardis, les plus fougueux,
Eudes, roi de Bourgogne, Albert de Périgueux,
Samo, que la légende aujourd’hui divinise,
Garin, qui, se trouvant un beau jour à Venise,
Emporta sur son dos le lion de Saint-Marc,
Ernaut de Beauléande, Ogier de Danemark,
Roger enfin, grande âme au péril toujours prête.

Ils refusèrent tous.

Alors, levant la tête,
Se dressant tout debout sur ses grands étriers,
Tirant sa large épée aux éclairs meurtriers,
Avec un âpre accent plein de sourdes huées,
Pâle, effrayant, pareil à l’aigle des nuées,
Terrassant du regard son camp épouvanté,
L’invincible empereur s’écria: « Lâcheté!
Ô comtes palatins tombés dans ces vallées,
Ô géants qu’on voyait debout dans les mêlées,
Devant qui Satan même aurait crié merci,
Olivier et Roland, que n’êtes-vous ici!
Si vous étiez vivants, vous prendriez Narbonne,
Paladins! vous, du moins, votre épée était bonne,
Votre cœur était haut, vous ne marchandiez pas!
Vous alliez en avant sans compter tous vos pas!
Ô compagnons couchés dans la tombe profonde,
Si vous étiez vivants, nous prendrions le monde!
Grand Dieu! que voulez-vous que je fasse à présent?
Mes yeux cherchent en vain un brave au cœur puissant,
Et vont, tout effrayés de nos immenses tâches,
De ceux-là qui sont morts à ceux-ci qui sont lâches!
Je ne sais point comment on porte des affronts!
Je les jette à mes pieds, je n’en veux pas! — Barons,
Vous qui m’avez suivi jusqu’à cette montagne,
Normands, Lorrains, marquis des marches d’Allemagne,
Poitevins, Bourguignons, gens du pays Pisan,
Bretons, Picards, Flamands, Français, allez-vous-en!
Guerriers, allez-vous-en d’auprès de ma personne,
Des camps où l’on entend mon noir clairon qui sonne,
Rentrez dans vos logis, allez-vous-en chez vous,
Allez-vous-en d’ici, car je vous chasse tous!
Je ne veux plus de vous! Retournez chez vos femmes!
Allez vivre cachés, prudents, contents, infâmes!
C’est ainsi qu’on arrive à l’âge d’un aïeul.

Pour moi, j’assiégerai Narbonne à moi tout seul.
Je reste ici, rempli de joie et d’espérance!
Et, quand vous serez tous dans notre douce France,
Ô vainqueurs des Saxons et des Aragonais!
Quand vous vous chaufferez les pieds à vos chenets,
Tournant le dos aux jours de guerres et d’alarmes,
Si l’on vous dit, songeant à tous vos grands faits d’armes
Qui remplirent longtemps la terre de terreur:
«Mais où donc avez-vous quitté votre empereur?”
Vous répondrez, baissant les yeux vers la muraille:
«Nous nous sommes enfuis le jour d’une bataille,
» Si vite et si tremblants et d’un pas si pressé
» Que nous ne savons plus où nous l’avons laissé!”
Ainsi Charles de France appelé Charlemagne,
Exarque de Ravenne, empereur d’Allemagne,
Parlait dans la montagne avec sa grande voix;
Et les pâtres lointains, épars au fond des bois,
Croyaient en l’entendant que c’était le tonnerre.

Les barons consternés fixaient leurs yeux à terre.
Soudain, comme chacun demeurait interdit,
Un jeune homme bien fait sortit des rangs, et dit:

«Que monsieur saint Denis garde le roi de France!”

L’empereur fut surpris de ce ton d’assurance.

Il regarda celui qui s’avançait, et vit,
Comme le roi Saül lorsque apparut David,
Une espèce d’enfant au teint rose, aux mains blanches,
Que d’abord les soudards dont l’estoc bat les hanches
Prirent pour une fille habillée en garçon,
Doux, frêle, confiant, serein, sans écusson
Et sans panache, ayant, sous ses habits de serge,
L’air grave d’un gendarme et l’air froid d’une vierge.

«Toi, que veux-tu, dit Charle, et qu’est-ce qui t’émeut?

— Je viens vous demander ce dont pas un ne veut:
L’honneur d’être, ô mon roi, si Dieu ne m’abandonne,
L’homme dont on dira: « C’est lui qui prit Narbonne.”

L’enfant parlait ainsi d’un air de loyauté,
Regardant tout le monde avec simplicité.

Le Gantois, dont le front se relevait très vite,
Se mit à rire et dit aux reîtres de sa suite:
«Hé! c’est Aymerillot, le petit compagnon!

— Aymerillot, reprit le roi, dis-nous ton nom.

— Aymery. Je suis pauvre autant qu’un pauvre moine;
J’ai vingt ans, je n’ai point de paille et point d’avoine,
Je sais lire en latin, et je suis bachelier.
Voilà tout, sire. Il plut au sort de m’oublier
Lorsqu’il distribua les fiefs héréditaires.
Deux liards couvriraient fort bien toutes mes terres,
Mais tout le grand ciel bleu n’emplirait pas mon cœur.
J’entrerai dans Narbonne et je serai vainqueur.
Après, je châtierai les railleurs, s’il en reste.”

Charles, plus rayonnant que l’archange céleste,
S’écria:

«Tu seras, pour ce propos hautain,
Aymery de Narbonne et comte palatin,
Et l’on te parlera d’une façon civile.
Va, fils!”

Le lendemain Aymery prit la ville.

Bivar

Bivar était, au fond d’un bois sombre, un manoir
Carré, flanqué de tours, fort vieux, et d’aspect noir.
La cour était petite et la porte était laide
Quand le scheik Jabias, depuis roi de Tolède,
Vint visiter le Cid au retour de Cintra.
Dans l’étroit patio le prince maure entra;
Un homme, qui tenait à la main une étrille,
Pansait une jument attachée à la grille;
Cet homme, dont le scheik ne voyait que le dos,
Venait de déposer à terre des fardeaux,
Un sac d’avoine, une auge, un harnais, une selle;
La bannière arborée au donjon était celle
De don Diègue, ce père étant encor vivant;
L’homme, sans voir le scheik, frottant, brossant, lavant,
Travaillait, tête nue et bras nus, et sa veste
Était d’un cuir farouche et d’une mode agreste;
Le scheik, sans ébaucher même un buenos dias,
Dit: « Manant, je viens voir le seigneur Ruy Diaz,
Le grand campéador des Castilles.” Et l’homme,
Se retournant, lui dit: « C’est moi.

— Quoi! vous qu’on nomme
Le héros, le vaillant, le seigneur des pavois,
S’écria Jabias, c’est vous qu’ainsi je vois!
Quoi! c’est vous qui n’avez qu’à vous mettre en campagne
Et qu’à dire: « Partons!” pour donner à l’Espagne,
D’Avis à Gibraltar, d’Algarve à Cadafal,
Ô grand Cid, le frisson du clairon triomphal,
Et pour faire accourir au-dessus de vos tentes,
Ailes au vent, l’essaim des victoires chantantes!
Lorsque je vous ai vu, seigneur, moi prisonnier,
Vous vainqueur, au palais du roi, l’été dernier,
Vous aviez l’air royal du conquérant de l’Èbre;
Vous teniez à la main la Tizona célèbre;
Votre magnificence emplissait cette cour,
Comme il sied quand on est celui d’où vient le jour;
Cid, vous étiez vraiment un Bivar très-superbe;

On eût dans un brasier cueilli des touffes d’herbe,
Seigneur, plus aisément, certes, qu’on n’eût trouvé
Quelqu’un qui devant vous prît le haut du pavé;
Plus d’un richomme avait pour orgueil d’être membre
De votre servidumbre et de votre antichambre;
Le Cid dans sa grandeur allait, venait, parlait,
La faisant boire à tous, comme aux enfants le lait;
D’altiers ducs, tout enflés de faste et de tempête,
Qui, depuis qu’ils avaient le chapeau sur la tête,
D’aucun homme vivant ne s’étaient souciés,
Se levaient, sans savoir pourquoi, quand vous passiez;
Vous vous faisiez servir par tous les gentilshommes;
Le Cid comme une altesse avait ses majordomes;
Lerme était votre archer; Gusman, votre frondeur;
Vos habits étaient faits avec de la splendeur;
Vous si bon, vous aviez la pompe de l’armure;
Votre miel semblait or comme l’orange mûre.
Sans cesse autour de vous vingt coureurs étaient prêts.
Nul n’était au-dessus du Cid, et nul auprès.
Personne, eût-il été de la royale estrade,
Prince, infant, n’eût osé vous dire: Camarade!
Vous éclatiez, avec des rayons jusqu’aux cieux,
Dans une préséance éblouissante aux yeux;
Vous marchiez entouré d’un ordre de bataille;
Aucun sommet n’était trop haut pour votre taille,
Et vous étiez un fils d’une telle fierté
Que les aigles volaient tous de votre côté.
Vous regardiez ainsi que néants et fumées
Tout ce qui n’était pas commandement d’armées,
Et vous ne consentiez qu’au nom de général;
Cid était le baron suprême et magistral;
Vous dominiez tout, grand, sans chef, sans joug, sans digue,
Absolu, lance au poing, panache au front.”

Rodrigue
Répondit: « Je n’étais alors que chez le roi.”

Et le scheik s’écria: « Mais, Cid, aujourd’hui, quoi,
Que s’est-il donc passé? quel est cet équipage?
J’arrive, et je vous trouve en veste, comme un page,
Dehors, bras nus, nu-tête, et si petit garçon
Que vous avez en main l’auge et le caveçon!
Et faisant ce qu’il sied aux écuyers de faire!

— Scheik, dit le Cid, je suis maintenant chez mon père.”

Le Jour des rois

I

L’aube sur les grands monts se leva frémissante
Le six janvier de l’an du Christ huit cent soixante,
Comme si dans les cieux cette clarté savait
Pourquoi l’homme de fer et d’acier se revêt
Et quelle ombre il prépare aux livides journées.

Une blême blancheur baigne les Pyrénées;
Le louche point du jour de la morne saison,
Par places, dans le large et confus horizon,
Brille, aiguise un clocher, ébauche un monticule;
Et la plaine est obscure, et dans le crépuscule
L’Egba, l’Arga, le Cil, tous ces cours d’eau rampants,
Font des fourmillements d’éclairs et de serpents;
Le bourg Chagres est là près de sa forteresse.

II

Le mendiant du pont de Crassus, où se dresse
L’autel d’Hercule offert aux Jeux Aragonaux,
Est, comme à l’ordinaire, entre deux noirs créneaux,
Venu s’asseoir, tranquille et muet, dès l’aurore.
La larve qui n’est plus ou qui n’est pas encore
Ressemble à ce vieillard, spectre aux funèbres yeux,

Grelottant dans l’horreur d’un haillon monstrueux;
C’est le squelette ayant faim et soif dans la tombe.
Dans ce siècle où sur tous l’esclavage surplombe,
Où tout être, perdu dans la nuit, quel qu’il soit,
Même le plus petit, même le plus étroit,
Offre toujours assez de place pour un maître,
Où c’est un tort de vivre, où c’est un crime d’être,
Ce pauvre homme est chétif au point qu’il est absous;
Il habite le coin du néant, au-dessous
Du dernier échelon de la souffrance humaine,
Si bas, que les heureux ne prennent pas la peine
D’ajouter sa misère à leur joyeux orgueil,
Ni les infortunés d’y confronter leur deuil;
Penché sur le tombeau plein de l’ombre mortelle,
Il est comme un cheval attendant qu’on dételle;
Abject au point que l’homme et la femme, les pas,
Les bruits, l’enterrement, la noce, les trépas,
Les fêtes, sans l’atteindre, autour de lui s’écoulent;
Et le bien et le mal, sans le voir, sur lui roulent;
Tout au plus raille-t-on ce gueux sur son fumier;
Tout le tumulte humain, soldats au fier cimier,
Moines tondus, l’amour, le meurtre, la bataille,
Ignore cette cendre ou rit de cette paille;
Qu’est-il? Rien, ver de terre, ombre; et même l’ennui
N’a pas le temps de perdre un coup de pied sur lui.
Il rampe entre la chose et la bête de somme;
Tibère, sans marcher dessus, verrait cet homme,
Cet être obscur, infect, pétrifié, dormant,
Ne valant pas l’effort de son écrasement;
Celui qui le voit, dit: « C’est l’idiot!” et passe;
Son regard fixe semble effaré par l’espace;
Infirme, il ne pourrait manier des outils;
C’est un de ces vivants lugubres, engloutis
Dans cette extrémité de l’ombre où se termine
La maladie en lèpre et l’ordure en vermine.
C’est à lui que les maux en bas sont limités;
Du rendez-vous des deuils et des calamités

Sa loque, au vent flottante, est l’effroyable enseigne;
Sous ses ongles crispés sa peau s’empourpre et saigne;
Il regarde, voit-il? il écoute, entend-il?
Si cet être aperçoit l’homme, c’est de profil,
Nul visage n’étant tourné vers ses ténèbres;
La famine et la fièvre ont ployé ses vertèbres;
On voudrait balayer son ombre du pavé;
Au passant qui lui donne, il bégaye un Ave;
Sa parole ébauchée en murmure s’achève;
Et si, dans sa stupeur et du fond de son rêve,
Parfois à quelque chose, ici bas, il répond,
C’est à ce que dit l’eau sous les arches du pont.

Sa maigreur est hideuse aux trous de sa guenille.
Et le seul point par où ce fantôme chenille
Touche aux hommes courbés le soir et le matin,
C’est, à l’aube, au couchant, sa prière en latin,
Dans l’ombre, d’une voix lente psalmodiée.

III

Flamme au septentrion. C’est Vich incendiée.
Don Pancho s’est rué sur Vich au point du jour,
Pancho, roi d’Oloron, commande au carrefour
Des trois pertuis profonds qui vont d’Espagne en France;
Voulant piller, il a donné la préférence
À Vich, qui fait commerce avec Tarbe et Cahors;
Pancho, fauve au dedans, est difforme au dehors;
Il est camard, son nez étant sans cartilages,
Et si méchant, qu’on dit que les gens des villages
Ramassent du poil d’ours où cet homme a passé.
Il a brisé la porte, enjambé le fossé,
Est entré dans l’église, et sous les sombres porches
S’est dressé, rouge spectre, ayant aux poings deux torches;
Et maintenant, maisons, tours, palais spacieux,
Toute la ville monte en lueur dans les cieux.

Flamboiement au midi. C’est Girone qui brûle.
Le roi Blas a jadis eu d’Inez la matrulle,
Deux bâtards, ce qui fait qu’à cette heure l’on a
Gil, roi de Luz, avec Jean, duc de Cardona;
L’un règne à Roncevaux et l’autre au col d’Andorre.
Quiconque voit des dieux dans les loups, les adore.
Ils ont, la veille au soir, quitté leurs deux donjons,
Ensemble, avec leur bande, en disant: « Partageons!”
N’étant pas trop de deux pour ce qu’ils ont à faire.
En route, le plus jeune a crié: « Bah! mon frère,
Rions; et renonçons à la chose, veux-tu?
Revenons sur nos pas; je ne suis point têtu,
Si tu veux t’en ôter, c’est dit, je me retire.
— Ma règle, a dit l’aîné, c’est de ne jamais rire
Ni reculer, ayant derrière moi l’enfer.”
Et c’est ainsi qu’ils ont, ces deux princes de fer,
Après avoir rompu le mur qui la couronne,
Brûlé la belle ville heureuse de Girone;
Et fait noir l’horizon que le Seigneur fait bleu.

Rougeur à l’orient. C’est Lumbier en feu.
Ariscat l’est venu piller pour se distraire.
Ariscat est le roi d’Aguas; ce téméraire,
Car, en basque, Ariscat veut dire le Hardi,
À son donjon debout près du pic du Midi,
Comme s’il s’égalait à la montagne immense.
Il brûle Lumbier comme on brûla Numance;
L’histoire est quelquefois l’infidèle espion:
Elle oublie Ariscat et vante Scipion;
N’importe! le roi basque est invincible, infâme,
Superbe, comme un autre, et fait sa grande flamme;
Cette ville n’est plus qu’un bûcher; il est fier;
Et le tas de tisons d’Ariscat, Lumbier,
Vaut bien Tyr, le monceau de braises d’Alexandre.

Fumée à l’occident. C’est Teruel en cendre.

Le roi du mont Jaxa, Gesufal le Cruel,
Pour son baiser terrible a choisi Teruel;
Il vient d’en approcher ses deux lèvres funèbres,
Et Teruel se tord dans un flot de ténèbres.
Le fort que sur un pic Gesufal éleva
Est si haut, que du faîte on voit tout l’Alava,
Tout l’Èbre, les deux mers, et le merveilleux golfe
Où tombe Phaéton et d’où s’envole Astolphe.
Gesufal est ce roi, gai comme les démons,
Qui disait aux pays gisant au pied des monts,
Sol inquiet, tremblant comme une solfatare:
«Je suis ménétrier; je mets à ma guitare
La corde des gibets dressés sur le chemin;
Dansez, peuples! j’ai deux royaumes dans ma main;
Aragon et Léon sont mes deux castagnettes.”
C’est lui qui dit encor: « Je fais les places nettes.”
Et Teruel, hier une ville, aujourd’hui
Est de l’ombre. Ô désastre! ô peuple sans appui!
Des tourbillons de nuit et d’étincelles passent,
Les façades au fond des fournaises s’effacent,
L’enfant cherche la femme et la femme l’enfant,
Un râle horrible sort du foyer étouffant;
Les flammèches au vent semblent d’affreux moustiques;
On voit dans le brasier le comptoir des boutiques
Où le marchand vendait la veille, et les tiroirs
Sont là béants, montrant de l’or dans leurs coins noirs.
Le feu poursuit la foule et sur les toits s’allonge;
On crie, on tombe, on fuit, tant la vie est un songe!

IV

Qu’est-ce que ce torrent de rois? Pourquoi ce choix,
Quatre villes? Pourquoi toutes quatre à la fois?
Sont-ce des châtiments, ou n’est-ce qu’un carnage?
Pas de choix. Le hasard, ou bien le voisinage,
Voilà tout; le butin pour but et pour raison;
Quant aux quatre cités brûlant à l’horizon,

Regardez: vous verrez bien d’autres rougeurs sombres.
Toute la perspective est un tas de décombres.
La montagne a jeté sur la plaine ses rois,
Rien de plus. Quant au fait, le voici: Navarrois,
Basques, Aragonais, Catalans, ont des terres;
Pourquoi? Pour enrichir les princes. Monastères
Et seigneurs sont le but du paysan. Le droit
Est l’envers du pouvoir dont la force est l’endroit;
Depuis que le puissant sur le faible se rue,
Entre l’homme d’épée et l’homme de charrue,
Il existe une loi dont l’article premier
C’est que l’un est le maître et l’autre le fermier;
Les enfants sont manants, les femmes sont servantes.
À quoi bon discuter? Sans cessions ni ventes,
La maison appartient au fort, source des lois,
Et le bourg est à qui peut pendre le bourgeois;
Toute chose est à l’homme armé; les cimeterres
Font les meilleurs contrats et sont les bons notaires;
Qui peut prendre doit prendre; et le tabellion
Qui sait le mieux signer un bail, c’est le lion.

Cela posé, qu’ont fait ces peuples? Leur délire
Fut triste. L’autre mois, les rois leur ont fait dire
D’alimenter les monts d’où l’eau vers eux descend,
Et d’y mener vingt bœufs et vingt moutons sur cent,
Plus, une fanéga d’orge et de blé par homme.
La plaine est ouvrière et partant économe;
Les pays plats se sont humblement excusés,
Criant grâce, alléguant qu’ils n’ont de rien assez,
Que maigre est l’Aragon et pauvre la Navarre.
Peuple pauvre, les rois prononcent peuple avare;
De là, frémissement et colère là-haut.
Ordre aux arrière-bans d’accourir au plus tôt;
Et Gesufal, celui d’où tombent les sentences,
A fait venir devant un monceau de potences
Les alcades des champs et les anciens des bourgs,
Affirmant qu’il irait, au son de ses tambours,

Pardieu! chercher leurs bœufs chez eux sous des arcades
Faites de pieds d’anciens et de jambes d’alcades.
Le refus persistant, les rois sont descendus.

V

Et c’est pourquoi, s’étant par message entendus,
En bons cousins, étant convenus en famille
De sortir à la fois, vers l’heure où l’aube brille,
Chacun de sa montagne et chacun de sa tour,
Ils vont fêtant le jour des rois, car c’est leur jour,
Par un grand brûlement de villes dans la plaine.

Déroute; enfants, vieillards, bœufs, moutons; clameur vaine,
Trompettes, cris de guerre: exterminons! frappons!
Chariots s’accrochant aux passages des ponts;
Les champs hagards sont pleins de sombres débandades;
La même flamme court sur les cinq Mérindades;
Olite tend les bras à Tudela qui fuit
Vers la pâle Estrella sur qui le brandon luit;
Et Sanguesa frémit, et toutes quatre ensemble
Appellent au secours Pampelune qui tremble.
Comme on sait tous les noms de ces rois, Gilimer,
Torismondo, Garci, grand-maître de la mer,
Harizetta, Wermond, Barbo, l’homme égrégore,
Juan, prince de Héas, Guy, comte de Bigorre,
Blas-el-Matador, Gil, Francavel, Favilla,
Et qu’enfin, c’est un flot terrible qui vient là,
Devant toutes ces mains dans tant d’horreurs trempées,
On n’a pas songé même à courir aux épées;
On sent qu’en cet essaim que la rage assembla,
Chaque monstre est un grain de cendre d’Attila,
Qu’ils sont fléaux, qu’ils ont en eux l’esprit de guerre;
Qu’ouverts comme Oyarzun, fermés comme Figuère,
Tous les bourgs sont égaux devant l’effrayant vol
De ces chauves-souris du noir ciel espagnol,
Et que tours et créneaux croulent comme des rêves

Au tourbillonnement farouche de leurs glaives;
Nul ne résiste; on meurt. Tas d’hommes poursuivis!
Pas une ville n’a dressé son pont-levis,
Croyant fléchir les rois écumants de victoire
Par l’acceptation tremblante de leur gloire.
On se cache, on s’enfuit, chacun avec les siens.
Ils ont vers Gesufal envoyé leurs anciens,
Pieds nus, la corde au cou, criant miséricorde;
Fidèle à sa promesse, il a serré la corde.

On n’a pas même à Reuss, ô fureur de ces rois!
Épargné le couvent des Filles de la Croix;
Comme on force un fermoir pour feuilleter un livre,
Ils en ont fait briser la porte au soldat ivre.
Hélas! Christ abritait sous un mur élevé
Ces anges où Marie est lisible, où l’Ave
Est écrit, mot divin, sur des pages fidèles,
Vierges pures ayant la Vierge sainte en elles,
Reliure d’ivoire à l’exemplaire d’or!
La grille ouverte, ils ont franchi le corridor;
Les nonnes frémissaient au fond du sanctuaire;
En vain le couvent sombre agitait son suaire,
En vain grondait au seuil le vieux foudre romain,
En vain l’abbesse, blanche, en deuil, la crosse en main,
Sinistre, protégeait son tremblant troupeau d’âmes;
Devant des mécréants, des saintes sont des femmes;
L’homme parfois à Dieu jette d’affreux défis;
L’autel, l’horreur du lieu, le sanglant crucifix,
Le cloître avec sa nuit, l’abbesse avec sa crosse,
Tout s’est évanoui dans un rire féroce.
Et ceci fut l’exploit de Blas-el-Matador.

Partout on voit l’alcade et le corrégidor
Pendus, leurs noms au dos, à la potence vile,
L’un, devant son hameau, l’autre devant sa ville.

Tous les bourgs ont tendu leurs gorges au couteau.

Chagres, comme le reste, est mort sur son coteau.
Ô deuil! ce fut pendant une journée entière,
Entre les parapets de l’étroit pont de pierre
Que bâtit là Crassus, lieutenant de César,
Comme l’écrasement d’un peuple sous un char.
Ils voulaient s’évader, les manants misérables;
Mais les pointes d’épée, âpres, inexorables,
Comme des becs de flamme, accouraient derrière eux;
Les bras levés, les cris, les pleurs, étaient affreux;
On n’avait jamais vu peut-être une contrée
D’un tel rayonnement de meurtre pénétrée;
Le pont, d’un bout à l’autre, était un cliquetis;
Les soldats arrachaient aux mères leurs petits;
Et l’on voyait tomber morts et vivants dans l’Èbre,
Pêle-mêle, et pour tous, hélas! ce pont funèbre
Qui sortait de la ville, entrait dans le tombeau.

VI

Le couchant empourpra le mont Tibidabo;
Le soir vint; tirant l’âne obstiné qui recule,
Le soldat se remit en route au crépuscule,
Heure trouble assortie au cri du chat-huant;
Lourds de butin, le long des chemins saluant
Les images des saints que les passants vénèrent,
Vainqueurs, sanglants, joyeux, les rois s’en retournèrent
Chacun avec ses gens, chacun vers son état;
Et, reflet du couchant, ou bien de l’attentat,
La chaîne des vieux monts, funeste et vaste bouge,
Apparaissait, dans l’ombre horrible, toute rouge;
On eût dit que, tandis qu’en bas on triomphait,
Quelque archange vengeur de la plaine avait fait
Remonter tout ce sang au front de la montagne.
Chaque bande, à travers la brumeuse campagne,
Dans des directions diverses s’enfonça;
Ceux-là vers Roncevaux, ceux-ci vers Tolosa;

Et les pillards tâtaient leurs sacs, de peur que l’ombre
N’en fît tomber l’enflure ou décroître le nombre,
La crainte du voleur étant d’être volé.
Meurtre du laboureur et pillage du blé,
La journée était bonne, et les files de lances
Serpentaient dans les champs pleins de sombres silences;
Les montagnards disaient: « Quel beau coup de filet!”
Après avoir tué la plaine qui râlait,
Ils rentraient dans leurs monts, comme une flotte au havre,
Et, riant et chantant, s’éloignaient du cadavre.
On vit leurs dos confus reluire quelque temps,
Et leurs rangs se grouper sous les drapeaux flottants
Ainsi que des chaînons ténébreux se resserrent,
Puis ces farouches voix dans la nuit s’effacèrent.

VII

Le pont de Crassus, morne et tout mouillé de sang,
Resta désert.
Alors, tragique et se dressant,
Le mendiant, tendant ses deux mains décharnées,
Montra sa souquenille immonde aux Pyrénées,
Et cria dans l’abîme et dans l’immensité:
«Confrontez-vous. Sentez votre fraternité,
Ô mont superbe, ô loque infâme! neige, boue!
Comparez, sous le vent des cieux qui les secoue,
Toi, tes nuages noirs, toi, tes haillons hideux,
Ô guenille, ô montagne; et cachez toutes deux,
Pendant que les vivants se traînent sur leurs ventres,
Toi, les poux dans tes trous, toi, les rois dans tes antres!”

V. Les Chevaliers errants

La terre a vu jadis

La terre a vu jadis errer des paladins;
Ils flamboyaient ainsi que des éclairs soudains,
Puis s’évanouissaient, laissant sur les visages
La crainte, et la lueur de leurs brusques passages;
Ils étaient, dans des temps d’oppression, de deuil,
De honte, où l’infamie étalait son orgueil,
Les spectres de l’honneur, du droit, de la justice;
Ils foudroyaient le crime, ils souffletaient le vice;
On voyait le vol fuir, l’imposture hésiter,
Blêmir la trahison, et se déconcerter
Toute puissance injuste, inhumaine, usurpée,
Devant ces magistrats sinistres de l’épée;
Malheur à qui faisait le mal! Un de ces bras
Sortait de l’ombre avec ce cri: « Tu périras!”
Contre le genre humain et devant la nature,
De l’équité suprême ils tentaient l’aventure;
Prêts à toute besogne, à toute heure, en tout lieu,
Farouches, ils étaient les chevaliers de Dieu.

Ils erraient dans la nuit ainsi que des lumières.

Leur seigneurie était tutrice des chaumières;
Ils étaient justes, bons, lugubres, ténébreux;
Quoique gardé par eux, quoique vengé par eux,
Le peuple en leur présence avait l’inquiétude
De la foule devant la pâle solitude;
Car on a peur de ceux qui marchent en songeant,
Pendant que l’aquilon, du haut des cieux plongeant,
Rugit, et que la pluie épand à flots son urne
Sur leur tête entrevue au fond du bois nocturne.

Ils passaient effrayants, muets, masqués de fer.

Quelques-uns ressemblaient à des larves d’enfer;
Leurs cimiers se dressaient difformes sur leurs heaumes,
On ne savait jamais d’où sortaient ces fantômes;
On disait: « Qui sont-ils? d’où viennent-ils? Ils sont
Ceux qui punissent, ceux qui jugent, ceux qui vont.”
Tragiques, ils avaient l’attitude du rêve.

Ô les noirs chevaucheurs! ô les marcheurs sans trêve!
Partout où reluisait l’acier de leur corset,
Partout où l’un d’eux, calme et grave, apparaissait
Posant sa lance au coin ténébreux de la salle,
Partout où surgissait leur ombre colossale,
On sentait la terreur des pays inconnus;
Celui-ci vient du Rhin; celui-là du Cydnus;
Derrière eux cheminait la Mort, squelette chauve;
Il semblait qu’aux naseaux de leur cavale fauve
On entendît la mer ou la forêt gronder;
Et c’est aux quatre vents qu’il fallait demander
Si ce passant était roi d’Albe ou de Bretagne;
S’il sortait de la plaine ou bien de la montagne,
S’il avait triomphé du maure, ou du chenil
Des peuples monstrueux qui hurlent près du Nil;
Quelle ville son bras avait prise ou sauvée;
De quel monstre il avait écrasé la couvée.

Les noms de quelques-uns jusqu’à nous sont venus;
Ils s’appelaient Bernard, Lahire, Éviradnus;
Ils avaient vu l’Afrique; ils éveillaient l’idée
D’on ne sait quelle guerre effroyable en Judée,
Rois dans l’Inde, ils étaient en Europe barons;
Et les aigles, les cris des combats, les clairons,
Les batailles, les rois, les dieux, les épopées,
Tourbillonnaient dans l’ombre au vent de leurs épées;
Qui les voyait passer à l’angle de son mur
Pensait à ces cités d’or, de brume et d’azur,
Qui font l’effet d’un songe à la foule effarée:

Tyr, Héliopolis, Solyme, Césarée.
Ils surgissaient du sud ou du septentrion,
Portant sur leur écu l’hydre ou l’alérion,
Couverts des noirs oiseaux du taillis héraldique,
Marchant seuls au sentier que le devoir indique,
Ajoutant au bruit sourd de leur pas solennel
La vague obscurité d’un voyage éternel,
Ayant franchi les flots, les monts, les bois horribles,
Ils venaient de si loin, qu’ils en étaient terribles;
Et ces grands chevaliers mêlaient à leurs blasons
Toute l’immensité des sombres horizons.

Le Petit Roi de Galice

I

Le ravin d’Ernula

Ils sont là tous les dix, les infants d’Asturie.
La même affaire unit dans la même prairie
Les cinq de Santillane aux cinq d’Oviedo.
C’est midi; les mulets, très las, ont besoin d’eau,
L’âne a soif, le cheval souffle et baisse un œil terne,
Et la troupe a fait halte auprès d’une citerne;
Tout à l’heure on ira plus loin, bannière au vent;
Ils atteindront le fond de l’Asturie avant
Que la nuit ait couvert la sierra de ses ombres;
Ils suivent le chemin qu’à travers ces monts sombres
Un torrent, maintenant à sec, jadis creusa,
Comme s’il voulait joindre Espos à Tolosa;
Un prêtre est avec eux qui lit son bréviaire.

Entre eux et Compostelle ils ont mis la rivière.

Ils sont près d’Ernula, bois où le pin verdit,
Où Pélage est si grand, que le chevrier dit:
«Les Arabes faisaient la nuit sur la patrie.
— Combien sont-ils? criaient les peuples d’Asturie.
Pélage en sa main prit la forêt d’Ernula,
Alluma cette torche, et, tant qu’elle brûla,
Il put voir et compter, du haut de la montagne,
Les maures ténébreux jusqu’au fond de l’Espagne.”

II

Leurs Altesses

L’endroit est désolé, les gens sont triomphants.

C’est un groupe tragique et fier que ces infants,
Précédés d’un clairon qu’à distance accompagne
Une bande des gueux les plus noirs de l’Espagne;
Sur le front des soldats, férocement vêtus,
La montera de fer courbe ses crocs pointus,
Et Mauregat n’a point d’estafiers plus sauvages,
Et le forban Dragut n’a pas sur les rivages
Écumé de forçats pires, et Gaïffer
N’a pas, dans le troupeau qui le suit, plus d’enfer;
Les casques sont d’acier et les cœurs sont de bronze;
Quant aux infants, ce sont dix noms sanglants: Alonze,
Don Santos Pacheco le Hardi, Froïla,
Qui, si l’on veut Satan, peut dire: Me voilà!
Ponce, qui tient la mer d’Irun à Biscarosse,
Rostabat le Géant, Materne le Féroce,
Blas, Ramon, Jorge et Ruy le Subtil, leur aîné,
Blond, le moins violent et le plus acharné.

Le mont, complice et noir, s’ouvre en gorges désertes.

Ils sont frères; c’est bien; sont-ils amis? Non, certes.
Ces Caïns pour lien ont la perte d’autrui.
Blas, du reste, est l’ami de Materne, et don Ruy
De Ramon, comme Atrée est l’ami de Thyeste.

III

Nuño

Les chefs parlent entre eux, les soldats font la sieste.

Les chevaux sont parqués à part, et sont gardés
Par dix hommes, riant, causant, jouant aux dés,
Qui sont dix intendants, ayant titres de maîtres,
Armés d’épieux, avec des poignards à leurs guêtres.
Le sentier a l’air traître et l’arbre a l’air méchant;
Et la chèvre qui broute au flanc du mont penchant,
Entre les grès lépreux trouve à peine une câpre,
Tant la ravine est fauve et tant la roche est âpre;
De distance en distance, on voit des puits bourbeux
Où finit le sillon des chariots à bœufs;
Hors un peu d’herbe autour des puits, tout est aride;
Tout du grand midi sombre a l’implacable ride;
Les arbres sont gercés, les granits sont fendus.
L’air rare et brûlant manque aux oiseaux éperdus.
On distingue des tours sur l’épine dorsale
D’un mont lointain qui semble une ourse colossale;
Quand, où Dieu met le roc, l’homme bâtit le fort,
Quand à la solitude il ajoute la mort,
Quand de l’inaccessible il fait l’inexpugnable,
C’est triste. Dans des plis d’ocre rouge et de sable,
Les hauts sentiers des cols, vagues linéaments,

S’arrêtent court, brusqués par les escarpements.
Vers le nord, le troupeau des nuages qui passe,
Poursuivi par le vent, chien hurlant de l’espace,
S’enfuit, à tous les pics laissant de sa toison.
Le Corcova remplit le fond de l’horizon.

On entend dans les pins que l’âge use et mutile
Lutter le rocher hydre et le torrent reptile;
Près du petit pré vert pour la halte choisi,
Un précipice obscur, sans pitié, sans merci,
Aveugle, ouvre son flanc, plein d’une pâle brume
Où l’Ybaïchalval, épouvantable, écume.
De vrais brigands n’auraient pas mieux trouvé l’endroit.
Le col de la vallée est tortueux, étroit,
Rude, et si hérissé de broussaille et d’ortie,
Qu’un seul homme en pourrait défendre la sortie.

De quoi sont-ils joyeux? D’un exploit. Cette nuit,
Se glissant dans la ville avec leurs gens, sans bruit,
Avant l’heure où commence à poindre l’aube grise,
Ils ont dans Compostelle enlevé par surprise
Le pauvre petit roi de Galice, Nuño.
Les loups sont là, pesant dans leur griffe l’agneau.
En cercle près du puits, dans le champ d’herbe verte,
Cette collection de monstres se concerte.

Le jeune roi captif a quinze ans; ses voleurs
Sont ses oncles; de là son effroi; pas de pleurs;
Il se tait; il comprend le but qui les rassemble;
Il bâille, et par moments ferme les yeux, et tremble.
Son front triste est meurtri d’un coup de gantelet.
En partant, on l’avait lié sur un mulet;
Grave et sombre, il a dit: « Cette corde me blesse.”
On l’a fait délier, dédaignant sa faiblesse.
Mais ses oncles hagards fixent leurs yeux sur lui.
L’orphelin sent le vide horrible et sans appui.
À sa mort, espérant dompter les vents contraires,

Le feu roi don Garci fit venir ses dix frères,
Supplia leur honneur, leur sang, leur cœur, leur foi,
Et leur recommanda ce faible enfant, leur roi.
On discute, en baissant la voix avec mystère,
Trois avis: le cloîtrer au prochain monastère,
L’aller vendre à Juzaph, prince des sarrasins,
Le jeter simplement dans un des puits voisins.

La conversation des infants

«La vie est un affront alors qu’on nous la laisse,
Dit Pacheco; Qu’il vive, et meure de vieillesse!
Tué, c’était le roi; vivant, c’est un bâtard.
Qu’il vive! au couvent!

— Mais s’il reparaît plus tard?

Dit Jorge.

— Oui, s’il revient? Dit Materno l’Hyène.

— S’il revient? disent Ponce et Ramon.

— Qu’il revienne!

Réplique Pacheco. Frères, si maintenant
Nous le laissons vivant, nous le faisons manant.
Je lui dirais: « Choisis: la mort, ou bien le cloître.”
Si, pouvant disparaître, il aime mieux décroître,
Je vous l’enferme au fond d’un moutier vermoulu,
Et je lui dis: C’est bon. C’est toi qui l’as voulu.
Un roi qu’on avilit tombe; on le destitue

Bien quand on le méprise et mal quand on le tue.
Nuño mort, c’est un spectre; il reviendrait. Mais, bah!
Ayant plié le jour où mon bras le courba,
Mais s’étant laissé tondre, ayant eu la paresse
De vivre, que m’importe après qu’il reparaisse!
Je dirais: « Le feu roi hantait les filles; bien;
» A-t-il eu quelque part ce fils? Je n’en sais rien;
» Mais depuis quand, bâtard et lâche, est-on des nôtres?
» Toute la différence entre un rustre et nous autres,
» C’est que, si l’affront vient à notre choix s’offrir,
» Le rustre voudra vivre et le prince mourir;
» Or, ce drôle a vécu.” Les manants ont envie
De devenir caducs, et tiennent à la vie;
Ils sont bourgeois, marchands, bâtards, vont aux sermons,
Et meurent vieux; mais nous, les princes, nous aimons
Une jeunesse courte et gaie à la fin sanglante;
Nous sommes les guerriers; nous trouvons la mort lente,
Et nous lui crions: « Viens!” et nous accélérons
Son pas lugubre avec le bruit de nos clairons.
Le peuple nous connaît, et le sait bien; il chasse
Quiconque prouve mal sa couronne et sa race,
Quiconque porte mal sa peau de roi. Jamais
Un roi n’est ressorti d’un cloître; et je promets
De donner aux bouviers qui sont dans la prairie
Tous mes états d’Algarve et tous ceux d’Asturie,
Si quelqu’un, n’importe où, dans les pays de mer
Ou de terre, en Espagne, en France, dans l’enfer,
Me montre un capuchon d’où sort une couronne.
Le froc est un linceul que la nuit environne.
Après que vous avez blémi dans un couvent,
On ne veut plus de vous; un moine, est-ce un vivant?
On ne vous trouve plus la mine assez féroce.
«Moine, reprends ta robe! Abbé, reprends ta crosse!
» Va-t’en!” Voilà le cri qu’on vous jette. Laissons Vivre l’enfant.”

Don Ruy, le chef des trahisons,

Froid, se parle à lui-même et dit:

«Cette mesure
Aurait ceci de bon qu’elle serait très sûre.

— Laquelle?” dit Ramon.

Mais Ruy, sans se hâter:

«Je ne sais rien de mieux, dit-il, pour compléter
Les choses de l’état et de la politique,
Et les actes prudents qu’on fait et qu’on pratique,
Et qui ne doivent pas du vulgaire être sus,
Qu’un puits profond, avec une pierre dessus.”

Cela se dit pendant que les gueux, pêle-mêle,
Boivent l’ombre et le rêve à l’obscure mamelle
Du sommeil ténébreux et muet; et, pendant
Que l’enfant songe, assis sous le soleil ardent.
Le prêtre mange, avec les prières d’usage.

V

Les soldats continuent de dormir et les infants de causer

Une faute: on n’a point fait garder le passage.
Ô don Ruy le Subtil, à quoi donc pensez-vous?
Mais don Ruy répondrait: « J’ai la ronce et le houx,
Et chaque pan de roche est une sentinelle;
La fauve solitude est l’amie éternelle

Des larrons, des voleurs et des hommes de nuit;
Ce pays ténébreux comme un antre est construit.
Et nous avons ici notre aire inabordable;
C’est un vieux recéleur que ce mont formidable;
Sinistre, il nous accepte, et, quoi que nous fassions,
Il cache dans ses trous toutes nos actions;
Et que pouvons-nous donc craindre dans ces provinces,
Étant bandits aux champs et dans les villes princes?”

Le débat sur le roi continue. « Il faudrait,
Dit l’infant Ruy, trouver quelque couvent discret,
Quelque in-pace bien calme où cet enfant vieillisse;
Soit. Mais il vaudrait mieux abréger le supplice,
Et s’en débarrasser dans l’Ybaïchalval.
Prenez vite un parti, vite! Ensuite à cheval!
Dépêchons.”

Et, voyant que l’infant don Materne
Jette une pierre, et puis une autre, à la citerne,
Et qu’il suit du regard les cercles qu’elles font,
L’infant Ruy s’interrompt, dit: « Pas assez profond.
J’ai regardé.” Puis, calme, il reprend:

«Une affaire
Perd sa première forme alors qu’on la diffère;
Un point est décidé dès qu’il est éclairci.
Nous sommes tous d’accord en bons frères ici,
L’enfant nous gêne. Il faut que de la vie il sorte;
Le cloître n’est qu’un seuil, la tombe est une porte .
Choisissez. Mais que tout soit fait avant demain.”

VI

Quelqu’un

Alerte! un cavalier passe dans le chemin.
C’est l’heure où les soldats, aux yeux lourds, aux fronts blêmes,
La sieste finissant, se réveillent d’eux-mêmes.
Le cavalier qui passe est habillé de fer;
Il vient par le sentier du côté de la mer;
Il entre dans le val, il franchit la chaussée;
Calme, il approche. Il a la visière baissée;
Il est seul; son cheval est blanc.

Bon chevalier,
Qu’est-ce que vous venez faire dans ce hallier?
Bon passant, quel hasard funeste vous amène
Parmi ces rois ayant de la figure humaine
Tout ce que les démons peuvent en copier?
Quelle abeille êtes-vous pour entrer au guêpier?
Quel archange êtes-vous pour entrer dans l’abîme?

Les princes, occupés de bien faire leur crime,
Virent, hautains d’abord, sans trop se soucier,
Passer cet inconnu sous son voile d’acier;
Lui-même, il paraissait, traversant la clairière,
Regarder vaguement leur bande aventurière;
Comme si ses poumons trouvaient l’air étouffant,
Il se hâtait; soudain il aperçut l’enfant;
Alors il marcha droit vers eux, mit pied à terre,
Et, grave, il dit:

«Je sens une odeur de panthère,
Comme si je passais dans les monts de Tunis,
Je vous trouve en ce lieu trop d’hommes réunis;
Fait-on le mal ici par hasard? Je soupçonne
Volontiers les endroits où ne passe personne.
Qu’est-ce que cet enfant? Et que faites-vous là?”

Un rire, si bruyant qu’un vautour s’envola,
Fut du fier Pacheco la première réponse;
Puis il cria:

«Pardieu, mes frères! Jorge, Ponce,
Ruy, Rostabat, Alonze, avez-vous entendu?
Les arbres du ravin demandent un pendu;
Qu’ils prennent patience, ils l’auront tout à l’heure;
Je veux d’abord répondre à l’homme. Que je meure
Si je lui cèle rien de ce qu’il veut savoir!
Devant moi d’ordinaire, et dès que l’on croit voir
Quelque chose qui semble aux manants mon panache,
Vite, on clôt les volets des maisons, on se cache,
On se bouche l’oreille et l’on ferme les yeux;
Je suis content d’avoir enfin un curieux.
Il ne sera pas dit que quelqu’un sur la terre,
Princes, m’aura vu faire une chose et la taire,
Et que, questionné, j’aurai balbutié.
Le hardi qui fait peur, muet, ferait pitié.
Ma main s’ouvre toujours, montrant ce qu’elle sème.
J’étalerais mon âme à Dieu, vînt-il lui-même
M’interroger du haut des cieux, moi, Pacheco,
Ayant pour voix la foudre et l’enfer pour écho.
Çà, qui que tu sois, homme, écoute, misérable.
Nous choisirons après ton chêne ou ton érable,
Selon qu’il peut te plaire, en ce bois d’Ernula,
Pendre à ces branches-ci plutôt qu’à celles-là.
Écoute: ces seigneurs à mines téméraires,
Et moi, le Pacheco, nous sommes les dix frères;
Nous sommes les infants d’Asturie; et ceci,
C’est Nuño, fils de feu notre frère Garci,
Roi de Galice, ayant pour ville Compostelle;
Nous, ses oncles, avons sur lui droit de tutelle;
Nous l’allons verrouiller dans un couvent. Pourquoi?
C’est qu’il est si petit, qu’il est à peine roi;
Et que ce peuple-ci veut de fortes épées;
Tant de haines autour du maître sont groupées
Qu’il faut que le seigneur ait la barbe au menton;
Donc, nous avons ôté du trône l’avorton,
Et nous l’allons offrir au bon Dieu. Sur mon âme,

Cela vous a la peau plus blanche qu’une femme!
Mes frères, n’est-ce pas? C’est mou, c’est grelottant;
On ignore s’il voit, on ne sait s’il entend;
Un roi, ça! rien qu’à voir ce petit, on s’ennuie.
Moi, du moins, j’ai dans l’œil des flammes, et la pluie,
Le soleil et le vent, ces farouches tanneurs,
M’ont fait le cuir robuste et ferme, messeigneurs!
Ah! pardieu, s’il est beau d’être prince, c’est rude:
Avoir du combattant l’éternelle attitude,
Vivre casqué, suer l’été, geler l’hiver,
Être le ver affreux d’une larve de fer,
Coucher dans le harnais, boire à la calebasse,
Le soir être si las qu’on va la tête basse,
Se tordre un linge aux pieds, les souliers vous manquant,
Guerroyer tout le jour, la nuit garder le camp,
Marcher à jeun, marcher vaincu, marcher malade,
Sentir suinter le sang par quelque estafilade,
Manger des oignons crus et dormir par hasard,
Voilà. Vissez-moi donc le heaume et le brassard
Sur ce fœtus, à qui bientôt on verra croître
Par derrière une mitre et par devant un goître!
À la bonne heure, moi! je suis le compagnon
Des coups d’épée, et j’ai la Colère pour nom,
Et les poils de mon bras font peur aux bêtes fauves.
Ce nain vivra tondu parmi les vieillards chauves;
Il se pourrait aussi, pour le bien de l’état,
Si l’on trouvait un puits très-creux, qu’on l’y jetât;
Moi, je l’aimerais mieux moine en quelque cachette,
Servant la messe au prêtre avec une clochette.
Pour nous, chacun de nous étant prince et géant,
Nous gardons sceptre et lance, et rien n’est mieux séant
Qu’aux enfants la chapelle et la bataille aux hommes.
Il a précisément dix comtés, et nous sommes
Dix princes; est-il rien de plus juste? À présent,
N’est-ce pas, tu comprends cette affaire, passant?
Elle est simple, et l’on peut n’en pas faire mystère;
Et le jour ne va pas s’éclipser, et la terre

Ne va pas refuser aux hommes le maïs,
Parce que dix seigneurs partagent un pays,
Et parce qu’un enfant rentre dans la poussière.”

Le chevalier leva lentement sa visière:
«Je m’appelle Roland, pair de France,” dit-il.

VII

Don Ruy le Subtil

Alors l’aîné prudent, le chef, Ruy le Subtil,
Sourit:

«Sire Roland, ma pente naturelle
Étant de ne chercher à personne querelle,
Je vous salue, et dis: Soyez le bienvenu!
Je vous fais remarquer que ce pays est nu,
Rude, escarpé, désert, brutal, et que nous sommes
Dix infants bien armés avec dix majordomes,
Ayant derrière nous cent coquins fort méchants;
Et que, s’il nous plaisait, nous pourrions dans ces champs
Laisser de la charogne en pâture aux volées
De corbeaux que le soir chasse dans les vallées;
Vous êtes dans un vrai coupe-gorge; voyez:
Pas un toit, pas un mur, des sentiers non frayés,
Personne; aucun secours possible; et les cascades
Couvrent le cri des gens tombés aux embuscades.
On ne voyage guère en ce val effrayant.
Les songe-creux, qui vont aux chimères bayant,
Trouvent les âpretés de ces ravins fort belles;
Mais ces chemins pierreux aux passants sont rebelles,
Ces pics repoussent l’homme, ils ont des coins hagards
Hantés par des vivants aimant peu les regards,
Et, quand une vallée est à ce point rocheuse,

Elle peut devenir aux curieux fâcheuse.
Bon Roland, votre nom est venu jusqu'à nous,
Nous sommes des seigneurs bien faisants et très-doux,
Nous ne voudrions pas vous faire de la peine,
Allez-vous-en. Parfois la montagne est malsaine.
Retournez sur vos pas, ne soyez point trop lent,
Retournez.

— Décidez mon cheval, dit Roland;
Car il a l'habitude étrange et ridicule
De ne pas m'obéir quand je veux qu'il recule."

Les infants un moment se parlèrent tout bas.
Et Ruy dit à Roland:

«Tant d'illustres combats
Font luire votre gloire, ô grand soldat sincère,
Que nous vous aimons mieux compagnon qu'adversaire.
Seigneur, tout invincible et tout Roland qu'on est,
Quand il faut, pied à pied, dans l'herbe et le genêt,
Lutter seul, et, n'ayant que deux bras, tenir tête
À cent vingt durs garçons, c'est une sombre fête;
C'est un combat d'un sang généreux empourpré,
Et qui pourrait finir, sur le sinistre pré,
Par les os d'un héros réjouissant les aigles.
Entendons-nous plutôt. Les états ont leurs règles;
Et vous êtes tombé dans un arrangement
De famille, inutile à conter longuement;
Seigneur, Nuño n'est pas possible; je m'explique:
L'enfantillage nuit à la chose publique;
Mettre sur un tel front la couronne, l'effroi,
La guerre, n'est-ce pas stupide? Un marmot roi!
Allons donc! en ce cas, si le contre-sens règne,
Si l'absurde fait loi, qu'on me donne une duègne,
Et dites aux brebis de rugir, ordonnez
Aux biches d'emboucher les clairons forcenés;
En même temps, soyez conséquent, qu'on affuble

L’ours des monts et le loup des bois d’une chasuble,
Et qu’aux pattes du tigre on plante un goupillon.
Seigneur, pour être un sage, on n’est pas un félon;
Et les choses qu’ici je vous dis sont certaines
Pour les docteurs autant que pour les capitaines.
J’arrive au fait; soyons amis. Nous voulons tous
Faire éclater l’estime où nous sommes de vous;
Voici: Leso n’est pas une bourgade vile,
La ville d’Oyarzun est une belle ville,
Toutes deux sont à vous. Si, pesant nos raisons,
Vous nous prêtez main-forte en ce que nous faisons,
Nous vous donnons les gens, les bois, les métairies.
Donc vous voilà seigneur de ces deux seigneuries;
Il ne nous reste plus qu’à nous tendre la main.
Nous avons de la cire, un prêtre, un parchemin,
Et, pour que Votre Grâce en tout point soit contente,
Nous allons vous signer ici votre patente;
C’est dit.

— Avez-vous fait ce rêve?” dit Roland.

Et, présentant au roi son beau destrier blanc:

«Tiens, roi! pars au galop, hâte-toi, cours, regagne
Ta ville, et saute au fleuve et passe la montagne,
Va!”

L’enfant-roi bondit en selle éperdument,
Et le voilà qui fuit sous le clair firmament,
À travers monts et vaux, pâle, à bride abattue.

«Çà, le premier qui monte à cheval, je le tue.”
Dit Roland.

Les infants se regardaient entre eux,
Stupéfaits.

VIII

Pacheco, Froïla, Rostabat

Et Roland:

« Il serait désastreux
Qu’un de vous poursuivît cette proie échappée;
Je ferais deux morceaux de lui d’un coup d’épée,
Comme le Duero coupe Léon en deux.”

Et, pendant qu’il parlait, à son bras hasardeux
La grande Durandal brillait toute joyeuse.
Roland s’adosse au tronc robuste d’une yeuse,
Criant: « Défiez-vous de l’épée. Elle mord.

— Quand tu serais femelle ayant pour nom la Mort, J’irai! J’égorgerai Nuño dans la campagne!”
Dit Pacheco, sautant sur son genêt d’Espagne.

Roland monte au rocher qui barre le chemin.

L’infant pique des deux, une dague à la main,
Une autre entre les dents, prête à la repartie;
Qui donc l’empêcherait de franchir la sortie?
Ses poignets sont crispés d’avance du plaisir
D’atteindre le fuyard et de le ressaisir,
Et de sentir trembler sous l’ongle inexorable
Toute la pauvre chair de l’enfant misérable.
Il vient, et sur Roland il jette un long lacet;
Roland, surpris, recule, et Pacheco passait…
Mais le grand paladin se roidit, et l’assomme
D’un coup prodigieux qui fendit en deux l’homme
Et tua le cheval, et si surnaturel

Qu’il creva le chanfrein et troua le girel.

«Qu’est-ce que j’avais dit?” fit Roland.

«Qu’on soit sage,
Reprit-il; renoncez à forcer le passage.
Si l’un de vous, bravant Durandal à mon poing,
A le cerveau heurté de folie à ce point,
Je lui ferai descendre au talon sa fêlure;
Voyez.”

Don Froïla, caressant l’encolure
De son large cheval au mufle de taureau,
Crie: « Allons!

— Pas un pas de plus, caballero!”
Dit Roland.

Et l’infant répond d’un coup de lance;
Roland, atteint, chancelle, et Froïla s’élance;
Mais Durandal se dresse, et jette Froïla
Sur Pacheco, dont l’âme en ce moment hurla.
Froïla tombe, étreint par l’angoisse dernière;
Son casque, dont l’épée a brisé la charnière,
S’ouvre, et montre sa bouche où l’écume apparaît.
Bave épaisse et sanglante! Ainsi, dans la forêt,
La sève, en mai, gonflant les aubépines blanches,
S’enfle et sort en salive à la pointe des branches.

«Vengeance! mort! rugit Rostabat le Géant,
Nous sommes cent contre un. Tuons ce mécréant!

— Infants! cria Roland, la chose est difficile;
Car Roland n’est pas un. J’arrive de Sicile,
D’Arabie et d’Égypte, et tout ce que je sais,
C’est que des peuples noirs devant moi sont passés;
Je crois avoir plané dans le ciel solitaire;

Il m’a semblé parfois que je quittais la terre
Et l’homme, et que le dos monstrueux des griffons
M’emportait au milieu des nuages profonds;
Mais, n’importe, j’arrive, et votre audace est rare,
Et j’en ris. Prenez garde à vous, car je déclare,
Infants, que j’ai toujours senti Dieu près de moi.
Vous êtes cent contre un! Pardieu! le bel effroi!
Fils, cent maravédis valent-ils une piastre?
Cent lampions sont-ils plus farouches qu’un astre?
Combien de poux faut-il pour manger un lion?
Vous êtes peu nombreux pour la rébellion
Et pour l’encombrement du chemin, quand je passe.
Arrière!”

Rostabat le Géant, tête basse,
Crachant les grognements rauques d’un sanglier,
Lourd colosse, fondit sur le bon chevalier,
Avec le bruit d’un mur énorme qui s’écroule;
Près de lui, s’avançant comme une sombre foule,
Les sept autres infants, avec leurs intendants,
Marchent, et derrière eux viennent, grinçant des dents,
Les cent coupe-jarrets à faces renégates,
Coiffés de monteras et chaussés d’alpargates,
Demi-cercle féroce, agile, étincelant;
Et tous font converger leurs piques sur Roland.

L’infant, monstre de cœur, est monstre de stature;
Le rocher de Roland lui vient à la ceinture;
Leurs fronts sont de niveau dans ces puissants combats,
Le preux étant en haut et le géant en bas.

Rostabat prend pour fronde, ayant Roland pour cible,
Un noir grappin qui semble une araignée horrible,
Masse affreuse oscillant au bout d’un long anneau;
Il lance sur Roland cet arrache-créneau;
Roland l’esquive, et dit au géant: « Bête brute!”
Le grappin égratigne un rocher dans sa chute,

Et le géant bondit, deux haches aux deux poings.

Le colosse et le preux, terribles, se sont joints.

«Ô Durandal, ayant coupé Dol en Bretagne,
Tu peux bien me trancher encor cette montagne,”
Dit Roland, assenant l’estoc sur Rostabat.

Comme sur ses deux pieds de devant l’ours s’abat,
Après s’être dressé pour étreindre le pâtre,
Ainsi Rostabat tombe; et sur son cou d’albâtre
Laïs nue avait moins d’escarboucles luisant
Que ces fauves rochers n’ont de flaques de sang.
Il tombe; la bruyère écrasée est remplie
De cette monstrueuse et vaste panoplie;
Relevée en tombant, sa chemise d’acier
Laisse nu son poitrail de prince carnassier,
Cadavre au ventre horrible, aux hideuses mamelles,
Et l’on voit le dessous de ses noires semelles.

Les sept princes vivants regardent les trois morts.

Et, pendant ce temps-là, lâchant rênes et mors,
Le pauvre enfant sauvé fuyait vers Compostelle.

Durandal brille et fait refluer devant elle
Les assaillants, poussant des souffles d’aquilon;
Toujours droit sur le roc qui ferme le vallon,
Roland crie au troupeau qui sur lui se resserre:

«Du renfort vous serait peut-être nécessaire.
Envoyez-en chercher. À quoi bon se presser?
J’attendrai jusqu’au soir avant de commencer.

— Il raille! Tous sur lui! dit Jorge, et pêle-mêle!
Nous sommes vautours; l’aigle est notre sœur jumelle;
Fils, courage! et ce soir, pour son souper sanglant,

Chacun de nous aura son morceau de Roland.

IX

Durandal travaille

Laveuses qui, dès l’heure où l’orient se dore,
Chantez, battant du linge aux fontaines d’Andorre,
Et qui faites blanchir des toiles sous le ciel,
Chevriers qui roulez sur le Jaïzquivel
Dans les nuages gris votre hutte isolée,
Muletiers qui poussez de vallée en vallée
Vos mules sur les ponts que César éleva,
Sait-on ce que là-bas le vieux mont Corcova
Regarde par-dessus l’épaule des collines?

Le mont regarde un choc hideux de javelines,
Un noir buisson vivant de piques, hérissé,
Comme au pied d’une tour que ceindrait un fossé,
Autour d’un homme, tête altière, âpre, escarpée,
Que protège le cercle immense d’une épée.
Tous d’un côté; de l’autre, un seul; tragique duel!
Lutte énorme! combat de l’Hydre et de Michel!

Qui pourrait dire, au fond des cieux pleins de huées,
Ce que fait le tonnerre au milieu des nuées,
Et ce que fait Roland entouré d’ennemis?
Larges coups, flots de sang par des bouches vomis,
Faces se renversant en arrière livides,
Casques brisés roulant comme des cruches vides,
Flot d’assaillants toujours repoussés, blessés, morts,
Cris de rage; ô carnage! ô terreur! corps à corps
D’un homme contre un tas de gueux épouvantable!
Comme un usurier met son or sur une table,

Le meurtre sur les morts jette les morts, et rit.
Durandal flamboyant semble un sinistre esprit;
Elle va, vient, remonte et tombe, se relève,
S’abat, et fait la fête effrayante du glaive:
Sous son éclair, les bras, les cœurs, les yeux, les fronts,
Tremblent, et les hardis, nivelés aux poltrons,
Se courbent; et l’épée éclatante et fidèle
Donne des coups d’estoc qui semblent des coups d’aile;
Et sur le héros, tous ensemble, le truand,
Le prince, furieux, s’acharnent, se ruant,
Frappant, parant, jappant, hurlant, criant: Main-forte!
Roland est-il blessé? Peut-être. Mais qu’importe?
Il lutte. La blessure est l’altière faveur
Que fait la guerre au brave illustre, au preux sauveur,
Et la chair de Roland, mieux que l’acier trempée,
Ne craint pas ce baiser farouche de l’épée.
Mais, cette fois, ce sont des armes de goujats,
Lassos plombés, couteaux catalans, navajas,
Qui frappent le héros, sur qui cette famille
De monstres se reploie et se tord et fourmille;
Le héros sous son pied sent onduler leurs nœuds
Comme les gonflements d’un dragon épineux;
Son armure est partout bosselée et fêlée;
Et Roland par moments songe dans la mêlée:
«Pense-t-il à donner à boire à mon cheval?”

Un ruisseau de pourpre erre et fume dans le val,
Et sur l’herbe partout des gouttes de sang pleuvent;
Cette clairière aride et que jamais n’abreuvent
Les urnes de la pluie et les vastes seaux d’eau
Que l’hiver jette au front des monts d’Urbistondo,
S’ouvre, et toute brûlée et toute crevassée,
Consent joyeusement à l’horrible rosée;
Fauve, elle dit: « C’est bon. J’ai moins chaud maintenant.”
Des satyres, couchés sur le dos, égrenant
Des grappes de raisin au-dessus de leur tête,
Des ægipans aux yeux de dieux, aux pieds de bête,

Joutant avec le vieux Silène, s’essoufflant
À se vider quelque outre énorme dans le flanc,
Tetant la nymphe Ivresse en leur riante envie,
N’ont pas la volupté de la soif assouvie
Plus que ce redoutable et terrible ravin.
La terre boit le sang mieux qu’un faune le vin.

Un assaut est suivi d’un autre assaut. À peine
Roland a-t-il broyé quelque gueux qui le gêne,
Que voilà de nouveau qu’on lui mord le talon.
Noir fracas! la forêt, la lande, le vallon,
Les cols profonds, les pics que l’ouragan insulte,
N’entendent plus le bruit du vent dans ce tumulte;
Un vaste cliquetis sort de ce sombre effort;
Tout l’écho retentit. Qu’est-ce donc que la mort
Forge dans la montagne et fait dans cette brume,
Ayant ce vil ramas de bandits pour enclume,
Durandal pour marteau, Roland pour forgeron?

X

Le crucifix

Et, là-bas, sans qu’il fût besoin de l’éperon,
Le cheval galopait toujours à perdre haleine;
Il passait la rivière, il franchissait la plaine,
Il volait; par moments, frémissant et ravi,
L’enfant se retournait, tremblant d’être suivi,
Et de voir, des hauteurs du monstrueux repaire,
Descendre quelque frère horrible de son père.

Comme le soir tombait, Compostelle apparut.
Le cheval traversa le pont de granit brut
Dont saint Jacque a posé les premières assises.

Les bons clochers sortaient des brumes indécises;
Et l’orphelin revit son paradis natal.

Près du pont se dressait, sur un haut piédestal,
Un Christ en pierre ayant à ses pieds la madone;
Un blanc cierge éclairait sa face qui pardonne,
Plus douce à l’heure où l’ombre au fond des cieux grandit.
Et l’enfant arrêta son cheval, descendit,
S’agenouilla, joignit les mains devant le cierge,
Et dit:

«Ô mon bon Dieu, ma bonne sainte Vierge,
J’étais perdu; j’étais le ver sous le pavé;
Mes oncles me tenaient; mais vous m’avez sauvé;
Vous m’avez envoyé ce paladin de France,
Seigneur; et vous m’avez montré la différence
Entre les hommes bons et les hommes méchants.
J’avais peut-être en moi bien des mauvais penchants,
J’eusse plus tard peut-être été moi-même infâme,
Mais, en sauvant la vie, ô Dieu, vous sauvez l’âme;
Vous m’êtes apparu dans cet homme, Seigneur;
J’ai vu le jour, j’ai vu la foi, j’ai vu l’honneur,
Et j’ai compris qu’il faut qu’un prince compatisse
Au malheur, c’est-à-dire, ô Père! à la justice.
Ô madame Marie! ô Jésus! à genoux
Devant le crucifix où vous saignez pour nous,
Je jure de garder ce souvenir, et d’être
Doux au faible, loyal au bon, terrible au traître,
Et juste et secourable à jamais, écolier
De ce qu’a fait pour moi ce vaillant chevalier.
Et j’en prends à témoin vos saintes auréoles.”

Le cheval de Roland entendit ces paroles,
Leva la tête, et dit à l’enfant: « C’est bien, roi.”

L’orphelin remonta sur le blanc palefroi,
Et rentra dans sa ville au son joyeux des cloches.

Ce qu’a fait Ruy le Subtil

Et dans le même instant, entre les larges roches,
À travers les sapins d’Ernula, frémissant
De ce défi superbe et sombre, un contre cent,
On pouvait voir encor, sous la nuit étoilée,
Le groupe formidable au fond de la vallée.
Le combat finissait; tous ces monts radieux
Ou lugubres, jadis hantés des demi-dieux,
S’éveillaient, étonnés, dans le blanc crépuscule,
Et, regardant Roland, se souvenaient d’Hercule.
Plus d’infants: neuf étaient tombés; un avait fui;
C’était Ruy le Subtil; mais la bande sans lui
Avait continué, car rien n’irrite comme
La honte et la fureur de combattre un seul homme;
Durandal, à tuer ces coquins s’ébréchant,
Avait jonché de morts la terre, et fait ce champ
Plus vermeil qu’un nuage où le soleil se couche;
Elle s’était rompue en ce labeur farouche;
Ce qui n’empêchait pas Roland de s’avancer;
Les bandits, le croyant prêt à recommencer,
Tremblants comme des bœufs qu’on ramène à l’étable
À chaque mouvement de son bras redoutable,
Reculaient, lui montrant de loin leurs coutelas;
Et, pas à pas, Roland, sanglant, terrible, las,
Les chassait devant lui parmi les fondrières;
Et, n’ayant plus d’épée, il leur jetait des pierres .

Départ de l’aventurier pour l’aventure

Qu’est-ce que Sigismond et Ladislas ont dit?
Je ne sais si la roche ou l’arbre l’entendit;
Mais, quand ils ont tout bas parlé dans la broussaille,
L’arbre a fait un long bruit de taillis qui tressaille,
Comme si quelque bête en passant l’eût troublé,
Et l’ombre du rocher ténébreux a semblé
Plus noire, et l’on dirait qu’un morceau de cette ombre
A pris forme et s’en est allé dans le bois sombre,
Et maintenant on voit comme un spectre marchant
Là-bas dans la clarté sinistre du couchant.

Ce n’est pas une bête en son gîte éveillée,
Ce n’est pas un fantôme éclos sous la feuillée,
Ce n’est pas un morceau de l’ombre du rocher
Qu’on voit là-bas au fond des clairières marcher;
C’est un vivant qui n’est ni stryge ni lémure;
Celui qui marche là, couvert d’une âpre armure,
C’est le grand chevalier d’Alsace, Éviradnus.

Ces hommes qui parlaient, il les a reconnus;
Comme il se reposait dans le hallier, ces bouches
Ont passé, murmurant des paroles farouches,
Et jusqu’à son oreille un mot est arrivé;
Et c’est pourquoi ce juste et ce preux s’est levé.

Il connaît ce pays qu’il parcourut naguère.

Il rejoint l’écuyer Gasclin, page de guerre,
Qui l’attend dans l’auberge, au plus profond du val,
Où tout à l’heure il vient de laisser son cheval
Pour qu’en hâte on lui donne à boire, et qu’on le ferre.
Il dit au forgeron: « Faites vite. Une affaire

M’appelle.” Il monte en selle et part.

II

Éviradnus

Éviradnus,
Vieux, commence à sentir le poids des ans chenus;
Mais c’est toujours celui qu’entre tous on renomme,
Le preux que nul n’a vu de son sang économe;
Chasseur du crime, il est nuit et jour à l’affût;
De sa vie il n’a fait d’action qui ne fût
Sainte, blanche et loyale, et la grande pucelle,
L’épée, en sa main pure et sans tache, étincelle.
C’est le Samson chrétien qui, survenant à point,
N’ayant pour enfoncer la porte que son poing,
Entra, pour la sauver, dans Sickingen en flamme;
Qui, s’indignant de voir honorer un infâme,
Fit, sous son dur talon, un tas d’arceaux rompus
Du monument bâti pour l’affreux duc Lupus,
Arracha la statue, et porta la colonne
Du munster de Strasbourg au pont de Wasselonne,
Et là, fier, la jeta dans les étangs profonds;
on vante Éviradnus d’Altorf à Chaux-de-Fonds;
Quand il songe et s’accoude, on dirait Charlemagne;
Rôdant, tout hérissé, du bois à la montagne,
Velu, fauve, il a l’air d’un loup qui serait bon;
Il a sept pieds de haut comme Jean de Bourbon;
Tout entier au devoir qu’en sa pensée il couve,
Il ne se plaint de rien, mais seulement il trouve
Que les hommes sont bas et que les lits sont courts;
Il écoute partout si l’on crie au secours;
Quand les rois courbent trop le peuple, il le redresse
Avec une intrépide et superbe tendresse;

Il défendit Alix comme Diègue Urraca;
Il est le fort ami du faible; il attaqua
Dans leurs antres les rois du Rhin, et dans leurs bauges
Les barons effrayants et difformes des Vosges;
De tout peuple orphelin il se faisait l'aïeul;
Il mit en liberté les villes; il vint seul
De Hugo Tête-d'Aigle affronter la caverne;
Bon, terrible, il brisa le carcan de Saverne,
La ceinture de fer de Schelestadt, l'anneau
De Colmar, et la chaîne au pied de Haguenau.
Tel fut Éviradnus. Dans l'horrible balance
Où les princes jetaient le dol, la violence,
L'iniquité, l'horreur, le mal, le sang, le feu,
Sa grande épée était le contre-poids de Dieu.
Il est toujours en marche, attendu qu'on moleste
Bien des infortunés sous la voûte céleste,
Et qu'on voit dans la nuit bien des mains supplier;
Sa lance n'aime pas moisir au râtelier;
Sa hache de bataille aisément se décroche;
Malheur à l'action mauvaise qui s'approche
Trop près d'Éviradnus, le champion d'acier!
La mort tombe de lui comme l'eau du glacier.
Il est héros; il a pour cousine la race
Des Amadis de France et des Pyrrhus de Thrace;
Il rit des ans. Cet homme à qui le monde entier
N'eût pas fait dire grâce! et demander quartier,
Ira-t-il pas crier au temps: Miséricorde!
Il s'est, comme Baudoin, ceint les reins d'une corde;
Tout vieux qu'il est, il est de la grande tribu;
Le moins fier des oiseaux n'est pas l'aigle barbu.

Qu'importe l'âge! il lutte. Il vient de Palestine,
Il n'est point las. Les ans s'acharnent; il s'obstine.

III

Dans la forêt

Quelqu'un qui s'y serait perdu ce soir, verrait
Quelque chose d'étrange au fond de la forêt;
C'est une grande salle éclairée et déserte.
Où? Dans l'ancien manoir de Corbus.

L'herbe verte,
Le lierre, le chiendent, l'églantier sauvageon,
Font, depuis trois cents ans, l'assaut de ce donjon;
Le burg, sous cette abjecte et rampante escalade,
Meurt, comme sous la lèpre un sanglier malade;
Il tombe; les fossés s'emplissent des créneaux;
La ronce, ce serpent, tord sur lui ses anneaux;
Le moineau franc, sans même entendre ses murmures,
Sur ses vieux pierriers morts vient becqueter les mûres;
L'épine sur son deuil prospère insolemment;
Mais, l'hiver, il se venge; alors, le burg dormant
S'éveille, et, quand il pleut pendant des nuits entières,
Quand l'eau glisse des toits et s'engouffre aux gouttières,
Il rend grâce à l'ondée, aux vents, et, content d'eux,
Profite, pour cracher sur le lierre hideux,
Des bouches de granit de ses quatre gargouilles.

Le burg est aux lichens comme le glaive aux rouilles;
Hélas! et Corbus, triste, agonise. Pourtant
L'hiver lui plaît; l'hiver, sauvage combattant,
Il se refait, avec les convulsions sombres
Des nuages hagards croulant sur ses décombres,
Avec l'éclair qui frappe et fuit comme un larron,
Avec les souffles noirs qui sonnent du clairon,
Une sorte de vie effrayante, à sa taille;
La tempête est la sœur fauve de la bataille;
Et le puissant donjon, féroce, échevelé,
Dit: Me voilà! sitôt que la bise a sifflé;
Il rit quand l'équinoxe irrité le querelle
Sinistrement, avec son haleine de grêle;

Il est joyeux, ce burg, soldat encor debout,
Quand, jappant comme un chien poursuivi par un loup,
Novembre, dans la brume errant de roche en roche,
Répond au hurlement de Janvier qui s’approche.
Le donjon crie: « En guerre! ô tourmente, es-tu là?”
Il craint peu l’ouragan, lui qui vit Attila.
Oh! les lugubres nuits! Combat dans la bruine!
La nuée attaquant, farouche, la ruine!
Un ruissellement vaste, affreux, torrentiel,
Descend des profondeurs furieuses du ciel;
Le burg brave la nue; on entend les gorgones
Aboyer aux huit coins de ses tours octogones;
Tous les monstres sculptés sur l’édifice épars,
Grondent, et les lions de pierre des remparts
Mordent la brume, l’air et l’onde, et les tarasques
Battent de l’aile au souffle horrible des bourrasques;
L’âpre averse en fuyant vomit sur les griffons;
Et, sous la pluie entrant par les trous des plafonds,
Les guivres, les dragons, les méduses, les drées,
Grincent des dents au fond des chambres effondrées;
Le château de granit, pareil aux preux de fer,
Lutte toute la nuit, résiste tout l’hiver;
En vain le ciel s’essouffle, en vain Janvier se rue;
En vain tous les passants de cette sombre rue
Qu’on nomme l’infini, l’ombre et l’immensité,
Le tourbillon, d’un fouet invisible hâté,
Le tonnerre, la trombe où le typhon se dresse,
S’acharnent sur la fière et haute forteresse;
L’orage la secoue en vain comme un fruit mûr;
Les vents perdent leur peine à guerroyer ce mur,
Le Fôhn bruyant s’y lasse, et sur cette cuirasse
L’Aquilon s’époumonne et l’Autan se harasse,
Et tous ces noirs chevaux de l’air sortent fourbus
De leur bataille avec le donjon de Corbus.

Aussi, malgré la ronce et le chardon et l’herbe,
Le vieux burg est resté triomphal et superbe;

Il est comme un pontife au cœur du bois profond;
Sa tour lui met trois rangs de créneaux sur le front;
Le soir, sa silhouette immense se découpe;
Il a pour trône un roc, haute et sublime croupe;
Et, par les quatre coins, sud, nord, couchant, levant,
Quatre monts, Crobius, Bléda, géants du vent,
Aptar où croît le pin, Toxis que verdit l’orme,
Soutiennent au-dessus de sa tiare énorme
Les nuages, ce dais livide de la nuit.

Le pâtre a peur, et croit que cette tour le suit;
Les superstitions ont fait Corbus terrible;
On dit que l’Archer Noir a pris ce burg pour cible,
Et que sa cave est l’antre où dort le Grand Dormant;
Car les gens des hameaux tremblent facilement;
Les légendes toujours mêlent quelque fantôme
À l’obscure vapeur qui sort des toits de chaume,
L’âtre enfante le rêve, et l’on voit ondoyer
L’effroi dans la fumée errante du foyer.

Aussi, le paysan rend grâce à sa roture
Qui le dispense, lui, d’audace et d’aventure,
Et lui permet de fuir ce burg de la forêt
Qu’un preux, par point d’honneur belliqueux, chercherait.

Corbus voit rarement au loin passer un homme.
Seulement, tous les quinze ou vingt ans, l’économe
Et l’huissier du palais, avec des cuisiniers
Portant tout un festin dans de larges paniers,
Viennent, font des apprêts mystérieux, et partent;
Et, le soir, à travers les branches qui s’écartent,
On voit de la lumière au fond du burg noirci;
Et nul n’ose approcher. Et pourquoi? Le voici:

IV

La coutume de Lusace

C’est l’usage, à la mort d’un marquis de Lusace,
Que l’héritier du trône, en qui revit la race,
Avant de revêtir les royaux attributs,
Aille, une nuit, souper dans la tour de Corbus;
C’est de ce noir souper qu’il sort prince et margrave;
La marquise n’est bonne et le marquis n’est brave
Que s’ils ont respiré les funèbres parfums
Des siècles dans ce nid des vieux maîtres défunts;
Les marquis de Lusace ont une haute tige,
Et leur source est profonde à donner le vertige;
Ils ont pour père Antée, ancêtre d’Attila;
De ce vaincu d’Alcide une race coula;
C’est la race, autrefois païenne, puis chrétienne,
De Lechus, de Platon, d’Othon, d’Ursus, d’Étienne,
Et de tous ces seigneurs des rocs et des forêts
Bordant l’Europe au nord, flot d’abord, digue après.
Corbus est double: il est burg au bois, ville en plaine;
Du temps où l’on montait sur la tour châtelaine,
On voyait, au delà des pins et des rochers,
Sa ville perçant l’ombre au loin de ses clochers;
Cette ville a des murs; pourtant, ce n’est pas d’elle
Que relève l’antique et noble citadelle;
Fière, elle s’appartient; quelquefois un château
Est l’égal d’une ville; en Toscane, Prato,
Barletta dans la Pouille, et Crême en Lombardie,
Valent une cité, même forte et hardie;
Corbus est de ce rang. Sur ses rudes parois
Ce burg a le reflet de tous les anciens rois;
Tous leurs avénements, toutes leurs funérailles,
Ont, chantant ou pleurant, traversé ses murailles;
Tous s’y sont mariés, la plupart y sont nés;
C’est là que flamboyaient ces barons couronnés;
Corbus est le berceau de la royauté scythe.

Or, le nouveau marquis doit faire une visite
À l’histoire qui va continuer. La loi
Veut qu’il soit seul pendant la nuit qui le fait roi.
Au seuil de la forêt, un clerc lui donne à boire
Un vin mystérieux versé dans un ciboire,
Qui doit, le soir venu, l’endormir jusqu’au jour;
Puis on le laisse, il part et monte dans la tour;
Il trouve dans la salle une table dressée;
Il soupe et dort; et l’ombre envoie à sa pensée
Tous les spectres des rois depuis le duc Bela;
Nul n’oserait entrer au burg cette nuit-là;
Le lendemain, on vient en foule, on le délivre;
Et, plein des visions du sommeil, encore ivre
De tous ses grands aïeux qui lui sont apparus,
On le mène à l’église où dort Borivorus;
L’évêque lui bénit la bouche et la paupière,
Et met dans ses deux mains les deux haches de pierre
Dont Attila frappait, juste comme la mort,
D’un bras sur le Midi, de l’autre sur le Nord.

Ce jour-là, sur les tours de la ville, on arbore
Le menaçant drapeau du marquis Swantibore
Qui lia dans les bois et fit manger aux loups
Sa femme et le taureau dont il était jaloux.

Même quand l’héritier du trône est une femme,
Le souper de la tour de Corbus la réclame;
C’est la loi; seulement, la pauvre femme a peur.

V

La marquise Mahaud

La nièce du dernier marquis, Jean le Frappeur,
Mahaud est aujourd’hui marquise de Lusace.
Dame, elle a la couronne, et, femme, elle a la grâce;
Une reine n’est pas reine sans la beauté.
C’est peu que le royaume, il faut la royauté.
Dieu dans son harmonie également emploie
Le cèdre qui résiste et le roseau qui ploie,
Et, certes, il est bon qu’une femme parfois
Ait dans sa main les mœurs, les esprits et les lois,
Succède au maître altier, sourie au peuple, et mène,
En lui parlant tout bas, la sombre troupe humaine;
Mais la douce Mahaud, dans ces temps de malheur,
Tient trop le sceptre, hélas! comme on tient une fleur;
Elle est gaie, étourdie, imprudente et peureuse.
Toute une Europe obscure autour d’elle se creuse;
Et, quoiqu’elle ait vingt ans, on a beau la prier,
Elle n’a pas encor voulu se marier.
Il est temps cependant qu’un bras viril l’appuie;
Comme l’arc-en-ciel rit entre l’ombre et la pluie,
Comme la biche joue entre le tigre et l’ours,
Elle a, la pauvre belle aux purs et chastes jours,
Deux noirs voisins qui font une noire besogne:
L’empereur d’Allemagne et le roi de Pologne.

VI

Les deux voisins

Toute la différence entre ce sombre roi
Et ce sombre empereur, sans foi, sans Dieu, sans loi,
C’est que l’un est la griffe et que l’autre est la serre;
Tous deux vont à la messe et disent leur rosaire;
Ils n’en passent pas moins pour avoir fait tous deux

Dans l’enfer un traité d’alliance hideux;
On va même jusqu’à chuchoter à voix basse,
Dans la foule où la peur d’en haut tombe et s’amasse,
L’affreux texte d’un pacte entre eux et le pouvoir
Qui s’agite sous l’homme au fond du monde noir;
Quoique l’un soit la haine et l’autre la vengeance,
Ils vivent côte à côte en bonne intelligence;
Tous les peuples qu’on voit saigner à l’horizon
Sortent de leur tenaille et sont de leur façon;
Leurs deux figures sont lugubrement grandies
Par de rouges reflets de sacs et d’incendies;
D’ailleurs, comme David, suivant l’usage ancien,
L’un est poëte, et l’autre est bon musicien;
Et les déclarant dieux, la renommée allie
Leurs noms dans les sonnets qui viennent d’Italie.
L’antique hiérarchie a l’air mise en oubli;
Car, suivant le vieil ordre en Europe établi,
L’empereur d’Allemagne est duc, le roi de France
Marquis; les autres rois ont peu de différence;
Ils sont barons autour de Rome, leur pilier,
Et le roi de Pologne est simple chevalier;
Mais dans ce siècle on voit l’exception unique
Du roi sarmate égal au césar germanique.
Chacun s’est fait sa part; l’allemand n’a qu’un soin,
Il prend tous les pays de terre ferme au loin;
Le polonais, ayant le rivage baltique,
Veut des ports; il a pris toute la mer celtique;
Sur tous les flots du nord il pousse ses dromons;
L’Islande voit passer ses navires démons;
L’allemand brûle Anvers et conquiert les deux Prusses,
Le polonais secourt Spotocus, duc des Russes,
Comme un plus grand boucher en aide un plus petit;
Le roi prend, l’empereur pille, usurpe, investit;
L’empereur fait la guerre à l’ordre teutonique,
Le roi sur le Jutland pose son pied cynique;
Mais, qu’ils brisent le faible ou qu’ils trompent le fort,
Quoi qu’ils fassent, ils ont pour loi d’être d’accord;

Des geysers du pôle aux cités transalpines,
Leurs ongles monstrueux, crispés sur des rapines,
Égratignent le pâle et triste continent.
Et tout leur réussit. Chacun d’eux, rayonnant,
Mène à fin tous ses plans lâches ou téméraires,
Et règne; et, sous Satan paternel, ils sont frères;
Ils s’aiment; l’un est fourbe et l’autre est déloyal;
Ils sont les deux bandits du grand chemin royal.
Ô les noirs conquérants! et quelle œuvre éphémère!
L’ambition, branlant ses têtes de chimère,
Sous leur crâne brumeux, fétide et sans clarté,
Nourrit la pourriture et la stérilité;
Ce qu’ils font est néant et cendre; une hydre allaite,
Dans leur âme nocturne et profonde, un squelette.
Le polonais sournois, l’allemand hasardeux,
Remarquent qu’à cette heure une femme est près d’eux;
Tous deux guettent Mahaud. Et naguère, avec rage,
De sa bouche qu’empourpre une lueur d’orage
Et d’où sortent des mots pleins d’ombre ou teints de sang,
L’empereur a jeté cet éclair menaçant:
«L’empire est las d’avoir au dos cette besace
Qu’on appelle la haute et la basse Lusace,
Et dont la pesanteur, qui nous met sur les dents,
S’accroît, quand, par hasard, une femme est dedans.”
Le polonais se tait, épie et patiente.

Ce sont deux grands dangers; mais cette insouciante
Sourit, gazouille et danse, aime les doux propos,
Se fait bénir du pauvre et réduit les impôts;
Elle est vive, coquette, aimable et bijoutière;
Elle est femme toujours; dans sa couronne altière,
Elle choisit la perle, elle a peur du fleuron;
Car le fleuron tranchant, c’est l’homme et le baron.
Elle a des tribunaux d’amour qu’elle préside;
Aux copistes d’Homère elle paye un subside;
Elle a tout récemment accueilli dans sa cour
Deux hommes, un luthier avec un troubadour,

Dont on ignore tout, le nom, le rang, la race,
Mais qui, conteurs charmants, le soir, sur la terrasse,
À l’heure où les vitraux aux brises sont ouverts,
Lui font de la musique et lui disent des vers.
Or, en juin, la Lusace, en août, les Moraves,
Font la fête du trône et sacrent leurs margraves;
C’est aujourd’hui le jour du burg mystérieux;
Mahaud viendra ce soir souper chez ses aïeux.

Qu’est-ce que tout cela fait à l’herbe des plaines,
Aux oiseaux, à la fleur, au nuage, aux fontaines?
Qu’est-ce que tout cela fait aux arbres des bois?
Que le peuple ait des jougs et que l’homme ait des rois,
L’eau coule, le vent passe et murmure: Qu’importe!

VII

La salle à manger

La salle est gigantesque; elle n’a qu’une porte;
Le mur fuit dans la brume et semble illimité;
En face de la porte, à l’autre extrémité,
Brille, étrange et splendide, une table adossée
Au fond de ce livide et froid rez-de-chaussée;
La salle a pour plafond les charpentes du toit;
Cette table n’attend qu’un convive; on n’y voit
Qu’un fauteuil sous un dais qui pend aux poutres noires;
Les anciens temps ont peint sur le mur leurs histoires:
Le fier combat du roi des Vendes Thassilo,
Contre Nemrod sur terre et Neptune sur l’eau,
Le fleuve Rhin trahi par la rivière Meuse,
Et, groupes blêmissants sur la paroi brumeuse,
Odin, le loup Fenris et le serpent Asgar;

Et toute la lumière éclairant ce hangar,
Qui semble d’un dragon avoir été l’étable,
Vient d’un flambeau sinistre allumé sur la table;
C’est le grand chandelier aux sept branches de fer
Que l’archange Attila rapporta de l’enfer
Après qu’il eût vaincu le Mammon, et sept âmes
Furent du noir flambeau les sept premières flammes.
Toute la salle semble un grand linéament
D’abîme, modelé dans l’ombre vaguement;
Au fond, la table éclate avec la brusquerie
De la clarté heurtant des blocs d’orfévrerie;
De beaux faisans tués par les traîtres faucons,
Des viandes froides, force aiguières et flacons,
Chargent la table où s’offre une opulente agape;
Les plats, bordés de fleurs, sont en vermeil; la nappe
Vient de Frise, pays célèbre par ses draps;
Et, pour les fruits, brugnons, fraises, pommes, cédrats,
Les pâtres de la Murg ont sculpté les sébiles;
Ces orfévres du bois sont des rustres habiles
Qui font sur une écuelle ondoyer des jardins
Et des monts où l’on voit fuir des chasses aux daims.
Sur une vasque d’or aux anses florentines,
Des actéons cornus et chaussés de bottines
Luttent, l’épée au poing, contre des lévriers;
Des branches de glaïeuls et de genévriers,
Des roses, des bouquets d’anis, une jonchée
De sauge tout en fleur nouvellement fauchée,
Couvrent d’un frais parfum de printemps répandu
Un tapis d’Ispahan sous la table étendu.
Dehors, c’est la ruine et c’est la solitude.
On entend, dans sa rauque et vaste inquiétude,
Passer sur le hallier, par l’été rajeuni,
Le vent, onde de l’ombre et flot de l’infini.
On a remis partout des vitres aux verrières
Qu’ébranle la rafale arrivant des clairières;
L’étrange, dans ce lieu ténébreux et rêvant,
Ce serait que celui qu’on attend fût vivant;

Aux lueurs du sept-bras, qui fait flamboyer presque
Les vagues yeux épars sur la lugubre fresque,
On voit le long des murs, par place, un escabeau,
Quelque long coffre obscur à meubler le tombeau,
Et des buffets, chargés de cuivre et de faïence;
Et la porte, effrayante et sombre confiance,
Est formidablement ouverte sur la nuit.

Rien ne parle en ce lieu, d’où tout homme s’enfuit.
La terreur, dans les coins accroupie, attend l’hôte.
Cette salle à manger de titans est si haute,
Qu’en égarant, de poutre en poutre, son regard
Aux étages confus de ce plafond hagard,
On est presque étonné de n’y pas voir d’étoiles.
L’araignée est géante en ces hideuses toiles
Flottant là-haut, parmi les madriers profonds
Que mordent aux deux bouts les gueules des griffons.
La lumière a l’air noire et la salle a l’air morte.
La nuit retient son souffle. On dirait que la porte
A peur de remuer tout haut ses deux battants.

VIII

Ce qu’on y voit encore

Mais ce que cette salle, antre obscur des vieux temps,
A de plus sépulcral et de plus redoutable,
Ce n’est pas le flambeau, ni le dais, ni la table;
C’est, le long de deux rangs d’arches et de piliers,
Deux files de chevaux avec leurs chevaliers.

Chacun à son pilier s’adosse et tient sa lance;
L’arme droite, ils se font vis-à-vis en silence;

Les chanfreins sont lacés; les harnais sont bouclés;
Les chatons des cuissards sont barrés de leurs clés;
Les trousseaux de poignards sur l’arçon se répandent;
Jusqu’aux pieds des chevaux les caparaçons pendent;
Les cuirs sont agrafés; les ardillons d’airain
Attachent l’éperon, serrent le gorgerin;
La grande épée à mains brille au croc de la selle;
La hache est sur le dos, la dague est sous l’aisselle;
Les genouillères ont leur boutoir meurtrier;
Les mains pressent la bride, et les pieds l’étrier;
Ils sont prêts; chaque heaume est masqué de son crible;
Tous se taisent; pas un ne bouge; c’est terrible.

Les chevaux monstrueux ont la corne au frontail.
Si Satan est berger, c’est là son noir bétail.
Pour en voir de pareils dans l’ombre, il faut qu’on dorme;
Ils sont comme engloutis sous la housse difforme;
Les cavaliers sont froids, calmes, graves, armés,
Effroyables; les poings lugubrement fermés;
Si l’enfer tout à coup ouvrait ces mains fantômes,
On verrait quelque lettre affreuse dans leurs paumes.
De la brume du lieu leur stature s’accroît.
Autour d’eux l’ombre a peur et les piliers ont froid.
Ô nuit, qu’est-ce que c’est que ces guerriers livides?

Chevaux et chevaliers sont des armures vides,
Mais debout. Ils ont tous encor le geste fier,
L’air fauve, et, quoique étant de l’ombre, ils sont du fer.
Sont-ce des larves? Non; et sont-ce des statues?
Non. C’est de la chimère et de l’horreur, vêtues
D’airain, et, des bas-fonds de ce monde puni,
Faisant une menace obscure à l’infini;
Devant cette impassible et morne chevauchée,
L’âme tremble et se sent des spectres approchée,
Comme si l’on voyait la halte des marcheurs
Mystérieux que l’aube efface en ses blancheurs.
Si quelqu’un, à cette heure, osait franchir la porte,

À voir se regarder ces masques de la sorte,
Il croirait que la mort, à de certains moments,
Rhabillant l’homme, ouvrant les sépulcres dormants,
Ordonne, hors du temps, de l’espace et du nombre,
Des confrontations de fantômes dans l’ombre.

Les linceuls ne sont pas plus noirs que ces armets;
Les tombeaux, quoique sourds et voilés pour jamais,
Ne sont pas plus glacés que ces brassards; les bières
N’ont pas leurs ais hideux mieux joints que ces jambières;
Le casque semble un crâne, et, de squammes couverts,
Les doigts des gantelets luisent comme des vers;
Ces robes de combat ont des plis de suaires;
Ces pieds pétrifiés siéraient aux ossuaires;
Ces piques ont des bois lourds et vertigineux
Où des têtes de mort s’ébauchent dans les nœuds.
Ils sont tous arrogants sur la selle, et leurs bustes
Achèvent les poitrails des destriers robustes;
Les mailles sur leurs flancs croisent leurs durs tricots;
Le mortier des marquis près des tortils ducaux
Rayonne, et sur l’écu, le casque et la rondache,
La perle triple alterne avec les feuilles d’ache;
La chemise de guerre et le manteau de roi
Sont si larges, qu’ils vont du maître au palefroi;
Les plus anciens harnais remontent jusqu’à Rome;
L’armure du cheval sous l’armure de l’homme
Vit d’une vie horrible, et guerrier et coursier
Ne font qu’une seule hydre aux écailles d’acier.

L’histoire est là; ce sont toutes les panoplies
Par qui furent jadis tant d’œuvres accomplies;
Chacune, avec son timbre en forme de delta,
Semble la vision du chef qui la porta;
Là sont les ducs sanglants et les marquis sauvages
Qui portaient pour pennons au milieu des ravages
Des saints dorés et peints sur des peaux de poissons.
Voici Geth, qui criait aux Slaves: « Avançons!”

Mundiaque, Ottocar, Platon, Ladislas Cunne,
Welf, dont l’écu portait: « Ma peur se nomme Aucune.”
Zultan, Nazamystus, Othon le Chassieux;
Depuis Spignus jusqu’à Spartibor-aux-trois-yeux,
toute la dynastie effrayante d’Antée
Semble là sur le bord des siècles arrêtée.
Que font-ils là, debout et droits? Qu’attendent-ils?
L’aveuglement remplit l’armet aux durs sourcils.
L’arbre est là sans la séve et le héros sans l’âme;
Où l’on voit des yeux d’ombre on vit des yeux de flamme;
La visière aux trous ronds sert de masque au néant;
Le vide s’est fait spectre et rien s’est fait géant;
Et chacun de ces hauts cavaliers est l’écorce
De l’orgueil, du défi, du meurtre et de la force;
Le sépulcre glacé les tient; la rouille mord
Ces grands casques, épris d’aventure et de mort,
Que baisait leur maîtresse auguste, la bannière;
Pas un brassard ne peut remuer sa charnière;
Les voilà tous muets, eux qui rugissaient tous,
Et, grondant et grinçant, rendaient les clairons fous;
Le heaume affreux n’a plus de cri dans ses gencives;
Ces armures, jadis fauves et convulsives,
Ces hauberts, autrefois pleins d’un souffle irrité,
Sont venus s’échouer dans l’immobilité,
Regarder devant eux l’ombre qui se prolonge,
Et prendre dans la nuit la figure du songe.

Ces deux files, qui vont depuis le morne seuil
Jusqu’au fond où l’on voit la table et le fauteuil,
Laissent entre leurs fronts une ruelle étroite;
Les marquis sont à gauche et les ducs sont à droite;
Jusqu’au jour où le toit que Spignus crénela,
Chargé d’ans, croulera sur leur tête, ils sont là,
Inégaux, face à face, et pareils, côte à côte.
En dehors des deux rangs, en avant, tête haute,
Comme pour commander le funèbre escadron
Qu’éveillera le bruit du suprême clairon,

Les vieux sculpteurs ont mis un cavalier de pierre,
Charlemagne, ce roi qui de toute la terre
Fit une table ronde à douze chevaliers.

Les cimiers surprenants, tragiques, singuliers,
Cauchemars entrevus dans le sommeil sans bornes,
Sirènes aux seins nus, mélusines, licornes,
Farouches bois de cerfs, aspics, alérions,
Sur la rigidité des pâles morions,
Semblent une forêt de monstres qui végète;
L’un penche en avant, l’autre en arrière se jette;
Tous ces êtres, dragons, cerbères orageux,
Que le bronze et le rêve ont créés dans leurs jeux,
Lions volants, serpents ailés, guivres palmées,
Faits pour l’effarement des livides armées,
Espèces de démons composés de terreur,
Qui, sur le heaume altier des barons en fureur,
Hurlaient, accompagnant la bannière géante,
Sur les cimiers glacés songent, gueule béante,
Comme s’ils s’ennuyaient, trouvant les siècles longs;
Et, regrettant les morts saignant sous les talons,
Les trompettes, la poudre immense, la bataille,
Le carnage, on dirait que l’Épouvante bâille.
Le métal fait reluire, en reflets durs et froids,
Sa grande larme au mufle obscur des palefrois;
De ces spectres pensifs l’odeur des temps s’exhale;
Leur ombre est formidable au plafond de la salle;
Aux lueurs du flambeau frissonnant, au-dessus
Des blêmes cavaliers vaguement aperçus,
Elle remue et croît dans les ténébreux faîtes;
Et la double rangée horrible de ces têtes
Fait, dans l’énormité des vieux combles fuyants,
De grands nuages noirs aux profils effrayants.

Et tout est fixe, et pas un coursier ne se cabre
Dans cette légion de la guerre macabre;
Oh! ces hommes masqués sur ces chevaux voilés,

Chose affreuse!

À la brume éternelle mêlés,
Ayant chez les vivants fini leur tâche austère,
Muets, ils sont tournés du côté du mystère;
Ces sphinx ont l’air, au seuil du gouffre où rien ne luit,
De regarder l’énigme en face dans la nuit,
Comme si, prêts à faire, entre les bleus pilastres,
Sous leurs sabots d’acier étinceler les astres,
Voulant pour cirque l’ombre, ils provoquaient d’en bas,
Pour on ne sait quels fiers et funèbres combats,
Dans le champ sombre où n’ose aborder la pensée,
La sinistre visière au fond des cieux baissée.

IX

Bruit que fait le plancher

C’est là qu’Éviradnus entre; Gasclin le suit.

Le mur d’enceinte étant presque partout détruit,
Cette porte, ancien seuil des marquis patriarches,
Qu’au-dessus de la cour exhaussent quelques marches,
Domine l’horizon, et toute la forêt
Autour de son perron comme un gouffre apparaît.
L’épaisseur du vieux roc de Corbus est propice
À cacher plus d’un sourd et sanglant précipice;
Tout le burg, et la salle elle-même, dit-on,
Sont bâtis sur des puits faits par le duc Platon;
Le plancher sonne; on sent au-dessous des abîmes.

«Page, dit ce chercheur d’aventures sublimes,
Viens. Tu vois mieux que moi, qui n’ai plus de bons yeux,
Car la lumière est femme et se refuse aux vieux;

Bah! voit toujours assez qui regarde en arrière.
On découvre d’ici la route et la clairière;
Garçon, vois-tu là-bas venir quelqu’un?” Gasclin
Se penche hors du seuil; la lune est dans son plein,
D’une blanche lueur la clairière est baignée.
«Une femme à cheval. Elle est accompagnée.
— De qui?” Gasclin répond: « Seigneur, j’entends les voix
De deux hommes parlant et riant, et je vois
Trois ombres de chevaux qui passent sur la route.
— Bien, dit Éviradnus. Ce sont eux. Page, écoute:
Tu vas partir d’ici. Prends un autre chemin.
Va-t’en, sans être vu. Tu reviendras demain
Avec nos deux chevaux, frais, en bon équipage,
Au point du jour. C’est dit. Laisse-moi seul.” Le page
Regardant son bon maître avec des yeux de fils,
Dit: « Si je demeurais? Ils sont deux. — Je suffis.
Va.”

X

Éviradnus immobile

Le héros est seul sous ces grands murs sévères.
Il s’approche un moment de la table où les verres
Et les hanaps, dorés et peints, petits et grands,
Sont étagés, divers pour les vins différents;
Il a soif; les flacons tentent sa lèvre avide;
Mais la goutte qui reste au fond d’un verre vide
Trahirait que quelqu’un dans la salle est vivant;
Il va droit aux chevaux. Il s’arrête devant
Celui qui le plus près de la table étincelle,
Il prend le cavalier et l’arrache à la selle;
La panoplie en vain lui jette un pâle éclair,

Il saisit corps à corps le fantôme de fer,
Et l’emporte au plus noir de la salle; et, pliée
Dans la cendre et la nuit, l’armure humiliée
Reste adossée au mur comme un héros vaincu;
Éviradnus lui prend sa lance et son écu,
Monte en selle à sa place, et le voilà statue.

Pareil aux autres, froid, la visière abattue,
On n’entend pas un souffle à sa lèvre échapper,
Et le tombeau pourrait lui-même s’y tromper.

Tout est silencieux dans la salle terrible.

XI

Un peu de musique

Écoutez! — Comme un nid qui murmure invisible,
Un bruit confus s’approche, et des rires, des voix,
Des pas, sortent du fond vertigineux des bois.

Et voici qu’à travers la grande forêt brune
Qu’emplit la rêverie immense de la lune,
On entend frissonner et vibrer mollement,
Communiquant aux bois son doux frémissement,
La guitare des monts d’Inspruck, reconnaissable
Au grelot de son manche où sonne un grain de sable;
Il s’y mêle la voix d’un homme, et ce frisson
Prend un sens et devient une vague chanson:

«Si tu veux , faisons un rêve:
Montons sur deux palefrois;
Tu m’emmènes, je t’enlève.
L’oiseau chante dans les bois.

» Je suis ton maître et ta proie;
Partons, c’est la fin du jour;
Mon cheval sera la joie,
Ton cheval sera l’amour.

» Nous ferons toucher leurs têtes;
Les voyages sont aisés;
Nous donnerons à ces bêtes
Une avoine de baisers.

» Viens! nos doux chevaux mensonges
Frappent du pied tous les deux,
Le mien au fond de mes songes,
Et le tien au fond des cieux.

» Un bagage est nécessaire;
Nous emporterons nos vœux,
Nos bonheurs, notre misère,
Et la fleur de tes cheveux.

» Viens, le soir brunit les chênes;
Le moineau rit; ce moqueur
Entend le doux bruit des chaînes
Que tu m’as mises au cœur.
» Ce ne sera point ma faute
Si les forêts et les monts,
En nous voyant côte à côte,
Ne murmurent pas: « Aimons!”

» Viens, sois tendre, je suis ivre.
Ô les verts taillis mouillés!
Ton souffle te fera suivre
Des papillons réveillés.

» L’envieux oiseau nocturne,
Triste, ouvrira son œil rond;

Les nymphes, penchant leur urne,
Dans les grottes souriront;

» Et diront: « Sommes-nous folles!
» C’est Léandre avec Héro;
» En écoutant leurs paroles
» Nous laissons tomber notre eau.”

» Allons-nous-en par l’Autriche!
Nous aurons l’aube à nos fronts;
Je serai grand, et toi riche,
Puisque nous nous aimerons.
» Allons-nous-en par la terre,
Sur nos deux chevaux charmants,
Dans l’azur, dans le mystère,
Dans les éblouissements!

» Nous entrerons à l’auberge,
Et nous paîrons l’hôtelier
De ton sourire de vierge,
De mon bonjour d’écolier.

» Tu seras dame, et moi comte;
Viens, mon cœur s’épanouit;
Viens, nous conterons ce conte
Aux étoiles de la nuit.”

La mélodie encor quelques instants se traîne
Sous les arbres bleuis par la lune sereine,
Puis tremble, puis expire, et la voix qui chantait
S’éteint comme un oiseau se pose; tout se tait.

XII

Le grand Joss et le petit Zéno

Soudain, au seuil lugubre apparaissent trois têtes
Joyeuses, et d’où sort une lueur de fêtes;
Deux hommes, une femme en robe de drap d’or.
L’un des hommes paraît trente ans; l’autre est encor
Plus jeune, et, sur son dos, il porte en bandoulière
La guitare où s’enlace une branche de lierre;
Il est grand et blond; l’autre est petit, pâle et brun;
Ces hommes, qu’on dirait faits d’ombre et de parfum,
Sont beaux, mais le démon dans leur beauté grimace;
Avril a de ces fleurs où rampe une limace.

«Mon grand Joss, mon petit Zéno, venez ici.
Voyez. C’est effrayant.”

Celle qui parle ainsi
C’est madame Mahaud; le clair de lune semble
Caresser sa beauté qui rayonne et qui tremble,
Comme si ce doux être était de ceux que l’air
Crée, apporte et remporte en un céleste éclair.

«Passer ici la nuit! Certe, un trône s’achète!
Si vous n’étiez venus m’escorter en cachette,
Dit-elle, je serais vraiment morte de peur.”

La lune éclaire auprès du seuil, dans la vapeur,
Un des grands chevaliers adossés aux murailles.

«Comme je vous vendrais à l’encan ces ferrailles!
Dit Zéno; je ferais, si j’étais le marquis,
De ce tas de vieux clous sortir des vins exquis,
Des galas, des tournois, des bouffons et des femmes.”

Et, frappant cet airain d’où sort le bruit des âmes,
Cette armure où l’on voit frémir le gantelet,
Calme et riant, il donne au sépulcre un soufflet.

«Laissez donc mes aïeux, dit Mahaud, qui murmure.
Vous êtes trop petit pour toucher cette armure.”
Zéno pâlit. Mais Joss: « Ça, des aïeux! J’en ris.
Tous ces bonshommes noirs sont des nids de souris.
Pardieu! pendant qu’ils ont l’air terrible, et qu’ils songent,
Écoutez, on entend le bruit des dents qui rongent.
Et dire qu’en effet autrefois tout cela
S’appelait Ottocar, Othon, Platon, Bela!
Hélas! la fin n’est pas plaisante, et déconcerte.
Soyez donc ducs et rois! je ne voudrais pas, certe,
Avoir été colosse, avoir été héros,
Madame, avoir empli de morts des tombereaux,
Pour que, sous ma farouche et fière bourguignotte,
Moi, prince et spectre, un rat paisible me grignote!

— C’est que ce n’est point là votre état, dit Mahaud.
Chantez, soit; mais ici ne parlez pas trop haut.

— Bien dit, reprend Zéno. C’est un lieu de prodiges.
Et, quant à moi, je vois des serpentes, des stryges,
Tout un fourmillement de monstres, s’ébaucher
Dans la brume qui sort des fentes du plancher.”

Mahaud frémit.

«Ce vin que l’abbé m’a fait boire,
Va bientôt m’endormir d’une façon très-noire;
Jurez-moi de rester près de moi.

— J’en réponds,”
Dit Joss; et Zéno dit: « Je le jure. Soupons.”

XIII

Ils soupent

Et, riant et chantant, ils s’en vont vers la table.

«Je fais Joss chambellan et Zéno connétable.”
Dit Mahaud. Et tous trois causent, joyeux et beaux,
Elle sur le fauteuil, eux sur des escabeaux;
Joss mange, Zéno boit, Mahaud rêve. La feuille
N’a pas de bruit distinct qu’on note et qu’on recueille,
Ainsi va le babil sans forme et sans lien;
Joss par moment fredonne un chant tyrolien,
Et fait rire ou pleurer la guitare; les contes
Se mêlent aux gaîtés fraîches, vives et promptes.
Mahaud dit: « Savez-vous que vous êtes heureux?
— Nous sommes bien portants, jeunes, fous, amoureux;
C’est vrai. — De plus, tu sais le latin comme un prêtre,
Et Joss chante fort bien. — Oui, nous avons un maître
Qui nous donne cela par-dessus le marché.
— Quel est son nom? — Pour nous Satan, pour vous Péché;
Dit Zéno, caressant jusqu’en sa raillerie.
— Ne riez pas ainsi, je ne veux pas qu’on rie.
Paix, Zéno! Parle-moi, toi, Joss, mon chambellan.
— Madame, Viridis, comtesse de Milan,
Fut superbe; Diane éblouissait le pâtre;
Aspasie, Isabeau de Saxe, Cléopâtre,
Sont des noms devant qui la louange se tait;
Rhodope fut divine; Érylésis était
Si belle, que Vénus, jalouse de sa gorge,
La traîna toute nue en la céleste forge
Et la fit sur l’enclume écraser par Vulcain;
Eh bien, autant l’étoile éclipse le sequin,
Autant le temple éclipse un monceau de décombres,
Autant vous effacez toutes ces belles ombres!
Ces coquettes qui font des mines dans l’azur.
Les elfes, les péris, ont le front jeune et pur
Moins que vous, et pourtant le vent et ses bouffées
Les ont galamment d’ombre et de rayons coiffées.

— Flatteur, tu chantes bien,” dit Mahaud. Joss reprend:
«Si j’étais, sous le ciel splendide et transparent,
Ange, fille ou démon, s’il fallait que j’apprisse
La grâce, la gaîté, le rire et le caprice,
Altesse, je viendrais à l’école chez vous.
Vous êtes une fée aux yeux divins et doux,
Ayant pour un vil sceptre échangé sa baguette.”
Mahaud songe: « On dirait que ton regard me guette,
Tais-toi. Voyons, de vous tout ce que je connais,
C’est que Joss est Bohême et Zéno Polonais,
Mais vous êtes charmants; et pauvres; oui, vous l’êtes;
Moi, je suis riche; eh bien, demandez-moi, poëtes,
Tout ce que vous voudrez. — Tout? Je vous prends au mot,
Répond Joss. Un baiser. — Un baiser! dit Mahaud
Surprise en ce chanteur d’une telle pensée;
Savez-vous qui je suis?” Et fière et courroucée,
Elle rougit. Mais Joss n’est pas intimidé:
«Si je ne le savais, aurais-je demandé
Une faveur qu’il faut qu’on obtienne, ou qu’on prenne?
Il n’est don que de roi ni baiser que de reine.
— Reine!” Et Mahaud sourit.

XIV

Après souper

Cependant, par degrés,
Le narcotique éteint ses yeux d’ombre enivrés;
Zéno l’observe, un doigt sur la bouche; elle penche
La tête, et, souriant, s’endort, sereine et blanche.
Zéno lui prend la main qui retombe.

«Elle dort!

Dit Zéno; maintenant, vite, tirons au sort.
D’abord à qui l’état? Ensuite, à qui la fille?”

Dans ces deux profils d’homme un œil de tigre brille.

«Frère, dit Joss, parlons politique à présent.
La Mahaud dort et fait quelque rêve innocent;
Nos griffes sont dessus. Nous avons cette folle.
L’ami de dessous terre est sûr et tient parole;
Le hasard, grâce à lui, ne nous a rien ôté
De ce que nous avons construit et comploté;
Tout nous a réussi. Pas de puissance humaine
Qui nous puisse arracher la femme et le domaine.
Concluons. Guerroyer, se chamailler pour rien,
Pour un oui, pour un non, pour un dogme arien
Dont le pape sournois rira dans la coulisse,
Pour quelque fille ayant une peau fraîche et lisse,
Des yeux bleus et des mains blanches comme le lait;
C’était bon dans le temps où l’on se querellait
Pour la croix byzantine ou pour la croix latine,
Et quand Pépin tenait un synode à Leptine,
Et quand Rodolphe et Jean, comme deux hommes soûls,
Glaive au poing, s’arrachaient leur Agnès de deux sous;
Aujourd’hui, tout est mieux et les mœurs sont plus douces;
Frère, on ne se met plus ainsi la guerre aux trousses,
Et l’on sait en amis régler un différend;
As-tu des dés?

— J’en ai.

— Celui qui gagne prend
Le marquisat; celui qui perd a la marquise.

— Bien.

— J’entends du bruit.

— Non, dit Zéno, c’est la bise
Qui souffle bêtement, et qu’on prend pour quelqu’un.
As-tu peur?

— Je n’ai peur de rien, que d’être à jeun,
Répond Joss, et sur moi que les gouffres s’écroulent!

— Finissons. Que le sort décide.”

Les dés roulent.

«Quatre.”

Joss prend les dés.
«Six. Je gagne tout net.
J’ai trouvé la Lusace au fond de ce cornet.
Dès demain, j’entre en danse avec tout mon orchestre.
Taxes partout. Payez. La corde ou le séquestre.
Des trompettes d’airain seront mes galoubets.
Les impôts, cela pousse en plantant des gibets.”

Zéno dit: « J’ai la fille. Eh bien, je le préfère.

— Elle est belle, dit Joss.

— Pardieu!

— Qu’en vas-tu faire?

— Un cadavre.”

Et Zéno reprend:

«En vérité,
La créature m’a tout à l’heure insulté.
Petit! voilà le mot qu’a dit cette femelle.
Si l’enfer m’eût crié, béant sous ma semelle,

Dans la sombre minute où je tenais les dés:
«Fils, les hasards ne sont pas encor décidés;
» Je t’offre le gros lot: la Lusace aux sept villes;
» Je t’offre dix pays de blés, de vins et d’huiles,
» À ton choix, ayant tous leur peuple diligent;
» Je t’offre la Bohême et ses mines d’argent,
» Ce pays le plus haut du monde, ce grand antre
» D’où plus d’un fleuve sort, où pas un ruisseau n’entre;
» Je t’offre le Tyrol aux monts d’azur remplis,
» Et je t’offre la France avec les fleurs de lys;
» Qu’est-ce que tu choisis?” J’aurais dit: « La vengeance.”
Et j’aurais dit: « Enfer, plutôt que cette France,
» Et que cette Bohême, et ce Tyrol si beau,
» Mets à mes ordres l’ombre et les vers du tombeau!”
Mon frère, cette femme, absurdement marquise
D’une marche terrible où tout le Nord se brise,
Et qui, dans tous les cas, est pour nous un danger,
Ayant été stupide au point de m’outrager,
Il convient qu’elle meure; et puis, s’il faut tout dire,
Je l’aime; et la lueur que de mon cœur je tire,
Je la tire du tien: tu l’aimes aussi, toi.
Frère, en faisant ici, chacun dans notre emploi,
Les bohêmes, pour mettre à fin cette équipée,
Nous sommes devenus, près de cette poupée,
Niais, toi comme un page, et moi comme un barbon,
Et, de galants pour rire, amoureux pour de bon;
Oui, nous sommes tous deux épris de cette femme;
Or, frère, elle serait entre nous une flamme;
Tôt ou tard, et, malgré le bien que je te veux,
Elle nous mènerait à nous prendre aux cheveux;
Vois-tu, nous finirions par rompre notre pacte.
Nous l’aimons. Tuons-la.

— Ta logique est exacte,
Dit Joss rêveur; mais quoi, du sang ici?”

Zéno

Pousse un coin de tapis, tâte, prend un anneau,
Le tire, et le plancher se soulève; un abîme
S’ouvre; il en sort de l’ombre ayant l’odeur du crime;
Joss marche vers la trappe, et, les yeux dans les yeux,
Zéno muet la montre à Joss silencieux;
Joss se penche, approuvant de la tête le gouffre.

XV

Les oubliettes

S’il sortait de ce puits une lueur de soufre,
On dirait une bouche obscure de l’enfer.
La trappe est large assez pour qu’en un brusque éclair
L’homme étonné qu’on pousse y tombe à la renverse;
On distingue les dents sinistres d’une herse,
Et, plus bas, le regard flotte dans de la nuit;
Le sang sur les parois fait un rougeâtre enduit;
L’Épouvante est au fond de ce puits toute nue;
On sent qu’il pourrit là de l’histoire inconnue;
Et que ce vieux sépulcre, oublié maintenant,
Cuve du meurtre, est plein de larves se traînant,
D’ombres tâtant le mur et de spectres reptiles.

«Nos aïeux ont parfois fait des choses utiles,”
Dit Joss. Et Zéno dit: « Je connais le château;
Ce que le mont Corbus cache sous son manteau,
Nous le savons, l’orfraie et moi; cette bâtisse
Est vieille; on y rendait autrefois la justice.

— Es-tu sûr que Mahaud ne se réveille point?

— Son œil est clos ainsi que je ferme mon poing;

Elle dort d’une sorte âpre et surnaturelle,
L’obscure volonté du philtre étant sur elle.

— Elle s’éveillera demain au point du jour?

— Dans l’ombre.

— Et que va dire ici toute la cour
Quand, au lieu d’une femme, ils trouveront deux hommes?

— Tous se prosterneront en sachant qui nous sommes.

— Où va cette oubliette?

— Aux torrents, aux corbeaux,
Au néant. Finissons.”

Ces hommes, jeunes, beaux,
Charmants, sont à présent difformes, tant s’efface
Sous la noirceur du cœur le rayon de la face,
Tant l’homme est transparent à l’enfer qui l’emplit.
Ils s’approchent: Mahaud dort comme dans un lit.

«Allons!”

Joss la saisit sous les bras, et dépose
Un baiser monstrueux sur cette bouche rose;
Zéno, penché devant le grand fauteuil massif,
Prend ses pieds endormis et charmants; et, lascif,
Lève la robe d’or jusqu’à la jarretière.

Le puits, comme une fosse au fond d’un cimetière,
Est là béant.

XVI

Ce qu’ils font devient plus difficile à faire

Portant Mahaud, qui dort toujours,
Ils marchent lents, courbés, en silence, à pas sourds,
Zéno tourné vers l’ombre et Joss vers la lumière;
La salle aux yeux de Joss apparaît tout entière;
Tout à coup il s’arrête, et Zéno dit: « Eh bien?”
Mais Joss est effrayant; pâle, il ne répond rien
Et fait signe à Zéno, qui regarde en arrière… —
Tous deux semblent changés en deux spectres de pierre;
Car tous deux peuvent voir, là, sous un cintre obscur,
Un des grands chevaliers rangés le long du mur
Qui se lève et descend de cheval; ce fantôme,
Tranquille sous le masque horrible de son heaume,
Vient vers eux, et son pas fait trembler le plancher:
On croit entendre un dieu de l’abîme marcher;
Entre eux et l’oubliette, il vient barrer l’espace,
Et dit, le glaive haut et la visière basse,
D’une voix sépulcrale et lente comme un glas:
«Arrête, Sigismond! Arrête, Ladislas!”
Tous deux laissent tomber la marquise, de sorte
Qu’elle gît à leurs pieds et paraît une morte.

La voix de fer parlant sous le grillage noir
Reprend, pendant que Joss blêmit, lugubre à voir,
Et que Zéno chancelle ainsi qu’un mât qui sombre:

«Hommes qui m’écoutez, il est un pacte sombre
Dont tout l’univers parle et que vous connaissez;
Le voici: « Moi, Satan, dieu des cieux éclipsés,
» Roi des jours ténébreux, prince des vents contraires,
» Je contracte alliance avec mes deux bons frères,
» L’empereur Sigismond et le roi Ladislas;
» Sans jamais m’absenter ni dire: Je suis las,
» Je les protégerai dans toute conjoncture;

» De plus, je cède, en libre et pleine investiture,
» Étant seigneur de l’onde et souverain du mont,
» La mer à Ladislas, la terre à Sigismond,
» À la condition que, si je le réclame,
» Le roi m’offre sa tête et l’empereur son âme.”

— Serait-ce lui? dit Joss. Spectre aux yeux fulgurants,
Es-tu Satan?

— Je suis plus et moins. Je ne prends
Que vos têtes, ô rois des crimes et des trames,
Laissant sous l’ongle noir se débattre vos âmes.”

Ils se regardent, fous, brisés, courbant le front,
Et Zéno dit à Joss: « Hein! qu’est-ce que c’est donc?”

Joss bégaye: « Oui, la nuit nous tient. Pas de refuge.
De quelle part viens-tu? Qu’es-tu, spectre?

— Le juge.

— Grâce!”

La voix reprend:

«Dieu conduit par la main
Le vengeur en travers de votre affreux chemin;
L’heure où vous existiez est une heure sonnée;
Rien ne peut plus bouger dans votre destinée;
L’idée inébranlable et calme est dans le joint.
Oui, je vous regardais. Vous ne vous doutiez point
Que vous aviez sur vous l’œil fixe de la peine;
Et que quelqu’un savait dans cette ombre malsaine
Que Joss fût kayser et que Zéno fût roi.
Vous venez de parler tout à l’heure, pourquoi?
Tout est dit. Vos forfaits sont sur vous, incurables,
N’espérez rien. Je suis l’abîme, ô misérables!

Ah! Ladislas est roi, Sigismond est césar;
Dieu n’est bon qu’à servir de roue à votre char;
Toi, tu tiens la Pologne avec ses villes fortes;
Toi, Milan t’a fait duc, Rome empereur, tu portes
La couronne de fer et la couronne d’or;
Toi, tu descends d’Hercule, et toi, de Spartibor;
Vos deux tiares sont les deux lueurs du monde;
Tous les monts de la terre et tous les flots de l’onde
Ont, altiers ou tremblants, vos deux ombres sur eux;
Vous êtes les jumeaux du grand vertige heureux;
Vous avez la puissance et vous avez la gloire;
Mais, sous ce ciel de pourpre et sous ce dais de moire,
Sous cette inaccessible et haute dignité,
Sous cet arc de triomphe au cintre illimité,
Sous ce royal pouvoir, couvert de sacrés voiles,
Sous ces couronnes, tas de perles et d’étoiles,
Sous tous ces grands exploits, prompts, terribles, fougueux,
Sigismond est un monstre et Ladislas un gueux!
Ô dégradation du sceptre et de l’épée!
Noire main de justice aux cloaques trempée!
Devant l’hydre, le seuil du temple ouvre ses gonds,
Et le trône est un siége aux croupes des dragons!
Siècle infâme! ô grand ciel étoilé, que de honte!
Tout rampe; pas un front où le rouge ne monte;
C’est égal, on se tait, et nul ne fait un pas.
Ô peuple, million et million de bras,
Toi, que tous ces rois-là mangent et déshonorent,
Toi, que Leurs Majestés les vermines dévorent,
Est-ce que tu n’as pas des ongles, vil troupeau,
Pour ces démangeaisons d’empereurs sur ta peau!
Du reste, en voilà deux de pris; deux âmes telles
Que l’enfer même rêve étonné devant elles!
Sigismond, Ladislas, vous étiez triomphants,
Splendides, inouïs, prospères, étouffants;
Le temps d’être punis arrive; à la bonne heure.
Ah! le vautour larmoie et le caïman pleure.
J’en ris. Je trouve bon qu’à de certains instants,

Les princes, les heureux, les forts, les éclatants,
Les vainqueurs, les puissants, tous les bandits suprêmes,
À leurs fronts cerclés d'or, chargés de diadèmes,
Sentent l'âpre sueur de Josaphat monter.
Il est doux de voir ceux qui hurlaient, sangloter.
La peur après le crime; après l'affreux, l'immonde.
C'est bien. Dieu tout-puissant! quoi, des maîtres du monde,
C'est ce que, dans la cendre et sous mes pieds, j'ai là!
Quoi, ceci règne! Quoi, c'est un césar, cela!
En vérité, j'ai honte, et mon vieux cœur se serre
De les voir se courber plus qu'il n'est nécessaire.
Finissons. Ce qui vient de se passer ici,
Princes, veut un linceul promptement épaissi;
Ces mêmes dés hideux qui virent le Calvaire,
Ont roulé, dans mon ombre indignée et sévère,
Sur une femme, après avoir roulé sur Dieu.
Vous avez joué là, rois, un lugubre jeu.
Mais, soit. Je ne vais pas perdre à de la morale
Ce moment que remplit la brume sépulcrale.
Vous ne voyez plus clair dans vos propres chemins,
Et vos doigts ne sont plus assez des doigts humains
Pour qu'ils puissent tâter vos actions funèbres;
À quoi bon présenter le miroir aux ténèbres?
À quoi bon vous parler de ce que vous faisiez?
Boire de l'ombre, étant de nuit rassasiés,
C'est ce que vous avez l'habitude de faire,
Rois, au point de ne plus sentir dans votre verre
L'odeur des attentats et le goût des forfaits.
Je vous dis seulement que ce vil portefaix,
Votre siècle, commence à trouver vos altesses
Lourdes d'iniquités et de scélératesses;
Il est las, c'est pourquoi je vous jette au monceau
D'ordures que des ans emporte le ruisseau!
Ces jeunes gens penchés sur cette jeune fille,
J'ai vu cela! Dieu bon, sont-ils de la famille
Des vivants, respirant sous ton clair horizon?
Sont-ce des hommes? Non. Rien qu'à voir la façon

Dont votre lèvre touche aux vierges endormies,
Princes, on sent en vous des goules, des lamies,
D’affreux êtres sortis des cercueils soulevés.
Je vous rends à la nuit. Tout ce que vous avez
De la face de l’homme est un mensonge infâme;
Vous avez quelque bête effroyable au lieu d’âme;
Sigismond l’assassin, Ladislas le forban,
Vous êtes des damnés en rupture de ban;
Donc lâchez les vivants et lâchez les empires!
Hors du trône, tyrans! à la tombe, vampires!
Chiens du tombeau, voici le sépulcre. Rentrez.”

Et son doigt est tourné vers le gouffre.

Atterrés,
Ils s’agenouillent.

«Oh! dit Sigismond, fantôme,
Ne nous emmène pas dans ton morne royaume!
Nous t’obéirons. Dis, qu’exiges-tu de nous?
Grâce!”

Et le roi dit: « Vois, nous sommes à genoux,
Spectre!”

Une vieille femme a la voix moins débile.

La figure qui tient l’épée est immobile,
Et se tait, comme si cet être souverain
Tenait conseil en lui sous son linceul d’airain;
Tout à coup, élevant sa voix grave et hautaine:

«Princes, votre façon d’être lâches me gêne.
Je suis homme et non spectre. Allons, debout! mon bras
Est le bras d’un vivant; il ne me convient pas
De faire une autre peur que celle où j’ai coutume.
Je suis Éviradnus.”

XVII

La massue

Comme sort de la brume
Un sévère sapin, vieilli dans l’Appenzell,
À l’heure où le matin au souffle universel
Passe, des bois profonds balayant la lisière,
Le preux ouvre son casque, et hors de la visière
Sa longue barbe blanche et tranquille apparaît.

Sigismond s’est dressé comme un dogue en arrêt;
Ladislas bondit, hurle, ébauche une huée,
Grince des dents et rit, et, comme la nuée
Résume en un éclair le gouffre pluvieux,
Toute sa rage éclate en ce cri: C’est un vieux!
Le grand chevalier dit, regardant l’un et l’autre:
«Rois, un vieux de mon temps vaut deux jeunes du vôtre.
Je vous défie à mort, laissant à votre choix
D’attaquer l’un sans l’autre ou tous deux à la fois;
Prenez au tas quelque arme ici qui vous convienne;
Vous êtes sans cuirasse et je quitte la mienne;
Car le châtiment doit lui-même être correct.”

Éviradnus n’a plus que sa veste d’Utrecht.

Pendant que, grave et froid, il déboucle sa chape,
Ladislas, furtif, prend un couteau sur la nappe,
Se déchausse, et, rapide et bras levé, pieds nus,
Il se glisse en rampant derrière Éviradnus;
Mais Éviradnus sent qu’on l’attaque en arrière,
Se tourne, empoigne et tord la lame meurtrière,

Et sa main colossale étreint comme un étau
Le cou de Ladislas, qui lâche le couteau:
Dans l’œil du nain royal on voit la mort paraître.

«Je devrais te couper les quatre membres, traître,
Et te laisser ramper sur tes moignons sanglants.
Tiens, dit Éviradnus, meurs vite!”

Et sur ses flancs
Le roi s’affaise, et, blême et l’œil hors de l’orbite,
Sans un cri, tant la mort formidable est subite,
Il expire.

L’un meurt, mais l’autre s’est dressé.
Le preux, en délaçant sa cuirasse, a posé
Sur un banc son épée, et Sigismond l’a prise.

Le jeune homme effrayant rit de la barbe grise;
L’épée au poing, joyeux, assassin rayonnant,
Croisant les bras, il crie: « À mon tour maintenant!”
Et les noirs chevaliers, juges de cette lice,
Peuvent voir, à deux pas du fatal précipice,
Près de Mahaud, qui semble un corps inanimé,
Éviradnus sans arme et Sigismond armé.
Le gouffre attend. Il faut que l’un des deux y tombe.

«Voyons un peu sur qui va se fermer la tombe,
Dit Sigismond. C’est toi le mort! c’est toi le chien!”

Le moment est funèbre; Éviradnus sent bien
Qu’avant qu’il ait choisi dans quelque armure un glaive,
Il aura dans les reins la pointe qui se lève;
Que faire? Tout à coup sur Ladislas gisant
Son œil tombe; il sourit terrible, et, se baissant
De l’air d’un lion pris qui trouve son issue:
«Hé! dit-il, je n’ai pas besoin d’autre massue!”
Et, prenant aux talons le cadavre du roi,

Il marche à l’empereur, qui chancelle d’effroi;
Il brandit le roi mort comme une arme, il en joue,
Il tient dans ses deux poings les deux pieds, et secoue
Au-dessus de sa tête, en murmurant: Tout beau!
Cette espèce de fronde horrible du tombeau,
Dont le corps est la corde et la tête la pierre.
Le cadavre éperdu se renverse en arrière,
Et les bras disloqués font des gestes hideux.

Lui, crie: « Arrangez-vous, princes, entre vous deux.
Si l’enfer s’éteignait, dans l’ombre universelle,
On le rallumerait, certe, avec l’étincelle
Qu’on peut tirer d’un roi heurtant un empereur.”

Sigismond, sous ce mort qui plane, ivre d’horreur,
Recule, sans la voir, vers la lugubre trappe;
Soudain le mort s’abat et le cadavre frappe… —
Éviradnus est seul. Et l’on entend le bruit
De deux spectres tombant ensemble dans la nuit.
Le preux se courbe au seuil du puits, son œil y plonge,
Et, calme, il dit tout bas, comme parlant en songe:
«C’est bien! disparaissez, le tigre et le chacal!”

XVIII

Le jour reparaît

Il reporte Mahaud sur le fauteuil ducal,
Et, de peur qu’au réveil elle ne s’inquiète,
Il referme sans bruit l’infernale oubliette;
Puis remet tout en ordre autour de lui, disant:

«La chose n’a pas fait une goutte de sang;
C’est mieux.”

Mais, tout à coup, la cloche au loin éclate;
Les monts gris sont bordés d’un long fil écarlate;
Et voici que, portant des branches de genêt,
Le peuple vient chercher sa dame; l’aube naît.
Les hameaux sont en branle, on accourt, et, vermeille,
Mahaud, en même temps que l’aurore, s’éveille;
Elle pense rêver, et croit que le brouillard
A pris ces jeunes gens pour en faire un vieillard,
Et les cherche des yeux, les regrettant peut-être;
Éviradnus salue, et le vieux vaillant maître,
S’approchant d’elle avec un doux sourire ami:
«Madame, lui dit-il, avez-vous bien dormi?”

VI. Les Trônes d’Orient

Zim-Zizimi

Zim-Zizimi, soudan d’Égypte, commandeur
Des croyants, padischah qui dépasse en grandeur
Le césar d’Allemagne et le sultan d’Asie,
Maître que la splendeur énorme rassasie,
Songe: c’est le moment de son festin du soir;
Toute la table fume ainsi qu’un encensoir;
Le banquet est dressé dans la plus haute crypte
D’un grand palais bâti par les vieux rois d’Égypte;
Les plafonds sont dorés et les piliers sont peints;
Les buffets sont chargés de viandes et de pains,
Et de tout ce que peut rêver la faim humaine;
Un roi mange en un jour plus qu’en une semaine
Le peuple d’Ispahan, de Byzance et de Tyr;
Et c’est l’art des valets que de faire aboutir
La mamelle du monde à la bouche d’un homme;
Tous les mets qu’on choisit, tous les vins qu’on renomme,
Sont là, car le sultan Zizimi boit du vin;
Il rit du livre austère et du texte divin
Que le derviche triste, humble et pâle, vénère;
L’homme sobre est souvent cruel, et, d’ordinaire,
L’économe de vin est prodigue de sang;
Mais Zim est à la fois ivrogne et malfaisant.

Ce qui n’empêche pas qu’il ne soit plein de gloire.
Il règne; il a soumis la vieille Afrique noire;
Il règne par le sang, la guerre et l’échafaud;
Il tient l’Asie ainsi qu’il tient l’Afrique; il faut
Que celui qui veut fuir son empire, s’exile
Au nord, en Thrace, au sud, jusqu’au fleuve Baxile;
Toujours vainqueur, fatal, fauve, il a pour vassaux
Les batailles, les camps, les clairons, les assauts;
L’aigle en l’apercevant crie et fuit dans les roches.

Les rajahs de Mysore et d’Agra sont ses proches,
Ainsi qu’Omar qui dit: « Grâce à moi, Dieu vaincra.”
Son oncle est Hayraddin, sultan de Bassora,
Les grands cheiks du désert sont tous de sa famille,
Le roi d’Oude est son frère, et l’épée est sa fille.

Il a dompté Bagdad, Trébizonde, et Mossul,
Que conquit le premier Duilius, ce consul
Qui marchait précédé de flûtes tibicines;
Il a soumis Gophna, les forêts abyssines,
L’Arabie, où l’aurore a d’immenses rougeurs,
Et l’Hedjaz, où, le soir, les tremblants voyageurs,
De la nuit autour d’eux sentant rôder les bêtes,
Allument de grands feux, tiennent leurs armes prêtes,
Et se brûlent un doigt pour ne pas s’endormir;
Mascate et son imam, la Mecque et son émir,
Le Liban, le Caucase et l’Atlas font partie
De l’ombre de son trône, ainsi que la Scythie,
Et l’eau de Nagaïn et le sable d’Ophir,
Et le Sahara fauve, où l’oiseau vert asfir,
Vient becqueter la mouche aux pieds des dromadaires;
Pareils à des vautours forcés de changer d’aires,
Devant lui, vingt sultans, reculant hérissés,
Se sont dans la fournaise africaine enfoncés;
Quand il étend son sceptre, il touche aux âpres zones
Où luit la nudité des fières amazones;
En Grèce, il fait lutter chrétiens contre chrétiens,
Les chiens contre les porcs, les porcs contre les chiens;
Tout le craint; et sa tête est de loin saluée
Par le lama debout dans la sainte nuée,
Et son nom fait pâlir parmi les Kassburdars
Le sophi devant qui flottent sept étendards;
Il règne; et le morceau qu’il coupe de la terre
S’agrandit chaque jour sous son noir cimeterre;
Il foule les cités, les achète, les vend,
Les dévore; à qui sont les hommes, Dieu vivant?
À lui, comme la paille est au bœuf dans l’étable.

*

Cependant, il s’ennuie. Il est seul à sa table,
Le trône ne pouvant avoir de conviés;
Grandeur, bonheur, les biens par la foule enviés,
L’alcôve où l’on s’endort, le sceptre où l’on s’appuie,
Il a tout; c’est pourquoi ce tout-puissant s’ennuie;
Ivre, il est triste.

Il vient d’épuiser les plaisirs;
Il a donné son pied à baiser aux vizirs;
Sa musique a joué les fanfares connues;
Des femmes ont dansé devant lui toutes nues;
Il s’est fait adorer par un tas prosterné
De cheiks et d’ulémas décrépits, étonné
Que la barbe fût blanche alors que l’âme est vile;
Il s’est fait amener, des prisons de la ville,
Deux voleurs qui se sont traînés à ses genoux,
Criant grâce, implorant l’homme maître de tous,
Agitant à leurs poings de pesantes ferrailles,
Et, curieux de voir s’échapper leurs entrailles,
Il leur a lentement lui-même ouvert le flanc;
Puis il a renvoyé ses esclaves, bâillant.

Zim regarde, en sa molle et hautaine attitude,
Cherchant à qui parler dans cette solitude.
*

Le trône où Zizimi s’accoude est soutenu
Par dix sphinx au front ceint de roses, au flanc nu;
Tous sont en marbre blanc; tous tiennent une lyre;
L’énigme dans leurs yeux semble presque sourire;
Chacun d’eux porte un mot sur sa tête sculpté,
Et ces dix mots sont: Gloire, Amour, Jeu, Volupté,
Santé, Bonheur, Beauté, Grandeur, Victoire, Joie.

Et le sultan s’écrie:

«Ô sphinx dont l’œil flamboie,
Je suis le Conquérant; mon nom est établi
Dans l’azur des cieux, hors de l’ombre et de l’oubli;
Et mon bras porte un tas de foudres qu’il secoue;
Mes exploits fulgurants passent comme une roue;
Je vis; je ne suis pas ce qu’on nomme un mortel;
Mon trône vieillissant se transforme en autel;
Quand le moment viendra que je quitte la terre,
Étant le jour, j’irai rentrer dans la lumière;
Dieu dira: « Du sultan je veux me rapprocher.”
L’aube prendra son astre et viendra me chercher.
L’homme m’adore avec des faces d’épouvante;
L’Orgueil est mon valet, la Gloire est ma servante;
Elle se tient debout quand Zizimi s’assied;
Je dédaigne et je hais les hommes; et mon pied
Sent le mou de la fange en marchant sur leurs nuques.
À défaut des humains, tous muets, tous eunuques,
Tenez-moi compagnie, ô sphinx qui m’entourez
Avec vos noms joyeux sur vos têtes dorées,
Désennuyez le roi redoutable qui tonne;
Qua ma splendeur en vous autour de moi rayonne;
Chantez-moi votre chant de gloire et de bonheur;
Ô trône triomphal dont je suis le seigneur,
Parle-moi! Parlez-moi, sphinx couronnés de roses!”

Alors les sphinx, avec la voix qui sort des choses,
Parlèrent: tels ces bruits qu’on entend en dormant.

*

LE PREMIER SPHINX

La reine Nitocris, près du clair firmament,
Habite le tombeau de la haute terrasse;
Elle est seule, elle est triste; elle songe à sa race,
À tous ces rois, terreur des Grecs et des Hébreux,
Durs, sanglants, et sortis de son flanc ténébreux;
Au milieu de l’azur son sépulcre est farouche;
Les oiseaux tombent morts quand leur aile le touche;
Et la reine est muette et les nuages font
Sur son royal silence un bruit sombre et profond.
Selon l’antique loi, nul vivant, s’il ne porte
Sur sa tête un corps mort, ne peut franchir la porte
Du tombeau, plein d’enfer et d’horreur pénétré.
La reine ouvre les yeux la nuit; le ciel sacré
Apparaît à la morte à travers les pilastres;
Son oeil sinistre et fixe importune les astres;
Et jusqu’à l’aube, autour de os de Nitocris,
Un flot de spectres passe avec de vagues cris.

LE DEUXIÈME SPHINX

Si grands que soient les rois, les pharaons, les mages
Qu’entoure une nuée éternelle d’hommages,
Personne n’est plus haut que Téglath-Phalasar.
Comme Dieu même, à qui l’étoile sert de char,
Il a son temple avec un prophète pour prêtre;
Ses yeux semblent de pourpre, étant les yeux du maître;
Tout tremble; et, sous son joug redouté, le héros
Tient les peuples courbés ainsi que des taureaux;
Pour les villes d’Assur que son pas met en cendre,
Il est ce que sera pour l’Asie Alexandre,
Il est ce que sera pour l’Europe Attila;
Il triomphe, il rayonne; et, pendant ce temps-là,

Sans savoir qu’à ses pieds toute la terre tombe,
Pour le mur qui sera la cloison de sa tombe,
Des potiers font sécher de la brique au soleil.

LE TROISIÈME SPHINX

Nemrod était un maître aux archanges pareil;
Son nom est sur Babel, la sublime masure;
Son sceptre altier couvrait l’espace qu’on mesure
De la mer du couchant à la mer du levant;
Baal le fit terrible à tout être vivant
Depuis le ciel sacré jusqu’à l’enfer immonde,
Ayant rempli ses mains de l’empire du monde.
Si l’on eût dit: « Nemrod mourra,” qui l’aurait cru?
Il vivait; maintenant cet homme a disparu.
Le désert est profond et le vent est sonore.

LE QUATRIÈME SPHINX

Chrem fut roi; sa statue était d’or; on ignore
La date de la fonte et le nom du fondeur;
Et nul ne pourrait dire à quelle profondeur
Ni dans quel sombre puits, ce pharaon sévère
Flotte, plongé dans l’huile, en son cercueil de verre.
Les rois triomphent, beaux, fiers, joyeux, courroucés,
Puissants, victorieux; alors Dieu dit: « Assez!”

Le temps, spectre debout sur tout ce qui s’écroule,
Tient et par moments tourne un sablier où coule
Une poudre qu’il a prise dans les tombeaux
Et ramassée aux plis des linceuls en lambeaux,
Et la cendre des morts mesure aux vivants l’heure.

Rois, le sablier tremble et la clepsydre pleure;
Pourquoi? le savez-vous, rois? C’est que chacun d’eux
Voit au delà de vous, ô princes hasardeux,
Le dedans du sépulcre et de la catacombe,
Et la forme que prend le trône dans la tombe.

LE CINQUIÈME SPHINX

Les quatre conquérants de l’Asie étaient grands;
Leurs colères roulaient ainsi que des torrents;
Quand ils marchaient, la terre oscillait sur son axe;
Thuras tenait le Phase, Ochus avait L’Araxe,
Gour la Perse, et le roi fatal, Phul-Bélézys,
Sur l’Inde monstrueuse et triste était assis;
Quand Cyrus les lia tous quatre à son quadrige,
L’Euphrate eut peur; Ninive, en voyant ce prodige,
Disait: « Quel est ce char étrange et radieux
Que traîne un formidable attelage de dieux?”
Ainsi parlait le peuple, ainsi parlait l’armée;
Tout s’est évanoui, puisque tout est fumée.

LE SIXIÈME SPHINX

Cambyse ne fait plus un mouvement; il dort;
Il dort sans même voir qu’il pourrit; il est mort.
Tant que vivent les rois, la foule est à plat ventre;
On les contemple, on trouve admirable leur antre;
Mais, sitôt qu’ils sont morts, ils deviennent hideux,
Et n’ont plus que les vers pour ramper autour d’eux.
Oh! de Troie à Memphis, et d’Ecbatane à Tarse,
La grande catastrophe éternelle est éparse
Avec Pyrrhus le grand, avec Psamméticus!

Les rois vainqueurs sont morts plus que les rois vaincus;
Car la mort rit, et fait, quand sur l’homme elle monte,
Plus de nuit sur la gloire, hélas! que sur la honte.

LE SEPTIÈME SPHINX

La tombe où l’on a mis Bélus croule au désert;
Ruine, elle a perdu son mur de granit vert,
Et sa coupole, sœur du ciel, splendide et ronde;
Le pâtre y vient choisir des pierres pour sa fronde;
Celui qui, le soir, passe en ce lugubre champ
Entend le bruit que fait le chacal en mâchant;
L’ombre en ce lieu s’amasse et la nuit est là toute;
Le voyageur, tâtant de son bâtant la voûte,
Crie en vain: « Est-ce ici qu’était le dieu Bélus?”
Le sépulcre est si vieux qu’il ne s’en souvient plus.

LE HUITIÈME SPHINX

Aménophis, Ephrée et Cherbron sont funèbres;
Rhamsès est devenu tout noir dans les ténèbres;
Les satrapes s’en vont dans l’ombre, ils s’en vont tous;
L’ombre n’a pas besoin de clefs ni de verrous,
L’ombre est forte. La mort est la grande geôlière;
Elle manie un dieu d’une main familière,
Et l’enferme; les rois sont ses noirs prisonniers;
Elle tient les premiers, elle tient les derniers;
Dans une gaîne étroite elle a roidi leurs membres;
Elle les a couchés dans de lugubres chambres
Entre des murs bâtis de cailloux et de chaux;
Et, pour qu’ils restent seuls dans ces blêmes cachots,
Méditant sur leurs sceptre et sur leur aventure,
Elle a pris de la terre et bouché l’ouverture.

LE NEUVIÈME SPHINX

Passants, quelqu’un veut-il voir Cléopâtre au lit?
Venez; l’alcôve est morne, une brume l’emplit;
Cléopâtre est couchée à jamais; cette femme
Fut l’éblouissement de l’Asie et la flamme
Que tout le genre humain avait dans le regard;
Quand elle disparut, le monde fut hagard;
Ses dents étaient de perle et sa bouche était d’ambre;
Les rois mouraient d’amour en entrant dans sa chambre;
Pour elle Ephractæus soumit l’Atlas, Sapor
Vint d’Osymandias saisir le cercle d’or,
Mamylos conquit Suse et Tentyris détruite,
Et Palmyre, et pour elle Antoine prit la fuite;
Entre elle et l’univers qui s’offraient à la fois
Il hésita, lâchant le monde de son choix.
Cléopâtre égalait les Junons éternelles;
Une chaîne sortait de ses vagues prunelles;
Ô tremblant cœur humain, si jamais tu vibras,
C’est dans l’étreinte altière et douce de ses bras;
Son nom seul enivrait; Strophus n’osait l’écrire;
La terre s’éclairait de son divin sourire,
À force de lumière et d’amour, effrayant;
Son corps semblait mêlé d’azur; en la voyant,
Vénus, le soir, rentrait jalouse sous la nue;
Cléopâtre embaumait l’Égypte; toute nue,
Elle brûlait les yeux ainsi que le soleil;
Les roses enviaient l’ongle de son orteil;
Ô vivants, allez voir sa tombe souveraine;
Fière, elle était déesse et daignait être reine;
L’amour prenait pour arc sa lèvre aux coins moqueurs;
Sa beauté rendait fous les fronts, les sens, les cœurs,
Et plus que les lions rugissants était forte;
Mais bouchez-vous le nez si vous passez la porte.

LE DIXIÈME SPHINX

Que fait Sennachérib, roi plus grand que le sort?
Le roi Sennachérib fait ceci qu'il est mort.
Que fait Gad? Il est mort. Que fait Sardanapale?
Il est mort.

*

Le sultan écoutait, morne et pâle.
«Voilà de sombres voix, dit-il; et je ferai
Dès demain jeter bas ce palais effaré
Où le démon répond quand on s'adresse aux anges.”

Il menaça du poing les sphinx aux yeux étranges.

*

Et son regard tomba sur la coupe où brillait
Le vin semé de sauge et de feuilles d'œillet.

«Ah! toi, tu sais calmer ma tête fatiguée;
Viens, ma coupe, dit-il. Ris, parle-moi, sois gaie.
Chasse de mon esprit ces nuages hideux.
Moi, le pouvoir, et toi, le vin, causons tous deux.”

La coupe étincelante, embaumée et fleurie,
Lui dit:

«Phur, roi soleil, avait Alexandrie;

Il levait au-dessus de la mer son cimier;
Il tirait de son temple orageux, le premier
D’Afrique après Carthage et du monde après Rome,
Des soldats plus nombreux que les rêves que l’homme
Voit dans la transparence obscure du sommeil;
Mais à quoi bon avoir été l’homme soleil?
Puisqu’on est le néant, que sert d’être le maître?
Que sert d’être calife ou mage? À quoi bon être
Un de ces pharaons, ébauches de sultans,
Qui, dans la profondeur ténébreuse des temps,
Jettent la lueur vague et sombre de leurs mitres?
À quoi bon être Arsès, Darius, Armamithres,
Cyaxare, Séthos, Dardanus, Dercylas,
Xercès, Nabonassar, Asar-addon, hélas!
On a des légions qu’à la guerre on exerce;
On est Antiochus, Chosroès, Artaxerce,
Sésostris, Annibal, Astyage, Sylla,
Achille, Omar, César, on meurt, sachez cela.
Ils étaient dans le bruit, ils sont dans le silence.
Vivants, quand le trépas sur un de vous s’élance,
Tout homme, quel qu’il soit, meurt tremblant; mais le roi
Du haut de plus d’orgueil tombe dans plus d’effroi;
Cet esprit plus noir trouve un juge plus farouche;
Pendant que l’âme fuit, le cadavre se couche,
Et se sent sous la terre opprimer et chercher
Par la griffe de l’arbre et le poids du rocher;
L’orfraie à son côté se tapit défiante;
Qu’est-ce qu’un sultan mort? Les taupes font leur fiente
Dans de la cendre à qui l’empire fut donné,
Et dans des ossements qui jadis ont régné;
Et les tombeaux des rois sont des trous à panthère.”

Zim, furieux, brisa la coupe contre terre.

*

Pour éclairer la salle, on avait apporté
Au centre de la table un flambeau d'or sculpté
À Sumatra, pays des orfèvres célèbres;
Cette lampe splendide étoilait les ténèbres.

Zim lui parla:

«Voilà de la lumière au moins!
Les sphinx sont de la nuit les funèbres témoins;
La coupe, étant toujours ivre, est à peu près folle;
Mais, toi, flambeau, tu vis dans ta claire auréole;
Tu jettes aux banquets un regard souriant;
Ô lampe, où tu parais tu fais un orient;
Quand tu parles, ta voix doit être un chant d'aurore;
Dis-moi quelque chanson divine que j'ignore,
Parle-moi, ravis-moi, lampe du paradis!
Que la coupe et les sphinx monstrueux soient maudits;
Car les sphinx ont l'œil faux, la coupe a le vin traître."

Et la lampe parla sur cet ordre du maître:

«Après avoir eu Tyr, Babylone, Ilion,
Et pris Delphe à Thésée et l'Athos au lion,
Conquis Thèbe, et soumis le Gange tributaire,
Ninus le fratricide est perdu sous la terre;
Il est muré, selon le rite assyrien,
Dans un trou formidable où l'on ne voit plus rien.
Où? Qui le sait? Les puits sont noirs, la terre est creuse.
L'homme est devenu spectre. À travers l'ombre affreuse,
Si le regard de ceux qui sont vivants pouvait
Percer jusqu'au lit triste au lugubre chevet
Où gît ce roi, jadis éclair dans la tempête,
On verrait, à côté de ce qui fut sa tête,
Un vase de grès rouge, un doigt de marbre blanc;
Adam le trouverait à Caïn ressemblant.
La vipère frémit quand elle s'aventure

Jusqu’à cette effrayante et sombre pourriture;
Il est gisant; il dort; peut-être qu’il attend.

Par moments, la Mort vient dans sa tombe, apportant
Une cruche et du pain qu’elle dépose à terre;
Elle pousse du pied le dormeur solitaire,
Et lui dit: « Me voici, Ninus. Réveille-toi.
Je t’apporte à manger. Tu dois avoir faim, roi.
Prends. — Je n’ai plus de mains, répond le roi farouche.
— Allons, mange.” Et Ninus dit: « Je n’ai plus de bouche.”
Et la Mort, lui montrant le pain, dit: « Fils des dieux,
Vois ce pain.” Et Ninus répond: « Je n’ai plus d’yeux.”

*

Zim se dressa terrible, et, sur les dalles sombres
Que le festin couvrait de ses joyeux décombres,
Jeta la lampe d’or sculptée à Sumatra.
La lampe s’éteignit.

Alors la Nuit entra;
Et Zim se trouva seul avec elle; la salle,
Comme en une fumée obscure et colossale,
S’effaça; Zim tremblait, sans gardes, sans soutiens:
La Nuit lui prit la main dans l’ombre, et lui dit: Viens.

1453
Les Turcs, devant Constantinople,
Virent un géant chevalier
À l’écu d’or et de sinople,
Suivi d’un lion familier.

Mahomet Deux, sous les murailles,
Lui cria: « Qu’es-tu? — Le géant
Dit: « Je m’appelle Funérailles,

Et toi, tu t’appelles Néant.

Sultan Mourad

I

Mourad, fils du sultan Bajazet, fut un homme
Glorieux, plus qu’aucun des Tibères de Rome;
Dans son sérail veillaient des lions accroupis,
Et Mourad en couvrit de meurtres les tapis;
On y voyait blanchir des os entre les dalles;
Un long fleuve de sang de dessous ses sandales
Sortait, et s’épandait sur la terre, inondant
L’Orient, et fumant dans l’ombre à l’Occident;
Il fit un tel carnage avec son cimeterre
Que son cheval semblait au monde une panthère;
Sous lui Smyrne et Tunis, qui regretta ses beys,
Furent comme des corps qui pendent aux gibets;
Il fut sublime; il prit, mêlant la force aux ruses,
Le Caucase aux Kirghis et le Liban aux Druses;
Il fit, après l’assaut, pendre les magistrats
D’Éphèse, rouer vifs les prêtres de Patras;
Grâce à Mourad, suivi des victoires rampantes,
Le vautour essuyait son bec fauve aux charpentes
Du temple de Thésée encor pleine de clous;
Grâce à lui, l’on voyait dans Athènes des loups,
Et la ronce couvrait de sa verte tunique
Tous ces vieux pans de murs écroulés, Salonique,
Corinthe, Argos, Varna, Tyr, Didymotichos,
Où l’on n’entendait plus parler que les échos;
Mourad fut saint; il fit étrangler ses huit frères;
Comme les deux derniers, petits, cherchaient leurs mères
Et s’enfuyaient, avant de les faire mourir,
Tout autour de la chambre il les laissa courir;
Mourad, parmi la foule invitée à ses fêtes,
Passait, le cangiar à la main, et les têtes

S’envolaient de son sabre ainsi que des oiseaux;
Mourad, qui ruina Delphe, Ancyre et Naxos,
Comme on cueille un fruit mûr, tuait une province;
Il anéantissait le peuple avec le prince,
Les temples et les dieux, les rois et les donjons;
L’eau n’a pas plus d’essaims d’insectes dans ses joncs
Qu’il n’avait de rois morts et de spectres épiques
Volant autour de lui dans les forêts de piques;
Mourad, fils étoilé des sultans triomphants,
Ouvrit, l’un après l’autre et vivants, douze enfants
Pour trouver dans leur ventre une pomme volée;
Mourad fut magnanime; il détruisit Élée,
Mégare et Famagouste avec l’aide d’Allah;
Il effaça de terre Agrigente; il brûla
Fiume et Rhode, voulant avoir des femmes blanches;
Il fit scier son oncle Achmet entre deux planches,
De cèdre, afin de faire honneur à ce vieillard;
Mourad fut sage et fort; son père mourut tard,
Mourad l’aida; ce père avait laissé vingt femmes,
Filles d’Europe ayant dans leurs regards des âmes,
Ou filles de Tiflis au sein blanc, au teint clair;
Sultan Mourad jeta ces femmes à la mer
Dans des sacs convulsifs que la houle profonde
Emporta, se tordant confusément sous l’onde;
Mourad les fit noyer toutes; ce fut sa loi;
Et, quand quelque santon lui demandait pourquoi,
Il donnait pour raison: « C’est qu’elles étaient grosses.”
D’Aden et d’Erzeroum il fit de larges fosses,
Un charnier de Modon vaincue, et trois amas
De cadavres d’Alep, de Brousse et de Damas;
Un jour, tirant de l’arc, il prit son fils pour cible,
Et le tua; Mourad sultan fut invincible:
Vlad, boyard de Tarvis, appelé Belzébuth,
Refuse de payer au sultan le tribut,
Prend l’ambassade turque et la fait périr toute
Sur trente pals, plantés aux deux bords d’une route;
Mourad accourt, brûlant moissons, granges, greniers;

Bat le boyard, lui fait vingt mille prisonniers,
Puis, autour de l’immense et noir champ de bataille,
Bâtit un large mur tout en pierre de taille,
Et fait dans les créneaux, pleins d’affreux cris plaintifs,
Maçonner et murer les vingt mille captifs,
Laissant des trous par où l’on voit leurs yeux dans l’ombre;
Et part, après avoir écrit sur le mur sombre:
«Mourad, tailleur de pierre, à Vlad, planteur de pieux.”
Mourad était croyant, Mourad était pieux;
Il brûla cent couvents de chrétiens en Eubée,
Où par hasard sa foudre était un jour tombée;
Mourad fut quarante ans l’éclatant meurtrier
Sabrant le monde, ayant Dieu sous son étrier;
Il eut le Rhamseïon et le Généralife;
Il fut le padischah, l’empereur, le calife,
Et les prêtres disaient: « Allah! Mourad est grand.”

II

Législateur horrible et pire conquérant,
N’ayant autour de lui que des troupeaux infâmes,
De la foule, de l’homme en poussière, des âmes
D’où des langues sortaient pour lui lécher les pieds,
Loué pour ses forfaits toujours inexpiés,
Flatté par ses vaincus et baisé par ses proies,
Il vivait dans l’encens, dans l’orgueil, dans les joies,
Avec l’immense ennui du méchant adoré.

Il était le faucheur, la terre était le pré.

III

Un jour, comme il passait à pied dans une rue
À Bagdad, tête auguste au vil peuple apparue,
À l’heure où les maisons, les arbres et les blés
Jettent sur les chemins de soleil accablés
Leur frange d’ombre au bord d’un tapis de lumière,
Il vit, à quelques pas du seuil d’une chaumière,
Gisant à terre, un porc fétide qu’un boucher
Venait de saigner vif avant de l’écorcher;
Cette bête râlait devant cette masure;
Son cou s’ouvrait, béant d’une affreuse blessure;
Le soleil de midi brûlait l’agonisant;
Dans la plaie implacable et sombre dont le sang
Faisait un lac fumant à la porte du bouge,
Chacun de ses rayons entrait comme un fer rouge;
Comme s’ils accouraient à l’appel du soleil,
Cent moustiques suçaient la plaie au bord vermeil;
Comme autour de leur nid voltigent les colombes,
Ils allaient et venaient, parasites des tombes,
Les pattes dans le sang, l’aile dans le rayon;
Car la mort, l’agonie et la corruption,
Son ici-bas le seul mystérieux désastre
Où la mouche travaille en même temps que l’astre;
Le porc ne pouvait faire un mouvement, livré
Au féroce soleil, des mouches dévoré;
On voyait tressaillir l’effroyable coupure;
Tous les passants fuyaient loin de la bête impure;
Qui donc eût pitié de ce malheur hideux?
Le porc et le sultan étaient seuls tous les deux;
L’un torturé, mourant, maudit, infect, immonde;
L’autre empereur, puissant, vainqueur, maître du monde,
Triomphant aussi haut que l’homme peut monter,
Comme si le destin eût voulu confronter
Les deux extrémités sinistres des ténèbres.
Le porc, dont un frisson agitait les vertèbres,
Râlait, triste, épuisé, morne; et le padischah
De cet être difforme et sanglant s’approcha,

Comme on s’arrête au bord d’un gouffre qui se creuse;
Mourad pencha son front vers la bête lépreuse,
Puis la poussa du pied dans l’ombre du chemin,
Et de ce même geste énorme et surhumain
Dont il chassait les rois, Mourad chassa les mouches.
Le porc mourant rouvrit ses paupières farouches,
Regarda d’un regard ineffable, un moment,
L’homme qui l’assistait dans son accablement;
Puis son oeil se perdit dans l’immense mystère;
Il expira.

IV

Le jour où ceci sur la terre
S’accomplissait, voici ce que voyait le ciel:

C’était l’endroit calme, apaisé, solennel,
Où luit l’astre idéal sous l’idéal nuage,
Au delà de la vie, et de l’heure, et de l’âge,
Hors de ce qu’on appelle espace, et des contours
Des songes qu’ici-bas nous nommons nuits et jours;
Lieu d’évidence où l’âme enfin peut voir les causes,
Où, voyant le revers inattendu des choses,
On comprend, et l’on dit: « C’est bien!” l’autre côté
De la chimère sombre étant la vérité;
Lieu blanc, chaste, où le mal s’évanouit et sombre.
L’étoile en cet azur semble une goutte d’ombre.

Ce qui rayonne là, ce n’est pas un vain jour
Qui naît et meurt, riant et pleurant tour à tour,
Jaillissant, puis rentrant dans la noirceur première;
Et, comme notre aurore, un sanglot de lumière;
C’est un grand jour divin, regardé dans les cieux
Par les soleils, comme est le nôtre par les yeux;

Jour pur, expliquant tout, quoiqu'il soit le problème;
Jour qui terrifierait, s'il n'était l'espoir même,
De toute l'étendue éclairant l'épaisseur,
Foudre par l'épouvante, aube par la douceur.
Là, toutes les beautés tonnent épanouies;
Là frissonnent en paix les lueurs inouïes;
Là, les ressuscités ouvrent leur œil béni
Au resplendissement de l'éclair infini;
Là, les vastes rayons passent comme des ondes.

C'était sur le sommet du Sinaï des mondes;
C'était là.

Le nuage auguste, par moments,
Se fendait, et jetait des éblouissements.
Toute la profondeur entourait cette cime.

On distinguait, avec un tremblement sublime,
Quelqu'un d'inexprimable au fond de la clarté.

Et tout frémissait, tout, l'aube et l'obscurité,
Les anges, les soleils, et les êtres suprêmes,
Devant un vague front couvert de diadèmes.
Dieu méditait.

Celui qui crée et qui sourit,
Celui qu'en bégayant nous appelons Esprit,
Bonté, Force, Équité, Perfection, Sagesse,
Regarde devant lui, toujours, sans fin, sans cesse,
Fuir les siècles ainsi que des mouches d'été.
Car il est éternel avec tranquillité.

Et dans l'ombre hurlait tout un gouffre: la terre.

En bas, sous une brume épaisse, cette sphère
Rampait, monde lugubre où les pâles humains
Passaient et s'écroulaient et se tordaient les mains;

On apercevait l’Inde et le Nil, des mêlées
D’exterminations et de villes brûlées,
Et des champs ravagés et des clairons soufflant,
Et l’Europe livide ayant un glaive au flanc;
Des vapeurs de tombeau, des lueurs de repaire;
Cinq frères tout sanglants; l’oncle, le fils, le père;
Des hommes dans des murs, vivants, quoique pourris;
Des têtes voletant, mornes chauves-souris,
Autour d’un sabre nu, fécond en funérailles;
Des enfants éventrés soutenant leurs entrailles;
Et de larges bûchers fumaient, et des tronçons
D’êtres sciés en deux rampaient dans les tisons;
Et le vaste étouffeur des plaintes et des râles,
L’Océan, échouait dans les nuages pâles
D’affreux sacs noirs faisant des gestes effrayants;
Et ce chaos de fronts hagards, de pas fuyants,
D’yeux en pleurs, d’ossements, de larves, de décombres,
Ce brumeux tourbillon de spectres, et ces ombres
Secouant des linceuls, et tous ces morts, saignant
Au loin, d’un continent à l’autre continent,
Pendant aux pals, cloués aux croix, nus sur les claies,
Criaient, montrant leurs fers, leur sang, leurs maux, leurs plaies:

«C’est Mourad! c’est Mourad! justice, ô Dieu vivant!”

À ce cri, qu’apportait de toutes parts le vent,
Les tonnerres jetaient des grondements étranges,
Des flamboiements passaient sur les faces des anges,
Les grilles de l’enfer s’empourpraient, le courroux
En faisait remuer d’eux-mêmes les verrous,
Et l’on voyait sortir de l’abîme insondable
Un sinistre main qui s’ouvrait formidable;
«Justice!” répétait l’ombre; et le châtiment
Au fond de l’infini se dressait lentement.
Soudain, du plus profond des nuits, sur la nuée,
Une bête difforme, affreuse, exténuée,
Un être abject et sombre, un pourceau, s’éleva,

Ouvrant un œil sanglant qui cherchait Jéhovah;
La nuée apporta le porc dans la lumière,
À l’endroit même où luit l’unique sanctuaire,
Le saint des saints, jamais décru, jamais accru;
Et le porc murmura: « Grâce! il m’a secouru.”
Le pourceau misérable et Dieu se regardèrent.

Alors, selon des lois que hâtent ou modèrent
Les volontés de l’Être effrayant qui construit
Dans les ténèbres l’aube et dans le jour la nuit,
On vit, dans le brouillard où rien n’a plus de forme,
Vaguement apparaître une balance énorme;
Cette balance vint d’elle-même, à travers
Tous les enfers béants, tous les cieux entr’ouverts,
Se placer sous la foule immense des victimes;
Au-dessus du silence horrible des abîmes,
Sous l’œil du seul vivant, du seul vrai, du seul grand,
Terrible, elle oscillait, et portait, s’éclairant
D’un jour mystérieux plus profond que le nôtre,
Dans un plateau le monde et le pourceau dans l’autre.

Du côté du pourceau la balance pencha.

V

Mourad, le haut calife et l’altier padischah,
En sortant de la rue où les gens de la ville
L’avaient pu voir toucher à cette bête vile,
Fut le soir même pris d’une fièvre, et mourut.

Le tombeau des soudans, bâti de jaspe brut,
Couvert d’orfèvrerie, auguste, et dont l’entrée
Semble l’intérieur d’une bête éventrée
Qui serait tout en or et tout en diamants,

Ce monument, superbe entre les monuments,
Qui hérisse, au-dessus d’un mur de briques sèches,
Son faîte plein de tours comme un carquois de flèches,
Ce turbé que Bagdad montre encore aujourd’hui,
Reçut le sultan mort et se ferma sur lui.

Quand il fut là, gisant et couché sous la pierre,
Mourad ouvrit les yeux et vit une lumière;
Sans qu’on pût distinguer l’astre ni le flambeau,
Un éblouissement remplissait son tombeau;
Une aube s’y levait, prodigieuse et douce;
Et sa prunelle éteinte eut l’étrange secousse
D’une porte de jour qui s’ouvre dans la nuit;
Il aperçut l’échelle immense qui conduit
Les actions de l’homme à l’œil qui voit les âmes;
Et les clartés étaient des roses et des flammes;
Et Mourad entendit une voix qui disait:

«Mourad, neveu d’Achmet et fils de Bajazet,
Tu semblais à jamais perdu; ton âme infime
N’était plus qu’un ulcère et ton destin qu’un crime;
Tu sombrais parmi ceux que le mal submergea;
Déjà Satan était visible en toi; déjà,
Sans t’en douter, promis aux tourbillons funèbres
Des spectres sous la voûte infâme des ténèbres,
Tu portais sur ton dos les ailes de la nuit;
De ton pas sépulcral l’enfer guettait le bruit;
Autour de toi montait, par ton crime attirée,
L’obscurité du gouffre ainsi qu’une marée;
Tu penchais sur l’abîme où l’homme est châtié;
Mais tu viens d’avoir, monstre, un éclair de pitié;
Une lueur suprême et désintéressée
A, comme à ton insu, traversé ta pensée,
Et je t’ai fait mourir dans ton bon mouvement;
Il suffit, pour sauver même l’homme inclément,
Même le plus sanglant des bourreaux et des maîtres,
Du moindre des bienfaits sur le dernier des êtres;

Un seul instant d’amour rouvre l’Éden fermé;
Un pourceau secouru pèse un monde opprimé;
Viens! le ciel s’offre, avec ses étoiles sans nombre.
En frémissant de joie, à l’évadé de l’ombre!
Viens! tu fus bon un jour, sois à jamais heureux.
Entre, transfiguré! tes crimes ténébreux,
Ô roi, derrière toi s’effacent dans les gloires;
Tourne la tête, et vois blanchir tes ailes noires.”

VII. L’Italie – Ratbert

LES CONSEILLERS PROBES ET LIBRES

Ratbert, fils de Rodolphe et petit-fils de Charles,
Qui se dit empereur et qui n’est que roi d’Arles,
Vêtu de son habit de patrice romain,
Et la lance du grand saint Maurice à la main,
Est assis au milieu de la place d’Ancône.
Sa couronne est l’armet de Didier, et son trône
Est le fauteuil de fer de Henri l’Oiseleur.
Sont présents cent barons et chevaliers, la fleur
Du grand arbre héraldique et généalogique
Que ce sol noir nourrit de sa sève tragique.
Spinola, qui prit Suze et qui la ruina,
Jean de Carrara, Pons, Sixte Malaspina
Au lieu de pique ayant la longue épine noire;
Ugo, qui fit noyer ses sœurs dans leur baignoire,
Regardent dans leurs rangs entrer avec dédain
Guy, sieur de Pardiac et de l’Ile-en-Jourdain;
Guy, parmi tous ces gens de lustre et de naissance,
N’ayant encor pour lui que le sac de Vicence,
Et, du reste, n’étant qu’un batteur de pavé.
D’origine quelconque et de sang peu prouvé.
L’exarque Sapaudus que le saint-siége envoie,
Sénèque, marquis d’Ast; Bos, comte de Savoie;
Le tyran de Massa, le sombre Albert Cibo
Que le marbre aujourd’hui fait blanc sur son tombeau;
Ranuce, caporal de la ville d’Anduze;
Foulque, ayant pour cimier la tête de Méduse;
Marc, ayant pour devise: Imperium fit jus;
Entourent Afranus, évêque de Fréjus.
Là sont Farnèse, Ursin, Cosme à l’âme avilie;
Puis les quatre marquis souverains d’Italie;
L’archevêque d’Urbin, Jean, bâtard de Rodez,
Alonze de Silva, ce duc dont les cadets

Sont rois, ayant conquis l’Algarve portugaise,
Et Visconti, seigneur de Milan, et Borghèse,
Et l’homme, entre tous faux, glissant, habile, ingrat,
Avellan, duc de Tyr et sieur de Montferrat;
Près d’eux Prendiparte, capitaine de Sienne;
Pic, fils d’un astrologue et d’une égyptienne;
Alde Aldobrandini; Guiscard, sieur de Beaujeu,
Et le gonfalonier du saint-siége et de Dieu,
Gandolfe, à qui, plus tard, le pape Urbain fit faire
Une statue équestre en l’église Saint-Pierre,
Complimentent Martin de la Scala, le roi
De Vérone, et le roi de Tarente, Geoffroy;
À quelques pas se tient Falco, comte d’Athène,
Fils du vieux Muzzufer, le rude capitaine
Dont les clairons semblaient des bouches d’aquilon;
De plus, deux petits rois, Agrippin et Gilon.

Tous jeunes, beaux, heureux, pleins de joie et farouches.

Les seigneurs vont aux rois ainsi qu’au miel les mouches.
Tous sont venus, des burgs, des châteaux, des manoirs;
Et la place autour d’eux est déserte; et cent noirs,
Tous nus, et cent piquiers aux armures persanes
En barrent chaque rue avec leurs pertuisanes.
Geoffroy, Martin, Gilon, l’enfant Agrippin Trois,
Sont assis sous le dais près du maître, étant rois.

Dans ce réseau de chefs qui couvrait l’Italie,
Je passe Théodat, prince de Trente; Élie,
Despote d’Avenzo, qu’a réclamé l’oubli;
Ce borgne Ordelafo, le bourreau de Forli;
Lascaris, que sa tante Alberte fit eunuque;
Othobon, sieur d’Assise, et Tibalt, sieur de Lucque;
C’est que, bien que mêlant aux autres leurs drapeaux,
Ceux-là ne comptaient point parmi les principaux;
Dans un filet on voit les fils moins que les câbles;
Je nomme seulement les monstres remarquables.

Derrière eux, sur la pierre auguste d’un portail,
Est sculpté Satan, roi, forçat, épouvantail,
L’effrayant ramasseur de haillons de l’abîme,
Ayant sa hotte au dos, pleine d’âmes, son crime
Sur son aile qui ploie, et son croc noir qui luit
Dans son poing formidable, et, dans ses yeux, la nuit.

Pour qui voudrait peser les droits que donne au maître
La pureté du sang dont le ciel l’a fait naître,
Ratbert est fils d’Agnès, comtesse d’Elseneur;
Or, c’est la même gloire et c’est le même honneur
D’être enfanté d’Agnès que né de Messaline.

Malaspina, portant l’épine javeline,
Redoutable marquis à l’œil fauve et dévot,
Est à droite du roi, comme comte et prévôt.

C’est un de ces grands jours où les bannières sortent.
Dix chevaliers de l’ordre Au Droit Désir apportent
Le Nœud d’Or, précédés d’Énéas, leur massier,
Et d’un héraut de guerre en soutane d’acier.

Le roi brille, entouré d’une splendeur d’épées.
Plusieurs femmes sont là, près du trône groupées;
Élise d’Antioche, Ana, Cubitosa,
Fille d’Azon, qu’Albert de Mantoue épousa;
La plus belle, Matha, sœur du prince de Cumes,
Est blonde; et, l’éventant d’un éventail de plumes,
Sa naine, par moments, lui découvre les seins;
Couchée et comme lasse au milieu des coussins,
Elle enivre le roi d’attitudes lascives;
Son rire jeune et fou laisse voir ses gencives;
Elle a ce vêtement ouvert sur le côté,
Qui, plus tard, fut au Louvre effrontément porté
Par Bonne de Berry, fille de Jean de France.

Dans Ancône, est-ce deuil, terreur, indifférence?
Tout se tait; les maisons, les bouges, les palais,
Ont bouché leur lucarne ou fermé leurs volets;
Le cadran qui dit l’heure a l’air triste et funeste.

Le soleil luit aux cieux comme dans une peste;
Que l’homme soit foulé par les rois ou saisi
Par les fléaux, l’azur n’en a point de souci;
Le soleil, qui n’a pas d’ombre et de lueurs fausses,
Rit devant les tyrans comme il rit sur les fosses.

Ratbert vient d’inventer, en se frappant le front,
Un piège où ceux qu’il veut détruire tomberont;
Il en parle tout bas aux princes, qui sourient.
La prière — le peuple aime que les rois prient —
Est faite par Tibère, évêque de Verceil.

Tous étant réunis, on va tenir conseil.

Les deux huissiers de l’Ordre, Anchise avec Trophime,
Invitent le plus grand comme le plus infime
À parler, l’empereur voulant que les avis,
Mauvais, soient entendus, et, justes, soient suivis;
Puis il est répété par les huissiers, Anchise
Et Trophime, qu’il faut avec pleine franchise
Sur la guerre entreprise offrir son sentiment;
Que chacun doit parler à son tour librement;
Que c’est jour de chapitre et jour de conscience;
Et que, dans ces jours-là, les rois ont patience,
Vu que, devant le Christ, Thomas Didyme a pu
Parler insolemment sans être interrompu.
Et puisse l’empereur vivre longues années!

On voit devant Ratbert trois haches destinées,
La première, au quartier de bœuf rouge et fumant
Qu’un grand brasier joyeux cuit à son flamboiement,
La deuxième, au tonneau de vin que sur la table

A placé l’échanson aidé du connétable,
La troisième, à celui dont l’avis déplaira.

Un se lève. On se tait. C’est Jean de Carrara.

«Ta politique est sage et ta guerre est adroite,
Noble empereur, et Dieu te tient dans sa main droite.
Qui te conteste est traître et qui te brave est fou.
Je suis ton homme lige, et, toujours, n’importe où,
Je te suivrai, mon maître, et j’aimerai ta chaîne,
Et je la porterai.
— Celle-ci, capitaine,
Dit Ratbert, lui jetant au cou son collier d’or.
De plus, j’ai Perpignan, je t’en fais régidor.”

L’archevêque d’Urbin salue, il examine
Le plan de guerre, sac des communes, famine,
Les moyens souterrains, les rapports d’espions.
«Sire, vous êtes grand comme les Scipions;
En vous voyant, le flanc de l’Église tressaille.

— Archevêque, pardieu! dit Ratbert, je te baille
Un sou par muid de vin qu’on boit à Besançon.”

Cibo, qui parle avec un accent brabançon,
S’en excuse, ayant fait à Louvain ses études,
Et dit:
«Sire, les gens à fières attitudes
Sont des félons; pieds nus et la chaîne aux poignets,
Qu’on les fouette. Ô mon roi! par votre mère Agnès,
Vous êtes empereur; vous avez les trois villes,
Arles, Rome de Gaule et la mère des Milles,
Bordeaux en Aquitaine et les îles de Ré,
Naple, où le mont Vésuve est fort considéré.
Qui vous résiste essaye une lutte inutile;
Noble, qu’on le dégrade, et, serf, qu’on le mutile;
Vous affronter est crime, orgueil, lâche fureur;

Quiconque ne dit pas: Ratbert est l’empereur,
Doit mourir; nous avons des potences, j’espère.
Quant à moi, je voudrais, fût-ce mon propre père,
S’il osait blasphémer César que Dieu conduit,
Voir les corbeaux percher sur ses côtes la nuit,
Et la lune passer à travers son squelette.”

Ratbert dit: « Bon marquis, je te donne Spolète.”

C’est à Malaspina de parler. Un vieillard
Se troublerait devant ce jeune homme; il sait l’art
D’évoquer le démon, la stryge, l’égrégore;
Il teint sa dague avec du suc de mandragore;
Il sait des palefrois empoisonner le mors;
Dans une guerre, il a rempli de serpents morts
Les citernes de l’eau qu’on boit dans les Abruzzes;
Il dit: « La guerre est sainte!” Il rend compte des ruses,
À voix basse, et finit à voix haute en priant:
«Fais régner l’empereur du nord à l’orient!
Mon Dieu, c’est par sa bouche auguste que tu parles.

— Je te fais capischol de mon chapitre d’Arles,” Dit Ratbert.
Afranus se lève le dernier.
Cet évêque est pieux, charitable, aumônier;
Quoique jeune, il voulait se faire anachorète;
Il est grand casuiste et très-savant; il traite
Les biens du monde en homme austère et détaché;
Jadis, il a traduit en vers latins Psyché;
Comme il est humble, il a les reins ceints d’une corde.

Il invoque l’esprit divin; puis il aborde
Les questions: — Ratbert, par stratagème, a mis
Son drapeau sur les murs d’Ancône; c’est permis;
Ancône étant peu sage; et la ruse est licite
Lorsqu’elle a glorieuse et pleine réussite,
Et qu’au bonheur public on la voit aboutir;

Et ce n’est pas tromper, et ce n’est pas mentir
Que mettre à la raison les discordes civiles;
Les prétextes sont bons pour entrer dans les villes. —
Il ajoute: « La ruse, ou ce qu’on nomme ainsi,
Fait de la guerre, en somme, un art plus adouci;
Moins de coups, moins de bruit; la victoire plus sûre.
J’admire notre prince, et, quand je le mesure
Aux anciens Alarics, aux antiques Cyrus
Passant leur vie en chocs violents et bourrus,
Je l’estime plus grand, faisant la différence
D’Ennius à Virgile et de Plaute à Térence.
Je donne mon avis, sire, timidement;
Je suis d’Église, et n’ai que l’humble entendement
D’un pauvre clerc, mieux fait pour chanter des cantiques
Que pour parler devant de si grands politiques;
Mais, beau sire, on ne peut voir que son horizon,
Et raisonner qu’avec ce qu’on a de raison;
Je suis prêtre, et la messe est ma seule lecture;
Je suis très-ignorant; chacun a sa monture
Qu’il monte avec audace ou bien avec effroi;
Il faut pour l’empereur le puissant palefroi
Bardé de fer, nourri d’orge blanche et d’épeautre,
Le dragon pour l’archange et l’âne pour l’apôtre.
Je poursuis, et je dis qu’il est bon que le droit
Soit, pour le roi, très-large, et, pour le peuple, étroit;
Le peuple étant bétail et le roi, berger. Sire,
L’empereur ne veut rien sans que Dieu le désire.
Donc, faites! Vous pouvez, sans avertissements,
Guerroyer les chrétiens comme les ottomans;
Les ottomans étant hors de la loi vulgaire,
On peut les attaquer sans déclarer la guerre;
C’est si juste et si vrai, que, pour premiers effets,
Vos flottes, sire, ont pris dix galères de Fez;
Quant aux chrétiens, du jour qu’ils sont vos adversaires,
Ils sont de fait païens, sire, et de droit corsaires.
Il serait malheureux qu’un scrupule arrêtât
Sa majesté, quand c’est pour le bien de l’État.

Chaque affaire a sa loi; chaque chose a son heure.
La fille du marquis de Final est mineure;
Peut-on la détrôner? En même temps, peut-on
Conserver, à la sœur de l'empereur, Menton?
Sans doute. Les pays ont des mœurs différentes.
Pourvu que de l'Église on maintienne les rentes,
On le peut. Les vieux temps, qui n'ont plus d'avocats,
Agissaient autrement; mais je fais peu de cas
De ces temps-là; c'étaient des temps de république.
L'empereur, c'est la règle; et, bref, la loi salique,
Très-mauvaise à Menton, est très-bonne à Final.

— Évêque, dit le roi, tu seras cardinal."

Pendant que le conseil se tenait de la sorte,
Et qu'ils parlaient ainsi dans cette ville morte,
Et que le maître avait sous ses pieds ces prélats,
Ces femmes, ces barons en habits de galas,
Et l'Italie au loin comme une solitude,
Quelques seigneurs, ainsi qu'ils en ont l'habitude,
Regardant derrière eux d'un regard inquiet,
Virent que le Satan de pierre souriait.

II

LA DÉFIANCE D'ONFROY

Parmi les noirs déserts et les mornes silences,
Ratbert, pour l'escorter n'ayant que quelques lances,
Et le marquis Sénèque et l'évêque Afranus,
Traverse, presque seul, des pays inconnus;
Mais il sait qu'il est fort de l'effroi qu'il inspire,
Et que l'empereur porte avec lui tout l'empire.
Un soir, Ratbert s'arrête aux portes de Carpi;

Sur ce seuil formidable un dogue est accroupi;
Ce dogue, c’est Onfroy, le baron de la ville;
Calme et fier, sous la dent d’une herse incivile,
Onfroy s’adosse aux murs qui bravaient Attila;
Les femmes, les enfants et les soldats sont là;
Et voici ce que dit le vieux podesta sombre
Qui parle haut, ayant son peuple dans son ombre:

«Roi, nous te saluons sans plier les genoux.
Nous avons une chose à te dire. Quand nous,
Gens de guerre et barons qui tenions la province,
Nous avons bien voulu de toi pour notre prince,
Quand nous t’avons donné ce peuple et cet état,
Sire, ce n’était point pour qu’on les maltraitât.
Jadis nous étions forts. Quand tu nous fis des offres,
Nous étions très-puissants; de l’argent plein nos coffres;
Et nous avions battu tes plus braves soldats;
Nous étions tes vainqueurs. Roi, tu ne marchandas
Aucun engagement, sire, aucune promesse;
On traita; tu juras par ta mère et la messe;
Nous alors, las d’avoir de l’acier sur la peau,
Comptant que tu serais bon berger du troupeau,
Et qu’on abolirait les taxes et les dîmes,
Nous vînmes te prêter hommage, et nous pendîmes
Nos casques, nos hauberts et nos piques aux clous.
Roi, nous voulons des chiens qui ne soient pas des loups.
Tes gens se sont conduits d’une telle manière
Qu’aujourd’hui toute ville, altesse, est prisonnière
De la peur que ta suite et tes soldats lui font,
Et que pas un fossé ne semble assez profond.
Vois, on se garde. Ici, dans les villes voisines,
On ne lève jamais qu’un pieu des sarrasines
Pour ne laisser passer qu’un seul homme à la fois;
À cause des brigands et de vous autres rois.
Roi, nous te remontrons que ta bande à toute heure
Dévalise ce peuple, entre dans sa demeure,
Y met tout en tumulte et sens dessus dessous,

Puis s’en va, lui volant ses misérables sous;
Cette horde en ton nom incessamment réclame
Le bien des pauvres gens qui nous fait saigner l’âme,
Et puisque, nous présents avec nos compagnons,
On le prend sous nos yeux, c’est nous qui le donnons;
Oui, c’est nous qui, trouvant qu’il vous manque des filles,
Des meutes, des chevaux, des reîtres, des bastilles,
Lorsque vous guerroyez et lorsque vous chassez,
Et qu’ayant trop de tout, vous n’avez point assez,
Avons la bonté rare et touchante de faire
Des charités, à vous, les heureux de la terre
Qui dormez dans la plume et buvez dans l’or fin,
Avez tous les liards de tous les meurt-de-faim!
Or, il nous reste encore, il faut que tu le saches,
Assez de vieux pierriers, assez de vieilles haches,
Assez de vieux engins au fond de nos greniers,
Sire, pour ne pas être à ce point aumôniers,
Et pour ne faire point, comme dans ton Autriche,
Avec l’argent du pauvre une largesse au riche.
Nous pouvons, en creusant, retrouver aujourd’hui
Nos estocs sous la rouille et nos cœurs sous l’ennui;
Nous pouvons décrocher, de nos mains indignées,
Nos bannières parmi les toiles d’araignées,
Et les faire flotter au vent, si nous voulons.

Sire, en outre, tu mets l’opprobre à nos talons.
Nous savons bien pourquoi tu combles de richesses
Nos filles et nos sœurs dont tu fais des duchesses,
Étoiles d’infamie au front de nos maisons.
Roi, nous n’acceptons pas sur nos durs écussons
Des constellations faites avec des taches;
La honte est mal mêlée à l’ombre des panaches;
Le soldat a le pied si maladroit, seigneur,
Qu’il ne peut sans boiter traîner le déshonneur.
Nos filles sont nous-même; au fond de nos tours noires,
Leur beauté chaste est sœur de nos anciennes gloires;
C’est pourquoi nous trouvons qu’on fait mal à propos

Les rideaux de ton lit avec nos vieux drapeaux.
Tes juges sont des gueux; bailliage ou cour plénière.
On trouve, et ce sera ma parole dernière,
Dans nos champs, où l’honneur antique est au rabais,
Pas assez de chemins, sire, et trop de gibets.
Ce luxe n’est pas bon. Nos pins et nos érables
Voyaient jadis, parmi leurs ombres vénérables,
Les bûcherons et non les bourreaux pénétrer;
Nos grands chênes n’ont point l’habitude d’entrer
Dans l’exécution des lois et des sentences,
Et n’aiment pas donner tant de bois aux potences.

Nous avons le cœur gros, et nous sommes, ô roi,
Tout près de secouer la corde du beffroi;
Ton altesse nous gêne et nous n’y tenons guère.
Roi, ce n’est pas pour voir nos compagnons de guerre
Accrochés à la fourche et devenus hideux,
Qui, morts, échevelés, quand nous passons près d’eux,
Semblent nous regarder et nous faire un reproche;
Ce n’est pas pour subir ton burg sur notre roche,
Plein de danses, de chants et de festins joyeux;
Ce n’est pas pour avoir ces pitiés sous les yeux
Que nous venons ici, courbant nos vieilles âmes,
Te saluer, menant à nos côtés nos femmes;
Ce n’est pas pour cela que nous humilions
Dans elles les agneaux et dans nous les lions.
Et, pour rachat du mal que tu fais, quand tu donnes
Des rentes aux moutiers, des terres aux madones,
Quand, plus chamarré d’or que le soleil du soir,
Tu vas baiser l’autel, adorer l’ostensoir,
Prier, ou quand tu fais quelque autre simagrée,
Ne te figure pas que ceci nous agrée.
Engraisser des abbés ou doter des couvents,
Cela fait-il que ceux qui sont morts soient vivants?
Roi, nous ne le pensons en aucune manière.
Roi, le chariot verse à trop creuser l’ornière;
L’appétit des rois donne aux peuples appétit;

Si tu ne changes pas d’allure, on t’avertit,
Prends garde. Et c’est cela que je voulais te dire.

— Bien parlé! dit Ratbert avec un doux sourire;”
Et, penché vers l’oreille obscure d’Afranus:
«Nous sommes peu nombreux et follement venus;
Cet homme est fort.
— Très-fort, dit le marquis Sénèque.
— Laissez-moi l’inviter à souper,” dit l’évêque.

Et c’est pourquoi l’on voit maintenant à Carpi
Un grand baron de marbre en l’église assoupi;
C’est le tombeau d’Onfroy, ce héros d’un autre âge,
Avec son épitaphe exaltant son courage,
Sa vertu, son fier cœur plus haut que les destins,
Faite par Afranus, évêque, en vers latins.

III

LA CONFIANCE DU MARQUIS FABRICE

I

Isora de Final. — Fabrice d’Albenga.

Tout au bord de la mer de Gênes, sur un mont
Qui jadis vit passer les Francs de Pharamond,
Un enfant, un aïeul, seuls dans la citadelle
De Final sur qui veille une garde fidèle,
Vivent, bien entourés de murs et de ravins;
Et l’enfant a cinq ans et l’aïeul quatre-vingts.

L’enfant est Isora de Final, héritière
Du fief dont Witikind a tracé la frontière;
L’orpheline n’a plus près d’elle que l’aïeul.
L’abandon sur Final a jeté son linceul;

L’herbe, dont, par endroits, les dalles sont couvertes,
Aux fentes des pavés fait des fenêtres vertes;
Sur la route oubliée on n’entend plus un pas;
Car le père et la mère, hélas! ne s’en vont pas
Sans que la vie autour des enfants s’assombrisse.

L’aïeul est le marquis d’Albenga, ce Fabrice
Qui fut bon; cher au pâtre, aimé du laboureur,
Il fut, pour guerroyer le pape ou l’empereur,
Commandeur de la mer et général des villes;
Gênes le fit abbé du peuple, et, des mains viles
Ayant livré l’état aux rois, il combattit.
Tout homme auprès de lui jadis semblait petit;
L’antique Sparte était sur son visage empreinte;
La loyauté mettait sa cordiale étreinte
Dans la main de cet homme à bien faire obstiné.
Comme il était bâtard d’Othon, dit le Non-Né
Parce qu’on le tira, vers l’an douze cent trente,
Du ventre de sa mère Honorate expirante,
Les rois faisaient dédain de ce fils belliqueux;
Fabrice s’en vengeait en étant plus grand qu’eux.
À vingt ans, il était blond et beau; ce jeune homme
Avait l’air d’un tribun militaire de Rome;
Comme pour exprimer les détours du destin
Dont le héros triomphe, un graveur florentin
Avait sur son écu sculpté le labyrinthe;
Les femmes l’admiraient, se montrant avec crainte
La tête de lion qu’il avait dans le dos.
Il a vu les plus fiers, Requesens et Chandos,
Et Robert, avoué d’Arras, sieur de Béthune,
Fuir devant son épée et devant sa fortune;
Les princes pâlissaient de l’entendre gronder;
Un jour, il a forcé le pape à demander
Une fuite rapide aux galères de Gênes;
C’était un grand briseur de lances et de chaînes,
Guerroyant volontiers, mais surtout délivrant;
Il a par tous été proclamé le plus grand

D’un siècle fort auquel succède un siècle traître;
Il a toujours frémi quand des bouches de prêtre
Dans les sombres clairons de la guerre ont soufflé;
Et souvent de saint Pierre il a tordu la clé
Dans la vieille serrure horrible de l’Église.
Sa bannière cherchait la bourrasque et la bise;
Plus d’un monstre a grincé des dents sous son talon;
Son bras se roidissait chaque fois qu’un félon
Déformait quelque état populaire en royaume;
Allant, venant dans l’ombre ainsi qu’un grand fantôme,
Fier, levant dans la nuit son cimier flamboyant,
Homme auguste au dedans, ferme au dehors, ayant
En lui toute la gloire et toute la patrie,
Belle âme invulnérable et cependant meurtrie,
Sauvant les lois, gardant les murs, vengeant les droits,
Et sonnant dans la nuit sous tous les coups des rois,
Cinquante ans, ce soldat, dont la tête enfin plie,
Fut l’armure de fer de la vieille Italie;
Et ce noir siècle, à qui tout rayon semble ôté,
Garde quelque lueur encore de son côté.

II

Le défaut de la cuirasse.

Maintenant il est vieux; son donjon, c’est son cloître;
Il tombe, et, déclinant, sent dans son âme croître
La confiance honnête et calme des grands cœurs;
Le brave ne croit pas au lâche, les vainqueurs
Sont forts, et le héros est ignorant du fourbe.
Ce qu’osent les tyrans, ce qu’accepte la tourbe,
Il ne le sait; il est hors de ce siècle vil;
N’en étant vu qu’à peine, à peine le voit-il;
N’ayant jamais de ruse, il n’eut jamais de crainte;
Son défaut fut toujours la crédulité sainte,
Et, quand il fut vaincu, ce fut par loyauté;
Plus de péril lui fait plus de sécurité.

Comme dans un exil il vit seul dans sa gloire;
Oublié; l’ancien peuple a gardé sa mémoire,
Mais le nouveau le perd dans l’ombre, et ce vieillard
Qui fut astre, s’éteint dans un morne brouillard.

Dans sa brume, où les feux du couchant se dispersent,
Il a cette mer vaste et ce grand ciel qui versent
Sur le bonheur la joie et sur le deuil l’ennui.

Tout est derrière lui maintenant; tout a fui;
L’ombre d’un siècle entier devant ses pas s’allonge;
Il semble des yeux suivre on ne sait quel grand songe:
Parfois, il marche et va sans entendre et sans voir.
Vieillir, sombre déclin! l’homme est triste le soir;
Il sent l’accablement de l’œuvre finissante.
On dirait par instants que son âme s’absente,
Et va savoir là-haut s’il est temps de partir.

Il n’a pas un remords et pas un repentir;
Après quatre-vingts ans son âme est toute blanche;
Parfois, à ce soldat qui s’accoude et se penche,
Quelque vieux mur, croulant lui-même, offre un appui;
Grave, il pense, et tous ceux qui sont auprès de lui
L’aiment; il faut aimer pour jeter sa racine
Dans un isolement et dans une ruine;
Et la feuille de lierre a la forme d’un cœur.

III

Aïeul maternel.

Ce vieillard, c’est un chêne adorant une fleur.
À présent un enfant est toute sa famille.
Il la regarde, il rêve; il dit: « C’est une fille,
Tant mieux!” Étant aïeul du côté maternel.
La vie en ce donjon a le pas solennel;
L’heure passe et revient ramenant l’habitude.

Ignorant le soupçon, la peur, l’inquiétude,
Tous les matins, il boucle à ses flancs refroidis
Son épée, aujourd’hui rouillée, et qui jadis
Avait la pesanteur de la chose publique;
Quand, parfois, du fourreau, vénérable relique,
Il arrache la lame illustre avec effort,
Calme, il y croit toujours sentir peser le sort.
Tout homme ici-bas porte en sa main une chose
Où, du bien et du mal, de l’effet, de la cause,
Du genre humain, de Dieu, du gouffre, il sent le poids;
Le juge au front morose a son livre des lois,
Le roi son sceptre d’or, le fossoyeur sa pelle.

Tous les soirs, il conduit l’enfant à la chapelle;
L’enfant prie et regarde avec ses yeux si beaux,
Gaie, et questionnant l’aïeul sur les tombeaux;
Et Fabrice a dans l’œil une humide étincelle.
La main qui tremble aidant la marche qui chancelle,
Ils vont sous les portails et le long des piliers
Peuplés de séraphins mêlés aux chevaliers;
Chaque statue, émue à leur pas doux et sombre,
Vibre, et toutes ont l’air de saluer dans l’ombre,
Les héros le vieillard, et les anges l’enfant.

Parfois Isoretta, que sa grâce défend,
S’échappe dès l’aurore et s’en va jouer seule
Dans quelque grande tour qui lui semble une aïeule,
Et qui mêle, croulante au milieu des buissons,
La légende romane aux souvenirs saxons.
Pauvre être qui contient toute une fière race,
Elle trouble, en passant, le bouc, vieillard vorace,
Dans les fentes des murs broutant le câprier;
Pendant que derrière elle on voit l’aïeul prier,
— Car il ne tarde pas à venir la rejoindre,
Et cherche son enfant dès qu’il voit l’aube poindre, —
Elle court, va, revient, met sa robe en haillons,

Erre de tombe en tombe et suit des papillons,
Ou s’assied, l’air pensif, sur quelque âpre architrave;
Et la tour semble heureuse et l’enfant paraît grave;
La ruine et l’enfance ont de secrets accords,
Car le temps sombre y met ce qui reste des morts.

IV

Un seul homme sait où est caché le trésor.

Dans ce siècle où tout peuple a son chef qui le broie,
Parmi les rois vautours et les princes de proie,
Certe, on n’en trouverait pas un qui méprisât
Final, donjon splendide et riche marquisat;
Tous les ans, les alleux, les rentes, les censives,
Surchargent vingt mulets de sacoches massives;
La grande tour surveille au milieu du ciel bleu,
Le sud, le nord, l’ouest et l’est, et saint Mathieu,
Saint Marc, saint Luc, saint Jean, les quatre évangélistes,
Sont sculptés et dorés sur les quatre balistes;
La montagne a pour garde, en outre, deux châteaux,
Soldats de pierre ayant du fer sous leurs manteaux.
Le trésor, quand du coffre on détache les boucles,
Semble à qui l’entrevoit un rêve d’escarboucles;
Ce trésor est muré dans un caveau discret
Dont le marquis régnant garde seul le secret,
Et qui fut autrefois le puits d’une cachette;
Fabrice maintenant connaît seul la cachette;
Le fils de Witikind vieilli dans les combats,
Othon, scella jadis dans les chambres d’en bas
Vingt caissons dont le fer verrouille les façades,
Et qu’Anselme, plus tard, fit remplir de cruzades
Pour que, dans l’avenir, jamais on n’en manquât;
Le casque du marquis est en or de ducat;
On a sculpté deux rois persans, Narse et Tigrane,
Dans la visière aux trous grillés de filigrane,

Et sur le haut cimier, taillé d'un seul onyx,
Un brasier de rubis brûle l'oiseau Phénix;
Et le seul diamant du sceptre pèse une once.

V

Le corbeau.

Un matin, les portiers sonnent du cor. Un nonce
Se présente; il apporte, assisté d'un coureur,
Une lettre du roi qu'on nomme l'empereur;
Ratbert écrit qu'avant de partir pour Tarente,
Il viendra visiter Isora, sa parente
Pour lui baiser le front et pour lui faire honneur.

Le nonce, s'inclinant, dit au marquis: « Seigneur,
Sa majesté ne fait de visites qu'aux reines."

Au message émané de ses mains très-sereines
L'empereur joint un don splendide et triomphant;
C'est un grand chariot plein de jouets d'enfant;
Isora bat des mains avec des cris de joie.

Le nonce, retournant vers celui qui l'envoie,
Prend congé de l'enfant, et, comme procureur
Du très-victorieux et très-noble empereur,
Fait le salut qu'on fait aux têtes souveraines.

«Qu'il soit le bienvenu! Bas le pont! bas les chaînes!
Dit le marquis; sonnez, la trompe et l'olifant!"
Et, fier de voir qu'on traite en reine son enfant,
La joie a rayonné sur sa face loyale.

Or, comme il relisait la lettre impériale,
Un corbeau qui passait fit de l'ombre dessus.
«Les oiseaux noirs guidaient Judas cherchant Jésus;

Sire, vois ce corbeau,” dit une sentinelle.
Et, regardant l’oiseau planer sur la tournelle:
«Bah! dit l’aïeul, j’étais pas plus haut que cela,
Compagnon, que déjà ce corbeau que voilà,
Dans la plus fière tour de toute la contrée
Avait bâti son nid, dont on voyait l’entrée;
Je le connais; le soir, volant dans la vapeur,
Il criait; tous tremblaient; mais, loin d’en avoir peur,
Moi petit, je l’aimais, ce corbeau centenaire
Étant un vieux voisin de l’astre et du tonnerre.”

VI

Le père et la mère.

Les marquis de Final ont leur royal tombeau
Dans une cave où luit, jour et nuit, un flambeau;
Le soir, l’homme qui met de l’huile dans les lampes
À son heure ordinaire en descendit les rampes;
Là, mangé par les vers dans l’ombre de la mort,
Chaque marquis auprès de sa marquise dort,
Sans voir cette clarté qu’un vieil esclave apporte.
À l’endroit même où pend la lampe, sous la porte,
Était le monument des deux derniers défunts;
Pour raviver la flamme et brûler des parfums,
Le serf s’en approcha; sur la funèbre table,
Sculpté très-ressemblant, le couple lamentable
Dont Isora, sa dame, était l’unique enfant,
Apparaissait; tous deux, dans cet air étouffant,
Silencieux, couchés côte à côte, statues
Aux mains jointes, d’habits seigneuriaux vêtues,
L’homme avec son lion, la femme avec son chien.
Il vit que le flambeau nocturne brûlait bien;
Puis, courbé, regarda, des pleurs dans la paupière,
Ce père de granit, cette mère de pierre;
Alors il recula, pâle; car il crut voir
Que ces deux fronts, tournés vers la voûte au fond noir,

S’étaient subitement assombris sur leur couche,
Elle ayant l’air plus triste et lui l’air plus farouche.

VII

Joie au château.

Une file de longs et pesants chariots
Qui précède ou qui suit les camps impériaux,
Marche là-bas avec des éclats de trompette
Et des cris que l’écho des montagnes répète;
Un gros de lances brille à l’horizon lointain.

La cloche de Final tinte, et c’est ce matin
Que du noble empereur on attend la visite.

On arrache des tours la ronce parasite;
On blanchit à la chaux en hâte les grands murs;
On range dans la cour des plateaux de fruits mûrs,
Des grenades venant des vieux monts Alpujarres,
Le vin dans les barils et l’huile dans les jarres;
L’herbe et la sauge en fleur jonchent tout l’escalier;
Dans la cuisine un feu rôtit un sanglier;
On voit fumer les peaux des bêtes qu’on écorche;
Et tout rit; et l’on a tendu sous le grand porche
Une tapisserie où Blanche d’Est, jadis,
A brodé trois héros, Macchabée, Amadis,
Achille; et le fanal de Rhode, et le quadrige
D’Aétius, vainqueur du peuple latobrige;
Et, dans trois médaillons marqués d’un chiffre en or,
Trois poëtes, Platon, Plaute et Scaeva Memor.
Ce tapis autrefois ornait la grande chambre;
Au dire des vieillards, l’effrayant roi sicambre,
Witikind, l’avait fait clouer en cet endroit
De peur que dans leur lit ses enfants n’eussent froid.

VIII

La toilette d’Isora.

Cris, chansons; et voilà ces vieilles tours vivantes.
La chambre d’Isora se remplit de servantes;
Pour faire un digne accueil au roi d’Arle, on revêt
L’enfant de ses habits de fête; à son chevet,
L’aïeul, dans un fauteuil d’orme incrusté d’érable,
S’assied, songeant aux jours passés, et, vénérable,
Il contemple Isora: front joyeux, cheveux d’or,
Comme les chérubins peints dans le corridor,
Regard d’enfant Jésus que porte la madone,
Joue ignorante où dort le seul baiser qui donne
Aux lèvres la fraîcheur, tous les autres étant
Des flammes, même, hélas! quand le cœur est content.
Isore est sur le lit assise, jambes nues;
Son œil bleu rêve avec des lueurs ingénues;
L’aïeul rit, doux reflet de l’aube sur le soir!
Et le sein de l’enfant, demi-nu, laisse voir
Ce bouton rose, germe auguste des mamelles;
Et ses beaux petits bras ont des mouvements d’ailes.
Le vétéran lui prend les mains, les réchauffant;
Et, dans tout ce qu’il dit aux femmes, à l’enfant,
Sans ordre, en en laissant deviner davantage,
Espèce de murmure enfantin du grand âge,
Il semble qu’on entend parler toutes les voix
De la vie, heur, malheur, à présent, autrefois,
Deuil, espoir, souvenir, rire et pleurs, joie et peine;
Ainsi tous les oiseaux chantent dans le grand chêne.

«Fais-toi belle; un seigneur va venir; il est bon;
C’est l’empereur; un roi; ce n’est pas un barbon
Comme nous; il est jeune; il est roi d’Arle, en France;
Vois-tu, tu lui feras ta belle révérence,
Et tu n’oublieras pas de dire: monseigneur.

Vois tous les beaux cadeaux qu’il nous fait! Quel bonheur!
Tous nos bons paysans viendront, parce qu’on t’aime;
Et tu leur jetteras des sequins d’or, toi-même,
De façon que cela tombe dans leur bonnet.”

Et le marquis, parlant aux femmes, leur prenait
Les vêtements des mains:
«Laissez, que je l’habille!
Oh! quand sa mère était toute petite fille,
Et que j’étais déjà barbe grise, elle avait
Coutume de venir dès l’aube à mon chevet;
Parfois, elle voulait m’attacher mon épée,
Et, de la dureté d’une boucle occupée,
Ou se piquant les doigts aux clous du ceinturon,
Elle riait. C’était le temps où mon clairon
Sonnait superbement à travers l’Italie.
Ma fille est maintenant sous terre, et nous oublie.
D’où vient qu’elle a quitté sa tâche, ô dure loi!
Et qu’elle dort déjà quand je veille encor, moi?
La fille qui grandit sans la mère, chancelle.
Oh! c’est triste, et je hais la mort. Pourquoi prend-elle
Cette jeune épousée et non mes pas tremblants?
Pourquoi ces cheveux noirs et non mes cheveux blancs?”

Et, pleurant, il offrait à l’enfant des dragées.

«Les choses ne sont pas ainsi bien arrangées;
Celui qui fait le choix se trompe; il serait mieux
Que l’enfant eût la mère et la tombe le vieux.
Mais de la mère au moins il sied qu’on se souvienne;
Et, puisqu’elle a ma place, hélas! je prends la sienne.

Vois donc le beau soleil et les fleurs dans les prés!
C’est par un jour pareil, les Grecs étant rentrés
Dans Smyrne, le plus grand de leurs ports maritimes,
Que, le bailli de Rhode et moi, nous les battîmes.
Mais regarde-moi donc tous ces beaux jouets-là!

Vois ce reître, on dirait un archer d’Attila.
Mais c’est qu’il est vêtu de soie et non de serge!
Et le chapeau d’argent de cette sainte Vierge!
Et ce bonhomme en or! Ce n’est pas très-hideux.
Mais comme nous allons jouer demain tous deux!
Si ta mère était là, qu’elle serait contente!
Ah! quand on est enfant, ce qui plaît, ce qui tente,
C’est un hochet qui sonne un moment dans la main,
Peu de chose le soir et rien le lendemain;
Plus tard, on a le goût des soldats véritables,
Des palefrois battant du pied dans les étables,
Des drapeaux, des buccins jetant de longs éclats,
Des camps, et c’est toujours la même chose, hélas!
Sinon qu’alors on a du sang à ses chimères.
Tout est vain. C’est égal, je plains les pauvres mères
Qui laissent leurs enfants derrière elles ainsi.”

Ainsi parlait l’aïeul, l’œil de pleurs obscurci,
Souriant cependant, car telle est l’ombre humaine.
Tout à l’ajustement de son ange de reine,
Il habillait l’enfant, et, tandis qu’à genoux
Les servantes chaussaient ces pieds charmants et doux,
Et, les parfumant d’ambre, en lavaient la poussière,
Il nouait gauchement la petite brassière,
Ayant plus d’habitude aux chemises d’acier.

IX

Joie hors du château.

Le soir vient, le soleil descend dans son brasier;
Et voilà qu’au penchant des mers, sur les collines,
Partout, les milans roux, les chouettes félines,
L’autour glouton, l’orfraie horrible dont l’œil luit
Avec du sang, le jour, qui devient feu, la nuit,
Tous les tristes oiseaux mangeurs de chair humaine,

Fils de ces vieux vautours, nés de l'aigle romaine,
Que la louve d'airain aux cirques appela,
Qui suivaient Marius et connaissaient Sylla,
S'assemblent; et les uns, laissant un crâne chauve,
Les autres, aux gibets essuyant leur bec fauve,
D'autres, d'un mât rompu quittant les noirs agrès,
D'autres, prenant leur vol du mur des lazarets,
Tous, joyeux et criant, en tumulte et sans nombre,
Ils se montrent Final, la grande cime sombre
Qu'Othon, fils d'Aleram le Saxon, crénela,
Et se disent entre eux: Un empereur est là!

X

Suite de la joie.

Cloche; acclamations; gémissements; fanfares;
Feux de joie; et les tours semblent toutes des phares,
Tant on a, pour fêter ce jour grand à jamais,
De brasiers frissonnants encombré leurs sommets!
La table colossale en plein air est dressée;
Ce qu'on a sous les yeux répugne à la pensée
Et fait peur; c'est la joie effrayante du mal;
C'est plus que le démon, c'est moins que l'animal;
C'est la cour du donjon tout entière rougie
D'une prodigieuse et ténébreuse orgie;
C'est Final, mais Final vaincu, tombé, flétri;
C'est un chant dans lequel semble se tordre un cri;
Un gouffre où les lueurs de l'enfer sont voisines
Du rayonnement calme et joyeux des cuisines;
Le triomphe de l'ombre, obscène, effronté, cru;
Le souper de Satan dans un rêve apparu.

À l'angle de la cour, ainsi qu'un témoin sombre,
Un squelette de tour, formidable décombre,
Sur son faîte vermeil d'où s'enfuit le corbeau,
Dresse et secoue aux vents, brûlant comme un flambeau,

Tout le branchage et tout le feuillage d’un orme;
Valet géant portant un chandelier énorme.

Le drapeau de l’empire, arboré sur ce bruit,
Gonfle son aile immense au souffle de la nuit.

Tout un cortége étrange est là; femmes et prêtres;
Prélats parmi les ducs, moines parmi les reîtres;
Les crosses et les croix d’évêques, au milieu
Des piques et des dards, mêlent aux meurtres Dieu,
Les mitres figurant de plus gros fers de lance.
Un tourbillon d’horreur, de nuit, de violence,
Semble emplir tous ces cœurs; que disent-ils entre eux,
Ces hommes? En voyant ces convives affreux,
On doute si l’aspect humain est véritable;
Un sein charmant se dresse au-dessus de la table,
On redoute au-dessous quelque corps tortueux;
C’est un de ces banquets du monde monstrueux
Qui règne et vit depuis les Héliogabales;
Le luth lascif s’accouple aux féroces cymbales;
Le cynique baiser cherche à se prodiguer;
Il semble qu’on pourrait à peine distinguer
De ces hommes les loups, les chiennes de ces femmes;
À travers l’ombre, on voit toutes les soifs infâmes,
Le désir, l’instinct vil, l’ivresse aux cris hagards,
Flamboyer dans l’étoile horrible des regards.

Quelque chose de rouge entre les dalles fume;
Mais, si tiède que soit cette douteuse écume,
Assez de barils sont éventrés et crevés
Pour que ce soit du vin qui court sur les pavés.

Est-ce une vaste noce? est-ce un deuil morne et triste?
On ne sait pas à quel dénoûment on assiste,
Si c’est quelque affreux monde à la terre étranger;
Si l’on voit des vivants ou des larves manger;
Et si ce qui dans l’ombre indistincte surnage

Est la fin d’un festin ou la fin d’un carnage.

Par moments le tambour, le cistre, le clairon,
Font ces rages de bruit qui rendaient fou Néron.
Ce tumulte rugit, chante, boit, mange, râle.
Sur un trône est assis Ratbert, content et pâle.

C’est, parmi le butin, les chants, les arcs de fleurs,
Dans un antre de rois un Louvre de voleurs.

Presque nue au milieu des montagnes de roses,
Comme les déités dans les apothéoses,
Altière, recevant vaguement les saluts,
Marquant avec ses doigts la mesure des luths,
Ayant dans le gala les langueurs de l’alcôve,
Près du maître sourit Matha, la blonde fauve;
Et sous la table, heureux, du genou la pressant,
Le roi cherche son pied dans les mares de sang.

Les grands brasiers, ouvrant leur gouffre d’étincelles,
Font resplendir les ors d’un chaos de vaisselles;
On ébrèche aux moutons, aux lièvres montagnards,
Aux faisans, les couteaux tout à l’heure poignards;
Sixte Malaspina, derrière le roi, songe;
Toute lèvre se rue à l’ivresse et s’y plonge;
On achève un mourant en perçant un tonneau;
L’œil croit, parmi les os de chevreuil et d’agneau,
Aux tremblantes clartés que les flambeaux prolongent,
Voir des profils humains dans ce que les chiens rongent;
Des chanteurs grecs, portant des images d’étain
Sur leurs chapes, selon l’usage byzantin,
Chantent Ratbert, césar, roi, vainqueur, dieu, génie;
On entend sous les bancs des soupirs d’agonie;
Une odeur de tuerie et de cadavres frais
Se mêle au vague encens brûlant dans les coffrets
Et les boîtes d’argent sur des trépieds de nacre;
Les pages, les valets, encor chauds du massacre,

Servent dans le banquet leur empereur, ravi
Et sombre, après l’avoir dans le meurtre servi;
Sur le bord des plats d’or on voit des mains sanglantes;
Ratbert s’accoude avec des poses indolentes;
Au-dessus du festin, dans le ciel blanc du soir,
De partout, des hanaps, du buffet, du dressoir,
Des plateaux où les paons ouvrent leurs larges queues,
Des écuelles où brûle un philtre aux lueurs bleues,
Des verres, d’hypocras et de vin écumants,
Des bouches des buveurs, des bouches des amants,
S’élève une vapeur, gaie, ardente, enflammée,
Et les âmes des morts sont dans cette fumée.

XI

Toutes les faims satisfaites.

C’est que les noirs oiseaux de l’ombre ont eu raison,
C’est que l’orfraie a bien flairé la trahison,
C’est qu’un fourbe a surpris le vaillant sans défense,
C’est qu’on vient d’écraser la vieillesse et l’enfance.
En vain quelques soldats fidèles ont voulu
Résister à l’abri d’un créneau vermoulu;
Tous sont morts; et de sang les dalles sont trempées;
Et la hache, l’estoc, les masses, les épées,
N’ont fait grâce à pas un, sur l’ordre que donna
Le roi d’Arle au prévôt Sixte Malaspina.
Et, quant aux plus mutins, c’est ainsi que les nomme
L’aventurier royal fait empereur par Rome,
Trente sur les crochets et douze sur le pal
Expirent au-dessus du porche principal.

Tandis qu’en joyeux chants les vainqueurs se répandent,
Auprès de ces poteaux et de ces croix où pendent
Ceux que Malaspina vient de supplicier,
Corbeaux, hiboux, milans, tout l’essaim carnassier,

Venus des monts, des bois, des cavernes, des havres,
S’abattent par volée et font sur les cadavres
Un banquet, moins hideux que celui d’à côté.

Ah! le vautour est triste à voir, en vérité,
Déchiquetant sa proie et planant; on s’effraie
Du cri de la fauvette aux griffes de l’orfraie;
L’épervier est affreux rongeant des os brisés;
Pourtant, par l’ombre immense on les sent excusés,
L’impénétrable faim est la loi de la terre,
Et le ciel, qui connaît la grande énigme austère,
La nuit, qui sert de fond au guet mystérieux
Du hibou promenant la rondeur de ses yeux
Ainsi qu’à l’araignée ouvrant ses pâles toiles,
Met à ce festin sombre une nappe d’étoiles;
Mais l’être intelligent, le fils d’Adam, l’élu
Qui doit trouver le bien après l’avoir voulu,
L’homme, exterminant l’homme et riant, épouvante
Même au fond de la nuit, l’immensité vivante,
Et, que le ciel soit noir ou que le ciel soit bleu,
Caïn tuant Abel est la stupeur de Dieu.

XII

Que c’est Fabrice qui est un traître.

Un homme qu’un piquet de lansquenets escorte,
Qui tient une bannière inclinée, et qui porte
Une jacque de vair taillée en éventail,
Un héraut, fait ce cri devant le grand portail:

«Au nom de l’empereur clément et plein de gloire,
— Dieu le protège! — peuple! il est pour tous notoire
Que le traître marquis Fabrice d’Albenga
Jadis avec les gens des villes se ligua,
Et qu’il a maintes fois guerroyé le saint-siége;
C’est pourquoi l’empereur très-clément — Dieu protége

L’empereur! — le citant à son haut tribunal,
A pris possession de l’état de Final.”

L’homme ajoute, dressant sa bannière penchée:
«Qui me contredira soit sa tête tranchée,
Et ses biens confisqués à l’empereur. J’ai dit.”

XIII

Silence.

Tout à coup on se tait; ce silence grandit,
Et l’on dirait qu’au choc brusque d’un vent qui tombe,
Cet enfer a repris sa figure de tombe;
Ce pandémonium, ivre d’ombre et d’orgueil,
S’éteint; c’est qu’un vieillard a paru sur le seuil;
Un prisonnier, un juge, un fantôme; l’ancêtre!

C’est Fabrice.
On l’amène à la merci du maître.
Ses blêmes cheveux blancs couronnent sa pâleur;
Il a les bras liés au dos comme un voleur;
Et, pareil au milan qui suit des yeux sa proie,
Derrière le captif, marche, sans qu’il le voie,
Un homme qui tient haute une épée à deux mains.

Matha, fixant sur lui ses beaux yeux inhumains,
Rit sans savoir pourquoi, rire étant son caprice.
Dix valets de la lance environnent Fabrice.
Le roi dit: « Le trésor est caché dans un lieu
Qu’ici tu connais seul; et je jure par Dieu
Que, si tu dis l’endroit, marquis, ta vie est sauve.”

Fabrice lentement lève sa tête chauve
Et se tait.
Le roi dit: « Es-tu sourd, compagnon?”

Un reître avec le doigt fait signe au roi que non.
« — Marquis, parle! ou sinon, vrai comme je me nomme
Empereur des Romains, roi d'Arle et gentilhomme,
Lion, tu vas japper ainsi qu'un épagneul.
Ici, bourreaux! — Réponds, le trésor?"
Et l'aïeul
Semble, droit et glacé parmi les fers de lance,
Avoir déjà pris place en l'éternel silence.

Le roi dit: « Préparez les coins et les crampons.
Pour la troisième fois, parleras-tu? Réponds."

Fabrice, sans qu'un mot d'entre ses lèvres sorte,
Regarde le roi d'Arle et d'une telle sorte,
Avec un si superbe éclair, qu'il l'interdit;
Et Ratbert, furieux sous ce regard, bondit
Et crie, en s'arrachant le poil de la moustache:
«Je te trouve idiot et mal en point, et sache
Que les jouets d'enfant étaient pour toi, vieillard!
Çà, rends-moi ce trésor, fruit de tes vols, pillard!
Et ne m'irrite pas, ou ce sera ta faute,
Et je vais envoyer sur ta tour la plus haute
Ta tête au bout d'un pieu se taire dans la nuit.
Mais l'aïeul semble d'ombre et de pierre construit;
On dirait qu'il ne sait pas même qu'on lui parle.

«Le brodequin! à toi, bourreau!" dit le roi d'Arle.

Le bourreau vient, la foule effarée écoutait.

On entend l'os crier, mais la bouche se tait.

Toujours prêt à frapper le prisonnier en traître,
Le coupe-tête jette un coup d'œil à son maître.

«Attends que je te fasse un signe," dit Ratbert.
Et, reprenant:

«Voyons, toi chevalier haubert,
Mais cadet, toi marquis, mais bâtard, si tu donnes
Ces quelques diamants de plus à mes couronnes,
Si tu veux me livrer ce trésor, je te fais
Prince, et j’ai dans mes ports dix galères de Fez
Dont je te fais présent avec cinq cents esclaves.”

Le vieillard semble sourd et muet.
«Tu me braves!
Eh bien! tu vas pleurer,” dit le fauve empereur.

XIV

Ratbert rend l’enfant à l’aïeul.

Et voici qu’on entend comme un souffle d’horreur
Frémir, même en cette ombre et même en cette horde.
Une civière passe, il y pend une corde;
Un linceul la recouvre; on la pose à l’écart;
On voit deux pieds d’enfant qui sortent du brancard.
Fabrice, comme au vent se renverse un grand arbre,
Tremble, et l’homme de chair sous cet homme de marbre
Reparaît; et Ratbert fait lever le drap noir.

C’est elle! Isora! pâle, inexprimable à voir,
Étranglée, et sa main crispée, et cela navre,
Tient encore un hochet; pauvre petit cadavre!

L’aïeul tressaille avec la force d’un géant;
Formidable, il arrache au brodequin béant
Son pied dont le bourreau vient de briser le pouce;
Les bras toujours liés, de l’épaule il repousse
Tout ce tas de démons, et va jusqu’à l’enfant,
Et sur ses deux genoux tombe, et son cœur se fend.
Il crie en se roulant sur la petite morte:

«Tuée! ils l’ont tuée! et la place était forte,

Le pont avait sa chaîne et la herse ses poids,
On avait des fourneaux pour le soufre et la poix,
On pouvait mordre avec ses dents le roc farouche,
Se défendre, hurler, lutter, s’emplir la bouche
De feu, de plomb fondu, d’huile, et les leur cracher
À la figure avec les éclats du rocher!
Non! on a dit: « Entrez!” et, par la porte ouverte,
Ils sont entrés! la vie à la mort s’est offerte!
On a livré la place, on n’a point combattu!
Voilà la chose; elle est toute simple; ils n’ont eu
Affaire qu’à ce vieux misérable imbécile!
Égorger un enfant, ce n’est pas difficile.
Tout à l’heure, j’étais tranquille, ayant peu vu
Qu’on tuât des enfants, et je disais: « Pourvu
«Qu’Isora vive, eh bien! après cela, qu’importe!”
Mais l’enfant! Ô mon Dieu! c’est donc vrai qu’elle est morte!
Penser que nous étions là tous deux hier encor!
Elle allait et venait dans un gai rayon d’or;
Cela jouait toujours, pauvre mouche éphémère!
C’était la petite âme errante de sa mère!
Le soir, elle posait son doux front sur mon sein,
Et dormait… — Ah! brigand! assassin! assassin!”

Il se dressait, et tout tremblait dans le repaire,
Tant c’était la douleur d’un lion et d’un père,
Le deuil, l’horreur, et tant ce sanglot rugissait!
«Et moi qui, ce matin, lui nouais son corset!
Je disais: « Fais-toi belle, enfant!” Je parais l’ange
Pour le spectre! — Oh! ris donc là-bas, femme de fange!
Riez tous! Idiot, en effet, moi qui crois
Qu’on peut se confier aux paroles des rois
Et qu’un hôte n’est pas une bête féroce!
Le roi, les chevaliers, l’évêque avec sa crosse,
Ils sont venus, j’ai dit: « Entrez;” c’étaient des loups!
Est-ce qu’ils ont marché sur elle avec des clous
Qu’elle est toute meurtrie? Est-ce qu’ils l’ont battue?
Et voilà maintenant nos filles qu’on nous tue

Pour voler un vieux casque en vieil or de ducat!
Je voudrais que quelqu’un d’honnête m’expliquât
Cet événement-ci, voilà ma fille morte!
Dire qu’un empereur vient avec une escorte,
Et que des gens nommés Farnèse, Spinola,
Malaspina, Cibo, font de ces choses-là,
Et qu’on se met à cent, à mille, avec ce prêtre,
Ces femmes, pour venir prendre un enfant en traître,
Et que l’enfant est là, mort, et que c’est un jeu;
C’est à se demander s’il est encore un Dieu,
Et si, demain, après de si lâches désastres,
Quelqu’un osera faire encor lever les astres!
M’avoir assassiné ce petit être-là!
Mais c’est affreux d’avoir à se mettre cela
Dans la tête, que c’est fini, qu’ils l’ont tuée,
Qu’elle est morte! — Oh! ce fils de la prostituée,
Ce Ratbert, comme il m’a hideusement trompé!
Ô Dieu! de quel démon est cet homme échappé?
Vraiment! est-ce donc trop espérer que de croire
Qu’on ne va point, par ruse et par trahison noire,
Massacrer des enfants, broyer des orphelins,
Des anges, de clarté céleste encor tout pleins!
Mais c’est qu’elle est là morte, immobile, insensible!
Je n’aurais jamais cru que cela fût possible.
Il faut être le fils de cette infâme Agnès!
Rois! j’avais tort jadis quand je vous épargnais,
Quand, pouvant vous briser au front le diadème,
Je vous lâchais, j’étais un scélérat moi-même,
J’étais un meurtrier d’avoir pitié de vous!
Oui, j’aurais dû vous tordre entre mes serres, tous!
Est-ce qu’il est permis d’aller dans les abîmes
Reculer la limite effroyable des crimes,
De voler, oui, ce sont des vols, de faire un tas
D’abominations, de maux et d’attentats,
De tuer des enfants et de tuer des femmes,
Sous prétexte qu’on fut, parmi les oriflammes
Et les clairons, sacré devant le monde entier

Par Urbain Quatre, pape et fils d’un savetier!
Que voulez-vous qu’on fasse à de tels misérables!
Avoir mis son doigt noir sur ces yeux adorables!
Ce chef d’œuvre du Dieu vivant, l’avoir détruit!
Quelle mamelle d’ombre et d’horreur et de nuit,
Dieu juste, a donc été de ce monstre nourrice?
Un tel homme suffit pour qu’un siècle pourrisse.
Plus de bien ni de mal, plus de droit, plus de lois.
Est-ce que le tonnerre est absent quelquefois?
Est-ce qu’il n’est pas temps que la foudre se prouve,
Cieux profonds, en broyant ce chien, fils de la louve?
Oh! sois maudit, maudit, maudit, et sois maudit,
Ratbert, empereur, roi, césar, escroc, bandit!
Ô grand vainqueur d’enfants de cinq ans! maudits soient
Les pas que font tes pieds, les jours que tes yeux voient,
Et la gueuse qui t’offre en riant son sein nu,
Et ta mère publique, et ton père inconnu!
Terre et cieux! c’est pourtant bien le moins qu’un doux être
Qui joue à notre porte et sous notre fenêtre,
Qui ne fait rien que rire et courir dans les fleurs,
Et qu’emplir de soleil nos pauvres yeux en pleurs,
Ait le droit de jouir de l’aube qui l’enivre,
Puisque les empereurs laissent les forçats vivre,
Et puisque Dieu, témoin des deuils et des horreurs,
Laisse sous le ciel noir vivre les empereurs!”

XV

Les deux têtes.

Ratbert, en ce moment, distrait jusqu’à sourire,
Écoutait Afranus à voix basse lui dire:
«Majesté, le caveau du trésor est trouvé.”

L’aïeul pleurait.

«Un chien, au coin des murs crevé,
Est un être enviable auprès de moi. Va, pille,
Vole, égorge, empereur! Ô ma petite fille,
Parle-moi! Rendez-moi mon doux ange, ô mon Dieu!
Elle ne va donc pas me regarder un peu?
Mon enfant! tous les jours nous allions dans les lierres.
Tu disais: « Vois les fleurs,” et moi: « Prends garde aux pierres.”
Et je la regardais, et je crois qu’un rocher
Se fût attendri rien qu’en la voyant marcher.
Hélas! avoir eu foi dans ce monstrueux drôle!
Mets ta tête adorée auprès de mon épaule.
Est-ce que tu m’en veux? C’est moi qui suis là! Dis,
Tu n’ouvriras donc plus tes yeux du paradis!
Je n’entendrai donc plus ta voix, pauvre petite!
Tout ce qui me tenait aux entrailles me quitte;
Et ce sera mon sort, à moi, le vieux vainqueur,
Qu’à deux reprises Dieu m’ait arraché le cœur,
Et qu’il ait retiré de ma poitrine amère
L’enfant, après m’avoir ôté du flanc la mère!
Mon Dieu, pourquoi m’avoir pris cet être si doux?
Je n’étais pourtant pas révolté contre vous,
Et je consentais presque à ne plus avoir qu’elle.
Morte! et moi, je suis là, stupide, qui l’appelle!
Oh! si je n’avais pas les bras liés, je crois
Que je réchaufferais ses pauvres membres froids;
Comme ils l’ont fait souffrir! La corde l’a coupée.
Elle saigne.”
Ratbert, blême et la main crispée,
Le voyant à genoux sur son ange dormant,
Dit: « Porte-glaive, il est ainsi commodément.”
Le porte-glaive fit, n’étant qu’un misérable,
Tomber sur l’enfant mort la tête vénérable.

Et voici ce qu’on vit dans ce même instant-là:
La tête de Ratbert sur le pavé roula,
Hideuse, comme si le même coup d’épée,
Frappant deux fois, l’avait de l’autre coupée.

L’horreur fut inouïe; et, tous se retournant,
Sur le grand fauteuil d’or du trône rayonnant
Aperçurent le corps de l’empereur sans tête,
Et son cou d’où sortait, dans un bruit de tempête,
Un flot rouge, un sanglot de pourpre, éclaboussant
Les convives, le trône et la table, de sang.

Alors, dans la clarté d’abîme et de vertige
Qui marque le passage énorme d’un prodige,
Des deux têtes on vit l’une, celle du roi,
Entrer sous terre et fuir dans le gouffre d’effroi
Dont l’expiation formidable est la règle,
Et l’autre s’envoler avec des ailes d’aigle.

XVI

Après justice faite.

L’ombre couvre à présent Ratbert, l’homme de nuit.
Nos pères — c’est ainsi qu’un nom s’évanouit —
Défendaient d’en parler, et du mur de l’histoire
Les ans ont effacé cette vision noire.

Le glaive qui frappa ne fut point aperçu;
D’où vint ce sombre coup, personne ne l’a su;
Seulement, ce soir-là, bêchant pour se distraire,
Héraclius le Chauve, abbé de Joug-Dieu, frère
D’Acceptus, archevêque et primat de Lyon,
Étant aux champs avec le diacre Pollion,
Vit, dans les profondeurs par les vents remuées,
Un archange essuyer son épée aux nuées.

VIII. Seizième siècle - Renaissance – Paganisme

Le Satyre

Prologue

le satyre

Un satyre habitait l’Olympe, retiré
Dans le grand bois sauvage au pied du mont sacré;
Il vivait là, chassant, rêvant, parmi les branches;
Nuit et jour, poursuivant les vagues formes blanches.
Il tenait à l’affût les douze ou quinze sens
Qu’un faune peut braquer sur les plaisirs passants.
Qu’était-ce que ce faune? On l’ignorait; et Flore
Ne le connaissait point, ni Vesper, ni l’Aurore
Qui sait tout, surprenant le regard du réveil;
On avait beau parler à l’églantier vermeil,
Interroger le nid, questionner le souffle,
Personne ne savait le nom de ce maroufle.
Les sorciers dénombraient presque tous les sylvains;
Les aegipans étant fameux comme les vins,
En voyant la colline on nommait le satyre;
On connaissait Stulcas, faune de Pallantyre,
Gès, qui, le soir, riait sur le Ménale assis,
Bos, l’aegipan de Crète; on entendait Chrysis,
Sylvain du Ptyx que l’homme appelle Janicule,
Qui jouait de la flûte au fond du crépuscule;
Anthrops, faune du Pinde, était cité partout;
Celui-ci, nulle part; les uns le disaient loup;
D’autres le disaient dieu, prétendant s’y connaître;
Mais, en tout cas, qu’il fût tout ce qu’il pouvait être,
C’était un garnement de dieu fort mal famé.

Tout craignait ce sylvain à toute heure allumé;
La bacchante elle-même en tremblait; les napées

S’allaient blottir aux trous des roches escarpées;
Écho barricadait son antre trop peu sûr;
Pour ce songeur velu, fait de fange et d’azur,
L’andryade en sa grotte était dans une alcôve;
De la forêt profonde il était l’amant fauve;
Sournois, pour se jeter sur elle, il profitait
Du moment où la nymphe, à l’heure où tout se tait,
Éclatante, apparaît dans le miroir des sources;
Il arrêtait Lycère et Chloé dans leurs courses:
Il guettait, dans les lacs qu’ombrage le bouleau,
La naïade qu’on voit radieuse sous l’eau
Comme une étoile ayant la forme d’une femme;
Son œil lascif errait la nuit comme une flamme;
Il pillait les appas splendides de l’été;
Il adorait la fleur, cette naïveté;
Il couvait d’une tendre et vaste convoitise
Le muguet, le troëne embaumé, le cytise,
Et ne s’endormit pas même avec le pavot;
Ce libertin était à la rose dévot;
Il était fort infâme au mois de mai; cet être
Traitait, regardant tout comme par la fenêtre,
Flore de mijaurée et Zéphir de marmot;
Si l’eau murmurait: « J’aime!” il la prenait au mot,
Et saisissait l’Ondée en fuite sous les herbes;
Ivre de leurs parfums, vautré parmi leurs gerbes,
Il faisait une telle orgie avec les lys,
Les myrtes, les sorbiers de ses baisers pâlis,
Et de telles amours, que, témoin du désordre,
Le chardon, ce jaloux, s’efforçait de le mordre;
Il s’était si crûment dans les excès plongé
Qu’il était dénoncé par la caille et le geai;
Son bras, toujours tendu vers quelque blonde tresse,
Traversait l’ombre; après les mois de sécheresse,
Les rivières, qui n’ont qu’un voile de vapeur,
Allant remplir leur urne à la pluie, avaient peur
De rencontrer sa face effrontée et cornue;
Un jour, se croyant seule et s’étant mise nue

Pour se baigner au flot d’un ruisseau clair, Psyché
L’aperçut tout à coup dans les feuilles caché,
Et s’enfuit, et s’alla plaindre dans l’empyrée;
Il avait l’innocence impudique de Rhée;
Son caprice, à la fois divin et bestial,
Montait jusqu’au rocher sacré de l’idéal,
Car partout où l’oiseau vole, la chèvre y grimpe;
Ce faune débraillait la forêt de l’Olympe;
Et, de plus, il était voleur, l’aventurier.

Hercule l’alla prendre au fond de son terrier,
Et l’amena devant Jupiter par l’oreille.

I

le bleu

Quand le satyre fut sur la cime vermeille,
Quand il vit l’escalier céleste commençant,
On eût dit qu’il tremblait, tant c’était ravissant!
Et que, rictus ouvert au vent, tête éblouie
À la fois par les yeux, l’odorat et l’ouïe,
Faune ayant de la terre encore à ses sabots,
Il frissonnait devant les cieux sereins et beaux;
Quoique à peine fût-il au seuil de la caverne
De rayons et d’éclairs que Jupiter gouverne,
Il contemplait l’azur, des pléiades voisin;
Béant, il regardait passer, comme un essaim
De molles nudités sans fin continuées,
Toutes ces déités que nous nommons nuées.
C’était l’heure où sortaient les chevaux du soleil.
Le ciel, tout frémissant du glorieux réveil,
Ouvrait les deux battants de sa porte sonore;
Blancs, ils apparaissaient formidables d’aurore;
Derrière eux, comme un orbe effrayant, couvert d’yeux,
Éclatait la rondeur du grand char radieux;

On distinguait le bras du dieu qui les dirige;
Aquilon achevait d’atteler le quadrige;
Les quatre ardents chevaux dressaient leur poitrail d’or;
Faisant leurs premiers pas, ils se cabraient encor
Entre la zone obscure et la zone enflammée;
De leurs crins, d’où semblait sortir une fumée
De perles, de saphyrs, d’onyx, de diamants,
Dispersée et fuyante au fond des éléments,
Les trois premiers, l’œil fier, la narine embrasée,
Secouaient dans le jour des gouttes de rosée;
Le dernier secouait des astres dans la nuit.

Le ciel, le jour qui monte et qui s’épanouit,
La terre qui s’efface et l’ombre qui se dore,
Ces hauteurs, ces splendeurs, ces chevaux de l’aurore
Dont le hennissement provoque l’infini,
Tout cet ensemble auguste, heureux, calme, béni,
Puissant, pur, rayonnait; un coin était farouche;
Là brillaient, près de l’antre où Gorgone se couche,
Les armes de chacun des grands dieux que l’autan
Gardait sévère, assis sur des os de titan;
Là reposait la Force avec la Violence;
On voyait, chauds encor, fumer les fers de lance;
On voyait des lambeaux de chair aux coutelas
De Bellone, de Mars, d’Hécate et de Pallas,
Des cheveux au trident et du sang à la foudre.

Si le grain pouvait voir la meule prête à moudre,
Si la ronce du bouc apercevait la dent,
Ils auraient l’air pensif du sylvain, regardant
Les armures des dieux dans le bleu vestiaire;
Il entra dans le ciel; car le grand bestiaire
Tenait sa large oreille et ne le lâchait pas;
Le bon faune crevait l’azur à chaque pas;
Il boitait, tout gêné de sa fange première;
Son pied fourchu faisait des trous dans la lumière,
La monstruosité brutale du sylvain

Étant lourde et hideuse au nuage divin.
Il avançait, ayant devant lui le grand voile
Sous lequel le matin glisse sa fraîche étoile;
Soudain il se courba sous un flot de clarté,
Et, le rideau s’étant tout à coup écarté,
Dans leur immense joie il vit les dieux terribles.

Ces êtres surprenants et forts, ces invisibles,
Ces inconnus profonds de l’abîme, étaient là.
Sur douze trônes d’or que Vulcain cisela,
À la table où jamais on ne se rassasie,
Ils buvaient le nectar et mangeaient l’ambroisie.
Vénus était devant et Jupiter au fond.
Cypris, sur la blancheur d’une écume qui fond,
Reposait mollement, nue et surnaturelle,
Ceinte du flamboiement des yeux fixés sur elle,
Et, par moments, avec l’encens, les cœurs, les vœux,
Toute la mer semblait flotter dans ses cheveux.
Jupiter aux trois yeux songeait, un pied sur l’aigle;
Son sceptre était un arbre ayant pour fleur la règle;
On voyait dans ses yeux le monde commencé;
Et dans l’un le présent, dans l’autre le passé;
Dans le troisième errait l’avenir comme un songe;
Il ressemblait au gouffre où le soleil se plonge;
Des femmes, Danaé, Latone, Sémélé,
Flottaient dans son regard; sous son sourcil voilé,
Sa volonté parlait à sa toute-puissance;
La nécessité morne était sa réticence;
Il assignait les sorts; et ses réflexions
Étaient gloire aux Cadmus et roue aux Ixions;
Sa rêverie, où l’ombre affreuse venait faire
Des taches de noirceur sur un fond de lumière,
Était comme la peau du léopard tigré;
Selon qu’ils s’écartaient ou s’approchaient, au gré
De ses décisions clémentes ou funèbres,
Son pouce et son index faisaient dans les ténèbres
S’ouvrir ou se fermer les ciseaux d’Atropos;

La radieuse paix naissait de son repos,
Et la guerre sortait du pli de sa narine;
Il méditait, avec Thémis dans sa poitrine,
Calme, et si patient que les sœurs d’Arachné,
Entre le froid conseil de Minerve émané,
Et l’ordre redoutable attendu par Mercure,
Filaient leur toile au fond de sa pensée obscure.

Derrière Jupiter rayonnait Cupidon,
L’enfant cruel, sans pleurs, sans remords, sans pardon,
Qui, le jour qu’il naquit, riait, se sentant d’âge
À commencer, du haut des cieux, son brigandage.

L’univers apaisé, content, mélodieux,
Faisait une musique autour des vastes dieux;
Partout où le regard tombait, c’était splendide;
Toute l’immensité n’avait pas une ride;
Le ciel réverbérait autour d’eux leur beauté;
Le monde les louait pour l’avoir bien dompté;
La bête aimait leurs arcs, l’homme adorait leurs piques;
Ils savouraient, ainsi que des fruits magnifiques,
Leurs attentats bénis, heureux, inexpiés;
Les haines devenaient des lyres sous leurs pieds,
Et même la clameur du triste lac Stymphale,
Partie horrible et rauque, arrivait triomphale.

Au-dessus de l’Olympe éclatant, au delà
Du nouveau ciel qui naît et du vieux qui croula,
Plus loin que les chaos, prodigieux décombres,
Tournait la roue énorme aux douze cages sombres,
Le Zodiaque, ayant autour de ses essieux
Douze spectres tordant leur chaîne dans les cieux;
Ouverture du puits de l’infini sans borne;
Cercle horrible où le chien fuit près du capricorne;
Orbe inouï, mêlant dans l’azur nébuleux
Aux lions constellés les sagittaires bleus.

Jadis, longtemps avant que la lyre thébaine
Ajoutât des clous d'or à sa conque d'ébène,
Ces êtres merveilleux que le Destin conduit,
Étaient tout noirs, ayant pour mère l'âpre Nuit;
Lorsque le Jour parut, il leur livra bataille;
Lutte affreuse! il vainquit; l'Ombre encore en tressaille;
De sorte que, percés des flèches d'Apollon,
Tous ces monstres, partout, de la tête au talon,
En souvenir du sombre et lumineux désastre,
Ont maintenant la plaie incurable d'un astre.

Hercule, de ce poing qui peut fendre l'Ossa,
Lâchant subitement le captif, le poussa
Sur le grand pavé bleu de la céleste zone.
«Va," dit-il. Et l'on vit apparaître le faune,
Hérissé, noir, hideux, et cependant serein,
Pareil au bouc velu qu'à Smyrne le marin,
En souvenir des prés, peint sur les blanches voiles;
L'éclat de rire fou monta jusqu'aux étoiles,
Si joyeux, qu'un géant enchaîné sous le mont
Leva la tête et dit: « Quel crime font-ils donc?"
Jupiter, le premier, rit; l'orageux Neptune
Se dérida, changeant la mer et la fortune;
Une Heure qui passait avec son sablier
S'arrêta, laissant l'homme et la terre oublier;
La gaîté fut, devant ces narines camuses,
Si forte, qu'elle osa même aller jusqu'aux Muses;
Vénus tourna son front, dont l'aube se voila,
Et dit: « Qu'est-ce que c'est que cette bête-là?"
Et Diane chercha sur son dos une flèche;
L'urne du Potamos étonné resta sèche;
La colombe ferma ses doux yeux, et le paon
De sa roue arrogante insulta l'aegipan;
Les déesses riaient toutes comme des femmes;
Le faune, haletant parmi ces grandes dames,
Cornu, boiteux, difforme, alla droit à Vénus;
L'homme-chèvre ébloui regarda ces pieds nus;

Alors on se pâma; Mars embrassa Minerve,
Mercure prit la taille à Bellone avec verve,
La meute de Diane aboya sur l’Œta;
Le tonnerre n’y put tenir, il éclata;
Les immortels penchés parlaient aux immortelles;
Vulcain dansait; Pluton disait des choses telles
Que Momus en était presque déconcerté;
Pour que la reine pût se tordre en liberté,
Hébé cachait Junon derrière son épaule;
Et l’Hiver se tenait les côtes sur le pôle.

Ainsi les dieux riaient du pauvre paysan.

Et lui, disait tout bas à Vénus: « Viens-nous-en.”
Nulle voix ne peut rendre et nulle langue écrire
Le bruit divin que fit la tempête du rire.
Hercule dit: « Voilà le drôle en question.
— Faune, dit Jupiter, le grand amphictyon,
Tu mériterais bien qu’on te changeât en marbre,
En flot, ou qu’on te mît au cachot dans un arbre;
Pourtant je te fais grâce, ayant ri. Je te rends
À ton antre, à ton lac, à tes bois murmurants;
Mais, pour continuer le rire qui te sauve,
Gueux, tu vas nous chanter ton chant de bête fauve.
L’Olympe écoute. Allons, chante.
Le chèvre-pieds
Dit: « Mes pauvres pipeaux sont tout estropiés;
Hercule ne prend pas bien garde lorsqu’il entre;
Il a marché dessus en traversant mon antre.
Or, chanter sans pipeaux, c’est fort contrariant.”

Mercure lui prêta sa flûte en souriant.

L’humble ægipan, figure à l’ombre habituée,
Alla s’asseoir rêveur derrière une nuée
Comme si, moins voisin des rois, il était mieux;
Et se mit à chanter un chant mystérieux.

L’aigle, qui, seul, n’avait pas ri, dressa la tête.

Il chanta, calme et triste.
Alors sur le Taygète,
Sur le Mysis, au pied de l’Olympe divin,
Partout, on vit, au fond du bois et du ravin,
Les bêtes qui passaient leur tête entre les branches;
La biche à l’œil profond se dressa sur ses hanches,
Et les loups firent signe aux tigres d’écouter;
On vit, selon le rhythme étrange, s’agiter
Le haut des arbres, cèdre, ormeau, pins qui murmurent,
Et les sinistres fronts des grands chênes s’émurent.

Le faune énigmatique, aux Grâces odieux,
Ne semblait plus savoir qu’il était chez les dieux.

II

le noir

Le satyre chanta la terre monstrueuse.

L’eau perfide sur mer, dans les champs tortueuse,
Sembla dans son prélude errer comme à travers
Les sables, les graviers, l’herbe et les roseaux verts;
Puis il dit l’Océan, typhon couvert de baves,
Puis la Terre lugubre avec toutes ses caves,
Son dessous effrayant, ses trous, ses entonnoirs,
Où l’ombre se fait onde, où vont des fleuves noirs,
Où le volcan, noyé sous d’affreux lacs, regrette
La montagne, son casque, et le feu, son aigrette,
Où l’on distingue, au fond des gouffres inouïs,
Les vieux enfers éteints des dieux évanouis.
Il dit la séve; il dit la vaste plénitude
De la nuit, du silence et de la solitude,
Le froncement pensif du sourcil des rochers;

Sorte de mer ayant les oiseaux pour nochers,
Pour algue le buisson, la mousse pour éponge,
La végétation aux mille têtes songe;
Les arbres pleins de vent ne sont pas oublieux;
Dans la vallée, au bord des lacs, sur les hauts lieux,
Ils gardent la figure antique de la terre;
Le chêne est entre tous profond, fidèle, austère;
Il protége et défend le coin du bois ami
Où le gland l'engendra, s'entr'ouvrant à demi,
Où son ombrage attire et fait rêver le pâtre.
Pour arracher de là ce vieil opiniâtre,
Que d'efforts, que de peine au rude bûcheron!
Le sylvain raconta Dodone et Cithéron,
Et tout ce qu'aux bas-fonds d'Hémus, sur l'Érymanthe
Sur l'Hymète, l'autan tumultueux tourmente;
Avril avec Tellus pris en flagrant délit,
Les fleuves recevant les sources dans leur lit,
La grenade montrant sa chair sous sa tunique,
Le rut religieux du grand cèdre cynique,
Et, dans l'âcre épaisseur des branchages flottants,
La palpitation sauvage du printemps.
«Tout l'abîme est sous l'arbre énorme comme une urne.
» La terre sous la plante ouvre son puits nocturne
» Plein de feuilles, de fleurs et de l'amas mouvant
» Des rameaux que, plus tard, soulèvera le vent,
» Et dit: — Vivez! Prenez. C'est à vous. Prends, brin d'herbe!
» Prends, sapin! — La forêt surgit; l'arbre superbe
» Fouille le globe avec une hydre sous ses pieds;
» La racine effrayante aux longs cous repliés,
» Aux mille becs béants dans la profondeur noire,
» Descend, plonge, atteint l'ombre et tâche de la boire,
» Et, bue, au gré de l'air, du lieu, de la saison,
» L'offre au ciel en encens ou la crache en poison,
» Selon que la racine, embaumée ou malsaine,
» Sort, parfum, de l'amour, ou, venin, de la haine.
» De là, pour les héros, les grâces et les dieux,
» L'œillet, le laurier — rose et le lys radieux,

» Et pour l’homme qui pense et qui voit, la ciguë.

» Mais qu’importe à la terre! Au chaos contiguë,
» Elle fait son travail d’accouchement sans fin.
» Elle a pour nourrisson l’universelle faim.
» C’est vers son sein qu’en bas les racines s’allongent.
» Les arbres sont autant de mâchoires qui rongent
» Les éléments, épars dans l’air souple et vivant;
» Ils dévorent la pluie, ils dévorent le vent;
» Tout leur est bon, la nuit, la mort; la pourriture
» Voit la rose et lui va porter sa nourriture;
» L’herbe vorace broute au fond des bois touffus;
» À toute heure, on entend le craquement confus
» Des choses sous la dent des plantes; on voit paître
» Au loin, de toutes parts, l’immensité champêtre;
» L’arbre transforme tout dans son puissant progrès;
» Il faut du sable, il faut de l’argile et du grès;
» Il en faut au lentisque, il en faut à l’yeuse,
» Il en faut à la ronce, et la terre joyeuse
» Regarde la forêt formidable manger.”

Le satyre semblait dans l’abîme songer;
Il peignit l’arbre vu du côté des racines,
Le combat souterrain des plantes assassines,
L’antre que le feu voit, qu’ignore le rayon,
Le revers ténébreux de la création,
Comment filtre la source et flambe le cratère;
Il avait l’air de suivre un esprit sous la terre;
Il semblait épeler un magique alphabet;
On eût dit que sa chaîne invisible tombait;
Il brillait; on voyait s’échapper de sa bouche
Son rêve avec un bruit d’ailes vague et farouche:
«Les forêts sont le lieu lugubre; la terreur,
» Noire, y résiste même au matin, ce doreur;
» Les arbres tiennent l’ombre enchaînée à leurs tiges;
» Derrière le réseau ténébreux des vertiges,
» L’aube est pâle, et l’on voit se tordre les serpents

» Des branches sur l’aurore horribles et rampants;
» Là, tout tremble; au-dessus de la ronce hagarde,
» Le mont, ce grand témoin, se soulève et regarde;
» La nuit, les hauts sommets, noyés dans la vapeur,
» Les antres froids, ouvrant la bouche avec stupeur,
» Les blocs, ces durs profils, les rochers, ces visages
» Avec qui l’ombre voit dialoguer les sages,
» Guettent le grand secret, muets, le cou tendu;
» L’œil des montagnes s’ouvre et contemple éperdu;
» On voit s’aventurer dans les profondeurs fauves
» La curiosité de ces noirs géants chauves;
» Ils scrutent le vrai ciel, de l’Olympe inconnu;
» Ils tâchent de saisir quelque chose de nu:
» Ils sondent l’étendue auguste, chaste, austère,
» Irritée, et, parfois, surprenant le mystère,
» Aperçoivent la Cause au pur rayonnement,
» Et l’Énigme sacrée, au loin, sans vêtement,
» Montrant sa forme blanche au fond de l’insondable.
» Ô nature terrible! ô lien formidable
» Du bois qui pousse avec l’idéal contemplé!
» Bain de la déité dans le gouffre étoilé!
» Farouche nudité de la Diane sombre
» Qui, de loin regardée et vue à travers l’ombre,
» Fait croître au fond des rocs les arbres monstrueux!
» Ô forêt!”
Le sylvain avait fermé les yeux;
La flûte que, parmi des mouvements de fièvre,
Il prenait et quittait, importunait sa lèvre;
Le faune la jeta sur le sacré sommet;
Sa paupière était close, on eût dit qu’il dormait,
Mais ses cils roux laissaient passer de la lumière;

Il poursuivit:
«Salut, Chaos! gloire à la Terre!
» Le chaos est un dieu; son geste est l’élément;
» Et lui seul a ce nom sacré: Commencement.
» C’est lui qui, bien avant la naissance de l’heure,

» Surprit l’aube endormie au fond de sa demeure,
» Avant le premier jour et le premier moment;
» C’est lui qui, formidable, appuya doucement
» La gueule de la nuit aux lèvres de l’aurore;
» Et c’est de ce baiser qu’on vit l’étoile éclore.
» Le chaos est l’époux lascif de l’infini.
» Avant le Verbe, il a rugi, sifflé, henni;
» Les animaux, aînés de tout, sont les ébauches
» De sa fécondité comme de ses débauches.
» Fussiez-vous dieux, songez en voyant l’animal!
» Car il n’est pas le jour, mais il n’est pas le mal.
» Toute la force obscure et vague de la terre
» Est dans la brute, larve auguste et solitaire;
» La sibylle au front gris le sait, et les devins
» Le savent, ces rôdeurs des sauvages ravins;
» Et c’est là ce qui fait que la Thessalienne
» Prend des touffes de poil aux cuisses de l’hyène,
» Et qu’Orphée écoutait, hagard, presque jaloux,
» Le chant sombre qui sort du hurlement des loups.”

« — Marsyas!” murmura Vulcain, l’envieux louche.
Apollon attentif mit le doigt sur sa bouche.
Le faune ouvrit les yeux, et peut-être entendit;
Calme, il prit son genou dans ses deux mains, et dit:

«Et maintenant, ô dieux! écoutez ce mot: L’âme!
» Sous l’arbre qui bruit, près du monstre qui brame,
» Quelqu’un parle. C’est l’Âme. Elle sort du chaos.
» Sans elle, pas de vents, le miasme; pas de flots,
» L’étang; l’âme, en sortant du chaos, le dissipe;
» Car il n’est que l’ébauche, et l’âme est le principe.
» L’Être est d’abord moitié brute et moitié forêt;
» Mais l’Air veut devenir l’Esprit, l’homme apparaît.
» L’homme? qu’est-ce que c’est que ce sphinx? Il commence
» En sagesse, ô mystère! et finit en démence.
» Ô ciel qu’il a quitté, rends-lui son âge d’or!”

Le faune, interrompant son orageux essor,
Ouvrit d’abord un doigt, puis deux, puis un troisième,
Comme quelqu’un qui compte en même temps qu’il sème,
Et cria, sur le haut Olympe vénéré:

«Ô dieux, l’arbre est sacré, l’animal est sacré,
» L’homme est sacré; respect à la terre profonde!
» La terre où l’homme crée, invente, bâtit, fonde,
» Géant possible, encor caché dans l’embryon,
» La terre où l’animal erre autour du rayon,
» La terre où l’arbre ému prononce des oracles,
» Dans l’obscur infini, tout rempli de miracles,
» Est le prodige, ô dieux, le plus proche de vous.
» C’est le globe inconnu qui vous emporte tous,
» Vous les éblouissants, la grande bande altière,
» Qui dans des coupes d’or buvez de la lumière,
» Vous qu’une aube précède et qu’une flamme suit,
» Vous les dieux, à travers la formidable nuit!”

La sueur ruisselait sur le front du satyre,
Comme l’eau du filet que des mers on retire;
Ses cheveux s’agitaient comme au vent libyen.

Phœbus lui dit: « Veux-tu la lyre?
— Je veux bien,”
Dit le faune; et, tranquille, il prit la grande lyre.

Alors il se dressa debout dans le délire
Des rêves, des frissons, des aurores, des cieux,
Avec deux profondeurs splendides dans les yeux.

«Il est beau!” murmura Vénus épouvantée.
Et Vulcain, s’approchant d’Hercule, dit: « Antée.”
Hercule repoussa du coude ce boiteux.

III

le sombre

Il ne les voyait pas, quoiqu’il fût devant eux.

Il chanta l’Homme. Il dit cette aventure sombre;
L’homme, le chiffre élu, tête auguste du nombre,
Effacé par sa faute, et, désastreux reflux,
Retombé dans la nuit de ce qu’on ne voit plus;
Il dit les premiers temps, le bonheur, l’Atlantide;
Comment le parfum pur devint miasme fétide,
Comment l’hymne expira sous le clair firmament,
Comment la liberté devint joug, et comment
Le silence se fit sur la terre domptée;
Il ne prononça pas le nom de Prométhée,
Mais il avait dans l’œil l’éclair du feu volé;
Il dit l’humanité mise sous le scellé;
Il dit tous les forfaits et toutes les misères,
Depuis les rois peu bons jusqu’aux dieux peu sincères.
Tristes hommes! ils ont vu le ciel se fermer.
En vain, pieux, ils ont commencé par s’aimer;
En vain, frères, ils ont tué la Haine infâme,
Le monstre à l’aigle onglée, aux sept gueules de flamme;
Hélas! comme Cadmus, ils ont bravé le sort;
Ils ont semé les dents de la bête; il en sort
Des spectres tournoyant comme la feuille morte,
Qui combattent, l’épée à la main, et qu’emporte
L’évanouissement du vent mystérieux.
Ces spectres sont les rois; ces spectres sont les dieux.
Ils renaissent sans fin, ils reviennent sans cesse;
L’antique égalité devient sous eux bassesse;
Dracon donne la main à Busiris; la Mort
Se fait code, et se met aux ordres du plus fort,
Et le dernier soupir libre et divin s’exhale
Sous la difformité de la loi colossale:
L’homme se tait, ployé sous cet entassement;
Il se venge; il devient pervers; il vole, il ment;

L’âme inconnue et sombre a des vices d’esclave;
Puisqu’on lui met un mont sur elle, elle en sort lave;
Elle brûle et ravage au lieu de féconder.
Et dans le chant du faune on entendait gronder
Tout l’essaim des fléaux furieux qui se lève.
Il dit la guerre; il dit la trompette et le glaive;
La mêlée en feu, l’homme égorgé sans remord,
La gloire, et dans la joie affreuse de la mort
Les plis voluptueux des bannières flottantes;
L’aube naît; les soldats s’éveillent sous les tentes;
La nuit, même en plein jour, les suit, planant sur eux;
L’armée en marche ondule au fond des chemins creux;
La baliste en roulant s’enfonce dans les boues;
L’attelage fumant tire, et l’on pousse aux roues;
Cris des chefs, pas confus; les moyeux des charrois
Balafrent les talus des ravins trop étroits.
On se rencontre, ô choc hideux! les deux armées
Se heurtent, de la même épouvante enflammées,
Car la rage guerrière est un gouffre d’effroi.
Ô vaste effarement! chaque bande a son roi.
Perce, épée! ô cognée, abats! massue, assomme!
Cheval, foule aux pieds l’homme, et l’homme, et l’homme et l’homme!
Hommes, tuez, traînez les chars, roulez les tours;
Maintenant, pourrissez, et voici les vautours!
Des guerres sans fin naît le glaive héréditaire;
L’homme fuit dans les trous, au fond des bois, sous terre;
Et, soulevant le bloc qui ferme son rocher,
Écoute s’il entend les rois là-haut marcher;
Il se hérisse; l’ombre aux animaux le mêle;
Il déchoit; plus de femme, il n’a qu’une femelle;
Plus d’enfants, des petits; l’amour qui le séduit
Est fils de l’Indigence et de l’Air de la nuit;
Tous ses instincts sacrés à la fange aboutissent;
Les rois, après l’avoir fait taire, l’abrutissent,
Si bien que le bâillon est maintenant un mors.
Et sans l’homme pourtant les horizons sont morts;
Qu’est la création sans cette initiale?

Seul sur la terre il a la lueur faciale;
Seul il parle; et sans lui tout est décapité.
Et l’on vit poindre aux yeux du faune la clarté
De deux larmes coulant comme à travers la flamme.
Il montra tout le gouffre acharné contre l’âme;
Les ténèbres croisant leurs funestes rameaux,
Et la forêt du sort et la meute des maux.
Les hommes se cachant, les dieux suivant leurs pistes.
Et, pendant qu’il chantait toutes ces strophes tristes,
Le grand souffle vivant, ce transfigurateur,
Lui mettait sous les pieds la céleste hauteur;
En cercle autour de lui se taisaient les Borées;
Et, comme par un fil invisible tirées,
Les brutes, loups, renards, ours, lions chevelus,
Panthères, s’approchaient de lui de plus en plus;
Quelques-unes étaient si près des dieux venues,
Pas à pas, qu’on voyait leurs gueules dans les nues.
Les dieux ne riaient plus; tous ces victorieux,
Tous ces rois, commençaient à prendre au sérieux
Cette espèce d’esprit qui sortait d’une bête.

Il reprit:
«Donc, les dieux et les rois sur le faîte,
» L’homme en bas; pour valets aux tyrans, les fléaux.
» L’homme ébauché ne sort qu’à demi du chaos,
» Et jusqu’à la ceinture il plonge dans la brute;
» Tout le trahit; parfois, il renonce à la lutte.
» Où donc est l’espérance? Elle a lâchement fui.
» Toutes les surdités s’entendent contre lui;
» Le sol l’alourdit, l’air l’enfièvre, l’eau l’isole;
» Autour de lui la mer sinistre se désole;
» Grâce au hideux complot de tous ces guet-apens,
» Les flammes, les éclairs, sont contre lui serpents;
» Ainsi que le héros l’aquilon le soufflette;
» La peste aide le glaive, et l’élément complète
» Le despote, et la nuit s’ajoute au conquérant;
» Ainsi la Chose vient mordre aussi l’homme, et prend

» Assez d’âme pour être une force, complice
» De son impénétrable et nocturne supplice;
» Et la Matière, hélas! devient Fatalité.
» Pourtant qu’on prenne garde à ce déshérité!
» Dans l’ombre, une heure est là qui s’approche, et frissonne,
» Qui sera la terrible et qui sera la bonne,
» Qui viendra te sauver, homme, car tu l’attends,
» Et changer la figure implacable du temps!
» Qui connaît le destin? qui sonda le peut-être?
» Oui, l’heure énorme vient, qui fera tout renaître,
» Vaincra tout, changera le granit en aimant,
» Fera pencher l’épaule au morne escarpement,
» Et rendra l’impossible aux hommes praticable.
» Avec ce qui l’opprime, avec ce qui l’accable,
» Le genre humain se va forger son point d’appui;
» Je regarde le gland qu’on appelle Aujourd’hui,
» J’y vois le chêne; un feu vit sous la cendre éteinte.
» Misérable homme, fait pour la révolte sainte,
» Ramperas-tu toujours parce que tu rampas?
» Qui sait si quelque jour on ne te verra pas,
» Fier, suprême, atteler les forces de l’abîme,
» Et, dérobant l’éclair à l’inconnu sublime,
» Lier ce char d’un autre à des chevaux à toi?
» Oui, peut-être on verra l’homme devenir loi,
» Terrasser l’élément sous lui, saisir et tordre
» Cette anarchie au point d’en faire jaillir l’ordre,
» Le saint ordre de paix, d’amour et d’unité,
» Dompter tout ce qui l’a jadis persécuté,
» Se construire à lui-même une étrange monture
» Avec toute la vie et toute la nature,
» Seller la croupe en feu des souffles de l’enfer,
» Et mettre un frein de flamme à la gueule du fer!
» On le verra, vannant la braise dans son crible,
» Maître et palefrenier d’une bête terrible,
» Criant à toute chose: « Obéis, germe, nais!”
» Ajustant sur le bronze et l’acier un harnais
» Fait de tous les secrets que l’étude procure,

» Prenant aux mains du vent la grande bride obscure,
» Passer dans la lueur ainsi que les démons,
» Et traverser les bois, les fleuves et les monts,
» Beau, tenant une torche aux astres allumée,
» Sur une hydre d'airain, de foudre et de fumée!
» On l'entendra courir dans l'ombre avec le bruit
» De l'aurore enfonçant les portes de la nuit!
» Qui sait si quelque jour, grandissant d'âge en âge,
» Il ne jettera pas son dragon à la nage,
» Et ne franchira pas les mers, la flamme au front!
» Qui sait si, quelque jour, brisant l'antique affront,
» Il ne lui dira pas: « Envole-toi, matière!"
» S'il ne franchira point la tonnante frontière,
» S'il n'arrachera pas de son corps brusquement
» La pesanteur, peau vile, immonde vêtement
» Que la fange hideuse à la pensée inflige,
» De sorte qu'on verra tout à coup, ô prodige,
» Ce ver de terre ouvrir ses ailes dans les cieux!
» Oh! lève-toi, sois grand, homme! va, factieux!
» Homme, un orbite d'astre est un anneau de chaîne,
» Mais cette chaîne-là, c'est la chaîne sereine,
» C'est la chaîne d'azur, c'est la chaîne du ciel;
» Celle-là, tu t'y dois rattacher, ô mortel,
» Afin — car un esprit se meut comme une sphère, —
» De faire aussi ton cercle autour de la lumière!
» Entre dans le grand chœur! va, franchis ce degré,
» Quitte le joug infâme et prends le joug sacré!
» Deviens l'Humanité, triple, homme, enfant et femme!
» Transfigure-toi! va! sois de plus en plus l'âme!
» Esclave, grain d'un roi, démon, larve d'un dieu,
» Prends le rayon, saisis l'aube, usurpe le feu;
» Torse ailé, front divin, monte au jour, monte au trône,
» Et dans la sombre nuit jette les pieds du faune!"

IV

l’étoilé

Le satyre un moment s’arrêta, respirant
Comme un homme levant son front hors d’un torrent;
Un autre être semblait sous sa face apparaître;
Les dieux s’étaient tournés, inquiets, vers le maître,
Et, pensifs, regardaient Jupiter stupéfait.

Il reprit:
«Sous le poids hideux qui l’étouffait,
» Le réel renaîtra, dompteur du mal immonde.
» Dieux, vous ne savez pas ce que c’est que le monde;
» Dieux, vous avez vaincu, vous n’avez pas compris.
» Vous avez au-dessus de vous d’autres esprits,
» Qui, dans le feu, la nue, et l’onde et la bruine,
» Songent en attendant votre immense ruine.
» Mais qu’est-ce que cela me fait à moi qui suis
» La prunelle effarée au fond des vastes nuits!
» Dieux, il est d’autres sphinx que le vieux sphinx de Thèbe.
» Sachez ceci, tyrans de l’homme et de l’Érèbe,
» Dieux qui versez le sang, dieux dont on voit le fond:
» Nous nous sommes tous faits bandits sur ce grand mont
» Où la terre et le ciel semblent en équilibre,
» Mais vous pour être rois et moi pour être libre.
» Pendant que vous semez haine, fraude et trépas,
» Et que vous enjambez tout le crime en trois pas,
» Moi, je songe. Je suis l’œil fixe des cavernes.
» Je vois. Olympes bleus et ténébreux Avernes,
» Temples, charniers, forêts, cités, aigle, alcyon,
» Sont devant mon regard la même vision;
» Les dieux, les fléaux, ceux d’à présent, ceux d’ensuite,
» Traversent ma lueur et sont la même fuite.
» Je suis témoin que tout disparaît. Quelqu’un est.
» Mais celui-là, jamais l’homme ne le connaît.
» L’humanité suppose, ébauche, essaye, approche;
» Elle façonne un marbre, elle taille une roche,
» Et fait une statue, et dit: Ce sera lui.

» L’homme reste devant cette pierre ébloui;
» Et tous les à-peu-près, quels qu’ils soient, ont des prêtres.
» Soyez les Immortels, faites! broyez les êtres,
» Achevez ce vain tas de vivants palpitants,
» Régnez; quand vous aurez, encore un peu de temps,
» Ensanglanté le ciel que la lumière azure,
» Quand vous aurez, vainqueurs, comblé votre mesure,
» C’est bien, tout sera dit, vous serez remplacés
» Par ce noir dieu final que l’homme appelle Assez!
» Car Delphe et Pise sont comme des chars qui roulent,
» Et les choses qu’on crut éternelles s’écroulent
» Avant qu’on ait le temps de compter jusqu’à vingt.”

Tout en parlant ainsi, le satyre devint
Démesuré; plus grand d’abord que Polyphème,
Puis plus grand que Typhon qui hurle et qui blasphème,
Et qui heurte ses poings ainsi que des marteaux,
Puis plus grand que Titan, puis plus grand que l’Athos;
L’espace immense entra dans cette forme noire;
Et, comme le marin voit croître un promontoire,
Les dieux dressés voyaient grandir l’être effrayant;
Sur son front blêmissait un étrange orient;
Sa chevelure était une forêt; des ondes,
Fleuves, lacs, ruisselaient de ses hanches profondes;
Ses deux cornes semblaient le Caucase et l’Atlas;
Les foudres l’entouraient avec de sourds éclats;
Sur ses flancs palpitaient des prés et des campagnes,
Et ses difformités s’étaient faites montagnes;
Les animaux qu’avaient attirés ses accords,
Daims et tigres, montaient tout le long de son corps;
Des avrils tout en fleurs verdoyaient sur ses membres;
Le pli de son aisselle abritait des décembres;
Et des peuples errants demandaient leur chemin,
Perdus au carrefour des cinq doigts de sa main;
Des aigles tournoyaient dans sa bouche béante;
La lyre, devenue en le touchant géante,
Chantait, pleurait, grondait, tonnait, jetait des cris;

Les ouragans étaient dans les sept cordes pris
Comme des moucherons dans de lugubres toiles;
Sa poitrine terrible était pleine d’étoiles.

Il cria:
«L’avenir, tel que les cieux le font,
» C’est l’élargissement dans l’infini sans fond,
» C’est l’esprit pénétrant de toutes parts la chose!
» On mutile l’effet en limitant la cause;
» Monde, tout le mal vient de la forme des dieux.
» On fait du ténébreux avec le radieux;
» Pourquoi mettre au-dessus de l’Être, des fantômes?
» Les clartés, les éthers ne sont pas des royaumes.
» Place au fourmillement éternel des cieux noirs,
» Des cieux bleus, des midis, des aurores, des soirs!
» Place à l’atome saint qui brûle ou qui ruisselle!
» Place au rayonnement de l’âme universelle!
» Un roi c’est de la guerre, un dieu c’est de la nuit.
» Liberté, vie et foi, sur le dogme détruit!
» Partout une lumière et partout un génie!
» Amour! tout s’entendra, tout étant l’harmonie!
» L’azur du ciel sera l’apaisement des loups.
» Place à Tout! Je suis Pan; Jupiter! à genoux.”

IX. La Rose de l’Infante

LA ROSE DE L’INFANTE

Elle est toute petite; une duègne la garde.
Elle tient à la main une rose et regarde.
Quoi? que regarde-t-elle? Elle ne sait pas. L’eau,
Un bassin qu’assombrit le pin et le bouleau;
Ce qu’elle a devant elle; un cygne aux ailes blanches,
Le bercement des flots sous la chanson des branches,
Et le profond jardin rayonnant et fleuri;
Tout ce bel ange a l’air dans la neige pétri.
On voit un grand palais comme au fond d’une gloire,
Un parc, de clairs viviers où les biches vont boire,
Et des paons étoilés sous les bois chevelus.
L’innocence est sur elle une blancheur de plus;
Toutes ses grâces font comme un faisceau qui tremble.
Autour de cette enfant l’herbe est splendide et semble
Pleine de vrais rubis et de diamants fins;
Un jet de saphirs sort des bouches des dauphins.
Elle se tient au bord de l’eau; sa fleur l’occupe;
Sa basquine est en point de Gênes; sur sa jupe
Une arabesque, errant dans les plis du satin,
Suit les mille détours d’un fil d’or florentin.
La rose épanouie et toute grande ouverte,
Sortant du frais bouton comme d’une urne verte,
Charge la petitesse exquise de sa main;
Quand l’enfant, allongeant ses lèvres de carmin,
Fronce, en la respirant, sa riante narine,
La magnifique fleur, royale et purpurine,
Cache plus qu’à demi ce visage charmant,
Si bien que l’œil hésite, et qu’on ne sait comment
Distinguer de la fleur ce bel enfant qui joue,
Et si l’on voit la rose ou si l’on voit la joue.

Ses yeux bleus sont plus beaux sous son pur sourcil brun.
En elle tout est joie, enchantement, parfum;
Quel doux regard, l’azur! et quel doux nom, Marie!
Tout est rayon; son œil éclaire et son nom prie.
Pourtant, devant la vie et sous le firmament,
Pauvre être! elle se sent très-grande vaguement;
Elle assiste au printemps, à la lumière, à l’ombre,
Au grand soleil couchant horizontal et sombre,
À la magnificence éclatante du soir,
Aux ruisseaux murmurants qu’on entend sans les voir,
Aux champs, à la nature éternelle et sereine,
Avec la gravité d’une petite reine;
Elle n’a jamais vu l’homme que se courbant;
Un jour, elle sera duchesse de Brabant;
Elle gouvernera la Flandre ou la Sardaigne.
Elle est l’infante, elle a cinq ans, elle dédaigne.
Car les enfants des rois sont ainsi; leurs fronts blancs
Portent un cercle d’ombre, et leurs pas chancelants
Sont des commencements de règne. Elle respire
Sa fleur en attendant qu’on lui cueille un empire;
Et son regard, déjà royal, dit: C’est à moi.
Il sort d’elle un amour mêlé d’un vague effroi.
Si quelqu’un, la voyant si tremblante et si frêle,
Fût-ce pour la sauver, mettait la main sur elle,
Avant qu’il eût pu faire un pas ou dire un mot,
Il aurait sur le front l’ombre de l’échafaud.

La douce enfant sourit, ne faisant autre chose
Que de vivre et d’avoir dans la main une rose,
Et d’être là devant le ciel, parmi les fleurs.

Le jour s’éteint; les nids chuchotent, querelleurs;
Les pourpres du couchant sont dans les branches d’arbre;
La rougeur monte au front des déesses de marbre
Qui semblent palpiter sentant venir la nuit;
Et tout ce qui planait redescend; plus de bruit,
Plus de flamme; le soir mystérieux recueille

Le soleil sous la vague et l’oiseau sous la feuille.

Pendant que l’enfant rit, cette fleur à la main,
Dans le vaste palais catholique romain
Dont chaque ogive semble au soleil une mitre,
Quelqu’un de formidable est derrière la vitre;
On voit d’en bas une ombre, au fond d’une vapeur,
De fenêtre en fenêtre errer, et l’on a peur;
Cette ombre au même endroit, comme en un cimetière,
Parfois est immobile une journée entière;
C’est un être effrayant qui semble ne rien voir;
Il rôde d’une chambre à l’autre, pâle et noir;
Il colle aux vitraux blancs son front lugubre, et songe;
Spectre blême! Son ombre aux feux du soir s’allonge;
Son pas funèbre est lent comme un glas de beffroi;
Et c’est la Mort, à moins que ce ne soit le Roi.

C’est lui; l’homme en qui vit et tremble le royaume.
Si quelqu’un pouvait voir dans l’œil de ce fantôme
Debout en ce moment l’épaule contre un mur,
Ce qu’on apercevrait dans cet abîme obscur,
Ce n’est pas l’humble enfant, le jardin, l’eau moirée
Reflétant le ciel d’or d’une claire soirée,
Les bosquets, les oiseaux se becquetant entre eux,
Non: au fond de cet œil comme l’onde vitreux,
Sous ce fatal sourcil qui dérobe à la sonde
Cette prunelle autant que l’océan profonde,
Ce qu’on distinguerait, c’est, mirage mouvant,
Tout un vol de vaisseaux en fuite dans le vent,
Et, dans l’écume, au pli des vagues, sous l’étoile,
L’immense tremblement d’une flotte à la voile,
Et, là-bas, sous la brume, une île, un blanc rocher,
Écoutant sur les flots ces tonnerres marcher.

Telle est la vision qui, dans l’heure où nous sommes,
Emplit le froid cerveau de ce maître des hommes,
Et qui fait qu’il ne peut rien voir autour de lui.

L’armada, formidable et flottant point d’appui
Du levier dont il va soulever tout un monde,
Traverse en ce moment l’obscurité de l’onde;
Le roi dans son esprit la suit des yeux, vainqueur,
Et son tragique ennui n’a plus d’autre lueur.

Philippe Deux était une chose terrible.
Iblis dans le Koran et Caïn dans la Bible
Sont à peine aussi noirs qu’en son Escurial
Ce royal spectre, fils du spectre impérial.
Philippe Deux était le Mal tenant le glaive.
Il occupait le haut du monde comme un rêve.
Il vivait: nul n’osait le regarder; l’effroi
Faisait une lumière étrange autour du roi;
On tremblait rien qu’à voir passer ses majordomes;
Tant il se confondait, aux yeux troublés des hommes,
Avec l’abîme, avec les astres du ciel bleu!
Tant semblait grande à tous son approche de Dieu!
Sa volonté fatale, enfoncée, obstinée,
Était comme un crampon mis sur la destinée;
Il tenait l’Amérique et l’Inde, il s’appuyait
Sur l’Afrique, il régnait sur l’Europe, inquiet
Seulement du côté de la sombre Angleterre;
Sa bouche était silence et son âme mystère;
Son trône était de piége et de fraude construit;
Il avait pour soutien la force de la nuit;
L’ombre était le cheval de sa statue équestre.
Toujours vêtu de noir, ce Tout-Puissant terrestre
Avait l’air d’être en deuil de ce qu’il existait;
Il ressemblait au sphinx qui digère et se tait;
Immuable; étant tout, il n’avait rien à dire.
Nul n’avait vu ce roi sourire; le sourire
N’étant pas plus possible à ces lèvres de fer
Que l’aurore à la grille obscure de l’enfer.
S’il secouait parfois sa torpeur de couleuvre,
C’était pour assister le bourreau dans son œuvre,
Et sa prunelle avait pour clarté le reflet

Des bûchers sur lesquels par moments il soufflait.
Il était redoutable à la pensée, à l’homme,
À la vie, au progrès, au droit, dévot à Rome;
C’était Satan régnant au nom de Jésus-Christ;
Les choses qui sortaient de son nocturne esprit
Semblaient un glissement sinistre de vipères.
L’Escurial, Burgos, Aranjuez, ses repaires,
Jamais n’illuminaient leurs livides plafonds;
Pas de festins, jamais de cour, pas de bouffons;
Les trahisons pour jeu, l’autodafé pour fête.
Les rois troublés avaient au-dessus de leur tête
Ses projets dans la nuit obscurément ouverts;
Sa rêverie était un poids sur l’univers;
Il pouvait et voulait tout vaincre et tout dissoudre;
Sa prière faisait le bruit sourd d’une foudre;
De grands éclairs sortaient de ses songes profonds.
Ceux auxquels il pensait disaient: Nous étouffons.
Et les peuples, d’un bout à l’autre de l’empire,
Tremblaient, sentant sur eux ces deux yeux fixes luire.

Charles fut le vautour, Philippe est le hibou.

Morne en son noir pourpoint, la toison d’or au cou,
On dirait du destin la froide sentinelle;
Son immobilité commande; sa prunelle
Luit comme un soupirail de caverne; son doigt
Semble, ébauchant un geste obscur que nul ne voit,
Donner un ordre à l’ombre et vaguement l’écrire.
Chose inouïe! il vient de grincer un sourire.
Un sourire insondable, impénétrable, amer.
C’est que la vision de son armée en mer
Grandit de plus en plus dans sa sombre pensée;
C’est qu’il la voit voguer par son dessein poussée,
Comme s’il était là, planant sous le zénith;
Tout est bien; l’océan docile s’aplanit;
L’armada lui fait peur comme au déluge l’arche;
La flotte se déploie en bon ordre de marche,

Et, les vaisseaux gardant les espaces fixés,
Échiquier de tillacs, de ponts, de mâts dressés,
Ondule sur les eaux comme une immense claie.
Ces vaisseaux sont sacrés; les flots leur font la haie;
Les courants, pour aider ces nefs à débarquer,
Ont leur besogne à faire et n’y sauraient manquer;
Autour d’elles la vague avec amour déferle,
L’écueil se change en port, l’écume tombe en perle.
Voici chaque galère avec son gastadour;
Voici ceux de l’Escaut, voilà ceux de l’Adour;
Les cent mestres de camp et les deux connétables;
L’Allemagne a donné ses ourques redoutables,
Naples ses brigantins, Cadiz ses galions,
Lisbonne ses marins, car il faut des lions.
Et Philippe se penche, et, qu’importe l’espace!
Non-seulement il voit, mais il entend. On passe,
On court, on va. Voici le cri des porte-voix,
Le pas des matelots courant sur les pavois,
Les moços, l’amiral appuyé sur son page,
Les tambours, les sifflets des maîtres d’équipage,
Les signaux pour la mer, l’appel pour les combats,
Le fracas sépulcral et noir du branle-bas.
Sont-ce des cormorans? sont-ce des citadelles?
Les voiles font un vaste et sourd battement d’ailes;
L’eau gronde, et tout ce groupe énorme vogue, et fuit,
Et s’enfle et roule avec un prodigieux bruit.
Et le lugubre roi sourit de voir groupées
Sur quatre cents vaisseaux quatre-vingt mille épées.
Ô rictus du vampire assouvissant sa faim!
Cette pâle Angleterre, il la tient donc enfin!
Qui pourrait la sauver? Le feu va prendre aux poudres.
Philippe dans sa droite a la gerbe des foudres;
Qui pourrait délier ce faisceau dans son poing?
N’est-il pas le seigneur qu’on ne contredit point?
N’est-il pas l’héritier de César? le Philippe
Dont l’ombre immense va du Gange au Pausilippe?
Tout n’est-il pas fini quand il a dit: Je veux!

N’est-ce pas lui qui tient la victoire aux cheveux?
N’est-ce pas lui qui lance en avant cette flotte,
Ces vaisseaux effrayants dont il est le pilote
Et que la mer charrie ainsi qu’elle le doit?
Ne fait-il pas mouvoir avec son petit doigt
Tous ces dragons ailés et noirs, essaim sans nombre?
N’est-il pas lui, le roi? n’est-il pas l’homme sombre
À qui ce tourbillon de monstres obéit?

Quand Béit-Cifresil, fils d’Abdallah-Béit,
Eut creusé le grand puits de la mosquée, au Caire,
Il y grava: « Le ciel est à Dieu; j’ai la terre.”
Et, comme tout se tient, se mêle et se confond,
Tous les tyrans n’étant qu’un seul despote au fond,
Ce que dit ce sultan jadis, ce roi le pense.
Cependant, sur le bord du bassin, en silence,
L’infante tient toujours sa rose gravement,
Et, doux ange aux yeux bleus, la baise par moment.
Soudain un souffle d’air, une de ces haleines
Que le soir frémissant jette à travers les plaines,
Tumultueux zéphyr effleurant l’horizon,
Trouble l’eau, fait frémir les joncs, met un frisson
Dans les lointains massifs de myrte et d’asphodèle,
Vient jusqu’au bel enfant tranquille, et, d’un coup d’aile,
Rapide, et secouant même l’arbre voisin,
Effeuille brusquement la fleur dans le bassin;
Et l’infante n’a plus dans la main qu’une épine.
Elle se penche, et voit sur l’eau cette ruine;
Elle ne comprend pas; qu’est-ce donc? Elle a peur;
Et la voilà qui cherche au ciel avec stupeur
Cette brise qui n’a pas craint de lui déplaire.
Que faire? Le bassin semble plein de colère;
Lui, si clair tout à l’heure, il est noir maintenant;
Il a des vagues; c’est une mer bouillonnant;
Toute la pauvre rose est éparse sur l’onde;
Ses cent feuilles, que noie et roule l’eau profonde,
Tournoyant, naufrageant, s’en vont de tous côtés

Sur mille petits flots par la brise irrités;
On croit voir dans un gouffre une flotte qui sombre.
« — Madame, dit la duègne avec sa face d’ombre
À la petite fille étonnée et rêvant,
Tout sur terre appartient aux princes, hors le vent.”

X. L'Inquisition

LES RAISONS DU MOMOTOMBO

Trouvant les tremblements de terre trop fréquents,
Les rois d'Espagne ont fait baptiser les volcans
Du royaume qu'ils ont en-dessous de la sphère;
Les volcans n'ont rien dit et se sont laissé faire,
Et le Momotombo lui seul n'a pas voulu.
Plus d'un prêtre en surplis, par le saint-père élu,
Portant le sacrement que l'Église administre,
L'œil au ciel, a monté la montagne sinistre;
Beaucoup y sont allés, pas un n'est revenu.

Ô vieux Momotombo, colosse chauve et nu,
Qui songe près des mers, et fais de ton cratère
Une tiare d'ombre et de flamme à la terre,
Pourquoi, lorsqu'à ton seuil terrible nous frappons,
Ne veux-tu pas du Dieu qu'on t'apporte? Réponds.

La montagne interrompt son crachement de lave,
Et le Momotombo répond d'une voix grave:

«Je n'aimais pas beaucoup le dieu qu'on a chassé.
Cet avare cachait de l'or dans un fossé;
Il mangeait de la chair humaine; ses mâchoires
Étaient de pourriture et de sang toutes noires.
Son antre était un porche au farouche carreau,
Temple sépulcre orné d'un pontife bourreau;
Des squelettes riaient sous ses pieds; les écuelles
Où cet être buvait le meurtre étaient cruelles;
Sourd, difforme, il avait des serpents au poignet;
Toujours entre ses dents un cadavre saignait;
Ce spectre noircissait le firmament sublime.
J'en grondais quelquefois au fond de mon abîme.

Aussi, quand sont venus, fiers sur les flots tremblants,
Et du côté d’où vient le jour, des hommes blancs,
Je les ai bien reçus, trouvant que c’était sage.
— L’âme a certainement la couleur du visage,
Disais-je; l’homme blanc, c’est comme le ciel bleu;
Et le dieu de ceux-ci doit être un très-bon dieu.
On ne le verra point de meurtre se repaître. —
J’étais content; j’avais horreur de l’ancien prêtre;
Mais, quand j’ai vu comment travaille le nouveau,
Quand j’ai vu flamboyer, ciel juste! à mon niveau!
Cette torche lugubre, âpre, jamais éteinte,
Sombre, que vous nommez l’Inquisition sainte,
Quand j’ai pu voir comment Torquemada s’y prend
Pour dissiper la nuit du sauvage ignorant,
Comment il civilise, et de quelle manière
Le saint office enseigne et fait de la lumière,
Quand j’ai vu dans Lima d’affreux géants d’osier,
Pleins d’enfants, pétiller sur un large brasier,
Et le feu dévorer la vie, et les fumées
Se tordre sur les seins des femmes allumées,
Quand je me suis senti parfois presque étouffé
Par l’âcre odeur qui sort de votre autodafé,
Moi qui ne brûlais rien que l’ombre en ma fournaise,
J’ai pensé que j’avais eu tort d’être bien aise;
J’ai regardé de près le dieu de l’étranger,
Et j’ai dit: — Ce n’est pas la peine de changer.”

XI. La Chanson des Aventuriers de la Mer

LA CHANSON DES AVENTURIERS DE LA MER

En partant du golfe d'Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

Tom Robin, matelot de Douvre,
Au Phare nous abandonna
Pour aller voir si l'on découvre
Satan, que l'archange enchaîna,
Quand un baîllement noir entr'ouvre
La gueule rouge de l'Etna.
En partant du golfe d'Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

En Calabre, une Tarentaise
Rendit fou Spitafangama;
À Gaëte, Ascagne fut aise
De rencontrer Michellema;
L'amour ouvrit la parenthèse,
Le mariage la ferma.

En partant du golfe d'Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

À Naple, Ébid, de Macédoine,
Fut pendu; c'était un faquin.
À Capri, l'on nous prit Antoine:
Aux galères pour un sequin!

À Malte, Ofani se fit moine
Et Gobbo se fit arlequin.
En partant du golfe d'Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

Autre perte: André, de Pavie,
Pris par les Turcs à Lipari,
Entra, sans en avoir envie,
Au sérail, et, sous cet abri,
Devint vertueux pour la vie,
Ayant été fort amoindri.

En partant du golfe d'Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

Puis, trois de nous, que rien ne gêne,
Ni loi, ni Dieu, ni souverain,
Allèrent, pour le prince Eugène
Aussi bien que pour Mazarin,
Aider Fuentes à prendre Gêne
Et d'Harcourt à prendre Turin.
En partant du golfe d'Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

Vers Livourne nous rencontrâmes
Les vingt voiles de Spinola.
Quel beau combat! Quatorze prames
Et six galères étaient là;
Mais, bah! rien qu'au bruit de nos rames
Toute la flotte s'envola!

En partant du golfe d’Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

À Notre-Dame-de-la-Garde,
Nous eûmes un charmant tableau;
Lucca Diavolo par mégarde
Prit sa femme à Pier’Angelo;
Sur ce, l’ange se mit en garde
Et jeta le diable dans l’eau.
En partant du golfe d’Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

À Palma, pour suivre Pescaire,
Huit nous quittèrent tour à tour;
Mais cela ne nous troubla guère;
On ne s’arrêta pas un jour.
Devant Alger on fit la guerre,
À Gibraltar on fit l’amour.

En partant du golfe d’Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

À nous dix, nous prîmes la ville;
— Et le roi lui-même! — Après quoi,
Maîtres du port, maîtres de l’île,
Ne sachant qu’en faire, ma foi,
D’une manière très-civile,
Nous rendîmes la ville au roi.
En partant du golfe d’Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,

Nous étions dix.

On fit ducs et grands de Castille
Mes neuf compagnons de bonheur,
Qui s’en allèrent à Séville
Épouser des dames d’honneur.
Le roi me dit: « Veux-tu ma fille?”
Et je lui dis: « Merci, seigneur!

En partant du golfe d’Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

» J’ai, là-bas, où des flots sans nombre
» Mugissent dans les nuits d’hiver,
» Ma belle farouche à l’œil sombre,
» Au sourire charmant et fier,
» Qui, tous les soirs, chantant dans l’ombre,
» Vient m’attendre au bord de la mer.
En partant du golfe d’Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

» J’ai ma Faënzette à Fiesone.
» C’est là que mon cœur est resté.
» Le vent fraîchit, la mer frissonne,
» Je m’en retourne, en vérité!
» Ô roi! ta fille a la couronne,
» Mais Faënzette a la beauté!”

En partant du golfe d’Otrante,
Nous étions trente;
Mais, en arrivant à Cadiz,
Nous étions dix.

XII. Dix-septième siècle - Les Mercenaires

LE RÉGIMENT DU BARON MADRUCE

(garde impériale suisse)

I

Lorsque le régiment des hallebardiers passe,
L’aigle à deux têtes, l’aigle à la griffe rapace,
L’aigle d’Autriche dit:
Voilà le régiment
De mes hallebardiers qui va superbement.
Leurs plumets font venir les filles aux fenêtres;
Ils marchent droits, tendant la pointe de leurs guêtres;
Leur pas est si correct, sans tarder ni courir,
Qu’on croit voir des ciseaux se fermer et s’ouvrir.
Et la belle musique, ardente et militaire!
Leur clairon fait sortir une rumeur de terre.
Tout cet éclat de rire orgueilleux et vainqueur
Que le soldat muet refoule dans son cœur,
Étouffé dans les rangs, s’échappe et se délivre
Sous le chapeau chinois aux clochettes de cuivre;
Le tambour roule avec un faste oriental,
Et vibre, tout tremblant de plaques de métal;
Si bien qu’on croit entendre en sa voix claire et gaie
Sonner allègrement les sequins de la paie;
La fanfare s’envole en bruyant falbala.
Quels bons autrichiens que ces étrangers-là!
Gloire aux hallebardiers! Ils n’ont point de scrupule
Contre la populace et contre la crapule,
Corrigeant dans les gueux mal vêtus la fureur
De venir regarder de trop près l’empereur;
Autour des archiducs leur pertuisane veille,
Et souvent d’une fête elle revient vermeille,
Ayant fait en passant quelques trous dans la chair

Du bas peuple en haillons qui trouve le pain cher;
Ils ont un air fâché qui tient la foule en bride;
Le grand soleil leur creuse aux sourcils une ride;
Ce régiment est beau sous les armes, rêvant
À la terreur qui suit son drapeau dans le vent;
Il a, comme un palais, ses tours et sa façade;
Tous sont hardis et forts, du fifre à l’anspessade;
Gloire aux hallebardiers splendides! ces piquiers
Sont une rude pièce aux royaux échiquiers;
On sent que ces gaillards sortent des avalanches
Qui des cols du Malpas roulent jusqu’à Sallenches;
En guerre, au feu, ce sont des tigres pour l’élan;
À Schœnbrunn, chacun d’eux a l’air d’un chambellan;
Auprès de leur cocarde ils piquent une rose;
Et tous, en même temps, graves, ont quelque chose
De froid, de sépulcral, d’altier, de solennel,
Le grand baron Madruce étant leur colonel!
Leur hallebarde est longue et s’ajoute à leur taille;
Quand ce dur régiment est dans une bataille,
— Lâchât-on contre lui les mamelouks du Nil, —
La meute des plus fiers escadrons, le chenil
Des bataillons les plus hideux, les plus épiques,
Regarde en reculant ce sanglier de piques.
Ils sont silencieux comme un nuage noir;
Ils laissent seulement, par instants, entrevoir
Une lueur tragique aux multitudes viles;
Parfois, leur humeur change, ils entrent dans les villes,
Ivres et gais, frappant leurs marmites de fer,
Et font devant le seuil des maisons un bruit fier,
Heureux, vainqueurs, sanglants, chantant à pleine bouche
La noce de la joie et du sabre farouche;
Ils ont nommé, tuant, mourant pour de l’argent,
Trépas, leur capitaine, et Danger, leur sergent;
Ils traînent dans leurs rangs, avec gloire et furie,
Comme un trophée utile à mettre en batterie,
Six canons qu’a pleurés monsieur de Brandebourg;
Comme ils vous font japper cela contre un faubourg!

Comme ils en ont craché naguère la volée
Sur Comorn, la Hongrie étant démuselée!
Et comme ils ont troué de boulets le manteau
De Vérone, livrée au feu par Colalto!
Les déclarations de guerre les font rire;
Ils signent ce qu'il plaît à l'empereur d'écrire;
Sous les puissants édits, sous les rescrits altiers,
Au bas des hauts décrets, ils mettent volontiers
Ce grand paraphe obscur qu'on nomme la mêlée;
Leur bannière à longs plis, toute bariolée,
Est une glorieuse et fait claquer son fouet;
Wallstein, comme une foudre au poing, les secouait;
Leur mode est d'envoyer la bombe en ambassade;
Ils sont pour l'ennemi de mine si maussade
Que s'ils allaient un jour, sur la terre ou la mer,
Guerroyer quelque prince allié de l'enfer,
Rien qu'en apercevant leurs profils sous le feutre,
Satan se sentirait le goût de rester neutre.
Aussi, lourde est la solde et riche est le loyer.
Quand on veut des héros, il faut les bien payer.
On n'a point vu, depuis Boleslas Lèvre-Torte,
Une bande de gens de bataille plus forte
Et des alignements d'estafiers plus hagards;
Max en fait cas, Tilly pour eux a des égards,
Fritz les aime; en voyant ces moustaches féroces,
Les femmes de la cour ont peur dans leurs carrosses,
Et disent: « Qu'ils sont beaux!" Leurs os sont de granit;
L'électeur de Mayence en passant les bénit,
Et l'abbé de Fulda leur rit dans sa simarre;
Leur habit est d'un drap cramoisi, que chamarre
Un galon triomphal, auguste, étincelant;
Ils ont deux frocs de guerre, un jaune et l'autre blanc;
Sur le jaune, l'or brille et largement éclate;
Quand ils portent le blanc sur la veste écarlate,
Car la pompe des cours aime ce train changeant,
On leur voit sur le corps ruisseler tant d'argent
Que ces fils des glaciers semblent couverts de givre.

Une troupe d’enfants s’extasie à les suivre.
Ils gardent à Schœnbrunn le secret corridor.
Sur l’épaule, en brocart brodé de pourpre et d’or,
Ils ont, quoique plus d’un soit hérétique en somme,
Le blason de l’empire et le blason de Rome;
Mais leur cœur huguenot sans courroux le subit,
Et, quand l’âge ou la guerre ont usé leur habit,
Et qu’il faut au Prater devant des rois paraître,
Chacun d’eux, devenu bon tailleur de bon reître,
S’accroupit, prend l’aiguille, et remet en état
L’écusson orthodoxe à son dos apostat.
Ce sont de braves gens. Jamais ils ne vacillent.
En longs buissons mouvants leurs hallebardes brillent.
À Prague, à Parme, à Pesth, devant Mariendal,
Ils soutiennent le vaste empereur féodal;
La révolte autour d’eux se brise, échoue et sombre;
Ils ont le flamboiement, l’ordre et l’épaisseur sombre;
Le vertige me prend moi-même dans les airs
En regardant marcher cette forêt d’éclairs.

II

Lorsque le régiment des hallebardiers passe,
L’aigle montagnard, l’aigle orageux de l’espace,
Qui parle au précipice et que le gouffre entend,
Et qui plane au-dessus des trônes, emportant
Dans le ciel, son pays, la liberté, sa proie;
Le sublime témoin du soleil qui flamboie,
L’aigle des Alpes, roi du pic et du hallier,
Dresse la tête au bruit de ce pas régulier,
Et crie, et jusqu’au ciel sa voix hautaine monte:

Ô chute! ignominie! inexprimable honte!
Ces marcheurs alignés, ces êtres qui vont là
En pompe impériale, en housse de gala,
Ce sont de libres fils de ma libre montagne!
Ah! les bassets en laisse et les forçats au bagne
Sont grands, sont purs, sont fiers, sont beaux et glorieux

Près de ceux-ci, qui, nés dans les lieux sérieux
Où comme des roseaux les hauts mélèzes ploient,
Fils des rochers sacrés et terribles, emploient
La fermeté du pied dans les cols périlleux,
Le mystérieux sang des mères aux yeux bleus,
L'audace dont l'autan nous emplit les narines,
Le divin gonflement de l'air dans les poitrines,
La grâce des ravins couronnés de bouquets,
Et la force des monts, à se faire laquais!
La contrée affranchie et joyeuse, matrice
De l'idée indomptable, âpre et libératrice,
La patrie au flanc rude, aux bons pics arrogants,
Qui portait les héros mêlés aux ouragans,
Douce, délivrant l'homme et délivrant la bête,
Sauvage, ayant le bruit des chutes d'eau pour fête
Et la sereine horreur des antres pour palais,
La terre qui nous montre au milieu des chalets
Le fier archer d'Altorf tenant son arbalète,
Et, titan, au-dessus du lac qui le reflète,
Enjambant les grands monts comme des escaliers,
La voilà maintenant nourrice de geôliers,
Et l'on voit pendre ensemble à ses sombres mamelles
La honte avec la gloire, ainsi que deux jumelles!
L'aigle à deux fronts, marqué de son double soufflet,
À cette heure à travers nos pâtres boit son lait!

Quoi! la trompe d'Uri sonnant de roche en roche,
La couronne de fer qu'un montagnard décroche,
Les baillis jetés bas, le Föhn soufflant dix mois,
Ces pentes de granit où saute le chamois
Et qui firent glisser Charles le Téméraire,
Le Mont-Blanc qui ne dit qu'à l'Himalaya: Frère!
Ces sommets, éclatants comme d'énormes lys;
Quoi! le Pilate, quoi! le Rigi! Titlis,
Ce triangle hideux de géants noirs, qui cerne
Et qui garde le lac tragique de Lucerne;
Quoi! la vaste gaîté des nuages, des fleurs,

Des eaux, des ouragans puissants et querelleurs;
Quoi! l’honneur, quoi! l’épieu de Sempach, la cognée
De Morat bondissant hors des bois indignée,
La faux de Morgarten, la fourche de Granson;
La rudesse du roc, la fierté du buisson;
Ces cris, ces feux de paille allumés sur les faîtes;
Quoi! sur l’affreux faisceau des lances stupéfaites
L’immense éventrement de Winkelried joyeux;
Quoi! les filles d’Albis, anges aux chastes yeux,
Les grandes mers de glace et leurs ondes muettes,
Les porches d’ombre où fuit le vol des gypaëtes,
Quoi! l’homme affranchi, quoi! ces serments, cette foi,
Le bâton paysan brisant le glaive roi,
Quoi! dans l’altier sursaut de la vengeance austère,
Comme la vieille France a chassé l’Angleterre,
L’Helvétie en fureur chassant l’Autrichien,
Et l’empereur, cet ours, et l’archiduc, ce chien,
T’ayant pour Jeanne d’Arc, ô Jungfrau formidable;
Quoi! toute cette histoire auguste, inabordable,
Escarpée, au front haut, au chant libre, à l’œil clair,
Blanche comme la neige, âpre comme l’hiver,
Et du farouche vent des cimes enivrée,
Terre et cieux! Aboutit à la Suisse en livrée!

Est-ce que le Mont-Blanc ne va pas se lever?
Ah! ceci va plus loin qu’on ne pourrait rêver!
Plus loin qu’on ne pourrait calomnier! Oui, certes,
L’indépendance, errant dans nos gorges désertes,
Franche et vraie, et riant sous le ciel pluvieux,
A des ennemis; certe, elle a des envieux;
Ces menteurs ont construit bien des choses contre elle;
Chaque jour, leur amère et lugubre querelle
Imagine une boue à lui jeter au front,
Et cherche quelque forme horrible de l’affront;
Ils ont contre sa vieille et vénérable gloire
Tout fait, tout publié, tout dit, tout semblé croire,
Ils ont tout supposé, tout vomi, tout bavé,

Mais cela cependant, ils ne l’ont pas trouvé;
Non, il n’en est pas un qui, dans sa rage, invente
La liberté s’offrant aux rois comme servante!

Qu’est-ce que nous allons devenir maintenant?
Devant ce résultat lugubre et surprenant,
Qu’est-ce qu’on va penser de nous, chênes, mélèzes,
Lacs qui vous insurgez sous les rudes falaises,
Granits qui des géants semblez le dur talon?
Qu’est-ce qu’on va penser de toi, fauve aquilon?
Qu’est-ce qu’on va penser de votre miel, abeilles?
Comme vous aurez honte, ô douces fleurs vermeilles,
Œillets, jasmins, d’avoir connu ces hommes-ci!
Puisque l’opprobre riche est par vos cœurs choisi,
Puisque c’est vous qu’on voit vêtus de l’or des princes,
Superbement hideux et gardeurs de provinces,
Pâtres, soyez maudits. Oh! vous étiez si beaux,
Honnêtes, en haillons, et libres, en sabots!

Auriez-vous donc besoin de faste? Est-ce la pompe
Des parades, des cours, des galas qui vous trompe?
Mais alors, regardez. Est-ce que mes vallons
N’ont pas les torrents blancs d’écume pour galons?
Mai brode à mes rochers la passementerie
Des perles de rosée et des fleurs de prairie;
Mes vieux monts pour dorure ont le soleil levant;
Et chacun d’eux, brumeux, branle un panache au vent
D’où sort le roulement sinistre des tonnerres;
S’il vous faut, au milieu des forêts centenaires,
Une livrée, à vous les voisins du ciel bleu,
Pourquoi celle des rois, ayant celle de Dieu?
Ah! vous raccommodez vos habits! vos aiguilles,
Sœurs des sabres vendus, indigneraient des filles!
Ah! vous raccommodez vos habits! Venez voir,
Quand la saison commence à venter, à pleuvoir,
Comment l’altier Pelvoux, vieillard à tête blanche,
Sait, tout déguenillé de grêle et d’avalanche,

Mettre à ses cieux troués une pièce d'azur,
Et, croisant les genoux dans quelque gouffre obscur,
Tranquille, se servir de l'éclair pour recoudre
Sa robe de nuée et son manteau de foudre!

Sur la terre où tout jette un miasme empoisonneur,
Où même cet instinct qu'on appelle l'honneur
De pente en pente au fond de la bassesse glisse,
Il n'est qu'un peuple libre, un montagnard, la Suisse;
Tous les autres, ramant l'ombre des deux côtés,
Sont les galériens des blêmes royautés;
Or, les rois ont eu l'art de mettre en équilibre
Les pauvres peuples serfs avec le peuple libre,
Et font garder, afin que l'ordre soit complet,
Les esclaves, forçats, par le libre, valet.

Et dire que la Suisse eut jadis l'envergure
D'un peuple qui se lève et qui se transfigure!
Ô vils marchands d'eux-même! immonde abaissement!
Leur enfance a reçu ce haut enseignement
Qu'un peuple s'affranchit, c'est-à-dire se crée,
Par la révolte sainte et l'émeute sacrée,
Qu'il faut rompre ses fers, vaincre, et que le lion
Superbe, pour crinière a la rébellion;
C'est leur dogme. À cette heure, ils ont dans leur service
De punir dans autrui leur vertu comme un vice;
Ils le font. Les voici prêtant main-forte aux rois
Contre un Sempach lombard, contre un Morat hongrois!
Si bien que maintenant, c'est fini. Nous en sommes
À cette indignité qu'en tout pays les hommes
Entendent l'Helvétie, en des coins ténébreux,
Chuchoter, proposant à leurs maîtres contre eux
Ses archers, d'autant plus lâches qu'ils sont plus braves,
Fille publique auprès des nations esclaves;
Et que le despotisme, habile à tout plier,
Met au monde un carcan, à la Suisse un collier!

Donc, César vous admet dans ses royaux repaires;
César daigne oublier que vous avez pour pères
Tous nos vieux héros, purs comme le firmament;
Même un peu de pardon se mêle à son paiement;
L'iniquité, le dol, le mal, la tyrannie,
Vous font grâce, et, riant, vous laissent l'ironie
De leur porte à défendre, et d'un tambour honteux
Et d'un clairon abject à sonner devant eux!
Hélas! n'eût-on pas cru ces monts invulnérables!

Oh! comme vous voilà fourvoyés, misérables!
D'où venez-vous? De Pesth. Et qu'avez-vous fait là?
L'aigle à deux fronts, sur qui Guillaume Tell souffla,
Suivait vos bataillons de son regard oblique;
Trois ans d'atrocité sur la place publique,
Trois ans de coups de hache et de barres de fer,
Les billots, les bûchers, les fourches, tout l'enfer,
Les supplices hurlant dans la brume hagarde,
C'est là ce que l'Autriche a mis sous votre garde.
Devant vous, on tuait le juste et l'innocent,
Les coudes des bourreaux étaient rouges de sang,
Les glaives s'ébréchaient sur les nuques, la corde
Coupait d'un hoquet noir le cri: Miséricorde!
On prodiguait au bois en feu plus de vivants
Qu'il n'en pouvait brûler, même aidé par les vents,
On mêlait le héros dans la flamme à l'apôtre,
L'un n'était pas fini que l'on commençait l'autre,
Les têtes des plus saints et des plus vénérés
Pourrissaient au soleil au bout des pieux ferrés,
On marquait d'un fer chaud le sein fumant des femmes,
On rouait des vieillards, et vous êtes infâmes.
Voilà ce que je dis, moi, l'aigle pour de bon.
Le fourbe Gaïnas et le louche Bourbon
N'ont trahi que des rois dans leur noirceur profonde,
Mais vous, vous trahissez la liberté du monde;
Votre fanfare sort du charnier, vos tambours
Sont pleins du cri des morts dénonçant les Habsbourgs;

Et, lorsque vous croyez chanter dans la trompette,
Ce chant joyeux, la tombe en sanglot le répète.
Forçant Mantoue, à Pesth aidant le coutelas,
Buquoy, Mozellani, Londorone, Galas,
Sont vos chefs; vous avez, reîtres, fait une espèce
De hauts faits et d’exploits dont la fange est épaisse;
À Bergame, à Pavie, à Crême, à Guastalla,
Vous témoins, vous présents, vous mettant le holà,
À la sainte Italie on lisait sa sentence;
On promenait de rue en rue une potence,
Et, vous, vous escortiez la charrette; et ceci
Ne vous quittera plus, et sans fin ni merci
Ce souvenir vous suit, étant de la nuit noire;
Ô malheureux! vos noms traverseront l’histoire
À jamais balafrés par l’ombre qui tombait
Sur vos drapeaux des bras difformes du gibet.

Deuil sans fond! c’est l’honneur de leur pays qu’ils tuent;
En se prostituant, c’est moi qu’ils prostituent;
Nos vieux pins ont fourni leurs piques dont l’acier
Apporte dans l’égout le reflet du glacier;
Ils traînent avec eux la Suisse, quoi qu’on dise;
Et les pâles aïeux sont dans leur bâtardise;
Nos héros sont mêlés à leurs rangs, Nos grands noms
Sont de leurs lâchetés parents et compagnons,
De sorte que, dans l’ombre où César supplicie
Le Salzbourg, la Hongrie aux fers, la Dalmatie,
Quand Fritz jette au bûcher le Tyrol prisonnier,
Quand Jean lie au poteau l’Alsace, quand Reynier
Bat de verges Crémone échevelée et nue,
Quand Rodolphe après Jean et Reynier continue,
Quand Mathias livre Ancône au sabre du hulan,
Quand Albrecht Dent-de-Fer exécute Milan,
Autour des nations qui râlent sur la claie,
Furst, et Guillaume Tell, et Melchthal font la haie!

Est-ce qu’ils oseront rentrer sur nos hauteurs,

Ces anciens laboureurs et ces anciens pasteurs
Que l’Autriche aujourd’hui caserne dans ses bouges?
Est-ce qu’ils reviendront avec leurs habits rouges,
Portant sur leur front morne et dans leur œil fatal
La domesticité monstrueuse du mal?
S’ils osent revenir, si, pour faveur dernière,
L’Autriche leur permet d’emporter sa bannière,
S’ils rentrent dans nos monts avec cet étendard
Dont l’ombre fait d’un homme et d’un pâtre un soudard,
Oh! quelle auge de porcs, quelle cuve de fange,
Quelle étable inouïe, épouvantable, étrange,
Femmes, essuierez-vous avec ce drapeau-là?
Jamais dans plus de nuit un peuple ne croula.
Désespoir! désespoir de voir mes Alpes sombres
Honteuses, projeter leurs gigantesques ombres
Jusque dans l’antichambre infâme des tyrans!
Cieux profonds, purs azurs sacrés et fulgurants,
Laissez-moi m’en aller dans vos gouffres sublimes!
Que je perde de vue, au fond des clairs abîmes,
La terre, et l’homme, acteur féroce ou vil témoin!
Ô sombre immensité, laisse-moi fuir si loin
Que je voie, à travers tes prodigieux voiles,
Décroître le soleil et grandir les étoiles!
*

Aigle, ne t’en va pas; reste aux Alpes uni,
Et reprends confiance, au seuil de l’infini,
Aigle, dans la candeur des neiges éternelles;
Ne t’en va pas; et laisse en tes glauques prunelles
Les foudres apaisés redevenir rayons;
Penchons-nous, moins amers, sur ce que nous voyons;
La faute est sur les temps et n’est pas sur les hommes.

Un flamboiement sinistre emporte les Sodomes,
Tout est dit. Mais la Suisse au-dessus de l’affront
Gardera l’auréole altière de son front;
Car c’est la roche avec de la bonté pétrie,

C’est la grande montagne et la grande patrie,
C’est la terre sereine assise près du ciel;
C’est elle qui, gardant pour les pâtres le miel,
Fit connaître l’abeille aux rois par les piqûres;
C’est elle qui, parmi les nations obscures,
La première alluma sa lampe dans la nuit;
Le cri de délivrance est fait avec son bruit;
Le mot Liberté semble une voix naturelle
De ses prés sous l’azur, de ses lacs sous la grêle,
Et tout dans ses monts, l’air, la terre, l’eau, le feu,
Le dit avec l’accent dont le prononce Dieu!
Au-dessus des palais de tous les rois ensemble,
La pauvre vieille Suisse, où le rameau seul tremble,
Tranquille, élèvera toujours sur l’horizon
Les pignons effrayants de sa haute maison.
Rien ne ternit ces pics que la tempête lave,
Volcans de neige ayant la lumière pour lave,
Qui versent sur l’Europe un long ruissellement
De courage, de foi, d’honneur, de dévouement,
Et semblent sur la terre une chaîne d’exemples;
Toujours ces monts auront des figures de temples.
Qu’est-ce qu’un peu de fange humaine jaillissant
Vers ces sublimités d’où la clarté descend?
Ces pics sont la ruine énorme des vieux âges
Où les hommes vivaient bons, aimants, simples, sages;
Débris du chaste éden par la paix habité,
Ils sont beaux; de l’aurore et de la vérité
Ils sont la colossale et splendide masure;
Où tombe le flocon que fait l’éclaboussure?
Qu’importe un jour de deuil quand, sous l’œil éternel,
Ce que noircit la terre est blanchi par le ciel?

L’homme s’est vendu. Soit. A-t-on dans le louange
Compris le lac, le bois, la ronce, le nuage?
La nature revient, germe, fleurit, dissout,
Féconde, croît, décroît, rit, passe, efface tout.
La Suisse est toujours là, libre. Prend-on au piége

Le précipice, l’ombre et la bise et la neige?
Signe-t-on des marchés dans lesquels il soit dit
Que l’Orteler s’enrôle et devient un bandit?
Quel poing cyclopéen, dites, ô roches noires,
Pourra briser la Dent de Morcle en vos mâchoires?
Quel assembleur de bœufs pourra forger un joug
Qui du pic de Glaris aille au piton de Zoug?
C’est naturellement que les monts sont fidèles
Et purs, ayant la forme âpre des citadelles,
Ayant reçu de Dieu des créneaux où, le soir,
L’homme peut, d’embrasure en embrasure, voir
Étinceler le fer de lance des étoiles.
Est-il une araignée, aigle, qui dans ses toiles
Puisse prendre la trombe et la rafale et toi?
Quel chef recrutera le Salève? à quel roi
Le Mythen dira-t-il: « Sire, je vais descendre!”
Qu’après avoir dompté l’Athos, quelque Alexandre,
Sorte de héros monstre aux cornes de taureau,
Aille donc relever sa robe à la Jungfrau!
Comme la vierge, ayant l’ouragan sur l’épaule,
Crachera l’avalanche à la face du drôle!

Aigle, ne maudis pas, au nom des clairs torrents,
Les tristes hommes, fous, aveugles, ignorants.
Puis, est-ce pour jamais qu’on embauche les hommes?
Non, non. Les Alpes sont plus fortes que les Romes;
Le pays tire à lui l’humble pâtre pleurant;
Et, si César l’a pris, le Mont-Blanc le reprend.

Non, rien n’est mort ici. Tout grandit, et s’en vante.
L’Helvétie est sacrée et la Suisse est vivante;
Ces monts sont des héros et des religieux;
Cette nappe de neige aux plis prodigieux
D’où jaillit, lorsqu’en mai la tiède brise ondoie,
Toute une floraison folle d’air et de joie,
Et d’où sortent des lacs et des flots murmurants,
N’est le linceul de rien, excepté des tyrans.

Gloire aux monts! leur front brille et la nuit se dissipe.
C’est plus que le matin qui luit; c’est un principe!
Ces mystérieux jours blanchissant les hauteurs,
Qu’on prend pour des rayons, sont des libérateurs;
Toujours aux fiers sommets ces aubes sont données:
Aux Alpes Stauffacher, Pélage aux Pyrénées!

La Suisse dans l’histoire aura le dernier mot
Puisqu’elle est deux fois grande, étant pauvre, et là-haut;
Puisqu’elle a sa montagne et qu’elle a sa cabane.
La houlette de Schwitz qu’une vierge enrubanne,
Fière, et, quand il le faut, se hérissant de clous,
Chasse les rois ainsi qu’elle chasse les loups.
Gloire au chaste pays que le Léman arrose!
À l’ombre de Melchthal, à l’ombre du Mont-Rose,
La Suisse trait sa vache et vit paisiblement.
Sa blanche liberté s’adosse au firmament.

Le soleil, quand il vient dorer une chaumière,
Fait que le toit de paille est un toit de lumière;
Telle est la Suisse, ayant l’honneur dans ses prés verts,
Et de son indigence éclairant l’univers.
Tant que les nations garderont leurs frontières,
La Suisse éclatera parmi les plus altières;
Quand les peuples riront et s’embrasseront tous,
La Suisse sera douce au milieu des plus doux.

Suisse! à l’heure où l’Europe enfin marchera seule,
Tu verras accourir vers toi, sévère aïeule,
La jeune Humanité sous son chapeau de fleurs;
Tes hommes bons seront chers aux hommes meilleurs;
Les fléaux disparus, faux dieu, faux roi, faux prêtre,
Laisseront le front blanc de la paix apparaître;
Et les peuples viendront en foule te bénir,
Quand la guerre mourra, quand, devant l’avenir,
On verra, dans l’horreur des tourbillons funèbres,
Se hâter pêle-mêle au milieu des ténèbres,

Comme d’affreux oiseaux heurtant leurs ailerons,
Une fuite effrénée et noire de clairons!

En attendant, la Suisse a dit au monde: Espère!
Elle a de la vieille hydre effrayé le repaire;
Ce qu’elle a fait jadis, pour les siècles est fait;
La façon dont la Suisse à Sempach triomphait
Reste la grande audace et la grande manière
D’attaquer une bête au fond de sa tanière.
Tous ses nuages, blancs ou noirs, sont des drapeaux.
L’exemple, c’est le fait dans sa gloire, au repos,
Qui charge lentement les cœurs et recommence;
Melchthal, grave et penché sur le monde, ensemence.

Un jour, à Bâle, Albrecht, l’empereur triomphant,
Vit une jeune mère auprès d’un jeune enfant;
La mère était charmante; elle semblait encore,
Comme l’enfant, sortie à peine de l’aurore;
L’empereur écouta de près leurs doux ébats,
Et la mère disait à son enfant tout bas:
«Fils, quand tu seras grand, meurs pour la bonne cause!”
Oh! rien ne flétrira cette feuille de rose!
Toujours le despotisme en sentira le pli.
Toujours les mains prêtant le serment du Grutli
Apparaîtront en rêve au peuple en léthargie;
Toujours les oppresseurs auront, dans leur orgie,
Sur la lividité de leur face l’effroi
Du tocsin qu’Unterwald cache dans son beffroi.
Tant que les nations au joug seront nouées,
Tant que l’aigle à deux becs sera dans les nuées,
Tant que dans le brouillard des montagnes l’éclair
Ébauchera le spectre insolent de Gessler,
On verra Tell songer dans quelque coin terrible;
Et les iniquités, la violence horrible,
La fraude, le pouvoir du vainqueur meurtrier,
Cibles noires, craindront cet arbalétrier.
Assis à leur souper, car c’est leur crépuscule,

Et le jour qui pour nous monte, pour eux recule,
Les satrapes seront éblouissants à voir,
Raillant la conscience, insultant le devoir,
Mangeant dans les plats d’or et les coupes d’opales,
Joyeux; mais par instants ils deviendront tout pâles,
Feront taire l’orchestre, et, la sueur au front,
Penchés, se parlant bas, tremblants, regarderont
S’il n’est pas quelque part, là, derrière la table,
Calme, et serrant l’écrou de son arc redoutable.
Pourtant il se pourra qu’à de certains moments,
Dans les satiétés et les enivrements,
Ils se disent: « Les yeux n’ont plus rien de sévère;
Guillaume Tell est mort.” Ils rempliront leur verre,
Et le monde comme eux oubliera. Tout à coup,
À travers les fléaux et les crimes debout,
Et l’ombre, et l’esclavage, et les hontes sans nombre,
On entendra siffler la grande flèche sombre.

Oui, c’est là la foi sainte, et, quand nous étouffons,
Dieu nous fait respirer par ces pensers profonds.
Au-dessus des tyrans l’histoire est abondante
En spectres que du doigt Tacite montre à Dante;
Tous ces fantômes sont la liberté planant,
Et toujours prête à dire aux hommes: « Maintenant!”
Et, depuis Padrona Kalil aux jambes nues
Jusqu’à Franklin ôtant le tonnerre des nues,
Depuis Léonidas jusqu’à Kosciuzko,
Le cri des uns du cri des autres est l’écho.
Oui, sur vos actions, de tant de deuil mêlées,
Multipliez les plis des pourpres étoilées,
Ayez pour vous l’oracle, et Delphe avec Endor,
Maîtres; riez, le front coiffé du laurier d’or,
Aux pieds de la fortune infâme et colossale;
Tout à coup Botzaris entrera dans la salle,
Byron se dressera, le poëte héros,
Tzavellas, indigné du succès des bourreaux,
Soufflettera le groupe effaré des victoires;

Et l’on verra surgir au-dessus de vos gloires
L’effrayant avoyer Gundoldingen, cassant
Sur César le sapin des Alpes teint de sang!

XIII. Maintenant

Après la bataille

Mon père, ce héros au sourire si doux,
Suivi d’un seul housard qu’il aimait entre tous
Pour sa grande bravoure et pour sa haute taille,
Parcourait à cheval, le soir d’une bataille,
Le champ couvert de morts sur qui tombait la nuit.
Il lui sembla dans l’ombre entendre un faible bruit.
C’était un Espagnol de l’armée en déroute
Qui se traînait sanglant sur le bord de la route,
Râlant, brisé, livide, et mort plus qu’à moitié,
Et qui disait: « À boire! à boire par pitié!”
Mon père, ému, tendit à son housard fidèle
Une gourde de rhum qui pendait à sa selle,
Et dit: « Tiens, donne à boire à ce pauvre blessé.”
Tout à coup, au moment où le housard baissé
Se penchait vers lui, l’homme, une espèce de Maure,
Saisit un pistolet qu’il étreignait encore,
Et vise au front mon père en criant: « Caramba!”
Le coup passa si près, que le chapeau tomba
Et que le cheval fit un écart en arrière.
«Donne-lui tout de même à boire,” dit mon père.

e Crapaud

Que savons-nous? Qui donc connaît le fond des choses?
Le couchant rayonnait dans les nuages roses;
C’était la fin d’un jour d’orage, et l’occident
Changeait l’ondée en flamme en son brasier ardent;
Près d’une ornière, au bord d’une flaque de pluie,
Un crapaud regardait le ciel, bête éblouie;
Grave, il songeait; l’horreur contemplait la splendeur.
(Oh! pourquoi la souffrance et pourquoi la laideur?
Hélas! le bas-empire est couvert d’Augustules,

Les césars de forfaits, les crapauds de pustules,
Comme le pré de fleurs et le ciel de soleils.)
Les feuilles s'empourpraient dans les arbres vermeils;
L'eau miroitait, mêlée à l'herbe, dans l'ornière:
Le soir se déployait ainsi qu'une bannière;
L'oiseau baissait la voix dans le jour affaibli;
Tout s'apaisait, dans l'air, sur l'onde; et, plein d'oubli,
Le crapaud, sans effroi, sans honte, sans colère,
Doux, regardait la grande auréole solaire;
Peut-être le maudit se sentait-il béni;
Pas de bête qui n'ait un reflet d'infini;
Pas de prunelle abjecte et vile que ne touche
L'éclair d'en-haut, parfois tendre et parfois farouche;
Pas de monstre chétif, louche, impur, chassieux,
Qui n'ait l'immensité des astres dans les yeux.
Un homme qui passait vit la hideuse bête,
Et, frémissant, lui mit son talon sur la tête;
C'était un prêtre ayant un livre qu'il lisait;
Puis une femme, avec une fleur au corset,
Vint et lui creva l'œil du bout de son ombrelle;
Et le prêtre était vieux, et la femme était belle;
Vinrent quatre écoliers, sereins comme le ciel.
— J'étais enfant, j'étais petit, j'étais cruel; —
Tout homme sur la terre, où l'âme erre asservie,
Peut commencer ainsi le récit de sa vie.
On a le jeu, l'ivresse et l'aube dans les yeux,
On a sa mère, on est des écoliers joyeux,

De petits hommes gais, respirant l'atmosphère
À pleins poumons, aimés, libres, contents, que faire
Sinon de torturer quelque être malheureux?
Le crapaud se traînait au fond du chemin creux.
C'était l'heure où des champs les profondeurs s'azurent;
Fauve, il cherchait la nuit; les enfants l'aperçurent
Et crièrent: « Tuons ce vilain animal,
Et, puisqu'il est si laid, faisons-lui bien du mal!"
Et chacun d'eux, riant, — l'enfant rit quand il tue, —

Se mit à le piquer d’une branche pointue
Élargissant le trou de l’œil crevé, blessant
Les blessures, ravis, applaudis du passant;
Car les passants riaient; et l’ombre sépulcrale
Couvrait ce noir martyr qui n’a pas même un râle,
Et le sang, sang affreux, de toutes parts coulait
Sur ce pauvre être ayant pour crime d’être laid;
Il fuyait; il avait une patte arrachée;
Un enfant le frappait d’une pelle ébréchée;
Et chaque coup faisait écumer ce proscrit
Qui, même quand le jour sur sa tête sourit,
Même sous le grand ciel, rampe au fond d’une cave;
Et les enfants disaient: « Est-il méchant! il bave!”
Son front saignait, son œil pendait; dans le genêt
Et la ronce, effroyable à voir, il cheminait;
On eût dit qu’il sortait de quelque affreuse serre;
Oh! la sombre action! empirer la misère!
Ajouter de l’horreur à la difformité!
Disloqué, de cailloux en cailloux cahoté,
Il respirait toujours; sans abri, sans asile,
Il rampait; on eût dit que la mort difficile
Le trouvait si hideux qu’elle le refusait;
Les enfants le voulaient saisir dans un lacet,
Mais il leur échappa, glissant le long des haies;
L’ornière était béante, il y traîna ses plaies
Et s’y plongea, sanglant, brisé, le crâne ouvert,
Sentant quelque fraîcheur dans ce cloaque vert,
Lavant la cruauté de l’homme en cette boue;
Et les enfants, avec le printemps sur la joue,
Blonds, charmants, ne s’étaient jamais tant divertis;
Tous parlaient à la fois, et les grands aux petits
Criaient: « Viens voir! dis donc, Adolphe, dis donc, Pierre,
Allons pour l’achever prendre une grosse pierre!”
Tous ensemble, sur l’être au hasard exécré,
Ils fixaient leurs regards, et le désespéré
Regardait s’incliner sur lui ces fronts horribles.
— Hélas! ayons des buts, mais n’ayons pas de cibles;

Quand nous visons un point de l’horizon humain,
Ayons la vie, et non la mort, dans notre main. —
Tous les yeux poursuivaient le crapaud dans la vase;
C’était de la fureur et c’était de l’extase;
Un des enfants revint, apportant un pavé,
Pesant, mais pour le mal aisément soulevé,
Et dit: « Nous allons voir comment cela va faire.”
Or, en ce même instant, juste à ce point de terre,
Le hasard amenait un chariot très-lourd
Traîné par un vieux âne écloppé, maigre et sourd;
Cet âne harassé, boiteux et lamentable,
Après un jour de marche approchait de l’étable;
Il roulait la charrette et portait un panier;
Chaque pas qu’il faisait semblait l’avant-dernier;
Cette bête marchait, battue, exténuée;
Les coups l’enveloppaient ainsi qu’une nuée;
Il avait dans ses yeux voilés d’une vapeur
Cette stupidité qui peut-être est stupeur,
Et l’ornière était creuse, et si pleine de boue
Et d’un versant si dur, que chaque tour de roue
Était comme un lugubre et rauque arrachement;
Et l’âne allait geignant et l’ânier blasphémant;
La route descendait et poussait la bourrique;
L’âne songeait, passif, sous le fouet, sous la trique,
Dans une profondeur où l’homme ne va pas.

Les enfants, entendant cette roue et ce pas,
Se tournèrent bruyants et virent la charrette:
«Ne mets pas le pavé sur le crapaud. Arrête!
Crièrent-ils. Vois-tu, la voiture descend
Et va passer dessus, c’est bien plus amusant.”

Tous regardaient.
Soudain, avançant dans l’ornière
Où le monstre attendait sa torture dernière,
L’âne vit le crapaud, et, triste, — hélas! penché
Sur un plus triste, — lourd, rompu, morne, écorché,

Il sembla le flairer avec sa tête basse;
Ce forçat, ce damné, ce patient, fit grâce;
Il rassembla sa force éteinte, et, roidissant
Sa chaîne et son licou sur ses muscles en sang,
Résistant à l’ânier qui lui criait: Avance!
Maîtrisant du fardeau l’affreuse connivence,
Avec sa lassitude acceptant le combat,
Tirant le chariot et soulevant le bât,
Hagard, il détourna la roue inexorable,
Laissant derrière lui vivre ce misérable;
Puis, sous un coup de fouet, il reprit son chemin.
Alors, lâchant la pierre échappée à sa main,
Un des enfants-celui qui conte cette histoire —
Sous la voûte infinie à la fois bleue et noire,
Entendit une voix qui lui disait: Sois bon!

Bonté de l’idiot! diamant du charbon!
Sainte énigme! lumière auguste des ténèbres!
Les célestes n’ont rien de plus que les funèbres
Si les funèbres, groupe aveugle et châtié,
Songent, et, n’ayant pas la joie, ont la pitié.
Ô spectacle sacré! l’ombre secourant l’ombre,
L’âme obscure venant en aide à l’âme sombre,
Le stupide, attendri, sur l’affreux se penchant;
Le damné bon faisant rêver l’élu méchant!
L’animal avançant lorsque l’homme recule!
Dans la sérénité du pâle crépuscule,
La brute par moments pense et sent qu’elle est sœur
De la mystérieuse et profonde douceur;
Il suffit qu’un éclair de grâce brille en elle
Pour qu’elle soit égale à l’étoile éternelle;
Le baudet qui, rentrant le soir, surchargé, las,
Mourant, sentant saigner ses pauvres sabots plats,
Fait quelques pas de plus, s’écarte et se dérange
Pour ne pas écraser un crapaud dans la fange,
Cet âne abject, souillé, meurtri sous le bâton,
Est plus saint que Socrate et plus grand que Platon.

Tu cherches, philosophe? Ô penseur, tu médites?
Veux-tu trouver le vrai sous nos brumes maudites?
Crois, pleure, abîme-toi dans l'insondable amour!
Quiconque est bon voit clair dans l'obscur carrefour;
Quiconque est bon habite un coin du ciel. Ô sage,
La bonté qui du monde éclaire le visage,
La bonté, ce regard du matin ingénu,
La bonté, pur rayon qui chauffe l'Inconnu,
Instinct qui dans la nuit et dans la souffrance aime,
Est le trait d'union ineffable et suprême
Qui joint, dans l'ombre, hélas! si lugubre souvent,
Le grand ignorant, l'âne, à Dieu le grand savant.

Les Pauvres gens

I

Il est nuit. La cabane est pauvre, mais bien close.
Le logis est plein d'ombre, et l'on sent quelque chose
Qui rayonne à travers ce crépuscule obscur.
Des filets de pêcheur sont accrochés au mur.
Au fond, dans l'encoignure où quelque humble vaisselle
Aux planches d'un bahut vaguement étincelle,
On distingue un grand lit aux longs rideaux tombants.
Tout près, un matelas s'étend sur de vieux bancs,
Et cinq petits enfants, nid d'âmes, y sommeillent.
La haute cheminée où quelques flammes veillent
Rougit le plafond sombre, et, le front sur le lit,
Une femme à genoux prie, et songe, et pâlit.
C'est la mère. Elle est seule. Et dehors, blanc d'écume,
Au ciel, aux vents, aux rocs, à la nuit, à la brume,
Le sinistre Océan jette son noir sanglot.

II

L'homme est en mer. Depuis l'enfance matelot,
Il livre au hasard sombre une rude bataille.

Pluie ou bourrasque, il faut qu’il sorte, il faut qu’il aille,
Car les petits enfants ont faim. Il part le soir
Quand l’eau profonde monte aux marches du musoir.
Il gouverne à lui seul sa barque à quatre voiles.
La femme est au logis, cousant les vieilles toiles,
Remmaillant les filets, préparant l’hameçon,
Surveillant l’âtre où bout la soupe de poisson,
Puis priant Dieu sitôt que les cinq enfants dorment.
Lui, seul, battu des flots qui toujours se reforment,
Il s’en va dans l’abîme et s’en va dans la nuit.
Dur labeur! tout est noir, tout est froid; rien ne luit.
Dans les brisants, parmi les lames en démence,
L’endroit bon à la pêche, et, sur la mer immense,
Le lieu mobile, obscur, capricieux, changeant,
Où se plaît le poisson aux nageoires d’argent,
Ce n’est qu’un point; c’est grand deux fois comme la chambre.
Or, la nuit, dans l’ondée et la brume, en décembre,
Pour rencontrer ce point sur le désert mouvant,
Comme il faut calculer la marée et le vent!
Comme il faut combiner sûrement les manœuvres!
Les flots le long du bord glissent, vertes couleuvres;
Le gouffre roule et tord ses plis démesurés
Et fait râler d’horreur les agrès effarés.
Lui, songe à sa Jeannie au sein des mers glacées,
Et Jeannie en pleurant l’appelle; et leurs pensées
Se croisent dans la nuit, divins oiseaux du cœur.

III

Elle prie, et la mauve au cri rauque et moqueur
L’importune, et, parmi les écueils en décombres,
L’Océan l’épouvante, et toutes sortes d’ombres
Passent dans son esprit: la mer, les matelots
Emportés à travers la colère des flots.
Et dans sa gaîne, ainsi que le sang dans l’artère,
La froide horloge bat, jetant dans le mystère,

Goutte à goutte, le temps, saisons, printemps, hivers;
Et chaque battement, dans l’énorme univers,
Ouvre aux âmes, essaims d’autours et de colombes,
D’un côté les berceaux et de l’autre les tombes.

Elle songe, elle rêve, — et tant de pauvreté!
Ses petits vont pieds nus l’hiver comme l’été.
Pas de pain de froment. On mange du pain d’orge.
— Ô Dieu! le vent rugit comme un soufflet de forge,
La côte fait le bruit d’une enclume, on croit voir
Les constellations fuir dans l’ouragan noir
Comme les tourbillons d’étincelles de l’âtre.
C’est l’heure où, gai danseur, minuit rit et folâtre
Sous le loup de satin qu’illuminent ses yeux,
Et c’est l’heure où minuit, brigand mystérieux,
Voilé d’ombre et de pluie et le front dans la bise,
Prend un pauvre marin frissonnant et le brise
Aux rochers monstrueux apparus brusquement. —
Horreur! l’homme, dont l’onde éteint le hurlement,
Sent fondre et s’enfoncer le bâtiment qui plonge;
Il sent s’ouvrir sous lui l’ombre et l’abîme, et songe
Au vieil anneau de fer du quai plein de soleil!

Ces mornes visions troublent son cœur, pareil
À la nuit. Elle tremble et pleure.
IV

Ô pauvres femmes
De pêcheurs! c’est affreux de se dire: « Mes âmes,
Père, amant, frères, fils, tout ce que j’ai de cher,
C’est là, dans ce chaos! — mon cœur, mon sang, ma chair!”
Ciel! être en proie aux flots, c’est être en proie aux bêtes.
Oh! songer que l’eau joue avec toutes ces têtes,
Depuis le mousse enfant jusqu’au mari patron,
Et que le vent hagard, soufflant dans son clairon,
Dénoue au-dessus d’eux sa longue et folle tresse,
Et que peut-être ils sont à cette heure en détresse,

Et qu’on ne sait jamais au juste ce qu’ils font,
Et que, pour tenir tête à cette mer sans fond,
À tous ces gouffres d’ombre où ne luit nulle étoile,
Ils n’ont qu’un bout de planche avec un bout de toile!
Souci lugubre! on court à travers les galets,
Le flot monte, on lui parle, on crie: « Oh! rends-nous-les!”
Mais, hélas! que veut-on que dise à la pensée
Toujours sombre, la mer toujours bouleversée!

Jeannie est bien plus triste encor. Son homme est seul!
Seul dans cette âpre nuit! seul sous ce noir linceul!
Pas d’aide. Ses enfants sont trop petits. — Ô mère!
Tu dis: « S’ils étaient grands! — leur père est seul!” Chimère!
Plus tard, quand ils seront près du père, et partis,
Tu diras en pleurant: « Oh! s’ils étaient petits!”

V

Elle prend sa lanterne et sa cape. — C’est l’heure
D’aller voir s’il revient, si la mer est meilleure,
S’il fait jour, si la flamme est au mât du signal.
Allons! — Et la voilà qui part. L’air matinal
Ne souffle pas encor. Rien. Pas de ligne blanche
Dans l’espace où le flot des ténèbres s’épanche.
Il pleut. Rien n’est plus noir que la pluie au matin;
On dirait que le jour tremble et doute, incertain,
Et qu’ainsi que l’enfant, l’aube pleure de naître.
Elle va. L’on ne voit luire aucune fenêtre.

Tout à coup, à ses yeux qui cherchent le chemin,
Avec je ne sais quoi de lugubre et d’humain
Une sombre masure apparaît décrépite;
Ni lumière, ni feu; la porte au vent palpite;
Sur les murs vermoulus branle un toit hasardeux;
La bise sur ce toit tord des chaumes hideux,
Jaunes, sales, pareils aux grosses eaux d’un fleuve.

«Tiens, je ne pensais plus à cette pauvre veuve,
Dit-elle; mon mari, l’autre jour, la trouva
Malade et seule; il faut voir comment elle va.”

Elle frappe à la porte, elle écoute; personne
Ne répond. Et Jeannie au vent de mer frissonne.
«Malade! et ses enfants! comme c’est mal nourri!
Elle n’en a que deux, mais elle est sans mari.”
Puis, elle frappe encore. « Hé! voisine!” elle appelle.
Et la maison se tait toujours. « Ah! Dieu! dit-elle,
Comme elle dort, qu’il faut l’appeler si longtemps!”
La porte, cette fois, comme si, par instants,
Les objets étaient pris d’une pitié suprême,
Morne, tourna dans l’ombre et s’ouvrit d’elle-même.

VI

Elle entra. Sa lanterne éclaira le dedans
Du noir logis muet au bord des flots grondants.
L’eau tombait du plafond comme des trous d’un crible.

Au fond était couchée une forme terrible;
Une femme immobile et renversée, ayant
Les pieds nus, le regard obscur, l’air effrayant;
Un cadavre; — autrefois, mère joyeuse et forte; —
Le spectre échevelé de la misère morte;
Ce qui reste du pauvre après un long combat.
Elle laissait, parmi la paille du grabat,
Son bras livide et froid et sa main déjà verte
Pendre, et l’horreur sortait de cette bouche ouverte
D’où l’âme en s’enfuyant, sinistre, avait jeté
Ce grand cri de la mort qu’entend l’éternité!

Près du lit où gisait la mère de famille,
Deux tout petits enfants, le garçon et la fille,
Dans le même berceau souriaient endormis.

La mère, se sentant mourir, leur avait mis
Sa mante sur les pieds et sur le corps sa robe,
Afin que, dans cette ombre où la mort nous dérobe,
Ils ne sentissent plus la tiédeur qui décroît,
Et pour qu’ils eussent chaud pendant qu’elle aurait froid.

VII

Comme ils dorment tous deux dans le berceau qui tremble!
Leur haleine est paisible et leur front calme. Il semble
Que rien n’éveillerait ces orphelins dormant,
Pas même le clairon du dernier jugement;
Car, étant innocents, ils n’ont pas peur du juge.

Et la pluie au dehors gronde comme un déluge.
Du vieux toit crevassé, d’où la rafale sort,
Une goutte parfois tombe sur ce front mort,
Glisse sur cette joue et devient une larme.
La vague sonne ainsi qu’une cloche d’alarme.
La morte écoute l’ombre avec stupidité.
Car le corps, quand l’esprit radieux l’a quitté,
A l’air de chercher l’âme et de rappeler l’ange;
Il semble qu’on entend ce dialogue étrange
Entre la bouche pâle et l’œil triste et hagard:
«Qu’as-tu fait de ton souffle? — Et toi, de ton regard?”

Hélas! aimez, vivez, cueillez les primevères,
Dansez, riez, brûlez vos cœurs, videz vos verres.
Comme au sombre Océan arrive tout ruisseau,
Le sort donne pour but au festin, au berceau,
Aux mères adorant l’enfance épanouie,
Aux baisers de la chair dont l’âme est éblouie,
Aux chansons, au sourire, à l’amour frais et beau,
Le refroidissement lugubre du tombeau!

VIII

Qu’est-ce donc que Jeannie a fait chez cette morte?
Sous sa cape aux longs plis qu’est-ce donc qu’elle emporte?
Qu’est-ce donc que Jeannie emporte en s’en allant?
Pourquoi son cœur bat-il? Pourquoi son pas tremblant
Se hâte-t-il ainsi? D’où vient qu’en la ruelle
Elle court, sans oser regarder derrière elle?
Qu’est-ce donc qu’elle cache avec un air troublé
Dans l’ombre, sur son lit? Qu’a-t-elle donc volé?

IX

Quand elle fut rentrée au logis, la falaise
Blanchissait; près du lit elle prit une chaise
Et s’assit toute pâle; on eût dit qu’elle avait
Un remords, et son front tomba sur le chevet,
Et, par instants, à mots entrecoupés, sa bouche
Parlait, pendant qu’au loin grondait la mer farouche.

« — Mon pauvre homme! Ah! mon Dieu! que va-t-il dire? Il a
Déjà tant de souci! Qu’est-ce que j’ai fait là?
Cinq enfants sur les bras! ce père qui travaille!
Il n’avait pas assez de peine; il faut que j’aille
Lui donner celle-là de plus. — C’est lui? — Non. Rien.
— J’ai mal fait. — S’il me bat, je dirai: Tu fais bien.
— Est-ce lui? — Non. — Tant mieux. — La porte bouge comme
Si l’on entrait. — Mais non. — Voilà-t-il pas, pauvre homme,
Que j’ai peur de le voir rentrer, moi, maintenant!”
Puis elle demeura pensive et frissonnant,
S’enfonçant par degrés dans son angoisse intime,
Perdue en son souci comme dans un abîme,
N’entendant même plus les bruits extérieurs,
Les cormorans qui vont comme de noirs crieurs,
Et l’onde et la marée et le vent en colère.

La porte tout à coup s’ouvrit, bruyante et claire,
Et fit dans la cabane entrer un rayon blanc,

Et le pêcheur, traînant son filet ruisselant,
Joyeux, parut au seuil, et dit: « C’est la marine.”

X

«C’est toi!” cria Jeannie, et, contre sa poitrine,
Elle prit son mari comme on prend un amant,
Et lui baisa sa veste avec emportement,
Tandis que le marin disait: « Me voici, femme!”
Et montrait sur son front qu’éclairait l’âtre en flamme
Son cœur bon et content que Jeannie éclairait.
«Je suis volé, dit-il; la mer, c’est la forêt.
— Quel temps a-t-il fait? — Dur. — Et la pêche? — Mauvaise.
Mais, vois-tu, je t’embrasse, et me voilà bien aise.
Je n’ai rien pris du tout. J’ai troué mon filet.
Le diable était caché dans le vent qui soufflait.
Quelle nuit! Un moment, dans tout ce tintamarre,
J’ai cru que le bateau se couchait, et l’amarre
A cassé. Qu’as-tu fait, toi, pendant ce temps-là?”
Jeannie eut un frisson dans l’ombre et se troubla.
« — Moi? dit-elle. Ah! mon Dieu! rien, comme à l’ordinaire.
J’ai cousu. J’écoutais la mer comme un tonnerre,
J’avais peur. — Oui, l’hiver est dur, mais c’est égal.”
Alors, tremblante ainsi que ceux qui font le mal,
Elle dit: « À propos, notre voisine est morte.
C’est hier qu’elle a dû mourir, enfin, n’importe,
Dans la soirée, après que vous fûtes partis.
Elle laisse ses deux enfants, qui sont petits.
L’un s’appelle Guillaume et l’autre Madeleine;
L’un qui ne marche pas, l’autre qui parle à peine.
La pauvre bonne femme était dans le besoin.”

L’homme prit un air grave, et, jetant dans un coin
Son bonnet de forçat mouillé par la tempête:
— Diable! diable! dit-il en se grattant la tête,
Nous avions cinq enfants, cela va faire sept.

Déjà, dans la saison mauvaise, on se passait
De souper quelquefois. Comment allons-nous faire?
Bah! tant pis! ce n’est pas ma faute. C’est l’affaire
Du bon Dieu. Ce sont là des accidents profonds.
Pourquoi donc a-t-il pris leur mère à ces chiffons?
C’est gros comme le poing. Ces choses-là sont rudes.
Il faut pour les comprendre avoir fait ses études.
Si petits! on ne peut leur dire: Travaillez.
Femme, va les chercher. S’ils se sont réveillés,
Ils doivent avoir peur tout seuls avec la morte.
C’est la mère, vois-tu, qui frappe à notre porte;
Ouvrons aux deux enfants. Nous les mêlerons tous.
Cela nous grimpera le soir sur les genoux.
Ils vivront, ils seront frère et sœur des cinq autres.
Quand il verra qu’il faut nourrir avec les nôtres
Cette petite fille et ce petit garçon,
Le bon Dieu nous fera prendre plus de poisson.
Moi, je boirai de l’eau, je ferai double tâche.
C’est dit. Va les chercher. Mais qu’as-tu? Ça te fâche?
D’ordinaire, tu cours plus vite que cela.

— Tiens, dit-elle en ouvrant les rideaux, les voilà!

Paroles dans l’épreuve

Les hommes d’aujourd’hui qui sont nés quand naissait
Ce siècle, et quand son aile effrayante poussait,
Ou qui, quatre-vingt-neuf dorant leur blonde enfance,
Ont vu la rude attaque et la fière défense,
Et pour musique ont eu les noirs canons béants,
Et pour jeux de grimper aux genoux des géants;
Ces enfants qui jadis, traînant des cimeterres,
Ont vu partir, chantant, les pâles volontaires,
Et connu des vivants à qui Danton parlait,
Ces hommes ont sucé l’audace avec le lait.
La Révolution, leur tendant sa mamelle,
Leur fit boire une vie où la tombe se mêle,

Et, stoïque, leur mit dans les veines un sang
Qui, lorsqu'il faut sortir et couler, y consent.
Ils tiennent de l'austère et tragique nourrice
L'amour de la blessure et de la cicatrice,
Et, pour trembler, pour fuir, pour suivre qui fuirait,
L'impossibilité de plier le jarret.
Ils pensent que faiblir est chose abominable,
Que l'homme est au devoir, et qu'il est convenable
Que ceux à qui Dieu fit l'honneur de les choisir
Pour vivre dans un temps de risque et de désir,
Marchent, et, courant droit au but qui les réclame,
Désapprennent les pas en arrière à leur âme.
Ils veulent le progrès durement acheté,
Ne tiennent en réserve aucune lâcheté,
Jettent aux profondeurs leurs jours, leur cœur, leur joie,
Ne se rétractent point parce qu'un gouffre aboie,
Vont toujours en avant et toujours devant eux;
Ils ne sont pas prudents de peur d'être honteux;
Et disent que le pont où l'on se précipite,
Hardi pour l'abordage, est lâche pour la fuite.
Soi-même se scruter d'un regard inclément,
Être abnégation, martyre, dévouement,
Bouclier pour le faible et pour le destin cible,
Aller, ne se garder aucun retour possible,
Ne jamais se servir pour s'évader d'en haut,
Pour fuir, de ce qui sert pour monter à l'assaut,
Telle est la loi; la loi du devoir, du Calvaire,
Qui sourit aux vaillants avec son front sévère.
Peuple, homme, esprit humain, avance à pas altiers!
Parmi tous les écueils et dans tous les sentiers,
Dans la société, dans l'art, dans la morale,
Partout où resplendit la lueur aurorale,
Sans jamais t'arrêter, sans hésiter jamais,
Des fanges aux clartés, des gouffres aux sommets,
Va! la création, cette usine, ce temple,
Cette marche en avant de tout, donne l'exemple!
L'heure est un marcheur calme et providentiel;

Les fleuves vont aux mers, les oiseaux vont au ciel;
L'arbre ne rentre pas dans la terre profonde
Parce que le vent souffle et que l'orage gronde;
Homme, va! reculer, c'est devant le ciel bleu
La grande trahison que tu peux faire à Dieu.
Nous donc, fils de ce siècle aux vastes entreprises,
Nous qu'emplit le frisson des formidables brises,
Et dont l'ouragan sombre agite les cheveux,
Poussés vers l'idéal par nos maux, par nos vœux,
Nous désirons qu'on ait présent à la mémoire
Que nos pères étaient des conquérants de gloire,
Des chercheurs d'horizons, des gagneurs d'avenir;
Des amants du péril que savait retenir
Aux âcres voluptés de ses baisers farouches
La grande mort, posant son rire sur leurs bouches;
Qu'ils étaient les soldats qui n'ont pas déserté,
Les hôtes rugissants de l'antre liberté,
Les titans, les lutteurs aux gigantesques tailles,
Les fauves promeneurs rôdant dans les batailles!
Nous sommes les petits de ces grands lions-là.
Leur trace sur leurs pas toujours nous appela;
Nous courons; la souffrance est par nous saluée;
Nous voyons devant nous là-bas, dans la nuée,
L'âpre avenir à pic, lointain, redouté, doux;
Nous nous sentons perdus pour nous, gagné pour tous;
Nous arrivons au bord du passage terrible;
Le précipice est là, sourd, obscur, morne, horrible;
L'épreuve à l'autre bord nous attend; nous allons,
Nous ne regardons pas derrière nos talons;
Pâles, nous atteignons l'escarpement sublime;
Et nous poussons du pied la planche dans l'abîme.

XIV. Vingtième siècle

PLEINE MER

*

L’abîme; on ne sait quoi de terrible qui gronde;
Le vent; l’obscurité vaste comme le monde;
Partout les flots; partout où l’œil peut s’enfoncer,
La rafale qu’on voit aller, venir, passer;
L’onde, linceul; le ciel, ouverture de tombe;
Les ténèbres sans l’arche et l’eau sans la colombe;
Les nuages ayant l’aspect d’une forêt.
Un esprit qui viendrait planer là, ne pourrait
Dire, entre l’eau sans fond et l’espace sans borne,
Lequel est le plus sombre, et si cette horreur morne,
Faite de cécité, de stupeur et de bruit,
Vient de l’immense mer ou de l’immense nuit.

L’œil distingue, au milieu du gouffre où l’air sanglote,
Quelque chose d’informe et de hideux qui flotte,
Un grand cachalot mort à carcasse de fer,
On ne sait quel cadavre à vau-l’eau dans la mer;
Œuf de titan dont l’homme aurait fait un navire.
Cela vogue, cela nage, cela chavire;
Cela fut un vaisseau; l’écume aux blancs amas
Cache et montre à grand bruit les tronçons de sept mâts;
Le colosse, échoué sur le ventre, fuit, plonge,
S’engloutit, reparaît, se meut comme le songe;
Chaos d’agrès rompus, de poutres, de haubans;
Le grand mât vaincu semble un spectre aux bras tombants;
L’onde passe à travers ce débris; l’eau s’engage
Et déferle en hurlant le long du bastingage,
Et tourmente des bouts de corde à des crampons
Dans le ruissellement formidable des ponts;
La houle éperdument furieuse saccage

Aux deux flancs du vaisseau les cintres d’une cage
Où jadis une roue effrayante a tourné;
Personne; le néant, froid, muet, étonné;
D’affreux canons rouillés tendent leurs cous funestes;
L’entre-pont a des trous où se dressent les restes
De cinq tubes pareils à des clairons géants,
Pleins jadis d’une foudre, et qui, tordus, béants,
Ployés, éteints, n’ont plus, sur l’eau qui les balance,
Qu’un noir vomissement de nuit et de silence;
Le flux et le reflux, comme avec un rabot,
Dénude à chaque coup l’étrave et l’étambot,
Et dans la lame on voit se débattre l’échine
D’une mystérieuse et difforme machine.
Cette masse sous l’eau rôde, fantôme obscur.
Des putréfactions fermentent, à coup sûr,
Dans ce vaisseau perdu sous les vagues sans nombre;
Dessus, des tourbillons d’oiseaux de mer; dans l’ombre,
Dessous, des millions de poissons carnassiers.
Tout à l’entour, les flots, ces liquides aciers,
Mêlent leurs tournoiements monstrueux et livides.
Des espaces déserts sous des espaces vides.
Ô triste mer! sépulcre où tout semble vivant!
Ces deux athlètes faits de furie et de vent,
Le tangage qui bave et le roulis qui fume,
Luttant sur ce radeau funèbre dans la brume,
Sans trêve, à chaque instant arrachent quelque éclat
De la quille ou du pont dans leur noir pugilat;
Par moments, au zénith un nuage se troue,
Un peu de jour lugubre en tombe, et, sur la proue,
Une lueur, qui tremble au souffle de l’autan,
Blême, éclaire à demi ce mot: Léviathan.
Puis l’apparition se perd dans l’eau profonde;
Tout fuit.
Léviathan; c’est là tout le vieux monde,
Âpre et démesuré dans sa fauve laideur;
Léviathan, c’est là tout le passé: grandeur,
Horreur.

*

Le dernier siècle a vu sur la Tamise
Croître un monstre à qui l’eau sans bornes fut promise,
Et qui longtemps, Babel des mers, eut Londre entier
Levant les yeux dans l’ombre au pied de son chantier.
Effroyable, à sept mâts mêlant cinq cheminées
Qui hennissaient au choc des vagues effrénées,
Emportant, dans le bruit des aquilons sifflants,
Dix mille hommes, fourmis éparses dans ses flancs,
Ce Titan se rua, joyeux, dans la tempête;
Du dôme de Saint-Paul son mât passait le faîte;
Le sombre esprit humain, debout sur son tillac,
Stupéfiait la mer qui n’était plus qu’un lac;
Le vieillard Océan, qu’effarouche la sonde,
Inquiet, à travers le verre de son onde,
Regardait le vaisseau de l’homme grossissant;
Ce vaisseau fut sur l’onde un terrible passant;
Les vagues frémissaient de l’avoir sur leurs croupes;
Ses sabords mugissaient; en guise de chaloupes,
Deux navires pendaient à ses portemanteaux;
Son armure était faite avec tous les métaux;
Un prodigieux câble ourlait sa grande voile;
Quand il marchait, fumant, grondant, couvert de toile,
Il jetait un tel râle à l’air épouvanté
Que toute l’eau tremblait, et que l’immensité
Comptait parmi ses bruits ce grand frisson sonore;
La nuit, il passait rouge ainsi qu’un météore;
Sa voilure, où l’oreille entendait le débat
Des souffles, subissant ce gréement comme un bât,
Ses hunes, ses grelins, ses palans, ses amures,
Étaient une prison de vents et de murmures;
Son ancre avait le poids d’une tour; ses parois
Voulaient les flots, trouvant tous les ports trop étroits;
Son ombre humiliait au loin toutes les proues;
Un télégraphe était son porte-voix; ses roues

Forgeaient la sombre mer comme deux grands marteaux;
Les flots se le passaient comme des piédestaux
Où, calme, ondulerait un triomphal colosse;
L’abîme s’abrégeait sous sa lourdeur véloce;
Pas de lointain pays qui pour lui ne fût près;
Madère apercevait ses mâts; trois jours après,
L’Hékla l’entrevoyait dans la lueur polaire.
La bataille montait sur lui dans sa colère.
La guerre était sacrée et sainte en ces temps-là;
Rien n’égalait Nemrod si ce n’est Attila;
Et les hommes, depuis les premiers jours du monde,
Sentant peser sur eux la misère inféconde,
Les pestes, les fléaux lugubres et railleurs,
Cherchant quelque moyen d’amoindrir leurs douleurs,
Pour établir entre eux de justes équilibres,
Pour être plus heureux, meilleurs, plus grands, plus libres,
Plus dignes du ciel pur qui les daigne éclairer,
Avaient imaginé de s’entre-dévorer.
Ce sinistre vaisseau les aidait dans leur œuvre.
Lourd comme le dragon, prompt comme la couleuvre,
Il couvrait l’Océan de ses ailes de feu;
La terre s’effrayait quand sur l’horizon bleu
Rampait l’allongement hideux de sa fumée,
Car c’était une ville et c’était une armée;
Ses pavois fourmillaient de mortiers et d’affûts,
Et d’un hérissement de bataillons confus;
Ses grappins menaçaient; et, pour les abordages,
On voyait sur ses ponts des rouleaux de cordages
Monstrueux qui semblaient des boas endormis;
Invincible, en ces temps de frères ennemis,
Seul, de toute une flotte il affrontait l’émeute,
Ainsi qu’un éléphant au milieu d’une meute;
La bordée à ses pieds fumait comme un encens,
Ses flancs engloutissaient les boulets impuissants,
Il allait broyant tout dans l’obscure mêlée,
Et, quand, épouvantable, il lâchait sa volée,
On voyait flamboyer son colossal beaupré,

Par deux mille canons brusquement empourpré.
Il méprisait l’autan, le flux, l’éclair, la brume.
À son avant tournait, dans un chaos d’écume,
Une espèce de vrille à trouer l’infini;
Le Malström s’apaisait sous sa quille aplani.
Sa vie intérieure était un incendie;
Flamme au gré du pilote apaisée ou grandie;
Dans l’antre d’où sortait un vaste mouvement,
Au fond d’une fournaise on voyait vaguement
Des êtres ténébreux marcher dans des nuées
D’étincelles, parmi les braises remuées;
Et pour âme il avait dans sa cale un enfer.
Il voguait, roi du gouffre, et ses vergues de fer
Ressemblaient, sous le ciel redoutable et sublime,
À des sceptres posés en travers de l’abîme;
Ainsi qu’on voit l’Etna l’on voyait ce steamer;
Il était la montagne errante de la mer;
Mais les heures, les jours, les mois, les ans, ces ondes,
Ont passé; l’Océan, vaste, entre les deux mondes,
A rugi, de brouillard et d’orage obscurci;
La mer a ses écueils cachés, le temps aussi;
Et maintenant, parmi les profondeurs farouches,
Sous les vautours, qui sont de l’abîme les mouches,
Sous le nuage, au gré des souffles, dans l’oubli
De l’infini, dont l’ombre affreuse est le repli,
Sans que jamais le vent autour d’elle s’endorme,
Au milieu des flots noirs roule l’épave énorme!

*

L’ancien monde, l’ensemble étrange et surprenant
De faits sociaux, morts et pourris maintenant,
D’où sortit ce navire aujourd’hui sous l’écume,
L’ancien monde, aussi, lui, plongé dans l’amertume,
Avait tous les fléaux pour vents et pour typhons.
Construction d’airain aux étages profonds,
Sur qui le mal, flot vil, crachait sa bave infâme,

Plein de fumée, et mû par une hydre de flamme,
La Haine, il ressemblait à ce sombre vaisseau.

Le mal l’avait marqué de son funèbre sceau.

Ce monde, enveloppé d’une brume éternelle,
Était fatal; l’Espoir avait plié son aile;
Pas d’unité; divorce et joug; diversité
De langue, de raison, de code, de cité;
Nul lien, nul faisceau; le progrès solitaire,
Comme un serpent coupé, se tordait sur la terre,
Sans pouvoir réunir les tronçons de l’effort;
L’esclavage, parquant les peuples pour la mort,
Les enfermait au fond d’un cirque de frontières
Où les gardaient la Guerre et la Nuit, bestiaires;
L’Adam slave luttait contre l’Adam germain;
Un genre humain en France, un autre genre humain
En Amérique, un autre à Londre, un autre à Rome;
L’homme au delà d’un pont ne connaissait plus l’homme;
Les vivants, d’ignorance et de vice chargés,
Se traînaient; en travers de tout, les préjugés;
Les superstitions étaient d’âpres enceintes
Terribles d’autant plus qu’elles étaient plus saintes;
Quel créneau soupçonneux et noir qu’un Alcoran!
Un texte avait le glaive au poing comme un tyran;
La loi d’un peuple était chez l’autre peuple un crime;
Lire était un fossé, croire était un abîme;
Les rois étaient des tours; les dieux étaient des murs;
Nul moyen de franchir tant d’obstacles obscurs;
Sitôt qu’on voulait croître, on rencontrait la barre
D’une mode sauvage ou d’un dogme barbare;
Et, quant à l’avenir, défense d’aller là.

*

Le vent de l’infini sur ce monde souffla.
Il a sombré. Du fond des cieux inaccessibles,

Les vivants de l'éther, les êtres invisibles
Confusément épars sous l'obscur firmament,
À cette heure, pensifs, regardent fixement
Sa disparition dans la nuit redoutable.
Qu'est-ce que le simoun a fait du grain de sable?
Cela fut. C'est passé! cela n'est plus ici.

*

Ce monde est mort. Mais quoi! l'homme est-il mort aussi?
Cette forme de lui disparaissant, l'a-t-elle
Lui-même remporté dans l'énigme éternelle?
L'Océan est désert. Pas une voile au loin.
Ce n'est plus que du flot que le flot est témoin.
Pas un esquif vivant sur l'onde où la mouette
Voit du Léviathan rôder la silhouette.
Est-ce que l'homme, ainsi qu'un feuillage jauni,
S'en est allé dans l'ombre? est-ce que c'est fini?
Seul le flux et reflux va, vient, passe et repasse.
Et l'œil, pour retrouver l'homme absent de l'espace,
Regarde en vain là-bas. Rien.
Regardez là-haut.

PLEINE CIEL

*

Loin dans les profondeurs, hors des nuits, hors du flot,
Dans un écartement de nuages, qui laisse
Voir au-dessus des mers la céleste allégresse,
Un point vague et confus apparaît; dans le vent,
Dans l'espace, ce point se meut; il est vivant;
Il va, descend, remonte; il fait ce qu'il veut faire;
Il approche, il prend forme, il vient; c'est une sphère;

C’est un inexprimable et surprenant vaisseau,
Globe comme le monde et comme l’aigle oiseau;
C’est un navire en marche. Où? Dans l’éther sublime!

Rêve! on croit voir planer un morceau d’une cime;
Le haut d’une montagne a, sous l’orbe étoilé,
Pris des ailes et s’est tout à coup envolé?
Quelque heure immense étant dans les destins sonnée,
La nue errante s’est en vaisseau façonnée?
La Fable apparaît-elle à nos yeux décevants?
L’antique Éole a-t-il jeté son outre aux vents?
De sorte qu’en ce gouffre où les orages naissent,
Les vents, subitement domptés, la reconnaissent!
Est-ce l’aimant qui s’est fait aider par l’éclair
Pour bâtir un esquif céleste avec de l’air?
Du haut des clairs azurs vient-il une visite?
Est-ce un transfiguré qui part et ressuscite,
Qui monte, délivré de la terre, emporté
Sur un char volant fait d’extase et de clarté,
Et se rapproche un peu par instant, pour qu’on voie,
Du fond du monde noir, la fuite de sa joie?

Ce n’est pas un morceau d’une cime; ce n’est
Ni l’outre où tout le vent de la Fable tenait;
Ni le jeu de l’éclair; ce n’est pas un fantôme
Venu des profondeurs aurorales du dôme;
Ni le rayonnement d’un ange qui s’en va,
Hors de quelque tombeau béant, vers Jéhovah.
Ni rien de ce qu’en songe ou dans la fièvre on nomme.
Qu’est-ce que ce navire impossible? C’est l’homme.

C’est la grande révolte obéissante à Dieu!
La sainte fausse clef du fatal gouffre bleu!
C’est Isis qui déchire éperdument son voile!
C’est du métal, du bois, du chanvre et de la toile,
C’est de la pesanteur délivrée, et volant;
C’est la force alliée à l’homme étincelant,

Fière, arrachant l’argile à sa chaîne éternelle,
C’est la matière, heureuse, altière, ayant en elle
De l’ouragan humain, et planant à travers
L’immense étonnement des cieux enfin ouverts.

Audace humaine! effort du captif! sainte rage!
Effraction enfin plus forte que la cage!
Que faut-il à cet être, atome au large front,
Pour vaincre ce qui n’a ni fin, ni bord, ni fond,
Pour dompter le vent, trombe, et l’écume, avalanche?
Dans le ciel une toile et sur mer une planche.

*

Jadis des quatre vents la fureur triomphait;
De ces quatre chevaux échappés l’homme a fait
L’attelage de son quadrige;
Génie, il les tient tous dans sa main, fier cocher
Du char aérien que l’éther voit marcher;
Miracle, il gouverne un prodige.

Char merveilleux! son nom est Délivrance. Il court.
Près de lui le ramier est lent, le flocon lourd;
Le daim, l’épervier, la panthère,
Sont encor là, qu’au loin son ombre a déjà fui;
Et la locomotive est reptile, et, sous lui,
L’hydre de flamme est ver de terre.

Une musique, un chant, sort de son tourbillon.
Ses cordages vibrants et remplis d’aquilon
Semblent, dans le vide où tout sombre,
Une lyre à travers laquelle par moment
Passe quelque âme en fuite au fond du firmament
Et mêlée aux souffles de l’ombre.

Car l’air, c’est l’hymne épars; l’air, parmi les récifs

Des nuages roulant en groupes convulsifs,
Jette mille voix étouffées;
Les fluides, l’azur, l’effluve, l’élément,
Sont toute une harmonie où flottent vaguement
On ne sait quels sombres Orphées.

Superbe, il plane, avec un hymne en ses agrès;
Et l’on croit voir passer la strophe du progrès.
Il est la nef, il est le phare!
L’homme enfin prend son sceptre et jette son bâton.
Et l’on voit s’envoler le calcul de Newton
Monté sur l’ode de Pindare.

Le char haletant plonge et s’enfonce dans l’air,
Dans l’éblouissement impénétrable et clair,
Dans l’éther sans tache et sans ride;
Il se perd sous le bleu des cieux démesurés;
Les esprits de l’azur contemplent effarés
Cet engloutissement splendide.

Il passe, il n’est plus là; qu’est-il donc devenu?
Il est dans l’invisible, il est dans l’inconnu;
Il baigne l’homme dans le songe,
Dans le fait, dans le vrai profond, dans la clarté,
Dans l’océan d’en haut plein d’une vérité
Dont le prêtre a fait un mensonge.

Le jour se lève, il va; le jour s’évanouit,
Il va; fait pour le jour, il accepte la nuit.
Voici l’heure des feux sans nombre;
L’heure où, vu du nadir, ce globe semble, ayant
Son large cône obscur sous lui se déployant,
Une énorme comète d’ombre.

La brume redoutable emplit au loin les airs.
Ainsi qu’au crépuscule on voit, le long des mers,
Le pêcheur, vague comme un rêve,

Traînant, dernier effort d’un long jour de sueurs,
Sa nasse où les poissons font de pâles lueurs,
Aller et venir sur la grève,

La Nuit tire du fond des gouffres inconnus
Son filet où luit Mars, où rayonne Vénus,
Et, pendant que les heures sonnent,
Ce filet grandit, monte, emplit le ciel des soirs,
Et dans ses mailles d’ombre et dans ses réseaux noirs
Les constellations frissonnent.

L’aéroscaphe suit son chemin; il n’a peur
Ni des piéges du soir, ni de l’âcre vapeur.
Ni du ciel morne où rien ne bouge,
Où les éclairs, luttant au fond de l’ombre entre eux,
Ouvrent subitement dans le nuage affreux
Des cavernes de cuivre rouge.

Il invente une route obscure dans les nuits;
Le silence hideux de ces lieux inouïs
N’arrête point ce globe en marche;
Il passe, portant l’homme et l’univers en lui;
Paix! gloire! et, comme l’eau jadis, l’air aujourd’hui
Au-dessus de ses flots voit l’arche.

Le saint navire court par le vent emporté
Avec la certitude et la rapidité
Du javelot cherchant la cible;
Rien n’en tombe, et pourtant il chemine en semant;
Sa rondeur, qu’on distingue en haut confusément,
Semble un ventre d’oiseau terrible.

Il vogue; les brouillards sous lui flottent dissous;
Ses pilotes penchés regardent, au-dessous
Des nuages où l’ancre traîne,
Si, dans l’ombre, où la terre avec l’air se confond,
Le sommet du Mont-Blanc ou quelque autre bas-fond

Ne vient pas heurter sa carène.

*

La vie est sur le pont du navire éclatant.
Le rayon l’envoya, la lumière l’attend.
L’homme y fourmille, l’homme invincible y flamboie;
Point d’armes; un fier bruit de puissance et de joie;
Le cri vertigineux de l’exploration!
Il court, ombre, clarté, chimère, vision!
Regardez-le pendant qu’il passe, il va si vite!

Comme autour d’un soleil un système gravite,
Une sphère de cuivre énorme fait marcher
Quatre globes où pend un immense plancher;
Elle respire et fuit dans les vents qui la bercent;
Un large et blanc hunier horizontal, que percent
Des trappes, se fermant, s’ouvrant au gré du frein,
Fait un grand diaphragme à ce poumon d’airain;
Il s’impose à la nue ainsi qu’à l’onde un liége;
La toile d’araignée humaine, un vaste piége
De cordes et de nœuds, un enchevêtrement
De soupapes que meut un câble où court l’aimant,
Une embûche de treuils, de cabestans, de moufles,
Prend au passage et fait travailler tous les souffles;
L’esquif plane, encombré d’hommes et de ballots,
Parmi les arc-en-ciel, les azurs, les halos,
Et sa course, écheveau qui sans fin se dévide,
A pour point d’appui l’air et pour moteur le vide;
Sous le plancher s’étage un chaos régulier
De ponts flottants que lie un tremblant escalier;
Ce navire est un Louvre errant avec son faste;
Un fil le porte; il fuit, léger, fier, et si vaste,
Si colossal, au vent du grand abîme clair,
Que le Léviathan, rampant dans l’âpre mer,
A l’air de sa chaloupe aux ténèbres tombée,

Et semble, sous le vol d’un aigle, un scarabée
Se tordant dans le flot qui l’emporte, tandis
Que l’immense oiseau plane au fond d’un paradis.

Si l’on pouvait rouvrir les yeux que le ver ronge,
Oh! ce vaisseau, construit par le chiffre et le songe,
Éblouirait Shakspeare et ravirait Euler!
Il voyage, Délos gigantesque de l’air,
Et rien ne le repousse et rien ne le refuse;
Et l’on entend parler sa grande voix confuse.

Par moments la tempête accourt, le ciel pâlit,
L’autan bouleversant les flots de l’air, emplit
L’espace d’une écume affreuse de nuages;
Mais qu’importe à l’esquif de la mer sans rivages!
Seulement, sur son aile il se dresse en marchant;
Il devient formidable à l’abîme méchant,
Et dompte en frémissant la trombe qui se creuse.
On le dirait conduit dans l’horreur ténébreuse
Par l’âme des Leibnitz, des Fultons, des Képlers;
Et l’on croit voir, parmi le chaos plein d’éclairs,
De détonations, d’ombre et de jets de soufre,
Le sombre emportement d’un monde dans un gouffre.

*

Qu’importe le moment! qu’importe la saison!
La brume peut cacher dans le blême horizon
Les Saturnes et les Mercures;
La bise, conduisant la pluie aux crins épars,
Dans les nuages lourds grondant de toutes parts,
Peut tordre des hydres obscures;

Qu’importe! il va. Tout souffle est bon; simoun, mistral!
La terre a disparu dans le puits sidéral.
Il entre au mystère nocturne;

Au-dessus de la grêle et de l’ouragan fou,
Laissant le globe en bas dans l’ombre, on ne sait où,
Sous le renversement de l’urne.

Intrépide, il bondit sur les ondes du vent;
Il se rue, aile ouverte et la proue en avant,
Il monte, il monte, il monte encore,
Au delà de la zone où tout s’évanouit,
Comme s’il s’en allait dans la profonde nuit
À la poursuite de l’aurore!

Calme, il monte où jamais nuage n’est monté;
Il plane à la hauteur de la sérénité,
Devant la vision des sphères;
Elles sont là, faisant le mystère éclatant,
Chacune feu d’un gouffre, et toutes constatant
Les énigmes par les lumières.

Andromède étincelle, Orion resplendit;
L’essaim prodigieux des Pléiades grandit;
Sirius ouvre son cratère;
Arcturus, oiseau d’or, scintille dans son nid;
Le Scorpion hideux fait cabrer au zénith
Le poitrail bleu du Sagittaire.

L’aéroscaphe voit, comme en face de lui,
Là-haut, Aldébaran par Céphée ébloui,
Persée escarboucle des cimes,
Le chariot polaire aux flamboyants essieux,
Et, plus loin, la lueur lactée, ô sombres cieux,
La fourmilière des abîmes!

Vers l’apparition terrible des soleils,
Il monte; dans l’horreur des espaces vermeils,
Il s’oriente, ouvrant ses voiles;
On croirait, dans l’éther où de loin on l’entend,
Que ce vaisseau puissant et superbe, en chantant,

Part pour une de ces étoiles!

Tant cette nef, rompant tous les terrestres nœuds,
Volante, et franchissant le ciel vertigineux,
Rêve des blêmes Zoroastres,
Comme effrénée au souffle insensé de la nuit,
Se jette, plonge, enfonce et tombe et roule et fuit
Dans le précipice des astres!

*

Où donc s’arrêtera l’homme séditieux?
L’espace voit, d’un œil par moment soucieux,
L’empreinte du talon de l’homme dans les nues;
Il tient l’extrémité des choses inconnues;
Il épouse l’abîme à son argile uni;
Le voilà maintenant marcheur de l’infini.
Où s’arrêtera-t-il, le puissant réfractaire?
Jusqu’à quelle distance ira-t-il de la terre?
Jusqu’à quelle distance ira-t-il du destin?
L’âpre Fatalité se perd dans le lointain;
Toute l’antique histoire affreuse et déformée
Sur l’horizon nouveau fuit comme une fumée.
Les temps sont venus. L’homme a pris possession
De l’air, comme du flot la grêbe et l’alcyon.
Devant nos rêves fiers, devant nos utopies
Ayant des yeux croyants et des ailes impies,
Devant tous nos efforts pensifs et haletants,
L’obscurité sans fond fermait ses deux battants;
Le vrai champ enfin s’offre aux puissantes algèbres;
L’homme vainqueur, tirant le verrou des ténèbres,
Dédaigne l’Océan, le vieil infini mort.
La porte noire cède et s’entre-bâille. Il sort!

Ô profondeurs! faut-il encor l’appeler l’homme?

L’homme est d’abord monté sur la bête de somme;
Puis sur le chariot que portent des essieux;
Puis sur la frêle barque au mât ambitieux;
Puis, quand il a fallu vaincre l’écueil, la lame,
L’onde et l’ouragan, l’homme est monté sur la flamme;
À présent l’immortel aspire à l’éternel;
Il montait sur la mer, il monte sur le ciel.

L’homme force le sphinx à lui tenir la lampe.
Jeune, il jette le sac du vieil Adam qui rampe,
Et part, et risque aux cieux, qu’éclaire son flambeau,
Un pas semblable à ceux qu’on fait dans le tombeau;
Et peut-être voici qu’enfin la traversée
Effrayante, d’un astre à l’autre, est commencée!

*

Stupeur! Se pourrait-il que l’homme s’élançât?
Ô nuit! se pourrait-il que l’homme, ancien forçat,
Que l’esprit humain, vieux reptile,
Devint ange, et, brisant le carcan qui le mord,
Fût soudain de plain-pied avec les cieux? La mort
Va donc devenir inutile!

Oh! franchir l’éther! songe épouvantable et beau!
Doubler le promontoire énorme du tombeau!
Qui sait? Toute aile est magnanime:
L’homme est ailé. Peut-être, ô merveilleux retour!
Un Christophe Colomb de l’ombre, quelque jour,
Un Gama du cap de l’abîme,

Un Jason de l’azur, depuis longtemps parti,
De la terre oublié, par le ciel englouti,
Tout à coup, sur l’humaine rive
Reparaîtra, monté sur cet alérion,
Et montrant Sirius, Allioth, Orion,

Tout pâle, dira: J’en arrive!

Ciel! ainsi, comme on voit aux voûtes des celliers
Les noirceurs qu’en rôdant tracent les chandeliers,
On pourrait, sous les bleus pilastres,
Deviner qu’un enfant de la terre a passé,
À ce que le flambeau de l’homme aurait laissé
De fumée au plafond des astres!

*

Pas si loin! pas si haut! redescendons. Restons
L’homme, restons Adam; mais non l’homme à tâtons,
Mais non l’Adam tombé! Tout autre rêve altère
L’espèce d’idéal qui convient à la terre.
Contentons-nous du mot: meilleur! écrit partout.
Oui, l’aube s’est levée.
Oh! ce fut tout à coup
Comme une éruption de folie et de joie,
Quand, après six mille ans dans la fatale voie,
Défaite brusquement par l’invisible main,
La pesanteur, liée au pied du genre humain,
Se brisa, cette chaîne était toutes les chaînes!
Tout s’envola dans l’homme, et les fureurs, les haines,
Les chimères, la force évanouie enfin,
L’ignorance et l’erreur, la misère et la faim,
Le droit divin des rois, les faux dieux juifs ou guèbres,
Le mensonge, le dol, les brumes, les ténèbres,
Tombèrent dans la poudre avec l’antique sort,
Comme le vêtement du bagne dont on sort.

Et c’est ainsi que l’ère annoncée est venue,
Cette ère qu’à travers les temps, épaisse nue,
Thalès apercevait au loin devant ses yeux;
Et Platon, lorsque, ému, des sphères dans les cieux
Il écoutait les chants et contemplait les danses.

Les êtres inconnus et bons, les providences
Présentes dans l’azur où l’œil ne les voit pas,
Les anges qui de l’homme observent tous les pas,
Leur tâche sainte étant de diriger les âmes,
Et d’attiser, avec toutes les belles flammes,
La conscience au fond des cerveaux ténébreux,
Ces amis des vivants, toujours penchés sur eux,
Ont cessé de frémir, et d’être, en la tourmente
Et dans les sombres nuits, la voix qui se lamente.
Voici qu’on voit bleuir l’idéal Sion.
Ils n’ont plus l’œil fixé sur l’apparition
Du vainqueur, du soldat, du fauve chasseur d’hommes.
Les vagues flamboiements épars sur les Sodomes,
Précurseurs du grand feu dévorant, les lueurs
Que jette le sourcil tragique des tueurs,
Les guerres, s’arrachant avec leur griffe immonde
Les frontières, haillon difforme du vieux monde,
Les battements de cœur des mères aux abois,
L’embuscade ou le vol guettant au fond des bois,
Le cri de la chouette et de la sentinelle,
Les fléaux, ne sont plus leur alarme éternelle.
Le deuil n’est plus mêlé dans tout ce qu’on entend;
Leur oreille n’est plus tendue à chaque instant
Vers le gémissement indigné de la tombe;
La moisson rit aux champs où râlait l’hécatombe;
L’azur ne les voit plus pleurer les nouveau-nés,
Dans tous les innocents pressentir des damnés,
Et la pitié n’est plus leur unique attitude;
Ils ne regardent plus la morne servitude
Tresser sa maille obscure à l’osier des berceaux.
L’homme aux fers, pénétré du frisson des roseaux,
Est remplacé par l’homme attendri, fort et calme;
La fonction du sceptre est faite par la palme;
Voici qu’enfin, ô gloire! exaucés dans leur vœu,
Ces êtres, dieux pour nous, créatures pour Dieu,
Sont heureux, l’homme est bon, et sont fiers, l’homme est juste;

Les esprits purs, essaim de l’empyrée lumineux,
Ne sentent plus saigner l’amour qu’ils ont en eux;
Une clarté paraît dans leur beau regard sombre;
Et l’archange commence à sourire dans l’ombre.

*

Où va-t-il, ce navire? Il va, de jour vêtu,
À l’avenir divin et pur, à la vertu,
À la science qu’on voit luire,
À la mort des fléaux, à l’oubli généreux,
À l’abondance, au calme, au rire, à l’homme heureux;
Il va, ce glorieux navire,

Au droit, à la raison, à la fraternité,
À la religieuse et sainte vérité
Sans impostures et sans voiles,
À l’amour, sur les cœurs serrant son doux lien,
Au juste, au grand, au bon, au beau… — Vous voyez bien
Qu’en effet il monte aux étoiles!

Il porte l’homme à l’homme et l’esprit à l’esprit.
Il civilise, ô gloire! Il ruine, il flétrit
Tout l’affreux passé qui s’effare,
Il abolit la loi de fer, la loi de sang,
Les glaives, les carcans, l’esclavage, en passant
Dans les cieux comme une fanfare.

Il ramène au vrai ceux que le faux repoussa;
Il fait briller la foi dans l’œil de Spinosa
Et l’espoir sur le front de Hobbe;
Il plane, rassurant, réchauffant, épanchant
Sur ce qui fut lugubre et ce qui fut méchant
Toute la clémence de l’aube.

Les vieux champs de bataille étaient là dans la nuit;
Il passe, et maintenant voilà le jour qui luit

Sur ces grands charniers de l’histoire
Où les siècles, penchant leur œil triste et profond,
Venaient regarder l’ombre effroyable que font
Les deux ailes de la victoire.

Derrière lui, César redevient homme; Éden
S’élargit sur l’Érèbe, épanoui soudain;
Les ronces de lys sont couvertes;
Tout revient, tout renaît; ce que la mort courbait
Refleurit dans la vie, et le bois du gibet
Jette, effrayé, des branches vertes.

Le nuage, l’aurore aux candides fraîcheurs,
L’aile de la colombe, et toutes les blancheurs,
Composent là-haut sa magie;
Derrière lui, pendant qu’il fuit vers la clarté,
Dans l’antique noirceur de la Fatalité
Des lueurs de l’enfer rougie,

Dans ce brumeux chaos qui fut le monde ancien,
Où l’Allah turc s’accoude au sphinx égyptien,
Dans la séculaire géhenne,
Dans la Gomorrhe infâme où flambe un lac fumant,
Dans la forêt du mal qu’éclairent vaguement
Les deux yeux fixes de la Haine,

Tombent, sèchent, ainsi que des feuillages morts,
Et s’en vont la douleur, le péché, le remords,
La perversité lamentable,
Tout l’ancien joug, de rêve et de crime forgé,
Nemrod, Aaron, la guerre avec le préjugé,
La boucherie avec l’étable!

Tous les spoliateurs et tous les corrupteurs
S’en vont; et les faux jours sur les fausses hauteurs;
Et le taureau d’airain qui beugle,
La hache, le billot, le bûcher dévorant,

Et le docteur versant l’erreur à l’ignorant,
Vil bâton qui trompait l’aveugle!

Et tous ceux qui faisaient, au lieu de repentirs,
Un rire au prince avec les larmes des martyrs,
Et tous ces flatteurs des épées
Qui louaient le sultan, le maître universel,
Et, pour assaisonner l’hymne, prenaient du sel
Dans le sac aux têtes coupées!

Les pestes, les forfaits, les cimiers fulgurants,
S’effacent, et la route où marchaient les tyrans,
Bélial roi, Dagon ministre,
Et l’épine, et la haie horrible du chemin
Où l’homme, du vieux monde et du vieux vice humain,
Entend bêler le bouc sinistre.

On voit luire partout les esprits sidéraux;
On voit la fin du monstre et la fin du héros,
Et de l’athée et de l’augure,
La fin du conquérant, la fin du paria;
Et l’on voit lentement sortir Beccaria
De Dracon qui se transfigure.

On voit l’agneau sortir du dragon fabuleux,
La vierge de l’opprobre, et Marie aux yeux bleus
De la Vénus prostituée;
Le blasphème devient le psaume ardent et pur,
L’hymne prend, pour s’en faire autant d’ailes d’azur,
Tous les haillons de la huée.

Tout est sauvé! la fleur, le printemps aromal,
L’éclosion du bien, l’écroulement du mal,
Fêtent dans sa course enchantée
Ce beau globe éclaireur, ce grand char curieux,
Qu’Empédocle, du fond des gouffres, suit des yeux,
Et, du haut des monts, Prométhée!

Le jour s’est fait dans l’antre où l’horreur s’accroupit.
En expirant, l’antique univers décrépit,
Larve à la prunelle ternie,
Gisant, et regardant le ciel noir s’étoiler,
A laissé cette sphère heureuse s’envoler
Des lèvres de son agonie.

*

Oh! ce navire fait le voyage sacré!
C’est l’ascension bleue à son premier degré;
Hors de l’antique et vil décombre,
Hors de la pesanteur, c’est l’avenir fondé;
C’est le destin de l’homme à la fin évadé,
Qui lève l’ancre et sort de l’ombre!

Ce navire là-haut conclut le grand hymen.
Il mêle presque à Dieu l’âme du genre humain.
Il voit l’insondable, il y touche;
Il est le vaste élan du progrès vers le ciel;
Il est l’entrée altière et sainte du réel
Dans l’antique idéal farouche.

Oh! chacun de ses pas conquiert l’illimité!
Il est la joie; il est la paix; l’humanité
A trouvé son organe immense;
Il vogue, usurpateur sacré, vainqueur béni,
Reculant chaque jour plus loin dans l’infini
Le point sombre où l’homme commence.

Il laboure l’abîme; il ouvre ces sillons
Où croissaient l’ouragan, l’hiver, les tourbillons,
Les sifflements et les huées;
Grâce à lui, la concorde est la gerbe des cieux;
Il va, fécondateur du ciel mystérieux,

Charrue auguste des nuées.

Il fait germer la vie humaine dans ces champs
Où Dieu n’avait encor semé que des couchants
Et moissonné que des aurores;
Il entend, sous son vol qui fend les airs sereins,
Croître et frémir partout les peuples souverains,
Ces immenses épis sonores!

Nef magique et suprême! elle a, rien qu’en marchant,
Changé le cri terrestre en pur et joyeux chant,
Rajeuni les races flétries,
Établi l’ordre vrai, montré le chemin sûr,
Dieu juste! et fait entrer dans l’homme tant d’azur
Qu’elle a supprimé les patries!

Faisant à l’homme avec le ciel une cité,
Une pensée avec toute l’immensité,
Elle abolit les vieilles règles,
Elle abaisse les monts, elle annule les tours;
Splendide, elle introduit les peuples, marcheurs lourds,
Dans la communion des aigles.

Elle a cette divine et chaste fonction
De composer là-haut l’unique nation,
À la fois dernière et première,
De promener l’essor dans le rayonnement,
Et de faire planer, ivre de firmament,
La liberté dans la lumière.

XV. Hors des temps

LA TROMPETTE DU JUGEMENT

*

Je vis dans la nuée un clairon monstrueux.

Et ce clairon semblait, au seuil profond des cieux,
Calme, attendre le souffle immense de l’archange.

Ce qui jamais ne meurt, ce qui jamais ne change,
L’entourait. À travers un frisson, on sentait
Que ce buccin fatal, qui rêve et qui se tait,
Quelque part, dans l’endroit où l’on crée, où l’on sème,
Avait été forgé par quelqu’un de suprême
Avec de l’équité condensée en airain.
Il était là, lugubre, effroyable, serein.
Il gisait sur la brume insondable qui tremble,
Hors du monde, au delà de tout ce qui ressemble
À la forme de quoi que ce soit.
Il vivait.

Il semblait un réveil songeant près d’un chevet.

Oh! quelle nuit! là, rien n’a de contour ni d’âge;
Et le nuage est spectre, et le spectre est nuage.

*

Et c’était le clairon de l’abîme.
Une voix
Un jour en sortira qu’on entendra sept fois.
En attendant, glacé, mais écoutant, il pense;
Couvant le châtiment, couvant la récompense;

Et toute l’épouvante éparse au ciel est sœur
De cet impénétrable et morne avertisseur.

Je le considérais dans les vapeurs funèbres
Comme on verrait se taire un coq dans les ténèbres.
Pas un murmure autour du clairon souverain.
Et la terre sentait le froid de son airain,
Quoique, là, d’aucun monde on ne vît les frontières.

Et l’immobilité de tous les cimetières,
Et le sommeil de tous les tombeaux, et la paix
De tous les morts couchés dans la fosse, étaient faits
Du silence inouï qu’il avait dans la bouche;
Ce lourd silence était pour l’affreux mort farouche
L’impossibilité de faire faire un pli
Au suaire cousu sur son front par l’oubli.
Ce silence tenait en suspens l’anathème.
On comprenait que tant que ce clairon suprême
Se tairait, le sépulcre, obscur, roidi, béant,
Garderait l’attitude horrible du néant,
Que la momie aurait toujours sa bandelette,
Que l’homme irait tombant du cadavre au squelette,
Et que ce fier banquet radieux, ce festin
Que les vivants gloutons appellent le destin,
Toute la joie errante en tourbillons de fêtes,
Toutes les passions de la chair satisfaites,
Gloire, orgueil, les héros ivres, les tyrans soûls,
Continueraient d’avoir pour but et pour dessous
La pourriture, orgie offerte aux vers convives;
Mais qu’à l’heure où soudain, dans l’espace sans rives,
Cette trompette vaste et sombre sonnerait,
On verrait, comme un tas d’oiseaux d’une forêt,
Toutes les âmes, cygne, aigle, éperviers, colombes,
Frémissantes, sortir du tremblement des tombes,
Et tous les spectres faire un bruit de grandes eaux,
Et se dresser, et prendre à la hâte leurs os,
Tandis qu’au fond, au fond du gouffre, au fond du rêve,

Blanchissant l’absolu, comme un jour qui se lève,
Le front mystérieux du juge apparaîtrait!

*

Ce clairon avait l’air de savoir le secret.

On sentait que le râle énorme de ce cuivre
Serait tel qu’il ferait bondir, vibrer, revivre
L’ombre, le plomb, le marbre, et qu’à ce fatal glas,
Toutes les surdités voleraient en éclats;
Que l’oubli sombre, avec sa perte de mémoire,
Se lèverait au son de la trompette noire;
Que dans cette clameur étrange, en même temps
Qu’on entendrait frémir tous les cieux palpitants,
On entendrait crier toutes les consciences;
Que le sceptique au fond de ses insouciances,
Que le voluptueux, l’athée et le douteur,
Et le maître tombé de toute sa hauteur,
Sentiraient ce fracas traverser leurs vertèbres;
Que ce déchirement céleste des ténèbres
Ferait dresser quiconque est soumis à l’arrêt;
Que qui n’entendit pas le remords, l’entendrait;
Et qu’il réveillerait, comme un choc à la porte,
L’oreille la plus dure et l’âme la plus morte,
Même ceux qui, livrés au rire, aux vains combats,
Aux vils plaisirs, n’ont point tenu compte ici-bas
Des avertissements de l’ombre et du mystère,
Même ceux que n’a point réveillés sur la terre
Le tonnerre, ce coup de cloche de la nuit!

Oh! dans l’esprit de l’homme où tout vacille et fuit,
Où le verbe n’a pas un mot qui ne bégaie,
Où l’aurore apparaît, hélas! comme une plaie,
Dans cet esprit, tremblant dès qu’il ose augurer,
Oh! comment concevoir, comment se figurer
Cette vibration communiquée aux tombes,

Cette sommation aux blêmes catacombes,
Du ciel ouvrant sa porte et du gouffre ayant faim,
Le prodigieux bruit de Dieu disant: Enfin!

Oui, c’est vrai, — c’est du moins jusque-là que l’œil plonge, —
C’est l’avenir, — du moins tel qu’on le voit en songe, —
Quand le monde atteindra son but, quand les instants,
Les jours, les mois, les ans, auront rempli le temps,
Quand tombera du ciel l’heure immense et nocturne,
Cette goutte qui doit faire déborder l’urne,
Alors, dans le silence horrible, un rayon blanc,
Long, pâle, glissera, formidable et tremblant,
Sur ces haltes de nuit qu’on nomme cimetières,
Les tentes frémiront, quoiqu’elles soient de pierres,
Dans tous ces sombres camps endormis; et, sortant
Tout à coup de la brume où l’univers l’attend,
Ce clairon, au-dessus des êtres et des choses,
Au-dessus des forfaits et des apothéoses,
Des ombres et des os, des esprits et des corps,
Sonnera la diane effrayante des morts.

Ô lever en sursaut des larves pêle-mêle!
Oh! la Nuit réveillant la Mort, sa sœur jumelle!
Pensif, je regardais l’incorruptible airain.

*

Les volontés sans loi, les passions sans frein,
Toutes les actions de tous les êtres, haines,
Amours, vertus, fureurs, hymnes, cris, plaisirs, peines,
Avaient laissé, dans l’ombre où rien ne remuait,
Leur pâle empreinte autour de ce bronze muet;
Une obscure Babel y tordait sa spirale.

Sa dimension vague, ineffable, spectrale,
Sortant de l’éternel, entrait dans l’absolu.
Pour pouvoir mesurer ce tube, il eût fallu

Prendre la toise au fond du rêve, et la coudée
Dans la profondeur trouble et sombre de l’idée;
Un de ses bouts touchait le bien, l’autre le mal;
Et sa longueur allait de l’homme à l’animal,
Quoiqu’on ne vît point là d’animal et point d’homme;
Couché sur terre, il eût joint Éden à Sodome.

Son embouchure, gouffre où plongeait mon regard,
Cercle de l’Inconnu ténébreux et hagard,
Pleine de cette horreur que le mystère exhale,
M’apparaissait ainsi qu’une offre colossale
D’entrer dans l’ombre où Dieu même est évanoui.
Cette gueule, avec l’air d’un redoutable ennui,
Morne, s’élargissait sur l’homme et la nature;
Et cette épouvantable et muette ouverture
Semblait le bâillement noir de l’éternité.

*

Au fond de l’immanent et de l’illimité,
Parfois, dans les lointains sans nom de l’Invisible,
Quelque chose tremblait de vaguement terrible,
Et brillait et passait, inexprimable éclair.
Toutes les profondeurs des mondes avaient l’air
De méditer, dans l’ombre où l’ombre se répète,
L’heure où l’on entendrait de cette âpre trompette
Un appel aussi long que l’infini, jaillir.
L’immuable semblait d’avance en tressaillir.

Des porches de l’abîme, antres hideux, cavernes
Que nous nommons enfers, puits, gehennams, avernes,
Bouches d’obscurité qui ne prononcent rien,
Du vide, où ne flottait nul souffle aérien,
Du silence où l’haleine osait à peine éclore,
Ceci se dégageait pour l’âme: Pas encore.

Par instants, dans ce lieu triste comme le soir,

Comme on entend le bruit de quelqu’un qui vient voir,
On entendait le pas boiteux de la justice;
Puis cela s’effaçait. Des vermines, le vice,
Le crime, s’approchaient, et, fourmillement noir,
Fuyaient. Le clairon sombre ouvrait son entonnoir.
Un groupe d’ouragans dormait dans ce cratère.
Comme cet organum des gouffres doit se taire
Jusqu’au jour monstrueux où nous écarterons
Les clous de notre bière au-dessus de nos fronts,
Nul bras ne le touchait dans l’invisible sphère;
Chaque race avait fait sa couche de poussière
Dans l’orbe sépulcral de son évasement;
Sur cette poudre l’œil lisait confusément
Ce mot: Riez, écrit par le doigt d’Épicure;
Et l’on voyait, au fond de la rondeur obscure,
La toile d’araignée horrible de Satan.

Des astres qui passaient murmuraient: « Souviens-t-en!
Prie!” et la nuit portait cette parole à l’ombre.

Et je ne sentais plus ni le temps ni le nombre.

*

Une sinistre main sortait de l’infini.

Vers la trompette, effroi de tout crime impuni,
Qui doit faire à la mort un jour lever la tête,
Elle pendait énorme, ouverte, et comme prête
À saisir ce clairon qui se tait dans la nuit,
Et qu’emplit le sommeil formidable du bruit.
La main, dans la nuée et hors de l’Invisible,
S’allongeait. À quel être était-elle? Impossible
De le dire, en ce morne et brumeux firmament.
L’œil dans l’obscurité ne voyait clairement
Que les cinq doigts béants de cette main terrible;

Tant l’être, quel qu’il fût, debout dans l’ombre horrible,
— Sans doute quelque archange ou quelque séraphin
Immobile, attendant le signe de la fin, —
Plongeait profondément, sous les ténébreux voiles,
Du pied dans les enfers, du front dans les étoiles!

Préface

À un certain moment de la vie, si occupé qu'on soit de l'avenir, la pente à regarder en arrière est irrésistible. Notre adolescence, cette morte charmante, nous apparaît, et veut qu'on pense à elle. C'est d'ailleurs une sérieuse et mélancolique leçon que la mise en présence de deux âges dans le même homme, de l'âge qui commence et de l'âge qui s'achève; l'un espère dans la vie, l'autre dans la mort.

Il n'est pas inutile de confronter le point de départ avec le point d'arrivée, le frais tumulte du matin avec l'apaisement du soir, et l'illusion avec la conclusion.

Le cœur de l'homme a un recto sur lequel est écrit Jeunesse, et un verso sur lequel est écrit Sagesse. C'est ce recto et ce verso qu'on trouvera dans ce livre.

La réalité est dans ce livre, modifiée par tout ce qui dans l'homme va au-delà du réel. Ce livre est écrit beaucoup avec le rêve, un peu avec le souvenir.

Rêver est permis aux vaincus; se souvenir est permis aux solitaires.

Hauteville-House, octobre 1865.

Le Cheval

Je l’avais saisi par la bride;
Je tirais, les poings dans les nœuds,
Ayant dans les sourcils la ride
De cet effort vertigineux.

C’était le grand cheval de gloire,
Né de la mer comme Astarté,
A qui l’aurore donne à boire
Dans les urnes de la clarté;

L’alérion aux bonds sublimes,
Qui se cabre, immense, indompté,
Plein du hennissement des cimes,
Dans la bleue immortalité.

Tout génie, élevant sa coupe,
Dressant sa torche, au fond des cieux,
Superbe, a passé sur la croupe
De ce monstre mystérieux.

Les poëtes et les prophètes,
O terre, tu les reconnais
Aux brûlures que leur ont faites
Les étoiles de son harnais.

Il souffle l’ode, l’épopée,
Le drame, les puissants effrois,
Hors des fourreaux les coups d’épée,
Les forfaits hors du cœur des rois.

Père de la source sereine,
Il fait du rocher ténébreux
Jaillir pour les grecs Hippocrène,
Et Raphidium pour les hébreux.

Il traverse l’Apocalypse;
Pâle, il a la mort sur son dos.
Sa grande aile brumeuse éclipse
La lune devant Ténédos.

Le cri d’Amos, l’humeur d’Achille
Gonfle sa narine et lui sied;
La mesure du vers d’Eschyle,
C’est le battement de son pied.

Sur le fruit mort il penche l’arbre,
Les mères sur l’enfant tombé;
Lugubre, il fait Rachel de marbre,
Il fait de pierre Niobé.

Quand il part, l’idée est sa cible;
Quand il se dresse, crins au vent,
L’ouverture de l’impossible
Luit sous ses deux pieds de devant.

Il défie Eclair à la course;
Il a le Pinde, il aime Endor;
Fauve, il pourrait relayer l’Ourse
Qui traîne le Chariot d’or.

Il plonge au noir zénith; il joue
Avec tout ce qu’on peut oser;
Le zodiaque, énorme roue,
A failli parfois l’écraser.

Dieu fit le gouffre à son usage.
Il lui faut les cieux non frayés,
L’essor fou, l’ombre, et le paysage
Au-dessus de pics foudroyés.

Dans les vastes brumes funèbres

Il vole, il plane; il a l’amour
De se ruer dans les ténèbres
Jusqu’à ce qu’il trouve le jour.

Sa prunelle sauvage et forte
Fixe sur l’homme, atome nu,
L’effrayant regard qu’on rapporte
De ces courses dans l’inconnu.

Il n’est docile, il n’est propice
Qu’à celui qui, la lyre en main,
Le pousse dans le précipice,
Au-delà de l’esprit humain.

Son écurie, où vit la fée,
Veut un divin palefrenier;
Le premier s’appelait Orphée,
Et le dernier, André Chénier.

Il domine notre âme entière;
Ezéchiel sous le palmier
L’attend, et c’est dans sa litière
Que Job prend son tas de fumier.

Malheur à celui qu’il étonne
Ou qui veut jouer avec lui!
Il ressemble au couchant d’automne
Dans son inexorable ennui.

Plus d’un sur son dos se déforme;
Il hait le joug et le collier;
Sa fonction est d’être énorme
Sans s’occuper du cavalier.

Sans patience et sans clémence,
Il laisse, en son vol effréné,
Derrière sa ruade immense

Malebranche désarçonné.

Son flanc ruisselant d'étincelles
Porte le reste du lien
Qu'ont tâché de lui mettre aux ailes
Despréaux et Quintilien.

Pensif, j'entraînais loin des crimes,
Des dieux, des rois, de la douleur,
Ce sombre cheval des abîmes
Vers le pré de l'idylle en fleur.

Je le tirais vers la prairie
Où l'aube, qui vient s'y poser,
Fait naître l'éplogue attendrie
Entre le rire et le baiser.

C'est là que croît, dans la ravine
Où fuit Plaute, ou Racan se plaît,
L'épigramme, cette aubépine,
Et ce trèfle, le triolet.

C'est là que l'abbé Chaulieu prêche,
Et que verdit sous les buissons
Toute cette herbe tendre et fraîche
Ou Segrais cueille ses chansons.

Le cheval luttait; ses prunelles,
Comme le glaive et l'yatagan,
Brillaient; il secouait ses ailes
Avec des souffles d'ouragan.

Il voulait retourner au gouffre;
Il reculait, prodigieux,
Ayant dans ses naseaux le soufre
Et l'âme du monde en ses yeux.

Il hennissait vers l’invisible;
Il appelait l’ombre au secours;
A ses appels le ciel terrible
Remuait des tonnerres sourds.

Les bacchantes heurtaient leurs sistres,
Les sphinx ouvraient leurs yeux profonds;
On voyait, à leurs doigts sinistres,
S’allonger l’ongle des griffons.

Les constellations en flamme
Frissonnaient à son cri vivant
Comme dans la main d’une femme
Une lampe se courbe au vent.

Chaque fois que son aile sombre
Battait le vaste azur terni,
Tous les groupes d’astres de l’ombre
S’effarouchaient dans l’infini.

Moi, sans quitter la plate-longe,
Sans le lâcher, je lui montrais
Le pré charmant, couleur de songe,
Où le vers rit sous l’antre frais.

Je lui montrais le champ, l’ombrage,
Les gazons par juin attiédis;
Je lui montrais le pâturage
Que nous appelons paradis.

— Que fais-tu là? me dit Virgile.
Et je répondis, tout couvert
De l’écume du monstre agile:
— Maître, je mets Pégase au vert.

FLORÉAL

I
Ordre du jour de Floréal

Victoire, amis! je dépêche
En hâte et de grand matin
Une strophe toute fraîche
Pour crier le bulletin.

J'embouche sur la montagne
La trompette aux longs éclats;
Sachez que le printemps gagne
La bataille des lilas.

Jeanne met dans sa pantoufle
Son pied qui n'est plus frileux;
Et voici qu'un vaste souffle
Emplit les abîmes bleus.

L'oiseau chante, l'agneau broute;
Mai, poussant des cris railleurs,
Crible l'hiver en déroute
D'une mitraille de fleurs.

II

Orphée, aux bois du Caÿstre,
Écoutait, quand l'astre luit,
Le rire obscur et sinistre
Des inconnus dans la nuit.

Phtas, la sibylle thébaine,
Voyait près de Phygalé
Danser des formes d’ébène
Sur l’horizon étoilé.

Eschyle errait à la brune
En Sicile, et s’enivrait
Des flûtes du clair de lune
Qu’on entend dans la forêt.

Pline, oubliant toutes choses
Pour les nymphes de Milet,
Épiait leurs jambes roses
Quand leur robe s’envolait.

Plaute, rôdant à Viterbe
Dans les vergers radieux,
Ramassait parfois dans l’herbe
Des fruits mordus par les dieux.

Versaille est un lieu sublime
Où le faune, un pied dans l’eau,
Offre à Molière la rime,
Étonnement de Boileau.

Le vieux Dante, à qui les âmes
Montraient leur sombre miroir,
Voyait s’évader des femmes
Entre les branches le soir.

André Chénier sous les saules
Avait l’éblouissement
De ces fuyantes épaules
Dont Virgile fut l’amant.

Shakspeare, aux aguets derrière
Le chêne aux rameaux dormants,

Entendait dans la clairière
De vagues trépignements.

Ô feuillage, tu m’attires;
Un dieu t’habite; et je crois
Que la danse des satyres
Tourne encore au fond des bois.

Psyché dans ma chambre est entrée,
Et j’ai dit à ce papillon:
—” Nomme-moi la chose sacrée.
“ Est-ce l’ombre? est-ce le rayon?

“ Est-ce la musique des lyres?
“ Est-ce le parfum de la fleur?
“ Quel est entre tous les délires
“ Celui qui fait l’homme meilleur?

“ Quel est l’encens? quelle est la flamme?
“ Et l’organe de l’avatar,
“ Et pour les souffrants le dictame,
“ Et pour les heureux le nectar?

“ Enseigne-moi ce qui fait vivre,
“ Ce qui fait que l’oeil brille et voit!
“ Enseigne-moi l’endroit du livre
“ Où Dieu pensif pose son doigt.

“ Qu’est-ce qu’en sortant de l’Érèbe
“ Dante a trouvé de plus complet?
“ Quel est le mot des sphinx de Thèbe
“ Et des ramiers du Paraclet?

“ Quelle est la chose, humble et superbe,

“ Faite de matière et d’éther,
“ Où Dieu met le plus de son verbe
“ Et l’homme le plus de sa chair?

“ Quel est le pont que l’esprit montre,
“ La route de la fange au ciel,
“ Où Vénus Astarté rencontre
“ À mi-chemin Ithuriel?

“ Quelle est la clef splendide et sombre,
“ Comme aux élus chère aux maudits,
“ Avec laquelle on ferme l’ombre
“ Et l’on ouvre le paradis?

“ Qu’est-ce qu’Orphée et Zoroastre,
“ Et Christ que Jean vint suppléer,
“ En mêlant la rose avec l’astre,
“ Auraient voulu pouvoir créer?

“ Puisque tu viens d’en haut, déesse,
“ Ange, peut-être le sais-tu?
“ Ô Psyché! quelle est la sagesse?
“ Ô Psyché! quelle est la vertu?

“ Qu’est-ce que, pour l’homme et la terre,
“ L’infini sombre a fait de mieux?
“ Quel est le chef-d’oeuvre du père?
“ Quel est le grand éclair des cieux?

Posant sur mon front, sous la nue,
Ses ailes qu’on ne peut briser,
Entre lesquelles elle est nue,
Psyché m’a dit: C’est le baiser.

IV
Le poète bat aux champs

I

Aux champs, compagnons et compagnes!
Fils, j’élève à la dignité
De géorgiques les campagnes
Quelconques où flambe l’été!

Flamber, c’est là toute l’histoire
Du coeur, des sens, de la saison,
Et de la pauvre mouche noire
Que nous appelons la raison.

Je te fais molosse, ô mon dogue!
L’acanthe manque? j’ai le thym.
Je nomme Vaugirard églogue;
J’installe Amyntas à Pantin.

La nature est indifférente
Aux nuances que nous créons
Entre Gros-Guillaume et Dorante;
Tout pampre a ses Anacréons.

L’idylle volontiers patoise.
Et je ne vois point que l’oiseau
Préfère Haliarte à Pontoise
Et Coronée à Palaiseau.

Les plus beaux noms de la Sicile
Et de la Grèce ne font pas
Que l’âne au fouet soit plus docile,
Que l’amour fuie à moins grands pas.

Les fleurs sont à Sèvre aussi fraîches
Que sur l’Hybla, cher au sylvain;
Montreuil mérite avec ses pêches
La garde du dragon divin.

Marton nue est Phyllis sans voiles;

Fils, le soir n'est pas plus vermeil,
Sous son chapeau d'ombre et d'étoiles,
À Banduse qu'à Montfermeil.

Bercy pourrait griser sept Sages;
Les Auteuils sont fils des Tempés;
Si l'Ida sombre a ses nuages,
La guinguette a des canapés.

Rien n'est haut ni bas; les fontaines
Lavent la pourpre et le sayon;
L'aube d'Ivry, l'aube d'Athènes,
Sont faites du même rayon.

J'ai déjà dit parfois ces choses,
Et toujours je les redirai;
Car du fond de toutes les proses
Peut s'élancer le vers sacré.

Si Babet a la gorge ronde,
Babet égale Pholoé.
Comme Chypre la Beauce est blonde.
Larifla descend d'Évohé.

Toinon, se baignant sur la grève,
A plus de cheveux sur le dos
Que la Callyrhoé qui rêve
Dans le grand temple d'Abydos.

Çà, que le bourgeois fraternise
Avec les satyres cornus!
Amis, le corset de Denise
Vaut la ceinture de Vénus.

II
Donc, fuyons Paris! plus de gêne!
Bergers, plantons là Tortoni!

Allons boire à la coupe pleine
Du printemps, ivre d’infini.

Allons fêter les fleurs exquises,
Partons! Quittons, joyeux et fous,
Pour les dryades, les marquises,
Et pour les faunes, les voyous!

Plus de bouquins, point de gazettes!
Je hais cette submersion.
Nous irons cueillir des noisettes
Dans l’été, fraîche vision.

La banlieue, amis, peut suffire.
La fleur, que Paris souille, y naît.
Flore y vivait avec Zéphyre
Avant de vivre avec Brunet.

Aux champs, les vers deviennent strophes.
À Paris l’étang, c’est l’égout.
Je sais qu’il est des philosophes
Criant très haut: “ Lutèce est tout!

“ Les champs ne valent pas la ville!”
Fils, toujours le bon sens hurla
Quand Voltaire à Damilaville
Dit ces calembredaines-là.

III

Aux champs, la nuit est vénérable,
Le jour rit d’un rire enfantin;
Le soir berce l’orme et l’érable,
Le soir est beau; mais le matin,

Le matin, c’est la grande fête;
C’est l’auréole où la nuit fond,
Où le diplomate a l’air bête,

Où le bouvier a l’air profond.

La fleur d’or du pré d’azur sombre,
L’astre, brille au ciel clair encor;
En bas, le bleuet luit dans l’ombre,
Étoile bleue en un champ d’or.

L’oiseau court, les taureaux mugissent;
Les feuillages sont enchantés;
Les cercles du vent s’élargissent
Dans l’ascension des clartés.

L’air frémit; l’onde est plus sonore;
Toute âme entrouvre son secret;
L’univers croit, quand vient l’aurore,
Que sa conscience apparaît.

IV

Quittons Paris et ses casernes.
Plongeons-nous, car les ans sont courts,
Jusqu’aux genoux dans les luzernes
Et jusqu’au coeur dans les amours.

Joignons les baisers aux spondées;
Souvenons-nous que le hautbois
Donnait à Platon des idées
Voluptueuses, dans les bois.

Vanve a d’indulgentes prairies;
Ville-d’Avray ferme les yeux
Sur les douces gamineries
Des cupidons mystérieux.

Là, les Jeux, les Ris et les Farces
Poursuivent, sous les bois flottants,
Les chimères de joie éparses
Dans la lumière du printemps.

L’onde à Triel est bucolique;
Asnière a des flux et reflux
Où vogue l’adorable clique
De tous ces petites dieux joufflus.

Le sel attique et l’eau de Seine
Se mêlent admirablement.
Il n’est qu’une chose malsaine,
Jeanne, c’est d’être sans amant.

Que notre ivresse se signale!
Allons où Pan nous conduira.
Ressuscitons la bacchanale,
Cette aïeule de l’opéra.

Laissons, et même envoyons paître
Les boeufs, les chèvres, les brebis,
La raison, le garde champêtre!
Fils, avril chante, crions bis!

Qu’à Gif, grâce à nous, le notaire
Et le marguillier soient émus,
Fils, et qu’on entende à Nanterre
Les vagues flûtes de l’Hémus!

Acclimatons Faune à Vincenne,
Sans pourtant prendre pour conseil
L’immense Aristophane obscène,
Effronté comme le soleil.

Rions du maire, ou de l’édile;
Et mordons, en gens convaincus,
Dans cette pomme de l’idylle
Où l’on voit les dents de Moschus.

V

Interruption à une lecture de Platon

Je lisais Platon. - J’ouvris
La porte de ma retraite,
Et j’aperçus Lycoris,
C’est-à-dire Turlurette.

Je n’avais pas dit encor
Un seul mot à cette belle.
Sous un vague plafond d’or
Mes rêves battaient de l’aile.

La belle, en jupon gris-clair,
Montait l’escalier sonore;
Ses frais yeux bleus avaient l’air
De revenir de l’aurore.

Elle chantait un couplet
D’une chanson de la rue
Qui dans sa bouche semblait
Une lumière apparue.

Son front éclipsa Platon.
Ô front céleste et frivole!
Un ruban sous son menton
Rattachait son auréole.

Elle avait l’accent qui plaît,
Un foulard pour cachemire,
Dans sa main son pot au lait,
Des flammes dans son sourire.

Et je lui dis (le Phédon
Donne tant de hardiesse!):
Mademoiselle, pardon,
Ne seriez-vous pas déesse?

VI

Quand les guignes furent mangées,
Elle s’écria tout à coup:
J’aimerais bien mieux des dragées.
Est-il ennuyeux, ton Saint-Cloud!

On a grand-soif; au lieu de boire,
On mange des cerises; voi,
C’est joli, j’ai la bouche noire
Et j’ai les doigts bleus; laisse-moi. -

Elle disait cent autres choses,
Et sa douce main me battait.
Ô mois de juin! rayons et roses!
L’azur chante et l’ombre se tait.

J’essuyai, sans trop lui déplaire,
Tout en la laissant m’accuser,
Avec des fleurs sa main colère,
Et sa bouche avec un baiser.

VII
Genio libri

Ô toi qui dans mon âme vibres,
Ô mon cher esprit familier,
Les espaces sont clairs et libres;
J’y consens, défais ton collier,

Mêle les dieux, confonds les styles,
Accouple au poean les agnus;
Fais dans les grands cloîtres hostiles
Danser les nymphes aux seins nus.

Sois de France, sois de Corinthe,
Réveille au bruit de ton clairon

Pégase fourbu qu’on éreinte
Au vieux coche de Campistron.

Tresse l’acanthe et la liane;
Grise l’augure avec l’abbé;
Que David contemple Diane,
Qu’Actéon guette Bethsabé.

Du nez de Minerve indignée
Au crâne chauve de saint Paul
Suspends la toile d’araignée
Qui prendra les rimes au vol.

Fais rire Marion courbée
Sur les oegipans ahuris.
Cours, saute, emmène Alphésibée
Souper au Café de Paris.

Sois gai, hardi, glouton, vorace;
Flâne, aime; sois assez coquin
Pour rencontrer parfois Horace
Et toujours éviter Berquin.

Peins le nu d’après l’Homme antique,
Païen et biblique à la fois,
Constate la pose plastique
D’Ève ou de Rhée au fond des bois.

Des amours observe la mue.
Défais ce que les pédants font,
Et, penché sur l’étang, remue
L’art poétique jusqu’au fond.

Trouble La Harpe, ce coq d’Inde,
Et Boileau, dans leurs sanhédrins;
Saccage tout; jonche le Pinde
De césures d’alexandrins.

Prends l’abeille pour soeur jumelle;
Aie, ô rôdeur du frais vallon,
Un alvéole à miel, comme elle,
Et, comme elle, un brave aiguillon.

Plante là toute rhétorique,
Mais au vieux bon sens fais écho;
Monte en croupe sur la bourrique,
Si l’ânier s’appelle Sancho.

Qu’Argenteuil soit ton Pausilippe.
Sois un peu diable, et point démon,
Joue, et pour Fanfan la Tulipe
Quitte Ajax fils de Télamon.

Invente une églogue lyrique
Prenant terre au bois de Meudon,
Où le vers danse une pyrrhique
Qui dégénère en rigodon.

Si Loque, Coche, Graille et Chiffe
Dans Versailles viennent à toi,
Présente galamment la griffe
À ces quatre filles de roi.

Si Junon s’offre, fais ta tâche;
Fête Aspasie, admets Ninon;
Si Goton vient, sois assez lâche
Pour rire et ne pas dire: Non.

Sois le chérubin et l’éphèbe.
Que ton chant libre et disant tout
Vole, et de la lyre de Thèbe
Aille au mirliton de Saint-Cloud.

Qu’en ton livre, comme au bocage,

On entende un hymne, et jamais
Un bruit d’ailes dans une cage!
Rien des bas-fonds, tout des sommets!

Fais ce que tu voudras, qu’importe!
Pourvu que le vrai soit content;
Pourvu que l’alouette sorte
Parfois de ta strophe en chantant;

Pourvu que Paris où tu soupes
N’ôte rien à ton naturel;
Que les déesses dans tes groupes
Gardent une lueur du ciel;

Pourvu que la luzerne pousse
Dans ton idylle, et que Vénus
Y trouve une épaisseur de mousse
Suffisante pour ses pieds nus;

Pourvu que Grimod la Reynière
Signale à Brillat-Savarin
Une senteur de cressonnière
Mêlée à ton hymne serein;

Pourvu qu’en ton poème tremble
L’azur réel des claires eaux;
Pourvu que le brin d’herbe semble
Bon au nid des petits oiseaux;

Pourvu que Psyché soit baisée
Par ton souffle aux cieux réchauffé;
Pourvu qu’on sente la rosée
Dans ton vers qui boit du café.

LES COMPLICATIONS DE L’IDÉAL

I

Paulo minora canamus

À un ami

C’est vrai, pour un instant je laisse
Tous nos grands problèmes profonds;
Je menais des monstres en laisse,
J’errais sur le char des griffons.

J’en descends; je mets pied à terre;
Plus tard, demain, je pousserai
Plus loin encor dans le mystère
Les strophes au vol effaré.

Mais l’aigle aujourd’hui me distance;
(Sois tranquille, aigle, on t’atteindra)
Ma strophe n’est plus qu’une stance;
Meudon remplace Denderah.

Je suis avec l’onde et le cygne,
Dans les jasmins, dans floréal,
Dans juin, dans le blé, dans la vigne,
Dans le grand sourire idéal.

Je sors de l’énigme et du songe.
La mort, le joug, le noir, le bleu,
L’échelle des êtres qui plonge
Dans ce gouffre qu’on nomme Dieu;

Les vastes profondeurs funèbres,
L’abîme infinitésimal,
La sombre enquête des ténèbres,
Le procès que je fais au mal;

Mes études sur tout le bagne,
Sur les Juifs, sur les Esclavons;

Mes visions sur la montagne;
J’interromps tout cela; vivons.

J’ajourne cette oeuvre insondable;
J’ajourne Méduse et Satan;
Et je dis au sphinx formidable:
Je parle à la rose, va-t’en.

Ami, cet entracte te fâche.
Qu’y faire? les bois sont dorés;
Je mets sur l’affiche: Relâche;
Je vais rire un peu dans les prés.

Je m’en vais causer dans la loge
D’avril, ce portier de l’été.
Exiges-tu que j’interroge
Le bleuet sur l’éternité?

Faut-il qu’à l’abeille en ses courses,
Au lys, au papillon qui fuit,
À la transparence des sources,
Je montre le front de la nuit?

Faut-il, effarouchant les ormes,
Les tilleuls, les joncs, les roseaux,
Pencher les problèmes énormes
Sur le nid des petits oiseaux?

Mêler l’abîme à la broussaille?
Mêler le doute à l’aube en pleurs?
Quoi donc! ne veux-tu pas que j’aille
Faire la grosse voix aux fleurs?

Sur l’effrayante silhouette
Des choses que l’homme entrevoit,
Vais-je interpeller l’alouette
Perchée aux tuiles de mon toit?

Ne serai-je pas à cent lieues
Du bon sens, le jour où j'irai
Faire expliquer aux hochequeues
Le latin du Dies Irae?

Quand, de mon grenier, je me penche
Sur la laveuse qu'on entend,
Joyeuse, dans l'écume blanche
Plonger ses coudes en chantant,

Veux-tu que, contre cette sphère
De l'infini sinistre et nu
Où saint Jean frémissant vient faire
Des questions à l'Inconnu,

Contre le globe âpre et sans grèves,
Sans bornes, presque sans espoir,
Où la vague foudre des rêves
Se prolonge dans le ciel noir.

Contre l'astre et son auréole,
Contre l'immense que-sait-on,
Je heurte la bulle qui vole
Hors du baquet de Jeanneton?

II

Réalité

La nature est partout la même,
À Gonesse comme au Japon.
Mathieu Dombasle est Triptolème;
Une chlamyde est un jupon.

Lavallière dans son carrosse,
Pour Louis ou pour Mars épris,
Était tout juste aussi féroce

Qu’en son coquillage Cypris.

Ô fils et frères, ô poètes,
Quand la chose est, dites le mot.
Soyez de purs esprits, et faites.
Rien n’est bas quand l’âme est en haut.

Un hoquet à Silène échappe
Parmi les roses de Poestum.
Quand Horace étale Priape,
Shakspeare peut risquer Bottom.

La vérité n’a pas de bornes.
Grâce au grand Pan, dieu bestial,
Fils, le réel montre ses cornes
Sur le front bleu de l’idéal.

III
En sortant du collège

Première lettre

Puisque nous avons seize ans,
Vivons, mon vieux camarade,
Et cessons d’être innocents;
Car c’est là le premier grade.

Vivre c’est aimer. Apprends
Que, dans l’ombre où nos coeurs rêvent,
J’ai vu deux yeux bleus, si grands
Que tous les astres s’y lèvent.

Connais-tu tous ces bonheurs?
Faire des songes féroces,
Envier les grands seigneurs
Qui roulent dans des carrosses,

Avoir la fièvre, enrager,
Être un coeur saignant qui s’ouvre,
Souhaiter être un berger
Ayant pour cahute un Louvre,

Sentir en mangeant son pain
Comme en ruminant son rêve,
L’amertume du pépin
De la sombre pomme d’Ève;

Être amoureux, être fou,
Être un ange égal aux oies,
Être un forçat sous l’écrou;
Eh bien, j’ai toutes ces joies!

Cet être mystérieux
Qu’on appelle une grisette
M’est tombé du haut des cieux.
Je souffre. J’ai la recette.

Je sais l’art d’aimer; j’y suis
Habile et fort au point d’être
Stupide, et toutes les nuits
Accoudé sur ma fenêtre.

Deuxième lettre

Elle habite en soupirant
La mansarde mitoyenne.
Parfois sa porte, en s’ouvrant,
Pousse le coude à la mienne.

Elle est fière; parlons bas.
C’est une forme azurée
Qui, pour ravauder des bas,
Arrive de l’empyrée.

J’y songe quand le jour naît,
J’y rêve quand le jour baisse.
Change en casque son bonnet,
Tu croirais voir la Sagesse.

Sa cuirasse est un madras;
Elle sort avec la ruse
D’avoir une vieille au bras
Qui lui tient lieu de Méduse.

On est sens dessus dessous
Rien qu’à voir la mine altière
Dont elle prend pour deux sous
De persil chez la fruitière.

Son beau regard transparent
Est grave sans airs moroses.
On se la figure errant
Dans un bois de lauriers-roses.

Pourtant, comme nous voyons
Que parfois de ces Palmyres
Il peut tomber des rayons,
Des baisers et des sourires;

Un drôle, un étudiant,
Rôde sous ces chastes voiles;
Je hais fort ce mendiant
Qui tend sa main aux étoiles.

Je ne sors plus de mon trou.
L’autre jour, étant en verve,
Elle m’appela: Hibou.
Je lui répondis: Minerve.

IV

Paupertas

Être riche n’est pas l’affaire;
Toute l’affaire est de charmer;
Du palais du grenier diffère
En ce qu’on y sait mieux aimer.

L’aube au seuil, un grabat dans l’angle;
Un éden peut être un taudis;
Le craquement du lit de sangle
Est un des bruits du paradis.

Moins de gros sous, c’est moins de rides.
L’or de moins, c’est le doute ôté.
Jamais l’amour, ô cieux splendides!
Ne s’éraille à la pauvreté.

À quoi bon vos trésors mensonges
Et toutes vos piastres en tas,
Puisque le plafond bleu des songes
S’ajuste à tous les galetas!

Croit-on qu’au Louvre on se débraille
Comme dans mon bouge vainqueur,
Et que l’éclat de la muraille
S’ajoute aux délices du coeur?

La terre, que gonfle la sève,
Est un lieu saint, mystérieux,
Sublime, où la nudité d’Ève
Éclipse tout, hormis les cieux.

L’opulence est vaine, et s’oublie
Dès que l’idéal apparaît,
Et quand l’âme est d’extase emplie
Comme de souffles la forêt.

Horace est pauvre avec Lydie;

Les amours ne sont point accrus
Par le marbre de Numidie
Qui pave les bains de Scaurus.

L’amour est la fleur des prairies.
Ô Virgile, on peut être Églé
Sans traîner dans les Tuileries
Des flots de velours épinglé.

Femmes, nos vers qui vous défendent,
Point avares et point pédants,
Pour vous chanter, ne vous demandent
Pas d’autres perles que vos dents.

Femmes, ni Chénier ni Properce
N’ajoutent la condition
D’une alcôve tendue en perse
À vos yeux, d’où sort le rayon.

Une Madelon bien coiffée,
Blanche et limpide, et riant frais,
Sera pour Perrault une fée,
Une dryade pour Segrais.

Suzon qui, tresses dénouées,
Chante en peignant ses longs cheveux,
Fait envoler dans les nuées
Tous nos songes et tous nos voeux.

Margot, c’est Glycère en cornette;
Ô chimères qui me troublez,
Le jupon de serge d’Annette
Flotte en vos azurs étoilés.

Que m’importe, dans l’ombre obscure,
L’habit qu’on revêt le matin,
Et que la robe soit de bure

Lorsque la femme est de satin!

Le sage a son coeur pour richesse.
Il voit, tranquille accapareur,
Sans trop de respect la duchesse,
La grisette sans trop d’horreur.

L’amour veut que sans crainte on lise
Les lettres de son alphabet;
Si la première est Arthémise,
Certes, la seconde est Babet.

Les pauvres filles sont des anges
Qui n’ont pas plus d’argent parfois
Que les grives et les mésanges
Et les fauvettes dans les bois.

Je ne rêve, en mon amourette,
Pas plus d’argent, ô vieux Paris,
Sur la gaieté de Turlurette
Que sur l’aile de la perdrix.

Est-ce qu’on argente la grâce?
Est-ce qu’on dore la beauté?
Je crois, quand l’humble Alizon passe,
Voir la lumière de l’été.

V
Ô Hyménée!

Pancrace entre au lit de Lucinde;
Et l’heureux hymen est bâclé
Quand un maire a mis le coq d’Inde
Avec la fauvette sous clé.

Un docteur tout noir d’encre passe
Avec Cyllanire à son bras;

Un bouc mène au bal une grâce;
L’aurore épouse le fatras.

C’est la vieille histoire éternelle;
Faune et Flore; on pourrait, hélas,
Presque dire: À quoi bon la belle? -
Si la bête n’existait pas.

Dans un vase une clématite,
Qui tremble, et dont l’avril est court!
Je trouve la fleur bien petite,
Et je trouve le pot bien lourd.

Que Philistine est adorable,
Et que Philistin est hideux!
L’épaule blanche à l’affreux râble
S’appuie, en murmurant: Nous deux!

Le capricieux des ténèbres,
Cupidon compose, ô destin!
De toutes ces choses funèbres
Son éclat de rire enfantin.

Fatal amour! Charmant, morose,
Taquin, il prend le mal au mot;
D’autant plus sombre qu’il est rose,
D’autant plus dieu qu’il est marmot!

VI
Hilaritas

Chantez; l’ardent refrain flamboie;
Jurez même, noble ou vilain!
Le chant est un verre de joie
Dont le juron est le trop-plein.

L’homme est heureux sous la tonnelle

Quand il a bien empaqueté
Son rhumatisme de flanelle
Et sa sagesse de gaieté.

Le rire est notre meilleure aile;
Il nous soutient quand nous tombons.
Le philosophe indulgent mêle
Les hommes gais aux hommes bons.

Un mot gai suffit pour abattre.
Ton fier courroux, ô grand Caton,
L'histoire amnistie Henri quatre
Protégé par Jarnicoton.

Soyons joyeux, Dieu le désire.
La joie aux hommes attendris
Montre ses dents, et semble dire:
Moi qui pourrais mordre, je ris.

VII

Meudon

Pourquoi pas montés sur des ânes?
Pourquoi pas au bois de Meudon?
Les sévères sont les profanes;
Ici tout est joie et pardon.

Rien n'est tel que cette ombre verte,
Et que ce calme un peu moqueur,
Pour aller à la découverte
Tout au fond de son propre coeur.

On chante. L'été nous procure
Un bois pour nous perdre. Ô buissons!
L'amour met dans la mousse obscure
La fin de toutes les chansons.

Paris foule ces violettes;
Breda, terre où Ninon déchut,
Y répand ces vives toilettes
À qui l'on dirait presque: Chut!

Prenez garde à ce lieu fantasque!
Ève à Meudon achèvera
Le rire ébauché sous le masque
Avec le diable à l'Opéra.

Le démon dans ces bois repose;
Non le grand vieux Satan fourchu;
Mais ce petit Belzébuth rose
Qu'Agnès cache dans son fichu.

On entre plein de chaste flamme,
L'oeil au ciel, le coeur dilaté;
On est ici conduit par l'âme,
Mais par le faune on est guetté.

La source, c'est la nymphe nue;
L'ombre au doigt vous passe un anneau;
Et le liseron insinue
Ce que conseille le moineau.

Tout chante; et pas de fausses notes.
L'hymne est tendre; et l'esprit de corps
Des fauvettes et des linottes
Éclate en ces profonds accords.

Ici l'aveu que l'âme couve
Échappe aux coeurs les plus discrets;
La clef des champs qu'à terre on trouve
Ouvre le tiroir aux secrets.

Ici l'on sent, dans l'harmonie,
Tout ce que le grand Pan caché

Peut mêler de vague ironie
Au bois sombre où rêve Psyché.

Les belles deviennent jolies;
Les cupidons viennent et vont;
Les roses disent des folies
Et les chardonnerets en font.

La vaste genèse est tournée
Vers son but: renaître à jamais.
Tout vibre; on sent de l’hyménée
Et de l’amour sur les sommets.

Tout veut que tout vive et revive,
Et que les coeurs et que les nids,
L’aube et l’azur, l’onde et la rive,
Et l’âme et Dieu, soient infinis.

Il faut aimer. Et sous l’yeuse,
On sent, dans les beaux soirs d’été,
La profondeur mystérieuse
De cette immense volonté.

Cachant son feu sous sa main rose,
La vestale ici n’entendrait
Que le sarcasme grandiose
De l’aurore et de la forêt.

Le printemps est une revanche.
Ce bois sait à quel point les thyms,
Les joncs, les saules, la pervenche,
Et l’églantier, sont libertins.

La branche cède, l’herbe plie;
L’oiseau rit du prix Montyon;
Toute la nature est remplie
De rappels à la question.

Le hallier sauvage est bien aise
Sous l’oeil serein de Jéhovah,
Quand un papillon déniaise
Une violette, et s’en va.

Je me souviens qu’en mon bas âge,
Ayant à peine dix-sept ans,
Ma candeur un jour fit usage
De tous ces vieux rameaux flottants.

J’employai, rôdant avec celle
Qu’admiraient mes regards heureux,
Toute cette ombre où l’on chancelle,
À me rendre plus amoureux.

Nous fîmes des canapés d’herbes;
Nous nous grisâmes de lilas;
Nous palpitions, joyeux, superbes,
Éblouis, innocents, hélas!

Penchés sur tout, nous respirâmes
L’arbre, le pré, la fleur, Vénus;
Ivres, nous remplissions nos âmes
De tous les souffles inconnus.

Nos baisers devenaient étranges,
De sorte que, sous ces berceaux,
Après avoir été deux anges,
Nous n’étions plus que deux oiseaux.

C’était l’heure où le nid se couche,
Où dans le soir tout se confond;
Une grande lune farouche
Rougissait dans le bois profond.

L’enfant, douce comme une fête,

Qui m’avait en chantant suivi,
Commençait, pâle et stupéfaite,
À trembler de mon oeil ravi;

Son sein soulevait la dentelle...
Homère! ô brouillard de l’Ida:
Marions-nous! s’écria-t-elle,
Et la belle fille gronda:

Cherche un prêtre, et sans plus attendre,
Qu’il nous marie avec deux mots.
Puis elle reprit, sans entendre
Le chuchotement des rameaux,

Sans remarquer dans ce mystère
Le profil des buissons railleurs:
Mais où donc est le presbytère?
Quel est le prêtre de ces fleurs?

Un vieux chêne était là; sa tige
Eût orné le seuil d’un palais.
Le curé de Meudon? Lui dis-je.
L’arbre me dit: C’est Rabelais.

VII

Bas à l’oreille du lecteur

Dans l’amoureux, qu’Éros grise,
L’imbécile est ébauché;
La ponte d’une bêtise
Suit le rêve d’un péché.

Crains les belles. On se laisse
Vaincre aisément par Lola.
Dieu compose de faiblesse
Ces toutes-puissances-là.

C’est en jouant que la femme,
C’est en jouant que l’enfant,
Prennent doucement notre âme.
Le faible est le triomphant.

La vertu, de sa main blanche
Et de son beau fil doré,
Recoud sans cesse la manche
Par où Joseph fut tiré.

IX
Senior est junior

I
Comme de la source on dévie!
Qu’un petit-fils ressemble peu!
Tacite devient Soulavie.
Hercle se change en Palsembleu.

La lyre a fait les mandolines;
Minos a procréé Séguier;
La première des crinolines
Fut une feuille de figuier.

L’amour pour nous n’est présentable
Qu’ivre, coiffé de son bandeau,
Sa petite bedaine à table;
L’antique amour fut buveur d’eau.

La Bible, en ses épithalames,
Bénit l’eau du puits large et rond.
L’homme ancien ne comprend les femmes
Qu’avec des cruches sur le front.

Agar revient de la fontaine,
Sephora revient du torrent,
Sans chanter tonton mirontaine,

Le front sage, et l’oeil ignorant.

La citerne est l’entremetteuse
Du grave mariage hébreu.
Le diable l’emplit et la creuse;
Dieu dans cette eau met le ciel bleu.

Beaux jours. Cantique des cantiques!
Oh! les charmants siècles naïfs!
Comme ils sont jeunes, ces antiques!
Les Baruchs étaient les Baïfs.

C’est le temps du temple aux cent marches,
Et de Ninive, et des sommets
Où les anges aux patriarches
Offraient, pensifs, d’étranges mets.

Ézéchiel en parle encore;
Le ciel s’inquiétait de Job;
On entendait Dieu dès l’aurore
Dire: As-tu déjeuné, Jacob?

II

Paix et sourire à ces temps calmes!
Les nourrices montraient leurs seins;
Et l’arbre produisait des palmes,
Et l’homme produisait des saints.

Nous sommes loin de ces amphores
Ayant pour anses deux bras blancs,
Et de ces coeurs, mêlés d’aurores,
Allant l’un vers l’autre à pas lents.

L’antique passion s’apaise.
Nous sommes un autre âge d’or.
Aimer, c’est vieux. Rosine pèse
Bartholo, puis compte Lindor.

Moins simples, nous sommes plus sages.
Nos amours sont une forêt
Où, vague, au fond des paysages,
La Banque de France apparaît.

III

Rhodope, la reine d’Égypte,
Allait voir Amos dans son trou,
Respects du dôme pour la crypte,
Visite de l’astre au hibou,

Et la pharaonne superbe
Était contente chez Amos
Si la roche offrait un peu d’herbe
Aux longues lèvres des chameaux.

Elle l’adorait satisfaite,
Sans demander d’autre faveur,
Pendant que le morne prophète
Bougonnait dans un coin, rêveur.

Amestris, la Ninon de Thèbe,
Avait à son char deux griffons;
Elle était semblable à l’Érèbe
À cause de ses yeux profonds.

Pour qu’avec un tendre sourire
Elle vînt jusqu’à son chenil,
Le mage Oxus à l’hétaïre
Offrait un rat sacré du Nil.

Un antre traversé de poutres
Avec des clous pour accrocher
Des peaux saignantes et des outres,
Telle était la chambre à coucher.

Près de Sarah, Jod le psalmiste
Dormait là sur le vert genêt,
Chargeant quelque hyène alarmiste
D'aboyer si quelqu'un venait.

Phur, pontife des Cinq Sodomes,
Fut un devin parlant aux vents,
Un voyant parmi les fantômes,
Un borgne parmi les vivants;

Pour un lotus bleu, don inepte,
La blonde Starnabuzaï
Le recevait, comme on accepte
Un abbé qui n'est point haï.

Ségor, bonze à la peau brûlée,
Nu dans les bois, lascif, bourru,
Maigre, invitait Penthésilée
À grignoter un oignon cru.

Chramnès, prêtre au temple d'Électre,
Demeurant, en de noirs pays,
Dans un sépulcre avec un spectre,
Conviait à souper Thaïs.

Thaïs venait, et cette belle,
Coupe en main, le roc pour chevet,
Ayant le prêtre à côté d'elle
Et le spectre en face, buvait.

Dans ce passé crépusculaire,
Les femmes se laissaient charmer
Par les gousses d'ail et l'eau claire
Dont se composait l'Art d'Aimer.

IV

Nos phyllyres, nos Gloriantes,

Nos Lydés aux cheveux flottants
Ont fait beaucoup de variantes
À ce programme des vieux temps.

Aujourd’hui monsignor Nonotte
N’entre chez Blanche au coeur d’acier
Qu’après avoir payé la note
Qu’elle peut avoir chez l’huissier.

Aujourd’hui le roi de Bavière
N’est admis chez doña Carmen
Que s’il apporte une rivière,
De fort belle eau, dans chaque main.

Les belles que sous son feuillage
Retient Bade aux flots non bourbeux,
Ne vont point dans ce vieux village
Pour voir des chariots à boeufs.

Sans argent, Bernis en personne,
Balbutiant son quos ego,
Tremble au moment où sa main sonne
À la porte de Camargo.

D’Ems à Cythère, quel fou rire
Si Hafiz, fumant son chibouck,
Prétendait griser Sylvanire
Avec du vin de peau de bouc!

V
Le coeur ne fait plus de bêtises.
Avoir des chèques est plus doux
Que d’aller sous les frais cytises
Verdir dans l’herbe ses genoux.

Le soir mettre sous clef des piastres
Cause à l’âme un plus tendre émoi

Qu’une rencontre sous les astres
Disant à voix basse: Est-ce toi?

Rien n’enchante plus une amante
Et n’échauffe mieux un coeur froid
Qu’une pile d’or qui s’augmente
Pendant que la pudeur décroît.

Les amours actuels abondent
En combinaisons d’échiquiers.
Doit, Avoir. Nos bergères tondent
Moins de moutons que de banquiers.

Le coeur est le compteur suprême.
La femme enfin a deviné
L’effrayant pouvoir de Barême
Ayant le torse de Phryné.

Tout en chantant Schubert et Webre,
Elle en vient à réaliser
L’application de l’algèbre
À l’amour, à l’âme, au baiser.

Berthe a l’air vierge; on la vénère;
Dans l’azur du rêve elle a lu
Que parfois un millionnaire,
Lourd, vient se prendre à cette glu.

Pour soulager un peu les riches
De leur argent, pesant amas,
Il sied que Paris ait les biches
Et Londres les anonymas.

VI
À tant l’heure l’éventail joue.
C’est plus cher si l’oeil est plus vif.
À Daphnis présentant sa joue

Chloé présente son tarif.

Pasithée, Anna, Circélyre,
Lise au front mollement courbé,
Palmyre en pleurs, Berthe en délire,
S'amourachent par A + B.

Leurs instincts ne sont point volages.
Les mains ouvertes, en rêvant,
Toutes contemplent des feuillages
De bank-notes, tremblant au vent.

On a ces belles, on les dompte,
On est des jeunes gens altiers,
Vivons! et l'on sort d'Amathonte
Par le corridor des dettiers.

Dans tel et tel théâtre bouffe,
La musique vive et sans art
Des écus et des sous étouffe
Les cavatines de Mozart.

Les chanteuses sont ainsi faites
Qu'on est parfois, sous le rideau,
Dévalisé par les fauvettes,
Dans la forêt de Calzado.

VII
Sue un rouble par chaque pore,
Sinon, porte ton coeur plutôt
Au tigre noir de Singapore
Qu'à Flora, qu'embaume Botot.

Femme de cire, Catherine
Glacée, et douce à tout venant,
S'offre, et d'un buste de vitrine
Elle a le sourire tournant.

Oh! ces marchandes de jeunesse!
Stella vend ses soupirs ardents,
Luz vend son rire de faunesse
Cassant des noix avec ses dents.

Rose est pensive; Alba la brune
Est l’asphodèle de Sion;
Glycéris semble au clair de lune
La blancheur dans la vision;

Regardez, c’est Paula, c’est Laure,
C’est Phoebé; dix-huit ans, vingt ans;
Voyez; les jeunes sont l’aurore
Et les vieilles sont le printemps.

Leur sein attend, frais comme un songe,
Effleuré par leurs cheveux blonds,
Que Samuel Bernard y plonge
Son poing brutal plein de doublons.

Au-dessus du juif qui prospère,
Par le plafond ouvert, descend
Le petit Cupidon, grand-père
De tous les baisers d’à présent.

VII

La nuit, la femme tend sa toile.
Tous ses chiffres sont en arrêt,
Non pour dépister une étoile,
Mais pour découvrir Turcaret.

C’est la sombre calculatrice;
Elle a la ruse du dragon;
Elle est fée; et c’est en Jocrisse
Qu’elle transfigure Harpagon.

Elle compose ses trophées
De vins bus, de brelans carrés,
Et de bouteilles décoiffées,
Et de financiers dédorés.

Et puis, tout change et tourne en elle;
L’aile de Cupidon connaît
Ses sens, son coeur, sa tête, et l’aile
Des moulins connaît son bonnet.

Sa vie est un bruyant poème;
On songe, on rit, point de souci,
Et les verres sont de Bohême,
Et les buveurs en sont aussi.

Ce monstre adorable et terrible
Ne dis pas Toujours, mais Encor!
Et, rempli de nos coeurs, son crible
Ne laisse passer que notre or.

Hélas! pourquoi ces laideurs basses
S’imprimant toutes à la fois,
Dieu profond! sur ces jeunes grâces
Faites pour chanter dans les bois!

IX

Buvez! riez! - moi je m’obstine
Aux songes de l’amour ancien;
Je sens en moi l’âme enfantine
D’Homère, vieux musicien.

Je vis aux champs; j’aime et je rêve;
Je suis bucolique et berger;
Je dédie aux dents blanches d’Ève
Tous les pommiers de mon verger.

Je m’appelle Amyntas, Mnasyle,

Qui vous voudrez; je dis: Croyons.
Pensons, aimons! et je m’exile
Dans les parfums et les rayons.

À peine en l’idylle décente
Entend-on le bruit d’un baiser.
La prairie est une innocente
Qu’il ne faut point scandaliser.

Tout en soupirant comme Horace,
Je vois ramper dans le champ noir,
Avec des reflets de cuirasse,
Les grands socs qu’on traîne le soir.

J’habite avec l’arbre et la plante;
Je ne suis jamais fatigué
De regarder la marche lente
Des vaches qui passent le gué.

J’entends, debout sur quelque cime,
Le chant qu’un nid sous un buisson
Mêle au blêmissement sublime
D’un lever d’astre à l’horizon.

Je suis l’auditeur solitaire;
Et j’écoute en moi, hors de moi,
Le Je ne sais qui du mystère
Murmurant le Je ne sais quoi.

J’aime l’aube ardente et rougie,
Le midi, les cieux éblouis,
La flamme, et j’ai la nostalgie
Du soleil, mon ancien pays.

Le matin, toute la nature
Vocalise, fredonne, rit,
Je songe. L’aurore est si pure,

Et les oiseaux ont tant d’esprit!

Tout chante, geai, pinson, linotte,
Bouvreuil, alouette au zénith,
Et la source ajoute sa note,
Et le vent parle, et Dieu bénit.

J’aime toute cette musique,
Ces refrains, jamais importuns,
Et le bon vieux plain-chant classique
Des chênes aux capuchons bruns.

Je vous mets au défi de faire
Une plus charmante chanson
Que l’eau vive où Jeanne et Néère
Trempent leurs pieds dans le cresson.

III

POUR JEANNE SEULE

I

Je ne me mets pas en peine
Du clocher ni du beffroi;
Je ne sais rien de la reine,
Et je ne sais rien du roi;

J’ignore, je le confesse,
Si le seigneur est hautain,
Si le curé dit la messe
En grec ou bien en latin;

S’il faut qu’on pleure ou qu’on danse,
Si les nids jasent entr’eux;
Mais sais-tu ce que je pense?
C’est que je suis amoureux.

Sais-tu, Jeanne, à quoi je rêve?
C’est au mouvement d’oiseau
De ton pied blanc qui se lève
Quand tu passes le ruisseau.

Et sais-tu ce qui me gêne?
C’est qu’à travers l’horizon,
Jeanne, une invisible chaîne
Me tire vers ta maison.

Et sais-tu ce qui m’ennuie?
C’est l’air charmant et vainqueur,
Jeanne, dont tu fais la pluie
Et le beau temps dans mon coeur.

Et sais-tu ce qui m’occupe,
Jeanne? c’est que j’aime mieux
La moindre fleur de ta jupe
Que tous les astres des cieux.

II

Jeanne chante; elle se penche
Et s’envole; elle me plaît;
Et, comme de branche en branche,
Va de couplet en couplet.

De quoi donc me parlait-elle?
Avec sa fleur au corset,
Et l’aube dans sa prunelle,
Qu’est-ce donc qu’elle disait?

Parlait-elle de la gloire,
Des camps, du ciel, du drapeau,
Ou de ce qu’il faut de moire
Au bavolet d’un chapeau?

Son intention fut-elle
De troubler l’esprit voilé
Que Dieu dans ma chair mortelle
Et frémissante a mêlé?

Je ne sais. J’écoute encore.
Était-ce psaume ou chanson?
Les fauvettes de l’aurore
Donnent le même frisson.

J’étais comme une fête;
J’essayais un vague essor;
J’eusse voulu sur ma tête
Mettre une couronne d’or,

Et voir sa beauté sans voiles,
Et joindre à mes jours ses jours,
Et prendre au ciel les étoiles,
Et qu’on vînt à mon secours!

J’étais ivre d’une femme;
Mal charmant qui fait mourir.
Hélas! je me sentais l’âme
Touchée et prête à s’ouvrir;

Car pour qu’un cerveau se fêle
Et s’échappe en songes vains,
Il suffit du bout de l’aile
D’un ces oiseaux divins.

III

Duel en juin

À un ami

Jeanne a laissé de son jarret

Tomber un joli ruban rose
Qu’en vers on diviniserait,
Qu’on baise simplement en prose.

Comme femme elle met des bas,
Comme ange elle a droit à des ailes;
Résultat: demain je me bats.
Les jours sont longs, les nuits sont belles,

On fait les foins, et ce barbon,
L’usage, roi de l’équipée,
Veut qu’on prenne un pré qui sent bon
Pour se donner des coups d’épée.

Pendant qu’aux lueurs du matin
La lame à la lame est croisée,
Dans l’herbe humide et dans le thym,
Les grives boivent la rosée.

Tu sais ce marquis insolent?
Il ordonne, il rit. Jamais ivre
Et toujours gris; c’est son talent.
Il faut ou le fuir, ou le suivre.

Qui le fuit a l’air d’un poltron,
Qui le suit est un imbécile.
Il est jeune, gai, fanfaron,
Leste, vif, pétulant, fossile.

Il hait Voltaire; il se croit né
Pas tout à fait comme les autres;
Il sert la messe, il sert Phryné;
Il mêle Gnide aux patenôtres.

Le ruban perdu, ce muguet
L’a trouvé; quelle bonne fête!
Il s’en est vanté chez Saguet;

Moi, je passais par là, tout bête;

J’analysais, précisément
Dans cet instant-là, les bastilles,
Les trônes, Dieu, le firmament,
Et les rubans des jeunes filles;

Et j’entendis un quolibet;
Comme il s’en donnait, le coq d’Inde!
Car on insulte dans Babet
Ce qu’on adore dans Florinde.

Le marquis agitait en l’air
Un fil, un chiffon, quelque chose
Qui parfois semblait un éclair
Et parfois semblait une rose.

Tout de suite je reconnus
Ce diminutif admirable
De la ceinture de Vénus.
J’aime, donc je suis misérable;

Mon pouls dans mes tempes battait;
Et le marquis riait de Jeanne!
Le soir la campagne se tait,
Le vent dort, le nuage flâne;

Mais le poète a le frisson,
Il se sent extraordinaire,
Il va, couvant une chanson
Dans laquelle roule un tonnerre.

Je me dis: - Cyrus dégaina
Pour reprendre une bandelette
De la reine Abaïdorna
Que ronge aujourd’hui la belette.

Serais-je moins brave et moins beau
Que Cyrus, roi d’Ur et de Sarde?
Cette reine dans son tombeau
Vaut-elle Jeanne en sa mansarde? -

Faire le siège d’un ruban!
Quelle oeuvre! il faut un art farouche;
Et ce n’est pas trop d’un Vauban
Complété par un Scaramouche.

Le marquis barrait le chemin.
Prompt comme Joubert sur l’Adige,
J’arrachai l’objet de sa main.
Monsieur! cria-t-il. Soit, lui dis-je.

Il se dressa tout en courroux,
Et moi, je pris ma mine altière.
Je suis marquis, dit-il, et vous?
Chevalier de la Jarretière.

Soyez deux. - J’aurai mon témoin.
Je vous tue, et je vous tiens quitte.
Où ça? Là, dans ces tas de foin.
Vous en déjeunerez ensuite.

C’est pourquoi demain, réveillés,
Les faunes, au bruit des rapières,
Derrière les buissons mouillés,
Ouvriront leurs vagues paupières.

IV

La nature est pleine d’amour,
Jeanne, autour de nos humbles joies;
Et les fleurs semblent tour à tour
Se dresser pour que tu les voies.

Vive Angélique! à bas Orgon!
L’hiver, qu’insultent nos huées,
Recule, et son profil bougon
Va s’effaçant dans les nuées.

La sérénité de nos coeurs,
Où chantent les bonheurs sans nombre,
Complète, en ces doux mois vainqueurs,
L’évanouissement de l’ombre.

Juin couvre de fleurs les sommets,
Et dit partout les mêmes choses;
Mais est-ce qu’on se plaint jamais
De la prolixité des roses?

L’hirondelle, sur ton front pur,
Vient si près de tes yeux fidèles
Qu’on pourrait compter dans l’azur
Toutes les plumes de ses ailes.

Ta grâce est un rayon charmant;
Ta jeunesse, enfantine encore,
Éclaire le bleu firmament,
Et renvoie au ciel de l’aurore.

De sa ressemblance avec toi
Le lys pur sourit dans sa gloire;
Ton âme est une urne de foi
Où la colombe voudrait boire.

V

Ami, j’ai quitté vos fêtes.
Mon esprit, à demi-voix,
Hors de tout ce que vous faites,
Est appelé par les bois.

J’irai, loin des murs de marbre,
Tant que je pourrai marcher,
Fraterniser avec l’arbre,
La fauvette et le rocher.

Je fuirai loin de la ville
Tant que Dieu clément et doux
Voudra me mettre un peu d’huile
Entre les os des genoux.

Ne va pas croire du reste
Que, bucolique et hautain,
J’exige, pour être agreste,
Le vieux champ grec ou latin;

Ne crois pas que ma pensée,
Vierge au soupir étouffé,
Ne sachant où prendre Alcée,
Se rabatte sur d’Urfé;

Ne crois pas que je demande
L’Hémus où Virgile erra.
Dans de la terre normande
Mon églogue poussera.

Pour mon vers, que l’air secoue,
Les pommiers sont suffisants;
Et mes bergers, je l’avoue,
Ami, sont des paysans.

Mon idylle est ainsi faite;
Franche, elle n’a pas besoin
D’avoir dans miel l’Hymète
Et l’Arcadie en son foin.

Elle chante, et se contente,
Sur l’herbe où je viens m’asseoir,

De l’haleine haletante
Du boeuf qui rentre le soir.

Elle n’est point misérable
Et ne pense pas déchoir
Parce qu’Alain, sous l’érable,
Ôte à Toinon son mouchoir.

Elle honore Théocrite;
Mais ne se fâche pas trop
Que la fleur soit Marguerite
Et que l’oiseau soit Pierrot.

J’aime les murs pleins de fentes
D’où sortent les liserons,
Et les mouches triomphantes
Qui soufflent dans leurs clairons.

J’aime l’église et ses tombes,
L’invalide et son bâton;
J’aime, autant que les colombes
Qui jadis venaient, dit-on,

Conter leurs métempsycoses
À Terpandre dans Lesbos,
Les petites filles roses
Sortant du prêche en sabots.

J’aime autant Sedaine et Jeanne
Qu’Orphée et Pratérynnis.
Le blé pousse, l’oiseau plane,
Et les cieux sont infinis.

VI
À Jeanne

Ces lieux sont purs; tu les complètes.

Ce bois, loin des sentiers battus,
Semble avoir fait des violettes,
Jeanne, avec toutes tes vertus.

L’aurore ressemble à ton âge;
Jeanne, il existe sous les cieux
On ne sait quel doux voisinage
Des bons coeurs avec les beaux lieux.

Tout ce vallon est une fête
Qui t’offre son humble bonheur;
C’est un nimbe autour de ta tête;
C’est un éden en ton honneur.

Tout ce qui t’approche désire
Se faire regarder par toi,
Sachant que ta chanson, ton rire,
Et ton front, sont de bonne foi.

Ô Jeanne, ta douceur est telle
Qu’en errant dans ces bois bénis,
Elle fait dresser devant elle
Les petites têtes des nids.

VII
Les étoiles filantes

I
À qui donc le grand ciel sombre
Jette-t-il ses astres d’or?
Pluie éclatante de l’ombre,
Ils tombent... - Encor! encor!

Encor! - lueurs éloignées,
Feux purs, pâles orients,
Ils scintillent... - ô poignées
De diamant effrayants!

C’est de la splendeur qui rôde,
Ce sont des points univers,
La foudre dans l’émeraude!
Des bleuets dans des éclairs!

Réalités et chimères
Traversant nos soirs d’été!
Escarboucles éphémères
De l’obscure éternité!

De quelle main sortent-elles?
Cieux, à qui donc jette-t-on
Ces tourbillons d’étincelles?
Est-ce à l’âme de Platon?

Est-ce à l’esprit de Virgile?
Est-ce aux monts? est-ce au flot vert?
Est-ce à l’immense évangile
Que Jésus-Christ tient ouvert?

Est-ce à la tiare énorme
De quelque Moïse enfant
Dont l’âme a déjà la forme
Du firmament triomphant?

Ces feux-là vont-ils aux prières?
À qui l’Inconnu profond
Ajoute-t-il ces lumières,
Vagues flammes de son front?

Est-ce, dans l’azur superbe,
Aux religions que Dieu,
Pour accentuer son verbe,
Jette ces langues de feu?

Est-ce au-dessus de la Bible

Que flamboie, éclate et luit
L’éparpillement terrible
Du sombre écrin de la nuit?

Nos questions en vain pressent
Le ciel, fatal ou béni.
Qui peut dire à qui s’adressent
Ces envois de l’infini?

Qu’est-ce que c’est que ces chutes
D’éclairs au ciel arrachés?
Mystère! Sont-ce des luttes?
Sont-ce des hymens? Cherchez.

Sont-ce les anges du soufre?
Voyons-nous quelque essaim bleu
D’argyraspides du gouffre
Fuir sur des chevaux de feu?

Est-ce le Dieu des désastres,
Le Sabaoth irrité,
Qui lapide avec des astres
Quelque soleil révolté?

II

Mais qu’importe! l’herbe est verte,
Et c’est l’été! Ne pensons,
Jeanne qu’à l’ombre entrouverte,
Qu’aux parfums et qu’aux chansons.

La grande saison joyeuse
Nous offre les prés, les eaux,
Les cressons mouillés, l’yeuse,
Et l’exemple des oiseaux.

L’été, vainqueur des tempêtes,
Doreur des cieux essuyés,

Met des rayons sur nos têtes
Et des fraises sous nos pieds.

Été sacré! l’air soupire.
Dieu, qui veut tout apaiser,
Fait le jour pour le sourire
Et la nuit pour le baiser.

L’étang frémit sous les aulnes;
La plaine est un gouffre d’or
Où court, dans les grands blés jaunes,
Le frisson de messidor.

C’est l’instant qu’il faut qu’on aime,
Et qu’on le dise aux forêts,
Et qu’on ait pour but suprême
La mousse des antres frais!

À quoi bon songer aux choses
Qui se passent dans les cieux?
Viens, donnons notre âme aux roses;
C’est ce qui l’emplit le mieux.

Viens, laissons là tous ces rêves,
Puisque nous sommes aux mois
Où les charmilles, les grèves,
Et les coeurs, sont pleins de voix!

L’amant entraîne l’amante,
Enhardi dans son dessein
Par la trahison charmante
Du fichu montrant le sein.

Ton pied sous ta robe passe,
Jeanne, et j’aime mieux le voir,
Que d’écouter dans l’espace
Les sombres strophes du soir.

Il ne faut pas craindre, ô belle,
De montrer aux prés fleuris
Qu’on est jeune, peu rebelle,
Blanche, et qu’on vient de Paris!

La campagne est caressante
Au frais amour ébloui;
L’arbre est gai pourvu qu’il sente
Que Jeanne va dire oui.

Aimons-nous! et que les sphères
Fassent ce qu’elles voudront!
Il est nuit; dans les clairières
Les chansons dansent en rond;

L’ode court dans les rosées;
Tout chante; et dans les torrents
Les idylles déchaussées
Baignent leurs pieds transparents;

La bacchanale de l’ombre
Se célèbre vaguement
Sous les feuillages sans nombre
Pénétrés de firmament;

Les lutins, les hirondelles,
Entrevus, évanouis,
Font un ravissant bruit d’ailes
Dans le bleue horreur des nuits;

La fauvette et la sirène
Chantent des chants alternés
Dans l’immense ombre sereine
Qui dit aux âmes: Venez!

Car les solitudes aiment

Ces caresses, ces frissons,
Et, le soir, les rameaux sèment
Les sylphes sur les gazons;

L’elfe tombe des lianes
Avec des fleurs plein les mains;
On voit de pâles dianes
Dans la lueur des chemins;

L’ondin baise les nymphées;
Le hallier rit quand il sent
Les courbures que les fées
Font aux brins d’herbe en passant.

Viens; les rossignols t’écoutent;
Et l’éden n’est pas détruit
Par deux amants qui s’ajoutent
À ces noces de la nuit.

Viens, qu’en son nid qui verdoie,
Le moineau bohémien
Soit jaloux de voir ma joie,
Et ton coeur si près du mien!

Charmons l’arbre et sa ramure
Du tendre accompagnement
Que nous faisons au murmure
Des feuilles, en nous aimant.

À la face des mystères,
Crions que nous nous aimons!
Les grands chênes solitaires
Y consentent sur les monts.

Ô Jeanne, c’est pour ces fêtes,
Pour ces gaietés, pour ces chants,
Pour ces amours, que sont faites

Toutes les grâces des champs!

Ne tremble pas, quoiqu’un songe
Emplisse mes yeux ardents.
Ne crains d’eux aucun mensonge
Puisque mon âme est dedans.

Reste chaste sans panique.
Sois charmante avec grandeur.
L’épaisseur de la tunique,
Jeanne, rend l’amour boudeur.

Pas de terreur, pas de transe;
Le ciel diaphane absout
Du péché de transparence
La gaze du canezout.

La nature est attendrie;
Il faut vivre! Il faut errer
Dans la douce effronterie
De rire et de s’adorer.

Viens, aime, oublions le monde,
Mêlons l’âme à l’âme, et vois
Monter la lune profonde
Entre les branches des bois!

III

Les deux amants, sous la nue,
Songent, charmants et vermeils... -
L’immensité continue
Ses semailles de soleils.

À travers le ciel sonore,
Tandis que, du haut des nuits,
Pleuvent, poussière d’aurore,
Les astres épanouis,

Tant de feux tombants qui perce
Le zénith vaste et bruni,
Braise énorme que disperse
L’encensoir de l’infini;

En bas, parmi la rosée,
Étalant l’arum, l’oeillet,
La pervenche, la pensée,
Le lys, lueur de juillet,

De brume à demi noyée,
Au centre de la forêt,
La prairie est déployée,
Et frissonne, et l’on dirait

Que la terre, sous les voiles
Des grands bois mouillés de pleurs,
Pour recevoir les étoiles
Tend son tablier de fleurs.

IV

POUR D’AUTRES

I

Mon vers, s’il faut te le redire,
On veut te griser dans les bois.
Les faunes ont caché ta lyre
Et mis à sa place un hautbois.

Va donc. La fête est commencée;
L’oiseau mange en herbe le blé;
L’abeille est ivre de rosée;
Mai rit, dans les fleurs attablé.

Emmène tes deux camarades,
L’esprit gaulois, l’esprit latin;
Ne crois pas que tu te dégrades
Dans la lavande et dans le thym.

Sans être effronté, sois agile;
Entre gaiement dans le vallon;
Presse un peu le pas de Virgile,
Retiens par la manche Villon.

Tu devras boire à coupe pleine,
Et de ce soin Pan a chargé
La Jeanneton de La Fontaine
Qu’Horace appelait Lalagé.

On t’attend. La fleur est penchée
Dans les antres diluviens;
Et Silène, à chaque bouchée,
S’interrompt pour voir si tu viens.

II
Jour de fête

Aux environs de Paris

Midi chauffe et sèche la mousse;
Les champs sont pleins de tambourins;
On voit dans une lueur douce
Des groupes vagues et sereins.

Là-bas, à l’horizon, poudroie
Le vieux donjon de saint Louis;
Le soleil dans toute sa joie
Accable les champs éblouis.

L’air brûlant fait, sous ses haleines
Sans murmures et sans échos,

Luire en la fournaise des plaines
La braise des coquelicots.

Les brebis paissent inégales;
Le jour est splendide et dormant;
Presque pas d’ombre; les cigales
Chantent sous le bleu flamboiement.

Voilà les avoines rentrées.
Trêve au travail. Amis, du vin!
De larges tonnes éventrées
Sort l’éclat de rire divin.

Le buveur chancelle à la table
Qui boite fraternellement.
L’ivrogne se sent véritable;
Il oublie, ô clair firmament,

Tout, la ligne droite, la gêne,
La loi, le gendarme, l’effroi,
L’ordre; et l’échalas de Surène
Raille le poteau de l’octroi.

L’âne broute, vieux philosophe;
L’oreille est longue; l’âne en rit,
Peu troublé d’un excès d’étoffe,
Et content si le pré fleurit.

Les enfants courent par volée.
Clichy montre, honneur aux anciens!
Sa grande muraille étoilée
Par la mitraille des Prussiens.

La charrette roule et cahote;
Paris élève au loin sa voix,
Noir chiffonnier qui dans sa hotte
Porte le sombre tas des rois.

On voit au loin les cheminées
Et les dômes d’azur voilés;
Des filles passent, couronnées
De joie et de fleurs, dans les blés.

III
La bataille commença.
Comment? Par un doux sourire.
Elle me dit: Comme ça,
Vous ne voulez pas m’écrire?

 Un billet doux? Non, des vers.
 Je n’en fais point, répondis-je. -
Ainsi parfois de travers
Le dialogue voltige.

Après le sourire vint
Un regard, oh! qu’elle est fière!
Moi, candidat quinze-vingt,
Je me dis: Elle est rosière.

Et je me mis à songer
À cent vertus, rehaussées
Par mes mauvaises pensées
D’adolescent en danger.

Je me taisais, cela passe
Pour puissance et profondeur.
Son sourire était la grâce.
Et son regard la pudeur.

Ce regard et ce sourire
M’entraient dans l’âme. Soudain,
Elle chanta. Comment dire
Ce murmure de l’Éden.

Cette voix grave, touchante,
Tendre, aux soupirs nuancés!...
Quoi! m’écriai-je, méchante,
Vous achevez les blessés!

IV
Lisbeth

Le jour, d’un bonhomme sage
J’ai l’auguste escarpement;
Je me conforme à l’usage
D’être abruti doctement,

Je me scrute et me dissèque,
Je me compare au poncif
De l’homme que fit Senèque
Sur sa table d’or massif.

Je chasse la joie agile.
Je profite du matin
Pour regarder dans Virgile
Un paysage en latin.

Je lis Lactance, Ildefonse,
Saint Ambroise, comme il sied
Et Juste Lipse, où j’enfonce
Souvent, jusqu’à perdre pied.

Je me dis: Vis dans les sages.
Toujours l’honnête homme ouvrit
La fenêtre des vieux âges
Pour aérer son esprit.

Et je m’en vais sur la cime
Dont Platon sait le chemin.
Je me dis: Soyons sublime!
Mais je redeviens humain.

Et mon âme est confondue,
Et mon orgueil est dissous,
Par une alcôve tendue
D'un papier de quatre sous,

Et l'amour, ce doux maroufle,
Est le maître en ma maison,
Tous les soirs, quand Lisbeth souffle
Sa chandelle et ma raison.

V

Chelles

J'aime Chelle et ses cressonnières,
Et le doux tic-tac des moulins
Et des coeurs, autour des meunières;
Quant aux blancs meuniers, je les plains.

Les meunières aussi sont blanches;
C'est pourquoi je vais là souvent
Mêler ma rêverie aux branches
Des aulnes qui tremblent au vent.

J'ai l'air d'un pèlerin; les filles
Me parlent, gardant leur troupeau;
Je ris, j'ai parfois des coquilles
Avec des fleurs, sur mon chapeau.

Quand j'arrive avec mon caniche,
Chelles, bourg dévot et coquet,
Croit voir passer, fuyant leur niche,
Saint Roch, et son chien saint Roquet.

Ces effets de ma silhouette
M'occupent peu; je vais marchant,
Tâchant de prendre à l'alouette

Une ou deux strophes de son chant.

J’admire les papillons frêles
Dans les ronces du vieux castel;
Je ne touche point à leurs ailes.
Un papillon est un pastel.

Je suis un fou qui semble un sage.
J’emplis, assis dans le printemps,
Du grand trouble du paysage
Mes yeux vaguement éclatants.

Ô belle meunière de Chelles,
Le songeur te guette effaré
Quand tu montes à tes échelles,
Sûre de ton bas bien tiré.

VI
Dizain de femmes

Une de plus que les muses;
Elles sont dix. On croirait,
Quand leurs jeunes voix confuses
Bruissent dans la forêt,

Entendre, sous les caresses
Des grands vieux chênes boudeurs,
Un brouhaha de déesses
Passant dans les profondeurs.

Elles sont dix châtelaines
De tout le pays voisin.
La ruche vers leurs haleines
Envoie en chantant l’essaim.

Elles sont dix belles folles,
Démons dont je suis cagot;

Obtenant des auréoles
Et méritant le fagot.

Que de coeurs cela dérobe,
Même à nous autres manants!
Chacune étale à sa robe
Quatre volants frissonnants,

Et court par les bois, sylphide
Toute parée, en dépit
De la griffe qui, perfide,
Dans les ronces se tapit.

Oh! ces anges de la terre!
Pensifs, nous les décoiffons;
Nous adorons le mystère
De la robe aux plis profonds.

Jadis Vénus sur la grève
N’avait pas l’attrait taquin
Du jupon qui se soulève
Pour montrer le brodequin.

Les antiques Arthémises
Avaient des fronts élégants,
Mais n’étaient pas si bien mises
Et ne portaient point de gants.

La gaze ressemble au rêve;
Le satin, au pli glacé,
Brille, et sa toilette achève
Ce que l’oeil a commencé.

La marquise en sa calèche
Plaît, même au butor narquois;
Car la grâce est une flèche
Dont la mode est le carquois.

L’homme, sot par étiquette,
Se tient droit sur son ergot;
Mais Dieu créa la coquette
Dès qu’il eut fait le nigaud.

Oh! toutes ces jeunes femmes,
Ces yeux où flambe midi,
Ces fleurs, ces chiffons, ces âmes,
Quelle forêt de Bondy!

Non, rien ne nous dévalise
Comme un minois habillé,
Et comme une Cydalise
Où Chapron a travaillé!

Les jupes sont meurtrières.
La femme est un canevas
Que, dans l’ombre, aux couturières
Proposent les Jéhovahs.

Cette aiguille qui l’arrange
D’une certaine façon
Lui donne la force étrange
D’un rayon dans un frisson.

Un ruban est une embûche,
Une guimpe est un péril;
Et, dans l’Éden, où trébuche
La nature à son avril,

Satan - que le diable enlève! -
N’eût pas risqué son pied-bot
Si Dieu sur les cheveux d’Ève
Eût mis un chapeau d’Herbaut.

Toutes les dix, sous les voûtes,

Des grands arbres, vont chantant;
On est amoureux de toutes;
On est farouche et content.

On les compare, on hésite
Entre ces robes qui font
La lueur d’une visite
Arrivant du ciel profond.

Oh! pour plaire à cette moire,
À ce gros de Tours flambé,
On se rêve plein de gloire,
On voudrait être un abbé.

On sort du hallier champêtre,
La tête basse, à pas lents,
Le coeur pris, dans ce bois traître,
Par les quarante volants.

VII

Choses écrites à Créteil

Sachez qu’hier, de ma lucarne,
J’ai vu, j’ai couvert de clins d’yeux
Une fille qui dans la Marne
Lavait des torchons radieux.

Près d’un vieux pont, dans les saulées,
Elle lavait, allait, venait;
L’aube et la brise étaient mêlées
À la grâce de son bonnet.

Je la voyais de loin. Sa mante
L’entourait de plis palpitants.
Aux folles broussailles qu’augmente
L’intempérance du printemps,

Aux buissons que le vent soulève,
Que juin et mai, frais barbouilleurs,
Foulant la cuve de la sève,
Couvrent d’une écume de fleurs,

Aux sureaux pleins de mouches sombres,
Aux genêts du bord, tous divers
Aux joncs échevelant leurs ombres
Dans la lumière des flots verts,

Elle accrochait des loques blanches,
Je ne sais quels haillons charmants
Qui me jetaient, parmi les branches,
De profonds éblouissements.

Ces nippes, dans l’aube dorée,
Semblaient, sous l’aulne et le bouleau,
Les blancs cygnes de Cythérée
Battant de l’aile au bord de l’eau.

Des cupidons, fraîche couvée,
Me montraient son pied fait au tour;
Sa jupe semblait relevée
Par le petit doigt de l’amour.

On voyait, je vous le déclare,
Un peu plus haut que le genou.
Sous un pampre un vieux faune hilare
Murmurait tout bas: Casse-cou!

Je quittai ma chambre d’auberge,
En souriant comme un bandit;
Et je descendis sur la berge
Qu’une herbe, glissante, verdit.

Je pris un air incendiaire
Je m’adossai contre un pilier,

Et je lui dis: - “ Ô lavandière!
(Blanchisseuse étant familier)

“ L’oiseau gazouille, l’agneau bêle,
“ Gloire à ce rivage écarté!
“ Lavandière, vous êtes belle.
“ Votre rire est de la clarté.

“ Je suis capable de faiblesses.
“ Ô lavandière, quel beau jour!
“ Les fauvettes sont des drôlesses
“ Qui chantent des chansons d’amour.

“ Voilà six mille ans que les roses
“ Conseillent, en se prodiguant,
“ L’amour aux coeurs les plus moroses.
“ Avril est un vieil intrigant.

“ Les rois sont ceux qu’adorent celles
“ Qui sont charmantes comme vous;
“ La Marne est pleine d’étincelles;
“ Femme, le ciel immense est doux.

“ Ô laveuse à la taille mince
“ Qui vous aime est dans un palais.
“ Si vous vouliez, je serais prince;
“ Je serais dieu, si tu voulais. -”

La blanchisseuse, gaie et tendre,
Sourit, et, dans le hameau noir,
Sa mère au loin cessa d’entendre
Le bruit vertueux du battoir.

Les vieillards grondent et reprochent,
Mais, ô jeunesse! il faut oser.
Deux sourires qui se rapprochent
Finissent par faire un baiser.

Je m’arrête. L’idylle est douce,
Mais ne veut pas, je vous le dis,
Qu’au delà du baiser on pousse
La peinture du paradis.

VIII
Le lendemain

Un vase, flanqué d’un masque,
En faïence de Courtrai,
Vieille floraison fantasque
Où j’ai mis un rosier vrai,

Sur ma fenêtre grimace,
Et, quoiqu’il soit assez laid,
Ce matin, du toit d’en face,
Un merle ami lui parlait.

Le merle, oiseau leste et braque,
Bavard jamais enrhumé,
Est pitre dans la baraque
Toute en fleurs, du mois de mai.

Il contait au pot aux roses
Un effronté boniment,
Car il faut de grosses choses
Pour faire rire un Flamand.

Sur une patte, et l’air farce,
Et comme on vide un panier,
Il jetait sa verve éparse
De son toit à mon grenier.

Gare au mauvais goût des merles!
J’omets ses propos hardis;
Son bec semait peu de perles;

Et moi, rêveur, je me dis:

La minute est opportune;
Je suis à m’éprendre enclin;
Puisque j’ai cette fortune
De rencontrer un malin,

Il faut que je le consulte
Sur ma conquête d’hier.
Et je cria: Merle adulte,
Sais-tu pourquoi je suis fier?

Il dit, gardant sa posture,
Semblable au diable boiteux:
C’est pour la même aventure
Dont Gros-Guillaume est honteux.

IX

Fuis l’éden des anges déchus;
Ami, prends garde aux belles filles;
Redoute à Paris les fichus,
Redoute à Madrid les mantilles.

Tremble pour tes ailes, oiseau,
Et pour tes fils, marionnette.
Crains un peu l’oeil de Calypso,
Et crains beaucoup l’oeil de Jeannette.

Quand leur tendresse a commencé,
Notre servitude est prochaine.
Veux-tu savoir leur A B C?
Ami, c’est Amour, Baiser, Chaîne.

Le soleil dore une prison,
Un rosier parfume une geôle,
Et c’est là, vois-tu, la façon

Dont une fille nous enjôle.

Pris, on a sa pensée au vent
Et dans l’âme une sombre lyre,
Et bien souvent on pleure avant
Qu’on ait eu le temps de sourire.

Viens dans les prés, le gai printemps
Fait frissonner les vastes chênes,
L’herbe rit, les bois sont contents,
Chantons! Oh, les claires fontaines!

X

L’enfant avril est le frère
De l’enfant amour; tous deux
Travaillent en sens contraire
À notre coeur hasardeux.

L’enfant amour nous rend traîtres,
L’enfant avril nous rend fous.
Ce sont deux petits prêtres
Du supplice immense et doux.

La mousse des prés exhale
Avril, qui chante drinn drinn,
Et met une succursale
De Cythère à Gretna-Green.

Avril, dont la fraîche embûche
A nos vices pour claqueurs,
De ses petits doigts épluche
Nos scrupules dans nos coeurs.

Cependant, il est immense;
Cet enfant est un géant;
Il se mêle à la démence

Qu’a l’Éternel en le créant.

Lorsqu’il faut que tout rayonne,
Et que tout paie un tribut,
Avril se proportionne
À l’énormité du but.

La rosée est son mystère;
Travail profond! sa lueur
Au front sacré de la terre
Fait perler cette sueur.

XI

Post-scriptum des rêves

C’était du temps que j’étais jeune;
Je maigrissais; rien ne maigrit
Comme cette espèce de jeûne
Qu’on appelle nourrir l’esprit.

J’étais devenu vieux, timide,
Et jaune comme un parchemin,
À l’ombre de la pyramide
Des bouquins de l’esprit humain.

Tous ces tomes que l’âge rogne
Couvraient ma planche et ma cloison.
J’étais parfois comme un ivrogne
Tant je m’emplissais de raison.

Cent bibles encombraient ma table;
Cent systèmes étaient dedans;
On eût, par le plus véritable,
Pu se faire arracher les dents.

Un jour que je lisais Jamblique,
Callinique, Augustin, Plotin,

Un nain tout noir à mine oblique
Parut et me dit en latin:

“ Ne va pas plus loin. Jette l’ancre,
“ Fils, contemple en moi ton ancien,
“ Je m’appelle Bouteille-à-l’encre;
“ Je suis métaphysicien.

“ Ton front fait du tort à ton ventre.
“ Je viens te dire le fin mot
“ De tous ces livres où l’on entre
“ Jocrisse et d’où l’on sort grimaud.

“ Amuse-toi. Sois jeune, et digne
“ De l’aurore et des fleurs. Isis
“ Ne donnait pas d’autre consigne
“ Aux sages que l’ombre a moisis.

“ Un verre de vin sans litharge
“ Vaut mieux, quand l’homme le boit pur,
“ Que tous ces tomes dont la charge
“ Ennuie énormément ton mur.

“ Une bamboche à la Chaumière,
“ D’où l’on éloigne avec soin l’eau,
“ Contient cent fois plus de lumière
“ Que Longin traduit par Boileau.

“ Hermès avec sa bandelette
“ Occupe ton coeur grave et noir;
“ Bacon est le livre où s’allaite
“ Ton esprit, marmot du savoir.

“ Si Ninette, la giletière,
“ Veut la bandelette d’Hermès
“ Pour s’en faire une jarretière,
“ Donne-la-lui sans dire mais.

“ Si Fanchette ou Landerirette
“ Prend dans ton Bacon radieux
“ Du papier pour sa cigarette,
“ Fils des muses, rends grâce aux dieux.

“ Veille, étude, ennui, patience,
“ Travail, cela brûle les yeux;
“ L’unique but de la science
“ C’est d’être immensément joyeux.

“ Le vrai savant cherche et combine
“ Jusqu’à ce que de son bouquin
“ Il jaillisse une Colombine
“ Qui l’accepte pour Arlequin.

“ Maxime: N’être point morose,
“ N’être pas bête, tout goûter,
“ Dédier son nez à la rose,
“ Sa bouche à la femme, et chanter.

“ Les anciens vivaient de la sorte;
“ Mais vous êtes dupes, vous tous,
“ De la fausse barbe que porte
“ Le profil grec de ces vieux fous.

“ Fils, tous ces austères visages
“ Sur les plaisirs étaient penchés.
“ L’homme ayant inventé sept sages,
“ Le bon Dieu créa sept péchés.

“ Ô docteurs, comme vous rampâtes!
“ Campaspe est nue en son grenier
“ Sur Aristote à quatre pattes;
“ L’esprit a l’amour pour ânier.

“ Grâce à l’amour, Socrate est chauve.

“ L’amour d’Homère est le bâton.
“ Phryné rentrait dans son alcôve
“ En donnant le bras à Platon.

“ Salomon, repu de mollesses,
“ Étudiant les tourtereaux,
“ Avait juste autant de drôlesses
“ Que Léonidas de héros.

“ Sénèque, aujourd’hui sur un socle,
“ Prenait Chloé sous le menton.
“ Fils, la sagesse est un binocle
“ Braqué sur Minerve et Goton.

“ Les nymphes n’étaient pas des ourses,
“ Horace n’était pas un loup;
“ Lise aujourd’hui se baigne aux sources,
“ Et Tibur s’appelle Saint-Cloud.

“ Les arguments dont je te crible
“ Te sauveront, toi-même aidant,
“ De la stupidité terrible,
“ Robe de pierre du pédant.

“ Guette autour de toi si quelque être
“ Ne sourit pas innocemment;
“ Un chant dénonce une fenêtre,
“ Un pot de fleurs cherche un amant.

“ La grisette n’est point difforme,
“ On donne aux noirs soucis congé
“ Pour peu que le soir on s’endorme
“ Sur un oreiller partagé.

“ Aime. C’est ma dernière botte.
“ Et je mêle à mes bons avis
“ Cette fillette qui jabote

“ Dans la mansarde vis-à-vis.”

Or je n’écoutai point ce drôle,
Et je le chassai. Seulement,
Aujourd’hui que sur mon épaule
Mon front penche, pâle et clément,

Aujourd’hui que mon oeil plus blême
Voit la griffe du sphinx à nu,
Et constate au fond du problème
Plus d’infini, plus d’inconnu,

Aujourd’hui que, hors des ivresses,
Près des mers qui vont m’abîmer,
Je regarde sur les sagesses
Les religions écumer,

Aujourd’hui que mon esprit sombre
Voit sur les dogmes, flot changeant,
L’épaisseur croissante de l’ombre,
Ô ciel bleu, je suis indulgent

Quand j’entends, dans le vague espace
Où toujours ma pensée erra,
Une belle fille qui passe
En chantant traderidera.

V

SILHOUETTES DU TEMPS JADIS

I

Le chêne du parc détruit

I

Ne me plains pas, me dit l’arbre,
Autrefois, autour de moi,

C’est vrai, tout était de marbre,
Le palais comme le roi.

Je voyais la splendeur fière
Des frontons pleins de Césars,
Et de grands chevaux de pierre
Qui se cabraient sous des chars.

J’apercevais des Hercules,
Des Hébés et des Psychés,
Dans les vagues crépuscules
Que font les rameaux penchés.

Je voyais jouer la reine;
J’entendais les hallalis;
Comme grand seigneur et chêne,
J’étais de tous les Marlys.

Je voyais l’alcôve auguste
Où le dauphin s’accomplit,
Leurs majestés jusqu’au buste,
Lauzun caché sous le lit.

J’ai vu les nobles broussailles;
J’étais du royal jardin;
J’ai vu Lachaise à Versailles
Comme Satan dans Éden.

Une grille verrouillée,
Duègne de fer, me gardait;
Car la campagne est souillée
Par le boeuf et le baudet,

L’agriculture est abjecte,
L’herbe est vile, et vous saurez
Qu’un arbre qui se respecte
Tient à distance les prés.

Ainsi parlait sous mes voûtes
Le bon goût, sobre et direct,
J’étais loin des grandes routes
Où va le peuple, incorrect.

Le goût fermait ma clôture;
Car c’est pour lui l’A B C
Que, dans l’art et la nature,
Tout soit derrière un fossé.

II
J’ai vu les coeurs peu rebelles,
Les grands guerriers tourtereaux,
Ce qu’on appelait les belles,
Ce qu’on nommait les héros.

Ces passants et ces passantes
Éveillaient mon grondement.
Mes branches sont plus cassantes
Qu’on ne croit communément.

Ces belles, qu’on loue en masse,
Erraient dans les verts préaux
Sous la railleuse grimace
De Tallemant des Réaux.

Le héros, grand sous le prisme,
Était prudent et boudeur,
Et mettait son héroïsme
À la chaîne en sa grandeur.

Dans la guerre meurtrière,
Le prince avait le talent
D’être tiré par-derrière
Par quelque Boileau tremblant.

La raison d’État est grave;
Il s’y faisait, par moment,
De crainte d’être trop brave,
Attacher solidement.

III
J’ai vu comment, d’une patte,
En ce siècle sans pareil,
On épouse un cul-de-jatte,
Et de l’autre, le soleil.

J’ai vu comment grince et rôde,
Loin des pages polissons,
L’auteur valet qui maraude
Des rimes dans les buissons.

Ces poètes à rhingraves
Étaient hautains et hideux;
C’étaient des Triboulets graves;
Ils chantaient; et chacun d’eux,

Pourvu d’un honnête lucre,
De sa splendeur émaillait
Le Parnasse en pain de sucre
Fait par Titon du Tillet.

Ces êtres, tordant la bouche,
Jetant leurs voix en éclats,
Prenaient un air très farouche
Pour faire des vers très plats.

Dans Marly qui les tolère,
Ils marchaient hagards, nerveux,
Les poings crispés, l’oeil colère,
Leur phrase dans leurs cheveux.

À Lavallière boiteuse

Ils donnaient Chypre et Paphos;
Et leur phrase était menteuse,
Et leurs cheveux étaient faux.

IV
Toujours, même en un désastre,
Les yeux étaient éblouis,
Le grand Louis, c’était l’astre;
Dieu, c’était le grand Louis.

Bossuet était fort pleutre,
Racine inclinait son vers;
Corneille seul, sous son feutre,
Regardait Dieu de travers.

Votre race est ainsi faite;
Et le monde est à son gré
Pourvu qu’elle ait sur sa tête
Un olympe en bois doré.

La Fontaine offrait ses fables;
Et, soudain, autour de lui,
Les courtisans, presque affables,
Les ducs au sinistre ennui,

Les Bâvilles, les Fréneuses,
Les Tavannes teints de sang,
Les altesses vénéneuses,
L’affreux chandelier glissant,

Les Louvois nés pour proscrire,
Les vils Chamillards rampants,
Gais, tournaient leur noir sourire
Vers ce charmeur de serpents.

V
Dans le parc froid et superbe,

Rien de vivant ne venait;
On comptait les brins d’une herbe
Comme les mots d’un sonnet.

Plus de danse, plus de ronce;
Comme tout diminuait!
Le Nôtre fit le quinconce
Et Lulli le menuet.

Les ifs, que l’équerre hébète,
Semblaient porter des rabats;
La fleur faisait la courbette,
L’arbre mettait chapeau bas.

Pour saluer dans les plaines
Le Phébus sacré dans Reims,
On donnait aux pauvres chênes
Des formes d’alexandrins.

La forêt, tout écourtée,
Avait l’air d’un bois piteux
Qui pousse sous la dictée
De monsieur l’abbé Batteux.

VI

Les rois criaient: Qu’on fracasse,
Et qu’on pille! Et l’on pillait.
À leurs pieds la Dédicace,
Muse en carte, souriait.

Cette muse préalable,
Habile à brûler l’encens
Même le moins vraisemblable,
Tirait la manche aux passants,

En gardant le seuil d’ivoire
Du dieu du sacré vallon,

Vendait pour deux sous de gloire
À la porte d'Apollon.

On traquait les calvinistes.
Moi, parmi tous ces fléaux,
J'avais dans mes branches tristes
Le peigne de Despréaux.

J'ai vu ce siècle notoire
Où la Maintenon sourit,
Si blanche qu'on la peut croire
Femelle du Saint-Esprit.

Quelle féroce colombe!
J'ai vu frémir d'Aubigné
Quand sur son nom, dans sa tombe,
L'édit de Nante a saigné.

Tout s'offrait au roi: les armes,
Les amours, les coeurs, les corps;
La femme vendait ses charmes,
Le magistrat ses remords.

La cour, peinte par Brantôme,
Reparaît pour Saint-Simon.
Derrière le roi fantôme
Rit le confesseur démon.

VII

Tout ce temps-là m'importune.
Des fadeurs, ou des venins.
La grandeur de leur fortune
Rapetisse encor ces nains.

On a le faux sur la nuque;
Il règne bon gré mal gré;
Après un siècle en perruque

Arrive un siècle poudré.

La poudre à flots tourbillonne
Sur le bon peuple sans pain.
Voici qu’à Scapiglione
Succède Perlinpinpin.

L’art se poudre; c’est la mode.
Voltaire, au fond peu loyal,
Offre à Louis quinze une ode
Coiffée à l’oiseau royal.

La monarchie est bouffonne;
La pensée a des bâillons;
Au-dessus de tout, plafonne
Un règne en trois cotillons.

Un beau jour s’ouvre une trappe;
Tout meurt; le sol a cédé.
Comme un voleur qui s’échappe,
Ce monde s’est évadé.

Ces rois, ce bruit, cette fête,
Tout cela s’est effacé
Pendant qu’autour de ma tête
Quelques mouches ont passé.

VIII

Moi je suis content; je rentre
Dans l’ombre du Dieu jaloux;
Je n’ai plus la cour, j’ai l’antre:
J’avais des rois, j’ai des loups.

Je redeviens le vrai chêne.
Je croîs sous les chauds midis;
Quatre-vingt-neuf se déchaîne
Dans mes rameaux enhardis.

Trianon vieux sent le rance.
Je renais au grand concert;
Et j’appelle délivrance
Ce que vous nommez désert.

La reine eut l’épaule haute,
Le grand dauphin fut pied-bot;
J’aime mieux Gros-Jean qui saute
Librement dans son sabot.

Je préfère aux Léonores
Qu’introduisaient les Dangeaux,
Les bons gros baisers sonores
De mes paysans rougeauds.

Je préfère les grands souffles,
Les bois, les champs, fauve abri,
L’horreur sacrée, aux pantoufles
De madame Dubarry.

Je suis hors des esclavages;
Je dis à la honte: Assez!
J’aime mieux les fleurs sauvages
Que les gens apprivoisés.

Les hommes sont des ruines;
Je préfère, ô beau printemps,
Tes fiertés pleines d’épines
À ces déshonneurs contents.

J’ai perdu le Roquelaure
Jasant avec la Boufflers;
Mais je vois plus d’aube éclore
Dans les grands abîmes clairs.

J’ai perdu monsieur le nonce,

Et le monde officiel,
Et d’Antin; mais je m’enfonce
Toujours plus avant au ciel.

Décloîtré, je fraternise
Avec les rustres souvent.
Je vois donner par Denise
Ce que Célimène vend.

Plus de fossé; rien n’empêche,
À mes pieds, sur mon gazon,
Que Suzon morde à sa pêche,
Et Mathurin à Suzon.

Solitaire, j’ai mes joies.
J’assiste, témoin vivant,
Dans les sombres claires-voies,
Aux aventures du vent.

Parfois dans les primevères
Court quelque enfant de quinze ans;
Mes vieilles ombres sévères
Aiment ces yeux innocents.

Rien ne pare un paysage,
Sous l’éternel firmament,
Comme une fille humble et sage
Qui soupire obscurément.

La fille aux fleurs de la berge
Parle dans sa belle humeur,
Et j’entends ce que la vierge
Dit dans l’ombre à la primeur.

J’assiste au germe, à la sève,
Aux nids où s’ouvrent des yeux,
À tout cet immense rêve

De l’hymen mystérieux.

J’assiste aux couples sans nombre,
Au viol, dans le ravin,
De la grande pudeur sombre
Par le grand amour divin.

J’assiste aux fuites rapides
De tous ces baisers charmants.
L’onde a des coeurs dans ses rides;
Les souffles sont des amants.

Cette allégresse est sacrée,
Et la nature la veut.
On croit finir, et l’on crée.
On est libre, et c’est le noeud.

J’ai pour jardinier la pluie,
L’ouragan pour émondeur;
Je suis grand sous Dieu; j’essuie
Ma cime à la profondeur.

L’hiver froid est sans rosée;
Mais, quand vient avril vermeil,
Je sens la molle pesée
Du printemps sur mon sommeil.

Je la sens mieux, étant libre.
J’ai ma part d’immensité.
La rentrée en équilibre,
Ami, c’est la liberté.

Je suis, sous le ciel qui brille,
Pour la reprise des droits
De la forêt sur la grille,
Et des peuples sur les rois.

Dieu, pour que l’Éden repousse,
Frais, tendre, un peu sauvageon,
Presse doucement du pouce
Ce globe, énorme bourgeon.

Plus de roi. Dieu me pénètre.
Car il faut, retiens cela,
Pour qu’on sente le vrai maître,
Que le faux ne soit plus là.

Il met, lui, l’unique père,
L’Éternel toujours nouveau,
Avec ce seul mot: Espère,
Toute l’ombre de niveau.

Plus de caste. Un ver me touche,
L’hysope aime mon orteil.
Je suis l’égal de la mouche,
Étant l’égal du soleil.

Adieu le feu d’artifice
Et l’illumination.
J’en ai fait le sacrifice.
Je cherche ailleurs le rayon.

D’augustes apothéoses,
Me cachant les cieux jadis,
Remplaçaient, dans des feux roses,
Jéhovah par Amadis.

On emplissait la clairière
De ces lueurs qui, soudain,
Font sur les pieds de derrière
Dresser dans l’ombre le daim.

La vaste voûte sereine
N’avait plus rien qu’on pût voir,

Car la girandole gêne
L'étoile dans l'arbre noir.

Il sort des feux de Bengale
Une clarté dans les bois,
Fière, et qui n'est point l'égale
De l'âtre des villageois.

Nous étions, chêne, orme et tremble,
Traités en pays conquis
Où se débraillent ensemble
Les pétards et les marquis.

La forêt, comme agrandie
Par les feux et les zéphirs,
Avait l'air d'un incendie
De rubis et de saphirs.

On offrait au prince, au maître,
Beau, fier, entouré d'archers,
Ces lumières, soeurs peut-être
De la torche des bûchers.

Cent mille verroteries
Jetaient, flambant à l'air vif,
Dans le ciel des pierreries
Et sur la terre du suif.

Une gloire verte et bleue,
Qu'assaisonnait quelque effroi,
Faisait là-haut une queue
De paon en l'honneur du roi.

Aujourd'hui, - c'est un autre âge,
Et les flambeaux sont changeants, -
Je n'ai plus d'autre éclairage
Que le ciel des pauvres gens.

Je reçois dans ma feuillée,
Sombre, aux mille trous vermeils,
La grande nuit étoilée,
Populace de soleils.

Des planètes inconnues
Poussent sur mon dôme obscur,
Et je tiens pour bien venues
Ces coureuses de l’azur.

Je n’ai plus les pots de soufre
D’où sortaient les visions;
Je me contente du gouffre
Et des constellations.

Je déroge, et la nature,
Foule de rayons et d’yeux,
M’attire dans sa roture,
Pêle-mêle avec les cieux.

Cependant tout ce qui reste,
Dans l’herbe où court le vanneau
Et que broute l’âne agreste,
Du royal siècle a giorno;

Tout ce qui reste des gerbes,
De Jupin, de Sémélé,
Des dieux, des gloires superbes,
Un peu de carton brûlé;

Dans les ronces paysannes,
Au milieu des vers luisants,
Les chandelles courtisanes,
Et les lustres courtisans;

Les vieilles splendeurs brisées,

Les ifs, nobles espions,
Leurs altesses les fusées,
Messeigneurs les lampions;

Tout ce beau monde me raille,
Éteint, orgueilleux et noir;
J’en ris, et je m’encanaille
Avec les astres le soir.

I

Je suis triste quand je vois l’homme.
Le vrai décroît dans les esprits.
L’ombre qui jadis noya Rome
Commence à submerger Paris.

Les rois sournois, de peur des crises,
Donnent au peuple un calmant.
Ils font des boîtes à surprises
Qu’ils appellent charte et serment.

Hélas! nos anges sont des vampires;
Notre albâtre vaut le charbon;
Et nos meilleurs seraient les pires
D’un temps qui ne serait pas bon.

Le juste ment, le sage intrigue;
Notre douceur, triste semblant,
N’est que la peur de la fatigue
Qu’on aurait d’être violent.

Notre austérité frelatée
N’admet ni Hampden ni Brutus;
Le syllogisme de l’athée
Est à l’aise dans nos vertus.

Sur l’honneur mort la honte flotte.
On voit, prompt à prendre le pli,
Se recomposer en ilote
Le Spartiate démoli.

Le ciel blêmit; les fronts végètent;
Le pain du travailleur est noir;
Et des prêtres insulteurs jettent
De la fange avec l’encensoir.

C’est à peine, ô sombres années!
Si les yeux de l’homme obscurcis,
L’aube et la raison condamnées,
Obtiennent de l’ombre un sursis.

Le passé règne; il nous menace;
Le trône est son premier sujet;
Âpre, il remet sa dent tenace
Sur l’esprit humain qu’il rongeait.

Le prince est bonhomme; la rue
Est pourtant sanglante. Bravo!
Dit Dracon. - La royauté grue
Monte sur le roi soliveau.

Les actions sont des cloaques,
Les consciences des égouts;
L’un vendrait la France aux cosaques,
L’autre vendrait l’âme aux hiboux.

La religion sombre emploie
Pour le sang, la guerre et le fer,
Les textes du ciel qu’elle ploie
Au sens monstrueux de l’enfer.

La renommée aux vents répète

Des noms impurs soir et matin,
Et l’on peut voir à sa trompette
De la salive d’Arétin.

La fortune, reine enivrée,
De ce vieux Paris, notre aïeul,
Lui met une telle livrée
Qu’on préférerait le linceul.

La victoire est une drôlesse;
Cette vivandière au flanc nu
Rit de se voir mener en laisse
Par le premier goujat venu.

Point de Condés, des La Feuillades;
Mars et Vénus dans leur clapier;
Je n’admire point les oeillades
De cette fille à ce troupier.

Partout l’or sur la pourriture,
L’idéal en proie aux moqueurs,
Un abaissement de stature
D’accord avec la nuit des coeurs.

II
Mais tourne le dos, ma pensée!
Viens; les bois sont d’aube empourprés;
Sois de la fête; la rosée
T’a promise à la fleur des prés.

Quitte Paris pour la feuillée.
Une haleine heureuse est dans l’air;
La vaste joie est réveillée;
Quelqu’un rit dans le grand ciel clair.

Viens sous l’arbre aux voix étouffées,
Viens dans les taillis pleins d’amour

Où la nuit vont danser les fées
Et les paysannes le jour.

Viens, on t’attend dans la nature.
Les martinets sont revenus;
L’eau veut te conter l’aventure
Des bas ôtés et des pieds nus.

C’est la grande orgie ingénue
Des nids, des ruisseaux, des forêts,
Des rochers, des fleurs de la nue;
La rose a dit que tu viendrais.

Quitte Paris. La plaine est verte;
Le ciel, cherché des yeux en pleurs,
Au bord de sa fenêtre ouverte
Met avril, ce vase de fleurs.

L’aube a voulu, l’aube superbe,
Que pour toi le champ s’animât.
L’insecte est au bout du brin d’herbe
Comme un matelot au grand mât.

Que t’importe Fouché de Nantes
Et le prince de Bénévent!
Les belles mouches bourdonnantes
Emplissent l’azur et le vent.

Je ne comprends plus tes murmures
Et je me déclare content
Puisque voilà les fraises mûres
Et que l’iris sort de l’étang.

III

Fuyons avec celle que j’aime.
Paris trouble l’amour. Fuyons.
Perdons-nous dans l’oubli suprême

Des feuillages et des rayons.

Les bois sont sacrés; sur leurs cimes
Resplendit le joyeux été;
Et les forêts sont des abîmes
D’allégresse et de liberté.

Toujours les coeurs les plus moroses
Et les cerveaux les plus boudeurs
Ont vu le bon côté des choses
S’éclairer dans les profondeurs.

Tout reluit; le matin rougeoie;
L’eau brille; on court dans le ravin;
La gaieté monte sur la joie
Comme la mousse sur le vin.

La tendresse sort des corolles;
Le rosier a l’air d’un amant.
Comme on éclate en choses folles,
Et comme on parle innocemment!

Ô fraîcheur du rire! ombre pure!
Mystérieux apaisement!
Dans l’immense lueur obscure
On s’emplit d’éblouissement.

Adieu les vains soucis funèbres!
On ne se souvient que du beau.
Si toute la vie est ténèbres,
Toute la nature est flambeau.

Qu’ailleurs la bassesse soit grande,
Que l’homme soit vil et bourbeux,
J’en souris, pourvu que j’entende
Une clochette au cou des boeufs.

Il est bien certain que les source,
Les arbres pleins de doux ébats,
Les champs, sont les seules ressources
Que l’âme humaine ait ici-bas.

Ô solitude, tu m’accueilles
Et tu m’instruis sous le ciel bleu;
Un petit oiseau sous les feuilles,
Chantant, suffit à prouver Dieu.

VI

L’ÉTERNEL PETIT ROMAN

I

Le doigt de la femme

Dieu prit sa plus molle argile
Et son plus pur kaolin,
Et fit un bijou fragile,
Mystérieux et câlin.

Il fit le doigt de la femme,
Chef-d’oeuvre auguste et charmant,
Ce doigt fait pour toucher l’âme
Et montrer le firmament.

Il mit dans ce doigt le reste
De la lueur qu’il venait
D’employer au front céleste
De l’heure où l’aurore naît.

Il y mit l’ombre du voile,
Le tremblement du berceau,
Quelque chose de l’étoile,
Quelque chose de l’oiseau.

Le Père qui nous engendre
Fit ce doigt mêlé d’azur,
Très fort pour qu’il restât tendre,
Très blanc pour qu’il restât pur,

Et très doux, afin qu’en somme
Jamais le mal n’en sortît,
Et qu’il pût sembler à l’homme
Le doigt de Dieu, plus petit.

Il en orna la main d’Ève,
Cette frêle et chaste main
Qui se pose comme un rêve
Sur le front du genre humain.

Cette humble main ignorante,
Guide de l’homme incertain,
Qu’on voit trembler, transparente,
Sur la lampe du destin.

Oh! dans ton apothéose,
Femme, ange aux regards baissés,
La beauté, c’est peu de chose,
La grâce n’est pas assez;

Il faut aimer. Tout soupire,
L’oncle, la fleur, l’alcyon;
La grâce n’est qu’un sourire,
La beauté n’est qu’un rayon;

Dieu, qui veut qu’Ève se dresse
Sur notre rude chemin
Fit pour l’amour la caresse,
Pour la caresse la main.

Dieu, lorsque ce doigt qu’on aime
Sur l’argile fut conquis,

S’applaudit, car le suprême
Est fier de créer l’exquis.

Ayant fait ce doigt sublime,
Dieu dit aux anges: Voilà!
Puis s’endormit dans l’abîme;
Le diable alors s’éveilla.

Dans l’ombre où Dieu se repose,
Il vint, noir sur l’orient,
Et tout au bout du doigt rose
Mit un ongle en souriant.

II

Fuite en Sologne

Au poète Mérante

I

Ami, viens me rejoindre.
Les bois sont innocents.
Il est bon de voir poindre
L’aube des paysans.

Paris, morne et farouche,
Pousse des hurlements
Et se tord sous la douche
Des noirs événements.

Il revient, loi sinistre,
Étrange état normal!
À l’ennui par le cuistre
Et par le monstre au mal.

II

J’ai fui; viens. C’est dans l’ombre
Que nous nous réchauffons.

J’habite un pays sombre
Plein de rêves profonds.

Les récits de grand-mère
Et les signes de croix
Ont mis une chimère
Charmante dans les bois.

Ici, sous chaque porte,
S’assied le fabliau,
Nain du foyer qui porte
Perruque in-folio.

L’elfe dans les nymphées
Fait tourner ses fuseaux;
Ici l’on a des fées
Comme ailleurs des oiseaux.

Le conte, aimé des chaumes,
Trouve au bord des chemins,
Parfois, un nid de gnomes
Qu’il prend dans ses deux mains.

Les follets sont des drôles
Pétris d’ombre et d’azur
Qui font au creux des saules
Un flamboiement obscur.

Le faune aux doigts d’écorce
Rapproche par moments
Sous la table au pied torse
Les genoux des amants.

Le soir un lutin cogne
Aux plafonds des manoirs;
Les étangs de Sologne
Sont de pâles miroirs.

Les nénuphars des berges
Me regardent la nuit;
Les fleurs semblent des vierges;
L’âme des choses luit.

III

Cette bruyère est douce;
Ici le ciel est bleu,
L’homme vit, le blé pousse
Dans la bonté de Dieu.

J’habite sous les chênes
Frémissants et calmants;
L’air est tiède, et les plaines
Sont des rayonnements.

Je me suis fait un gîte
D’arbres, sourds à nos pas;
Ce que le vent agite,
L’homme ne l’émeut pas.

Le matin, je sommeille
Confusément encor.
L’aube arrive vermeille
Dans une gloire d’or.

Ami, dit la ramée,
Il fait jour maintenant. -
Une mouche enfermée
M’éveille en bourdonnant.

IV

Viens, loin des catastrophes,
Mêler sous nos berceaux
Le frisson de tes strophes
Au tremblement des eaux.

Viens, l’étang solitaire
Est un poème aussi.
Les lacs ont le mystère,
Nos coeurs ont le souci.

Tout comme l’hirondelle,
La stance quelquefois
Aime à mouiller son aile
Dans la mare des bois.

C’est, la tête inondée
Des pleurs de la forêt,
Que souvent le spondée
À Virgile apparaît.

C’est des sources, des îles,
Du hêtre et du glaïeul
Que sort ce tas d’idylles
Dont Tityre est l’aïeul.

Segrais, chez Pan son hôte,
Fit un livre serein
Où la grenouille saute
Du sonnet au quatrain.

Pendant qu’en sa nacelle
Racan chantait Babet,
Du bec de la sarcelle
Une rime tombait.

Moi, ce serait ma joie
D’errer dans la fraîcheur
D’une églogue où l’on voie
Fuir le martin-pêcheur.

L’ode même, superbe,

Jamais ne renia
Toute cette grande herbe
Où rit Titania.

Ami, l’étang révèle
Et mêle, brin à brin,
Une flore nouvelle
Au vieil alexandrin.

Le style se retrempe
Lorsque nous le plongeons
Dans cette eau sombre où rampe
Un esprit sous les joncs.

Viens, pour peu que tu veuilles
Voir croître ton vers
La sphaigne aux larges feuilles
Et les grands roseaux verts.

III

Gare!

On a peur, tant elle est belle!
Fût-on don Juan ou Caton.
On la redoute rebelle;
Tendre, que deviendrait-on?

Elle est joyeuse et céleste!
Elle vient de ce Brésil
Si doré qu’il fait du reste
De l’univers un exil.

À quatorze ans épousée,
Et veuve au bout de dix mois.
Elle a toute la rosée
De l’aurore au fond des bois.

Elle est vierge; à peine née.
Son mari fut un vieillard;
Dieu brisa cet hyménée
De Trop tôt avec Trop tard.

Apprenez qu'elle se nomme
Doña Rosita Rosa;
Dieu, la destinant à l'homme,
Aux anges la refusa.

Elle est ignorante et libre,
Et sa candeur la défend.
Elle a tout, accent qui vibre,
Chanson triste et rire enfant,

Tout, le caquet, le silence,
Ces petits pieds familiers
Créés pour l'invraisemblance
Des romans et des souliers,

Et cet air des jeunes Èves
Qu'on nommait jadis fripon,
Et le tourbillon des rêves
Dans les plis de son jupon.

Cet être qui nous attire,
Agnès cousine d'Hébé,
Enivrerait un satyre,
Et griserait un abbé.

Devant tant de beautés pures,
Devant tant de frais rayons,
La chair fait des conjectures
Et l'âme des visions.

Au temps présent l'eau saline,
La blanche écume des mers

S’appelle la mousseline;
On voit Vénus à travers.

Le réel fait notre extase;
Et nous serions plus épris
De voir Ninon sous la gaze
Que sous la vague Cypris.

Nous préférons la dentelle
Au flot diaphane et frais;
Vénus n’est qu’une immortelle;
Une femme, c’est plus près.

Celle-ci, vers nous conduite
Comme un ange retrouvé,
Semble à tous les coeurs la suite
De leur songe inachevé.

L’âme admire, enchantée
Par tout ce qu’a de charmant
La rêverie ajoutée
Au vague éblouissement.

Quel danger! on la devine.
Un nimbe à ce front vermeil!
Belle, on la rêve divine,
Fleur, on la rêve soleil.

Elle est lumière, elle est onde,
On la contemple. On la croit
Reine et fée, et mer profonde
Pour les perles qu’on y voit.

Gare, Arthur! gare, Clitandre!
Malheur à qui se mettait
À regarder d’un air tendre
Ce mystérieux attrait!

L’amour, où glissent les âmes,
Est un précipice; on a
Le vertige au bord des femmes
Comme au penchant de l’Etna.

On rit d’abord. Quel doux rire!
Un jour, dans ce jeu charmant,
On s’aperçoit qu’on respire
Un peu moins facilement.

Ces feux-là troublent la tête.
L’imprudent qui s’y chauffait
S’éveille à moitié poète
Et stupide tout à fait.

Plus de joie. On est la chose
Des tourments et des amours.
Quoique le tyran soit rose,
L’esclavage est noir toujours.

On est jaloux; travail rude!
On n’est plus libre et vivant,
Et l’on a l’inquiétude
D’une feuille dans le vent.

On la suit, pauvre jeune homme!
Sous prétexte qu’il faut bien
Qu’un astre ait un astronome
Et qu’une femme ait un chien.

On se pose en loup fidèle;
On est bête, on s’en aigrit,
Tandis qu’un autre, auprès d’elle,
Aimant moins, a plus d’esprit.

Même aux bals et dans les fêtes,

On souffre, fût-on vainqueur;
Et voilà comment sont faites
Les aventures du coeur.

Cette adolescente est sombre
À cause de ses quinze ans
Et de tout ce qu’on voit d’ombre
Dans ses beaux yeux innocents.

On donnerait un empire
Pour tous ces chastes appas;
Elle est terrible; et le pire,
C’est qu’elle n’y pense pas.

IV

À Doña Rosita Rosa

I

Ce petit bonhomme bleu
Qu’un souffle apporte et remporte,
Qui, dès que tu dors un peu,
Gratte de l’ongle à ta porte,

C’est mon rêve. Plein d’effroi,
Jusqu’à ton seuil il se glisse.
Il voudrait entrer chez toi
En qualité de caprice.

Si tu désires avoir
Un caprice aimable, leste,
Et prenant un air céleste
Sous les étoiles du soir,

Mon rêve, ô belle des belles,
Te convient; arrangeons-nous.
Il a ton nom sur ses ailes.
Et mon nom sur ses genoux.

Il est doux, gai, point morose,
Tendre, frais, d’azur baigné.
Quant à son ongle, il est rose,
Et j’en suis égratigné.

II

Prends-le donc à ton service.
C’est un pauvre rêve fou;
Mais pauvreté n’est pas vice.
Nul coeur ne ferme au verrou;

Ton coeur, pas plus que mon âme,
N’est clos et barricadé.
Ouvre donc, ouvrez, madame,
À mon doux songe évadé.

Les heures pour moi sont lentes,
Car je souffre éperdument;
Il vient sur ton front charmant
Poser ses ailes tremblantes.

T’obéir sera son voeu;
Il dorlotera ton âme;
Il fera chez toi du feu,
Et, s’il le peut, de la flamme.

Il fera ce qui te plaît;
Prompt à voir tes désirs naître;
Belle, il sera ton valet,
Jusqu’à ce qu’il soit ton maître.

V

À Rosita

Tu ne veux pas aimer, méchante?
Le printemps est triste, vois;

Entends-tu ce que l'oiseau chante
Dans la sombre douceur des bois?

Sans l'amour rien ne reste d'Ève;
L'amour, c'est la seule beauté;
Le ciel, bleu quand l'astre s'y lève,
Est tout noir, le soleil ôté.

Tu deviendras laide toi-même
Si tu n'as pas plus de raison.
L'oiseau chante qu'il faut qu'on aime,
Et ne sait pas d'autre chanson.

VI
C'est parce qu'elle se taisait

Son silence fut mon vainqueur;
C'est ce qui m'a fait épris d'elle.
D'abord je n'avais dans le coeur
Rien qu'un obscur battement d'aile.

Nous allions en voiture au bois,
Seuls tous les soirs, et loin du monde;
Je lui parlais, et d'autres voix
Chantaient dans la forêt profonde.

Son oeil était mystérieux.
Il contient, cet oeil de colombe,
Le même infini que les cieux,
La même aurore que la tombe.

Elle ne disait rien du tout,
Pensive au fond de la calèche.
Un jour je sentis tout à coup
Trembler dans mon âme une flèche.

L'Amour, c'est le je ne sais quoi.

Une femme habile à se taire
Est la caverne où se tient coi
Ce méchant petit sagittaire.

VII
À la belle impérieuse

L'amour, panique
De la raison,
Se communique
Par le frisson.

Laissez-moi dire,
N'accordez rien.
Si je soupire,
Chantez, c'est bien.

Si je demeure,
Triste, à vos pieds,
Et si je pleure,
C'est bien, riez.

Un homme semble
Souvent trompeur.
Mais si je tremble,
Belle, ayez peur.

VIII
Sommation irrespectueuse

Rire étant si jolie,
C'est mal. Ô trahison
D'inspirer la folie,
En gardant la raison!

Rire étant si charmante!
C'est coupable, à côté

Des rêves qu’on augmente
Par son trop de beauté.

Une chose peut-être
Qui va vous étonner,
C’est qu’à votre fenêtre
Le vent vient frissonner,

Qu’avril commence à luire,
Que la mer s’aplanit,
Et que cela veut dire:
Fauvette, fais ton nid.

Belle aux chansons naïves,
J’admets peu qu’on ait droit
Aux prunelles très vives,
Ayant le coeur très froid.

Quand on est si bien faite,
On devrait se cacher.
Un amant qu’on rejette,
À quoi bon l’ébaucher?

On se lasse, ô coquette,
D’être toujours tremblant,
Vous êtes la raquette,
Et je suis le volant.

Le coq battant de l’aile,
Maître en son pachalick,
Nous prévient qu’une belle
Est un danger public.

Il a raison. J’estime
Qu’en leur gloire isolés,
Deux beaux yeux sont un crime,
Allumez, mais brûlez.

Pourquoi ce vain manège?
L’eau qu’échauffe le jour,
La fleur perçant la neige,
Le loup hurlant d’amour,

L’astre que nos yeux guettent,
Sont l’eau, la fleur, le loup,
Et l’étoile, et n’y mettent
Pas de façons du tout.

Aimer est si facile
Que, sans coeur, tout est dit,
L’homme est un imbécile,
La femme est un bandit.

L’oeillade est une dette.
L’insolvabilité,
Volontaire, complète
Ce monstre, la beauté.

Craindre ceux qu’on captive!
Nous fuir et nous lier!
Être la sensitive
Et le mancenillier!

C’est trop. Aimez, madame.
Quoi donc! quoi! mon souhait
Où j’ai tout mis, mon âme
Et mes rêves, me hait!

L’amour nous vise. Certe,
Notre effroi peut crier,
Mais rien ne déconcerte
Cet arbalétrier.

Sachez donc, ô rebelle,

Que souvent, trop vainqueur,
Le regard d’une belle
Ricoche sur son coeur.

Vous pouvez être sûre
Qu’un jour vous vous ferez
Vous-même une blessure
Que vous adorerez.

Vous comprendrez l’extase
Voisine du péché,
Et que l’âme est un vase
Toujours un peu penché.

Vous saurez, attendrie,
Le charme de l’instant
Terrible, où l’on s’écrie:
Ah! vous m’en direz tant!

Vous saurez, vous qu’on gâte,
Le destin tel qu’il est,
Les pleurs, l’ombre, et la hâte
De cacher un billet.

Oui, - pourquoi tant remettre? -
Vous sentirez, qui sait?
La douceur d’une lettre
Que tiédit le corset.

Vous riez! Votre joie
À Tout préfère Rien.
En vain l’aube rougeoie,
En vain l’air chante. Eh bien,

Je ris aussi! Tout passe.
Ô muse, allons-nous-en.
J’aperçois l’humble grâce

D’un toit de paysan;

L’arbre, libre volière,
Est plein d’heureuses voix;
Dans les pousses du lierre
Le chevreau fait son choix;

Et, jouant sous les treilles,
Un petit villageois
A pour pendant d’oreilles
Deux cerises des bois.

IX
Fêtes de village en plein air

Le bal champêtre est sous la tente.
On prend en vain des airs moqueurs;
Toute une musique flottante
Passe des oreilles aux coeurs.

On entre, on fait cette débauche
De voir danser en plein midi
Près d’une Madelon point gauche
Un Gros-Pierre point engourdi.

On regarde les marrons frire;
La bière mousse, et les plateaux
Offrent aux dents pleines de rire
Des mosaïques de gâteaux.

Le soir on va dîner sur l’herbe;
On est gai, content, berger, roi,
Et, sans savoir comment, superbe,
Et tendre, sans savoir pourquoi.

Feuilles vertes et nappes blanches;
Le couchant met le bois en feu;

La joie ouvre ses ailes franches:
Comme le ciel immense est bleu!

X
Confiance

À Mérante

Ami, tu me dis: - “ Joie extrême!
“ Donc, ce matin, comblant ton voeu,
“ Rougissante, elle a dit: Je t’aime!
“ Devant l’aube, cet autre aveu.

“ Ta victoire, tu la dévoiles.
“ On t’aime, ô Léandre, ô Saint-Preux,
“ Et te voilà dans les étoiles,
“ Sans parachute, malheureux!”

Et tu souris. Mais que m’importe!
Ton sourire est un envieux.
Sois gai; moi, ma tristesse est morte.
Rire c’est bien, aimer c’est mieux.

Tu me croyais plus fort en thème,
N’est-ce pas? tu te figurais
Que je te dirais: Elle m’aime,
Défions-nous, et buvons frais.

Point. J’ai des manières étranges;
On fait mon bonheur, j’y consens;
Je vois là-haut passer des anges
Et je me mêle à ces passants.

Je suis ingénu comme Homère,
Quand cet aveugle aux chants bénis
Adorait la mouche éphémère
Qui sort des joncs de l’Hypanis.

J’ai la foi. Mon esprit facile
Dès le premier jour constata
Dans la Sologne une Sicile,
Une Aréthuse en Rosita.

Je ne vois point dans une femme
Un filou, par l’ombre enhardi.
Je ne crois pas qu’on prenne une âme
Comme on vole un maravedi.

La supposer fausse, et plâtrée,
Non, justes dieux! je suis épris.
Je ne commence point l’entrée
Au paradis, par le mépris.

Je lui donne un coeur sans lui dire:
Rends-moi la monnaie! - Et je crois
À sa pudeur, à mon délire,
Au bleu du ciel, aux fleurs des bois.

J’entre en des sphères idéales
Sans fredonner le vieux pont-neuf
De Villon aux piliers des Halles
Et de Fronsac à l’Oeil-de-Boeuf.

Je m’enivre des harmonies
Qui, de l’azur, à chaque pas,
M’arrivent, claires, infinies,
Joyeuses, et je ne crois pas

Que l’amour trompe nos attentes,
Qu’un bien-aimé soit un martyr,
Et que toutes ces voix chantantes
Descendent du ciel pour mentir.

Je suis rempli d’une musique;

Je ne sens point, dans mes halliers,
La désillusion classique
Des vieillards et des écoliers.

J’écoute en moi l’hymne suprême
De mille instruments triomphaux
Qui tous répètent qu’elle m’aime,
Et dont pas un ne chante faux.

Oui, je t’adore! oui, tu m’adores!
C’est à ces mots-là que sont dus
Tous ces vagues clairons sonores
Dans un bruit de songe entendus.

Et, dans les grands bois qui m’entourent,
Je vois danser, d’un air vainqueur,
Les cupidons, gamins qui courent
Dans la fanfare du coeur.

XI

Le nid

C’est l’abbé qui fait l’église;
C’est le roi qui fait la tour;
Qui fait l’hiver? C’est la bise.
Qui fait le nid? C’est l’amour.

Les églises sont sublimes,
La tour monte aux cieux,
L’hiver pour trône a les cimes;
Mais le nid chante et vaut mieux.

Le nid, que l’aube visite,
Ne voit ni deuils, ni combats;
Le nid est la réussite
La meilleur d’ici-bas.

Là, pas d’or et point de marbre;
De la mousse, un coin étroit;
C’est un grenier dans un arbre,
C’est un bouquet sur un toit.

Ce n’est point chose facile,
Lorsque Charybde et Scylla
Veulent mordre la Sicile,
Que de mettre le holà;

Quand l’Hékla brûle sa suie,
Quand flambe l’Etna grognon,
Le fumiste qui l’essuie
Est un rude compagnon;

L’orage est grand dans son antre;
Le nuage, hydre des airs,
Est splendide quand son ventre
Laisse tomber des éclairs;

Un cri fier et redoutable,
De hautes rébellions
Sortent de la fauve étable
Des tigres et des lions;

Certes, c’est une oeuvre ardue
D’allumer le jour levant,
D’ouvrir assez l’étendue
Pour ne pas casser le vent,

Et de donner à la houle
Un si gigantesque élan
Que, d’un seul bond, elle roule
De Behring à Magellan.

Emplir de fureur les bêtes
Et le tonnerre de bruit;

Gonfler le cou des tempêtes
Des sifflements de la nuit;

Tirer, quand la giboulée
Fouette le matin vermeil,
De l’écurie étoilée
L’attelage au soleil;

Gaver de vins vendémiaire,
D’épis messidor; pourvoir
Aux dépenses de lumière
Que fait l’astre chaque soir;

Peupler l’ombre; avoir la force,
À travers la terre et l’air,
D’enfler tous les ans l’écorce,
D’enfler tous les jours la mer;

Ce sont les travaux suprêmes
Des dieux, ouvriers géants
Mirant leurs bleus diadèmes
Dans les glauques océans;

Ce sont les tâches immenses
Des êtres régnant sur nous,
Tantôt des grandes clémences,
Tantôt des vastes courroux;

C’est du miracle et du rêve;
Hier, aujourd’hui, demain,
Ces choses font, depuis Ève,
L’éblouissement humain.

Mais entre tous les prodiges
Qu’entassent dieux et démons,
Ouvrant l’abîme aux vertiges,
Heurtant les foudres aux monts,

C’est l’effort le plus superbe,
C’est le travail le plus beau,
De faire tordre un brin d’herbe
Au bec d’un petit oiseau.

En vain rampe la couleuvre;
L’amour arrange et bénit
Deux ailes sur la même oeuvre,
Deux coeurs dans le même nid.

Ce nid où l’amour se pose,
Voilà le but du ciel bleu;
Et pour la plus douce chose
Il faut le plus puissant dieu.

XII
À propos de doña Rosa

À Mérante

Au printemps, quand les nuits sont claires,
Quand on voit, vagues tourbillons,
Voler sur les fronts les chimères
Et dans les fleurs les papillons,

Pendant la floraison des fèves,
Quand l’amant devient l’amoureux,
Quand les hommes, en proie aux rêves,
Ont toutes ces mouches sur eux,

J’estime qu’il est digne et sage
De ne point prendre un air vainqueur,
Et d’accepter ce doux passge
De la saison sur notre coeur.

À quoi bon résister aux femmes,

Qui ne résistent pas du tout?
Toutes les roses sont en flammes;
Une guimpe est de mauvais goût.

Trop heureux ceux à qui les belles
Font la violence d’aimer!
À quoi sert-il d’avoir des ailes,
Sinon pour les laisser plumer?

Ô Mérante, il n’est tien qui vaille
Ces purs attraits, tendres tyrans,
Un sourire qui dit: Bataille!
Un soupir qui dit: Je me rends!

Et je donnerais la Castille
Et ses plaines en amadou
Pour deux yeux sous une mantille,
Fiers, et venant on ne sait d’où.

XIII

Les bonnes intentions de Rosa

Ce bonhomme avait les yeux mornes
Et, sur son front, chargé d’ennui,
L’incorrection de deux cornes
Tout à fait visibles chez lui.

Ses vagues prunelles bourrues
Reflétaient dans leur blême éclair
Le sombre dédale des rues
De la grande ville d’enfer.

Son pied fourchu crevait ses chausses;
Hors du gouffre il prenait le frais;
Ses dents, certes, n’étaient point fausses,
Mais ses regards n’étaient pas vrais.

Il venait sur terre, vorace.
Dans ses mains, aux ongles de fer,
Il tenait un permis de chasse
Signé Dieu, plus bas Lucifer.

C’était Belzébuth, très bon diable.
Je le reconnus sur-le-champ.
Sa grimace irrémédiable
Lui donnait l’air d’un dieu méchant.

Un même destin, qui nous pèse,
Semble tous deux nous châtier,
Car dans l’amour je suis à l’aise
Comme lui dans un bénitier.

L’amour, - jaloux, ne vous déplaise, -
Est un doux gazon d’oasis
Fort ressemblant à de la braise
Sur laquelle on serait assis.

Une femme! l’exquise chose!
Je redeviens un écolier;
Je décline Rosa la rose;
Je suis amoureux à lier.

Or le diable est une rencontre;
Et j’en suis toujours réjoui.
De tous les Pour il est le Contre;
Il est le Non de tous les Oui.

Le diable est diseur de proverbes.
Il songeait. Son pied mal botté
Écrasait dans les hautes herbes
La forêt de fleurs de l’été.

L’un près de l’autre nous passâmes.
— Çà, pensai-je, il est du métier. -

Le diable se connaît en femmes,
En qualité de bijoutier.

Je m’approchai de son altesse,
Le chapeau bas; ce carnassier,
Calme, me fit la politesse
D’un sourire hostile et princier.

Je lui dis: Que pensez-vous d’elle?
Contez-moi ce que vous savez.
 Son désir de t’être fidèle,
Dit-il, est un de mes pavés.

XIV
Rosa fâchée

Une querelle. Pourquoi?
Mon Dieu! parce qu’on s’adore.
À peine s’est-on dit Toi
Que Vous se hâte d’éclore.

Le coeur tire sur son noeud;
L’azur fuit; l’âme est diverse.
L’amour est un ciel, qui pleut
Sur les amoureux à verse.

De même, quand, sans effroi,
Dans la forêt que juin dore,
On va rôder, sur la foi
Des promesses de l’aurore,

On peut être pris le soir,
Car le beau temps souvent triche,
Par un gros nuage noir
Qui n’était pas sur l’affiche.

XV

Dans les ruines d’une abbaye

Seuls, tous deux, ravis, chantants!
Comme on s’aime!
Comme on cueille le printemps
Que Dieu sème!

Quels rires étincelants
Dans ces ombres,
Pleines jadis de fronts blancs,
De coeurs sombres!

On est tout frais mariés.
On s’envoie
Les charmants cris variés
De la joie.

Purs ébats mêlés au vent
Qui frissonne!
Gaietés que le noir couvent
Assaisonne!

On effeuille des jasmins
Sur la pierre
Où l’abbesse joint les mains
En prière.

Les tombeaux, de croix marqués,
Font partie
De ces jeux, un peu piqués
Par l’ortie.

On se cherche, on se poursuit,
On sent croître
Ton aube, amour, dans la nuit
Du vieux cloître.

On s’en va se becquetant,
On s’adore,
On s’embrasse à chaque instant,
Puis encore,

Sous les piliers, les arceaux,
Et les marbres.
C’est l’histoire des oiseaux
Dans les arbres.

XVI

Les trop heureux

Quand avec celle qu’on enlève,
Joyeux, on s’est enfui si loin,
Si haut, qu’au-dessus de son rêve
On n’a plus que Dieu, doux témoin;

Quand, sous un dais de fleurs sans nombre,
On a fait tomber sa beauté
Dans quelque précipice d’ombre,
De silence et de volupté;

Quand, au fond du hallier farouche,
Dans une nuit pleine de jour,
Une bouche sur une bouche
Baise ce mot divin: amour!

Quand l’homme contemple la femme,
Quand l’amante adore l’amant,
Quand, vaincus, ils n’ont plus dans l’âme
Qu’un muet éblouissement,

Ce profond bonheur solitaire,
C’est le ciel que nous essayons.
Il irrite presque la terre
Résistante à trop de rayons.

Ce bonheur rend les fleurs jalouses
Et les grands chênes envieux,
Et fait qu’au milieu des pelouses
Le lys trouve le rosier vieux;

Ce bonheur est si beau qu’il semble
Trop grand, même aux êtres ailés;
Et la libellule qui tremble,
La graine aux pistils étoilés,

Et l’étamine, âme inconnue
Qui de la plante monte au ciel,
Le vent errant de nue en nue,
L’abeille errant de miel en miel,

L’oiseau, que les hivers désolent,
Le frais papillon rajeuni,
Toutes les choses qui s’envolent,
En murmurant dans l’infini.

XVII
À un visiteur parisien

Domremy, 182...

Moi, que je sois royaliste!
C’est à peu près comme si
Le ciel devait rester triste
Quand l’aube a dit: Me voici!

Un roi, c’est un homme équestre,
Personnage à numéro,
En marge duquel de Maistre
Écrit: Roi, lisez: Bourreau.

Je n’y crois plus. Est-ce un crime

Que d’avoir, par ma cloison,
Vu ce point du jour sublime,
Le lever de la raison!

J’étais jadis à l’école
Chez ce pédant, le Passé;
J’ai rompu cette bricole;
J’épelle un autre A B C.

Mon livre, ô fils de Lutèce,
C’est la nature, alphabet
Où le lys n’est point altesse,
Où l’arbre n’est point gibet.

Maintenant, je te l’avoue,
Je ne crois qu’au droit divin
Du coeur, de l’enfant qui joue,
Du franc rire et du bon vin.

Puisque tu me fais visite
Sous mon chaume, à Domremy,
À toi le Grec, moi le Scythe,
J’ouvre mon âme à demi...

Pas tout à fait. - La feuillée
Doit voiler le carrefour,
Et la porte entrebâillée
Convient au timide amour.

J’aime, en ces bois que j’habite,
L’aurore; et j’ai dans mon trou
Pour pareil, lé cénobite,
Pour contraire, le hibou.

Une femme me fascine;
Comme Properce, j’entends
Une flûte tibicine

Dans les branches du printemps.

J’ai pour jeu la poésie;
J’ai pour torture un minois,
Vieux style, et la jalousie,
Ce casse-tête chinois.

Je suis fou d’une charmeuse,
De Paris venue ici,
Dont les saules de la Meuse
Sont tous amoureux aussi.

Je l’ai suivie en Sologne,
Je la suis à Vaucouleurs.
Mon coeur rit, ma raison grogne,
Et me voilà dans les fleurs.

Je l’ai nommée Euryanthe.
J’en perds l’âme et l’appétit.
Circonstance atténuante:
Elle a le pied très petit.

Plains-moi. Telle est ma blessure.
Cela dit, amusons-nous.
Oublions tout, la censure,
Rome, et l’abbé Frayssinous.

Cours les bals, danse aux kermesses.
Les filles ont de la foi;
Fais-toi tenir les promesses
Qu’elles m’ont faites à moi.

Ris, savoure, aime, déguste,
Et, libres, narguons un peu
Le roi, ce faux nez auguste
Que le prêtre met à Dieu.

XVIII
Dénonciation de l’esprit des bois

J’ai vu ton ami, j’ai vu ton amie;
Mérante et Rosa; vous n’étiez point trois.
Fils, ils ont produit une épidémie
De baisers parmi les nids de mon bois.

Ils étaient contents, le diable m’emporte!
Tu n’étais point là. Je les regardais.
Jadis on trompait Jupin de la sorte;
Car parfois un dieu peut être un dadais.

Moi je suis très laid, j’ai l’épaule haute,
Mais, bah! Quand je peux, je ris de bon coeur.
Chacun a sa part; on plane, je saute;
Vous êtes les beaux, je suis le moqueur.

Quand le ciel charmant se mire à la source,
Quand les autres ont l’âme et le baiser,
Faire la grimace est une ressource.
N’étant pas heureux, il faut s’amuser.

Je dois t’avertir qu’un bois souvent couvre
Des détails, piquant pour Brantôme et Grimm,
Que les yeux sont faits pour qu’on les entrouvre,
Fils, et qu’une absence est un intérim.

Un coeur parfois trompe et se désabonne.
Qui veille a raison. Dieu, ce grand Bréguet,
Fit la confiance, et, la trouvant bonne,
L’améliora par un peu de guet.

Tu serais marmotte ou l’un des Quarante
Que tu ne pourrais dormir mieux que ça
Pendant que Rosa sourit à Mérante,
Pendant que Mérante embrasse Rosa.

XIX
Réponse à l’esprit des bois

Nain qui me railles,
Gnome aperçu
Dans les broussailles,
Ailé, bossu;

Face moisie,
Sur toi, boudeur,
La poésie
Tourne en laideur.

Magot de l’Inde,
Dieu d’Abydos,
Ce mont, le Pinde,
Est sur ton dos.

Ton nom est Fable.
Ton boniment
Quelquefois hâble
Et toujours ment.

Ta verve est faite
De ton limon,
Et le poète
Sort du démon.

Monstre apocryphe,
Trouble-raisons,
On sent ta griffe
Dans ces buissons.

Tu me dénonces
Un rendez-vous,
Ô fils des ronces,

Frère des houx,

Et ta voix grêle
Vient accuser
D’un sourire, elle,
Lui, d’un baiser.

Quel vilain rôle!
Je n’en crois rien,
Vieux petit drôle
Aérien.

Reprends ta danse,
Spectre badin;
Reçois quittance
De mon dédain.

Où j’enveloppe
Tous tes aïeux
Depuis Ésope
Jusqu’à Mayeux.

XX
Lettre

J’ai mal dormi. C’est votre faute.
J’ai rêvé que, sur des sommets,
Nous nous promenions côte à côte,
Et vous chantiez, et tu m’aimais.

Mes dix-neuf ans étaient la fête
Qu’en frissonnant je vous offrais;
Vous étiez belle et j’étais bête
Au fond des bois sombres et frais.

Je m’abandonnais aux ivresse;
Au-dessus de mon front vivant

Je voyais fuir les molles tresses
De l’aube, du rêve et du vent.

J’étais ébloui, beau, superbe;
Je voyais des jardins de feu,
Des nids dans l’air, des fleurs dans l’herbe,
Et dans un immense éclair, Dieu.

Mon sang murmurait dans mes tempes
Une chanson que j’entendais;
Les planètes étaient mes lampes;
J’étais archange sous un dais.

Car la jeunesse est admirable,
La joie emplit nos seins hardis;
Et la femme est le divin diable
Qui taquine ce paradis.

Elle tient un fruit qu’elle achève
Et qu’elle mord, ange et tyran;
Ce qu’on nomme la pomme d’Ève,
Tristes cieux! c’est le coeur d’Adam.

J’ai toute la nuit eu la fièvre.
Je vous adorais en dormant;
Le mot amour sur votre lèvre
Faisait un vague flamboiement.

Pareille à la vague où l’oeil plonge,
Votre gorge m’apparaissait
Dans une nudité de songe,
Avec une étoile au corset.

Je voyais vos jupes de soie,
Votre beauté, votre blancheur;
J’ai jusqu’à l’aube été la proie
De ce rêve mauvais coucheur.

Vous aviez cet air qui m’enchante;
Vous me quittiez, vous me preniez;
Vous changiez d’amours, plus méchante
Que les tigres calomniés.

Nos âmes se sont dénouées,
Et moi, de souffrir j’étais las;
Je me mourais dans des nuées
Où je t’entendais rire, hélas!

Je me réveille, et ma ressource
C’est de ne plus penser à vous,
Madame, et de fermer la source
Des songes sinistres et doux.

Maintenant, calmé, je regarde,
Pour oublier d’être jaloux,
Un tableau qui dans ma mansarde
Suspend Venise à quatre clous.

C’est un cadre ancien qu’illumine,
Sous de grands arbres, jadis verts,
Un soleil d’assez bonne mine
Quoique un peu mangé par les vers.

Le paysage est plein d’amantes,
Et du vieux sourire effacé
De toutes les femmes charmantes
Et cruelles du temps passé.

Sans les éteindre, les années
Ont couvert de molles pâleurs
Les robes vaguement traînées
Dans de la lumière et des fleurs.

Un bateau passe. Il porte un groupe

Où chante un prélat violet;
L’ombre des branches se découpe
Sur le plafond du tendelet.

À terre, un pâtre, aimé des muses,
Qui n’a que la peau sur les os,
Regarde des choses confuses
Dans le profond ciel, plein d’oiseaux.

XXI
L’oubli

Autrefois inséparables,
Et maintenant séparés.
Gaie, elle court dans les prés,
La belle aux chants adorables;

La belle aux chants adorés,
Elle court dans la prairie;
Les bois pleins de rêverie
De ses yeux sont éclairés.

Apparition exquise!
Elle marche en soupirant,
Avec cet air conquérant
Qu’on a quand on est conquise.

La Toilette, cet esprit,
Cette déesse grisette,
Qu’adore en chantant Lisette,
À qui Minerve sourit,

Pour la faire encore plus belle
Que ne l’avait faite Dieu,
Pour que le vague oiseau bleu
Sur son front batte de l’aile,

A sur cet ange câlin
Épuisé toute sa flore,
Les lys, les roses, l’aurore,
Et la maison Gagelin.

Soubrette divine et leste,
La Toilette au doigt tremblant
A mis un frais chapeau blanc
Sur ce flamboiement céleste.

Regardez-la maintenant.
Que cette belle est superbe!
Le coeur humain comme l’herbe
Autour d’elle est frissonnant.

Oh! la fière conquérante!
Le grand oeil mystérieux!
Prévost craint pour Desgrieux,
Molière a peur pour Dorante.

Elle a l’air, dans la clarté
Dont elle est toute trempée,
D’une étincelle échappée
À l’idéale beauté.

Ô grâce surnaturelle!
Il suffit, pour qu’on soit fou,
Qu’elle ait un ruban au cou,
Qu’elle ait un chiffon sur elle.

Ce chiffon charmant soudain
Aux rayons du jour ressemble,
Et ce ruban sacré semble
Avoir fleuri dans l’Éden.

Elle serait bien fâchée
Qu’on ne vît pas dans ses yeux

Que de la coupe des cieux
Sa lèvre s’est approchée,

Qu’elle veut vaincre et charmer,
Et que c’est là sa manière,
Et qu’elle est la prisonnière
Du doux caprice d’aimer.

Elle sourit, et, joyeuse,
Parle à son nouvel amant
Avec le chuchotement
D’une abeille dans l’yeuse.

Prends mon âme et mes vingt ans.
Je n’aime que toi! dit-elle. -
Ô fille d’Ève éternelle,
Ô femme aux cheveux flottants,

Ton roman sans fin s’allonge;
Pendant qu’aux plaisirs tu cours,
Et que, te croyant toujours
Au commencement du songe,

Tu dis en baissant la voix:
Pour la première fois, j’aime! -
L’amour, ce moqueur suprême,
Rit, et compte sur ses doigts.

Et, sans troubler l’aventure
De la belle aux cheveux d’or,
Sur ce coeur, si neuf encor,
L’amour fait une rature.

Et l’ancien amant? Pâli,
Brisé, sans doute à cette heure
Il se désespère et pleure... -
Écoutez cet hallali.

Passez les monts et les plaines;
La curée est dans les bois;
Les chiens mêlent leurs abois,
Les fleurs mêlent leurs haleines;

Les voyez-vous? Le voilà.
Il est le centre. Il flamboie.
Il luit. Jamais plus de joie
Dans plus d’orgueil ne brilla.

Il brille au milieu des femmes,
Tous les yeux lui disant oui,
Comme un astre épanoui
Dans un triomphe de flammes.

Il cherche en face de lui
Un sourire peu sévère,
Il chante, il lève son verre,
Éblouissant, ébloui.

Tandis que ces gaietés franches
Tourbillonnent à sa voix,
Elle, celle d’autrefois,
Là-bas, bien loin, sous les branches,

Dans les taillis hasardeux,
Aime, adore, se recueille,
Et, près de l’autre, elle effeuille
Une marguerite à deux.

Fatal coeur, comme tu changes!
Lui sans elle, elle sans lui!
Et sur leurs fronts sans ennui
Ils ont la clarté des anges.

Le séraphin à l’oeil pur

Les verrait avec envie,
Tant à leur âme ravie
Se mêle un profond azur!

Sur ces deux bouches il semble
Que le ciel met son frisson;
Sur l’une erre la chanson,
Sur l’autre le baiser tremble.

Ces êtres s’aimaient jadis;
Mais qui viendrait le leur dire
Ferait éclater de rire
Ces bouches du paradis.

Les baisers de l’autre année,
Où sont-ils? Quoi! nul remord!
Non! Tout cet avril est mort,
Toute cette aube est fanée.

Bah! le baiser, le serment,
Rien de tout cela n’existe.
Le myosotis, tout triste,
Y perdrait son allemand.

Elle! à travers ses longs voiles,
Que son regard est charmant!
Lui! comme il jette gaiement
Sa chanson dans les étoiles!

Qu’elle est belle! Qu’il est beau! -
Le morne oubli prend dans l’ombre,
Par degrés, l’épaisseur sombre
De la pierre du tombeau.

LIVRE SECOND. SAGESSE

I

AMA, CREDE

I

De la femme au ciel

L'âme a des étapes profondes.
On se laisse d'abord charmer,
Puis convaincre. Ce sont deux mondes.
Comprendre est au-delà d'aimer.

Aimer, comprendre: c'est le faîte.
Le Coeur, cet oiseau du vallon,
Sur le premier degré s'arrête;
L'Esprit vole à l'autre échelon.

À l'amant succède l'archange;
Le baiser, puis le firmament;
Le point d'obscurité se change
En un point de rayonnement.

Mets de l'amour sur cette terre
Dans les vains brins d'herbe flottants.
Cette herbe devient, ô mystère!
Le nid sombre au fond du printemps.

Ajoute, en écartant son voile,
De la lumière au nid béni.
Et le nid deviendra l'étoile
Dans la forêt de l'infini.

II

L'église

I
J’errais. Que de charmantes choses!
Il avait plu; j’étais crotté;
Mais puisque j’ai vu tant de roses,
Je dois dire la vérité.

J’arrivai tout près d’une église,
De la verte église au bon Dieu,
Où qui voyage sans valise
Écoute chanter l’oiseau bleu.

C’était l’église en fleurs, bâtie
Sans pierre, au fond du bois mouvant,
Par l’aubépine et par l’ortie
Avec des feuilles et du vent.

Le porche était fait de deux branches,
D’une broussaille et d’un buisson;
La voussure, toute en pervenches,
Était signée: Avril, maçon.

Dans cette vive architecture,
Ravissante aux yeux attendris,
On sentait l’art de la nature;
On comprenait que la perdrix,

Que l’alouette et que la grive
Avaient donné de bons avis
Sur la courbure de l’ogive,
Et que Dieu les avait suivis.

Une haute rose trémière
Dressait sur le toit de chardons
Ses cloches pleines de lumière
Où carillonnaient les bourdons.

Cette flèche gardait l’entrée;
Derrière on voyait s’ébaucher
Une digitale pourprée,
Le clocheton près du clocher.

Seul sous une pierre, un cloporte
Songeait, comme Jean à Pathmos;
Un lys s’ouvrait près de la porte
Et tenait les fonts baptismaux.

Au centre où la mousse s’amasse,
L’autel, un caillou, rayonnait,
Lamé d’argent par la limace
Et brodé d’or par le genêt.

Un escalier de fleurs ouvertes,
Tordu dans le style saxon,
Copiait ses spirales vertes
Sur le dos d’un colimaçon.

Un cytise en pleine révolte,
Troublant l’ordre, étouffant l’écho,
Encombrait toute l’archivolte
D’un grand falbala rococo.

En regardant par la croisée,
Ô joie! on sentait là quelqu’un.
L’eau bénite était en rosée,
Et l’encens était en parfum.

Les rayons à leur arrivée,
Et les gais zéphirs querelleurs,
Allaient de travée en travée
Baiser le front penché des fleurs.

Toute la nef, d’aube baignée,
Palpitait d’extase et d’émoi.

Ami, me dit une araignée,
La grande rosace est de moi.

II
Tout était d’accord dans les plaines,
Tout était d’accord dans les bois
Avec la douceur des haleines,
Avec le mystère des voix.

Tout aimait; tout faisait la paire.
L’arbre à la fleur disait: Nini;
Le mouton disait: Notre Père,
Que votre sainfoin soit béni!

Les abeilles dans l’anémone
Mendiaient, essaim diligent;
Le printemps leur faisait l’aumône
Dans une corbeille d’argent.

Et l’on mariait dans l’église,
Sous le myrte et le haricot,
Un oeillet nommé Cydalise
Avec un chou nommé Jacquot.

Un bon vieux pommier solitaire
Semait ses fleurs, tout triomphant,
Et j’aimais, dans ce frais mystère,
Cette gaieté de vieil enfant.

Au lutrin chantaient, couple allègre,
Pour des auditeurs point ingrats,
Le cricri, ce poète maigre,
Et l’ortolan, ce chantre gras.

Un vif pierrot, de tige en tige,
Sautait là, comme en son jardin;
Je suivais des yeux la voltige

Qu’exécutait ce baladin,

Ainsi qu’aux temps où Notre-Dame,
Pour célébrer n’importe qui,
Faisait sur ses tours, comme une âme,
Envoler madame Saqui.

Un beau papillon dans sa chape
Officiait superbement.
Une rose riait sous cape
Avec un frelon son amant.

Et, du fond des molles cellules,
Les jardinières, les fourmis,
Les frémissantes libellules,
Les demoiselles, chastes miss,

Les mouches aux ailes de crêpes
Admiraient près de sa Phryné
Ce frelon, officier des guêpes,
Coiffé d’un képi galonné.

Cachés par une primevère,
Une caille, un merle siffleur,
Buvaient tous deux au même verre
Dans une belladone en fleur.

Pensif, j’observais en silence,
Car un coeur n’a jamais aimé
Sans remarquer la ressemblance
De l’amour et du mois de mai.

III
Les clochettes sonnaient la messe.
Tout ce petit temple béni
Faisait à l’âme une promesse
Que garantissait l’infini.

J’entendais, en strophes discrètes,
Monter, sous un frais corridor,
Le Te Deum des pâquerettes,
Et l’hosanna des boutons d’or.

Les mille feuilles que l’air froisse
Formaient le mur tremblant et doux.
Et je reconnus ma paroisse;
Et j’y vis mon rêve à genoux.

J’y vis près de l’autel, derrière
Les résédas et les jasmins,
Les songes faisant leur prière,
L’espérance joignant les mains.

J’y vis mes bonheurs éphémères,
Les blancs spectres de mes beaux jours,
Parmi les oiseaux mes chimères,
Parmi les roses mes amours.

IV

Un grand houx, de forme incivile,
Du haut de sa fauve beauté,
Regardait mon habit de ville;
Il était fleuri, moi crotté;

J’étais crotté jusqu’à l’échine.
Le houx ressemblait au chardon
Que fait brouter l’ânier de Chine
À son âne de céladon.

Un bon crapaud faisait la lippe
Près d’un champignon malfaisant.
La chaire était une tulipe
Qu’illuminait un ver luisant.

Au seuil priait cette grisette
À l’air doucement fanfaron,
Qu’à Paris on nomme Lisette,
Qu’aux champs on nomme Liseron.

Un grimpereau, cherchant à boire,
Vit un arum, parmi le thym,
Qui dans sa feuille, blanc ciboire,
Cachait la perle du matin;

Son bec, dans cette vasque ronde,
Prit la goutte d’eau qui brilla;
La plus belle feuille du monde
Ne peut donner que ce qu’elle a.

Les chenilles peuplaient les ombres;
L’enfant de choeur Coquelicot
Regardait ces fileuses sombres
Faire dans un coin leur tricot.

Les joncs, que coudoyait sans morgue
La violette, humble prélat,
Attendaient, pour jouer de l’orgue,
Qu’un bouc ou qu’un moine bêlât.

Au fond s’ouvrait une chapelle
Qu’on évitait avec horreur;
C’est là qu’habite avec sa pelle
Le noir scarabée enterreur.

Mon pas troubla l’église fée;
Je m’aperçus qu’on m’écoutait.
L’églantine dit: C’est Orphée.
La ronce dit: C’est Colletet.

III
Saison des semailles. Le soir

C’est le moment crépusculaire.
J’admire, assis sous un portail,
Ce reste de jour dont s’éclaire
La dernière heure du travail.

Dans les terres, de nuit baignées,
Je contemple, ému, les haillons
D’un vieillard qui jette à poignées
La moisson future aux sillons.

Sa haute silhouette noire
Domine les profonds labours.
On sent à quel point il doit croire
À la fuite utile des jours.

Il marche dans la plaine immense,
Va, vient, lance la graine au loin,
Rouvre sa main, et recommence,
Et je médite, obscur témoin,

Pendant que, déployant ses voiles,
L’ombre, où se mêle une rumeur,
Semble élargir jusqu’aux étoiles
Le geste auguste du semeur.

II

OISEAUX ET ENFANTS

I

Oh! les charmants oiseaux joyeux!
Comme ils maraudent! comme ils pillent!
Où va ce tas de petits gueux
Que tous les souffles éparpillent?

Ils s’en vont au clair firmament;
Leur voix raille, leur bec lutine;
Ils font rire éternellement
La grande nature enfantine.

Ils vont aux bois, ils vont aux champs,
À nos toits remplis de mensonges,
Avec des cris, avec des chants,
Passant, fuyant, pareils aux songes.

Comme ils sont près du Dieu vivant
Et de l’aurore fraîche et douce,
Ces gais bohémiens du vent
N’amassent rien qu’un peu de mousse.

Toute la terre est sous leurs yeux;
Dieu met, pour ces purs êtres frêles,
Un triomphe mystérieux
Dans la légèreté des ailes.

Atteignent-ils les astres? Non.
Mais ils montent jusqu’aux nuages.
Vers le rêveur, leur compagnon,
Ils vont, familiers et sauvages.

La grâce est tout leur mouvement,
La volupté toute leur vie;
Pendant qu’ils volent vaguement
La feuillée immense est ravie.

L’oiseau va moins haut que Psyché.
C’est l’ivresse dans la nuée.
Vénus semble l’avoir lâché
De sa ceinture dénouée.

Il habite le demi-jour;

Le plaisir est sa loi secrète.
C’est du temple que sort l’amour,
C’est du nid que vient l’amourette.

L’oiseau s’enfuit dans l’infini
Et s’y perd comme un son de lyre.
Avec sa queue il dit nenni
Comme Jeanne avec son sourire.

Que lui faut-il? un réséda,
Un myrte, un ombre, une cachette.
Esprit, tu voudrais Velléda;
Oiseau, tu chercherais Fanchette.

Colibri, comme Ithuriel,
Appartient à la zone bleue.
L’ange est de la cité du ciel;
Les oiseaux sont de la banlieue.

II

Une alcôve au soleil levant

L’humble chambre a l’air de sourire;
Un bouquet orne un vieux bahut;
Cet intérieur ferait dire
Aux prêtres: Paix! aux femmes: Chut!

Au fond une alcôve se creuse.
Personne. On n’entre ni ne sort.
Surveillance mystérieuse!
L’aube regarde: un enfant dort.

Une petite en ce coin sombre
Était là dans un berceau blanc,
Ayant je ne sais quoi dans l’ombre
De confiant et de tremblant.

Elle étreignait dans sa main calme
Un grelot d’argent qui penchait;
L’innocence au ciel tient la palme
Et sur la terre le hochet.

Comme elle sommeille! Elle ignore
Le bien, le mal, le cœur, les sens,
Son rêve est un sentier d’aurore
Dont les anges sont les passants.

Son bras, par instants, sans secousse,
Se déplace, charmant et pur;
Sa respiration est douce
Comme une mouche dans l’azur.

Le regard de l’aube la couvre;
Rien n’est auguste et triomphant
Comme cet œil de Dieu qui s’ouvre
Sur les yeux fermés de l’enfant.

III

Comédie dans les feuilles

Au fond du parc qui se délabre,
Vieux, désert, mais encor charmant
Quand la lune, obscur candélabre,
S’allume en son écroulement,

Un moineau-franc, que rien ne gêne,
A son grenier, tout grand ouvert,
Au cinquième étage d’un chêne
Qu’avril vient de repeindre en vert.

Un saule pleureur se hasarde
À gémir sur le doux gazon,
À quelques pas de la mansarde
Où ricane ce polisson.

Ce saule ruisselant se penche;
Un petit lac est à ses pieds,
Où tous ses rameaux, branche à branche,
Sont correctement copiés.

Tout en visitant sa coquine
Dans le nid par l’aube doré,
L’oiseau rit du saule, et taquine
Ce bon vieux lakiste éploré.

Il crie à toutes les oiselles
Qu’il voit dans les feuilles sautant:
 Venez donc voir, mesdemoiselles!
Ce saule a pleuré cet étang.

Il s’abat dans son tintamarre
Sur le lac qu’il ose insulter:
 Est-elle bête cette mare!
Elle ne sait que répéter.

Ô mare, tu n’es qu’une ornière.
Tu rabâches ton saule. Allons,
Change donc un peu de manière.
Ces vieux rameaux-là sont très longs.

Ta géorgique n’est pas drôle.
Sous prétexte qu’on est miroir,
Nous faire le matin un saule
Pour nous le refaire le soir!

C’est classique, cela m’assomme.
Je préférerais qu’on se tût.
Çà, ton bon saule est un bonhomme;
Les saules sont de l’institut.

Je vois d’ici bâiller la truite.

Mare, c’est triste, et je t’en veux
D’être échevelée à la suite
D’un vieux qui n’a plus de cheveux.

Invente-nous donc quelque chose!
Calque, mais avec abandon.
Je suis fille, fais une rose,
Je suis âne, fais un chardon.

Aie une idée, un iris jaune,
Un bleu nénuphar triomphant!
Sapristi! Il est temps qu’un faune
Fasse à ta naïade un enfant. -

Puis il s’adresse à la linotte:
 Vois-tu, ce saule, en ce beau lieu,
A pour état de prendre en note
Le diable à côté du bon Dieu.

De là son deuil. Il est possible
Que tout soit mal, ô ma catin;
L’oiseau sert à l’homme de cible,
L’homme sert de cible au destin;

Mais moi, j’aime mieux, sans envie,
Errer de bosquet en bosquet,
Corbleu, que de passer ma vie
À remplir de pleurs un baquet! -

Le saule à la morne posture,
Noir comme le bois des gibets,
Se tait, et la mère nature
Sourit dans l’ombre aux quolibets

Que jette, à travers les vieux marbres,
Les quinconces, les buis, les eaux,
À cet Héraclite des arbres

Ce Démocrite des oiseaux.

IV

Les enfants lisent, troupe blonde;
Ils épellent, je les entends;
Et le maître d'école gronde
Dans la lumière du printemps.

J'aperçois l'école entrouverte;
Et je rôde au bord des marais;
Toute la grande saison verte
Frissonne au loin dans les forêts.

Tout rit, tout chante; c'est la fête
De l'infini que nous voyons;
La beauté des fleurs semble faite
Avec la candeur des rayons.

J'épelle aussi moi; je me penche
Sur l'immense livre joyeux;
Ô champs, quel vers que la pervenche!
Quelle strophe que l'aigle, ô cieux!

Mais, mystère! Rien n'est sans tache.
Rien! - Qui peut dire par quels noeuds
La végétation rattache
Le lys chaste au chardon hargneux?

Tandis que là-bas siffle un merle,
La sarcelle, des roseaux plats,
Sort, ayant au bec une perle;
Cette perle agonise, hélas!

C'est le poisson qui, tout à l'heure,
Poursuivait l'aragne, courant
Sur sa bleue et vague demeure,

Sinistre monde transparent.

Un coup de fusil dans la haie,
Abois d’un chien; c’est le chasseur.
Et, pensif, je sens une plaie
Parmi toute cette douceur.

Et, sous l’herbe pressant la fange,
Triste passant de ce beau lieu,
Je songe au mal, énigme étrange,
Faute d’orthographe de Dieu.

III

LIBERTÉ, ÉGALITÉ, FRATERNITÉ

I

Depuis six mille ans la guerre
Plaît aux peuples querelleurs,
Et Dieu perd son temps à faire
Les étoiles et les fleurs.

Les conseils du ciel immense,
Du lys pur, du nid doré,
N’ôtent aucune démence
Du coeur de l’homme effaré.

Les carnages, les victoires,
Voilà notre grand amour;
Et les multitudes noires
Ont pour grelot le tambour.

La gloire, sous ses chimères
Et sous ses chars triomphants,
Met toutes les pauvres mères
Et tous les petits enfants.

Notre bonheur est farouche;
C’est de dire: Allons! mourons!
Et c’est d’avoir à la bouche
La salive des clairons.

L’acier luit, les bivouacs fument;
Pâles, nous nous déchaînons;
Les sombres âmes s’allument
Aux lumières des canons.

Et cela pour des altesses
Qui, vous à peine enterrés,
Se feront des politesses
Pendant que vous pourrirez,

Et que, dans le champ funeste,
Les chacals et les oiseaux,
Hideux, iront voir s’il reste
De la chair après vos os!

Aucun peuple ne tolère
Qu’un autre vive à côté;
Et l’on souffle la colère
Dans notre imbécillité.

C’est un Russe! Égorge, assomme.
Un Croate! Feu roulant.
C’est juste. Pourquoi cet homme
Avait-il un habit blanc?

Celui-ci, je le supprime
Et m’en vais, le coeur serein,
Puisqu’il a commis le crime
De naître à droite du Rhin.

Rosbach! Waterloo! Vengeance!
L’homme, ivre d’un affreux bruit,

N’a plus d’autre intelligence
Que le massacre et la nuit.

On pourrait boire aux fontaines,
Prier dans l’ombre à genoux,
Aimer, songer sous les chênes;
Tuer son frère est plus doux.

On se hache, on se harponne,
On court par monts et par vaux;
L’épouvante se cramponne
Du poing aux crins des chevaux.

Et l’aube est là sur la plaine!
Oh! j’admire, en vérité,
Qu’on puisse avoir de la haine
Quand l’alouette a chanté.

II

Le vrai dans le vin

Jean Sévère était fort ivre.
Ô barrière! ô lieu divin
Où Surène nous délivre
Avec l’azur de son vin!

Un faune habitant d’un antre,
Sous les pampres de l’été,
Aurait approuvé son ventre
Et vénéré sa gaieté.

Il était beau de l’entendre.
On voit, quand cet homme rit,
Chacun des convives tendre
Comme un verre son esprit.

À travers les mille choses

Qu’on dit parmi les chansons,
Tandis qu’errent sous les roses
Les filles et les garçons,

On parla d’une bataille;
Deux peuples, russe et prussien,
Sont hachés par la mitraille;
Les deux rois se portent bien.

Chacun de ces deux bons princes
(De là tous leurs différends)
Trouve ses États trop minces
Et ceux du voisin trop grands.

Les peuples, eux, sont candides;
Tout se termine à leur gré
Par un dôme d’Invalides
Plein d’infirmes et doré.

Les rois font pour la victoire
Un hospice, où le guerrier
Ira boiter dans la gloire,
Borgne, et coiffé d’un laurier.

Nous admirions; mais, farouche,
En nous voyant tous béats,
Jean Sévère ouvrit la bouche
Et dit ces alinéas:

“ Le pauvre genre humain pleure,
“ Nos pas sont tremblants et courts,
“ Je suis très ivre, et c’est l’heure
“ De faire un sage discours.

“ Le penseur joint sous la treille
“ La logique à la boisson;
“ Le sage, après la bouteille,

“ Doit déboucher la raison.

“ Faire, au lieu des deux armées,
“ Battre les deux généraux,
“ Diminuerait les fumées
“ Et grandirait les héros.

“ Que me sert le dithyrambe
“ Qu’on va chantant devant eux,
“ Et que Dieu m’ait fait ingambe
“ Si les rois me font boiteux?

“ Ils ne me connaissent guère
“ S’ils pensent qu’il me suffit
“ D’avoir les coups de la guerre
“ Quand ils en ont le profit.

“ Foin des beaux portails de marbre
“ De la Flèche et de Saint-Cyr!
“ Lorsqu’avril fait pousser l’arbre,
“ Je n’éprouve aucun plaisir,

“ En voyant la branche, où flambe
“ L’aurore qui m’éveilla,
“ À dire: “ C’est une jambe
“ Peut-être qui me vient là!”

“ L’invalide altier se traîne,
“ Du poids d’un bras déchargé;
“ Mais moi je n’ai nulle haine
“ Pour tous les membres que j’ai.

“ Recevoir des coups de sabre,
“ Choir sous les pieds furieux
“ D’un escadron qui se cabre,
“ C’est charmant; boire vaut mieux.

“ Plutôt gambader sur l’herbe
“ Que d’être criblé de plomb!
“ Le nez coupé, c’est superbe;
“ J’aime autant mon nez trop long.

“ Décoré par mon monarque,
“ Je m’en reviens, ébloui,
“ Mais bancal, et je remarque
“ Qu’il a ses deux pattes, lui.

“ Manchot, fier, l’hymen m’attire;
“ Je vois celle qui me plaît
“ En lorgner d’autres et dire:
“ Je l’aimerais mieux complet.”

“ Fils, c’est vrai, je ne savoure
“ Qu’en douteur voltairien
“ Cet effet de ma bravoure
“ De n’être plus bon à rien.

“ La jambe de bois est noire;
“ La guerre est un dur sentier;
“ Quant à ce qu’on nomme gloire,
“ La gloire, c’est d’être entier.

“ L’infirme adosse son râble,
“ En trébuchant, aux piliers;
“ C’est une chose admirable,
“ Fils, que d’user deux souliers.

“ Fils, j’aimerais que mon prince,
“ En qui je mets mon orgueil,
“ Pût gagner une province
“ Sans me faire perdre un oeil.

“ Un discours de cette espèce
“ Sortant de mon hiatus,

“ Prouve que la langue épaisse
“ Ne fait pas l’esprit obtus.”

Ainsi parla Jean Sévère,
Ayant dans son coeur sans fiel
La justice, et dans son verre
Un vin bleu comme le ciel.

L’ivresse mit dans sa tête
Ce bon sens qu’il nous versa.
Quelquefois Silène prête
Son âne à Sancho Pança.

III

Célébration du 14 Juillet

Dans la forêt

Qu’il est joyeux aujourd’hui
Le chêne aux rameaux sans nombre,
Mystérieux point d’appui
De toute la forêt sombre!

Comme quand nous triomphons,
Il frémit, l’arbre civique;
Il répand à plis profonds
Sa grande ombre magnifique.

D’où lui vient cette gaieté?
D’où vient qu’il vibre et se dresse,
Et semble faire à l’été
Une plus fière caresse?

C’est le quatorze juillet.
À pareil jour, sur la terre
La liberté s’éveillait
Et riait dans le tonnerre.

Peuple, à pareil jour râlait
Le passé, ce noir pirate;
Paris prenait au collet
La Bastille scélérate.

À pareil jour, un décret
Chassait la nuit de la France,
Et l’infini s’éclairait
Du côté de l’espérance.

Tous les ans, à pareil jour,
Le chêne au Dieu qui nous crée
Envoie un frisson d’amour,
Et rit à l’aube sacrée.

Il se souvient, tout joyeux,
Comme on lui prenait ses branches!
L’âme humaine dans les cieux,
Fière, ouvrait ses ailes blanches.

Car le vieux chêne est gaulois:
Il hait la nuit et le cloître;
Il ne sait pas d’autres lois
Que d’être grand et de croître.

Il est grec, il est romain;
Sa cime monte, âpre et noire,
Au-dessus du genre humain
Dans une lueur de gloire.

Sa feuille, chère aux soldats,
Va, sans peur et sans reproche,
Du front d’Epaminondas
À l’uniforme de Hoche.

Il est le vieillard des bois;

Il a, richesse de l’âge,
Dans sa racine Autrefois,
Et Demain dans son feuillage.

Les rayons, les vents, les eaux,
Tremblent dans toutes ses fibres;
Comme il a besoin d’oiseaux,
Il aime les peuples libres.

C’est son jour. Il est content.
C’est l’immense anniversaire.
Paris était haletant.
La lumière était sincère.

Au loin roulait le tambour... -
Jour béni! jour populaire,
Où l’on vit un chant d’amour
Sortir d’un cri de colère!

Il tressaille, aux vents bercé,
Colosse où dans l’ombre austère
L’avenir et le passé
Mêlent leur double mystère.

Les éclipses, s’il en est,
Ce vieux naïf les ignore.
Il sait que tout ce qui naît,
L’oeuf muet, le vent sonore,

Le nid rempli de bonheur,
La fleur sortant des décombres,
Est la parole d’honneur
Que Dieu donne aux vivants sombres.

Il sait, calme et souriant,
Sérénité formidable!
Qu’un peuple est un orient,

Et que l’astre est imperdable.

Il me salue en passant,
L’arbre auguste et centenaire;
Et dans le bois innocent
Qui chante et que je vénère,

Étalant mille couleurs,
Autour du chêne superbe
Toutes les petites fleurs
Font leur toilette dans l’herbe.

L’aurore aux pavots dormants
Verse sa coupe enchantée;
Le lys met ses diamants;
La rose est décolletée.

Aux chenilles de velours
Le jasmin tend ses aiguières;
L’arum conte ses amours,
Et la garance ses guerres.

Le moineau-franc, gai, taquin,
Dans le houx qui se pavoise,
D’un refrain républicain
Orne sa chanson grivoise.

L’ajonc rit près du chemin;
Tous les buissons des ravines
Ont leur bouquet à la main;
L’air est plein de voix divines.

Et ce doux monde charmant,
Heureux sous le ciel prospère,
Épanoui, dit gaiement:
C’est la fête du grand-père.

IV
Souvenir des vieilles guerres

Pour la France et la république,
En Navarre nous nous battions.
Là parfois la balle est oblique;
Tous les rocs sont des bastions.

Notre chef, une barbe grise,
Le capitaine, était tombé,
Ayant reçu près d’une église
Le coup de fusil d’un abbé.

La blessure parut malsaine.
C’était un vieux et fier garçon,
En France, à Marine-sur-Seine,
On peut voir encor sa maison.

On emporta le capitaine
Dont on sentait plier les os;
On l’assit près d’une fontaine
D’où s’envolèrent les oiseaux.

Nous lui criâmes: Guerre! fête!
Forçons le camp! prenons le fort! -
Mais il laissa pencher sa tête,
Et nous vîmes qu’il était mort.

L’aide-major avec sa trousse
N’y put rien faire et s’en alla;
Nous ramassâmes de la mousse;
De grands vieux chênes étaient là.

On fit au mort une jonchée
De fleurs et de branches de houx;
Sa bouche n’était point fâchée,
Son oeil intrépide était doux.

L’abbé fut pris. Qu’on nous l’amène!
Qu’il meure! - On forma le carré;
Mais on vit que le capitaine
Voulait faire grâce au curé.

On chassa du pied le jésuite;
Et le mort semblait dire: Assez!
Quoiqu’il dût regretter la suite
De nos grands combats commencés.

Il avait sans doute à Marine
Quelques bons vieux amours tremblants;
Nous trouvâmes sur sa poitrine
Une boucle de cheveux blancs.

Une fosse lui fut creusée
À la baïonnette, en priant;
Puis on laissa sous la rosée
Dormir ce brave souriant.

Le bataillon reprit sa marche,
À la brune, entre chien et loup;
Nous marchions. Les ponts n’ont qu’une arche.
Des pâtres au loin sont debout.

La montagne est assez maussade;
La nuit est froide et le jour chaud;
Et l’on rencontre l’embrassade
Des grands ours de huit pieds de haut.

L’homme en ces monts naît trabucaire;
Prendre et pendre est tout l’alphabet;
Et tout se règle avec l’équerre
Que font les deux bras du gibet.

On est bandit en paix, en guerre

On s’appelle guerillero.
Le peuple au roi laisse tout faire;
Cet ânier mène ce taureau.

Dans les ravins, dans les rigoles
Que creusent les eaux et les ans,
De longues files d’espingoles
Rampaient comme des vers luisants.

Nous tenions tous nos armes prêtes
À cause des pièges du soir;
Le croissant brillait sur nos têtes.
Et nous, pensifs, nous croyions voir,

Tout en cheminant dans la plaine
Vers Pampelune et Teruel
Le hausse-col du capitaine
Qui reparaissait dans le ciel.

L’ascension humaine

Tandis qu’au loin des nuées,
Qui semblent des paradis,
Dans le bleu sont remuées,
Je t’écoute, et tu me dis:

“ Quelle idée as-tu de l’homme,
“ De croire qu’il aide Dieu?
“ L’homme est-il donc l’économe
“ De l’eau, de l’air et du feu?

“ Est-ce que, dans son armoire,
“ Tu l’aurais vu de tes yeux
“ Serrer les rouleaux de moire
“ Que l’aube déploie aux cieux?

“ Est-ce lui qui gonfle et ride
“ La vague, et lui dit: Assez!
“ Est-ce lui qui tient la bride
“ Des éléments hérissés?

“ Sait-il le secret de l’herbe?
“ Parle-t-il au nid vivant?
“ Met-il sa note superbe
“ Dans le noir clairon du vent?

“ La marée âpre et sonore
“ Craint-elle son éperon?
“ Connaît-il le météore?
“ Comprend-il le moucheron?

“ L’homme aider Dieu! lui, ce songe,
“ Ce spectre en fuite et tremblant!
“ Est-ce grâce à son éponge
“ Que le cygne reste blanc?

“ Le fait veut, l’homme acquiesce.
“ Je ne vois pas que sa main
“ Découpe à l’emporte-pièce
“ Les pétales du jasmin.

“ Donne-t-il l’odeur aux sauges,
“ Parce qu’il sait faire un trou
“ Pour mêler le grès des Vosges
“ Au salpêtre du Pérou?

“ Règle-t-il l’onde et la brise,
“ Parce qu’il disséquera
“ De l’argile qu’il a prise
“ Près de Rio-Madera?

“ Ôte Dieu; puis imagine,
“ Essaie, invente; épaissis

“ L’idéal subtil d’Égine
“ Par les dogmes d’Éleusis;

“ Soude Orphée à Lamettrie;
“ Joins, pour ne pas être à court,
“ L’école d’Alexandrie
“ À l’école d’Edimbourg;

“ Va du conclave au concile,
“ D’Anaximandre à Destutt;
“ Dans quelque cuve fossile
“ Exprime tout l’institut;

“ Démaillote la momie;
“ Presse Œdipe et Montyon;
“ Mets en pleine académie
“ Le sphinx à la question;

“ Fouille le doute et la grâce;
“ Amalgame en ton guano
“ À la Sybaris d’Horace
“ Les Chartreux de saint Bruno;

“ Combine Genève et Rome;
“ Fais mettre par ton fermier
“ Toutes les vertus de l’homme
“ Dans une fosse à fumier;

“ Travaille avec patience
“ En puisant au monde entier;
“ Prends pour pilon la science
“ Et l’abîme pour mortier;

“ Va, forge! je te défie
“ De faire de ton savoir
“ Et de ta philosophie
“ Sortir un grain de blé noir!

“ Dieu, de sa droite, étreint, fauche,
“ Sème, et tout est rajeuni;
“ L’homme n’est qu’une main gauche
“ Tâtonnant dans l’infini.

“ Aux heures mystérieuses,
“ Quand l’eau se change en miroir,
“ Rôdes-tu sous les yeuses,
“ L’esprit plongé dans le soir?

“ Te dis-tu: Qu’est-ce que l’homme? -
“ Sonde, ami, sa nullité;
“ Cherche, de quel chiffre, en somme,
“ Il accroît l’éternité!

“ L’homme est vain. Pourquoi, poète,
“ Ne pas le voir tel qu’il est,
“ Dans le sépulcre squelette,
“ Et sur la terre valet!

“ L’homme est nu, stérile, blême,
“ Plus frêle qu’un passereau;
“ C’est le puits du néant même
“ Qui s’ouvre dans ce zéro.

“ Va, Dieu crée et développe
“ Un lion très réussi,
“ Un bélier, une antilope,
“ Sans le concours de Poissy.

“ Il fait l’aile de la mouche
“ Du doigt dont il façonna
“ L’immense taureau farouche
“ De la Sierra Morena;

“ Et dans l’herbe et la rosée

“ Sa génisse au fier sabot
“ Règne, et n’est point éclipsée
“ Par la vache Sarlabot.

“ Oui, la graine dans l’espace
“ Vole à travers le brouillard,
“ Et de toi le vent se passe, “ Semoir Jacquet-Robillard!

“ Ce laboureur, la tempête,
“ N’a pas, dans les gouffres noirs,
“ Besoin que Grignon lui prête
“ Sa charrue à trois versoirs.

“ Germinal, dans l’atmosphère,
“ Soufflant sur les prés fleuris,
“ Sait encor mieux son affaire
“ Qu’un maraîcher de Paris.

“ Quand Dieu veut teindre de flamme
“ Le scarabée ou la fleur,
“ Je ne vois point qu’il réclame
“ La lampe de l’émailleur.

“ L’homme peut se croire prêtre,
“ L’homme peut se dire roi,
“ Je lui laisse son peut-être,
“ Mais je doute, quant à moi,

“ Que Dieu, qui met mon image
“ Au lac où je prends mon bain,
“ Fasse faire l’étamage
“ Des étangs, à Saint-Gobain.

“ Quand Dieu pose sur l’eau sombre
“ L’arc-en-ciel comme un siphon,

“ Il attelle le typhon,

“ L’hiver, l’été, mai vermeil,
“ Janvier triste, et l’engrenage

“ Le ciel, les saisons, le temps;

“ Pour combiner ces rouages
“ Précis comme l’absolu,
“ Pour que l’urne des nuages
“ Bascule au moment voulu,

“ Pour que la planète passe,
“ Tel jour, au point indiqué,
“ Pour que la mer ne s’amasse
“ Que jusqu’à l’ourlet du quai,

“ Pour que jamais la comète
“ Ne rencontre un univers,
“ Pour que l’essaim sur l’Hymète
“ Trouve en juin les lys ouverts,

“ Pour que jamais, quand approche
“ L’heure obscure où l’azur luit,
“ Une étoile ne s’accroche
“ À quelque angle de la nuit,

“ Pour que jamais les effluves
“ Les forces, le gaz, l’aimant,
“ Ne manquent aux vastes cuves
“ De l’éternel mouvement,

“ Pour régler ce jeu sublime,
“ Cet équilibre béni,
“ Ces balancements d’abîme,
“ Ces écluses d’infini,

“ Pour que, courbée ou grandie,
“ L’oeuvre marche sans un pli,
“ Je crois peu qu’il étudie
“ La machine de Marly!”

Ton ironie est amère,
Mais elle se trompe, ami.
Dieu compte avec l’éphémère,
Et s’appuie à la fourmi.

Dieu n’a rien fait d’inutile.
La terre, hymne où rien n’est vain,
Chante, et l’homme est le dactyle
De l’hexamètre divin.

L’homme et Dieu sont parallèles:
Dieu créant, l’homme inventant.
Dieu donne à l’homme ses ailes.
L’éternité fait l’instant.

L’homme est son auxiliaire
Pour le bien et la vertu.
L’arbre est Dieu, l’homme est le lierre;
Dieu de l’homme s’est vêtu.

Dieu s’en sert, donc il s’en aide.
L’astre apparaît dans l’éclair;

Zeus est dans Archimède,
Et Jéhovah dans Képler.

Jusqu’à ce que l’homme meure,
Il va toujours en avant.
Sa pensée a pour demeure
L’immense idéal vivant.

Dans tout génie il s’incarne;
Le monde est sous son orteil;
Et s’il n’a qu’une lucarne,
Il y pose le soleil.

Aux terreurs inabordable,
Coupant tous les fatals noeuds,
L’homme marche formidable,
Tranquille et vertigineux.

De limon il se fait lave,
Et colosse d’embryon;
Epictète était esclave,
Molière était histrion,

Ésope était saltimbanque,
Qu’importe! - il n’est arrêté
Que lorsque le pied lui manque
Au bord de l’éternité.

L’homme n’est pas autre chose
Que le prête-nom de Dieu.
Quoi qu’il fasse, il sent la cause
Impénétrable, au milieu.

Phidias cisèle Athènes;
Michel-Ange est surhumain;
Cyrus, Rhamsès, capitaines,
Ont une flamme à la main;

Euclide trouve le mètre,
Le rythme sort d’Amphion;
Jésus-Christ vient tout soumettre,
Même le glaive, au rayon;

Brutus fait la délivrance;
Platon fait la liberté;
Jeanne d’Arc sacre la France
Avec sa virginité;

Dans le bloc des erreurs noires
Voltaire ses coins;
Luther brise les mâchoires
De Rome entre ses deux poings;

Dante ouvre l’ombre et l’anime;
Colomb fend l’océan bleu... -
C’est Dieu sous un pseudonyme,
C’est Dieu masqué, mais c’est Dieu.

L’homme est le fanal du monde.
Ce puissant esprit banni
Jette une lueur profonde
Jusqu’au seuil de l’infini.

Cent carrefours se partagent
Ce chercheur sans point d’appui;
Tous les problèmes étagent
Leurs sombres voûtes sur lui.

Il dissipe les ténèbres;
Il montre dans le lointain
Les promontoires funèbres
De l’abîme et du destin.

Il fait voir les vagues marches

Du sépulcre, et sa clarté
Blanchit les premières arches
Du pont de l’éternité.

Sous l’effrayante caverne
Il rayonne, et l’horreur fuit.
Quelqu’un tient cette lanterne;
Mais elle t’éclaire, ô nuit!

Le progrès est en litige
Entre l’homme et Jéhovah;
La greffe ajoute à la tige;
Dieu cacha, l’homme trouva.

De quelque nom qu’on la nomme,
La science au vaste voeu
Occupe le pied de l’homme
À faire les pas de Dieu.

La mer tient l’homme et l’isole,
Et l’égare loin du port;
Par le doigt de la boussole
Il se fait montrer le nord.

Dans sa morne casemate,
Penn rend ce damné meilleur;
Jenner dit: Va-t’en, stigmate!
Jackson dit: Va-t’en, douleur!

Dieu fait l’épi, nous la gerbe;
Il est grand, l’homme est fécond;
Dieu créa le premier verbe
Et Gutenberg le second.

La pesanteur, la distance,
Contre l’homme aux luttes prêt,
Prononcent une sentence;

Montgolfier casse l’arrêt.

Tous les anciens maux tenaces,
Hurlant sous le ciel profond,
Ne sont plus que des menaces
De fantômes qui s’en vont.

Le tonnerre au bruit difforme
Gronde... - on raille sans péril
La marionnette énorme
Que Franklin tient par un fil.

Nemrod était une bête
Chassant aux hommes, parmi
La démence et la tempête
De l’ancien monde ennemi.

Dracon était un cerbère
Qui grince encor sous le ciel
Avec trois têtes: Tibère,
Caïphe et Machiavel.

Nemrod s’appelait la Force,
Dracon s’appelait la Loi;
On les sentait sous l’écorce
Du vieux prêtre et du vieux roi.

Tous deux sont morts. Plus de haines!
Oh! ce fut un puissant bruit
Quand se rompirent les chaînes
Qui liaient l’homme à la nuit!

L’homme est l’appareil austère
Du progrès mystérieux;
Dieu fait par l’homme sur terre
Ce qu’il fait par l’ange aux cieux.

Dieu sur tous les êtres pose
Son reflet prodigieux,
Créant le bien par la chose,
Créant par l’homme le mieux.

La nature était terrible,
Sans pitié, presque sans jour;
L’homme la vanne en son crible,
Et n’y laisse que l’amour.

Toutes sortes de lois sombres
Semblaient sortir du destin;
Le mal heurtait aux décombres
Le pied de l’homme incertain.

Pendant qu’à travers l’espace
Elle roule en hésitant;
Un flot de ténèbres passe
Sur la terre à chaque instant;

Mais des foyers y flamboient,
Tout s’éclaircit, on le sent,
Et déjà les anges voient
Ce noir globe blanchissant.

Sous l’urne des jours sans nombre
Depuis qu’il suit son chemin,
La décroissance de l’ombre
Vient des yeux du genre humain.

L’autel n’ose plus proscrire;
La misère est morte enfin;
Pain à tous! on voit sourire
Les sombres dents de la faim.

L’erreur tombe; on l’évacue;
Les dogmes sont muselés;

La guerre est une vaincue;
Joie aux fleurs et paix aux blés!

L'ignorance est terrassée;
Ce monstre, à demi dormant,
Avait la nuit pour pensée
Et pour voix le bégaiement.

Oui, voici qu'enfin recule
L'affreux groupe des fléaux!
L'homme est l'invincible hercule,
Le balayeur du chaos.

Sa massue est la justice,
Sa colère est la bonté.
Le ciel s'appuie au solstice
Et l'homme à sa volonté.

Il veut. Tout cède et tout plie.
Il construit quand il détruit;
Et sa science est remplie
Des lumières de la nuit.

Il enchaîne les désastres,
Il tord la rébellion,
Il est sublime; et les astres
Sont sur sa peau de lion.

VI
Le grand siècle

Ce siècle a la forme
D'un monstrueux char.
Sa croissance énorme
Sous un nain césar,

Son air de prodige,

Sa gloire qui ment,
Mêlent le vertige
À l’écrasement.

Louvois pour ministre,
Scarron pour griffon,
C’est un chant sinistre
Sur un air bouffon.

Sur sa double roue
Le grand char descend;
L’une est dans la boue,
L’autre est dans le sang.

La Mort au carrosse
Attelle, - où va-t-il? -
Lavrillière atroce,
Roquelaure vil.

Comme un geai dans l’arbre,
Le roi s’y tient fier;
Son coeur est de marbre,
Son ventre est de chair.

On a, pour sa nuque
Et son front vermeil,
Fait une perruque
Avec le soleil.

Il règne et végète,
Effrayant zéro
Sur qui se projette
L’ombre du bourreau.

Ce trône est la tombe;
Et sur le pavé
Quelque chose en tombe

Qu’on n’a point lavé.

VII
Égalité

Dans un grand jardin en cinq actes,
Conforme aux préceptes du goût,
Où les branches étaient exactes,
Où les fleurs se tenaient debout,

Quelques clématites sauvages
Poussaient, pauvres bourgeons pensifs,
Parmi les nobles esclavages
Des buis, des myrtes et des ifs.

Tout près, croissait, sur la terrasse
Pleine de dieux bien copiés,
Un rosier de si grande race
Qu’il avait du marbre à ses pieds.

La rose sur les clématites
Fixait ce regard un peu sec
Que Rachel jette à ces petites
Qui font le choeur du drame grec.

Ces fleurs, tremblantes et pendantes,
Dont Zéphyre tenait le fil,
Avaient des airs de confidentes
Autour de la reine d’avril.

La haie, où s’ouvraient leurs calices
Et d’où sortaient ces humbles fleurs,
Écoutait du bord des coulisses
Le rire des bouvreuils siffleurs.

Parmi les brises murmurantes
Elle n’osait lever le front;

Cette mère de figurantes
Était un peu honteuse au fond.

Et je m’écriai: Fleurs éparses
Près de la rose en ce beau lieu,
Non, vous n’êtes pas les comparses
Du grand théâtre du bon Dieu.

Tout est de Dieu l’oeuvre visible.
La rose, en ce drame fécond,
Dit le premier vers, c’est possible,
Mais le bleuet dit le second.

Les esprits vrais, que l’aube arrose,
Ne donnent point dans ce travers
Que les campagnes sont en prose
Et que les jardins sont en vers.

Avril dans les ronces se vautre,
Le faux art que l’ennui couva
Lâche le critique Lenôtre
Sur le poète Jéhovah.

Mais cela ne fait pas grand-chose
À l’immense sérénité,
Au ciel, au calme grandiose
Du philosophe et de l’été.

Qu’importe! croissez, fleurs vermeilles!
Soeurs, couvrez la terre aux flancs bruns,
L’hésitation des abeilles
Dit l’égalité des parfums.

Croissez, plantes, tiges sans nombre!
Du verbe vous êtes les mots.
Les immenses frissons de l’ombre
Ont besoin de tous vos rameaux.

Laissez, broussailles étoilées,
Bougonner le vieux goût boudeur;
Croissez, et sentez-vous mêlées
À l’inexprimable grandeur!

Rien n’est haut et rien n’est infime.
Une goutte d’eau pèse un ciel;
Et le mont Blanc n’a pas de cime
Sous le pouce de l’Éternel.

Toute fleur est un premier rôle;
Un ver peut être une clarté;
L’homme et l’astre ont le même pôle;
L’infini, c’est l’égalité.

L’incommensurable harmonie,
Si tout n’avait pas sa beauté,
Serait insultée et punie
Dans tout être déshérité.

Dieu, dont les cieux sont les pilastres,
Dans son grand regard jamais las
Confond l’éternité des astres
Avec la saison des lilas.

Les prés, où chantent les cigales,
Et l’Ombre ont le même cadran.
Ô fleurs, vous êtes les égales
Du formidable Aldébaran.

L’intervalle n’est qu’apparence.
Ô bouton d’or tremblant d’émoi,
Dieu ne fait pas de différence
Entre le zodiaque et toi.

L’être insondable est sans frontière.

Il est juste, étant l’unité.
La création tout entière
Attendrit sa paternité.

Dieu, qui fit le souffle et la roche,
Oeil de feu qui voit nos combats,
Oreille d’ombre qui s’approche
De tous les murmures d’en bas,

Dieu, le père qui mit dans les fêtes
Dans les éthers, dans les sillons,
Qui fit pour l’azur les comètes
Et pour l’herbe les papillons,

Et qui veut qu’une âme accompagne
Les êtres de son flanc sortis,
Que l’éclair vole à la montagne
Et la mouche au myosotis,

Dieu, parmi les mondes en fuite,
Sourit, dans les gouffres du jour,
Quand une fleur toute petite
Lui conte son premier amour.

VIII
La méridienne du lion

Le lion dort, seul sous sa voûte.
Il dort de ce puissant sommeil
De la sieste, auquel s’ajoute,
Comme un poids sombre, le soleil.

Les déserts, qui de loin écoutent,
Respirent; le maître est rentré.
Car les solitudes redoutent
Ce promeneur démesuré.

Son souffle soulève son ventre;
Son oeil de brume est submergé,
Il dort sur le pavé de l’antre,
Formidablement allongé.

La paix est sur son grand visage,
Et l’oubli même, car il dort.
Il a l’altier sourcil du sage
Et l’ongle tranquille du fort.

Midi sèche l’eau des citernes;
Rien du sommeil ne le distrait;
Sa gueule ressemble aux cavernes,
Et sa crinière à la forêt.

Il entrevoit des monts difformes,
Des Ossas et des Pélions,
À travers les songes énormes
Que peuvent faire les lions.

Tout se tait sur la roche plate
Où ses pas tout à l’heure erraient.
S’il remuait sa grosse patte,
Que de mouches s’envoleraient!

IV

NIVÔSE

I

Va-t’en, me dit la bise.
C’est mon tour de chanter. -
Et, tremblante, surprise,
N’osant pas résister,

Fort décontenancée

Devant un Quos ego,
Ma chanson est chassée
Par cette virago.

Pluie. On me congédie
Partout, sur tous les tons.
Fin de la comédie.
Hirondelles, partons.

Grêle et vent. La ramée
Tord ses bras rabougris;
Là-bas fuit la fumée,
Blanche sur le ciel gris.

Une pâle dorure
Jaunit les coteaux froids.
Le trou de ma serrure
Me souffle sur les doigts.

II
Pendant une maladie

On dit que je suis fort malade,
Ami; j'ai déjà l'oeil terni;
Je sens la sinistre accolade
Du squelette de l'infini.

Sitôt levé, je me recouche;
Et je suis comme si j'avais
De la terre au fond de la bouche;
Je trouve le souffle mauvais.

Comme une voile entrant au havre,
Je frissonne; mes pas sont lents,
J'ai froid; la forme du cadavre,
Morne, apparaît sous mes draps blancs.

Mes mains sont en vain réchauffées;
Ma chair comme la neige fond;
Je sens sur mon front des bouffées
De quelque chose de profond.

Est-ce le vent de l’ombre obscure?
Ce vent qui sur Jésus passa!
Est-ce le grand Rien d’Épicure,
Ou le grand Tout de Spinosa?

Les médecins s’en vont moroses;
On parle bas autour de moi,
Et tout penche, et même les choses
Ont l’attitude de l’effroi.

Perdu! voilà ce qu’on murmure.
Tout mon corps vacille, et je sens
Se déclouer la sombre armure
De ma raison et de mes sens.

Je vois l’immense instant suprême
Dans les ténèbres arriver.
L’astre pâle au fond du ciel blême
Dessine son vague lever.

L’heure réelle, ou décevante,
Dresse son front mystérieux.
Ne crois pas que je m’épouvante;
J’ai toujours été curieux.

Mon âme se change en prunelle;
Ma raison sonde Dieu voilé;
Je tâte la porte éternelle,
Et j’essaie à la nuit ma clé.

C’est Dieu que le fossoyeur creuse;
Mourir, c’est l’heure de savoir;

Je dis à la mort: Vieille ouvreuse,
Je viens voir le spectacle noir.

III

À un ami

Sur l’effrayante falaise,
Mur par la vague entrouvert,
Roc sombre où fleurit à l’aise
Un charmant petit pré vert,

Ami, puisque tu me laisses
Ta maison loin des vivants
Entre ces deux allégresses,
Les grands flots et les grands vents,

Salut! merci! les fortunes
Sont fragiles, et nos temps,
Comme l’algue sous les dunes,
Sont dans l’abîme, et flottants.

Nos âmes sont des nuées
Qu’un vent pousse, âpre ou béni,
Et qui volent, dénouées,
Du côté de l’infini.

L’énorme bourrasque humaine,
Dont l’étoile est la raison,
Prend, quitte, emporte et ramène
L’espérance à l’horizon.

Cette grande onde inquiète
Dont notre siècle est meurtri
Écume et gronde, et me jette
Parfois mon nom dans un cri.

La haine sur moi s’arrête.

Ma pensée est dans ce bruit
Comme un oiseau de tempête
Parmi les oiseaux de nuit.

Pendant qu'ici je cultive
Ton champ comme tu le veux,
Dans maint journal l'invective
Grince et me prend aux cheveux.

La diatribe m'écharpe;
Je suis âne ou scélérat;
Je suis Pradon pour Laharpe,
Et pour de Maistre Marat.

Qu'importe! les coeurs sont ivres.
Les temps qui viennent feront
Ce qu'ils pourront de mes livres
Et de moi ce qu'ils voudront.

J'ai pour joie et pour merveille
De voir, dans ton pré d'Honfleur,
Trembler au poids d'une abeille
Un brin de lavande en fleur.

IV
Clôture

À mon ami ****

I
La sainte chapelle

Tu sais? tu connais ma chapelle,
C'est la maison des passereaux.
L'abeille aux offices m'appelle
En bourdonnant dans les sureaux.

Là, mon coeur prend sa nourriture.
Dans ma stalle je vais m’asseoir.
Oh! quel bénitier, la nature!
Quel cierge, l’étoile du soir!

Là, je vais prier; je m’enivre
De l’idéal dans le réel;
La fleur, c’est l’âme; et je sens vivre,
À travers la terre, le ciel.

Et la rosée est mon baptême.
Et le vrai m’apparaît! je crois.
Je dis: viens! à celle que j’aime.
Elle, moi, Dieu, nous sommes trois.

(Car j’ai dans des bribes latines
Lu que Dieu veut le nombre impair.)
Je vais chez l’aurore à matines,
Je vais à vêpres chez Vesper.

La religion naturelle
M’ouvre son livre où Job lisait,
Où luit l’astre, où la sauterelle
Saute de verset en verset.

C’est le seul temple. Tout l’anime.
Je veux Christ; un rayon descend;
Et si je demande un minime,
L’infusoire me dit: Présent.

La lumière est la sainte hostie;
Le lévite est le lys vermeil;
Là, resplendit l’eucharistie
Qu’on appelle aussi le soleil.

La bouche de la primevère
S’ouvre, et reçoit le saint rayon;

Je regarde la rose faire
Sa première communion.

II

Amour de l’eau

Je récite mon bréviaire
Dans les champs, et j’ai pour souffleur
Tantôt le jonc sur la rivière,
Tantôt la mouche dans la fleur.

Le poète aux torrents se plonge;
Il aime un roc des vents battu;
Ce qui coule ressemble au songe,
Et ce qui lave à la vertu.

Pas de ruisseau qui, sur sa rive
Où l’air jase, où germinal rit,
N’attire un bouvreuil, une grive,
Un merle, un poète, un esprit.

Le poète, assis sous l’yeuse,
Dans les fleurs, comme en un sérail,
Aime l’eau, cette paresseuse
Qui fait un si profond travail.

Que ce soit l’Erdre ou la Durance,
Pourvu que le flot soit flâneur,
Il se donne la transparence
D’une rivière pour bonheur.

Elle erre; on dirait qu’elle écoute;
Recevant de tout un tribut,
Oubliant comme lui sa route,
Et, comme lui, sachant son but.

Et sur sa berge il mène en laisse

Ode, roman, ou fabliau.
George Sand a la Gargilesse
Comme Horace avait l’Anio.

III

Le poète est un riche

Nous avons des bonnes fortunes
Avec le bleuet dans les blés;
Les halliers pleins de pâles lunes
Sont nos appartement meublés.

Nous y trouvons sous la ramée,
Où chante un pinson, gai marmot,
De l’eau, du vent, de la fumée,
Tout le nécessaire, en un mot.

Nous ne produirions rien qui vaille
Sans l’ormeau, le frêne et le houx;
L’air nous aide; et l’oiseau travaille
À nos poèmes avec nous.

Le pluvier, le geai, la colombe,
Nous accueillent dans le buisson,
Et plus d’un brin de mousse tombe
De leur nid dans notre chanson.

Nous habitons chez les pervenches
Des chambres de fleurs, à crédit;
Quand la fougère a, sous les branches,
Une idée, elle nous la dit.

L’autan, l’azur, le rameau frêle,
Nous conseillent sur les hauteurs,
Et jamais on n’a de querelle
Avec ces collaborateurs.

Nous trouvons dans les eaux courantes
Maint hémistiche, et les lacs verts,
Les prés généreux, font des rentes
De rimes à nos pauvres vers.

Mon patrimoine est la chimère,
Sillon riche, ayant pour engrais
Les vérités, d’où vient Homère,
Et les songes, d’où sort Segrais.

Le poète est propriétaire
Des rayons, des parfums, des voix;
C’est à ce songeur solitaire
Qu’appartient l’écho dans les bois.

Il est, dans le bleu, dans le rose,
Millionnaire, étant joyeux;
L’illusion étant la chose
Que l’homme possède le mieux.

C’est pour lui qu’un ver luisant rampe;
C’est pour lui que, sous le bouleau,
Le cheval de halage trempe
Par moments sa corde dans l’eau.

Sous la futaie où l’herbe est haute,
Il est le maître du logis
Autant que l’écureuil qui saute
Dans les pins par l’aube rougis.

Avec ses stances, il achète
Au bon Dieu le nuage noir,
L’astre, et le bruit de la clochette
Mêlée aux feuillages le soir.

Il achète le feu de forge,
L’écume des écueils grondants,

Le cou gonflé du rouge-gorge
Et les hymnes qui sont dedans.

Il achète le vent qui râle,
Les lichens du cloître détruit,
Et l’effraction sépulcrale
Du vitrail par l’oiseau de nuit,

Et l’espace où les souffles errent,
Et, quand hurlent les chiens méchants,
L’effroi des moutons qui se serrent
L’un contre l’autre dans les champs.

Il achète la roue obscure
Du char des songes dans l’horreur
Du ciel sombre, où rit Épicure
Et dont Horace est le doreur.

Il achète les rocs incultes,
Le mont chauve, et la quantité
D’infini qui sort des tumultes
D’un vaste branchage agité.

Il achète tous ces murmures,
Tout ce rêve, et, dans les taillis,
L’écrasement des fraises mûres
Sous les pieds nus d’Amaryllis.

Il achète un cri d’alouette,
Les diamants de l’arrosoir,
L’herbe, l’ombre et la silhouette
Des danses autour du pressoir.

Jadis la naïade à Boccace
Vendait le reflet d’un étang,
Glaïeuls, roseaux, héron, bécasse,
Pour un sonnet, payé comptant.

Le poète est une hirondelle
Qui sort des eaux, que l’air attend,
Qui laisse parfois de son aile
Tomber des larmes en chantant.

L’or du genêt, l’or de la gerbe,
Sont à lui; le monde est son champ;
Il est le possesseur superbe
De tous les haillons du couchant.

Le soir, quand luit la brume informe,
Quand les brises dans les clartés
Balancent une pourpre énorme
De nuages déchiquetés,

Quand les heures font leur descente
Dans la nue où le jour passa,
Il voit la strophe éblouissante
Pendre à ce Décroche-moi-ça.

Maïa pour lui n’est pas défunte;
Dans son vers, de pluie imbibé,
Il met la prairie; il emprunte
Souvent de l’argent à Phoebé.

Pour lui le vieux saule se creuse.
Il a tout, aimer, croire et voir.
Dans son âme mystérieuse
Il agite un vague encensoir.

IV

Notre ancienne dispute

Te souviens-tu qu’en l’âge tendre
Où tu n’étais qu’un citadin,
Tu me raillais toujours de prendre

La nature pour mon jardin?

Un jour, tu t’armas d’un air rogue,
Et moi d’accents très convaincus,
Et nous eûmes ce dialogue,
Alterné, comme dans Moschus:

TOI
“ Si tu fais ce qu’on te conseille,
“ Tu n’iras point dans ce vallon
“ Affronter l’aigreur de l’oseille
“ Et l’épigramme du frelon.

MOI “ J’irai.

TOI
La nature est morose
“ Souvent, pour l’homme fourvoyé.
“ Si l’on est baisé par la rose,
“ Par l’épine on est tutoyé.

MOI
“ Soit.

TOI
Paris à l’homme est propice.
“ Perlet joue au Gymnase, vois,
“ Ravignan prêche à Saint-Sulpice.

MOI
“ Et la fauvette chante aux bois.

TOI
“ Que viens-tu faire dans ces plaines?
“ On ne te connaît pas ici.
“ Les bêtes parfois sont vilaines,

“ L’herbe est parfois mauvaise; ainsi

“ Crois-moi, n’en franchis point la porte.
“ On n’y sait pas ton nom.

MOI
Pardon!
“ Vadius l’a dit au cloporte,
“ Trissotin l’a dit au chardon.

TOI
“ Reste dans la ville où nous sommes,
“ Car les champs ne sont meilleurs.

MOI
“ J’ai des ennemis chez les hommes,
“ Je n’en ai point parmi les fleurs.”

V

Ce jour-là, trouvaille de l’église

Et ce même jour, jour insigne,
Je trouvai ce temple humble et grand
Dont Fénelon serait le cygne
Et Voltaire le moineau-franc.

Un moine, assis dans les coulisses,
Aux papillons, grands et petits,
Tâchait de vendre des calices
Que l’églantier donnait gratis.

Là, point d’orangers en livrée;
Point de grenadiers alignés;
Là, point d’ifs allant en soirée,
Pas de buis, par Boileau peignés.

Pas de lauriers dans des guérites;

Mais, parmi les prés et les blés,
Les paysannes marguerites
Avec leurs bonnets étoilés.

Temple où les fronts se rassérènent,
Où se dissolvent les douleurs,
Où toutes les vérités prennent
La forme de toutes les fleurs!

C’est là qu’avril oppose au diable,
Au pape, aux enfers, aux satans,
Cet alléluia formidable,
L’éclat de rire du printemps.

Oh! la vraie église divine!
Au fond de tout il faisait jour.
Une rose me dit: Devine.
Et je lui répondis: Amour.

VI
L’hiver

L’autre mois pourtant, je dois dire
Que nous ne fûmes point reçus;
L’église avait cessé de rire;
Un brouillard sombre était dessus;

Plus d’oiseaux, plus de scarabées;
Et par des bourbiers, noirs fossés,
Par toutes les feuilles tombées,
Par tous les rameaux hérissés,

Par l’eau qui détrempait l’argile,
Nous trouvâmes barricadé
Ce temple qu’eût aimé Virgile
Et que n’eût point haï Vadé.

On était au premier novembre.
Un hibou, comme nous passions,
Nous cria du fond de sa chambre:
Fermé pour réparations.

AU CHEVAL

I

Monstre, à présent reprends ton vol.
Approche, que je te déboucle.
Je te lâche, ôte ton licol,
Rallume en tes yeux l’escarboucle.

Quitte ces fleurs, quitte ce pré.
Monstre, Tempé n’est point Capoue.
Sur l’océan d’aube empourpré,
Parfois l’ouragan calmé joue.

Je t’ai quelque temps tenu là.
Fuis! - Devant toi les étendues,
Que ton pied souvent viola,
Tremblent, et s’ouvrent, éperdues.

Redeviens ton maître, va-t’en!
Cabre-toi, piaffe, redéploie
Tes farouches ailes, titan,
Avec la fureur de la joie.

Retourne aux pâles profondeurs.
Sois indomptable, recommence
Vers l’idéal, loin des laideurs,
Loin des hommes, la fuite immense.

Cheval, devance l’aquilon,
Toi, la raison et la folie,
L’échappé du bois d’Apollon,

Le dételé du char d’Élie.

Vole au-dessus de nos combats,
De nos succès, de nos désastres,
Et qu’on aperçoive d’en bas
Ta forme sombre sous les astres.

II

Mais il n’est plus d’astre aux sommets!
Hélas, la brume sur les faîtes
Rend plus lugubre que jamais
L’échevèlement des prophètes.

Toi, brave tout! qu’au ciel terni
Ton caprice énorme voltige;
Quadrupède de l’infini,
Plane, aventurier du vertige.

Fuis dans l’azur, noir ou vermeil.
Monstre, au galop, ventre aux nuages!
Tu ne connais ni le sommeil,
Ni le sépulcre, nos péages.

Sois plein d’un implacable amour.
Il est nuit. Qu’importe. Nuit noire.
Tant mieux, on y fera le jour.
Pars, tremblant d’un frisson de gloire!

Sans frein, sans trêve, sans flambeau,
Cherchant les cieux hors de l’étable,
Vers le vrai, le juste et le beau,
Reprends ta course épouvantable.

III

Reprends ta course sans pitié,

Si terrible et si débordée
Que Néron se sent châtié
Rien que pour l’avoir regardée.

Va réveiller Démogorgon.
Sois l’espérance et l’effroi, venge,
Rassure et console, dragon
Par une aile, et par l’autre, archange.

Verse ton souffle auguste et chaud
Jusque sur les plus humbles têtes.
Porte des reproches là-haut,
Égal aux dieux, frère des bêtes.

Fuis, cours! sois le monstre du bien,
Le cheval démon qui délivre!
Rebelle au despote, au lien,
De toutes les vérités ivre!

Quand vient le déclin d’un tyran,
Quand vient l’instant des lois meilleures,
Qu’au ciel sombre, éternel cadran,
Ton pied frappe ces grandes heures,

Donne à tout ce qui rampe en bas,
Au barde qui vent Calliope,
Au peuple voulant Barabbas,
À la religion myope,

Donne à quiconque ignore ou nuit,
Aux fausses gloires, aux faux zèles,
Aux multitudes dans la nuit,
L’éblouissement de tes ailes.

IV

Va! pour vaincre et pour transformer,

Pour que l’homme se transfigure,
Qu’il te suffise de fermer
Et de rouvrir ton envergure.

Sois la bonté, sois le dédain;
Qu’un incompréhensible Éole
Fasse parfois sortir soudain
Des foudres de ton auréole.

Ton poitrail resplendit, on croit
Que l’aube, aux tresses dénouées,
Le dore, et sur ta croupe on voit
Toutes les ombres des nuées.

Jette au peuple un hennissement,
À l’échafaud une ruade;
Fais une brèche au firmament
Pour l’esprit humain s’évade.

Soutiens le penseur, qui dément
L’autel, l’augure et la sibylle,
Et n’a pas d’autre adossement
Que la conscience immobile.

Plains les martyrs maintenant,
Attendris ton regard sévère,
Et contemple, tout en planant,
Leur âpre montée au calvaire.

V

Cours sans repos, pense aux donjons,
Pense aux murs hauts de cent coudées,
Franchis, sans brouter les bourgeons,
La forêt vierge des idées.

Ne t’attarde pas, même au beau.

S’il est traître ou froid, qu’il t’indigne.
La nuit ne fait que le corbeau,
La neige ne fait que le cygne,

Le soleil seul fait l’aigle. Va!
Le soleil au mal est hostile.
Quand l’oeuf noir du chaos creva,
Il en sortit, beau, mais utile.

Immortel, protège l’instant.
L’homme a besoin de toi, te dis-je.
Précipite-toi, haletant,
À la poursuite du prodige.

Le prodige, c’est l’avenir;
C’est la vie idéalisée,
Le ciel renonçant à punir,
L’univers fleur et Dieu rosée.

Plonge dans l’inconnu sans fond!
Cours, passe à travers les trouées!
Et, du vent que dans le ciel font
Tes vastes plumes secouées,

Tâche de renverser les tours,
Les geôles, les temples athées,
Et d’effaroucher les vautours
Tournoyant sur les Prométhées.

Vole, altier, rapide, insensé,
Droit à la cible aux cieux fixée,
Comme si je t’avais lancé,
Flèche, de l’arc de ma pensée.

VI

Pourtant sur ton dos garde-moi;

Car tous mes songes font partie
De ta crinière, et je voi
Rien sur terre après ta sortie.

Je veux de telles unions
Avec toi, cheval météore,
Que, nous mêlant, nous parvenions
À ne plus être qu’un centaure.

Retourne aux problèmes profonds.
Brise Ananké, ce lourd couvercle
Sous qui, tristes, nous étouffons;
Franchis la sphère, sors du cercle!

Quand, l’oeil plein de vagues effrois,
Tu viens regarder l’invisible,
Avide et tremblant à la fois
D’entrer dans ce silence horrible,

La Nuit grince lugubrement;
Le Mal, qu’aucuns rayons n’éclairent,
Fait en arrière un mouvement
Devant tes naseaux qui le flairent;

La Mort, qu’importune un témoin,
S’étonne, et rentre aux ossuaires;
On entrevoit partout au loin
La fuite obscure des suaires.

Tu ne peux, étant âme et foi,
Apparaître à l’horizon sombre
Sans qu’il se fasse autour de toi
Un recul de spectres dans l’ombre.

VII

Tout se tait dans l’affreux lointain
Vers qui l’homme effaré s’avance;

L’oubli, la tombe, le destin,
Et la nuit, sont de connivence.

Dans le gouffre, piège muet,
D’où pas un conseil ne s’élance,
Déjoue, ô toi; grand inquiet,
La méchanceté du silence.

Tes pieds volants, tes yeux de lynx
Peuvent sonder tous les peut-êtres;
Toi seul peux faire peur aux sphynx,
Et leur dire: Ah çà, parlez, traîtres!

D’en haut, jette à l’homme indécis
Tous les mots des énigmes louches.
Déchire la robe d’Isis.
Fais retirer les doigts des bouches.

Connaître, c’est là notre faim.
Toi, notre esprit, presse et réclame.
Que la matière avoue enfin,
Mise à la question par l’âme.

Et qu’on sache à quoi s’en tenir
Sur la quantité de souffrance
Dont il faut payer l’avenir,
Dût pleurer un peu l’espérance!

VIII

Sois le trouble-fête du mal.
Force le dessous à paraître.
Tire du sultan l’animal,
Du Dieu le nain, l’homme du prêtre.

Lutte. Aiguillon contre aiguillon!
La haine attaque, guette, veille;

Elle est le sinistre frelon,
Mais n’es-tu pas la grande abeille!

Extermine l’obstacle épais,
L’antagonisme, la barrière.
Mets au service de la paix
La vérité, cette guerrière.

L’inquisition souriant
Rêve le glaive aidant la crosse;
Pour qu’elle s’éveille en criant,
Mords jusqu’au sang l’erreur féroce.

IX

Si le passé se reconstruit
Dans toute son horreur première,
Si l’abîme fait de la nuit,
Ô cheval, fais de la lumière.

Tu n’as pas pour rien quatre fers.
Galope sur l’ombre insondable;
Qu’un rejaillissement d’éclairs
Sois ton annonce formidable.

Traverse tout, enfers, tombeaux,
Précipices, néants, mensonges,
Et qu’on entende tes sabots
Sonner sur le plafond des songes.

Comme sur l’enclume un forgeur,
Sur les brumes universelles,
Abats-toi, fauve voyageur,
Ô puissant faiseur d’étincelles!

Sers les hommes en les fuyant.
Au-dessus de leurs fronts funèbres,

Si le zénith reste effrayant,
Si le ciel s’obstine aux ténèbres,

Si l’espace est une forêt,
S’il fait nuit comme dans les Bibles,
Si pas un rayon ne paraît,
Toi, de tes quatre pieds terribles,

Faisant subitement tout voir,
Malgré l’ombre, malgré les voiles,
Envoie à ce fatal ciel noir
Une éclaboussure d’étoiles.

LA VOIX DE GUERNESEY

TABLE DES MATIERES

Ces jeunes gens, ces fils
O sinistre vieillard
Une chaîne au héros!
Votre Garibaldi...
Qu’il aille donc!
Ah! race italienne
Le crime est consommé.
O peuple, noir dormeur

I.

Ces jeunes gens, ces fils

Ces jeunes gens, ces fils de Brutus, de Camille,
De Thraséas combien étaient-ils? quatre mille.
Combien sont morts? six cents. Six cents! comptez, voyez.
Une dispersion de membres foudroyés,
Des bras rompus, des yeux troués et noirs, des ventres
Où fouillent en hurlant les loups sortis des antres,
De la chair mitraillée au milieu des buissons,
C’est là tout ce qui reste, après les trahisons,
Après le piège, après les guet-apens infâmes,
Hélas, de ces grands cœurs et de ces grandes âmes!
Voyez. On les a tous fauchés d’un coup de faulx.
Leur crime? ils voulaient Rome et ses arcs triomphaux;
Ils défendaient l’honneur et le droit, ces chimères.
Venez, reconnaissez vos enfants, venez, mères!
Car pour qui l’allaita, l’homme est toujours l’enfant.
Tenez; ce front hagard, qu’une balle ouvre et fend,
C’est humble tête blonde où jadis, pauvre femme,
Tu voyais rayonner l’aurore et poindre l’âme;
Ces lèvres, dont l’écume a souillé le gazon,
O nourrice, après toi bégayaient ta chanson;
Cette main froide, auprès de ces paupières closes,
A fait jaillir ton lait sous ses petits doigts roses;
Voici le premier-né; voici le dernier-né.
O d’espérance éteinte amas infortuné!
Pleurs profonds! ils vivaient; ils réclamaient leur Tibre;
Etre jeune n’est pas complet sans être libre;
Ils voulaient voir leur aigle immense s’envoler;
Ils voulaient affranchir, réparer, consoler;
Chacun portait en soi, pieuse idolâtrie,
Le total des affronts soufferts par la patrie;
Ils savaient tout compter, tout, hors les ennemis;
Beaux, vaillants, jeunes, morts! Adieux, nos doux amis,
Les heures de lumière et d’amour sont passées,

Vous n’effeuillerez plus avec vos fiancées
L’humble étoile des prés qui rayonne et fleurit...
Que de sang sur ce prêtre, ô pâle Jésus-Christ!

Pontife élu que l’ange a touché de sa palme,
A qui Dieu commanda de tenir, doux et calme,
Son évangile ouvert sur le monde orphelin,
O frère universel à la robe de lin,
A demi dans la chaire, à demi dans la tombe,
Serviteur de l’agneau, gardien de la colombe,
Qui des cieux dans ta main portes le lys tremblant,
Homme près de ta fin, car ton front est tout blanc
Et le vent du sépulcre en tes cheveux se joue,
Vicaire de celui qui tendait l’autre joue,
A cette heure, ô semeur des pardons infinis,
Ce qui plaît à ton cœur et ce que tu bénis
Sur notre sombre terre où l’âme humaine lutte,
C’est un fusil tuant douze hommes par minute!

Jules deux reparaît sous ma mitre de fer.
La papauté féroce avoue enfin l’enfer.

Certes, l’outil du meurtre a bien rempli sa tâche;
Ces rois! leur foudre est traitre et leur tonnerre est lâche.
Avoir été trop grands, Français, c’est importun:
Jadis un contre dix, aujourd’hui dix contre un.
France, on te déshonore, on te traîne, on te lie,
Et l’on te force à mettre au bagne l’Italie.
Voilà ce qu’on te fait, colosse en proie aux mains!
Un ruisseau fumant coule au flanc des Apennins.

II.

O sinistre vieillard

O sinistre vieillard, te voilà responsable

Du vautour déterrant un crâne dans le sable,
Et du croassement lugubre des corbeaux!
Emplissez désormais ses visions, tombeaux,
Paysages hideux où rôdent les belettes,
Silhouettes d'oiseaux perchés sur des squelettes!
S'il dort, apparais-lui, champ de bataille noir!

Les canons sont tout chauds; ils ont fait leur devoir;
La mitraille invoquée a tenu sa promesse;
C'est fait. Les morts sont morts. Maintenant dis ta messe.
Prends dans tes doigts l'hostie en t'essuyant un peu,
Car il ne faudrait pas mettre du sang à Dieu!

Du reste tout est bien. La France n'est pas fière;
Le roi de Prusse a ri; le denier de Saint-Pierre
Prospère, et l'Irlandais donne son dernier sou;
Le peuple cède et met en terre le genou;
De peur qu'on ne le fauche; il plie, étant de l'herbe;
On reprend Frosinone et l'on rentre à Viterbe;
Le czar a commandé son service divin;
Partout où quelque mort blêmit dans un ravin,
Le rat joyeux le ronge en tremblant qu'il ne bouge;
Ici la terre est noire; ici la plaine est rouge;
Garibaldi n'est plus qu'un vain nom immortel;
Comme Léonidas, comme Guillaume Tell;
Le pape, à la Sixtine, au Gésu, chez les Carmes,
Met tous ses diamants; tendre; il répand des larmes
De joie; il est très doux; il parle du succès
De ses armes; du sang versé, des bons Français,
Des quantités de plomb que la bombarde jette,
Modestement, les yeux baissés, comme un poète
Se fait un peu prier pour réciter ses vers.
De convois de blessés les chemins sont couverts.

Partout rit la victoire.

Utilité des traîtres.

Dans les perles, la soie et l’or, parmi tes reîtres
Qu’hier, du doigts, aux champs de meurtre, tu guidais,
Pape, assis, sur ton trône et siégeant, sous ton dais,
Coiffé de ta tiare aux trois couronnes, prêtre,
Tu verras quelque jour au Vatican peut-être
Entrer un homme triste et de haillons vêtu,
Un pauvre, un inconnu. Tu lui diras: — Qu’es-tu,
Passant? que me veux-tu? sors-tu de quelque geôle?
Pourquoi voit-on ces brins de laine à ton épaule?
— Une brebis était tout à l’heure dessus,
Répondra-t-il. Je viens de loin. Je suis Jésus.

III.

Une chaîne au héros!

Une chaîne au héros! une corde à l’apôtre!
John Brown, Garibaldi, passez l’un après l’autre.
Quel est ce prisonnier? c’est le libérateur.
Sur la terre, en tous lieux, du pôle à l’équateur;
L’iniquité prévaut, règne, triomphe, et mène
De force aux lâchetés la conscience humaine.
O prodiges de honte! étranges impudeurs!
On accepte un soufflet par des ambassadeurs.
On jette aux fers celui qui nous a fait l’aumône.
— Tu sais, je t’ai blâmé de lui donner ce trône!—

On était gentilhomme, on devient alguazil.
Débiteur d’un royaume, on paie avec l’exil.
Pourquoi pas? on est vil. C’est qu’on en reçoit l’ordre.
Rampons. Lécher le maître est plus sûr que le mordre.
D’ailleurs tout est logique. Où sont les contresens?
La gloire a le cachot, mais le crime a l’encens;
De quoi vous plaignez-vous? l’infâme étant l’auguste,
Le vrai doit être faux, et la balance est juste.

On dit au soldat: frappe! il doit frapper. La mort
Est la servante sombre aux ordres du plus fort.
Et puis, l'aigle peut bien venir en aide au cygne!
Mitrailler est le dogme et croire est la consigne.
Qu'est pour nous le soldat? du fer sur un valet.
Le pape veut avoir son Sadowa; qu'il l'ait.
Quoi donc? en viendra-t-on dans le siècle où nous sommes,
A mettre en question le vieux droit qu'ont les hommes
D'obéir à leur prince et de s'entretuer?
Au prétendu progrès pourquoi s'évertuer
Quand l'humble populace est surtout coutumière?
La masse a plus de calme ayant moins de lumière.
Tous les grands intérêts des peuples, l'échafaud,
La guerre, le budget, l'ignorance qu'il faut,
Courent moins de dangers et sont en équilibre
Sur l'homme garrotté mieux que sur l'homme libre.
L'homme libre se meut et cause un tremblement.
Un Garibaldi peut tout rompre à tout moment;
Il entraîne après lui la foule, qui déserte
Et passe à l'idéal. C'est grave. On comprend, certe,
Que la société, sur qui veillent les cours,
Doit trembler et frémir et crier au secours,
Tant qu'un héros n'est pas mis hors d'état de nuire.

Le phare aux yeux de l'ombre est coupable de luire.

IV.

Votre Garibaldi...

Votre Garibaldi n'a pas trouvé le joint.
Ça, le but de tout homme ici-bas n'est-il point
De tâcher d'être dupe aussi peu que possible?
Jouir est bon. La vie est un tir à la cible.
Le scrupule en haillons grelotte; je le plains.
Rien n'a plus de vertu que les coffres-forts pleins.

Il est de l’intérêt de tous qu’on ait des princes
Qui fassent refluer leur or dans les provinces;
C’est pour cela qu’un roi doit être riche; avoir
Une liste civile énorme est son devoir;
Le pape, qu’on voudrait confiner dans les astres,
Est un roi comme un autre. Il a besoin de piastres,
Que diable! l’opulence est le droit du saint lieu;
Il faut dorer le pape afin de prouver Dieu;
N’avoir pas une pierre où reposer sa tête
Est bon pour Jésus-Christ. La loque est déshonnête.
Voyons la question par le côté moral.
Le but du colonel est d’être général,
Le but du maréchal est d’être connétable!
Avant tout, mon paiement. Mettons cartes sur table.
Un renégat a tort tant qu’il n’est pas muchir;
Alors il a raison. S’arrondir, s’enrichir,
Tout est là. Regardez, nous prenons les Hanovres.
Et quant à ces bandits qui veulent rester pauvres,
Ils sont les ennemis publics. Sus! hors la loi!
Ils donnent le mauvais exemple. Coffrez-moi
Ce gueux, qui, dictateur, n’a rien mis dans sa poche.

On se heurte, au battant lorsqu’on touche à la cloche,
Et lorsqu’on touche au prêtre on se heurte au soudard.
Morbleu, la papauté n’est pas un objet d’art!
Par le sabre-en Espagne, en Prusse par la schlague,
Par la censure en France, on modère, on élague
L’excès de rêverie et de tendance au droit,
Le peuple est pour le, prince un soulier fort étroit;
L’élargir en l’usant aux marches militaires
Est utile: Un pontife, en ses sermons austères
Sait rattacher au ciel nos lois, qu’on nomme abus,
Et le knout en latin s’appelle Syllabus.
L’ordre est tout. Le fusil Chassepot est suave.
Le progrès est béni; dans quoi? dans le zouave;
Les boulets sont bénis dans leurs coups; le chacal
Est béni dans sa faim, s’il est pontifical.

Nous trouvons excellent, quant à nous, que le pape
Rie au nez de ce siècle inepte, écrase, frappe;
Et, du moment qu'on veut lui prendre son argent,
Se fasse carrément recruteur et sergent,
Pousse à la guerre, et crie: à mort quiconque est libre!
Qu'il recommande au prône, un obus de calibre,
Qu'il dise, en achevant sa prière; Égorgez!
Envoie aux combattants force fourgons chargés;
De la poudre, du plomb, du fer, et ravitaille
L'extermination sur les champs de bataille!

V.

Qu'il aille donc!

Qu'il aille donc! qu'il aille, emportant son mandat,
Ce chevalier errant des peuples, ce soldat,
Ce paladin, ce preux de l'idéal! qu'il parte.
Nous, les proscrits d'Athène, à ce proscrit de Sparte,
Ouvrons nos seuils; qu'il soit notre hôte maintenant;
Qu'en notre maison sombre il entre rayonnant.
Oui, viens, chacun de nous, frère à l'âme meurtrie,
Veut avec son exil te faire une patrie!
Viens, assieds-toi chez ceux qui n'ont plus de foyer.
Viens, toi qu'on a pu vaincre et qu'on n'a pu ployer!
Nous chercherons quel est le nom de l'espérance;
Nous dirons: Italie! et tu répondras: France!
Et nous regarderons, car le soir fait rêver,
En attendant les droits, les astres se lever.

L'amour du genre humain se double d'une haine
Égale au poids du joug, au froid noir de la chaîne,
Aux mensonges du prêtre, aux cruautés du roi.
Nous sommes rugissants et terribles. Pourquoi?
Parce que nous aimons. Toutes ces humbles têtes,
Nous voulons les voir croître et nous sommes des bêtes

Dans l’antre, et nous avons les peuples pour petits.
Jetés au même écueil, mais non pas engloutis,
Frère, nous nous dirons tous les deux notre histoire;
Tu me raconteras Palerme et ta victoire,
Je te dirai Paris, sa chute, et nos sanglots,
Et nous lirons ensemble Homère au bord des flots.
Puis, tu continueras ta marche âpre et hardie.

Et, là-bas, la lueur deviendra l’incendie.

VI.

Ah! race italienne

Ah! race italienne, il était ton appui!
Ah! vous auriez eu Rome, ô peuples, grâce à lui,
Grâce au bras du guerrier, grâce au cœur du prophète.
D’abord il l’eût donnée, ensuite il l’eût refaite.

Oui, calme, ayant en lui de la grandeur assez
Pour s’ajouter sans trouble aux héros trépassés,
Il eût reforgé Rome; il eût mêlé l’exemple
Du vieux sépulcre avec l’exemple du vieux temple,
Il eût mêlé Turin; Pise, Albe, Velletri,
Le Capitole avec le Vésuve, et pétri
L’âme de Juvénal avec l’âme du Dante;
Il eût trempé d’airain la fibre indépendante;
Il vous eût des titans montré les fiers chemins.
Pleurez, Italiens! il vous eût faits Romains.

VII.

Le crime est consommé.

Le crime est consommé. Qui l’a commis? ce pape?
Non. Ce roi? non. Le glaive à leur bras faible échappe.
Qui donc et le coupable alors? Lui. L’homme obscur,
Celui qui s’embusqua derrière notre mur;
Le fils du Sinon grec et du Judas biblique;
Celui qui, souriant, guetta la république,
Son serment sur le front, son poignard à la main.

Il est parmi vous, rois, ô groupe à peine humain,
Un homme que l’éclair de temps en temps regarde.
Ce condamné, qui triple ‘autour de lui sa garde,
Perd sa peine. Son tour approche. Quand? bientôt.
C’est pourquoi l’on entend un grondement là haut.
L’ombre est sur vos palais, ô rois. La nuit l’apporte.
Tel que l’exécuteur frappant à votre porte,
Le tonnerre demande à parler à quelqu’un.

Et cependant l’odeur des morts, affreux parfum
Qui se mêle à l’encens, des Tedeums superbes,
Monte du fond des bois, du fond des prés pleins d’herbes,
Des steppes, des marais, des vallons, en tous lieux!
Au fatal boulevard de Paris oublieux,
Au Mexique, en Pologne, en Crète où la nuit tombe,
En Italie, on sent un miasme de tombe,
Comme si, sur ce globe et sous le firmament,
Étant dans sa saison d’épanouissement,
Vaste mancenillier de la terre en démence,
Le carnage vermeil ouvrait sa fleur immense.
Partout des égorgés! des massacrés partout!
Le cadavre est à terre et l’idée est debout.
Ils gisent étendus dans les plaines farouches.
L’appel aux armes flotte au dessus de leurs bouches.
On les dirait semés. Ils le sont. Le sillon
Se nomme Liberté. — La mort est l’aquilon,
Et les morts glorieux sont la graine sublime
Qu’elle disperse au loin sur l’avenir, abîme.
Germez, héros! et vous, cadavres, pourrissez.

Fais ton œuvre, ô mystère! épars, nus, hérissés,
Béants, montrant au ciel leurs bras coupés qui pendent,
Tous ces exterminés, immobiles attendent.

Et tandis que les rois, joyeux et désastreux,
Font une fête auguste et triomphale entre eux,
Tandis que leur Olympe abonde, au fond des nues,
En fanfare, en festins, en joie, en gorges nues,
Rit, chante, et, sur nos fronts, montre aux hommes contents
Une fraternité de czars et de sultans,
De son côté, là-bas, au désert, sous la bisé,
Dans l’ombre avec la mort le vautour fraternise;
Les bêtes du sépulcre ont leur vil rendez-vous;
Le freux, la louche orfraie, et le pygargue roux,
L’âpre autour, les milans, féroces hirondelles,
Volent droit aux charniers, et tous, à tire d’ailes,
Se hâtent vers les morts, et ces rauques oiseaux
S’abattent, l’un mordant la chair, l’autre les os,
Et, criant, s’appelant, le feu sous les paupières,
Viennent boire le sang qui coule entre les pierres.

VIII.

O peuple, noir dormeur

O peuple, noir dormeur, quand t’éveilleras-tu?
Rester couché sied mal à qui fut abattu.
Tu dors, avec ton sang sur les mains, et, stigmate
Que t’a laissé l’abjecte et dure casemate,
La marque d’une corde autour de tes poignets.
Qu’as-tu fait de ton âme, ô toi qui t’indignais!
L’empire est une cave, et toutes les espèces
De nuit te tiennent pris sous leurs brumes épaisses.
Tu dors, oubliant tout, ta grandeur, son complot,
La liberté, le droit, ces lumières d’en haut;

Tu fermes les yeux, lourd, gisant sous d’affreux voiles,
Sans souci de l’affront que tu fais aux étoiles!
Allons, remue. Allons, mets-toi sur ton séant.
Qu’on voie enfin bouger le torse du géant.
La longueur du sommeil devient ignominie.
Es-tu las? es-tu sourd? es-tu mort? Je le nie.
N’as-tu pas conscience en ton accablement
Que l’opprobre s’accroît de moment en moment?
N’entends-tu pas qu’on marche au dessus de ta tête?
Ce sont les rois. Ils font le mal. Ils sont en fête.
Tu dors sur ce fumier, toi qui fus citoyen!
Te voilà devenu bête de somme. Eh bien,
L’âne se lève, et brait; le bœuf se dresse et beugle.
Cherche donc dans la nuit puisqu’on t’a fait aveugle!
O toi qui fus si grand, debout! car il est tard.
Dans cette obscurité l’on peut mettre au hasard
La main sur de la honte ou bien sur de la gloire;
Étends le bras le long de la muraille noire;
L’inattendu dans l’ombre ici peut se cacher;
Tu parviendras peut-être à trouver, à toucher,
A saisir une épée entre tes poings funèbres,
Dans le tâtonnement farouche des ténèbres!

(PUBLIÉ EN MAI 1870)

Quant à flatter la foule, ô mon esprit, non pas!

Ah! le peuple est en haut, mais la foule est en bas.
La foule, c’est l’ébauche à côté du décombre;
C’est le chiffre, ce grain de poussière du nombre;
C’est le vague profil des ombres dans la nuit;
La foule passe, crie, appelle, pleure, fuit;
Versons sur ses douleurs la pitié fraternelle.
Mais quand elle se lève, ayant la force en elle,
On doit à la grandeur de la foule, au péril,
Au saint triomphe, au droit, un langage viril;
Puisqu’elle est la maîtresse, il sied qu’on lui rappelle
Les lois d’en haut que l’âme au fond des cieux épelle,
Les principes sacrés, absolus, rayonnants;
On ne baise ses pieds que nus, froids et saignants.
Ce n’est point pour ramper qu’on rêve aux solitudes.
La foule et le songeur ont des rencontres rudes;
C’était avec un front où la colère bout
Qu’Ezéchiel criait aux ossements: Debout!
Moïse était sévère en rapportant les tables;
Dante grondait. L’esprit des penseurs redoutables,
Grave, orageux, pareil au mystérieux vent
Soufflant du ciel profond dans le désert mouvant
Où Thèbes s’engloutit comme un vaisseau qui sombre,
Ce fauve esprit, chargé des balaiements de l’ombre,
A, certes, autre chose à faire que d’aller
Caresser, dans la nuit trop lente à s’étoiler,
Ce grand monstre de pierre accroupi qui médite,
Ayant en lui l’énigme adorable ou maudite;
L’ouragan n’est pas tendre aux colosses émus;

Ce n’est pas d’encensoirs que le sphinx est camus.
La vérité, voilà le grand encens austère
Qu’on doit à cette masse où palpite un mystère,
Et qui porte en son sein qu’un ventre appesantit
Le droit juste mêlé de l’injuste appétit.

O genre humain! lumière et nuit! chaos des âmes.

La multitude peut jeter d’augustes flammes.
Mais qu’un vent souffle, on voit descendre tout à coup
Du haut de l’horreur vierge au plus bas de l’égout
La foule, cette grande et fatale orpheline;
Et cette Jeanne d’Arc se change en Messaline.
Ah! quand Gracchus se dresse aux rostres foudroyants,
Quand Cynégire mord les navires fuyants,
Quand avec les Trois-Cents, hommes faits ou pupilles,
Léonidas s’en va tomber aux Thermopyles,
Quand Botzaris surgit, quand Schwitz confédéré
Brise l’Autriche avec son dur bâton ferré,
Quand l’altier Winkelried, ouvrant ses bras épiques,
Meurt dans l’embrassement formidable des piques,
Quand Washington combat, quand Bolivar paraît,
Quand Pélage rugit au fond de sa forêt,
Quand Manin, réveillant les tombes, galvanise
Ce vieux dormeur d’airain, le lion de Venise,
Quand le grand paysan chasse à coups de sabot
Lautrec de Lombardie et de France Talbot,
Quand Garibaldi, rude au vil prêtre hypocrite,
Montre un héros d’Homère aux monts de Théocrite,
Et fait subitement flamboyer à coté
De l’Etna ton cratère, ô sainte Liberté!
Quand la Convention impassible tient tête
A trente rois, mêlés dans 1a même tempête,
Quand, liguée et terrible et rapportant 1a nuit,
Toute l’Europe accourt, gronde et s’évanouit,
Comme aux pieds de la digue une vague écumeuse,
Devant les grenadiers pensifs de Sambre-et-Meuse,

C’est le peuple; salut, ô peuple souverain!
Mais quand le lazzarone ou le transteverin
De quelque Sixte-Quint baise à genoux la crosse,
Quand la cohue inepte, insensée et féroce,
Etouffe sous ses flots, d’un vent sauvage émus,
L’honneur dans Coligny, la raison dans Ramus,
Quand un poing monstrueux, de l’ombre où l’horreur flotte,
Sort, tenant aux cheveux la tête de Charlotte
Pâle du coup de hache et rouge du soufflet,
C’est la foule; et ceci me heurte et me déplaît;
C’est l’élément aveugle et et confus; c’est le nombre;
C’est la sombre faiblesse et c’est la force sombre.
Et que de cette tourbe il nous vienne demain
L’ordre de recevoir un maître de sa main,
De souffler sur notre âme et d’entrer dans la honte,
Est-ce que vous croyez que nous en tiendrons compte?
Certes, nous vénérons Sparte, Athènes, Paris,
Et tous les grands forums d’où partent les grands cris;
Mais nous plaçons plus haut la conscience auguste.
Un monde, s’il a tort, ne pèse pas un juste;
Tout un océan fou bat en vain un grand coeur.
O multitude, obscure et facile au vainqueur,
Dans l’instinct bestial trop souvent tu te vautres,
Et nous te résistons! Nous ne voulons, nous autres,
Ayant Danton pour père et Hampden pour aïeul,
Pas plus du tyran Tous que du despote Un Seul.

Voici le peuple: il meurt, combattant magnifique,
Pour le progrès; voici la foule: elle en trafique;
Elle mange son droit d’aînesse en ce plat vil
Que Rome essuie et lave avec Ainsi-soit-il!
Voici le peuple: il prend la Bastille, il déplace
Toute l’ombre en marchant; voici la populace:
Elle attend au passage Aristide, Jésus,
Zénon, Bruno, Colomb, Jeanne, et crache dessus.
Voici le peuple avec son épouse, l’idée;
Voici la populace avec son accordée,

La guillotine. Eh bien, je choisis l’idéal.
Voici le peuple: il change avril en Floréal,
Il se fait république, il règne et délibère.
Voilà la populace: elle accepte Tibère.
Je veux la république et je chasse César.

L’attelage ne peut amnistier le char.

Le droit est au-dessus de Tous; nul vent contraire
Ne le renverse; et Tous ne peuvent rien distraire
Ni rien aliéner de l’avenir commun.
Le peuple souverain de lui-même, et chacun
Son propre roi; c’est là le droit. Rien ne l’entame.
Quoi! l’homme que voici, qui passe, aurait mon âme!
Honte! il pourrait demain, par un vote hébété,
Prendre, prostituer, vendre ma liberté!
Jamais. La foule un jour peut couvrir le principe;
Mais le flot redescend, l’écume se dissipe,
La vague en s’en allant laisse le droit à nu.
Qui donc s’est figuré que le premier venu
Avait droit sur mon droit! qu’il fallait que je prisse
Sa bassesse pour joug, pour règle son caprice!
Que j’entrasse au cachot s’il entre au cabanon!
Que je fusse forcé de me faire chaînon
Parce qu’il plaît à tous de se changer en chaîne!
Que le pli du roseau devînt la loi du chêne!

Ah! le premier venu, bourgeois ou paysan,
L’un égoïste et l’autre aveugle, parlons-en!
Les révolutions, durables, quoi qu’il fasse,
Ont pour cet inconnu qui jette à leur surface
Tantôt de l’infamie et tantôt de l’honneur,
Le dédain qu’a le mur pour le badigeonneur.
Voyez-le, ce passant de Carthage ou d’Athènes
Ou de Rome, pareil à l’eau qui des fontaines
Tombe aux pavés, s’en va dans le ruisseau fatal,
Et devient boue après avoir été cristal.

Cet homme étonne, après tant de jours beaux et rudes,
Par son indifférence au fond des turpitudes
Ceux mêmes qu’ont d’abord éblouis ses vertus;
Il est Falstaff après avoir été Brutus;
Il entre dans l’orgie en sortant de la gloire;
Allez lui demander s’il sait sa propre histoire,
Ce qu’était Washington ou ce qu’a fait Barra,
Son coeur mort ne bat plus aux noms qu’il adora.
Naguère il restaurait les vieux cultes, les bustes
De ses héros tombés, de ses aïeux robustes,
Phocion expiré, Lycurgue enseveli,
Riego mort et voyez maintenant quel oubli!
Il fut pur, et s’en lave; il fut saint, et l’ignore;
Il ne s’aperçoit pas même qu’il déshonore
Par l’oeuvre d’aujourd’hui son ouvrage d’hier;
Il devient lâche et vil, lui qu’on a vu si fier;
Et, sans que rien en lui se révolte et proteste,
Barbouille une taverne immonde avec le reste
De la chaux dont il vient de blanchir un tombeau.
Son piédestal souillé se change en escabeau;
L’honneur lui semble lourd, rouillé, gothique; il raille
Cette armure sévère, et dit: Vieille ferraille!
Jadis des fiers combats il a joué le jeu;
Duperie. Il fut grand, et s’en méprise un peu.
Il est sa propre insulte et sa propre ironie.
Il est si bien esclave à présent qu’il renie,
Indigné, son passé, perdu dans la vapeur;
Et quant à sa bravoure ancienne, il en a peur.

Mais quoi, reproche-t-on à la mer qui s’écroule
L’onde, et ses millions de têtes à la foule?
Que sert de chicaner ses erreurs, son chemin,
Ses retours en arrière, à ce nuage humain,
A ce grand tourbillon des vivants, incapable,
Hélas! d’être innocent comme d’être coupable?
A quoi bon? Quoique vague, obscur, sans point d’appui,
Il est utile; et, tout en flottant devant lui,

Il a pour fonction, à Paris comme à Londre,
De faire le progrès, et d'autres d'en répondre;
La république anglaise expire, se dissout,
Tombe, et laisse Milton derrière elle debout;
La foule a disparu, mais le penseur demeure;
C'est assez pour que tout germe et que rien ne meure.
Dans les chutes du droit rien n'est désespéré.
Qu'importe le méchant heureux, fier, vénéré?
Tu fais des lâchetés, ciel profond; tu succombes
Rome; la liberté va vivre aux catacombes;
Les dieux sont au vainqueur, Caton reste aux vaincus.
Kosciusko surgit des os de Galgacus.
On interrompt Jean Huss; soit; Luther continue.
La lumière est toujours par quelque bras tenue;
On mourra, s'il le faut, pour prouver qu'on a foi;
Et volontairement, simplement, sans effroi,
Des justes sortiront de la foule asservie,
Iront droit au sépulcre et quitteront la vie,
Ayant plus de dégoût des hommes que des vers.
Oh! ces grands Régulus, de tant d'oubli couverts,
Arria, Porcia, ces héros qui sont femmes,
Tous ces courages purs, toutes ces fermes âmes,
Cursius, Adam Lux, Thraséas calme et fort,
Ce puissant Condorcet, ce stoïque Chamfort,
Comme ils ont chastement quitté la terre indigne!
Ainsi fuit la colombe, ainsi plane le cygne,
Ainsi l'aigle s'en va du marais des serpents.
Léguant l'exemple à tous, aux méchants, aux rampants,
A l'égoïsme, au crime, aux lâches coeurs pleins d'ombre,
Ils se sont endormis dans le grand sommeil sombre;
Ils ont fermé les yeux ne voulant plus rien voir;
Ces martyrs généreux ont sacré le devoir,
Puis se sont étendus sur la funèbre couche;
Leur mort à la vertu donne un baiser farouche.

O caresse sublime et sainte du tombeau
Au grand, au pur, au bon, à l'idéal, au beau!

En présence de ceux qui disent: Rien n’est juste!
Devant tout ce qui trouble et nuit, devant Locuste,
Devant Pallas, devant Carrier, devant Sanchez,
Devant les appétits sur le néant penchés,
Les sophistes niant, les coeurs faux, les fronts vides,
Quelle affirmation que ces grands suicides!
Ah! quand tout paraît mort dans le monde vivant,
Quand on ne sait s’il faut avancer plus avant,
Quand pas un cri du fond des masses ne s’élance,
Quand l’univers n’est plus qu’un doute et qu’un silence,
Celui qui dans l’enceinte où sont les noirs fossés
Ira chercher quelqu’un de ces purs trépassés
Et qui se collera l’oreille contre terre,
Et qui demandera: Faut-il croire, ombre austère?
Faut-il marcher, héros sous la cendre enfoui?
Entendra ce tombeau dire à voix haute: Oui.

*

Oh! qu’est-ce donc qui tombe autour de nous dans l’ombre?
Que de flocons de neige! En savez-vous le nombre?
Comptez les millions et puis les millions!
Nuit noire! on voit rentrer au gîte les lions;
On dirait que la vie éternelle recule;
La neige fait, niveau hideux du crépuscule,
On ne sait quel sinistre abaissement des monts;
Nous nous sentons mourir si nous nous endormons;
Cela couvre les champs, cela couvre les villes;
Cela blanchit l’égout masquant ses bouches viles;
La lugubre avalanche emplit le ciel terni;
Sombre épaisseur de glace! Est-ce que c’est fini?
On ne distingue plus son chemin; tout est piège.
Soit.

Que restera-t-il de toute cette neige,
Voile froid de la terre au suaire pareil,
Demain, une heure après le lever du soleil?

J’entreprends de conter l’année épouvantable,
Et voilà que j’hésite, accoudé sur ma table.
Faut-il aller plus loin? dois-je continuer?
France! ô deuil! voir un astre aux cieux diminuer!
Je sens l’ascension lugubre de la honte.
Morne angoisse! un fléau descend, un autre monte.
N’importe. Poursuivons. L’histoire en a besoin.
Ce siècle est à la barre et je suis son témoin.

AOÛT 1870

SEDAN

I

Toulon, c'est peu; Sedan, c'est mieux.

L'homme tragique,
Saisi par le destin qui n'est que la logique,
Captif de son forfait, livré les yeux bandés
Aux noirs événements qui le jouaient aux dés,
Vint s'échouer, rêveur, dans l'opprobre insondable.
Le grand regard d'en haut lointain et formidable
Qui ne quitte jamais le crime, était sur lui;
Dieu poussa ce tyran, larve et spectre aujourd'hui,
Dans on ne sait quelle ombre où l'histoire frissonne,
Et qu'il n'avait encore ouverte pour personne;
Là, comme au fond d'un puits sinistre, il le perdit.
Le juge dépassa ce qu'on avait prédit.

Il advint que cet homme un jour songea: - Je règne.
Oui. Mais on me méprise, il faut que l'on me craigne
J'entends être à mon tour maître du monde, moi.
Terre, je vaux mon oncle, et j'ai droit à l'effroi.
Je n'ai pas d'Austerlitz, soit, mais j'ai mon Brumaire.
Il a Machiavel tout en ayant Homère,
Et les tient attentifs tous deux à ce qu'il fait;
Machiavel à moi me suffit. Galifet
M'appartient, j'eus Morny, j'ai Rouher et Devienne.
Je n'ai pas encor pris Madrid, Lisbonne, Vienne,
Naples, Dantzick, Munich, Dresde, je les prendrai.
J'humilierai sur mer la croix de Saint-André,
Et j'aurai cette vieille Albion pour sujette.
Un voleur qui n'est pas le roi des rois, végète.
Je serai grand. J'aurai pour valets, moi forban,

Mastaï sous sa mitre, Abdul sous son turban,
Le czar sous sa peau d'ours et son bonnet de martre;
Puisque j'ai foudroyé le boulevard Montmartre,
Je puis vaincre la Prusse; il est aussi malin
D'assiéger Tortoni que d'assiéger Berlin;
Quand on a pris la Banque on peut prendre Mayence.
Pétersbourg et Stamboul sont deux chiens de fayence;
Pie et Galantuomo sont à couteaux tirés;
Comme deux boucs livrant bataille dans les prés,
L'Angleterre et l'Irlande à grand bruit se querellent;
D'Espagne sur Cuba les coups de fusil grêlent;
Joseph, pseudo-César, Wilhelm, piètre Attila,
S'empoignent aux cheveux; je mettrai le holà;
Et moi, l'homme éculé d'autrefois, l'ancien pitre,
Je serai, par-dessus tous les sceptres, l'arbitre;
Et j'aurai cette gloire, à peu près sans débats,
D'être le Tout-Puissant et le Très-Haut d'en bas.
De faux Napoléon passer vrai Charlemagne,
C'est beau. Que faut-il donc pour cela? prier Magne
D'avancer quelque argent à Leboeuf, et choisir,
Comme Haroun escorté le soir par son vizir,
L'heure obscure où l'on dort, où la rue est déserte,
Et brusquement tenter l'aventure; on peut, certe,
Passer le Rhin ayant passé le Rubicon.
Piétri me jettera des fleurs de son balcon.
Magnan est mort, Frossard le vaut; Saint-Arnaud manque,
J'ai Bazaine. Bismarck me semble un saltimbanque;
Je crois être aussi bon comédien que lui.
Jusqu'ici j'ai dompté le hasard ébloui;
J'en ai fait mon complice, et la fraude est ma femme.
J'ai vaincu, quoique lâche, et brillé, quoique infâme.
En avant! j'ai Paris, donc j'ai le genre humain.
Tout me sourit, pourquoi m'arrêter en chemin?
Il ne me reste plus à gagner que le quine.
Continuons, la chance étant une coquine.
L'univers m'appartient, je le veux, il me plaît;
Ce noir globe étoffé tient sous mon gobelet.

J’escamotai la France, escamotons l’Europe.
Décembre est mon manteau, l’ombre est mon enveloppe;
Les aigles sont partis, je n’ai que les faucons;
Mais n’importe! Il fait nuit. J’en profite. Attaquons.

Or il faisait grand jour. Jour sur Londres, sur Rome,
Sus Vienne, et tous ouvraient les yeux, hormis cet homme;
Et Berlin souriait et le guettait sans bruit
Comme il était aveugle il crut qu’il faisait nuit.
Tous voyaient la lumière et seul il voyait l’ombre.

Hélas! sans calculer le temps, le lieu, le nombre,
A tâtons, se fiant au vide, sans appui,
Ayant pour sûreté ses ténèbres à lui,
Ce suicide prit nos fiers soldats, l’armée
De France devant qui marchait la renommée,
Et sans canons, sans pain, sans chefs, sans généraux,
Il conduisit au fond du gouffre les héros.
Tranquille, il les mena lui-même dans le piège.

— Où vas-tu? dit la tombe. Il répondit: Que sais-je?

II

Que Pline aille au Vésuve, Empédocle à l’Etna,
C’est que dans le cratère une aube rayonna,
Et ces grands curieux ont raison; qu’un brahmine
Se fasse à Benarès manger par la vermine,
C’est pour le paradis et cela se comprend;
Qu’à travers Lipari de laves s’empourprant,
Un pêcheur de corail vogue en sa coraline,
Frêle planche que lèche et mord la mer féline,
Des caps de Corse aux rocs orageux de Corfou;
Que Socrate soit sage et que Jésus soit fou,
L’un étant raisonnable et l’autre étant sublime;
Que le prophète noir crie autour de Solime
Jusqu’à ce qu’on le tue à coups de javelots;

Que Green se livre aux airs et Lapeyrouse aux flots,
Qu’Alexandre aille en Perse ou Trajan chez les Daces,
Tous savent ce qu’ils font; ils veulent: leurs audaces
Ont un but; mais jamais les siècles, le passé,
L’histoire n’avaient vu ce spectacle insensé,
Ce vertige, ce rêve, un homme qui lui-même,
Descendant d’un sommet triomphal et suprême,
Tirant le fil obscur par où la mort descend,
Prend la peine d’ouvrir sa fosse, et, se plaçant
Sous l’effrayant couteau qu’un mystère environne,
Coupe sa tête afin d’affermir sa couronne!

III

Quand la comète tombe au puits des nuits, du moins
A-t-elle en s’éteignant les soleils pour témoins;
Satan précipité demeure grandiose,
Son écrasement garde un air d’apothéose;
Et sur un fier destin, farouche vision,
La haute catastrophe est un dernier rayon.
Bonaparte jadis était tombé; son crime,
Immense, n’avait pas déshonoré l’abîme;
Dieu l’avait rejeté, mais sur ce grand rejet
Quelque chose de vaste et d’altier surnageait;
Le côté de clarté cachait le côté d’ombre;
De sorte que la gloire aimait cet homme sombre,
Et que la conscience humaine avait un fond
De doute sur le mal que les colosses font.

Il est mauvais qu’on mette un crime dans un temple,
Et Dieu vit qu’il fallait recommencer l’exemple.

Lorsqu’un titan larron a gravi les sommets,
Tout voleur l’y veut suivre; or il faut désormais
Que Sbrigani ne puisse imiter Prométhée;
Il est temps que la terre apprenne épouvantée
A quel point le petit peut dépasser le grand,

Comment un ruisseau vil est pire qu’un torrent,
Et de quelles stupeurs la main du sort est pleine,
Même après Waterloo, même après Sainte-Hélène!
Dieu veut des astres noirs empêcher le lever.
Comme il était utile et juste d’achever
Brumaire et ce Décembre encor couvert de voiles
Par une éclaboussure allant jusqu’aux étoiles
Et jusqu’aux souvenirs énormes d’autrefois,
Comme il faut au plateau jeter le dernier poids,
Celui qui pèse tout voulut montrer au monde,
Après la grande fin, l’écroulement immonde,
Pour que le genre humain reçût une leçon,
Pour qu’il eût le mépris ayant eu le frisson,
Pour qu’après l’épopée on eût la parodie,
Et pour que nous vissions ce qu’une tragédie
Peut contenir d’horreur, de cendre et de néant
Quand c’est un nain qui fait la chute d’un géant.

Cet homme étant le crime, il était nécessaire
Que tout le misérable eût toute la misère,
Et qu’il eût à jamais le deuil pour piédestal;
Il fallait que la fin de cet escroc fatal
Par qui le guet-apens jusqu’à l’empire monte
Fût telle que la boue elle-même en eût honte,
Et que César, flairé des chiens avec dégoût,
Donnât, en y tombant, la nausée à l’égout.

IV

Azincourt est riant. Désormais Ramillies,
Trafalgar, plaisent presque à nos mélancolies;
Poitiers n’est plus le deuil, Blenheim n’est plus l’affront,
Crécy n’est plus le champ où l’on baisse le front,
Le noir Rosbach nous fait l’effet d’une victoire.
France, voici le lieu hideux de ton histoire,
Sedan. Ce nom funèbre, où tout vient s’éclipser,
Crache-le, pour ne plus jamais le prononcer.

V

Plaine! affreux rendez-vous! Ils y sont, nous y sommes.

Deux vivantes forêts, faites de têtes d’hommes,
De bras, de pieds, de voix, de glaives, de fureur,
Marchent l’une sur l’autre et se mêlent. Horreur!
Cris! Est-ce le canon? sont-ce des catapultes?
Le sépulcre sur terre a parfois des tumultes,
Nous appelons cela hauts faits, exploits; tout fuit,
Tout s’écroule, et le ver dresse la tête au bruit.
Des condamnations sont par les rois jetées
Et sont par l’homme, hélas! sur l’homme exécutées;
Avoir tué son frère est le laurier qu’on a.
Après Pharsale, après Hastings, après Iéna,
Tout est chez l’un triomphe et chez l’autre décombre.
O Guerre! le hasard passe sur un char d’ombre
Par d’effrayants chevaux invisibles traîné.

La lutte était farouche. Un carnage effréné
Donnait aux combattants des prunelles de braise;
Le fusil Chassepot bravait le fusil Dreyse;
A l’horizon hurlaient des méduses, grinçant
Dans un obscur nuage éclaboussé de sang,
Couleuvrines d’acier, bombardes, mitrailleuses;
Les corbeaux se montraient de loin ces travailleuses;
Tout festin est charnier, tout massacre est banquet.
La rage emplissait l’ombre, et se communiquait,
Comme si la nature entrait dans la bataille,
De l’homme qui frémit à l’arbre qui tressaille;
Le champ fatal semblait lui-même forcené.
L’un était repoussé, l’autre était ramené;
Là c’était l’Allemagne et là c’était la France.
Tous avaient de mourir la tragique espérance
Ou le hideux bonheur de tuer, et pas un
Que le sang n’enivrât de son âcre parfum,

Pas un qui lâchât pied, car l’heure était suprême.
Cette graine qu’un bras épouvantable sème,
La mitraille, pleuvait sur le champ ténébreux;
Et les blessés râlaient, et l’on marchait sur eux
Et les canons grondants soufflaient sur la mêlée
Une fumée immense aux vents échevelée.
On sentait le devoir, l’honneur, le dévouement,
Et la patrie, au fond de l’âpre acharnement.
Soudain, dans cette brume, au milieu du tonnerre,
Dans l’ombre énorme où rit la mort visionnaire,
Dans le chaos des chocs épiques, dans l’enfer
Du cuivre et de l’airain heurtés contre le fer,
Et de ce qui renverse écrasant ce qui tombe,
Dans le rugissement de la fauve hécatombe,
Parmi les durs clairons chantant leur sombre chant,
Tandis que nos soldats luttaient, fiers et tâchant
D’égaler leurs aïeux que les peuples vénèrent,
Tout à coup, les drapeaux hagards en frissonnèrent,
Tandis que, du destin subissant le décret,
Tout saignait, combattait, résistait ou mourait,
On entendit ce cri monstrueux: Je veux vivre!

Le canon stupéfait se tut, la mêlée ivre
S’interrompit... - le mot de l’abîme était dit.

Et l’aigle noir ouvrant ses griffes attendit.

VI

Alors la Gaule, alors la France, alors la gloire,
Alors Brennus, l’audace, et Clovis, la victoire,
Alors le vieux titan celtique aux cheveux longs,
Alors le groupe altier des batailles, Châlons,
Tolbiac la farouche, Asezzo la cruelle,
Bovines, Marignan, Beaugé, Mons-en-Puelle,
Tours, Ravenne, Agnadel sur son haut palefroi,
Fornoue, Ivry, Coutras, Cérisolles, Rocroy,

Denain et Fontenoy, toutes ces immortelles
Mêlant l’éclair du front au flamboiement des ailes,
Jemmape, Hohenlinden, Lodi, Wagram, Eylau,
Les hommes du dernier carré de Waterloo,
Et tous ces chefs de guerre, Héristal, Charlemagne,
Charles-Martel, Turenne, effroi de l’Allemagne,
Condé, Villars, fameux par un si fier succès,
Cet Achille, Kléber, ce Scipion, Desaix,
Napoléon, plus grand que César et Pompée,
Par la main d’un bandit rendirent leur épée.

SEPTEMBRE

CHOIX ENTRE LES DEUX NATIONS

A L’ALLEMAGNE

Aucune nation n’est plus grande que toi;
Jadis, toute la terre étant un lieu d’effroi,
Parmi les peuples forts tu fus le peuple juste.
Une tiare d’ombre est sur ton front auguste;
Et pourtant comme l’Inde, aux aspects fabuleux,
Tu brilles; ô pays des hommes aux yeux bleus,
Clarté hautaine au fond ténébreux de l’Europe,
Une gloire âpre, informe, immense, t’enveloppe;
Ton phare est allumé sur le mont des Géants;
Comme l’aigle de mer qui change d’océans,
Tu passas tour à tour d’une grandeur à l’autre;
Huss le sage a suivi Crescentius l’apôtre;
Barberousse chez toi n’empêche pas Schiller;
L’empereur, ce sommet, craint l’esprit, cet éclair.
Non, rien ici-bas, rien ne t’éclipse, Allemagne.
Ton Vitikind tient tête à notre Charlemagne,
Et Charlemagne même est un peu ton soldat.
Il semblait par moments qu’un astre te guidât;
Et les peuples t’ont vue, ô guerrière féconde,
Rebelle au double joug qui pèse sur le monde,
Dresser, portant l’aurore entre tes poings de fer,
Contre César Hermann, contre Pierre Luther.
Longtemps, comme le chêne offrant ses bras au lierre,
Du vieux droit des vaincus tu fus la chevalière;
Comme on mêle l’argent et le plomb dans l’airain,
Tu sus fondre en un peuple unique et souverain
Vingt peuplades, le Hun, le Dace, le Sicambre;
Le Rhin te donne l’or et la Baltique l’ambre;

La musique est ton souffle; âme, harmonie, encens,
Elle fait alterner dans tes hymnes puissants
Le cri de l'aigle avec le chant de l'alouette;
On croit voir sur tes burgs croulants la silhouette
De l'hydre et du guerrier vaguement aperçus
Dans la montagne, avec le tonnerre au-dessus;
Rien n'est frais et charmant comme tes plaines vertes;
Les brèches de la brume aux rayons sont ouvertes,
Le hameau dort, groupé sous l'aile du manoir,
Et la vierge, accoudée aux citernes le soir,
Blonde, a la ressemblance adorable des anges.
Comme un temple exhaussé sur des piliers étranges
L'Allemagne est debout sur vingt siècles hideux,
Et sa splendeur qui sort de leurs ombres, vient d'eux.
Elle a plus de héros que l'Athos n'a de cimes.
La Teutonie, au seuil des nuages sublimes
Où l'étoile est mêlée à la foudre, apparaît;
Ses piques dans la nuit sont comme une forêt;
Au-dessus de sa tête un clairon de victoire
S'allonge, et sa légende égale son histoire;
Dans la Thuringe, où Thor tient sa lance en arrêt,
Ganna, la druidesse échevelée, errait;
Sous les fleuves, dont l'eau roulait de vagues flammes,
Les sirènes chantaient, monstres aux seins de femmes,
Et le Harz que hantait Velléda, le Taunus
Où Spillyre essuyait dans l'herbe ses pieds nus,
Ont encor toute l'âpre et divine tristesse
Que laisse dans les bois profonds la prophétesse;
La nuit, la Forêt-Noire est un sinistre éden;
Le clair de lune, aux bords du Neckar, fait soudain
Sonores et vivants les arbres pleins de fées.
O Teutons, vos tombeaux ont des airs de trophées;
Vos aïeux n'ont semé que de grands ossements;
Vos lauriers sont partout; soyez fiers, Allemands.
Le seul pied des titans chausse votre sandale.
Tatouage éclatant, la gloire féodale
Dore vos morions, blasonne vos écus;

Comme Rome Coclès vous avez Galgacus,
Vous avez Beethoven comme la Grèce Homère;
L'Allemagne est puissante et superbe.

A LA FRANCE

Ô ma mère!

II

A PRINCE PRINCE ET DEMI

L'empereur fait la guerre au roi.

Nous nous disions:
— Les guerres sont le seuil des révolutions. -
Nous pensions: - C'est la guerre. Oui, mais la guerre grande.
L'enfer veut un laurier; la mort veut une offrande;
Ces deux rois ont juré d'éteindre le soleil;
Le sang du globe va couler, vaste et vermeil,
Et les hommes seront fauchés comme des herbes;
Et les vainqueurs seront infâmes, mais superbes. -
Et nous qui voulons l'homme en paix, nous qui donnons
La terre à la charrue et non pas aux canons,
Tristes, mais fiers pourtant, nous disions: « France et Prusse!
Qu'importe ce Batave attaquant ce Borusse!
Laissons faire les rois; ensuite Dieu viendra."
Et nous rêvions le choc de Vishnou contre Indra,
Un avatar couvé par une apocalypse,
Le flamboiement trouant de toutes parts l'éclipse,
Nous rêvions les combats énormes de la nuit;
Nous rêvions ces chaos de colère et de bruit
Où l'ouragan s'attaque à l'océan, où l'ange,
Etreint par le géant, lutte, et fait un mélange
Du sang céleste avec le sang noir du titan;
Nous rêvions Apollon contre Léviathan;
Nous nous imaginions l'ombre en pleine démence;
Nous heurtions, dans l'horreur d'une querelle immense,

Rosbach contre Iéna, Rome contre Alaric,
Le grand Napoléon et le grand Frédéric;
Nous croyions voir vers nous, en hâte, à tire-d'aile,
Les victoires voler comme des hirondelles
Et, comme l'oiseau court à son nid, aller droit
A la France, au progrès, à la justice, au droit;
Nous croyions assister au choc fatal des trônes,
A la sinistre mort des vieilles Babylones,
Au continent broyé, tué, ressuscité
Dans une éclosion d'aube et de liberté,
Et voir peut-être, après de monstrueux désastres,
Naître un monde à travers des écroulements d'astres!

Ainsi nous songions. - Soit, disions-nous, ce sera
Comme Arbelle, Actium, Trasimène et Zara,
Affreux, mais grandiose. Un gouffre avec sa pente,
Et l'univers tout près du bord, comme à Lépante,
Comme à Tolbiac, comme à Tyr, comme à Poitiers.
La Colère, la Force et la Nuit, noirs portiers,
Vont ouvrir devant nous la tombe toute grande.
Il faudra que le Sud ou le Nord y descende;
Il faudra qu'une race ou l'autre tombe au fond
De l'abîme où les rois et les dieux se défont.
Et pensifs, croyant voir venir vers nous la gloire,
Les chocs comme en ont vu les hommes de la Loire,
Wagram tonnant, Leipsick magnifique et hideux,
Cyrus, Sennachérib, César, Frédéric Deux,
Nemrod, nous frémissions de ces sombres approches... -

Tout à coup nous sentons une main dans nos poches.

*

Il s'agit de ceci: Nous prendre notre argent.

Certe, on se disait bien: Bonaparte indigent
Fut un escroc, et doit avoir pour espérance

De voler l’Allemagne ayant volé la France;
Il filouta le trône; il est vil, fourbe et laid;
C’est vrai; mais nous faisions ce rêve qu’il allait
Rencontrer un vieux roi, fier de sa vieille race,
Ayant Dieu pour couronne et l’honneur pour cuirasse,
Et trouver devant lui, comme au temps des Dunois,
Un de ces paladins des antiques tournois
Dont on voit vaguement se modeler l’armure
Dans les nuages pleins d’aurore et de murmure.
O chute! illusion! changement de décor!
C’est le coup de sifflet et non le son du cor.
La nuit. Un hallier fauve où des sabres fourmillent.
Des canons de fusils entre les branches brillent;
Cris dans l’ombre. Surprise, embuscade. Arrêtez!
Tout s’éclaire; et le bois offre de tous côtés
Sa claire-voie où brille une lumière rouge.
Sus! on casse la tête à tous si quelqu’un bouge.
La face contre terre et personne debout!
Et maintenant donnez votre argent - donnez tout.
Qu’il vous plaise ou non d’être à genoux dans la boue,
Qu’importe! et l’on vous fouille, et l’on vous couche en joue.
Nous sommes dix contre un, tous armés jusqu’aux dents.
Et si vous résistez, vous êtes imprudents.
Obéissez! Ces voix semblent sortir d’un antre.
Que faire? on tend sa bourse, on se met à plat ventre,
Et pendant que, le front par terre, on se soumet,
On songe à ces pays que jadis on nommait
La Pologne, Francfort, la Hesse, le Hanovre.
C’est fait! relevez-vous! on se retrouve pauvre
En pleine Forêt-Noire, et nous reconnaissons,
Nous point initiés aux fauves trahisons,
Nous ignorants dans l’art de régner, nous profanes,
Que Cartouche faisait la guerre à Schinderhannes.

III

DIGNES L’UN DE L’AUTRE

Donc regardez: Ici le jocrisse du crime;
Là, follement servi par tous ceux qu'il opprime,
L'ogre du droit divin, dévot, correct, moral,
Né pour être empereur et resté caporal.
Ici c'est le Bohême et là c'est le Sicambre.
Le coupe-gorge lutte avec le deux-décembre.
Le lièvre d'un côté, de l'autre le chacal.
Le ravin d'Ollioule et la maison Bancal
Semblent avoir fourni certains rois; les Calabres
N'ont rien de plus affreux que ces traîneurs de sabres;
Pillage, extorsion, c'est leur guerre; un tel art
Charmerait Poulailler, mais troublerait Folard.
C'est l'arrestation nocturne d'un carrosse.

Oui, Bonaparte est vil, mais Guillaume est atroce,
Et rien n'est imbécile, hélas, comme le gant
Que ce filou naïf jette à ce noir brigand.
L'un attaque avec rien; l'autre accepte l'approche
Et tire brusquement la foudre de sa poche;
Ce tonnerre était doux et traître, et se cachait.
Leur empereur avait le nôtre pour hochet.
Il riait: Viens, petit! Le petit vient, trébuche,
Et son piège le fait tomber dans une embûche.
Carnage, tas de morts, deuil, horreur, trahison,
Tumulte infâme autour du sinistre horizon;
Et le penseur, devant ces attentats sans nombre,
Est pris d'on ne sait quel éblouissement sombre.
Que de crimes, ciel juste! Oh! l'affreux dénoûment!
O France! un coup de vent dissipe en un moment
Cette ombre de césar et cette ombre d'armée.

Guerre où l'un est la flamme et l'autre la fumée.

IV

PARIS BLOQUE

O ville, tu feras agenouiller l’histoire.
Saigner est ta beauté, mourir est ta victoire.
Mais non, tu ne meurs pas. Ton sang coule, mais ceux
Qui voyaient César rire en tes bras paresseux,
S’étonnent: tu franchis la flamme expiatoire,
Dans l’admiration des peuples, dans la gloire,
Tu retrouves, Paris, bien plus que tu ne perds.
Ceux qui t’assiègent, ville en deuil, tu les conquiers.
La prospérité basse et fausse est la mort lente;
Tu tombais folle et gaie, et tu grandis sanglante.
Tu sors, toi qu’endormit l’empire empoisonneur,
Du rapetissement de ce hideux bonheur.
Tu t’éveilles déesse et chasses le satyre.
Tu redeviens guerrière en devenant martyre;
Et dans l’honneur, le beau, le vrai, les grandes moeurs,
Tu renais d’un côté quand de l’autre tu meurs.

V

A PETITE JEANNE

Vous eûtes donc hier un an, ma bien-aimée.
Contente, vous jasez, comme, sous la ramée,
Au fond du nid plus tiède ouvrant de vagues yeux,
Les oiseaux nouveau-nés gazouillent, tout joyeux
De sentir qu’il commence à leur pousser des plumes.
Jeanne, ta bouche est rose; et dans les gros vo1umes
Dont les images font ta joie, et que je dois,
Pour te plaire, laisser chiffonner par tes doigts
On trouve de beaux vers, mais pas un qui te vaille
Quand tout ton petit corps en me voyant tressaille;
Les plus fameux auteurs n’ont rien écrit de mieux
Que la pensée éclose à demi dans tes yeux,
Et que ta rêverie obscure, éparse, étrange,
Regardant l’homme avec l’ignorance de l’ange.
Jeanne, Dieu n’est pas loin puisque vous êtes là.

Ah! vous avez un an, c’est un âge cela!
Vous êtes par moments grave, quoique ravie;
Vous êtes à l’instant céleste de la vie
Où l’homme n’a pas d’ombre, où dans ses bras ouverts,
Quand il tient ses parents, l’enfant tient l’univers;
Votre jeune âme vit, songe, rit, pleure, espère
D’Alice votre mère à Charles votre père;
Tout l’horizon que peut contenir votre esprit
Va d’elle qui vous berce à lui qui vous sourit;
Ces deux êtres pour vous à cette heure première
Sont toute la caresse et toute la lumière;
Eux deux, eux seuls, ô Jeanne; et c’est juste; et je suis,
Et j’existe, humble aïeul, parce que je vous suis;
Et vous venez, et moi je m’en vais; et j’adore,
N’ayant droit qu’à la nuit, votre droit à l’aurore.
Votre blond frère George et vous, vous suffisez
A mon âme, et je vois vos jeux, et c’est assez;
Et je ne veux, après mes épreuves sans nombre,
Qu’un tombeau sur lequel se découpera l’ombre
De vos berceaux dorés par le soleil levant.

Ah! nouvelle venue innocente, et rêvant,
Vous avez pris pour naître une heure singulière;
Vous êtes, Jeanne, avec les terreurs familière;
Vous souriez devant tout un monde aux abois;
Vous faites votre bruit d’abeille dans les bois,
O Jeanne, et vous mêlez votre charmant murmure
Au grand Paris faisant sonner sa grande armure.
Ah! quand je vous entends, Jeanne, et quand je vous vois
Chanter, et, me parlant avec votre humble voix,
Tendre vos douces mains au-dessus de nos têtes,
Il me semble que l’ombre où grondent les tempêtes
Tremble et s’éloigne avec des rugissements sourds,
Et que Dieu fait donner à la ville aux cent tours
Désemparée ainsi qu’un navire qui sombre,
Aux énormes canons gardant le rempart sombre,

A l’univers qui penche et que Paris défend,
Sa bénédiction par un petit enfant.

Paris, 30 septembre 1870.

OCTOBRE

I

J’étais le vieux rôdeur sauvage de la mer,
Une espèce de spectre au bord du gouffre amer;
J’avais dans l’âpre hiver, dans le vent, dans le givre,
Dans l’orage, l’écume et l’ombre, émit un livre,
Dont l’ouragan, noir souffle aux ordres du banni,
Tournait chaque feuillet quand je l’avais fini;
Je n’avais rien en moi que l’honneur imperdable;
Je suis venu, j’ai vu la cité formidable;
Elle avait faim, j’ai mis mon livre sous sa dent;
Et j’ai dit à ce peuple altier, farouche, ardent,
A ce peuple indigné, sans peur, sans joug, sans règle,
J’ai dit à ce Paris, comme le klephte à l’aigle:
Mange mon coeur, ton aile en croîtra d’un empan.

Quand le Christ expira, quand mourut le grand Pan,
Jean et Luc en Judée et dans l’Inde Epicure
Entendirent un cri d’inquiétude obscure;
La terre tressaillit quand l’Olympe tomba;
D’Ophir à Chanaan et d’Assur à Saba,
Comme un socle en ployant fait ployer la colonne,
Tout l’Orient pencha quand croula Babylone;
La même horreur sacrée est dans l’homme aujourd’hui,
Et l’édifice sent fléchir le point d’appui;
Tous tremblent pour Paris qu’étreint une main vile;
On tuerait l’Univers si l’on tuait la Ville;
C’est plus qu’un peuple, c’est le monde que les rois
Tâchent de clouer, morne et sanglant, sur la croix;
Le supplice effrayant du genre humain commence.
Donc luttons. Plus que Troie et Tyr, plus que Numance,
Paris assiégé doit l’exemple. Soyons grands.
Affrontons les bandits conduits par les tyrans.
Les Huns reviennent comme au temps de Frédégaire;

Laissons rouler vers nous les machines de guerre;
Faisons front, tenons tête; acceptons, seuls, trahis,
Sanglants, le dur travail de sauver ce pays.
Tomber, mais sans avoir tremblé, c’est la victoire.
Etre la rêverie immense de l’histoire,
Faire que tout chercheur du vrai, du grand, du beau,
Met le doigt sur sa bouche en voyant un tombeau,
C’est aussi bien l’honneur d’un peuple que d’un homme,
Et Caton est trop grand s’il est plus grand que Rome;
Rome doit l’égaler, Rome doit l’imiter;
Donc Rome doit combattre et Paris doit lutter.
Notre labeur finit par être notre gerbe.
Combats, ô mon Paris! aie, ô peuple superbe,
Criblé de flèches, mais sans tache à ton écu,
L’illustre acharnement de n’être pas vaincu.

II

Et voilà donc les jours tragiques revenus!
On dirait, à voir tant de signes inconnus,
Que pour les nations commence une autre hégire.

Pâle Alighieri, toi, frère de Cynégire,
O sévères témoins, ô justiciers égaux,
Penchés, l’un sur Florence et l’autre sur Argos,
Vous qui fîtes, esprits sur qui l’aigle se pose,
Ces livres redoutés où l’on sent quelque chose
De ce qui gronde et luit derrière l’horizon,
Vous que le genre humain lit avec un frisson,
Songeurs qui pouvez dire en vos tombeaux: nous sommes,
Dieux par le tremblement mystérieux des hommes!
Dante, Eschyle, écoutez et regardez.
Ces rois
Sous leur large couronne ont des fronts trop étroits.
Vous les dédaigneriez. Ils n’ont pas la stature
De ceux que votre vers formidable torture,
Ni du chef argien, ni du baron pisan;

Mais ils sont monstrueux pourtant, convenez-en.
Des premiers rois venus ils ont l’aspect vulgaire;
Mais ils viennent avec des légions de guerre.
Ils poussent sur Paris les sept peuples saxons.
Hideux, casqués, dorés, tatoués de blasons,
Il faut que chacun d’eux de meurtre se repaisse;
Chacun de ces rois prend pour emblème une espèce
De bête fauve et fait luire à son morion
La chimère d’un rude et morne alérion,
Ou quelque impur dragon agitant sa crinière;
Et le grand chef arbore à sa haute bannière,
Teinte des deux reflets du tombeau tour à tour,
Un aigle étrange, blanc la nuit et noir le jour.
Avec eux, à grand bruit, et sous toutes les formes,
Krupps, bombardes, canons, mitrailleuses énormes,
Ils traînent sous ce mur qu’ils nomment ennemi
Le bronze, ce muet, cet esclave endormi,
Qui, tout à coup hurlant lorsqu’on le démusèle,
Est pris d’on ne sait quel épouvantable zèle
Et se met à détruire une ville, sans frein,
Sans trêve, avec la joie horrible de l’airain,
Comme s’il se vengeait, sur ces tours abattues,
D’être employé par l’homme à d’infâmes statues;
Et comme s’il disait: Peuple, contemple en moi
Le monstre avec lequel tu fais ensuite un roi!
Tout tremble, et les sept chefs dans la haine s’unissent.

Ils sont là, menaçant Paris. Ils le punissent.
De quoi? D’être la France et d’être l’univers,
De briller au-dessus des gouffres entr’ouverts,
D’être un bras de géant tenant une poignée
De rayons, dont l’Europe est à jamais baignée;
Ils punissent Paris d’être la liberté;
Ils punissent Paris d’être cette cité
Où Danton gronde, où luit Molière, où rit Voltaire;
Ils punissent Paris d’être âme de la terre,
D’être ce qui devient de plus en plus vivant,

Le grand flambeau profond que n'éteint aucun vent,
L'idée en feu perçant ce nuage, le nombre,
Le croissant du progrès clair au fond du ciel sombre;
Ils punissent Paris de dénoncer l'erreur,
D'être l'avertisseur et d'être l'éclaireur,
De montrer sous leur gloire affreuse un cimetière,
D'abolir l'échafaud, le trône, la frontière,
La borne, le combat, l'obstacle, le fossé,
Et d'être l'avenir quand ils sont le passé.

Et ce n'est pas leur faute; ils sont les forces noires.
Ils suivent dans la nuit toutes les sombres gloires,
Caïn, Nemrod, Rhamsés, Cyrus, Gengis, Timour.
Ils combattent le droit, la lumière, l'amour.
Ils voudraient être grands et ne sont que difformes.
Terre, ils ne veulent pas qu'heureuse, tu t'endormes
Dans les bras de la paix sacrée, et dans l'hymen
De la clarté divine avec l'esprit humain.
Ils condamnent le frère à dévorer le frère,
Le peuple à massacrer le peuple, et leur misère
C'est d'être tout-puissants et que tous leurs instincts
Allumés pour l'enfer, soient pour le ciel éteints.
Rois hideux! On verra, certe, avant que leur âme
Renonce à la tuerie, au glaive, au meurtre infâme,
Aux clairons, au cheval de guerre qui hennit,
L'oiseau ne plus savoir le chemin de son nid,
Le tigre épris du cygne, et l'abeille oublieuse
De sa ruche sauvage au creux noir de l'yeuse.

III

Sept. Le chiffre du mal. Le nombre où Dieu ramène,
Comme en un vil cachot, toute la faute humaine.
Sept princes. Wurtemberg et Mecklembourg, Nassau,
Saxe, Bade, Bavière et Prusse, affreux réseau.
Ils dressent dans la nuit leurs tentes sépulcrales.
Les cercles de l'enfer sont là, mornes spirales;

Haine, hiver, guerre, deuil, peste, famine, ennui.
Paris a les sept noeuds des ténèbres sur lui.
Paris devant son mur a sept chefs comme Thèbe.

Spectacle inouï! l’astre assiégé par l’Erèbe.

La nuit donne l’assaut à la lumière. Un cri
Sort de l’astre en détresse, et le néant a ri.
La cécité combat le jour; la morne envie
Attaque le cratère auguste de la vie,
Le grand foyer central, l’astre aux astres uni.
Tous les yeux inconnus ouverts dans l’infini
S’étonnent; qu’est-ce donc? Quoi! la clarté se voile!
Un long frisson d’horreur court d’étoile en étoile.
Sauve ton oeuvre, ô Dieu, toi qui d’un souffle émeus
L’ombre où Léviathan tord ses bras venimeux!
C’en est fait. La bataille infâme est commencée.

Comme un phare jadis gardait la porte Scée,
Un flamboiement jaillit de l’astre, avertissant
Le ciel que l’enfer monte et que la nuit descend.
Le gouffre est comme un mur énorme de fumée
Où fourmille on ne sait quelle farouche armée;
Nuage monstrueux où luisent des airains;
Et les bruits infernaux et les bruits souterrains
Se mêlent, et, hurlant au fond de la géhenne,
Les tonnerres ont l’air de bêtes à la chaîne.
Une marée informe où grondent les typhons
Arrive, croît et roule avec des cris profonds,
Et ce chaos s’acharne à tuer cette sphère.
Lui frappe avec la flamme, elle avec la lumière;
Et l’abîme a l’éclair et l’astre a le rayon.
L’obscurité, flot, brume, ouragan, tourbillon,
Tombant sur l’astre, encor, toujours, encore, encore,
Cherche à se verser toute en ce puits de l’aurore.
Qui l’emportera? Crainte, espoir! Frémissements!
La splendide rondeur de l’astre, par moments,

Sous d’affreux gonflements de ténèbres s’efface,
Et, comme vaguement tremble et flotte une face,
De plus en plus sinistre et pâle, il disparaît.
Est-ce que d’une étoile on prononce l’arrêt?
Qui donc le peut? Qui donc a droit d’ôter au monde
Cette lueur sacrée et cette âme profonde?
L’enfer semble une gueule effroyable qui mord.
Et l’on ne voit plus l’astre. Est-ce donc qu’il est mort?

Tout à coup un rayon sort par une trouée.
Une crinière en feu, par les vents secouée,
Apparaît... - Le voilà!

C’est lui. Vivant, aimant,
Il condamne la Nuit à l’éblouissement,
Et, soudain reparu dans sa beauté première,
La couvre d’une écume immense de lumière.

Le chaos est-il donc vaincu? Non. La noirceur
Redouble, et le reflux du gouffre envahisseur
Revient, et l’on dirait que Dieu se décourage.

De nouveau, dans l’horreur, dans la nuit, dans l’orage,
On cherche l’astre. Où donc est-il? Quel guet-apens!
Et rien ne continue, et tout est en suspens;
La création sent qu’elle est témoin d’un crime;
Et l’univers regarde avec stupeur l’abîme
Qui, sans relâche, au fond du firmament vermeil,
Jette un vomissement d’ombre sur le soleil.

NOVEMBRE

I

DU HAUT DE LA MURAILLE DE PARIS

A LA NUIT TOMBANTE

L’Occident était blanc, l’orient était noir;
Comme si quelque bras sorti des ossuaires
Dressait un catafalque aux colonnes du soir,
Et sur le firmament déployait deux suaires.

Et la nuit se fermait ainsi qu’une prison.
L’oiseau mêlait sa plainte au frisson de la plante.
J’allais. Quand je levai mes yeux vers l’horizon,
Le couchant n’était plus qu’une lame sanglante.

Cela faisait penser à quelque grand duel
D’un monstre contre un dieu, tous deux de même taille;
Et l’on eût dit l’épée effrayante du ciel
Rouge et tombée à terre après une bataille.

II

PARIS DIFFAME A BERLIN

Pour la sinistre nuit l’aurore est un scandale;
Et l’Athénien semble un affront au Vandale.
Paris, en même temps qu’on t’arnaque, on voudrait
Donner au guet-apens le faux air d’un arrêt;
Le cuistre aide le reître; ils font cette gageure,
Déshonorer la ville héroïque; et l’injure
Pleut, mêlée à l’obus, dans le bombardement;
Ici le soudard tue et là le rhéteur ment;
On te dénonce au nom des moeurs, au nom du culte;

C’est afin de pouvoir t’égorger qu’on t’insulte,
La calomnie ayant pour but l’assassinat.
O ville, dont le peuple est grand comme un sénat,
Combats, tire l’épée, ô cité de lumière
Qui fondes l’atelier, qui défends la chaumière,
Va, laisse, ô fier chef-lieu des hommes tous égaux,
Hurler autour de toi l’affreux tas des bigots,
Noirs sauveurs de l’autel et du trône, hypocrites
Par qui dans tous les temps les clartés sont proscrites,
Qui gardent tous les dieux contre tous les esprits,
Et dont nous entendons dans l’histoire les cris,
A Rome, à Thèbe, à Delphe, à Memphis, à Mycènes,
Pareils aux aboiements lointains des chiens obscènes.

III

A TOUS CES PRINCES

Rois teutons, vous avez mal copié vos pères.
Ils se précipitaient hors de leurs grands repaires,
Le glaive au poing, tâchant d’avoir ceci pour eux
D’être les plus vaillants et non les plus nombreux.
Vous, vous faites la guerre autrement.

On se glisse
Sans bruit, dans l’ombre, avec le hasard pour complice,
Jusque dans le pays d’à côté, doucement,
Un peu comme un larron, presque comme un amant;
Baissant la voix, courbant le front, cachant sa lampe,
On se fait invisible au fond des bois, on rampe;
Puis brusquement, criant vivat, hourrah, haro,
On tire un million de sabres du fourreau,
On se rue, et l’on frappe et d’estoc et de taille
Sur le voisin, lequel a, dans cette bataille,
Rien pour armée avec zéro pour général.
Vos aïeux, que Luther berçait de son choral,
N’eussent point accepté de vaincre de la sorte;

Car la soif conquérante était en eux moins forte
Que la pudeur guerrière, et tous avaient au coeur
Le désir d’être grand plus que d’être vainqueur.
Vous, princes, vous semez, de Sedan à Versailles,
Dans votre route obscure à travers les broussailles,
Toutes sortes d’exploits louches et singuliers
Dont se fût indignée au temps des chevaliers
La magnanimité farouche de l’épée.

Rois, la guerre n’est pas digne de l’épopée
Lorsqu’elle est espionne et traître, et qu’elle met
Une cocarde au vol, à la fraude un plumet!
Guillaume est empereur, Bismarck est trabucaire;
Charlemagne à sa droite assoit Robert-Macaire;
On livre aux mameloucks, aux pandours, aux strélitz,
Aux reîtres, aux hulans, la France d’Austerlitz;
On en fait son butin, sa proie et sa prébende.
Où fut la grande armée on est l’énorme bande.

*

Ivres, ils vont au gouffre obscur qui les attend.
Ainsi l’ours, à vau-l’eau sur le glacier flottant,
Ne sent pas sous lui fondre et crouler la banquise.

Soit, princes. Vautrez-vous sur la France conquise.
De l’Alsace aux abois, de la Lorraine en sang,
De Metz qu’on vous vendit, de Strasbourg frémissant
Dont vous n’éteindrez pas la tragique auréole,
Vous aurez ce qu’on a des femmes qu’on viole,
La nudité, le lit, et la haine à jamais.

Oui, le corps souillé, froid, sinistre désormais,
Quand on les prend de force en des étreintes viles,
C’est tout ce qu’on obtient des vierges et des villes.

Moissonnez les vivants comme un champ de blé mûr,

Cernez Paris, jetez la flamme à ce grand mur,
Tuez à Châteaudun, tuez à Gravelotte,
O rois, désespérez la mère qui sanglote,
Poussez l’effrayant cri de l’ombre: Exterminons!
Secouez vos drapeaux et roulez vos canons;
A ce bruit triomphal il manque quelque chose.
La porte de rayons dans les cieux reste close;
Et sur la terre en deuil pas un laurier ne sent
La sève lui venir de tous ces flots de sang.
Là-haut au loin, le groupe altier des Renommées,
Immobile, indigné, les ailes refermées,
Tourne le dos, se tait, refuse de rien voir,
Et l’on distingue, au fond de ce firmament noir,
Le morne abaissement de leurs trompettes sombres.

Dire que pas un nom ne sort de ces décombres!
O gloire, ces héros comment s’appellent-ils?
Quoi! ces triomphateurs hautains, sanglants, subtils,
Quoi! ces envahisseurs que tant de rage anime
Ne peuvent même pas sortir de l’anonyme,
Et ce comble d’affront sur nous s’appesantit
Que la victoire est grande et le vainqueur petit!

IV

BANCROFT

Qu’est-ce que cela fait à cette grande France?
Son tragique dédain va jusqu’à l’ignorance.
Elle existe, et ne sait ce que dit d’elle un tas
D’inconnus, chez les rois ou dans les galetas;
Soyez un va-nu-pieds ou soyez un ministre,
Vous n’avez point du mal la majesté sinistre;
Vous bourdonnez en vain sur son éternité.
Vous l’insultez. Qui donc avez-vous insulté?
Elle n’aperçoit pas dans ses deuils ou ses fêtes
L’espèce d’ombre obscure et vague que vous êtes;

Tâchez d’être quelqu’un, Tibère, Gengiskan,
Soyez l’homme fléau, soyez l’homme volcan,
On examinera si vous valez la peine
Qu’on vous méprise; ayez quelque titre à la haine,
Et l’on verra. Sinon, allez-vous-en. Un nain
Peut à sa petitesse ajouter son venin
Sans cesser d’être un nain, et qu’importe l’atome?
Qu’importe l’affront vil qui tombe de cet homme?
Qu’importent les néants qui passent et s’en vont?
Sans faire remuer la tête énorme, au fond
Du désert où l’on voit rôder le lynx féroce,
Le stercoraire peut prendre avec le colosse
Immobile à jamais sous le ciel étoilé,
Des familiarités d’oiseau vite envolé.

V

EN VOYANT FLOTTER SUR LA SEINE DES CADAVRES PRUSSIENS

Oui, vous êtes venus et vous voilà couchés;
Vous voilà caressés, portés, baisés, penchés,
Sur le souple oreiller de l’eau molle et profonde;
Vous voilà dans les draps froids et mouillés de l’onde;
C’est bien vous, fils du Nord, nus sur le flot dormant!
Vous fermez vos yeux bleus dans ce doux bercement.
Vous aviez dit: « - Allons chez la prostituée.
Babylone, aux baisers du monde habituée,
Est là-bas; elle abonde en rires, en chansons;
C’est là que nous aurons du plaisir; ô Saxons,
O Germains, vers le Sud tournons notre oeil oblique,
Vite! en France! Paris, cette ville publique,
Qui pour les étrangers se farde et s’embellit,
Nous ouvrira ses bras...” - Et la Seine son lit.

VI

Prêcher la guerre après avoir plaidé la paix!
Sagesse, dit le sage, eh quoi, tu me trompais!
O sagesse, où sont donc les paroles clémentes?
Se peut-il qu'on t'aveugle ou que tu te démentes?
Et la fraternité, qu'en fais-tu? te voilà
Exterminant Caïn, foudroyant Attila!
— Homme, je ne t'ai pas trompé, dit la sagesse.
Tout commence en refus et finit en largesse;
L'hiver mène au printemps et la haine à l'amour.
On croit travailler contre et l'on travaille pour.
En se superposant sans mesure et sans nombre,
Les vérités parfois font un tel amas d'ombre
Que l'homme est inquiet devant leur profondeur;
La Providence est noire à force de grandeur;
Ainsi la nuit sinistre et sainte fait ses voiles
De ténèbres avec des épaisseurs d'étoiles.

VII

Je ne sais si je vais sembler étrange à ceux
Qui pensent que devant le sort trouble et chanceux,
Devant Sedan, devant le flamboiement du glaive,
Il faut brûler un cierge à Sainte-Geneviève,
Qu'on serait sûr d'avoir le secours le plus vrai
En redorant à neuf Notre-Dame d'Auray,
Et qu'on arrête court l'obus, le plomb qui tonne,
Et la mitraille, avec une oraison bretonne;
Je paraîtrai sauvage et fort mal élevé
Aux gens qui dans des coins chuchotent des Ave
Pendant que le sang coule à flots de notre veine,
Et qui contre un canon braquent une neuvaine;
Mais je dis qu'il est temps d'agir et de songer
A la levée en masse, à l'abîme, au danger
Qui, lorsqu'autour de nous son cercle se resserre,
A ce mérite, étant hideux, d'être sincère,
D'être franchement fauve et sombre, et de t'offrir,
France, une occasion sublime de mourir;

J’affirme que le camp monstrueux des barbares,
Que les ours de leur cage ayant brisé les barres,
Approchent, que d’horreur les peuples sont émus,
Que nous ne sommes plus au temps des oremus,
Que les hordes sont là, que Paris est leur cible,
Et que nous devons tous pousser un cri terrible!
Aux armes, citoyens! aux fourches, paysans!
Jette là ton psautier pour les agonisants,
Général, et faisons en hâte une trouée!
La Marseillaise n’est pas encore enrouée,
Le cheval que montait Kléber n’est pas fourbu.
Tout le vin de l’audace immense n’est pas bu,
Et Danton nous en laisse assez au fond du verre
Pour donner à la Prusse une chasse sévère,
Et pour épouvanter le vieux monde aux abois
De la réception que nous faisons aux rois!
Dussions-nous succomber d’ailleurs, la mort est grande.
Quand un trop bon chrétien dans la cité commande,
Quand je crois qu’on a peur, quand je vois qu’on attend,
Qu’est-ce que vous voulez, je ne suis pas content.
Ce chef vers son curé tourne un oeil trop humide;
Je le vois soldat brave et général timide;
Comme le vieil Entelle et le vieux d’Aubigné,
J’ai des frémissements, je frissonne indigné;
Nous sommes dans Paris, volcan, fournaise d’âmes,
Près de deux millions d’hommes, d’enfants, de femmes,
Pas un n’entend céder, pas une; et nous voulons
La colère plus prompte et les discours moins longs;
Et je l’irais demain dire à l’hôtel de ville
Si je ne sentais poindre une guerre civile,
O patrie accablée, et si je ne craignais
D’ajouter cette corde affreuse à tes poignets,
Et de te voir traînée autour du mur en flamme,
Dans la fange et le sang, derrière un char infâme,
D’abord par tes vainqueurs, ensuite par tes fils!
Ces fiers Parisiens bravent tous les défis;
Ils acceptent le froid, la faim, rien ne les dompte,

Ne trouvant d'impossible à porter que la honte;
On mange du pain noir n'ayant plus de pain bis;
Soit; mais se laisser prendre ainsi que des brebis,
Ce n'est pas leur humeur, et tous veulent qu'on sorte,
Et nous voulons nous-mêmes enfoncer notre porte,
Et, s'il le faut, le front levé vers l'orient,
Nous mettre en liberté dans la tombe, en criant:
Concorde! en attestant l'avenir, l'espérance,
L'aurore; et c'est ainsi qu'agonise la France!

C'est pourquoi je déclare en cette extrémité
Que l'homme a pour bien faire un coeur illimité,
Qu'il faut copier Sparte et Rome notre aïeule,
Et qu'un peuple est borné par sa lâcheté seule;
J'écarte le mauvais exemple, ce lépreux;
A cette heure il nous faut mieux que les anciens preux
Qui souvent s'attardaient trop longtemps aux chapelles;
Je dis qu'à ton secours, France, tu nous appelles;
Qu'un courage qui chante au lutrin est bâtard,
Qu'il sied de tout risquer, et qu'il est déjà tard!
C'est mon avis, devant les trompettes farouches,
Devant les ouragans gonflant leurs noires bouches,
Devant le Nord féroce attaquant le Midi,
Que nous avons besoin de quelqu'un de hardi;
Et que, lorsqu'il s'agit de chasser les Vandales,
De refouler le flot des bandes féodales,
De délivrer l'Europe en délivrant Paris,
Et d'en finir avec ceux qui nous ont surpris,
Avec tant d'épouvante, avec tant de misère,
Il nous faut une épée et non pas un rosaire.

VIII

Qu'on ne s'y trompe pas, je n'ai jamais caché
Que j'étais sur l'énigme éternelle penché;
Je sais qu'être à demi plongé dans l'équilibre
De la terre et des cieux, nous fait l'âme plus libre;

Je sais qu'en s'appuyant sur l'inconnu, l'on sent
Quelque chose d'immense et de bon qui descend,
Et qu'on voit le néant des rois, et qu'on résiste
Et qu'on lutte et qu'on marche avec un coeur moins triste;
Je sais qu'il est d'altiers prophètes qu'un danger
Tente, et que l'habitude auguste de songer,
De méditer, d'aimer, de croire, et d'être en somme
A genoux devant Dieu, met debout devant l'homme;
Certes, je suis courbé sous l'infini profond.
Mais le ciel ne fait pas ce que les hommes font;
Chacun a son devoir et chacun a sa tâche;
Je sais aussi cela. Quand le destin est lâche,
C'est à nous de lui faire obstacle rudement,
Sans aller déranger l'éclair du firmament,
Et j'attends, pour le vaincre, un moins grand phénomène
Du tonnerre divin que de la foudre humaine.

IX

A L'EVEQUE QUI M'APPELLE ATHEE

Athée? entendons-nous, prêtre, une fois pour toutes.
M'espionner, guetter mon âme, être aux écoutes,
Regarder par le trou de la serrure au fond
De mon esprit, chercher jusqu'où mes doutes vont,
Questionner l'enfer, consulter son registre
De police, à travers son soupirail sinistre,
Pour voir ce que je nie ou bien ce que je croi,
Ne prends pas cette peine inutile. Ma foi
Est simple, et je la dis. J'aime la clarté franche:

S'il s'agit d'un bonhomme à longue barbe blanche,
D'une espèce de pape ou d'empereur, assis
Sur un trône qu'on nomme au théâtre un châssis,
Dans la nuée, ayant un oiseau sur sa tête,
Au droite un archange, à sa gauche un prophète,
Entre ses bras son fils pâle et percé de clous,

Un et triple, écoutant des harpes, Dieu jaloux,
Dieu vengeur, que Garasse enregistre, qu'annote
L'abbé Pluche en Sorbonne et qu'approuve Nonotte;
S'il s'agit de ce Dieu que constate Trublet,
Dieu foulant aux pieds ceux que Moïse accablait,
Sacrant tous les bandits royaux dans leurs repaires,
Punissant les enfants pour la faute des pères,
Arrêtant le soleil à l'heure où le soir riait,
Au risque de casser le grand ressort tout net,
Dieu mauvais géographe et mauvais astronome,
Contrefaçon immense et petite de l'homme,
En colère, et faisant la moue au genre humain,
Comme un Père Duchêne un grand sabre à la main;
Dieu qui volontiers damne et rarement pardonne,
Qui sur un passe-droit consulte une madone,
Dieu qui dans son ciel bleu se donne le devoir
D'imiter nos défauts et le luxe d'avoir
Des fléaux, comme on a des chiens; qui trouble l'ordre,
Lâche sur nous Nemrod et Cyrus, nous fait mordre
Par Cambyse, et nous jette aux jambes Attila,
Prêtre, oui, je suis athée à ce vieux bon Dieu-là.

Mais s'il s'agit de l'être absolu qui condense
Là-haut tout l'idéal dans toute l'évidence,
Par qui, manifestant l'unité de la loi,
L'univers peut, ainsi que l'homme, dire: Moi;
De l'être dont je sens l'âme au fond de mon âme,
De l'être qui me parle à voix basse, et réclame
Sans cesse pour le vrai contre le faux, parmi
Les instincts dont le flot nous submerge à demi;
S'il s'agit du témoin dont ma pensée obscure
A parfois la caresse et parfois la piqûre
Selon qu'en moi, montant au bien, tombant au mal,
Je sens l'esprit grandir ou croître l'animal;
S'il s'agit du prodige immanent qu'on sent vivre
Plus que nous ne vivons, et dont notre âme est ivre
Toutes les fois qu'elle est sublime, et qu'elle va,

Où s’envola Socrate, où Jésus arriva,
Pour le juste, le vrai, le beau, droit au martyre,
Toutes les fois qu’au gouffre un grand devoir l’attire,
Toutes les fois qu’elle est dans l’orage alcyon,
Toutes les fois qu’elle a l’auguste ambition
D’aller, à travers l’ombre infâme qu’elle abhorre
Et de l’autre côté des nuits, trouver l’aurore;
O prêtre, s’il s’agit de ce quelqu’un profond
Que les religions ne font ni ne défont,
Que nous devinons bon et que nous sentons sage,
Qui n’a pas de contour, qui n’a pas de visage,
Et pas de fils, ayant plus de paternité
Et plus d’amour que n’a de lumière l’été;
S’il s’agit de ce vaste inconnu que ne nomme,
N’explique et ne commente aucun Deutéronome,
Qu’aucun Calmet ne peut lire en aucun Esdras,
Que l’enfant dans sa crèche et les morts dans leurs draps,
Distinguent vaguement d’en bas comme une cime,
Très-Haut qui n’est mangeable en aucun pain azime,
Qui parce que deux coeurs s’aiment, n’est point fâché,
Et qui voit la nature où tu vois le péché;
S’il s’agit de ce Tout vertigineux des êtres
Qui parle par là voix des éléments, sans prêtres,
Sans bibles, point charnel et point officiel,
Qui pour livre a l’abîme et pour temple le ciel,
Loi, Vie, Ame, invisible à force d’être énorme,
Impalpable à ce point qu’en dehors de la forme
Des choses que dissipe un souffle aérien,
On l’aperçoit dans tout sans le saisir dans rien;
S’il s’agit du suprême Immuable, solstice
De la raison, du droit, du bien, de la justice,
En équilibre avec l’infini, maintenant,
Autrefois, aujourd’hui, demain, toujours, donnant
Aux soleils la durée, aux coeurs la patience,
Qui, clarté hors de nous, est en nous conscience;
Si c’est de ce Dieu-là qu’il s’agit, de celui
Qui toujours dans l’aurore et dans la tombe a lui,

Etant ce qui commence et ce qui recommence;
S’il s’agit du principe éternel, simple, immense,
Qui pense puisqu’il est, qui de tout est le lieu,
Et que, faute d’un nom plus grand, j’appelle Dieu,
Alors tout change, alors nos esprits se retournent,
Le tien vers la nuit, gouffre et cloaque où séjournent
Les rires, les néants, sinistre vision,
Et le mien vers le jour, sainte affirmation,
Hymne, éblouissement de mon âme enchantée;
Et c’est moi le croyant, prêtre, et c’est toi l’athée.

A L’ENFANT MALADE PENDANT LE SIEGE

Si vous continuez d’être ainsi toute pâle
Dans notre air étouffant,
Si je vous vois entrer dans mon ombre fatale,
Moi vieillard, vous enfant;

Si je vois de nos jours se confondre la chaîne,
Moi qui sur mes genoux
Vous contemple, et qui veux la mort pour moi prochaine,
Et lointaine pour vous;

Si vos mains sont toujours diaphanes et frêles,
Si, dans votre berceau,
Tremblante, vous avez l’air d’attendre des ailes
Comme un petit oiseau;

Si vous ne semblez pas prendre sur notre terre
Racine pour longtemps,
Si vous laissez errer, Jeanne, en notre mystère
Vos doux yeux mécontents;

Si je ne vous vois pas gaie et rose et très forte,
Si, triste, vous rêvez,

Si vous ne fermez pas derrière vous la porte
Par où vous arrivez;

Si je ne vous vois pas comme une belle femme
Marcher, vous bien porter,
Rire, et si vous semblez être une petite âme
Qui ne veut pas rester,

Je croirai qu’en ce monde où le suaire au lange
Parfois peut confiner,
Vous venez pour partir, et que vous êtes l’ange
Chargé de m’emmener.

DÉCEMBRE

I

Ah! c’est un rêve! non! nous n’y consentons point.
Dresse-toi, la colère au coeur, l’épée au poing,
France! prends ton bâton, prends ta fourche, ramasse
Les pierres du chemin, debout, levée en masse!
France! qu’est-ce que c’est que cette guerre-là?
Nous refusons Mandrin, Dieu nous doit Attila.
Toujours, quand il lui plaît d’abattre un grand empire,
Un noble peuple, en qui le genre humain respire,
Rome ou Thèbes, le sort respectueux se sert
De quelque monstre auguste et fauve du désert.
Pourquoi donc cet affront? c’est trop. Tu t’y résignes,
Toi, France? non, jamais. Certes, nous étions dignes
D’être dévorés, peuple, et nous sommes mangés!
C’est trop de s’être dit: - Nous serons égorgés
Comme Athène et Memphis, comme Troie et Solime,
Grandement, dans l’éclair d’une lutte sublime! -
Et de se sentir mordre, en bas, obscurément,
Dans l’ombre, et d’être en proie à ce fourmillement,
Les pillages, les vols, les pestes, les famines!
D’espérer les lions, et d’avoir les vermines!

II

Vision sombre! un peuple en assassine un autre.

Et la même origine, ô Saxons, est la nôtre!
Et nous sommes sortis du même flanc profond!
La Germanie avec la Gaule se confond
Dans cette antique Europe où s’ébauche l’histoire.
Croître ensemble, ce fut longtemps notre victoire;
Les deux peuples s’aidaient, couple heureux, triomphant,
Tendre, et Caïn petit aimait Abel enfant.

Nous étions le grand peuple égal au peuple Scythe;
Et c’est de vous, Germains, et de nous, que Tacite
Disait: - Leur âme est fière. Un dieu fort les soutient.
Chez eux la femme pleure et l’homme se souvient. -
Si Rome osait risquer ses aigles dans nos landes,
Les Celtes entendaient l’appel guerrier des Vendes,
On battait le préteur, on chassait le consul,
Et Teutatès venait au secours d’Irmensul;
On se donnait l’appui glorieux et fidèle
Tantôt d’un coup d’épée et tantôt d’un coup d’aile;
Le même autel de pierre, étrange et plein de voix,
Faisait agenouiller sur l’herbe, au fond des bais,
Les Teutons de Cologne et les Bretons de Nante;
Et quand la Walkyrie, ailée et frissonnante,
Traversait l’ombre, Hermann chez vous, chez nous Brennus
Voyaient la même étoile entre ses deux seins nus.

Allemands, regardez au-dessus de vos têtes,
Dans le grand ciel, tandis qu’acharnés aux conquêtes,
Vous, Germains, vous venez poignarder les Gaulois,
Tandis que vous foulez aux pieds toutes les lois,
Plus souillés que grandis par des victoires traîtres,
Vous verrez vos aïeux saluer nos ancêtres.

LE MESSAGE DE GRANT

Ainsi, peuple aux efforts prodigieux enclin,
Ainsi, terre de Penn, de Fulton, de Franklin,
Vivante aube d’un monde, ô grande république,
C’est en ton nom qu’on fait vers l’ombre un pas oblique!
Trahison! par Berlin vouloir Paris détruit!
Au nom de la lumière encourager la nuit!
Quoi! de la liberté faire une renégate!
Est-ce donc pour cela que vint sur sa frégate
Lafayette donnant la main à Rochambeau?

Quand l’obscurité monte, éteindre le flambeau!
Quoi! dire: - Rien n’est vrai que la force. Le glaive,
C’est l’éblouissement suprême qui se lève.
Courbez-vous, le travail de vingt siècles a tort.
Le progrès, serpent vil, dans la fange se tord;
Et le peuple idéal, c’est le peuple égoïste.
Rien de définitif et d’absolu n’existe;
Le maître est tout; il est justice et vérité.
Et tout s’évanouit, droit, devoir, liberté,
L’avenir qui nous luit, la raison qui nous mène,
La sagesse divine et la sagesse humaine,
Dogme et livre, et Voltaire aussi bien que Jésus,
Puisqu’un reître allemand met sa botte dessus! -

Toi dont le gibet jette au monde qui commence,
Comme au monde qui va finir, une ombre immense,
John Brown, toi qui donnas aux peuples la leçon
D’un autre Golgotha sur un autre horizon,
Spectre, défais le noeud de ton cou, viens, ô juste,
Viens et fouette cet homme avec ta corde auguste!
C’est grâce à lui qu’un jour l’histoire en deuil dira:
— La France secourut l’Amérique, et tira
L’épée, et prodigua tout pour sa délivrance,
Et, peuples, l’Amérique a poignardé la France! -
Que le sauvage, fait pour guetter et ramper,
Que le huron, orné de couteaux à scalper,
Contemplent ce grand chef sanglant, le roi de Prusse,
Certes, que le Peau-Rouge admire le Borusse,
C’est tout simple; il le voit aux brigandages prêt,
Fauve, atroce, et ce bois comprend cette forêt;
Mais que l’homme incarnant le droit devant l’Europe,
L’homme que de rayons Colombie enveloppe,
L’homme en qui tout un monde héroïque est vivant,
Que cet homme se jette à plat ventre devant
L’affreux sceptre de fer des vieux âges funèbres,
Qu’il te donne, à Paris, le soufflet des ténèbres,
Qu’il livre sa patrie auguste à l’empereur,

Qu’il la mêle aux tyrans, aux meurtres, à l’horreur,
Qu’en ce triomphe horrible et sombre il la submerge,
Que dans ce lit d’opprobre il couche cette vierge,
Qu’il montre à l’univers, sur un immonde char,
L’Amérique baisant le talon de César,
Oh! cela fait trembler toutes les grandes tombes!
Cela remue, au fond des pâles catacombes,
Les os des fiers vainqueurs et des puissants vaincus!
Kosciusko frémissant réveille Spartacus;
Et Madison se dresse et Jefferson se lève;
Jackson met ses deux mains devant ce hideux rêve;
Déshonneur! crie Adams; et Lincoln étonné
Saigne, et c’est aujourd’hui qu’il est assassiné.

Indigne-toi, grand peuple. O nation suprême,
Tu sais de quel coeur tendre et filial je t’aime.
Amérique, je pleure. Oh! douloureux affront!
Elle n’avait encor qu’une auréole au front.
Son drapeau sidéral éblouissait l’histoire.
Washington, au galop de son cheval de gloire,
Avait éclaboussé d’étincelles les plis
De l’étendard, témoin des devoirs accomplis,
Et, pour que de toute ombre il dissipe les voiles,
L’avait superbement ensemencé d’étoiles.
Cette bannière illustre est obscurcie, hélas!
Je pleure... - Ah! sois maudit, malheureux qui mêlas
Sur le fier pavillon qu’un vent des cieux secoue
Aux gouttes de lumière une tache de boue!

IV

AU CANON LE V. H.

Ecoute-moi, ton tour viendra d’être écouté.
O canon, ô tonnerre, ô guerrier redouté,
Dragon plein de colère et d’ombre, dont la bouche
Mêle aux rugissements une flamme farouche,

Pesant colosse auquel s'amalgame l'éclair,
Toi qui disperseras l'aveugle mort dans l'air,
Je te bénis. Tu vas défendre cette ville.
O canon, sois muet dans la guerre civile,
Mais veille du côté de l'étranger. Hier
Tu sortis de la forge épouvantable et fier;
Les femmes te suivaient. Qu'il est beau! disaient-elles.
Car les Cimbres sont là. Leurs victoires sont telles
Qu'il en sort de la honte, et Paris fait de loin
Signe aux princes qu'il prend les peuples à témoin.
La lutte nous attend; viens, ô mon fils étrange,
Doublons-nous l'un par l'autre, et faisons un échange,
Et mets, ô noir vengeur, combattant souverain,
Ton bronze dans mon coeur, mon âme en ton airain.

O canon, tu seras bientôt sur la muraille.
Avec ton caisson plein de boîtes à mitraille,
Sautant sur le pavé, traîné par huit chevaux,
Au milieu d'une foule éclatant en bravos,
Tu t'en iras, parmi les croulantes masures,
Prendre ta place altière aux grandes embrasures
Où Paris indigné se dresse, sabre au poing.
Là ne t'endors jamais et ne t'apaise point.
Et, puisque je suis l'homme essayant sur la terre
Toutes les guérisons par l'indulgence austère,
Puisque je suis parmi les vivants en rumeur,
Au forum ou du haut de l'exil, le semeur
De la paix à travers l'immense guerre humaine,
Puisque vers le grand but où Dieu clément nous mène,
J'ai, triste ou souriant, toujours le doigt levé,
Puisque j'ai, moi, songeur par les deuils éprouvé,
L'amour pour évangile et l'union pour bible,
Toi qui portes mon nom, ô monstre, sois terrible!
Car l'amour devient haine en présence du mal;
Car l'homme esprit ne peut subir l'homme animal,
Et la France ne peut subir la barbarie;
Car l'idéal sublime est la grande patrie;

Et jamais le devoir ne fut plus évident
De faire obstacle au flot sauvage débordant,
Et de mettre Paris, l’Europe qu’il transforme,
Les peuples, sous l’abri d’une défense énorme;
Car si ce roi teuton n’était pas châtié,
Tout ce que l’homme appelle espoir, progrès, pitié,
Fraternité, fuirait de la terre sans joie;
Car César est le tigre et le peuple est la proie,
Et qui combat la France attaque l’avenir;
Car il faut élever, lorsqu’on entend hennir
Le cheval d’Attila dans l’ombre formidable,
Autour de l’âme humaine un mur inabordable,
Et Rome, pour sauver l’univers du néant,
Doit être une déesse, et Paris un géant!

C’est pourquoi des canons que la lyre a fait naître,
Que la strophe azurée enfanta, doivent être
Braqués, gueule béante, au-dessus du fossé;
C’est pourquoi le penseur frémissant est forcé
D’employer la lumière à des choses sinistres;
Devant les rois, devant le mal et ses ministres,
Devant ce grand besoin du monde, être sauvé,
Il sait qu’il doit combattre après avoir rêvé;
Il sait qu’il faut lutter, frapper, vaincre, dissoudre,
Et d’un rayon d’aurore il fait un coup de foudre.

V

PROUESSES BORUSSES

La conquête avouant sa soeur l’escroquerie,
C’est un progrès. En vain la conscience crie,
Par l’exploitation on complète l’exploit.
A l’or du voisin riche un voisin pauvre a droit.
Au dos de la victoire on met une besace;
En attendant qu’on ait la Lorraine et l’Alsace,
On décroche une montre au clou d’un horloger;

On veut dans une gloire immense se plonger,
Mais briser une glace est une sotte affaire,
Il vaut mieux l’emporter; à coup sûr on préfère
L’honneur à tout, mais l’homme a besoin de tabac,
On en vole. A travers Reichshoffen et Forbach,
A travers cette guerre où l’on eut cette chance
D’un Napoléon nain livrant la grande France,
Dans ces champs où manquaient Marceau, Hoche et Condé,
A travers Metz vendue et Strasbourg bombardé,
Parmi les cris, les morts tombés sous les mitrailles,
Montrant l’un sa cervelle et l’autre ses entrailles,
Les drapeaux avançant ou fuyant, les galops
Des escadrons pareils aux mers roulant leurs flots,
Au milieu de ce vaste et sinistre engrenage,
Conquérant pingre, on pense à son petit ménage;
On médite, ajoutant Shylock à Galgacus,
De meubler son amante aux dépens des vaincus;
On a pour idéal d’offrir une pendule
A quelque nymphe blonde au pied du mont Adule;
Bellone échevelée et farouche descend
Du nuage d’où sort l’éclair, d’où pleut le sang,
Et s’emploie à clouer des caisses d’emballage;
On rançonne un pays village par village;
On est terrible, mais fripon; on est des loups,
Des tigres et des ours qui seraient des filous.
On renverse un empire et l’on coupe une bourse.
César, droit sur son char, dit: Payez-moi ma course.
On massacre un pays, le sang est encor frais;
Puis on arrive avec le total de ses frais;
On tarife le meurtre, on cote la famine:
— Voilà bientôt six mois que je vous extermine;
C’est tant. Je ne saurais vous égorger à moins. -
Et l’on étonne au fond des cieux ces fiers témoins,
Les aïeux, les héros, pâles dans les nuages,
Par des hauts faits auxquels s’attachent des péages;
On s’inquiète peu de ces fantômes-là;
Avec cinq milliards on rentre au Walhalla.

Pirates, d’une banque on a fait l’abordage.
On copie en rapine, en fraude, en brigandage,
Les Bédouins à l’oeil louche et les Baskirs camards;
Et Schinderhannes met le faux nez du dieu Mars.
On a pour chefs des rois escarpes, et ces princes
Ont des ministres comme un larron a des pinces;
On foule sous ses pieds le scrupule aux abois;
En somme, on dévalise un peuple au coin d’un bois.
On détrousse, on dépouille, on grinche, on rafle, on pille.

Peut-être est-il plus beau d’avoir pris la Bastille.

VI

LES FORTS

Ils sont les chiens de garde énormes de Paris.
Comme nous pouvons être à chaque instant surpris,
Comme une horde est là, comme l’embûche vile
Parfois rampe jusqu’à l’enceinte de la ville,
Ils sont dix-neuf épars sur les monts, qui, le soir,
Inquiets, menaçants, guettent l’espace noir,
Et, s’entr’avertissant dès que la nuit commence,
Tendent leur cou de bronze autour du mur immense.
Ils restent éveillés quand nous nous endormons,
Et font tousser la foudre en leurs rauques poumons.
Les collines parfois, brusquement étoilées,
Jettent dans la nuit sombre un éclair aux vallées;
Le crépuscule lourd s’abat sur nous, masquant
Dans son silence un piège et dans sa paix un camp;
Mais en vain l’ennemi serpente et nous enlace;
Ils tiennent en respect toute une populace
De canons monstrueux, rôdant à l’horizon.
Paris bivouac, Paris tombeau, Paris prison,
Debout dans l’univers devenu solitude,
Fait sentinelle, et, pris enfin de lassitude,
S’assoupit; tout se tait, hommes, femmes, enfants,

Les sanglots, les éclats de rire triomphants,
Les pas, les chars, le quai, le carrefour, la grève,
Les mille toits d'où sort le murmure du rêve,
L'espoir qui dit je crois, la faim qui dit je meurs;
Tout fait silence; ô foule! indistinctes rumeurs!
Sommeil de tout un monde! ô songes insondables!
On dort, on oublie... - Eux, ils sont là, formidables.

Tout à coup on se dresse en sursaut; haletant,
On prête l'oreille, on se penche... - on entend
Comme le hurlement profond d'une montagne.
Toute la ville écoute et toute la campagne
Se réveille; et voilà qu'au premier grondement
Répond un second cri, sourd, farouche, inclément,
Et dans l'obscurité d'autres fracas s'écroulent,
Et d'échos en échos cent voix terribles roulent.
Ce sont eux. C'est qu'au fond des espaces confus,
Ils ont vu se grouper de sinistres affûts,
C'est qu'ils ont des canons surpris la silhouette;
C'est que, dans quelque bois d'où s'enfuit la chouette,
Ils viennent d'entrevoir, là-bas, au bord d'un champ,
Le fourmillement noir des bataillons marchant;
C'est que dans les halliers des yeux traîtres flamboient.

Comme c'est beau ces forts qui dans cette ombre aboient!

VII

A LA FRANCE

Personne pour toi. Tous sont d'accord. Celui-ci,
Nommé Gladstone, dit à tes bourreaux: merci!
Cet autre, nommé Grant, te conspue, et cet autre,
Nommé Bancroft, t'outrage; ici c'est un apôtre,
Là c'est un soldat, là c'est un juge, un tribun,
Un prêtre, l'un du Nord, l'autre du Sud; pas un
Que ton sang, à grands flots versé, ne satisfasse;

Pas un qui sur ta croix ne te crache à la face.
Hélas! qu'as-tu donc fait aux nations? Tu vins
Vers celles qui pleuraient, avec ces mots divins:
Joie et Paix! - Tu criais: - Espérance! Allégresse!
Sois puissante, Amérique, et toi sois libre, ô Grèce!
L'Italie était grande; elle doit l'être encor.
Je le veux! - Tu donnas à celle-ci ton or,
A celle-là ton sang, à toutes la lumière.
Tu défendis le droit des hommes, coutumière
De tous les dévoûments et de tous les devoirs.
Comme le boeuf revient repu des abreuvoirs,
Les hommes sont rentrés pas à pas à l'étable,
Rassasiés de toi, grande soeur redoutable,
De toi qui protégeas, de toi qui combattis.
Ah! se montrer ingrats, c'est se prouver petits.
N'importe! pas un d'eux ne te connaît. Leur foule
T'a huée, à cette heure où ta grandeur s'écroule,
Riant de chaque coup de marteau qui tombait
Sur toi, nue et sanglante et clouée au gibet.
Leur pitié plaint tes fils que la fortune amère
Condamne à la rougeur de t'avouer pour mère.
Tu ne peux pas mourir, c'est le regret qu'on a.
Tu penches dans la nuit ton front qui rayonna;
L'aigle de l'ombre est là qui te mange le foie;
C'est à qui reniera la vaincue; et la joie
Des rois pillant, pareils aux bandits des Adrets,
Charme l'Europe et plaît au monde... - Ah! je voudrais,
Je voudrais n'être pas Français pour pouvoir dire
Que je te choisis, France, et que, dans ton martyre,
Je te proclame, toi que ronge le vautour,
Ma patrie et ma gloire et mon unique amour!

VIII

NOS MORTS

Ils gisent dans le champ terrible et solitaire.

Leur sang fait une mare affreuse sur la terre;
Les vautours monstrueux fouillent leur ventre ouvert;
Leurs corps farouches, froids, épars sur le pré vert,
Effroyables, tordus, noirs, ont toutes les formes
Que le tonnerre donne aux foudroyés énormes;
Leur crâne est à la pierre aveugle ressemblant;
La neige les modèle avec son linceul blanc;
On dirait que leur main lugubre, âpre et crispée,
Tâche encor de chasser quelqu'un à coups d'épée;
Ils n'ont pas de parole, ils n'ont pas de regard;
Sur l'immobilité de leur sommeil hagard
Les nuits passent; ils ont plus de chocs et de plaies
Que les suppliciés promenés sur des claies;
Sous eux rampent le ver, la lame et la fourmi;
Ils s'enfoncent déjà dans la terre à demi
Comme dans l'eau profonde un navire qui sombre;
Leurs pâles os, couverts de pourriture et d'ombre,
Sont comme ceux auxquels Ézéchiel parlait;
On voit partout sur eux l'affreux coup du boulet,
La balafre du sabre et le trou de la lance;
Le vaste vent glacé souffle sur ce silence;
Ils sont nus et sanglants sous le ciel pluvieux.

O morts pour mon pays, je suis votre envieux.

IX

A QUI LA VICTOIRE DEFINITIVE?

Sachez-le, puisqu'il faut, Teutons, qu'on vous l'apprenne,
Non, vous ne prendrez pas l'Alsace et la Lorraine,
Et c'est nous qui prendrons l'Allemagne. Ecoutez:
Franchir notre frontière, entrer dans nos cités,
Voir chez nous les esprits marcher, lire nos livres,
Respirer l'air profond dont nos penseurs sont ivres,
C'est rendre à son insu son épée au progrès;
C'est boire à notre coupe, accepter nos regrets,

Nos deuils, nos maux féconds, nos voeux, nos espérances;
C’est pleurer nos pleurs; c’est envier nos souffrances;
C’est vouloir ce grand vent, la révolution;
C’est comprendre, ô Germains! ce que sait l’alcyon,
Que l’orage farouche est pour l’onde une fête,
Et que nous allons droit au but dans la tempête,
En lui laissant briser nos mâts et nos agrès.

Les rois donnent aux champs les peuples pour engrais,
Et ce meurtre s’appelle ensuite la victoire;
Ils jettent Austerlitz ou Rosbach à l’histoire,
Et disent: c’est fini. - Laissons le temps passer.
Ce qui vient de finir, ô rois, va commencer.
Oui, les peuples sont morts, mais le peuple va naître,
A travers les rois l’aube invincible pénètre;
L’aube c’est la Justice et c’est la Liberté.
Le conquérant se sent conquis. Dompteur dompté,
Il s’étonne; en son coeur plein d’une vague honte
Une construction mystérieuse monte;
Belluaire imbécile entré chez un esprit,
Il est la bête. Il voit l’idéal qui sourit,
Il tremble, et n’ayant pu le tuer, il l’adore.
Le glacier fond devant le rayon qui le dore.
Un jour, comme en chantant Linus lui remuait
Sa montagne, Titan, roi du granit muet,
Cria: ne bouge pas, roche glacée et lourde!
La roche répondit: crois-tu que je sois sourde?
Ainsi la masse écoute et songe; ainsi s’émeut,
Quand mai des rameaux noirs vient desserrer le noeud,
Quand la sève entre et court dans les branches nouvelles,
L’arbre qu’emplissait l’ombre et qu’empliront les ailes.
L’homme a d’informes blocs dans l’esprit, préjugés,
Vice, erreur, dogmes faux d’égoïsme rongés;
Mais que devant lui passe une voix, un exemple,
Toutes ces pierres vont faire en son âme un temple.
Homme! Thèbe éternelle en proie aux Amphions!

Ah! délivrez-vous donc, nous vous en défions,
Allemands, de Pascal, de Danton, de Voltaire!
Teutons, délivrez-vous de l’effrayant mystère
Du progrès qui se fait sa part à tout moment,
De la création maîtresse obscurément,
Du vrai démuselant l’ignorance sauvage,
Et du jour qui réduit toute âme en esclavage!
Esclavage superbe! obéissance au droit
Par qui l’erreur s’écroule et la raison s’accroît!
Délivrez-vous des monts qui vous offrent leur cime.
Délivrez-vous de l’aile inconnue et sublime
Que vous ne voyez pas et que vous avez tous!
Délivrez-vous du vent que nous soufflons sur vous!
Délivrez-vous du monde ignoré qui commence,
Du devoir, du printemps et de l’espace immense!
Délivrez-vous de l’eau, de la terre, de l’air,
Et de notre Corneille et de votre Schiller,
De vos poumons voulant respirer, des prunelles
Qui vous montrent là-haut les clartés éternelles,
De la vérité, vraie à toute heure, en tout lieu,
D’aujourd’hui, de demain... - Délivrez-vous de Dieu!
Ah! vous êtes en France, Allemands! prenez garde!
Ah! barbarie! ah! foule imprudente et hagarde,
Vous accourez avec des glaives! ah! vos camps,
Tels que l’ardent limon vomi par les volcans,
Roulent jusqu’à Paris hors de votre cratère!
Ah! vous venez chez nous nous prendre un peu de terre!
Eh bien, nous vous prendrons tout votre coeur!

Demain,
Demain, le but français étant le but humain,
Vous y courrez. Oui, vous, grande nation noire,
Vous irez à l’émeute, à la lutte, à la gloire,
A l’épreuve, aux grands chocs, aux sublimes malheurs,
Aux révolutions, comme l’abeille aux fleurs!
Hélas! vous tuez ceux par qui vous devez vivre.
Qu’importe la fanfare enflant ses voix de cuivre,

Ces guerres, ces fracas furieux, ces blocus!
Vous semblez nos vainqueurs, vous êtes nos vaincus.
Comme l’océan filtre au fond des madrépores,
Notre pensée en vous entre par tous les pores;
Demain vous maudirez ce que nous détestons;
Et vous ne pourrez pas vous en aller, Teutons,
Sans avoir fait ici provision de haine
Contre Pierre et César, contre l’omble et la chaîne;
Car nos regards de deuil, de colère et d’effroi,
Passent par-dessus vous, peuple, et frappent le roi!
Vous qui fûtes longtemps la pauvre tourbe aveugle
Gémissant au hasard comme le taureau beugle,
Vous puiserez chez nous l’altière volonté
D’exister, et d’avoir au front une clarté;
Et le ferme dessein n’aura rien de vulgaire
Que vous emporterez dans votre sac de guerre;
Ce sera l’âpre ardeur de faire comme nous,
Et d’être tous égaux et d’être libres tous;
Allemands, ce sera l’intention formelle
De foudroyer ce tas de trônes pêle-mêle,
De tendre aux nations la main, et de n’avoir
Pour maître que le droit, pour chef que le devoir;
Afin que l’univers sache, s’il le demande,
Que l’Allemagne est forte et que la France est grande;
Que le Germain candide est enfin triomphant,
Et qu’il est l’homme peuple et non le peuple enfant!

Vos hordes aux yeux bleus se mettront à nous suivre
Avec la joie étrange et superbe de vivre,
Et le contentement profond de n’avoir plus
D’enclumes pour forger des glaives superflus.
Le plus poignant motif que sur terre on rencontre
D’être pour la raison, c’est d’avoir été contre;
On sert le droit avec d’autant plus de vertu
Qu’on a le repentir de l’avoir combattu.
L’Allemagne, de tant de meurtres inondée,
Sera la prisonnière auguste de l’idée;

Car on est d’autant plus captif qu’on fut vainqueur;
Elle ne pourra pas rendre à la nuit son coeur;
L’Allemand ne pourra s’évader de son âme
Dont nous aurons changé la lumière et la flamme,
Et se reconnaîtra Français, en frémissant
De baiser nos pieds, lui qui buvait notre sang!

Non, vous ne prendrez pas la Lorraine et l’Alsace,
Et, je vous le redis, Allemands, quoi qu’on fasse,
C’est vous qui serez pris par la France. Comment?
Comme le fer est pris dans l’ombre par l’aimant;
Comme la vaste nuit est prise par l’aurore;
Comme avec ses rochers, où dort l’écho sonore,
Ses cavernes, ses trous de bêtes, ses halliers,
Et son horreur sacrée et ses loups familiers,
Et toute sa feuillée informe qui chancelle,
Le bois lugubre est pris par la claire étincelle.
Quand nos éclairs auront traversé vos massifs;
Quand vous aurez subi, puis savouré, pensifs,
Cet air de France où l’âme est d’autant plus à l’aise
Qu’elle y sent vaguement flotter la Marseillaise;
Quand vous aurez assez donné vos biens, vos droits,
Votre honneur, vos enfants, à dévorer aux rois;
Quand vous verrez César envahir vos provinces;
Quand vous aurez pesé de deux façons vos princes,
Quand vous vous serez dit: ces maîtres des humains
Sont lourds à notre épaule et légers dans nos mains;
Quand, tout ceci passé, vous verrez les entailles
Qu’auront faites sur nous et sur vous les batailles;
Quand ces charbons ardents dont en France les plis
Des drapeaux, des linceuls, des âmes, sont remplis,
Auront ensemencé vos profondeurs funèbres,
Quand ils auront creusé lentement vos ténèbres,
Quand ils auront en vous couvé le temps voulu,
Un jour, soudain, devant l’affreux sceptre absolu,
Devant les rois, devant les antiques Sodomes
Devant le mal, devant le joug, vous, forêt d’hommes,

Vous aurez la colère énorme qui prend feu;
Vous vous ouvrirez, gouffre, à l’ouragan de Dieu;
Gloire au Nord! ce sera l’aurore boréale
Des peuples, éclairant une Europe idéale!
Vous crierez: - Quoi! des rois! quoi donc! un empereur!
Quel éblouissement, l’Allemagne en fureur!
Va, peuple! O vision! combustion sinistre
De tout le noir passé, prêtre, autel, roi, ministre,
Dans un brasier de foi, de vie et de raison,
Faisant une lueur immense à l’horizon!
Frères, vous nous rendrez notre flamme agrandie.
Nous sommes le flambeau, vous serez l’incendie.

JANVIER 1871

I

1er JANVIER

Enfant, on vous dira plus tard que le grand-père
Vous adorait; qu'il fit de son mieux sur la terre,
Qu'il eut fort peu de joie et beaucoup d'envieux,
Qu'au temps où vous étiez petits il était vieux,
Qu'il n'avait pas de mots bourrus ni d'airs moroses,
Et qu'il vous a quittés dans la saison des roses;
Qu'il est mort, que c'était un bonhomme clément;
Que, dans l'hiver fameux du grand bombardement,
Il traversait Paris tragique et plein d'épées,
Pour vous porter des tas de jouets, des poupées,
Et des pantins faisant mille gestes bouffons;
Et vous serez pensifs sous les arbres profonds.

LETTRE A UNE FEMME (PAR BALLON MONTE, 10 JANVIER)

Paris terrible et gai combat. Bonjour, madame.
On est un peuple, on est un monde, on est une âme.
Chacun se donne à tous et nul ne songe à soi.
Nous sommes sans soleil, sans appui, sans effroi.
Tout ira bien pourvu que jamais on ne dorme.
Schmitz fait des bulletins plats sur la guerre énorme;
C'est Eschyle traduit par le père Brumoy.
J'ai payé quinze francs quatre oeufs frais, non pour moi,
Mais pour mon petit George et ma petite Jeanne.
Nous mangeons du cheval, du rat, de l'ours, de l'âne.
Paris est si bien pris, cerné, muré, noué,
Gardé, que notre ventre est l'arche de Noé;
Dans nos flancs toute bête, honnête ou mal famée,

Pénètre, et chien et chat, le mammon, le pygmée,
Tout entre, et la souris rencontre l’éléphant.
Plus d’arbres; on les coupe, on les scie on les fend;
Paris sur ses chenets met les Champs-Elysées.
On a l’onglée aux doigts et le givre aux croisées.
Plus de feu pour sécher le linge des lavoirs,
Et l’on ne change plus de chemise. Les soirs
Un grand murmure sombre abonde au coin des rues,
C’est la foule; tantôt ce sont des voix bourrues,
Tantôt des chants, parfois de belliqueux appels.
La Seine lentement traîne des archipels
De glaçons hésitants, lourds, où la canonnière
Court, laissant derrière elle une écumante ornière.
On vit de rien, on vit de tout, on est content.
Sur nos tables sans nappe, où la faim nous attend,
Une pomme de terre arrachée à sa crypte
Est reine, et les oignons sont dieux comme en Egypte.
Nous manquons de charbon, mais notre pain est noir.
Plus de gaz; Paris dort sous un large éteignoir;
A six heures du soir, ténèbres. Des tempêtes
De bombes font un bruit monstrueux sur nos têtes.
D’un bel éclat d’obus j’ai fait mon encrier.
Paris assassiné ne daigne pas crier.
Les bourgeois sont de garde autour de la muraille;
Ces pères, ces maris, ces frères qu’on mitraille,
Coiffés de leurs képis, roulés dans leurs cabans,
Guettent, ayant pour lit la planche de leurs bancs.
Soit. Moltke nous canonne et Bismarck nous affame.
Paris est un héros, Paris est une femme;
Il sait être vaillant et charmant; ses yeux vont,
Souriants et pensifs, dans le grand ciel profond,
Du pigeon qui revient au ballon qui s’envole.
C’est beau; le formidable est sorti du frivole.
Moi, je suis là, joyeux de ne voir rien plier.
Je dis à tous d’aimer, de lutter, d’oublier,
De n’avoir d’ennemi que l’ennemi; je crie:
Je ne sais plus mon nom, je m’appelle Patrie!

Quant aux femmes, soyez très fière, en ce moment
Où tout penche, elles sont sublimes simplement.
Ce qui fit la beauté des Romaines antiques [
Praestabat castas humilis fortunas Latinas,
Casulae, somnique breves, et vellere tusco
Vexatae duraeque manus, et proximus urbis
Annibal, et stantes Collina in turre mariti.
JUVÉNAL.
C’étaient leurs humbles toits, leurs vertus domestiques,
Leurs doigts que l’âpre laine avait faits noirs et durs,
Leurs courts sommeils, leur calme, Annibal près des murs,
Et leurs maris debout sur la porte Colline.
Ces temps sont revenus. La géante féline,
La Prusse tient Paris, et, tigresse, elle mord
Ce grand coeur palpitant du monde à moitié mort.
Eh bien, dans ce Paris, sous l’étreinte inhumaine,
L’homme n’est que Français, et la femme est Romaine.
Elles acceptent tout, les femmes de Paris,
Leur âtre éteint, leurs pieds par le verglas meurtris,
Au seuil noir des bouchers les attentes nocturnes,
La neige et l’ouragan vidant leurs froides urnes,
La famine, l’horreur, le combat, sans rien voir
Que la grande pairie et que le grand devoir;
Et Juvénal au fond de l’ombre est content d’elles.
Le bombardement fait gronder nos citadelles.
Dès l’aube, le tambour parle au clairon lointain;
La diane réveille, au vent frais du matin,
La grande ville pâle et dans l’ombre apparue;
Une vague fanfare erre de rue en rue.
On fraternise, on rêve un succès; nous offrons
Nos coeurs à l’espérance, à la foudre nos fronts.
La ville par la gloire et le malheur élue
Voit arriver les jours terribles et salue.
Eh bien, on aura froid! eh bien, on aura faim!
Qu’est cela? C’est la nuit. Et que sera la fin?
L’aurore. Nous souffrons, mais avec certitude.

La Prusse est le cachot et Paris est Latude.
Courage! on refera l'effort des jours anciens.
Paris avant un mois chassera les Prussiens.
Ensuite nous comptons, mes deux fils et moi, vivre
Aux champs, auprès de vous, qui voulez bien nous suivre,
Madame, et nous irons en mars vous en prier
Si nous ne sommes pas tués en février.

III

BETISE DE LA GUERRE

Ouvrière sans yeux, Pénélope imbécile,
Berceuse du chaos où le néant oscille,
Guerre, ô guerre occupée au choc des escadrons,
Toute pleine du bruit furieux des clairons,
O buveuse de sang, qui, farouche, flétrie,
Hideuse, entraîne l'homme en cette ivrognerie,
Nuée où le destin se déforme, où Dieu fuit,
Où flotte une clarté plus noire que la nuit,
Folle immense, de vent et de foudres armée,
A quoi sers-tu, géante, à quoi sers-tu, fumée,
Si tes écroulements reconstruisent le mal,
Si pour le bestial tu chasses l'animal,
Si tu ne sais, dans l'ombre où ton hasard se vautre,
Défaire un empereur que pour en faire un autre?

IV

Non, non, non! Quoi! ce roi de Prusse suffirait!
Quoi! Paris, ce lieu saint, cette cité forêt,
Cette habitation énorme des idées
Vers qui par des lueurs les âmes sont guidées,
Ce tumulte enseignant la science aux savants,
Ce grand lever d'aurore au milieu des vivants,
Paris, sa volonté, sa loi, son phénomène,
Sa consigne donnée à l'avant-garde humaine,

Son Louvre qu’a puni sa Grève, son beffroi
D’où sort tant d’espérance et d’où sort tant d’effroi,
Ses toits, ses murs, ses tours, son étrange équilibre
De Notre-Dame esclave et du Panthéon libre;
Quoi! cet infini, quoi! ce gouffre, cet amas,
Ce navire idéal aux invisibles mâts,
Paris, et sa moisson qu’il fauche et qu’il émonde,
Sa croissance mêlée à la grandeur du monde,
Ses révolutions, son exemple, et le bruit
Du prodige qu’au fond de sa forge il construit,
Quoi! ce qu’il fonde, invente, ébauche, essaie, et crée,
Quoi! l’avenir couvé sous son aile sacrée,
Tout s’évanouirait dans un coup de canon!
Quoi! ton rêve, ô Paris, serait un rêve! non.

Paris est du progrès toute la réussite.
Qu’importe que le nord roule son noir Cocyte,
Et qu’un flot de passants le submerge aujourd’hui,
Les siècles sont pour lui si l’heure est contre lui.
Il ne périra pas.

Quand la tempête gronde,
Mes amis, je me sens une foi plus profonde;
Je sens dans l’ouragan le devoir rayonner,
Et l’affirmation du vrai s’enraciner.
Car le péril croissant n’est pour l’âme autre chose
Qu’une raison de croître en courage, et la cause
S’embellit, et le droit s’affermit, en souffrant,
Et l’on semble plus juste alors qu’on est plus grand.
Il m’est fort malaisé, quant à moi, de comprendre
Qu’un lutteur puisse avoir un motif de se rendre;
Je n’ai jamais connu l’art de désespérer;
Il faut pour reculer, pour trembler, pour pleurer,
Pour être lâche, et faire avec l’honneur divorce,
Se donner une peine au-dessus de ma force.

V

SOMMATION

Laissez-la donc aller cette France immortelle!
Ne la conduisez pas! Et quel besoin a-t-elle
De vous, soldat vaillant, mais enclin à charger
Les saints du ciel du soin d’écarter le danger?
Pour Paris dont on voit flamboyer la couronne
A travers le nuage impur qui l’environne,
Pour ce monde en péril, pour ce peuple en courroux,
Vous êtes trop pieux, trop patient, trop doux;
Et ce sont des vertus dont nous n’avons que faire.
Vous croyez-vous de force à remorquer la sphère
Qui, superbe, impossible à garder en prison,
Sort de l’ombre au-dessus du sinistre horizon?
Laissez la France, énorme étoile échevelée,
Des ouragans hideux dissiper la mêlée,
Et combattre, et, splendeur irritée, astre épars,
Géante, tenir tête aux rois de toutes parts,
Vider son carquois d’or sur tous ces Schinderhannes,
Secouer sa crinière ardente, et dans leurs crânes,
Dans leurs casques d’airain, dans leurs fronts, dans leurs yeux
Dans leurs coeurs, enfoncer ses rayons furieux!

Vous ne comprenez pas cette haine sacrée.
L’heure est sombre; il s’agit de sauver l’empyrée
Qu’une nuée immonde et triste vient ternir,
De dégager le bleu lointain de l’avenir,
Et de faire une guerre implacable à l’abîme.
Vous voyez en tremblant Paris être sublime;
Et vous craignez, esprit myope et limité,
Cette démagogie immense de clarté.
Ah! laissez cette France, espèce d’incendie
Dont la flamme indomptable est par les vents grandie,
Rugir, cribler d’éclairs la brume qui s’enfuit,
Et faire repentir les princes de la nuit
D’être venus jeter sur le volcan solaire

Leur fange, et d'avoir mis la lumière en colère!
L'aube, pour ces rois vils, difformes, teints de sang,
Devient épouvantable en s'épanouissant;
Laissez s'épanouir là-haut cette déesse!
Ne gênez pas, vous fait pour qu'on vous mène en laisse
La grande nation qui ne veut pas de frein.
Laissez la Marseillaise ivre de son refrain
Se ruer éperdue à travers les batailles.
La lumière est un glaive; elle fait des entailles
Dans le nuage ainsi qu'un bélier dans la tour;
Laissez donc s'accomplir la revanche du jour!
Vous l'entravez lieu de l'aider. Dans l'outrage,
Un grand peuple doit être admirable avec rage.
Quand l'obscurité fauve et perfide a couvert
La plaine, et fait un champ sépulcral du pré vert,
Du bois un ennemi, du fleuve un précipice,
Quand elle a protégé de sa noirceur propice
Toutes les trahisons des renards et des loups,
Quand tous les êtres bas, visqueux, abjects, jaloux,
L'affreux lynx, le chacal boiteux, l'hyène obscène,
L'aspic lâche, ont pu, grâce à la brume malsaine,
Sortir, rôder, glisser, ramper, boire du sang,
Le matin vient ainsi qu'un vengeur, et l'on sent
De l'indignation dans le jour qui se lève.
Guillaume, ce spectre, et la Prusse, ce rêve,
Quand la meute des rois voraces, quand l'essaim
De tous les noirs oiseaux qu'anime un vil dessein
Et que l'instinct féroce aux carnages attire,
Quand la guerre, à la fois larron, hydre et satyre,
Quand les fléaux, que l'ombre inexorable suit,
Envahissent l'azur des peuples, font la nuit,
Ne vous en mêlez pas, vous soldat cher au prêtre;
Laissez la France au seuil des gouffres apparaître,
Se dresser, empourprer les cimes, resplendir,
Et, dardant en tous sens, du zénith au nadir,
Son éblouissement qui sauve et qui dévore,
Terrible, délivrer le ciel à coups d'aurore!

VI

UNE BOMBE AUX FEUILLANTINES

Qu'es-tu? quoi, tu descends de là-haut, misérable!
Quoi! toi, le plomb, le feu, la mort, l'inexorable,
Reptile de la guerre au sillon tortueux,
Quoi! toi, l'assassinat cynique et monstrueux
Que les princes du fond des nuits jettent aux hommes,
Toi, crime, toi, ruine et deuil, toi qui te nommes
Haine, effroi, guet-apens, carnage, horreur, courroux,
C'est à travers l'azur que tu t'abats sur nous!
Chute affreuse de fer, éclosion infâme,
Fleur de bronze éclatée en pétales de flamme,
O vile foudre humaine, ô toi par qui sont grands
Les bandits, et par qui sont divins les tyrans,
Servante des forfaits royaux, prostituée,
Par quel prodige as-tu jailli de la nuée?
Quelle usurpation sinistre de l'éclair!
Comment viens-tu du ciel, toi qui sors de l'enfer!

L'homme que tout à l'heure effleura ta morsure,
S'était assis pensif au coin d'une masure.
Ses yeux cherchaient dans l'ombre un rêve qui brilla;
Il songeait; il avait, tout petit, joué là;
Le passé devant lui, plein de voix enfantines,
Apparaissait; c'est là qu'étaient les Feuillantines;
Ton tonnerre idiot foudroie un paradis.
Oh! que c'était charmant! comme on riait jadis!
Vieillir, c'est regarder une clarté décrue.
Un jardin verdissait où passe cette rue.
L'obus achève, hélas, ce qu'a fait le pavé.
Ici les passereaux pillaient le sénevé,
Et les petits oiseaux se cherchaient des querelles;
Les lueurs de ce bois étaient surnaturelles;
Que d'arbres! quel air pur dans les rameaux tremblants!

On fut la tête blonde, on a des cheveux blancs;
On fut une espérance et l'on est un fantôme.
Oh! comme on était jeune à l'ombre du vieux dôme!
Maintenant on est vieux comme lui. Le voilà.
Ce passant rêve. Ici son âme s'envola
Chantante, et c'est ici qu'à ses vagues prunelles
Apparurent des fleurs qui semblaient éternelles.
Ici la vie était de la lumière; ici
Marchait, sous le feuillage en avril épaissi,
Sa mère qu'il tenait par un pan de sa robe.
Souvenirs! comme tout brusquement se dérobe!
L'aube ouvrant sa corolle à ses regards a lui
Dans ce ciel où flamboie en ce moment sur lui
L'épanouissement effroyable des bombes.
O l'ineffable aurore où volaient des colombes!
Cet homme, que voici lugubre, était joyeux.
Mille éblouissements émerveillaient ses yeux.
Printemps! en ce jardin abondaient les pervenches,
Les roses, et des tas de pâquerettes blanches
Qui toutes semblaient rire au soleil se chauffant,
Et lui-même était fleur, puisqu'il était enfant.

VII

LE PIGEON

Sur terre un gouffre d'ombre énorme où rien ne luit,
Comme si l'on avait versé là de la nuit,
Et qui semble un lac noir; dans le ciel un point sombre.

Lac étrange. Des flots, non, mais des toits sans nombre;
Des ponts comme à Memphis, des tours comme à Sion;
Des têtes, des regards, des voix; ô vision!
Cette stagnation de ténèbres murmure,
Et ce lac est vivant, une enceinte le mure,
Et sur lui de l'abîme on croit voir l'affreux sceau.

Le lac sombre est la ville, et le point noir l’oiseau;
Le vague alérion vole au peuple fantôme;
Et l’un vient au secours de l’autre. C’est l’atome
Qui vient dans l’ombre en aide au colosse.

L’oiseau
Ignare, et, doux lutteur, à travers ce réseau
De nuée et de vent qui flotte dans l’espace,
Il vole, il a son but, il veut, il cherche, il passe,
Reconnaissant d’en haut fleuves, arbres, buissons,
Par-dessus la rondeur des blêmes horizons.
Il songe à sa femelle, à sa douce couvée,
Au nid, à sa maison, pas encor retrouvée,
Au roucoulement tendre, au mois de mai charmant;
Il vole; et cependant, au fond du firmament,
Il traîne à son insu toute notre ombre humaine;
Et tandis que l’instinct vers son toit le ramène
Et que sa petite âme est toute à ses amours,
Sous sa plume humble et frêle il a les noirs tambours,
Les clairons, la mitraille éclatant par volées,
La France et l’Allemagne éperdument mêlées,
La bataille, l’assaut, les vaincus, les vainqueurs,
Et le chuchotement mystérieux des coeurs,
Et le vaste avenir qui, fatal, enveloppe
Dans le sort de Paris le destin de l’Europe.

Oh! qu’est-ce que c’est donc que l’Inconnu qui fait
Croître un germe malgré le roc qui l’étouffait;
Qui, tenant, maniant, mêlant les vents, les ondes,
Les tonnerres, la mer où se perdent les sondes,
Pour faire ce qui vit prenant ce qui n’est plus,
Maître des infinis, a tous les superflus,
Et qui, puisqu’il permet la faute, la misère,
Le mal, semble parfois manquer du nécessaire;
Qui pour une hirondelle édifie un donjon,
Qui pour créer un lys, ou gonfler un bourgeon,
Ou pousser une feuille à travers les écorces,

Prodigue l’océan mystérieux des forces;
Qui n’a l’air de savoir que faire de l’amas
Des neiges, et de l’urne obscure des frimas
Toujours prête à noyer les cieux; qui parfois semble,
Laissant dépendre tout d’un point d’appui qui tremble,
D’un roseau, d’un hasard, d’un souffle aérien,
S’épuiser en efforts prodigieux pour rien;
Qui se sert d’un titan moins bien que d’un pygmée;
Qui dépense en colère inutile, en fumée,
Tous ces géants, Vésuve, Etna, Chimborazo,
Et fait porter un monde à l’aile d’un oiseau!

VIII

LA SORTIE

L’aube froide blêmit, vaguement apparue.
Une foule défile en ordre dans la rue;
Je la suis, entraîné par ce grand bruit vivant
Que font les pas humains quand ils vont en avant.
Ce sont des citoyens partant pour la bataille.
Purs soldats! Dans les rangs, plus petit par la taille,
Mais égal par le coeur, l’enfant avec fierté
Tient par la main son père, et la femme à côté
Marche avec le fusil du mari sur l’épaule.
C’est la tradition des femmes de la Gaule
D’aider l’homme à porter l’armure, et d’être là,
Soit qu’on nargue César, soit qu’on brave Attila,
Que va-t-il se passer? L’enfant rit, et la femme
Ne pleure pas. Paris subit la guerre infâme;
Et les Parisiens sont d’accord sur ceci
Que par la honte seule un peuple est obscurci,
Que les aïeux seront contents, quoi qu’il arrive,
Et que Paris mourra pour que la France vive.
Nous garderons l’honneur; le reste, nous l’offrons.
Et l’on marche. Les yeux sont indignés, les fronts
Sont pâles; on y lit: Foi, Courage, Famine.

Et la troupe à travers les carrefours chemine,
Tête haute, élevant son drapeau, saint haillon;
La famille est toujours mêlée au bataillon;
On ne se quittera que là-bas aux barrières.
Ces hommes attendris et ces femmes guerrières
Chantent; du genre humain Paris défend les droits.
Une ambulance passe, et l'on songe à ces rois
Dont le caprice fait ruisseler des rivières
De sang sur le pavé derrière les civières.
L'heure de la sortie approche; les tambours
Battent la marche en foule au fond des vieux faubourgs;
Tous se hâtent; malheur à toi qui nous assièges!
Ils ne redoutent pas les pièges, car les pièges
Que trouvent les vaillants en allant devant eux
Font le vaincu superbe et le vainqueur honteux.
Ils arrivent aux murs, ils rejoignent l'armée.
Tout à coup le vent chasse un flocon de fumée;
Halte! C'est le premier coup de canon. Allons!
Un long frémissement court dans les bataillons,
Le moment est venu, les portes sont ouvertes,
Sonnez, clairons! Voici là-bas les plaines vertes,
Les bois où rampe au loin l'invisible ennemi,
Et le traître horizon, immobile, endormi,
Tranquille, et plein pourtant de foudres et de flammes.
On entend des voix dire: Adieu! - Nos fusils, femmes
Et les femmes, le front serein, le coeur brisé,
Leur rendent leur fusil après l'avoir baisé.

IX

DANS LE CIRQUE

Le lion du midi voit venir l'ours polaire.
L'ours court droit au lion, grince, et plein de colère,
L'attaque plus grondant que l'autan nubien.
Et le lion lui dit: Imbécile! c'est bien.
Nous sommes dans le cirque, et tu me fais la guerre.

Pourquoi? Vois-tu là-bas cet homme au front vulgaire?
C’est un nommé Néron, empereur des Romains.
Tu combats pour lui. Saigne, il rit, il bat des mains.
Nous ne nous gênions pas dans la grande nature,
Frère, et le ciel sur nous fait la même ouverture,
Et tu ne vois pas moins d’astres que je n’en vois.
Que nous veut donc ce maître assis sur un pavois?
Il est content; et nous, nous mourons par son ordre;
Et c’est à lui de rire et c’est à nous de mordre.
Il nous fait massacrer l’un par l’autre; et, pendant,
Frère, que mon coup d’ongle attend ton coup de dent,
Il est là sur son trône et nous regarde faire.
Nos tourments sont ses jeux; il est d’une autre sphère.
Frère, quand nous versons à ruisseaux notre sang,
Il appelle cela de la pourpre. Innocent,
Niais, viens m’attaquer. Soit. Mes griffes sont prêtes;
Mais je pense et je dis que nous sommes des bêtes
De nous entretuer avec tant de fureur,
Et que nous ferions mieux de manger l’empereur.

X

APRES LES VICTOIRES DE BAPAUME, DE DIJON ET DE VILLERSEXEL

Côté des hommes. Soit. C’est le meilleur côté;
Je le veux bien. Pourtant naguère j’ai noté,
Pour les mettre à profit, les choses fort honnêtes
Que le lion disait à l’ours; côté des bêtes.
C’est à peu prés ceci:

— L’ours! il est peu moral
De venir, dans l’espoir de passer caporal,
M’attaquer, moi qui suis ton frère ayant des ongles.
L’ours! tu vis dans la neige et je vis dans les jongles;
Tu viens du nord, je suis du midi. Ce Néron
N’est rien qu’un nom hideux soufflé dans un clairon.

Il a pris un morceau de l’Europe quelconque;
Cent héraults, appliquant leurs bouches à leur conque,
Précédent ce tueur qui vainquit par hasard;
César fut crocodile et Néron est lézard;
L’un est le grand, et l’autre est le petit. Mon frère,
Méprisons ces gens-là. Nous battre! pourquoi faire?
J’affirme qu’il serait beaucoup plus à propos
D’aller droit à Néron, et, malgré ses troupeaux
De garde éthiopienne et de garde sicambre,
D’en empoigner chacun tranquillement un membre.
Déshabiller Néron de sa peau de César
Me plairait; envoyer ma ruade à son char
Me tente; il sied parfois qu’une griffe efficace
Fouille une majesté jusque dans la carcasse,
Et nous verrions peut-être en vidant ce vainqueur,
Toi, qu’il est sans cervelle, et moi, qu’il est sans coeur.
Mordre son maître est doux; je pense que nos gueules,
Si la mode en venait, ne resteraient pas seules.
Tout ce tas d’animaux battus, rampant, grondant,
Paierait les coups de fouet avec des coups de dent.
Ce serait beau. La terre est pour nous assez ample;
Aimons-nous. Mon avis, puisqu’il s’agit d’exemple,
Est d’en donner un bon et non pas un mauvais.
Quant à ce tyran-ci, j’ai faim, et j’y rêvais.
Est-il César? est-il Néron? que nous importe!
Quelque tache qu’il ait, quelque laurier qu’il porte,
Frère, il n’éveille en moi que le même appétit;
Je le dévore grand, je le mange petit.

L’ours n’ayant pas compris ces paroles d’un sage,
Le grand lion clément lui griffa le visage
Et l’éborgna; si bien que l’ours, devant témoins,
Eut la honte de plus avec un oeil de moins.

XI

ENTRE DEUX BOMBARDEMENTS

Dès votre premier cri, Jeanne, vous excitiez
Nos admirations autant que nos pitiés;
Vous naissiez; vous aviez cette toute-puissance,
La grâce; vous étiez la crèche qu’on encense,
L’humble marmot divin qui n’a point encor d’yeux,
Et qu’une étoile vient chercher du haut des cieux;
Puis vous eûtes six jours, vous eûtes six semaines,
Puis six mois, lueur frêle en nos ombres humaines.
Jeanne, vous avancez en âge cependant;
Vous avez des cheveux, vous avez une dent,
Et vous voilà déjà presque un grand personnage.
En vous à peine un peu du nouveau-né surnage,
Vous voulez être à terre; il vous faut le péril,
La marche, et le maillot vous semble puéril;
Votre frère plus vieux chante la Marseillaise;
Il a deux ans; et vous, vous grimpez sur ma chaise,
Ou, fière, vous rampez derrière un paravent;
Vous voulez un jouet savant, même vivant;
Avec un jeune chat vous êtes en ménage;
La croissance vous tient dans son souple engrenage
Et remplace l’enfant qui vagit par l’enfant
Qui jase, et l’humble cri par le cri triomphant;
L’ange qui mange rit de l’ange à la mamelle;
Vous vous transfigurez sans cesse, et le temps mêle
A la Jeanne d’hier la Jeanne d’aujourd’hui.
A chaque pas qu’il fait, l’enfant derrière lui
Laisse plusieurs petits fantômes de lui-même.

On se souvient de tous, on les pleure, on les aime,
Et ce seraient des morts s’il n’était vivant, lui.
Déjà plus d’une étoile en ce doux astre a lui.
Il semble qu’en cet être enchanté, pour nous plaire,
Chaque âge tour à tour donne son exemplaire;
C’est un soleil levant que ce petit destin!
Car le sort est masqué de rayons le matin;
Et les blancheurs de l’aube, aimable et chaste fête,

Viennent l’une après l’autre entourer cette tête
Et lui faire on ne sait quel pur couronnement.
On dirait que la vie, avec un soin charmant,
Essaie à ce jésus toutes les auréoles,
Se préparant ainsi par les caresses molles,
Les roses, les baisers, le rire frais et prompt,
A lui mettre plus tard les épines au front.

XII

Mais, encore une fois, qui donc à ce pauvre homme
A livré ce Paris qui contient Sparte et Rome?
Où donc a-t-on été chercher ce guide-là?
Qui donc à nos destins terribles le mêla?
Ainsi, lorsqu’il s’agit de s’évader du gouffre,
De sortir du chaos qui menace et qui souffre,
De dissiper la nuit, de monter au-dessus
Des nuages profonds dans l’abîme aperçus,
Et de verser l’aurore aux vagues infinies,
Nous ne nous fions plus à ces quatre génies,
Audace, Humanité, Volonté, Liberté,
Qui traînent dans les cieux le char de la clarté,
Et que tu fais bondir sous ta main familière,
France; on prend pour meneur et pour auxiliaire
On ne sait quel pauvre être obscurément conduit,
Lent et fidèle, ayant derrière lui la nuit,
Dont le suprême instinct serait d’être immobile,
Et qui, tâtant l’espace et tendant sa sébile,
Sans tactique, sans but, sans colère, sans art,
Attend de l’inconnu l’aumône d’un hasard!
C’est le moment de mettre en fuite l’ombre noire
Et d’ouvrir cette porte altière, la victoire;
On ne se croirait pas guidé, gardé, ni sûr
De pouvoir s’enfoncer fièrement dans l’azur,
Et d’échapper aux chocs, aux fureurs, aux huées,
Aux coups de fronde, aux vents, à travers les nuées,
Et d’éviter l’écueil, la chute, le récif,

Si cet humble petit marcheur, morne et poussif,
Rêveur comme la taupe, utile comme l’âne,
Ne complétait l’énorme attelage qui plane!
Quoi! dans l’heure où la France est en péril, ayant
Pour tirer hors des flots le quadrige effrayant,
Les quatre esprits géants qui brisent tous les voiles,
Monstres dont la crinière est mêlée aux étoiles
Et que suit, essoufflé, l’essaim des aquilons,
Nous disons: Ce n’est pas assez! et nous voulons
Un renfort, et, voyant le précipice immense,
Voyant l’ombre qu’il faut franchir, notre démence,
Devant le noir nadir et le zénith vermeil,
Ajoute un chien d’aveugle aux chevaux du soleil!

XIII

CAPITULATION

Ainsi les nations les plus grandes chavirent!
C’est à l’avortement que tes travaux servirent,
O peuple! et tu dis: Quoi! pour cela nous restions
Debout toute la nuit sur les hauts bastions!
C’est pour cela qu’on fut brave, altier, invincible,
Et que, la Prusse étant la flèche, on fut la cible;
C’est pour cela qu’on fut héros, qu’on fut martyr;
C’est pour cela qu’on a combattu plus que Tyr,
Plus que Sagonte, plus que Byzance et Corinthe;
C’est pour cela qu’on a cinq mois subi l’étreinte
De ces Teutons furtifs, noirs, ayant dans les yeux
La sinistre stupeur des bois mystérieux!
C’est pour cela qu’on a lutté, creusé des mines,
Rompu des ponts, bravé la peste et les famines,
Fait des fossés, planté des pieux, bâti des forts,
France, et qu’on a rempli de la gerbe des morts
Le tombeau, cette grange obscure des batailles!
C’est pour cela qu’on a vécu sous les mitrailles!
Cieux profonds! après tant d’épreuves, après tant

D’efforts du grand Paris, sanglant, broyé, content,
Après l’auguste espoir, après l’immense attente
De la cité superbe à vaincre haletante,
Qui semblait, se ruant sur les canons d’airain,
Ronger son mur ainsi que le cheval son frein;
Quand la vertu croissait dans les douleurs accrues,
Quand les petits enfants, bombardés dans les rues,
Ramassaient en riant obus et biscayens,
Quand pas un n’a faibli parmi les citoyens,
Quand on était là, prêts à sortir, trois cent mille,
Ce tas de gens de guerre a rendu cette ville!
Avec ton dévoûment, ta fureur, ta fierté,
Et ton courage, ils ont fait de la lâcheté,
O peuple, et ce sera le frisson de l’histoire
De voir à tant de honte aboutir tant de gloire!

Paris, 27 janvier.

FÉVRIER

I

AVANT LA CONCLUSION DU TRAITE

Si nous terminions cette guerre
Comme la Prusse le voudrait,
La France serait comme un verre
Sur la table d'un cabaret;

On le vide, puis on le brise.
Notre fier pays disparaît.
O deuil! il est ce qu'on méprise,
Lui qui fut ce qu'on admirait.

Noir lendemain! l'effroi pour règle;
Toute lie est bue à son tour;
Et le vautour vient après l'aigle,
Et l'orfraie après le vautour;

Deux provinces écartelées;
Strasbourg en croix, Metz au cachot;
Sedan, déserteur des mêlées,
Marquant la France d'un fer chaud;

Partout, dans toute âme captive,
Le goût abject d'un vil bonheur
Remplace l'orgueil; on cultive
La croissance du déshonneur;

Notre antique splendeur flétrie;
L'opprobre sur nos grands combats;
L'étonnement de la patrie
Point accoutumée aux fronts bas;

L’ennemi dans nos citadelles,
Sur nos tours l’ombre d’Attila,
De sorte que les hirondelles
Disent: la France n’est plus là!

La bouche pleine de Bazaine,
La Renommée au vol brisé
Salit de sa bave malsaine
Son vieux clairon vertdegrisé;

Si l’on se bat, c’est contre un frère;
On ne sait plus ton nom, Bayard!
On est un assassin pour faire
Oublier qu’on fut un fuyard;

Une âpre nuit sur les fronts monte;
Nulle âme n’ose s’envoler;
Le ciel constate notre honte
Par le refus de s’étoiler;

Froid sombre! on voit, à plis funèbres,
Entre les peuples se fermer
Une profondeur de ténèbres
Telle qu’on ne peut plus s’aimer;

Entre France et Prusse on s’abhorre;
Tout ce troupeau d’hommes nous hait;
Et notre éclipse est leur aurore,
Et notre tombe est leur souhait;

Naufrage! Adieu les grandes tâches!
Tout est trompé; tout est trompeur;
On dit de nos drapeaux: Ces lâches!
Et de nos canons: Ils ont peur!

Plus de fierté; plus d’espérance;
Sur l’histoire un suaire épais... -

Dieu, ne fais pas tomber la France
Dans l'abîme de cette paix!

Bordeaux, 14 février.

AUX REVEURS DE MONARCHIE

Je suis en république, et pour roi j'ai moi-même.
Sachez qu'on ne met point aux voix ce droit suprême;
Ecoutez bien, messieurs, et tenez pour certain
Qu'on n'escamote pas la France un beau matin.
Nous, enfants de Paris, cousins des Grecs d'Athènes,
Nous raillons et frappons. Nous avons dans les veines
Non du sang de fellahs ni du sang d'esclavons,
Mais un bon sang gaulois et français. Nous avons
Pour pères les grognards et les Francs pour ancêtres:
Retenez bien ceci que nous sommes les maîtres.
La Liberté jamais en vain ne nous parla.
Souvenez-vous aussi que nos mains que voilà,
Ayant brisé des rois, peuvent briser des cuistres.
Bien. Faites-vous préfets, ambassadeurs, ministres,
Et dites-vous les uns aux autres grand merci.
O faquins, gorgez-vous. N'ayez d'autre souci,
Dans ces royaux logis dont vous faites vos antres,
Que d'aplatir vos coeurs et d'arrondir vos ventres;
Emplissez-vous d'orgueil, de vanité, d'argent,
Bien. Allez. Nous aurons un mépris indulgent,
Nous nous détournerons et vous laisserons faire;
L'homme ne peut hâter l'heure que Dieu diffère.
Soit. Mais n'attentez pas au droit du peuple entier.
Le droit au fond des coeurs, libre, indomptable, altier
Vit, guette tous vos pas, vous juge, vous défie,
Et vous attend. J'affirme et je vous certifie
Que vous seriez hardis d'y toucher seulement
Rien que pour essayer et pour voir un moment!

Rois, larrons! vous avez des poches assez grandes
Pour y mettre tout l'or du pays, les offrandes
Des pauvres, le budget, tous nos millions, mais
Pour y mettre nos droits et notre honneur, jamais!
Jamais vous n'y mettrez la grande République.
D'un côté tout un peuple; et de l'autre une clique!
Qu'est votre droit divin devant le droit humain?
Nous votons aujourd'hui, nous voterons demain.
Le souverain, c'est nous; nous voulons, tous ensemble,
Régner comme il nous plaît, choisir qui bon nous semble,
Nommer qui nous convient dans notre bulletin.
Gare à qui met la griffe aux boites du scrutin!
Gare à ceux d'entre vous qui fausseraient le vote!
Nous leur ferions danser une telle gavotte,
Avec des violons si bien faits tout exprès,
Qu'ils en seraient encor pâles dix ans après!

III

PHILOSOPHIE DES SACRES ET COURONNEMENTS

Cet homme est laid, cet homme est vieux, cet homme est bête.
Qu'est-ce que vous mettez sur cette pauvre tête?
Une couronne? Non, deux couronnes. Non, trois.
Celle des empereurs avec celle des rois,
Le laurier de César, la croix de Charlemagne,
Et puis un peu de France et beaucoup d'Allemagne.
Sous cet amas jadis Charles Quint vacilla.
La paix du monde tient à ce que tout cela
Sur ce vieux front tremblant demeure en équilibre.
Ce bonhomme vraiment serait plus heureux libre,
Et sans lui nous serions plus à notre aise aussi.
S'il a mal digéré, le ciel est obscurci;
Son moindre borborygme est une âpre secousse;
On chancelle s'il crache, on s'écroule s'il tousse;
Son ignorance fait sur la terre un brouillard.

Pourquoi ne pas laisser tranquille ce vieillard?
S’il n’avait ni soldats, ni ducs, ni connétables,
Nous le recevrions volontiers à nos tables;
Nos verres, sous le pampre, au soleil, en plein vent,
Choqueraient le tien, sire, et tu serais vivant.
Non, l’on t’empaille idole, et l’on te pétrifie
Sous un lourd casque à pointe, et, comme on se défie
Du roi d’en haut jaloux des rois d’en bas, on met,
Sire, un paratonnerre en cuivre à ton sommet;
Et ton peuple est si fier qu’il t’adore; on t’affuble
D’un manteau comme on passe au pape une chasuble,
Et te voilà tyran, et nous t’avons sur nous,
Le goût de l’homme étant de se mettre à genoux.
Tu portes désormais l’Etna comme Encelade,
Et comme Atlas le monde. O maître, sois malade,
Infirme, catarrheux, vieux tant que tu voudras,
Claque des dents avec la fièvre entre deux draps,
Qu’importe? l’univers n’en est pas moins ta chose.
L’Europe est un effet dont tu seras la cause.
Rayonne. A ta cheville aucun héros ne va.
Bossuet jettera sous tes pieds Jehovah;
Tu seras proclamé Très-Haut en pleine chaire.
Un roi, fût-il un nain, fût-il un pauvre hère,
Hydropique, goitreux, perclus, tortu, fourbu,
Moins ferme sur ses pieds qu’un reître ayant trop bu,
Eût-il morve et farcin, rachis, goutte et gravelle,
Fût-il maigre d’esprit et petit de cervelle,
N’eût-il pas beaucoup plus de caboche qu’un rat,
Fût-il, sous la splendeur du cordon d’apparat,
Dans l’ombre enguirlandé d’un engin herniaire,
Reste auguste et puissant jusqu’à l’heure dernière
Et jusqu’au soubresaut de son hoquet final;
Tous, l’homme de l’autel, l’homme du tribunal,
Prosternent devant lui leur grave platitude;
Il a l’effarement de la décrépitude,
C’est toujours César; même en ruine et mourant,
La majesté s’obstine et le couvre, il est grand;

Et la pourpre est sur lui, sainte, splendide, austère,
Quand du sceptre et du trône il passe aux vers de terre;
Agonisant, il règne; on le voit s'assoupir,
On craint presque un tonnerre en son dernier soupir;
La foule aux reins courbés le place en un tel temple
Qu'elle tremble, et d'en bas l'admire et le contemple
Quand misérable il entre au sépulcre béant,
Et le croit encor dieu qu'il est déjà néant.

IV

A CEUX QUI REPARLENT DE FRATERNITE

Quand nous serons vainqueurs, nous verrons. Montrons-leur,
Jusque-là, le dédain qui sied à la douleur.
L'oeil âprement baissé convient à la défaite.
Libre, on était apôtre, esclave, on est prophète;
Nous sommes garrottés! Plus de nations soeurs!
Et je prédis l'abîme à nos envahisseurs.
C'est la fierté de ceux qu'on a mis à la chaîne
De n'avoir désormais d'autre abri que la haine.
Aimer les Allemands? Cela viendra, le jour
Où par droit de victoire on aura droit d'amour.
La déclaration de paix n'est jamais hanche
De ceux qui, terrassés, n'ont pas pris leur revanche;
Attendons notre tour de barrer le chemin.
Mettons-les sous nos pieds, puis tendons-leur la main.
Je ne puis que saigner tant que la France pleure.
Ne me parlez donc pas de concorde à cette heure;
Une fraternité bégayée à demi
Et trop tôt, fait hausser l'épaule à l'ennemi;
Et l'offre de donner aux rancunes relâche
Qui demain sera digne, aujourd'hui serait lâche.

V

LOI DE FORMATION DU PROGRES

Une dernière guerre! hélas, il la faut! oui.

Quoi! le deuil triomphant, le meurtre épanoui,
Sont les conditions de nos progrès! Mystère!
Quel est donc ce travail étrange de la terre?
Quelle est donc cette loi du développement
De l’homme par l’enfer, la peine et le tourment?
Pour quelque but final dont notre humble prunelle
N’aperçoit même pas la lueur éternelle,
L’être des profondeurs a-t-il donc décrété,
Dans les azurs sans fond de la sublimité,
Que l’homme ne doit point faire un pas qui n’enseigne
De quel pied il chancelle et de quel flanc il saigne,
Que la douleur est l’or dont se paie ici-bas
Le bonheur acheté par tant d’âpres combats;
Que toute Rome doit commencer par un antre;
Que tout enfantement doit déchirer le ventre;
Qu’en ce monde l’idée aussi bien que la chair
Doit saigner, et, touchée en naissant par le fer,
Doit avoir, pour le deuil comme pour l’espérance,
Son mystérieux sceau de vie et de souffrance
Dans cette cicatrice auguste, le nombril;
Que l’oeuf de l’avenir, pour éclore en avril,
Doit être déposé dans une chose morte;
Qu’il faut que le bien naisse et que l’épi mûr sorte
De cette plaie en fleur qu’on nomme le sillon,
Que le cri jaillit mieux en mordant le bâillon;
Que l’homme doit atteindre à des édens suprêmes,
Dont la porte déjà, dans l’ombre des problèmes,
Apparaît radieuse à ses yeux enflammés,
Mais que les deux battants en resteront fermés,
Malgré le saint, le christ, le prophète et l’apôtre,
Si Satan n’ouvre l’un, si Caïn n’ouvre l’autre?

O contradictions terribles! d’un côté
On voit la loi de paix, de vie et de bonté

Par-dessus l’infini dans les prodiges luire;
Et de l’autre on écoute une voix triste dire:
— Penseurs, réformateurs, porte-flambeaux, esprits,
Lutteurs, vous atteindrez l’idéal! à quel prix?
Au prix du sang, des fers, du deuil, des hécatombes.
La route du progrès, c’est le chemin des tombes. -
Voyez: le genre humain, à cette heure opprimé
Par les forces sans yeux dont ce globe est formé,
Doit vaincre la matière, et, c’est là le problème,
L’enchaîner, pour se mettre en liberté lui-même.
L’homme prend la nature énorme corps à corps;
Mais comme elle résiste! elle abat les plus forts.
Derrière l’inconnu la nuit se barricade;
Le monde entier n’est plus qu’une vaste embuscade;
Tout est piège; le sphinx, avant d’être dompté,
Empreint son ongle au flanc de l’homme épouvanté;
Par moments il sourit et fait des offres traîtres;
Les savants, les songeurs, ceux qui sont les seuls prêtres,
Cèdent à ces appels funèbres et moqueurs;
L’énigme invite, embrasse et brise ses vainqueurs;
Les éléments, du moins ce qu’ainsi l’erreur nomme,
Ont des attractions redoutables sur l’homme;
La terre au flanc profond tente Empédocle, et l’eau
Tente Jason, Diaz, Gama, Marco Polo,
Et Colomb que dirige au fond des flots sonores
Le doigt du cavalier sinistre des Açores;
Le feu tente Fulton, l’air tente Montgolfier;
L’homme fait pour tout vaincre ose tout défier.
Maintenant regardez les cadavres. La somme
De tous les combattants que le progrès consomme
Etonne le sépulcre et fait rêver la mort.
Combien d’infortunés noyés dans leur effort
Pour atteindre à des bords nouveaux et fécondables!
Les découvertes sont des filles formidables
Qui dans leur lit tragique étouffent leurs amants.
O loi! tous les tombeaux contiennent des aimants;
Les grands coeurs ont l’amour lugubre du martyre,

Et le rayonnement du précipice attire.

Ceux-ci sacrifiant, ceux-là sacrifiés.

Cette croissance humaine où vous vous confiez
Sur nos difformités se développe et monte.
Destin terrifiant! tout sert, même la honte;
La prostitution a sa fécondité;
Le crime a son emploi dans la fatalité;
Etant corruption, un germe y peut éclore.
Ceci qu’on aime naît de ceci qu’on déplore.
Ce qu’on voit clairement, c’est qu’on souffre. Pourquoi?
On entre dans le mieux avec des cris d’effroi;
On sort presque à regret du pire où l’on séjourne.
Le genre humain gravit un escalier qui tourne
Et plonge dans la nuit pour rentrer dans le jour;
On perd le bien de vue et le mal tour à tour;
Le meurtre est bon; la mort sauve; la loi morale
Se courbe et disparaît dans l’obscure spirale.
A de certains moments, à Tyr comme à Sion,
Ce qu’on prend pour le crime est la punition;
Punition utile et féconde, où surnage
On ne sait quelle vie éclose du carnage.
Les dalles de l’histoire, avec leurs affreux tas
De trahisons, de vols, d’ordures, d’attentats,
Avec leur effroyable encombrement de boue
Où de tous les Césars on voit passer la roue,
Avec leurs Tigellins, avec leurs Borgias,
Ne seraient que l’étable infâme d’Augias,
La latrine et l’égout du sort, sans le lavage
De sang que par instants Dieu fait sur ce pavage.
C’est dans le sang que Rome et Venise ont fleuri.
Du sang! et l’on entend dans l’histoire ce cri:
— Une aile sort du ver et l’un engendre l’autre.
L’âge qui plane est fils du siècle qui se vautre. -
Le monde reverdit dans le deuil, dans l’horreur;
Champ sombre dont Nemrod est le dur laboureur!

Toute fleur est d’abord fumier, et la nature
Commence par manger sa propre pourriture;
La raison n’a raison qu’après avoir eu tort;
Pour avancer d’un pas le genre humain se tord;
Chaque évolution qu’il fait dans la tourmente
Semble une apocalypse où quelqu’un se lamente.
Ouvrage lumineux, ténébreux ouvrier.

Sitôt que le char marche il se met à crier.
L’esclavage est un pas sur l’anthropophagie;
La guillotine, affreuse et de meurtres rougie,
Est un pas sur le croc, le pal et le bûcher;
La guerre est un berger tout autant qu’un boucher;
Cyrus crie: en avant! tous les grands chefs d’armées,
Trouant le genre humain de routes enflammées,
Ont une tache d’aube au front, noirs éclaireurs;
Ils refoulent la nuit, les brouillards, les erreurs,
L’ombre, et le conquérant est le missionnaire
Terrible du rayon qui contient le tonnerre.
Sésostris vivifie en tuant, Gengiskan
Est la lave féconde et sombre du volcan,
Alexandre ensemence, Attila fertilise.
Ce monde que l’effort douloureux civilise,
Cette création où l’aube pleure et luit,
Où rien n’éclôt qu’après avoir été détruit,
Où les accouplements résultent des divorces,
Où Dieu semble englouti sous le chaos des forces,
Où le bourgeon jaillit du noeud qui l’étouffait,
C’est du mal qui travaille et du bien qui se fait.

Mais quelle ombre! quels flots de fumée et d’écume!
Quelles illusions d’optique en cette brume!
Est-ce un libérateur, ce tigre qui bondit?
Ce chef, est-ce un héros ou bien est-ce un bandit?
Devinez. Qui le sait? dans ces profondeurs faites
De crime et de vertu, de meurtres et de fêtes,

Trompé par ce qu’on voit et par ce qu’on entend,
Comment retrouver l’astre en tant d’horreur flottant?

De là vient qu’autrefois tout semblait vain et trouble;
Tout semblait de la nuit qui monte et qui redouble;
Le vaste écroulement des faits tumultueux,
Les combats, les assauts traîtres et tortueux,
Les Carthages, les Tyrs, les Byzances, les Romes,
Les catastrophes, chute épouvantable d’hommes,
Avaient l’air d’un tourment stérile, et, se suivant
Comme la grêle suit les colères du vent
Et comme la chaleur succède à la froidure,
Semblaient ne dégager qu’une loi: Rien ne dure.
Les nations, courbant la tête, n’avaient plus
D’autre philosophie en ces flux et reflux
Que la rapidité des chars passant sur elles;
Nul ne voyait le but de ces vaines querelles;
Et Flaccus s’écriait: - Puisque tout fuit, aimons,
Vivons, et regardons tomber l’ombre des monts;
Riez, chantez, cueillez des grappes dans les treilles
Pour les pendre, ô Lydé, derrière vos oreilles;
Ce peu de chose est tout. Par Bacchus, sur le poids
Des héros, des glandeurs, de la gloire et des rois,
Je questionnerai Caron, le passeur d’ombres! -

Depuis on a compris. Les foules et les nombres
Ont perdu leur aspect de chaos par degrés,
Laissant vaguement voir quelques points éclairés.

Quoi! la guerre, le choc alternatif et rude
Des batailles tombant sur l’âpre multitude,
Sur le choc triste et brut des fauves nations,
Quoi! ces frémissements et ces commotions
Que donne au droit qui naît, au peuple qui se lève,
La rencontre sonore et féroce du glaive,
Ce vaste tourbillon d’étincelles qui sort
Des combats, des héros s’entre-heurtant, du sort,

Ce tumulte insensé des camps et des tueries,
Quoi! le piétinement de ces cavaleries,
Les escadrons couvrant d'éclairs les régiments,
Quoi! ces coups de canon battant ces murs fumants,
Ces coups d'épieux, ces coups d'estocs, ces coups de piques,
Le retentissement des cuirasses épiques,
Ces victoires broyant les hommes, cet enfer,
Quoi! les sabres sonnant sur les casques de fer,
L'épouvante, les cris des mourants qu'on égorge...
— C'est le bruit des marteaux du progrès dans la forge.
— Hélas

En même temps, l'infini, qui connaît
L'endroit où chaque cause aboutit, et qui n'est
Qu'une incommensurable et haute conscience,
Faite d'immensité, de paix, de patience,
Laisse, sachant le but, choisissant le moyen,
Souvent, hélas! le mal se faire avec du bien;
Telle est la profondeur de l'ordre; obscur, suprême,
Tranquille, et s'affirmant par ses démentis même.
C'est ainsi qu'un bandit de Marc-Auréle est né;
C'est ainsi que, hideux, devant l'homme étonné,
Le ciel y consentant, avec le Christ auguste,
Avec la loi d'un saint, avec la mort d'un juste,
Avec ces mots si doux: - Nourris quiconque a faim.
— Aime autrui comme toi. - Ne fais pas au prochain
Ce que tu ne veux pas qu'à toi-même on te fasse. -
Avec cette morale où tout est vie et grâce,
Avec ces dogmes pris au plus serein des cieux,
Loyola construisit son piège monstrueux;
Sombre araignée à qui Dieu, pour tisser sa toile,
Donnait des fils d'aurore et des rayons d'étoile.

Et même, en regardant plus haut, quel est celui
Qui s'écriera: - Je suis l'astre, et j'ai toujours lui;
Je n'ai jamais failli, jamais péché; j'ignore
Les coups du tentateur à ma vitre sonore;

Je suis sans faute. - Est-il un juste audacieux
Qui s’ose affirmer pur devant l’azur des cieux?
L’homme a beau faire, il faut qu’il cède à sa nature;
Une femme l’émeut, dénouant sa ceinture,
Il boit, il mange, il dort, il a froid, il a chaud;
Parfois la plus grande âme et le coeur le plus haut
Succombe aux appétits d’en bas; et l’esprit quête
Les satisfactions immondes de la bête,
Regarde à la fenêtre obscène, et va, les soirs,
Rôder de honte en honte au seuil des bouges noirs.
— Oui, c’est la porte abjecte, et cependant j’y passe,
Dit Caton à voix haute et Jean-Jacque à voix basse.
La Syrienne chante à Virgile évohé;
Socrate aime Aspasie, Horace suit Chloé;
Tout homme est le sujet de la chair misérable;
Le corps est condamné, le sang est incurable;
Pas un sage n’a pu se dire, en vérité,
Guéri de la nature et de l’humanité.
Mal, bien, tel est le triste et difforme mélange.
Le bien est un linceul en même temps qu’un lange;
Si le mal est sépulcre, il est aussi berceau;
Ils naissent l’un de l’autre, et la vie est leur sceau.
Les philosophes pleins de crainte ou d’espérance
Songent et n’ont entre eux pas d’autre différence,
En révélant l’éden, et même en le prouvant,
Que le voir en arrière ou le voir en avant.
Les sages du passé disent: - L’homme recule;
Il sort de la lumière, il entre au crépuscule,
L’homme est parti de tout pour naufrager dans rien.
Ils disent: bien et mal. Nous disons: mal et bien.

Mal et bien, est-ce là le mot? le chiffre unique?
Le dogme? est-ce d’Isis la dernière tunique?
Mal et bien, est-ce là toute la loi? - La loi!
Qui la connaît? Quelqu’un parmi nous, hors de soi
Comme en soi, sous l’amas de farts, d’époques, d’âges,
A-t-il percé ce gouffre et fait ces grands sondages?

Quelqu’un démêle-t-il le germe originel?
Quelqu’un voit-il le point extrême du tunnel?
Quelqu’un voit-il la base et voit-il la toiture?
Avons-nous seulement pénétré la nature?
Qu’est-ce que la lumière et qu’est-ce que l’aimant?
Qu’est le cerveau? de quoi se fait le mouvement?
D’où vient que la chaleur manque aux rayons de lune?
O nuit, qu’est-ce qu’une âme? un astre en est-il une?
Le parfum est-il l’âme errante du pistil?
Une fleur souffre-t-elle? un rocher pense-t-il?
Qu’est-ce que l’Onde? Etnas, Cotopaxis, Vésuves,
D’où vient le flamboiement de vos énormes cuves?
Où donc est la poulie et la corde et le seau
Qui pendent dans ton puits, ô noir Chimborazo?
Vivants! distinguons-nous une chose d’un être?
Qu’est-ce que mourir? dis, mortel! qu’est-ce que naître?
Vous demandez d’un fait: Est-ce toute la loi?
Voyons, qui que tu sois, toi qui parles, dis-moi,
Qu’es-tu? Tu veux sonder l’abîme? Es-tu de force
A scruter le travail des sèves sous l’écorce;
A guetter, dans la nuit des filons souterrains,
L’hymen de l’eau terrestre avec les flots marins
Et la formation des métaux; à poursuivre
Dans leurs antres le plomb, le mercure et le cuivre,
Si bien que tu pourrais dire: Voici comment
L’or se fait dans la terre et l’aube au firmament!
Le peux-tu? parle. Non. Eh bien, sois économe
D’axiomes sur Dieu, de sentences sur l’homme,
Et ne prononce pas d’arrêts dans l’infini.
Et qui donc ici-bas, qui, maudit ou béni,
Peut de quoi que ce soit, farce, âme, esprit, matière,
Dire: - Ce que j’ai là, c’est la loi tout entière;
Ceci, c’est Dieu, complet, avec tous ses rayons;
Mettez-le-moi bien vite en vos collections,
Et tirez le verrou de peur qu’il ne s’échappe. -
Savant dans son usine ou prêtre sous sa chape,
Qui donc nous montrera le sort des deux côtés?

Qui se promènera dans les éternités,
Comme dans les jardins de Versailles Lenôtre?
Qui donc mesurera l'ombre d'un bout à l'autre,
Et la vie et la tombe, espaces inouïs
Où le monceau des jours meurt sous l'amas des nuits,
Où de vagues éclairs dans les ténèbres glissent,
Où les extrémités des lois s'évanouissent!

Que cette obscure loi du progrès dans le deuil,
Du succès dans la chute et du port dans l'écueil,
Soit vraie ou fausse, absurde et folle, ou démontrée;
Que, dragon, de l'éden elle garde l'entrée,
Ou ne soit qu'un mirage informe, le certain
C'est que, devant l'énigme et devant le destin,
Les plus fermes parfois s'étonnent et fléchissent.
A peine dans la nuit quelques cimes blanchissent
Que la brume a déjà repris d'autres sommets;
De grands monts, qui semblaient lumineux à jamais,
Qu'on croyait délivrés de l'abîme, s'y dressent,
Mais noirs, et, lentement effacés, disparaissent.
Toutes les vérités se montrent un moment,
Puis se voilent; le verbe avorte en bégaiement;
Le jour, si c'est du jour que cette clarté sombre,
N'a l'air de se lever que pour regarder l'ombre;
On ne voit plus le phare; on ne sait que penser;
Vient-on de reculer, ou vient-on d'avancer?
Oh! dans l'ascension humaine, que la marche
Est lente, et comme on sent la pesanteur de l'arche!
Comme ceux qui de tous portent les intérêts
Ont l'épaule meurtrie aux angles du progrès!
Comme tout se défait et retombe à mesure!
Pas de principe acquis; pas de conquête sûre;
A l'instant où l'on croit l'édifice achevé,
Il s'écroule, écrasant celui qui l'a rêvé;
Le plus grand siècle peut avoir son heure immonde;
Parfois sur tous les points du globe un fléau gronde,
Et l'homme semble pris d'un accès de fureur.

L’européen, ce frère aîné, joute d’honneur
Avec le caraïbe, avec le malabare;
L’anglais civilisé passe l’indou barbare;
O pugilat hideux de Londre et de Delhy!
Le but humain s’éclipse en un infâme oubli.
Il est nuit du Danube au Nil, du Gange à l’Ebre.
Fête au nord; c’est la mort du midi qu’on célèbre.
Europe, dit Berlin, ris, la France n’est plus!
O genre humain, malgré tant d’âges révolus,
Ta vieille loi de haine est toujours la plus forte;
L’évangile est toujours la grande clarté morte,
Le jour fuit, la paix saigne, et l’amour est proscrit,
Et l’on n’a pas encor décloué Jésus-Christ.

MARS

I

N’importe, ayons foi! Tout s’agite,
Comme au fond d’un songe effrayant,
Tout marche et court, et l’homme quitte
L’ancien rivage âpre et fuyant.
On va de la nuit à l’aurore,
Du noir sépulcre au nid sonore,
Et des hydres aux alcyons.
Les téméraires sont les sages.
Ils sondent ces profonds passages
Qu’on nomme Révolutions.

Prophètes maigris par les jeûnes,
O poètes au fier clairon,
Tous, les anciens comme les jeunes,
Isaïe autant que Byron,
Vous indiquez le but suprême
Au genre humain, toujours le même
Et toujours nouveau sous le ciel;
Vous jetez dans le vent qui vole
La même éternelle parole
Au même passant éternel.

Votre voix tragique et superbe
Plonge en bas et remonte en haut;
Vous demandez à Dieu le verbe
Et vous donnez au sphinx le mot.
Tout l’itinéraire de l’homme,
Quittant Sion, dépassant Rome,
Au prêtre qui chancelle ou fuit
Semble une descente d’abîme;
On entend votre bruit sublime,
Avertissement dans la nuit.

Vous tintez le glas pour le traître
Et pour le brave le tocsin;
On voit paraître et disparaître
Vos hymnes, orageux essaim;
Vos vers sibyllins vont et viennent;
Dans son dur voyage ils soutiennent
Le peuple, immense pèlerin;
Vos chants, vos songes, vos pensées,
Semblent des urnes renversées
D'où tombent des rythmes d'airain.

Bientôt le jour sur son quadrige
De l'ombre ouvrira les rideaux;
Vers l'aurore tout se dirige,
Même ceux qui tournent le dos;
L'un y marche et l'autre y recule;
L'avenir dans ce crépuscule
Dresse sa tour étrange à voir,
Tour obscure, mais étoilée;
Vos strophes à toute volée
Sonnent dans ce grand clocher noir.

LA LUTTE

Hélas! c'est l'ignorance en colère. Il faut plaindre
Ceux que le grand rayon du vrai ne peut atteindre.,
D'ailleurs, qu'importe, ami! l'honneur est avec nous.
Oui, plains ces insulteurs acceptant à genoux
L'horrible paix qui prend la France en sa tenaille!
Que leur ingratitude imbécile s'en aille
Devant l'histoire, avec ton dédain et le mien.
Ils traiteraient Jésus comme un bohémien;
Saint Paul leur semblerait un hideux démocrate;
Ils diraient: Quel affreux jongleur que ce Socrate.

Leur oeil myope a peur de l'aube. Ils sont ainsi.
Est-ce leur faute? Non. A Naple, à Rome, ici,
Toujours, partout, il est tout simple que des êtres
Te jalousent soldats et te maudissent prêtres,
Etant, les uns vaincus, les autres démasqués.
Les glaçons que j'ai vus cet hiver, de nos quais,
Pêle-mêle passer, nous jetant un froid sombre,
Mais fuyant et fondant rapidement dans l'ombre,
N'étaient pas plus haineux et n'étaient pas plus vains.
Toi qui jadis, pareil aux combattants divins,
Venais seul, sans armée et délivrais des villes,
Laisse hurler sur toi le flot des clameurs viles.
Qu'est-ce que cela fait? Viens, donnons-nous la main.
Et moi le vieux Français, toi l'antique Romain,
Sortons. C'est un lieu triste où l'on est mal à l'aise
Et regagnons chacun notre haute falaise
Où si l'on est tué, du moins c'est par la mer;
Allons chercher l'insulte auguste de l'éclair,
La fureur jamais basse et la grande amertume,
Le vrai gouffre, et quittons la bave pour l'écume.

III

LE DEUIL

Charle! Charle! ô mon fils! quoi donc! tu m'as quitté
Ah! tout fuit! rien ne dure!
Tu t'es évanoui dans la grande clarté
Qui pour nous est obscure.

Charles, mon couchant voit périr ton orient.
Comme nous nous aimâmes!
L'homme, hélas! crée, et rêve, et lie en souriant
Son âme à d'autre âmes;

Il dit: C'est éternel! et poursuit son chemin;
Il se met à descendre,

Vit, souffre, et tout à coup dans le creux de sa main
N'a plus que de la cendre.

Hier j'étais proscrit. Vingt ans, des mers captif,
J'errai, l'âme meurtrie;
Le sort nous frappe, et seul il connaît le motif.
Dieu m'ôta la patrie.

Aujourd'hui je n'ai plus de tout ce que j'avais
Qu'un fils et qu'une fille;
Me voilà presque seul dans cette ombre où je vais;
Dieu m'ôte la famille.

Oh! demeurez, vous deux qui me restez! nos nids
Tombent, mais votre mère
Vous bénit dans la mort sombre, et je vous bénis,
Moi, dans la vie amère.

Oui, pour modèle ayant le martyr de Sion,
J'achèverai ma lutte,
Et je continuerai la rude ascension
Qui ressemble à la chute.

Suivre la vérité me suffit; sans rien voir
Que le grand but sublime,
Je marche, en deuil, mais fier; derrière le devoir
Je vais droit à l'abîme.

IV

L'ENTERREMENT

Le tambour bat aux champs et le drapeau s'incline.
De la Bastille au pied de la morne colline
Où les siècles passés près du siècle vivant
Dorment sous les cyprès peu troublés par le vent,
Le peuple a l'arme au bras; le peuple est triste; il pense;

Et ses grands bataillons font la haie en silence.

Le fils mort et le père aspirant au tombeau
Passent, l’un hier encor vaillant, robuste et beau,
L’autre vieux et cachant les pleurs de son visage;
Et chaque légion les salue au passage.

O peuple! ô majesté de l’immense douceur!
Paris, cité soleil, vous que l’envahisseur
N’a pu vaincre, et qu’il a de tant de sang rougie,
Vous qu’un jour on verra, dans la royale orgie,
Surgir, l’éclair au front, comme le commandeur,
O ville, vous avez ce comble de grandeur
De faire attention à la douleur d’un homme.
Trouver dans Sparte une âme et voir un coeur dans Rome,
Rien n’est plus admirable; et Paris a dompté
L’univers par la force où l’on sent la bonté.
Ce peuple est un héros et ce peuple est un juste.
Il fait bien plus que vaincre, il aime.

O ville auguste,
Ce jour-là tout tremblait, les révolutions
Grondaient, et dans leur brume, à travers des rayons,
Tu voyais devant toi se rouvrir l’ombre affreuse
Qui par moments devant les grands peuples se creuse;
Et l’homme qui suivait le cercueil de son fils
T’admirait, toi qui, prête à tous les fiers défis,
Infortunée, as fait l’humanité prospère;
Sombre, il se sentait fils en même temps que père,
Père en pensant à lui, fils en pensant à toi.

Que ce jeune lutteur illustre et plein de foi,
Disparu dans le lieu profond qui nous réclame,
O peuple, ait à jamais près de lui ta grande âme!
Tu la lui donnas, peuple, en ce suprême adieu.
Que dans la liberté superbe du ciel bleu,
Il assiste, à présent qu’il tient l’arme inconnue,

Aux luttes du devoir et qu'il les continue.
Le droit n'est pas le droit seulement ici-bas;
Les morts sont des vivants mêlés à nos combats,
Ayant tantôt le bien, tantôt le mal pour cibles;
Parfois on sent passer leurs flèches invisibles.
Nous les croyons absents, ils sont présents; on sort
De la terre, des jours, des pleurs, mais non du sort;
C'est un prolongement sublime que la tombe.
On y monte étonné d'avoir cru qu'on y tombe.
Comme dans plus d'azur l'hirondelle émigrant,
On entre plus heureux dans un devoir plus grand;
On voit l'utile avec le juste parallèle;
Et l'on a de moins l'ombre et l'on a de plus l'aile.
O mon fils béni, sers la France, du milieu
De ce gouffre d'amour que nous appelons Dieu;
Ce n'est pas pour dormir qu'on meurt, non, c'est pour faire
De plus haut ce que fait en bas notre humble sphère;
C'est pour le faire mieux, c'est pour le faire bien.
Nous n'avons que le but, le ciel a le moyen.
La mort est un passage où pour grandir tout change;
Qui fut sur terre athlète est dans l'abîme archange;
Sur terre on est borné, sur terre on est banni;
Mais là-haut nous croissons sans gêner l'infini;
L'âme y peut déployer sa subite envergure;
C'est en perdant son corps qu'on reprend sa figure.
Va donc, mon fils! va donc, esprit! deviens flambeau.
Rayonne. Entre en planant dans l'immense tombeau!
Sers la France. Car Dieu met en elle un mystère,
Car tu sais maintenant ce qu'ignore la terre,
Car la vérité brille où l'éternité luit,
Car tu vois la lumière et nous voyons la nuit.

Paris, 18 mars.

V

Coup sur coup. Deuil sur deuil. Ah! l'épreuve redouble.

Soit. Cet homme pensif l’acceptera sans trouble.
Certe, il est bon qu’ainsi soient traités quelques-uns.
Quand d’âpres combattants, mages, soldats, tribuns,
Apôtres, ont donné leur vie aux choses justes,
Ils demeurent debout dans leurs douleurs robustes.
Tu le sais, Guernesey, tu le sais, Caprera.

Sa conscience est fixe et rien n’y bougera.
Car, quel que soit le vent qui souffle sur leur flamme,
Les principes profonds ne tremblent pas dans l’âme;
Car c’est dans l’infini que leur feu calme luit;
Car l’ouragan sinistre acharné sur la nuit
Peut secouer là-haut l’ombre et ses sombres toiles,
Sans faire dans leurs plis remuer les étoiles.

LES PRECURSEURS

Sur l’être et sur la créature,
Dans tous les temps l’homme incliné
A toujours dit à la nature:
O gouffre! Pourquoi suis-je né?
Parfois croyants, parfois athées,
Nous ajoutons aux Prométhées
Les Euclides et les Keplers;
Nos doutes, nuages funèbres,
Montent au ciel pleins de ténèbres,
Et redescendent pleins d’éclairs.

O fronts où flambent les idées!
Au bord du gouffre, au fond des cieux,
Que de figures accoudées!
Que de regards mystérieux!
O les prunelles étoilées
Des Miltons et des Galilées!
Sombres Dantes au front bruni,
Vos talons sont dignes des astres!
Vos esprits, ô noirs Zoroastres,
Sont les chevaux de l’infini.

Oser monter, oser descendre,
Tout est là. Chercher, oser voir!
Car Jason s’appelle entreprendre
Et Gama s’appelle vouloir.
Quand le chercheur hésite encore,
L’oeil sur la nuit, l’oeil sur l’aurore,
Reculant devant le secret
Tremblant devant l’hiéroglyphe,

La volonté, brusque hippogriffe,
Dans son crépuscule apparaît!

C’est sur ce coursier formidable,
Quand le Génie humain voulut,
Qu’il aborda l’inabordable,
Seul avec sa torche et son luth.
Lorsqu’il partit, âme élancée,
L’astre Amour, le soleil Pensée,
Rayonnaient dans l’azur béant
Où la nuit tend ses sombres toiles,
Et Dieu donna ces deux étoiles
Pour éperons à ce géant.

Les grands coeurs en qui Dieu se crée
Ont, tandis qu’autour d’eux tout fuit,
La curiosité sacrée
Du précipice et de la nuit.
Toute découverte est un gouffre.
Mourir, qu’importe! on plonge, on souffre;
Vivre inutile, c’est trop long.
De l’insensé naît le sublime;
Et derrière lui dans l’abîme
Empédocle attire Colomb.

Mers qu’on sonde! cieux qu’on révèle!
Chacun de ces chercheurs de Dieu
Prend un infini sur ton aile,
Fulton le vert, Herschell le Bleu;
Magellan part, Fourier s’envole;
La foule ironique et frivole
Ignore ce qu’ils ont rêvé,
Les voit sombrer dans l’étendue,
Et dit: C’est une âme perdue.
Foule! c’est un monde trouvé!

LA MERE QUI DEFEND SON PETIT

Au milieu des forêts, asiles des chouettes,
Où chuchotent tout bas les feuilles inquiètes,
Dans les halliers, que semble emplir un noir dessein,
Pour le doux nouveau-né qui frissonne à son sein,
Pour le tragique enfant qu’elle emporte effarée,
Dès qu’elle voit la nuit croître, sombre marée,
Dès que les loups obscurs poussent leurs longs abois,
Oh! le sauvage amour de la femme des bois!

Tel est Paris. La ville où l’Europe se mêle,
Avec le droit, la gloire et l’art, triple mamelle,
Allaite cet enfant céleste, l’Avenir.
On entend les chevaux de l’aurore hennir
Autour de ce berceau sublime. Elle, la mère
De la réalité qui commence en chimère,
La nourrice du songe auguste des penseurs,
La ville dont Athène et Rome sont les soeurs,
Dans le printemps qui rit, sous le ciel qui rougeoie,
Elle est l’amour, elle est la vie, elle est la joie.
L’air est pur, le jour luit, le firmament est bleu.
Elle berce en chantant le puissant petit dieu.
Quelle fête! elle montre aux hommes, fière, gaie,
Ce rêve qui sera le monde et qui bégaie,
Ce tremblant embryon du nouveau genre humain,
Ce géant, nain encor, qui s’appelle Demain,
Et pour qui le sillon des temps futurs se creuse;
Sur son front calme et tendre et sur sa bouche heureuse
Et dans son oeil serein qui ne croit pas au mal,
Elle a ce radieux sourire, l’idéal.
On sent qu’elle est la ville où l’espérance habite;
Elle aime, elle bénit; mais si, noirceur subite,
L’éclipse vient, et donne aux peuples le frisson,
Si quelque vague monstre erre sur l’horizon,
Si tout ce qui serpente, écume, rampe et louche,

Vient menacer l'enfant divin, elle est farouche;
Alors elle se dresse, alors elle a des cris
Terribles, et devient le furieux Paris;
Elle gronde et rugit, sinistrement vivante,
Et celle qui charmait l'univers, l'épouvante.

III

Temps affreux! ma pensée est, dans ce morne espace
Où l'imprévu surgit, où l'inattendu passe,
Une plaine livrée à tous les pas errants.
Les faits l'un après l'autre arrivent, noirs et grands.
J'écris ce livre, jour par jour, sous la dictée
De l'heure qui se dresse et fuit épouvantée;
Les semaines de l'An Terrible sont autant
D'hydres que l'enfer crée et que le gouffre attend;
L'événement s'en va, roulant des yeux de flamme,
Après avoir posé sa griffe sur mon âme,
Laissant à mon vers triste, âpre, meurtri, froissé,
Cette trace qu'on voit quand un monstre a passé.
Ceux qui regarderaient mon esprit dans cette ombre,
Le trouveraient couvert des empreintes sans nombre
De tous ces jours d'horreur, de colère et d'ennui,
Comme si des lions avaient marché sur lui.

UN CRI

Quand finira ceci? Quoi! ne sentent-ils pas
Que ce grand pays croule à chacun de leurs pas!
Châtier qui? Paris? Paris veut être libre.
Ici le monde, et là Paris; c'est l'équilibre.
Et Paris est l'abîme où couve l'avenir.
Pas plus que l'Océan on ne peut le punir,
Car dans sa profondeur et sous sa transparence
On voit l'immense Europe ayant pour coeur la France.

Combattants! combattants! qu’est-ce que vous voulez?
Vous êtes comme un feu qui dévore les blés,
Et vous tuez l’honneur, la raison, l’espérance!
Quoi! d’un côté la France et de l’autre la France!
Arrêtez! c’est le deuil qui sort de vos succès.
Chaque coup de canon de Français à Français
Jette, - car l’attentat à sa source remonte, -
Devant lui le trépas, derrière lui la honte.
Verser, mêler, après septembre et février,
Le sang du paysan, le sang de l’ouvrier,
Sans plus s’en soucier que de l’eau des fontaines!
Les Latins contre Rome et les Grecs contre Athènes!
Qui donc a décrété ce sombre égorgement?
Si quelque prêtre dit que Dieu le veut, il ment!
Mais quel vent souffle donc? Quoi! pas d’instants lucides!
Se retrouver héros pour être fratricides!
Horreur!

Mais voyez donc, dans le ciel, sur vos fronts,
Flotter l’abaissement, l’opprobre, les affronts!
Mais voyez donc là-haut ce drapeau d’ossuaire,
Noir comme le linceul, blanc comme le suaire!
Pour votre propre chute ayez donc un coup d’oeil:
C’est le drapeau de Prusse et le drapeau du deuil!
Ce haillon, insolent, il vous a sous sa garde.
Vous ne le voyez pas; lui, sombre, il vous regarde;
Il est comme l’Egypte comme au-dessus des Hébreux,
Lourd, sinistre, et sa gloire est d’être ténébreux.
Il est chez vous. Il règne. Ah! la guerre civile,
Triste après Austerlitz, après Sedan est vile!

Aventure hideuse! ils se sont décidés
A jouer la patrie et l’avenir aux dés!
Insensés! n’est-il pas de choses plus instantes
Que d’épaissir autour de ce rempart vos tentes?
Recommencer la guerre ayant encore au flanc,
O Paris, ô lion blessé, l’épieu sanglant!

Quoi! se faire une plaie avant de guérir l'autre!
Mais ce pays meurtri de vos coups, c'est le vôtre!
Cette mère qui saigne est votre mère! Et puis,
Les misères, la femme et l'enfant sans appuis,
Le travailleur sans pain, tout l'amas des problèmes
Est là terrible, et vous, acharnés sur vous-mêmes,
Vous venez, toi rhéteur, toi soldat, toi tribun,
Les envenimer tous sans en résoudre aucun!

Vous recreusez le gouffre au lieu d'y mettre un phare!
Des deux côtés la même exécrable fanfare,
Le même cri: Mort! Guerre! - A qui? réponds, Caïn!
Qu'est-ce que ces soldats une épée à la main,
Courbés devant la Prusse, altiers contre la France?
Gardez donc votre sang pour votre délivrance!
Quoi! pas de remords! quoi! le désespoir complet!
Mais qui donc sont-ils ceux à qui la honte plaît?
O cieux profonds! opprobre aux hommes, quels qu'ils soient,
Qui sur ce pavois d'ombre et de meurtre s'assoient,
Qui du malheur public se font un piédestal,
Qui soufflent, acharnés à ce duel fatal,
Sur le peuple indigné, sur le reître servile,
Et sur les deux tisons de la guerre civile;
Qui remettent la ville éternelle en prison,
Rebâtissent le mur de haine à l'horizon,
Méditent on ne sait quelle victoire infâme,
Les droits brisés, la France assassinant son âme,
Paris mort, l'astre éteint, et qui n'ont pas frémi
Devant l'éclat de rire affreux de l'ennemi!

V

PAS DE REPRESAILLES

Je ne fais point fléchir les mots auxquels je crois;
Raison, progrès, honneur, loyauté, devoirs, droits.
On ne va point au vrai par une route oblique.

Sois juste; c’est ainsi qu’on sert la république;
Le devoir envers elle est l’équité pour tous;
Pas de colère; et nul n’est juste s’il n’est doux.
La Révolution est une souveraine;
Le peuple est un lutteur prodigieux qui traîne
Le passé vers le gouffre et l’y pousse du pied;
Soit. Mais je ne connais, dans l’ombre qui me sied,
Pas d’autre majesté que toi, ma conscience.
J’ai la foi. Ma candeur sort de l’expérience.
Ceux que j’ai terrassés, je ne les brise pas.
Mon cercle c’est mon droit, leur droit est mon compas;
Qu’entre mes ennemis et moi tout s’équilibre;
Si je les vois liés, je ne me sens pas libre;
A demander pardon j’userais mes genoux
Si je versais sur eux ce qu’ils jetaient sur nous.
Jamais je ne dirai: - « Citoyens, le principe
Qui se dresse pour nous contre nous se dissipe;
Honorons la droiture en la congédiant;
La probité s’accouple avec l’expédient.” -
Je n’irai point cueillir, tant je craindrais les suites,
Ma logique à la lèvre impure des jésuites;
Jamais je ne dirai: - « Voilons la vérité!”
Jamais je ne dirai: - « Ce traître a mérité,
Parce qu’il fut pervers, que, moi, je sois inique;
Je succède à sa lèpre; il me la communique;
Et je fais, devenant le même homme que lui,
De son forfait d’hier ma vertu d’aujourd’hui.
Il était mon tyran, il sera ma victime.”
Le talion n’est pas un reflux légitime.
Ce que j’étais hier, je veux l’être demain.
Je ne pourrais pas prendre un crime dans ma main
En me disant: - Ce crime était leur projectile;
Je le trouvais infâme et je le trouve utile;
Je m’en sers, et je frappe, ayant été frappé. -
Non, l’espoir de me voir petit sera trompé.
Quoi! je serais sophiste ayant été prophète!
Mon triomphe ne peut renier ma défaite;

J’entends rester le même, ayant beaucoup vécu,
Et qu’en moi le vainqueur soit fidèle au vaincu.
Non, je n’ai pas besoin, Dieu, que tu m’avertisses;
Pas plus que deux soleils je ne vois deux justices;
Nos ennemis tombés sont là; leur liberté
Et la nôtre, ô vainqueurs, c’est la même clarté.
En éteignant leurs droits nous éteignons nos astres.
Je veux, si je ne puis après tant de désastres
Faire de bien, du moins ne pas faire de mal.

La chimère est aux rois, le peuple a l’idéal.

Quoi! bannir celui-ci, jeter l’autre aux bastilles!
Jamais! Quoi! déclarer que les prisons, les grilles,
Les barreaux, les geôliers et l’exil ténébreux,
Ayant été mauvais pour nous, sont bons pour eux?
Non, je n’ôterai, moi, la patrie à personne;
Un reste d’ouragan dans mes cheveux frissonne,
On comprendra qu’ancien banni, je ne veux pas
Faire en dehors du juste et de l’honnête un pas;
J’ai payé de vingt ans d’exil ce droit austère
D’opposer aux fureurs un refus solitaire
Et de fermer mon âme aux aveugles courroux;
Si je vois les cachots sinistres, les verroux,
Les chaînes menacer mon ennemi, je l’aime,
Et je donne un asile à mon proscripteur même;
Ce qui fait qu’il est bon d’avoir été proscrit.
Je sauverais Judas si j’étais Jésus-Christ.

Je ne prendrai jamais ma part d’une vengeance.
Trop de punition pousse à trop d’indulgence,
Et je m’attendrirais sur Caïn torturé.
Non, je n’opprime pas! jamais je ne tuerai!
Jamais, ô Liberté, devant ce que je brise,
On ne te verra faire un signe de surprise.
Peuple, pour te servir, en ce siècle fatal,
Je veux bien renoncer à tout, au sol natal,

A ma maison d'enfance, à mon nid, à mes tombes,
A ce bleu ciel de France où volent des colombes,
A Paris, champ sublime où j'étais moissonneur,
A la patrie, au toit paternel, au bonheur;
Mais j'entends rester pur, sans tache et sans puissance.
Je n'abdiquerai pas mon droit à l'innocence.

VI

TALION

Quoi! parce que Vinoy, parce que Billioray
Sont dans le faux, il sied que tout soit hors du vrai!
Il faut tuer Duval puisqu'on tua Lecomte!
A ce raisonnement vous trouvez votre compte,
Et cet autre argument vous parait sans rival:
Il faut tuer Bonjean puisqu'on tua Duval!
On méprisait l'affreux talion; on l'estime.
Vil chez Moise, il est chez Rigault légitime.
On voue au meurtre un culte; on laisse de côté
Ce qu'on glorifiait si haut, loi, liberté;
On prêche un nouveau dogme, on se fait néophyte
De tous les attentats hideux dont on profite.
Talion! pour le peuple ici, là pour le roi.
Vous arrêtez Chaudey, j'emprisonne Lockroy.
Ah! vous êtes inepte, eh bien, je suis stupide.
Ah! vous niez le droit, eh bien, je le lapide!

Quoi! parce que Ferré, parce que Galifet
Versent le sang, je dois, moi, commettre un forfait!
On brûle un pont, je brûle une bibliothèque.
On tue un colonel, je tue un archevêque;
On tue un archevêque, eh bien, moi, je tuerai
N'importe qui, le plus de gens que je pourrai.
Quoi! parce qu'un gredin fait fusiller un homme,
J'en fais arquebuser trois cents, et ce qu'on nomme
Meurtre chez lui sera bonne action chez moi!

Dent pour dent. Par l’horreur je réplique à l’effroi.
Vous frappez la patrie, eh bien, moi, je l’achève!
Ah! vous lui faites, vous, l’effet d’un mauvais rêve,
Eh bien, moi, je lui vais donner le cauchemar.
Vous êtes Erostrate, eh bien, je suis Omar!

O joute monstrueuse? effroyables escrimes!
Avec des malfaiteurs se battre à coups de crimes!
Ils ont sabré, frappons! ils ont volé, pillons!
Semons leur infamie en nos propres sillons.
Quoi! notre oeuvre et la leur germeront pêle-mêle!
Ensemble à la même auge, à la même gamelle,
Abjects, nous mangerons le même opprobre, tous!
O ciel! et l’on verra sortir d’eux et de nous
Une épaisseur de honte horrible sur la France!
Nos attentats auront assez de transparence
Pour qu’on voie au travers nos principes déçus,
La clémence dessous, l’assassinat dessus!
Nous, copier ces gueux, faire un échafaudage
De notre banditisme avec leur brigandage,
De sorte que l’histoire un jour dise: Ombre et mort!
Qui donc avait raison et qui donc avait tort?
Sur notre propre droit verser tant de mensonge
Et tant d’iniquité que tout n’est plus qu’un songe!
Les principes, qui sont dans l’âme des sommets,
S’effacent, et comment fera-t-on désormais
Pour parler de progrès, d’équité, de justice?
Leur naufrage suffit pour que tout s’engloutisse.
Témérités sans nom! le bien au mal mêlé!
On voit couler, du haut de l’azur étoilé,
Un sang céleste après ces lâches hardiesses.
Blesser les vérités, c’est blesser les déesses.

VII

Le penseur est lugubre au fond des solitudes.
Ce n’est plus l’esprit calme aux graves attitudes;

Les éclairs indignés dans sa prunelle ont lui;
Il n’est plus libre, il a de la colère en lui;
Il est le prisonnier sinistre de la haine.
Lui, ce frère apaisant l’homme dans sa géhenne,
Lui, dont la vie en flots d’amour se répandit,
Lui le consolateur, le voilà qui maudit!
Lui qui croyait n’avoir jamais d’autre souffrance
Que tout le genre humain, il souffre dans la France;
Il reconnaît qu’il est sur terre un coin sacré,
La patrie, et cher, même au coeur démesuré,
Et que l’âme du sage est quelquefois amère,
Et qu’il redevient fils s’il voit saigner sa mère.

Certe, il ne sera pas toujours désespéré.
Un jour dans son regard reviendront par degré
Les augustes rayons de l’aube après l’éclipse;
On verra, certe, après l’infâme apoca1ypse,
Reparaître sur lui lentement les blancheurs
Que Dieu fait dans la nuit poindre au front des chercheurs,
Et que de loin envoie à l’homme, au gouffre, au bagne,
Le grand astre caché derrière la montagne,
Oui, la paix renaîtra. Les peuples s’aimeront.

En attendant, il gronde et médite. L’affront
Est une majesté de plus pour ce génie.
Il a des flamboiements de fureur infinie;
Fauve, il menace. Arrière, union, joie, amour!
On doit la paix au cygne et la guerre au vautour.
Est-ce qu’on ne voit pas qu’il pleure sa patrie?

Il jette aux vents sa strophe irritée et meurtrie;
Par moments il regarde au loin, l’oeil plein d’ennui;
On dirait qu’il fait fuir des monstres devant lui
Avec une secousse énorme de crinière;
Il semble un spectre errant qui n’a plus de tanière;
Son pied heurte inquiet le sol traître et peu sûr.

Deuil! la nuit sans étoile et le ciel sans azur;
L'Europe aux fers; au lieu de la France, une morte.
La lumière est vaincue et le néant l'emporte;
L'avenir se dédit, la gloire se dément;
Plus d'honneur, plus de foi, plus rien; l'abaissement,
L'oubli, l'opprobre, un flot de lâcheté qui monte.

Il sent l'âpre aiguillon de toute cette honte;
L'allure du blessé redoutable lui sied.
Ce lion boite ayant cette épine à son pied.

VIII

Oh! qui que vous soyez, qui voulez être maîtres,
Je vous plains. Vils, méchants, féroces, lâches, traîtres,
Vous périrez par ceux que vous croyez tenir.
Le présent est l'enclume où se fait l'avenir.
L'araignée est plus tard prise en ses propres toiles.
Aux noirs événements si vous ôtiez leurs voiles,
Vous reconnaîtriez, tremblants, nus, mis en croix,
Dans ces bourreaux masqués vos fautes d'autrefois;
Derrière lui le meurtre, ivresse, succès, gloire,
Laisse un vomissement qu'un jour il faudra boire;
En étouffant en vous l'horreur, l'inimitié,
La rage, c'est de vous que vous auriez pitié;
Les dépenses de sang innocent sont des dettes;
La trace de l'effort violent que vous faites
Pour être à jamais rois et dieux solidement,
Vous la retrouverez dans votre écroulement;
Votre fureur revient sur vous, et vous châtie;
La foudre qui sur vous tombe, est de vous sortie;
Si bien que le sort donne à la même action
Deux noms, crime d'abord, plus tard punition.

IX

Pendant que la mer gronde et que les vagues roulent,

Et que sur l’horizon les tumultes s’écroulent,
Ce veilleur, le poète, est monté sur sa tour.

Ce qu’il veut, c’est qu’enfin la concorde ait son tour.

Jadis, dans les temps noirs comme ceux où nous sommes,
Le poète pensif ne se mêlait aux hommes
Que pour les désarmer et leur verser son coeur;
Il aimait le vaincu sans haïr le vainqueur;
Il suppliait l’armée, il suppliait la ville;
Aux vivants aveuglés par la guerre civile
Il montrait la clarté du vrai, du grand, du beau,
Etant plus qu’eux tourné du côté du tombeau;
Et cet homme, au milieu d’un monde inexorable,
Etait le messager de la paix vénérable.
Il criait: N’a-t-on point assez souffert, hélas!
Ne serons-nous pas bons à force d’être las?
C’était la fonction de cette voix qui passe
De demander à tous, pour tous, Paix! Pitié! Grâce!
Les devoirs sont encor les mêmes aujourd’hui.
Le poète, humble jonc, a son coeur pour appui.
Il veut que l’homme vive, il veut que l’homme crée.
Le ciel, cette demeure inconnue et sacrée,
Prouve par sa beauté l’éternelle douceur;
La poésie au front lumineux est la soeur
De la clémence, étant la soeur de l’harmonie;
Elle affirme le vrai que la colère nie,
Et le vrai c’est l’espoir, le vrai c’est la bonté;
Le grand rayon de l’art c’est la fraternité.
A quoi bon aggraver notre sort par la haine?
Oh! si l’homme pouvait écouter la géhenne,
Si l’on savait la langue obscure des enfers, -
De cette profondeur pleine du bruit des fers,
De ce chaos hurlant d’affreuses destinées,
De tous ces pauvres coeurs, de ces bouches damnées,
De ces pleurs, de ces maux sans fin, de ces courroux,
On entendrait sortir ce chant sombre: Aimons-nous!

L’ouragan, l’océan, la tempête, l’abîme,
Et le peuple, ont pour loi l’apaisement sublime,
Et, quand l’heure est venue enfin de s’épouser,
Le gouffre éperdu donne à la terre un baiser!
Car rien n’est forcené, terrible, effréné, libre,
Convulsif, effaré, fou, que pour l’équilibre;
Car il faut que tout cède aux branches du compas;
Car l’indignation des flots ne dure pas,
L’écume est furieuse et n’est pas éternelle;
Le plus fauve aquilon demande à ployer l’aile;
Toute nuit mène à l’aube, et le soleil est sûr;
Tout orage finit par ce pardon, l’azur.

MAI

I

LES DEUX TROPHEES

Peuple, ce siècle a vu tes travaux surhumains.
Il t’a vu repétrir l’Europe dans tes mains.
Tu montras le néant du sceptre et des couronnes
Car ta façon de faire et défaire des trônes;
A chacun de tes pas tout croissait d’un degré;
Tu marchais; tu faisais sur le globe effaré
Un ensemencement formidable d’idées;
Tes légions étaient les vagues débordées
Du progrès s’élevant de sommets en sommets;
La Révolution te guidait; tu semais
Danton en Allemagne et Voltaire en Espagne;
Ta gloire, ô peuple, avait l’aurore pour compagne,
Et le jour se levait partout où tu passais;
Comme on a dit les Grecs on disait les Français;
Tu détruisais le mal, l’enfer, l’erreur, le vice,
Ici le moyen âge et là le saint-office;
Superbe, tu luttais contre tout ce qui nuit;
Ta clarté grandissante engloutissait la nuit;
Toute la terre était à tes rayons mêlée;
Tandis que tu montais dans ta voie étoilée,
Les hommes t’admiraient, même dans tes revers;
Parfois tu t’envolais planant; et l’univers,
Vingt ans, du Tage à l’Elbe et du Nil à l’Adige,
Fut la face éblouie, et tu fus le prodige;
Et tout disparaissait, - Histoire, souviens-t’en, -
Même le chef géant, sous le peuple titan.

De là deux monuments élevés à ta gloire,
Le pilier de puissance et l’arche de victoire,
Qui tous deux sont toi-même, ô peuple souverain,

L’un étant de granit et l’autre étant d’airain.

Penser qu’on fut vainqueur autrefois est utile.
Oh! ces deux monuments, que craint l’Europe hostile,
Comme on va les garder, et comme nuit et jour
On va veiller sur eux avec un sombre amour!
Ah! c’est presque un vengeur qu’un témoin d’un autre âge!
Nous les attesterons tous deux, nous qu’on outrage;
Nous puiserons en eux l’ardeur de châtier.
Sur ce hautain métal et sur ce marbre altier,
Oh! comme on cherchera d’un oeil mélancolique
Tous ces fiers vétérans, fils de la République.
Car l’heure de la chute est l’heure de l’orgueil;
Car la défaite augmente, aux yeux du peuple en deuil,
Le resplendissement farouche des trophées;
Les âmes de leur feu se sentent réchauffées;
La vision des grands est salubre aux petits.
Nous éterniserons ces monuments, bâtis
Par les morts dont survit l’oeuvre extraordinaire;
Ces morts puissants jadis passaient dans le tonnerre,
Et de leur marche encore on entend les éclats;
Et les pâles vivants d’à présent sont, hélas!
Moins qu’eux dans la lumière et plus qu’eux dans la tombe.

Ecoutez, c’est la pioche! écoutez, c’est la bombe!
Qui donc fait bombarder? qui donc fait démolir?
Vous?

*

Le penseur frémit, pareil au vieux roi Lear
Qui parle à la tempête et lui fait des reproches.
Quels signes effrayants! d’affreux jours sont-ils proches?
Est-ce que l’avenir peut être assassiné?
Est-ce qu’un siècle meurt quand l’autre n’est pas né?
Vertige! de qui donc Paris est-il la proie?
Un pouvoir le mutile, un autre le foudroie.

Ainsi deux ouragans luttent au Sahara.
C’est à qui frappera, c’est à qui détruira.
Peuple, ces deux chaos ont tort; je blâme ensemble
Le firmament qui tonne et la terre qui tremble.

*

Soit. De ces deux pouvoirs, dont la colère croît,
L’un a pour lui la loi, l’autre a pour lui le droit;
Versaille a la paroisse et Paris la commune;
Mais sur eux, au-dessus de tous, la France est une;
Et d’ailleurs, quand il faut l’un sur l’autre pleurer,
Est-ce bien le moment de s’entre-dévorer,
Et l’heure choisie pour la lutte est-elle bien choisie?
O fratricide! Ici toute la frénésie
Des canons, des mortiers, des mitrailles; et là
Le vandalisme; ici Charybde, et là Scylla.
Peuple, ils sont deux. Broyant tes splendeurs étouffées,
Chacun ôte à ta gloire un de tes deux trophées;
Nous vivons dans des temps sinistres et nouveaux,
Et de ces deux pouvoirs étrangement rivaux
Par qui le marteau frappe et l’obus tourbillonne,
L’un prend l’Arc de Triomphe et l’autre la Colonne!

*

Mais c’est la France! Quoi, Français, nous renversons
Ce qui reste debout sur les noirs horizons!
La grande France est là! Qu’importe Bonaparte!
Est-ce qu’on voit un roi quand on regarde Sparte?
Otez Napoléon, le peuple reparaît.
Abattez l’arbre, mais respectez la forêt.
Tous ces grands combattants, tournant sur ces spirales,
Peuplant les champs, les tours, les barques amirales,
Franchissant murs et ponts, fossés, fleuves, marais,
C’est la France montant à l’assaut du progrès.
Justice! ôtez de là César, mettez-y Rome.

Qu’on voie cette cime un peuple et non un homme;
Condensez en statue au sommet du pilier
Cette foule en qui vit ce Paris chevalier,
Vengeur des droits, vainqueur du mensonge féroce!
Que le fourmillement aboutisse au colosse!
Faites cette statue en un si pur métal
Qu’on n’y sente plus rien d’obscur ni de fatal;
Incarnez-y la foule, incarnez-y l’élite;
Et que ce géant Peuple, et que ce grand stylite
Du lointain idéal éclaire le chemin,
Et qu’il ait au front l’astre et l’épée à la main!

Respect à nos soldats, rien n’égalait leurs tailles;
La Révolution gronde en leurs cent batailles;
La Marseillaise, effroi du vieux monde obscurci,
S’est faite pierre là, s’est faite bronze ici;
De ces deux monuments sort un cri: Délivrance!

*

Quoi! de nos propres mains nous achevons la France!
Quoi! c’est nous qui faisons cela! nous nous jetons
Sur ce double trophée envié des Teutons,
Torche et massue aux poings, tous à la fois, en foule!
C’est sous nos propres coups que notre gloire croule!
Nous la brisons, d’en haut, d’en bas, de près, de loin,
Toujours, partout, avec la Prusse pour témoin!
Ils sont là, ceux à qui fut livrée et vendue
Ton invincible épée, ô patrie éperdue!
Ils sont là ceux par qui tomba l’homme de Ham!
C’est devant Reichshoffen qu’on efface Wagram!
Marengo raturé, c’est Waterloo qui reste.
La page altière meurt sous la page funeste;
Ce qui souille survit à ce qui rayonna;
Et pour garder Forbach on supprime Iéna!
Mac-Mahon fait de loin pleuvoir une rafale
De feu, de fer, de plomb sur l’arche triomphale.

Honte! un drapeau tudesque étend sur nous ses plis,
Et regarde Sedan souffleter Austerlitz!
Où sont les Charentons, France? où sont les Bicêtres?
Est-ce qu'ils ne vont pas se lever, les ancêtres,
Ces dompteurs de Brunswick, de Cobourg, de Bouillé,
Terribles, secouant leur vieux sabre rouillé,
Cherchant au ciel la grande aurore évanouie!
Est-ce que ce n'est pas une chose inouïe
Qu'ils soient violemment de l'histoire chassés,
Eux qui se prodiguaient sans jamais dire: Assez!
Eux qui tinrent le pape et les rois, l'ombre noire
Et le passé, captifs et cernés dans leur gloire,
Eux qui de l'ancien monde avaient fait le blocus,
Eux les pères vainqueurs, par nous les fils vaincus!

Hélas! ce dernier coup après tant de misères,
Et la paix incurable où saignent deux ulcères,
Et tous ces vains combats, Avron, Bourget, l'Haÿ!
Après Strasbourg brûlée, après Paris trahi!
La France n'est donc pas encore assez tuée?

Si la Prusse, à l'orgueil sauvage habituée,
Voyant ses noirs drapeaux enflés par l'aquilon,
Si la Prusse, tenant Paris sous son talon,
Nous eût crié: - Je veux que vos gloires s'enfuient.
Français, vous avez là deux restes qui m'ennuient,
Ce pilastre d'airain, cet arc de pierre; il faut
M'en délivrer; ici, dressez un échafaud,
Là, braquez des canons; ce soin sera le vôtre.
Vous démolirez l'un, vous mitraillerez l'autre.
Je l'ordonne. - O fureur! comme on eût dit: Souffrons!
Luttons! c'est trop! ceci passe tous les affronts!
Plutôt mourir cent fois! nos morts seront nos fêtes!
Comme on eût dit: Jamais! Jamais! -

Et vous le faites!

II

Les siècles sont au peuple; eux, ils ont le moment,
Ils en usent. O lutte étrange! Acharnement!
Chacun à grand bruit coupe une branche de l’arbre.
Là, des éclats d’airain, là, des éclats de marbre;
La colonne romaine ainsi que l’arc français
Tombent. Que dirait-on de toi si tu faisais
Envoler ton lion de Saint-Marc, ô Venise!
L’histoire est balafrée et la gloire agonise.
Quoi qu’on puisse penser de la France d’hier,
De cette rude armée et de ce peuple fier,
Et de ce que ce siècle à son troisième lustre
Avait rêvé, tenté, voulu, c’était illustre.
Pourquoi l’effacement? qu’a-t-on créé d’ailleurs
Pour les déshérités et pour les travailleurs?
A-t-on fermé le bagne? A-t-on ouvert l’école?
On détruit Marengo, Lodi, Wagram, Arcole;
A-t-on du moins fondé le droit universel?
Le pauvre a-t-il le toit, le feu, le pain, le sel?
A-t-on mis l’atelier, a-t-on mis la chaumière
Sous une immense loi de vie et de lumière?
A-t-on déshonoré la guerre en renonçant
A l’effusion folle et sinistre du sang?
A-t-on refait le code à l’image du juste?
A-t-on bâti l’autel de la clémence auguste?
A-t-on édifié le temple où la clarté
Se condense en raison et devient liberté?
A-t-on doté l’enfant et délivré la femme?
A-t-on planté dans l’homme, au plus profond de l’âme,
L’arbre du vrai, croissant de l’erreur qui décroît?
Offre-t-on au progrès, toujours trop à l’étroit,
Quelque élargissement d’horizon et de route?
Non; des ruines; rien. Soit. Quant à moi, je doute
Qu’on soit quitte pour dire au peuple murmurant:
Ce qu’on fait est petit, mais ce qu’on brise est grand.

III

PARIS INCENDIE

Mais où donc ira-t-on dans l’horreur? et jusqu’où?
Une voix basse dit: Pourquoi pas? et Moscou?

Ah! ce meurtre effrayant est un meurtre imbécile!
Supprimer l’Agora, le Forum, le Poecile,
La cité qui résume Athènes, Rome et Tyr,
Faire de tout un peuple un immense martyr,
Changer le jour en nuit, changer l’Europe en Chine,
Parce qu’il fut un ours appelé Rostopschine!
Il faut brûler Paris, puisqu’on brûla Moscou!
Parce que la Russie adora son licou,
Parce qu’elle voulut, broyant sa ville en cendre,
Chasser Napoléon pour garder Alexandre,
Parce que cela plut au czar en son divan,
Parce que, l’oeil fixé sur la croix d’or d’Yvan,
Un barbare a sauvé son pays par un crime,
Il faut jeter la France étoilée à l’abîme!
Mais vous par qui les droits du peuple sont trahis,
Vous commettez le crime et perdez le pays!
Ce Rostopschine est grand de la grandeur sauvage;
La stature qui peut rester à l’esclavage,
Il l’a toute, et cet homme, une torche à la main,
Rentre dans sa patrie et sort du genre humain;
C’est le vieux Scythe noir, c’est l’antique Gépide;
Il est féroce, il est sublime, il est stupide;
On sait ce qu’il a fait, on ne sait s’il comprit;
Il serait un héros s’il était un esprit.
Les siècles sur leur cime ont quatre sombres flammes;
L’une où brille altier, vil, roi des gloires infâmes,
Le meurtrier d’Ephèse embouchant son clairon,
L’autre où se dresse Omar, l’autre où chante Néron;
Rostopschine est comme eux flamboyant dans l’histoire;
De ces quatre lueurs la sienne est la moins noire.

Mais vous, qui venez-vous copier?

Vous pencher
Sur Paris! allumer un cinquième bûcher!
Quoi! l’on verrait Paris comme la neige fondre!
Quoi! vous vous méprenez à ce point de confondre
La ville qui nuisait et la ville qui sert!
Moscou fut la Babel sinistre du désert,
L’antre où la raison boite, où la vérité louche,
Citadelle du moine et du boyard, farouche
Au point que nul progrès ne put habiter là,
Nid d’éperviers d’où Pierre, un vautour, s’envola.
Moscou c’était l’Asie et Paris c’est l’Europe.
Quoi! du même linceul inepte on enveloppe
Et dans la même tombe on veut faire tenir
Moscou, le passé triste, et Paris, l’avenir!
Moscou de moins, qu’importe? ôtez Paris, quelle ombre!
La boussole est perdue et le navire sombre;
Le progrès stupéfait ne sait plus son chemin.
Si vous crevez cet oeil énorme au genre humain,
Ce cyclope est aveugle, et, hors des faits possibles,
Il marche en tâtonnant avec des cris terribles;
Du côté de la pente il va dans l’inconnu.

*

Sans Paris, l’avenir naîtra reptile et nu.
Paris donne un manteau de lumière aux idées.
Les erreurs, s’il les a seulement regardées,
Tremblent subitement et s’écroulent, ayant
En elles le rayon de cet oeil foudroyant.
Comme au-dessous du temple on retrouve la crypte,
Et comme sous la Grèce on retrouve l’Egypte,
Et sous l’Egypte l’Inde, et sous l’Inde la nuit,
Sous Paris, par les temps et les races construit,
On retrouve, en creusant, toute la vieille histoire.
L’homme a gagné Paris ainsi qu’une victoire.

Le lui prendre à présent, c’est lui rendre son bât,
C’est frustrer son labeur, c’est voler son combat.
A quoi bon avoir tant lutté si tout s’effondre!
Thèbe, Ellorah, Memphis, Carthage, aujourd’hui Londre,
Tous les peuples, qu’unit un vénérable hymen,
De la raison humaine et du devoir humain
Ont créé l’alphabet, et Paris fait le livre.
Paris règne. Paris, en existant, délivre.
Par cela seul qu’il est, le monde est rassuré.

Un vaisseau comme un sceptre étendant son beaupré
Est son emblème; il fait la grande traversée,
Il part de l’ignorance et monte à la pensée.
Il sait l’itinéraire; il voit le but; il va
Plus loin qu’on ne voulut, plus haut qu’on ne rêva,
Mais toujours il arrive: il cherche, il crée, il fonde,
Et ce que Paris trouve est trouvé pour le monde.
Une évolution du globe tout entier
Veut Paris pour pivot et le prend pour chantier,
Et n’est universelle enfin qu’étant française;
Londre a Charles premier, Paris a Louis seize;
Londre a tué le roi, Paris la royauté;
Ici le coup de hache à l’homme est limité,
Là c’est la monarchie énorme et décrépite,
C’est le passé, la nuit, l’enfer, qu’il décapite.
Un mot que dit Paris est un ambassadeur;
Paris sème des lois dans toute profondeur.
Sans cesse, à travers l’ombre et la brume malsaine,
Il sort de cette forge, il sort de cette cène
Une flamme qui parle; il remplit le ciel bleu
De l’éternel départ de ses langues de feu.
On voit à chaque instant une troupe de rêves
Sublimes, qui, portant des flambeaux ou des glaives,
S’échappe de Paris et va dans l’univers;
Dante vient à Paris faire son premier vers;
Là Montesquieu construit les lois, Pascal les règles;
C’est de Paris que prend son vol l’essaim des aigles.

Paris veut que tout monte au suprême degré;
Il dresse l’idéal sur le démesuré;
A l’appui du progrès, à l’appui des idées,
Il donne des raisons hautes de cent coudées;
Pour cime et pour refuge il a la majesté
Des principes remplis d’une altière clarté;
Le fier sommet du vrai, voilà son acropole;
Il extrait Mirabeau du siècle de Walpole;
Ce Paris qui pour tous fit toujours ce qu’il put
Est parfois Sybaris et jamais Lilliput,
Par la méchanceté naît où la hauteur cesse;
Avec la petitesse on fait de la bassesse,
Et Paris n’est jamais petit; il est géant
Jusque dans sa poussière et jusqu’en son néant;
Le fond de ses fureurs est bon; jamais la haine
Ne trouble sa colère auguste et ne la gène;
Le coeur s’attendrit mieux lorsque l’esprit comprend,
Et l’on n’est le meilleur qu’en étant le plus grand.
De là la dignité de Paris, sa logique
Souffrant pour l’homme avec une douceur tragique,
Et la fraternité qui gronde en son courroux.
Les tyrans dans leurs camps, les hiboux dans leurs trous,
Le craignent, car voulant la paix, il veut l’aurore.
A la tendance humaine, obscure et vague encore,
Il creuse un lit, il fixe un but, il donne un sens;
Du juste et de l’injuste il connaît les versants;
Et du côté de l’aube il l’aide à se répandre.
Certains problèmes sont des fruits d’or pleins de cendre,
Le fond de l’un est Tout, le fond de l’autre est Rien;
On peut trouver le mal en cherchant trop le bien;
Paris le sait; Paris choisit ce qui doit vivre.
Le droit parfois devient un vin dont on s’enivre;
Ayant tout éveillé Paris peut tout calmer;
Sa grande loi Combattre a pour principe Aimer;
Paris admet l’agape et non la saturnale,
Et c’est lui qui, soudain, de l’énigme infernale

Souffle le mot céleste au sphinx déconcerté.

Où le sphinx dit: Chaos, Paris dit: Liberté!

Lieu d'éclosion! centre éclatant et sonore
Où tous les avenirs trouvent toute l'aurore!
O rendez-vous sacré de tous les lendemains!
Point d'intersection des vastes pas humains!
Paris, ville, esprit, voix! tu parles, tu rédiges,
Tu décrètes, tu veux! chez toi tous les prodiges
Viennent se rencontrer comme en leur carrefour.
Du paria de l'Inde au nègre du Darfour,
Tout sent un tremblement si ton pavé remue.
Paris, l'esprit humain dans ton nid fait sa mue;
Langue nouvelle, droits nouveaux, nouvelles lois,
Etre français après avoir été gaulois,
Il te doit tous ces grands changements de plumages.
Non, qui que vous soyez, non, quels que soient vos mages,
Vos docteurs, vos guerriers, vos chefs, quelle que soit
Votre splendeur qu'au fond de l'ombre on aperçoit,
O cités, fussiez-vous de phares constellées,
Quels que soient vos palais, vos tours, vos propylées,
Vos clartés, vos rumeurs, votre fourmillement,
Le genre humain gravite autour de cet aimant,
Paris, l'abolisseur des vieilles moeurs serviles,
Et vous ne pourrez pas le remplacer, ô villes,
Et, lui mort, consoler l'univers orphelin,
Non, non, pas même toi, Londres, ni toi, Berlin,
Ni toi, Vienne, ni toi, Madrid, ni toi, Byzance,
Si vous n'avez ainsi que lui cette puissance,
La joie, et cette force étrange, la bonté;
Si, comme ce Paris charmant et redouté,
Vous n'avez cet éclair, l'amour, et si vous n'êtes
Océan aux ruisseaux et soleil aux planètes.

Car le genre humain veut que sa ville ait au front
L'auréole et dans l'oeil le rire vif et prompt,

Qu’elle soit grande, gaie, héroïque et jalouse,
Et reste sa maîtresse en étant son épouse.

Et dire que cette oeuvre auguste, que mille ans
Et mille ans ont bâtie, industrieux et lents,
Que la cité héros, que la ville prophète,
Dire, ô cieux éternels! que la merveille faite
Par vingt siècles pensifs, patients et profonds,
Qui créèrent la flamme où nous nous réchauffons
Et mirent cette ville au centre de la sphère,
Une heure folle aurait suffi pour la défaire!

*

Sombre année. Epopée en trois livres hideux.
Les hommes n’ont rien vu de tel au-dessus d’eux.
Attila. Puis Caïn. Maintenant Erostrate.
O torche misérable, abjecte, aveugle, ingrate!
Quoi! disperser la ville unique à tous les vents!
Ce Paris qui remplit de son coeur les vivants,
Et fait planer qui rampe et penser qui végète!
Jeter au feu Paris comme le pâtre y jette,
En le poussant du pied, un rameau de sapin!
Quoi! tout sacrifier! quoi! le grenier du pain!
Quoi! la Bibliothèque, arche où l’aube se lève,
Insondable A B C de l’idéal, où rêve
Accoudé, le progrès, ce lecteur éternel,
Porte éclatante ouverte au bout du noir tunnel,
Grange où l’esprit de l’homme a mis sa gerbe immense!

Pour qui travaillez-vous? où va votre démence?
Deux faces ici-bas se regardent, le jour
Et la nuit, l’âpre Haine et le puissant Amour,
Deux principes, le bien et le mal, se soufflettent,
Et deux villes, qui sont deux mystères, reflètent,
Ce choc de deux éclairs devant nos yeux émus,
Et Rome est Arimane et Paris est Ormus.

Rome est le maître-autel où les vieux dogmes fument
Au sommet de Paris à flots de pourpre écument
En pleine éruption toutes les vérités,
La justice, jetant des rayons irrités,
La liberté, le droit, ces grandes clartés vierges.
En face de la Rome où vacillent les cierges,
Des révolutions Paris est le volcan.
Ici l’Hôtel-de-Ville et là le Vatican.
C’est au profit de l’un qu’on supprimerait l’autre.
Rome hait la raison dont Paris est l’apôtre.
O malheureux! voyez où l’on vous entraîna.
Devant le lampion vous éteignez l’Etna!
Il ne resterait plus que cette lueur vile.
Le Vatican prospère où meurt l’Hôtel-de-Ville.
Deuil! folie! immoler l’âme au suaire noir,
La parole au bâillon, l’étoile à l’éteignoir,
La vérité qui sauve au mensonge qui frappe,
Et le Paris du peuple à la Rome du pape!

*

Le genre humain peut-il être décapité?

Vous imaginez-vous cette haute cité
Qui fut des nations la parole, l’ouïe,
La vision, la vie et l’âme, évanouie!
Vous représentez-vous les peuples la cherchant?
On ne voit plus sa lampe, on n’entend plus son chant.
C’était notre théâtre et notre sanctuaire;
Elle était sur le globe ainsi qu’un statuaire
Sculptant l’homme futur à grands coups de maillet;
L’univers espérait quand elle travaillait;
Elle était l’éternelle, elle était l’immortelle;
Qu’est-il donc arrivé d’horrible? où donc est-elle?
Vous les figurez-vous s’arrêtant tout à coup?
Quel est ce pan de mur dans les ronces debout?
Le Panthéon; ce bronze épars, c’est la colonne;

Ce marais où l’essaim des corbeaux tourbillonne,
C’est la Bastille; un coin farouche où tout se tait,
Où rien ne luit, c’est là que Notre-Dame était;
La limace et le ver souillent de leurs morsures
Les pierres, ossements augustes des masures;
Pas un toit n’est resté de toutes ces maisons
Qui du progrès humain reflétaient les saisons;
Pas une de ces tours, silhouettes superbes;
Plus de ponts, plus de quais; des étangs sous des herbes,
Un fleuve extravasé dans l’ombre, devenu
Informe, et s’en allant dans un bois inconnu;
Le vague bruit de l’eau que le vent triste emporte.
Et voyez-vous l’effet que ferait cette morte!

*

Mais qui donc a jeté ce tison? Quelle main,
Osant avec le jour tuer le lendemain,
A tenté ce forfait, ce rêve, ce mystère
D’abolir la ville astre, âme de notre terre,
Centre en qui respirait tout ce qu’on étouffait?
Non, ce n’est pas toi, peuple, et tu ne l’as pas fait.
Non, vous les égarés, vous n’êtes pas coupables!
Le vénéneux essaim des causes impalpables,
Les vieux faits devenus invisibles vous ont
Troublé l’âme, et leur aile a battu votre front;
Vous vous êtes sentis enivrés d’ombre obscure;
Le taon vous poursuivait de son âcre piqûre,
Une rouge lueur flottait devant vos yeux,
Et vous avez été le taureau furieux.

J’accuse la Misère, et je traîne à la barre
Cet aveugle, ce sourd, ce bandit, ce barbare,
Le Passé; je dénonce, ô royauté, chaos,
Tes vieilles lois d’où sont sortis les vieux fléaux!
Elles pèsent sur nous, dans le siècle où nous sommes,
Du poids de l’ignorance effrayante des hommes;

Elles nous changent tous en frères ennemis;
Elles seules ont fait le mal; elles ont mis
La torche inepte aux mains des souffrants implacables.
Elles forgent les noeuds d’airain, les affreux câbles,
Les dogmes, les erreurs, dont on veut tout lier,
Rapetissent l’école et ferment l’atelier;
Leur palais a ce gui misérable, l’échoppe;
Elles font le jour louche et le regard myope;
Courbent les volontés sous le joug étouffant;
Vendent à la chaumière un peu d’air, à l’enfant
L’alphabet du mensonge, à tous la clarté fausse;
Creusent mal le sillon et creusent bien la fosse;
Ne savent ce que c’est qu’enseigner, qu’apaiser;
Ont de l’or pour payer à Judas son baiser,
N’en ont point pour payer à Colomb son voyage;
N’ont point, depuis les temps de Cyrus, d’Astyage,
De Cécrops, de Moïse et de Deucalion,
Fait un pas hors du lâche et sanglant talion;
Livrent le faible aux forts, refusent l’âme aux femmes,
Sont imbéciles, sont féroces, sont infâmes!
Je dénonce les faux pontifes, les faux dieux,
Ceux qui n’ont pas d’amours et ceux qui n’ont pas d’yeux
Non, je n’accuse rien du présent, ni personne;
Non, le cri que je pousse et le glas que je sonne,
C’est contre le passé, fantôme encor debout
Dans les lois, dans les moeurs, dans les haines, dans tout.
J’accuse, ô nos aïeux, car l’heure est solennelle,
Votre société, la vieille criminelle!
La scélérate a fait tout ce que nous voyons;
C’est elle qui sur l’âme et sur tous les rayons
Et sur tous les essors posa ses mains immondes,
Elle qui l’un par l’autre éclipsa les deux mondes,
La raison par la foi, la foi par la raison;
Elle qui mit au haut des lois une prison;
Elle qui, fourvoyant les hommes, même en France,
Créa la cécité qu’on appelle ignorance,
Leur ferma la science, et, marâtre pour eux,

Laissant noirs les esprits, fit les coeurs ténébreux!
Je l’accuse, et je veux qu’elle soit condamnée.
Elle vient d’enfanter cette effroyable année.
Elle égare parfois jusqu’à d’affreux souhaits
Toi-même, ô peuple immense et puissant qui la hais!
Le boeuf meurtri se dresse et frappe à coups de corne.
Elle a créé la foule inconsciente et morne,
Elle a tout opprimé, tout froissé, tout plié,
Tout blessé; la rancune est un glaive oublié,
Mais qu’on retrouve; hélas! la haine est une dette.
Cette société que les vieux temps ont faite,
Depuis deux mille ans règne, usurpe notre bien,
Notre droit, et prend tout même à ceux qui n’ont rien;
Elle fait dévorer le peuple aux parasites;
La guerre et l’échafaud, voilà ses réussites;
Elle n’a rien laissé que l’instinct animal
Au sauvage embusqué dans la forêt du mal;
Elle répond de tout ce que peut faire l’homme;
La bête fauve sort de la bête de somme,
L’esclave sous le fouet se révolte, et, battu,
Fuit dans l’ombre, et demande à l’enfer: Me veux-tu?
Etonnez-vous après, ô semeurs de tempêtes,
Que ce souffre-douleur soit votre trouble-fêtes,
El qu’il vous donne tort à tous sur tous les points;
Qu’il soit hagard, fatal, sombre, et que ses deux poings
Reviennent tout à coup, sur notre tragédie
Secouer, l’un le meurtre, et l’autre l’incendie!
J’accuse le passé, vous dis-je! il a tout fait.
Quand il abrutissait le peuple, il triomphait.
Il a Dieu pour fantôme et Satan pour ministre.
Hélas! il a créé l’indigence sinistre
Qui saigne et qui se venge au hasard, sans savoir,
Et qui devient la haine, étant le désespoir!

Qui que vous soyez, vous que je sers et que j’aime,
Souffrants que dans le mal la main du crime sème,
Et que j’ai toujours plaints, avertis, défendus

O vous les accablés, ô vous les éperdus,
Nos frères, repoussez celui qui vous exploite!
Suivez l'esprit qui plane et non l'esprit qui boite;
Montez vers l'avenir, montez vers les clartés:
Mais ne vous laissez plus entraîner! résistez!
Résistez, quel que soit le nom dont il se nomme,
A quiconque vous donne un conseil contre l'homme;
Résistez aux douleurs, résistez à la faim.
Si vous saviez combien on fut près de la fin!

*

Oh! l'applaudissement des spectres est terrible!
Peuple, sur ta cité, comme aux temps de la Bible,
Quand l'incendie aux crins de flamme se leva,
Quand, ainsi que Ninive en proie à Jehovah,
Lutèce agonisa, maison de la lumière;
Quand le Louvre prit feu comme un toit de chaumière,
Avec mil huit cent trente, avec quatre-vingt-neuf!
Quand la Seine coula rouge sous le pont Neuf;
Quand le Palais, école où la justice épelle,
Soudain se détachant de la Sainte-Chapelle,
Tomba comme un haillon qu'une femme découd;
Quand la destruction empourpra tout à coup
Le haut temple où Voltaire et Jean-Jacques dormirent,
Et tout ce vaste amas que les peuples admirent,
Dômes, arcs triomphaux, cirques, frontons, pavois,
D'où partent des clartés et d'où sortent des voix,
Quand on crut un moment voir la cité de gloire,
D'espérance et d'azur changée en ville noire,
Et Paris en fumée affreuse dissipé;
Ce flamboiement lugubre, ainsi que dans Tempé
Avril vient doucement agiter les colombes,
Réveilla dans l'horreur sépulcrale les tombes;
Et l'horizon s'emplit de fantômes criant:
O trépassés, venez voir mourir l'Orient!
Les méduses riaient avec leurs dents funèbres;

Le ciel eut peur, la joie infâme des ténèbres
Eclata, l’ombre vint insulter le flambeau;
Torquemada sortit du gouffre et dit: C’est beau.
Cisneros dit: Voilà le grand bûcher de l’Homme!
Sanchez grinça: L’abîme est fait. Regarde, ô Rome!
Tout ce qu’on nomme droit, principes absolus,
République, raison et liberté, n’est plus!
Tous les bourreaux, depuis Néron jusqu’à Zoïle,
Contents, vinrent jeter un tison dans la ville,
Et Borgia donna sa bénédiction.
Czars, sultans, Escobar, Rufin, Trimalcion,
Tous les conservateurs de l’antique souffrance,
Admirèrent, disant: C’est fini. Plus de France!
Ce qui s’achève ainsi ne recommence point.
A Danton interdit Brunswick montra le poing;
On entendit mugir le veau d’or dans l’étable;
Dans cette heure où le ciel devint épouvantable,
Le groupe monstrueux de tous les hommes noirs,
Sombre, et pour espérance ayant nos désespoirs,
Voyant sur toi, Paris, la mort ouvrir son aile,
Eut l’éblouissement de la nuit éternelle.

IV

Est-il jour? Est-il nuit? horreur crépusculaire!
Toute l’ombre est livrée à l’immense colère.
Coups de foudre, bruits sourds. Pâles, nous écoutons.
Le supplice imbécile et noir frappe à tâtons.
Rien de divin ne luit. Rien d’humain ne surnage.
Le hasard formidable erre dans le carnage,
Et mitraille un troupeau de vaincus, sans savoir
S’ils croyaient faire un crime ou remplir un devoir.
L’ombre engloutit Babel jusqu’aux plus hauts étages.
Des bandits ont tué soixante-quatre otages,
On réplique en tuant six mille prisonniers.
On pleure les premiers, on raille les derniers.
Le vent qui souffle a presque éteint cette veilleuse,

La conscience. O nuit! brume! heure périlleuse!
Les exterminateurs semblent doux, leur fureur
Plaît, et celui qui dit: Pardonnez! fait horreur.
Ici l'armée et là le peuple; c'est la France
Qui saigne; et l'ignorance égorge l'ignorance.
Le droit tombe. Excepté Caïn, rien n'est debout.
Une sorte de crime épars flotte sur tout.
L'innocent paraît noir tant cette ombre le couvre.
L'un a brûlé le Louvre. Hein? Qu'est-ce que le Louvre?
Il ne le savait pas. L'autre, horribles exploits,
Fusille devant lui, stupide. Où sont les lois?
Les ténèbres avec leurs sombres soeurs, les flammes,
Ont pris Paris, ont pris les coeurs, ont pris les âmes.
Je tue et ne vois pas. Je meurs et ne sais rien.
Tous mêlés, l'enfant blond, l'affreux galérien,
Pères, fils, jeunes, vieux, le démon avec l'ange,
L'homme de la pensée et l'homme de la fange,
Dans on ne sait quel gouffre expirent à la fois.
Dans l'effrayant brasier sait-on de quelles voix
Se compose le cri du boeuf d'airain qui beugle?

La mort sourde, ô terreur, fauche la foule aveugle.

V

UNE NUIT A BRUXELLES

Aux petits incidents il faut s'habituer.
Hier on est venu chez moi pour me tuer.
Mon tort dans ce pays c'est de croire aux asiles.
On ne sait quel ramas de pauvres imbéciles
S'est rué la nuit sur ma maison.
Les arbres de la place en eurent le frisson,
Mais pas un habitant ne bougea. L'escalade
Fut longue, ardente, horrible, et Jeanne était malade.
Je conviens que j'avais pour elle un peu d'effroi.
Mes deux petits-enfants, quatre femmes et moi,

C’était la garnison de cette forteresse.
Rien ne vint secourir la maison en détresse.
La police fut sourde ayant affaire ailleurs.
Un dur caillou tranchant effleura Jeanne en pleurs.
Attaque de chauffeurs en pleine Forêt-Noire.
Ils criaient: Une échelle! une poutre! victoire!
Fracas où se perdaient nos appels sans écho.
Deux hommes apportaient du quartier Pachéco
Une poutre enlevée à quelque échafaudage.
Le jour naissant gênait la bande. L’abordage
Cessait, puis reprenait. Ils hurlaient haletants.
La poutre par bonheur n’arriva pas à temps.
«Assassin! - C’était moi. - Nous voulons que tu meures!
Brigand! Bandit!” Ceci dura deux bonnes heures.
George avait calmé Jeanne en lui prenant la main.
Noir tumulte. Les voix n’avaient plus rien d’humain;
Pensif, je rassurais les femmes en prières,
Et ma fenêtre était trouée à coups de pierres.
Il manquait là des cris de vive l’empereur!
La porte résista battue avec fureur.
Cinquante hommes armés montrèrent ce courage.
Et mon nom revenait dans des clameurs de rage:
A la lanterne! à mort! qu’il meure! il nous le faut!
Par moments, méditant quelque nouvel assaut,
Tout ce tas furieux semblait reprendre haleine;
Court répit; un silence obscur et plein de haine
Se faisait au milieu de ce sombre viol;
Et j’entendais au loin chanter un rossignol.

Bruxelles, 29 mai.

VI

EXPULSE DE BELGIQUE

«- Il est enjoint au sieur Hugo de par le roi
De quitter le royaume.” - Et je m’en vais. Pourquoi?

Pourquoi? mais c’est tout simple, amis. Je suis un homme
Qui, lorsque l’on dit: Tue! hésite à dire: Assomme!
Quand la foule entraînée, hélas! suit le torrent,
Je me permets d’avoir un avis différent;
Le talion me fâche, et mon humeur bizarre
Préfère l’ange au tigre et John Brown à Pizarre;
Je blâme sans pudeur les massacres en grand;
Je ne bois pas de sang; l’ordre, à l’état flagrant,
Exterminant, hurlant, bavant, tâchant de mordre,
Me semble, à moi songeur, fort semblable au désordre;
J’assiste sans plaisir à ce hideux tournoi:
Cissey contre Duval, Rigault contre Vinoy.
Je hais qu’on joute à qui sera le plus féroce;
Qu’un gueux aille pieds nus ou qu’il roule carrosse,
Qu’il soit prince ou goujat, j’ai le très méchant goût
De tout jeter, goujat et prince, au même égout;
Mon mépris est égal pour la scélératesse
Qu’on tutoie et pour celle à qui l’on dit altesse;
Je crois, s’il faut choisir, que je préfère encor
Le crime teint de boue au crime brodé d’or;
J’excuse l’ignorant; je ne crains pas de dire
Que la misère explique un accès de délire,
Qu’il ne faut pas pousser les gens au désespoir,
Que, si des dictateurs font un forfait bien noir,
L’homme du peuple en est juste aussi responsable
Que peut l’être d’un coup de vent le grain de sable;
Le sable, arraché, pris et poussé par le vent,
Entre dans le simoun affreux, semble vivant,
Brûle et tue, et devient l’atome de l’abîme;
Il fait la catastrophe et le vent fait le crime;
Le vent c’est le despote. En ces obscurs combats,
S’il faut frapper, frappez en haut, et non en bas.
Si Rigault fut chacal, on a tort d’être hyène.
Quoi! jeter un faubourg de Paris à Cayenne!
Quoi! tous ces égarés, en faire des forçats!
Non! je hais l’Ile-aux-Pins et j’exècre Mazas.
Johannard est cruel et Serisier infâme.

Soit. Mais comprenez-vous quelle nuit a dans l’âme
Le travailleur sans pain l’été, sans feu l’hiver,
Qui voit son nouveau-né pâlir, nu comme un ver,
Qui lutte et souffre avec la faim pour récompense,
Qui ne sait rien, sinon qu’on l’opprime, et qui pense
Que détruire un palais, c’est détruire un tyran?
Que de douleurs! combien de chômages par an!
Songez-y, ne peut-il perdre enfin patience?

Le croirait-on? j’écoute en moi la conscience!
Quand j’entends crier: mort! frappez! sabrez! je vais
Jusqu’à trouver qu’un meurtre au hasard est mauvais;
Je m’étonne qu’on puisse, à l’époque où nous sommes,
Dans Paris, aller prendre une dizaine d’hommes,
Dire: Ils sont à peu près du quartier qui brûla,
Mitrailler à la hâte en masse tout cela,
Et les jeter vivants ou morts dans la chaux vive;
Je recule devant une fosse plaintive;
Ils sont là, je le sais, l’un sur l’autre engloutis,
Le mâle et la femelle, hélas! et les petits!
Coupables, ignorants, innocents, pêle-mêle;
Autour du noir charnier mon âme bat de l’aile.
Si des râles d’enfants m’appellent dans ce trou,
Je voudrais de la mort tirer le froid verrou;
J’ai par des voix sortant de terre l’âme émue;
Je n’aime pas sentir sous mes pieds qu’on remue,
Et je ne me suis pas encore habitué
A marcher sur les cris d’un homme mal tué;
C’est pourquoi, moi vaincu, moi proscrit imbécile,
J’offre aux vaincus l’abri, j’offre aux proscrits l’asile,
Je l’offre à tous. A tous! Je suis étrange au point
De voir tomber les gens sans leur montrer le poing;
Je suis de ce parti dangereux qui fait grâce;
Et demain j’ouvrirai ma porte, car tout passe,
A ceux qui sont vainqueurs quand ils seront vaincus;
Je suis pour Cicéron et je suis pour Gracchus;
Il suffit pour me faire indulgent, doux et sombre,

Que je voie une main suppliante dans l’ombre;
Faible, à ceux qui sont forts j’ose jeter le gant.
Je crie: Ayez pitié! Donc je suis un brigand.

Dehors ce monstre! il est chez nous! Il a l’audace
De se croire chez lui! d’habiter cette place,
Ce quartier, ce logis, de payer les impôts,
Et de penser qu’il peut y dormir en repos!
Mais s’il reste, l’Etat court des périls, en somme.
Il faut bien vite mettre à la porte cet homme!

Je suis un scélérat. C’est une trahison,
Quand tout le monde est fou, d’invoquer la raison.
Je suis un malfaiteur. Faut-il qu’on vous le prouve?
Comment! si je voyais dans les dents de la louve
Un agneau, je voudrais l’en arracher! Comment!
Je crois au droit d’asile, au peuple, au Dieu clément!
Le clergé s’épouvante et le sénat frissonne.
Horreur! quoi! j’ai pour loi de n’égorger personne!
Quoi! cet homme n’est pas aux vengeances fougueux!
Il n’a point de colère et de haine, ce gueux!
Oui, l’accusation, je le confesse, est vraie.
Je voudrais dans le blé ne sarcler que l’ivraie;
Je préfère à la foudre un rayon dans le ciel;
Pour moi la plaie est mal guérie avec du fiel,
Et la fraternité c’est la grande justice.
C’est à qui détruira; j’aime mieux qu’on bâtisse.
Pour moi la charité vaut toutes les vertus;
Ceux que puissants on blesse, on les panse abattus;
La pitié dans l’abîme où l’on souffre m’entraîne,
Et j’ai cette servante adorable pour reine;
Je tâche de comprendre afin de pardonner;
Je veux qu’on examine avant d’exterminer;
Un feu de peloton pour résoudre un problème
Me déplaît. Fusiller un petit garçon blême,
A quoi bon? Je voudrais qu’à l’école on l’admît,
Hélas! et qu’il vécût! - Là-dessus on frémit.

Ces opinions-là jamais ne se tolèrent!
«Et, pour comble d’effroi, les animaux parlèrent [Delille, Géorgiques: Pecudesque locutae]”
Un monsieur Ribeaucourt m’appelle individu.

Autre preuve. Une nuit, vers mon toit éperdu,
Une horde, poussant des hurlements infâmes,
Accourt, et deux enfants tout petits, quatre femmes,
Sous les pierres, les cris de mort, l’horreur, l’effroi,
Se réveillent... - Qui donc est le bandit? C’est moi.
Certes!

Le jour d’après, devant mon seuil éparse,
Une foule en gants blancs vient rire de la farce,
En criant: - C’est trop peu! Qu’on rase la maison!
Qu’on y mette le feu! - Cette foule a raison.
Il faut tuer celui qui ne veut pas qu’on tue;
C’est juste. Le bon ordre exige une battue
Contre cet assassin plus noir qu’il n’en a l’air;
Et puisqu’on veut brûler ma maison, il est clair
Que j’ai brûlé le Louvre; et je suis l’étincelle
Qui dévore Paris en restant à Bruxelle.
Honneur à Mouravief et gloire à Galifet!
On me lapide et l’on m’exile. C’est bien fait.

O beauté de l’aurore! ô majesté de l’astre!
Gibelin contre Guelfe, Yorck contre Lancastre,
Capulet, Montaigu, qu’importe! que me font
Leurs cris, puisque voilà le firmament profond!
Ame, on a de la place aux voûtes éternelles.
Le sol manque à nos pieds, non l’azur à nos ailes.
Le despote est partout sur terre, atroce et laid,
Maître par un profit et par l’autre valet;
Mais l’aube est pure, l’air est bon, l’abîme est libre;
L’immense équité sort de l’immense équilibre;
Evadons-nous là-haut! et vivons! Le songeur
Se plonge, ô ciel sublime, en ta chaste rougeur;

Dans ta pudeur sacrée, Ombre, il se réfugie.
Dieu créa le banquet dont l'homme a fait l'orgie.
Le penseur hait la fête affreuse des tyrans.
Il voit Dieu calme au fond des gouffres transparents,
Et, saignant, pâle, après les épreuves sans nombre,
Se sent le bienvenu dans la profondeur sombre.
Il va. Sa conscience est là, rien ne dément
Cette boussole ayant l'idéal pour aimant;
Plus de frontière, plus d'obstacle, plus de borne;
Il plane. En vain sur lui la Fatalité morne
Tend son filet sinistre où dans les hideux fils
Se croisent les douleurs, les haines, les exils,
Il ne se plaint pas. Fier devant la tourbe immonde,
Il rit puisque le ciel s'offre à qui perd le monde,
Puisqu'il a pour abri cette hospitalité;
Et puisqu'il peut, ô joie! ô gouffre! ô liberté!
Domptant le sort, bravant le mal, perçant les voiles,
Par les hommes chassé, s'enfuir dans les étoiles!

JUIN

I

Un jour je vis le sang couler de toutes parts;
Un immense massacre était dans l'ombre épars;
Et l'on tuait. Pourquoi? Pour tuer. O misère!
Voyant cela, je crus qu'il était nécessaire
  Que quelqu'un élevât la voix, et je parlai.
  Je dis que Montrevel et Bâville et Harlay
  N'étaient point de ce siècle, et qu'en des jours de trouble
  Par la noirceur de tous l'obscurité redouble;
  J'affirmai qu'il est bon d'examiner un peu
  Avant de dire En joue et de commander Feu!
  Car épargner les fous, même les téméraires,
  A ceux qu'on a vaincus montrer qu'on est leurs frères,
  Est juste et sage; il faut s'entendre, il faut s'unir;
  Je rappelai qu'un Dieu nous voit, que l'avenir,
  Sombre lorsqu'on se hait, s'éclaire quand on s'aime,
  Et que le malheur croît pour celui qui le sème;
  Je déclarai qu'on peut tout calmer par degrés;
  Que des assassinats ne sont point réparés
  Par un crime nouveau que sur l'autre on enfonce;
  Qu'on ne fait pas au meurtre une bonne réponse
  En mitraillant des tas de femmes et d'enfants;
  Que changer en bourreaux des soldats triomphants,
  C'est leur faire une gloire où la honte surnage;
  Et, pensif, je me mis en travers du carnage.
  Triste, n'approuvant pas la grandeur du linceul,
  Estimant que la peine est au coupable seul,
  Pensant qu'il ne faut point, hélas! jeter le crime
  De quelques-uns sur tous, et punir par l'abîme
  Paris, un peuple, un monde, au hasard châtié,
  Je dis: Faites justice, oui, mais ayez pitié!
  Alors je fus l'objet de la haine publique.
  L'église m'a lancé l'anathème biblique,

Les rois l’expulsion, les passants des cailloux;
Quiconque a de la boue en a jeté; les loups,
Les chiens, ont aboyé derrière moi; la foule
M’a hué presque autant qu’un tyran qui s’écroule;
On m’a montré le poing dans la rue; et j’ai dû
Voir plus d’un vieil ami m’éviter éperdu.
Les tueurs souriants et les viveurs féroces,
Ceux qui d’un tombereau font suivre leurs carrosses,
Les danseurs d’autrefois, égorgeurs d’à présent,
Ceux qui boivent du vin de Champagne et du sang,
Ceux qui sont élégants tout en étant farouches,
Les Haynau, les Tavanne, ayant d’étranges mouches,
Noires, que le charnier connaît, sur leur bâton,
Les improvisateurs des feux de peloton,
Le juge Lynch, le roi Bomba, Mingrat le prétre,
M’ont crié: Meurtrier! et Judas m’a dit: Traître!

II

Quoi! rester fraternel, c’est être chimérique!
Rêver l’Europe libre autant que l’Amérique,
Réclamer l’équité, l’examen, la raison,
C’est faire du nuage et du vent sa maison!
Voir un triomphe vaste et dur, ne pas s’y joindre,
Empêcher qu’il soit pire et tâcher qu’il soit moindre,
Quoi! ne point accabler les malheureux, offrir
L’homme à l’homme, et l’asile à ceux qui vont mourir,
Ne pas prendre le faible et l’aveugle pour cible,
Pardonner, c’est vouloir habiter l’impossible!
Dire qu’on doit la loi juste, le droit commun
Même aux brigands, même aux bandits, c’est en être un!
N’importe! il faut lutter. L’heure sombre est venue.
Quant à ton âge, eh bien, sois vieux, et continue,
Vétéran. Tu seras renié de nouveau.
Les plus cléments auront pitié de ton cerveau.
Tu seras le maudit qu’on raille ou qu’on foudroie,
Tu seras insulté, hué, traqué, la proie

Des calomniateurs au crime toujours prêts,
Tu seras lapidé, proscrit. Eh bien, après?

III

Par une sérénade on fête ma clémence.
A mort! est le refrain de la douce romance.
Les journaux prêtres font un vacarme effrayant.
— Cet homme ose défendre un ennemi fuyant!
Quelle audace! il nous croit honnêtes! il nous brave! -
Les maîtres ont la rage et les valets la bave.
Meute de sacristains, meute de hobereaux.
L'encensoir furieux me casse mes carreaux;
De tous les goupillons, de toutes les prières,
L'eau bénite sur moi tombe en grêle de pierres;
On m'exorcise tant qu'on m'assassine un peu.
Bref je suis expulsé par la grâce de Dieu.
— Va-t'en! - tous les pavés pleuvent, et tous les styles.
Je suis presque ébloui de tant de projectiles.
Au-dessus de mon nom on sonne le tocsin.
— Brigand! incendiaire! assassin! assassin! -
Et nous restons, après cette bataille insigne,
Eux, blancs comme un corbeau, moi, noir comme le cygne.

IV

Je n'ai pas de palais épiscopal en ville,
Je n'ai pas de prébende et de liste civile,
Nul temple n'offre un trône à mon humilité,
Nul suisse en colonel ne brille à mon côté,
Je ne me montre pas aux gros yeux des ganaches
Sous un dais, à ses coins ayant quatre panaches;
La France, même au fond de l'abîme, est pour moi
Le grand peuple en travail d'où sort la grande loi;
Je hais qu'on la bâillonne ou qu'on la fleurdelyse;
Je ne demande pas aux passants dans l'église
Tant pour voir le bon Dieu s'il est peint par Van-Dyck;

Je n’ai ni marguillier, ni bedeau, ni syndic,
Ni custode, ni clerc, ni diacre, ni vicaire;
Je ne garde aucun saint dans aucun reliquaire;
Je n’ai pas de miracle en bouteille sous clé;
Mon vêtement n’est pas de diamants bouclé;
Je ne suis pas payé quand je fais ma prière;
Je suis fort mal en cour; aucune douairière
Ne m’admire quêtant des sous dans un plat rond,
La chape d’or au cou, la mitre d’or au front;
Je ne fais point baiser ma main aux bonnes femmes;
Je vénère le ciel, mais sans le vendre aux âmes;
On ne m’appelle pas monseigneur; je me plais
Dans les champs, et mes bas ne sont pas violets;
Les fautes que je fais sont des fautes sincères;
L’hypocrisie et moi sommes deux adversaires;
Je crois ce que je dis, je fais ce que je crois;
Je mets près de Socrate aux fers Jésus en croix;
Lorsqu’un homme est traqué comme une bête fauve,
Fût-il mon ennemi, si je peux, je le sauve;
Je méprise Basile et dédaigne Scapin;
Je donne à l’enfant pauvre un morceau de mon pain;
J’ai lutté pour le vrai, pour le bon, pour l’honnête,
Et j’ai subi vingt ans l’exil dans la tempête;
Je recommencerai demain, si Dieu le veut;
Ma conscience dit: - Marche! - rien ne m’émeut,
J’obéis, et je vais, malgré les vents contraires,
Et je fais mon devoir; et c’est pourquoi, mes frères,
Au dire du journal de l’évêque de Gand,
Si je n’étais un fou, je serais un brigand.

V

EN QUITTANT BRUXELLES

Ah! ce n’est pas aisé, suivre la voie étroite,
Donner tort à la foule et rester l’âme droite,
Protéger l’éternelle équité qu’on meurtrit.

Quand le proscrit l’essaie, on redonne au proscrit
Toute la quantité d’exil dont on dispose.

Pourtant n’exile point qui veut. C’est une chose
Inexprimable, affreuse et sainte que l’exil.
Chercher son toit dans l’ombre et dire: Où donc est-il?
Songer, vieux, dans les deuils et les mélancolies,
Aux fleurs qu’avec des mains d’enfant on a cueillies,
A tel noir coin de rue autrefois plein d’attrait
A cause d’un regard furtif qu’on rencontrait;
Se rappeler les temps, les anciennes aurores,
Et dans les champs plus verts les oiseaux plus sonores;
Ne plus trouver au ciel la couleur qu’il avait;
Penser aux morts; hélas! ne plus voir leur chevet,
Hélas! ne pouvoir plus leur parler dans la tombe;
C’est là l’exil.

L’exil, c’est la goutte qui tombe,
Et perce lentement et lâchement punit
Un coeur que le devoir avait fait de granit;
C’est la peine infligée à l’innocent, au juste,
Et dont ce condamné, sous Tarquin, sous Auguste,
Sous Bonaparte, rois et césars teints de sang,
Meurt, parce qu’il est juste et qu’il est innocent.
Un exil, c’est un lieu d’ombre et de nostalgie;
On ne sait quelle brume en silence élargie,
Que tout, un chant qui passe, un bois sombre, un récif,
Un souffle, un bruit, fait croître autour d’un front pensif.
Oh! la patrie existe! Elle seule est terrible.
Elle seule nous tient par un fil invisible;
Elle seule apparaît charmante à qui la perd;
Elle seule en fuyant fait le monde désert;
Elle seule à ses champs, hélas! restés les nôtres,
A ses arbres qui n’ont point la forme des autres,
A sa rive, à son ciel, ramène tous nos pas.
L’étranger peut bannir, mais il n’exile pas.

VI

A MADAME PAUL MEURICE

Ce que j'ai fait est bien. J'en suis puni. C'est juste.
Vous qui, dans l'affreux siège et dans l'épreuve auguste,
Fûtes vaillante, calme et charmante, bravant
Cette guerre hideuse et ce noir coup de vent,
Belle âme que le ciel fit soeur d'une âme haute,
Femme du penseur fier et doux, dont j'étais l'hôte,
Vous qui saviez donner appui, porter secours,
Aider, lutter, souffrir, et sourire toujours,
Vous voyez ce qui m'est arrivé. Peu de chose.
Vous m'avez vu rentrer dans une apothéose,
Vous me voyez chassé par l'exécration.
En moins d'un an. C'est court. Rome, Athène et Sion
Faisaient ainsi. Paris a les mêmes droits qu'elles.
D'autres villes peut-être ont moins de nerfs. Lesquelles?
Il n'en est pas. Prenons le destin comme il est.
Epargner Montaigu, c'est blesser Capulet.
Or Capulet étant le plus fort, en abuse.
Je suis un malfaiteur et je suis une buse.
Soit. On m'insulte, moi qu'hier on acclamait.
C'est pour me jeter bas qu'on m'a mis au sommet.
Ce genre de triomphe, n'est-ce pas? vaut bien l'autre.
J'en atteste, madame, un coeur comme le vôtre,
Et vous tous, dont l'esprit n'est jamais obscurci,
Vieux proscrits, n'est-ce pas que je vous plais ainsi?
J'ai défendu le peuple et combattu le prêtre.
N'est-ce pas que l'abîme est beau, qu'il est bon d'être
Maudit avec Barbès, avec Garibaldi,
Et que vous m'aimez mieux lapidé qu'applaudi?

VII

Je n'ai point de colère et cela vous étonne.
Votre tonnerre tousse et vous croyez qu'il tonne;

Grondants, vous essoufflez sur moi votre aquilon:
Votre petit éclair me pique le talon;
Je n’ai pas l’air de voir la peine qu’il se donne;
Vous sentez quelque chose en moi qui vous pardonne,
Cela vous froisse. Au fait, on est trop châtié
De vouloir faire mal et de faire pitié.
Quoi! s’unir contre un homme, en tenter l’escalade,
Et n’avoir même pas l’honneur d’une ruade!
Ne pas recevoir même un soufflet! c’est blessant.
Le proscrit parfois tombe et jamais ne descend;
Il laisse autour de lui grincer la haine infâme;
Ce n’est pas pour cela qu’il dérange son âme,
Donc soyez furieux. Serai-je irrité? Non.
Je doute que j’en vienne à savoir votre nom.
Les vieux bannis pensifs sont une race inculte;
Avant de nous fâcher parce qu’on nous insulte,
C’est notre usage à nous qui sommes exigeants
De regarder un peu la stature des gens.

VIII

A QUI LA FAUTE?

Tu viens d’incendier la Bibliothèque?

Oui.
J’ai mis le feu là.

— Mais c’est un crime inouï!
Crime commis par toi contre toi-même, infâme!
Mais tu viens de tuer le rayon de ton âme!
C’est ton propre flambeau que tu viens de souffler!
Ce que ta rage impie et folle ose brûler,
C’est ton bien, ton trésor, ta dot, ton héritage!
Le livre, hostile au maître, est à ton avantage.
Le livre a toujours pris fait et cause pour toi.
Une bibliothèque est un acte de foi

Des générations ténébreuses encore
Qui rendent dans la nuit témoignage à l’aurore.
Quoi! dans ce vénérable amas des vérités,
Dans ces chefs-d’oeuvre pleins de foudre et de clartés,
Dans ce tombeau des temps devenu répertoire,
Dans les siècles, dans l’homme antique, dans l’histoire,
Dans le passé, leçon qu’épelle l’avenir,
Dans ce qui commença pour ne jamais finir,
Dans les poètes! quoi, dans ce gouffre des bibles,
Dans le divin monceau des Eschyles terribles,
Des Homères, des Jobs, debout sur l’horizon,
Dans Molière, Voltaire et Kant, dans la raison,
Tu jettes, misérable, une torche enflammée!
De tout l’esprit humain tu fais de la fumée!
As-tu donc oublié que ton libérateur,
C’est le livre? Le livre est là sur la hauteur;
Il luit; parce qu’il brille et qu’il les illumine,
Il détruit l’échafaud, la guerre, la famine
Il parle, plus d’esclave et plus de paria.
Ouvre un livre. Platon, Milton, Beccaria.
Lis ces prophètes, Dante, ou Shakespeare, ou Corneille
L’âme immense qu’ils ont en eux, en toi s’éveille;
Ebloui, tu te sens le même homme qu’eux tous;
Tu deviens en lisant grave, pensif et doux;
Tu sens dans ton esprit tous ces grands hommes croître,
Ils t’enseignent ainsi que l’aube éclaire un cloître
A mesure qu’il plonge en ton coeur plus avant,
Leur chaud rayon t’apaise et te fait plus vivant;
Ton âme interrogée est prête à leur répondre;
Tu te reconnais bon, puis meilleur; tu sens fondre,
Comme la neige au feu, ton orgueil, tes fureurs,
Le mal, les préjugés, les rois, les empereurs!
Car la science en l’homme arrive la première.
Puis vient la liberté. Toute cette lumière,
C’est à toi, comprends donc, et c’est toi qui l’éteins!
Les buts rêvés par toi sont par le livre atteints.
Le livre en ta pensée entre, il défait en elle

Les liens que l’erreur à la vérité mêle,
Car toute conscience est un noeud gordien.
Il est ton médecin, ton guide, ton gardien.
Ta haine, il la guérit; ta démence, il te l’ôte.
Voilà ce que tu perds, hélas, et par ta faute!
Le livre est ta richesse à toi! c’est le savoir,
Le droit, la vérité, la vertu, le devoir,
Le progrès, la raison dissipant tout délire.
Et tu détruis cela, toi!

— Je ne sais pas lire.

IX

La prisonnière passe, elle est blessée. Elle a
On ne sait quel aveu sur le front. La voilà!
On l’insulte! Elle a l’air des bêtes à la chaîne.
On la voit à travers un nuage de haine.
Qu’a-t-elle fait? Cherchez dans l’ombre et dans les cris,
Cherchez dans la fumée affreuse de Paris.
Personne ne le sait. Le sait-elle elle-même?
Ce qui pour l’homme est crime est pour l’esprit problème.
La faim, quelque conseil ténébreux, un bandit
Si monstrueux qu’on l’aime et qu’on fait ce qu’il dit,
C’est assez pour qu’un être obscur se dénature.
Ce noir plan incliné qu’on nomme l’aventure,
La pente des instincts fauves, le fatal vent
Du malheur en courroux profond se dépravant,
Cette sombre forêt que la guerre civile
Toujours révèle au fond de toute grande ville,
Dire: d’autres ont tout, et moi qu’est-ce que j’ai?
Songer, être en haillons, et n’avoir pas mangé,
Tout le mal sort de là. Pas de pain sur la table;
Il ne faut rien de plus pour être épouvantable.
Elle passe au milieu des foules sans pitié.
Quand on a triomphé, quand on a châtié,
Qu’a-t-on devant les yeux? la victoire aveuglante.

Tout Versailles est en fête. Elle se tait sanglante.
Le passant rit, l'essaim des enfants la poursuit
De tous les cris que peut jeter l'aube à la nuit.
L'amer silence écume aux deux coins de sa bouche;
Rien ne fait tressaillir sa surdité farouche;
Elle a l'air de trouver le soleil ennuyeux;
Une sorte d'effroi féroce est dans ses yeux.
Des femmes cependant, hors des vertes allées,
Douces têtes, des fleurs du printemps étoilées,
Charmantes, laissant pendre au bras de quelque amant
Leur main exquise et blanche où brille un diamant,
Accourent. Oh! l'infâme! on la tient! quelle joie!
Et du manche sculpté d'une ombrelle de soie,
Frais et riants bourreaux du noir monstre inclément,
Elles fouillent sa plaie avec rage et gaiement.
Je plains la misérable; elles, je les réprouve.
Les chiennes font horreur venant mordre la louve.

X

Une femme m'a dit ceci: - J'ai pris la fuite.
Ma fille que j'avais au sein, toute petite,
Criait, et j'avais peur qu'on n'entendît sa voix.
Figurez-vous, c'était un enfant de deux mois;
Elle n'avait pas plus de force qu'une mouche.
Mes baisers essayaient de lui fermer la bouche,
Elle criait toujours; hélas! elle râlait.
Elle voulait téter, je n'avais plus de lait.
Toute une nuit s'était de la sorte écoulée.
Je me cachais derrière une porte d'allée,
Je pleurais, je voyais les chassepots briller.
On cherchait mon mari qu'on voulût fusiller.
Tout à coup, le matin, sous cette horrible porte,
L'enfant ne cria plus. Monsieur, elle était morte.
Je la touchai; monsieur, elle était froide. Alors,
Cela m'était égal qu'on me tuât; dehors,
Au hasard, j'emportai ma fille, j'étais folle,

J’ai couru, des passants m’adressaient la parole,
Mais je me suis enfuie, et, je ne sais plus où,
J’ai creusé de mes mains dans la campagne un trou,
Au pied d’un arbre, au coin d’un enclos solitaire;
Et j’ai couché mon ange endormi dans la terre;
L’enfant qu’on allaita, c’est dur de l’enterrer.

Et le père était là qui se mit à pleurer.

XI

Sur une barricade, au milieu des pavés
Souillés d’un sang coupable et d’un sang pur lavés,
Un enfant de douze ans est pris avec des hommes.
— Es-tu de ceux-là, toi! - L’enfant dit: Nous en sommes.
— C’est bon, dit l’officier, on va te fusiller.
Attends ton tour. - L’enfant voit des éclairs briller,
Et tous ses compagnons tomber sous la muraille.
Il dit à l’officier: Permettez-vous que j’aille
Rapporter cette montre à ma mère chez nous?
— Tu veux t’enfuir? - Je vais revenir. - Ces voyous
Ont peur! Où loges-tu? - Là, près de la fontaine.
Et je vais revenir, monsieur le capitaine.
— Va-t’en, drôle! - L’enfant s’en va. - Piège grossier!
Et les soldats riaient avec leur officier,
Et les mourants mêlaient à ce rire leur râle
Mais le rire cessa, car soudain l’enfant pâle,
Brusquement reparu, fier comme Viala,
Vint s’adosser au mur et leur dit: Me voilà.

La mort stupide eut honte, et l’officier fit grâce.

Enfant, je ne sais point, dans l’ouragan qui passse
Et confond tout, le bien, le mal, héros, bandits,
Ce qui dans ce combat te poussait, mais je dis
Que ton âme ignorante est une âme sublime.
Bon et brave, tu fais, dans le fond de l’abîme,

Deux pas, l’un vers ta mère et l’autre vers la mort;
L’enfant a la candeur et l’homme a le remord,
Et tu ne réponds point de ce qu’on te fit faire;
Mais l’enfant est superbe et vaillant qui préfère
A la fuite, à la vie, à l’aube, aux jeux permis,
Au printemps, le mur sombre où sont morts ses amis.
La gloire au front te baise, ô toi si jeune encore!
Doux ami, dans la Grèce antique, Stésichore
T’eût chargé de défendre une porte d’Argos;
Cinégyre t’eût dit: Nous sommes deux égaux!
Et tu serais admis au rang des purs éphèbes
Par Tyrtée à Messène et par Eschyle à Thèbes.
On graverait ton nom sur des disques d’airain;
Et tu serais de ceux qui, sous le ciel serein,
S’ils passent près du puits ombragé par le saule,
Font que la jeune fille ayant sur son épaule
L’urne où s’abreuveront les buffles haletants,
Pensive, se retourne et regarde longtemps.

XII

LES FUSILLES

Guerre qui veut Tacite et qui repousse Homère!
La victoire s’achève en massacre sommaire.
Ceux qui sont satisfaits sont furieux; j’entends
Dire: - Il faut en finir avec les mécontents. -
Alceste est aujourd’hui fusillé par Philinte.
Faites.

Partout la mort. Eh bien, pas une plainte.
O blé que le destin fauche avant qu’il soit mûr!
O peuple!

On les amène au pied de l’affreux mur.
C’est bien. Ils ont été battus du vent contraire.
L’homme dit au soldat qui l’ajuste: Adieu, frère.

La femme dit: - Mon homme est tué. C’est assez.
Je ne sais s’il eut tort ou raison, mais je sais
Que nous avons traîné le malheur côte à côte;
Il fut mon compagnon de chaîne; si l’on m’ôte
Cet homme, je n’ai plus besoin de vivre. Ainsi
Puisqu’il est mort, il faut que je meure. Merci. -
Et dans les carrefours les cadavres s’entassent.
Dans un noir peloton vingt jeunes filles passent;
Elles chantent; leur grâce et leur calme innocent
Inquiètent la foule effarée; un passant
Tremble. - Où donc allez-vous? dit-il à la plus belle.
Parlez. - Je crois qu’on va nous fusiller, dit-elle.
Un bruit lugubre emplit la caserne Lobau;
C’est le tonnerre ouvrant et fermant le tombeau.
Là des tas d’hommes sont mitraillés; nul ne pleure;
Il semble que leur mort à peine les effleure,
Qu’ils ont hâte de fuir un monde âpre, incomplet,
Triste, et que cette mise en liberté leur plaît.
Nul ne bronche. On adosse à la même muraille
Le petit-fils avec l’aïeul, et l’aïeul raille,
Et l’enfant blond et frais s’écrie en riant: Feu!

Ce rire, ce dédain tragique, est un aveu.
Gouffre de glace! énigme où se perd le prophète!
Donc ils ne tiennent pas à la vie; elle est faite
De façon qu’il leur est égal de s’en aller.
C’est en plein mois de mai; tout veut vivre et mêler
Son instinct ou son âme à la douceur des choses;
Ces filles-là devraient aller cueillir des roses;
L’enfant devrait jouer dans un rayon vermeil;
L’hiver de ce vieillard devrait fondre au soleil;
Ces âmes devraient être ainsi que des corbeilles
S’emplissant de parfums, de murmures d’abeilles,
De chants d’oiseaux, de fleurs, d’extase, de printemps!
Tous devraient être d’aube et d’amour palpitants.
Eh bien, dans ce beau mois de lumière et d’ivresse,
O terreur! c’est la mort qui brusquement se dresse,

La grande aveugle, l’ombre implacable et sans yeux;
Oh! comme ils vont trembler et crier sous les cieux,
Sangloter, appeler à leur aide la ville,
La nation qui hait l’Euménide civile,
Toute la France, nous, nous tous qui détestons
Le meurtre pêle-mêle et la guerre à tâtons!
Comme ils vont, l’oeil en pleurs, bras tordus, mains crispées
Supplier les canons, les fusils, les épées,
Se cramponner aux murs, s’attacher aux passants,
Et fuir, et refuser la tombe, frémissants;
Et hurler: On nous tue! au secours! grâce! grâce!
Non. Ils sont étrangers à tout ce qui se passe;
Ils regardent la mort qui vient les emmener.
Soit. Ils ne lui font pas l’honneur de s’étonner.
Ils avaient dès longtemps ce spectre en leur pensée.
Leur fosse dans leur coeur était toute creusée.
Viens, mort!

Etre avec nous, cela les étouffait.
Ils partent. Qu’est-ce donc que nous leur avions fait?
O révélation! Qu’est-ce donc que nous sommes
Pour qu’ils laissent ainsi derrière eux tous les hommes,
Sans un cri, sans daigner pleurer, sans un regret?
Nous pleurons, nous. Leur coeur au supplice était prêt.
Que leur font nos pitiés tardives? Oh! quelle ombre!
Que fûmes-nous pour eux avant cette heure sombre?
Avons-nous protégé ces femmes? Avons-nous
Pris ces enfants tremblants et nus sur nos genoux?
L’un sait-il travailler et l’autre sait-il lire?
L’ignorance finit par être le délire;
Les avons-nous instruits, aimés, guidés enfin,
Et n’ont-ils pas eu froid? et n’ont-ils pas eu faim?
C’est pour cela qu’ils ont brûlé vos Tuileries.
Je le déclare au nom de ces âmes meurtries,
Moi, l’homme exempt des deuils de parade et d’emprunt,
Qu’un enfant mort émeut plus qu’un palais défunt
C’est pour cela qu’ils sont les mourants formidables,

Qu'ils ne se plaignent pas, qu'ils restent insondables,
Souriants, menaçants, indifférents, altiers,
Et qu'ils se laissent presque égorger volontiers.
Méditons. Ces damnés, qu'aujourd'hui l'on foudroie,
N'ont pas de désespoir n'ayant pas eu de joie.
Le sort de tous se lie à leur sort. Il le faut.
Frères, bonheur en bas, sinon malheur en haut!
Hélas! faisons aimer la vie aux misérables.
Sinon, pas d'équilibre. Ordre vrai, lois durables,
Fortes moeurs, paix charmante et virile pourtant,
Tout, vous trouverez tout dans le pauvre content.
La nuit est une énigme ayant pour mot l'étoile.
Cherchons. Le fond du coeur des souffrants se dévoile.
Le sphinx, resté masqué, montre sa nudité.
Ténébreux d'un côté, clair de l'autre côté,
Le noir problème entr'ouvre à demi la fenêtre
Par où le flamboiement de l'abîme pénètre.
Songeons, puisque sur eux le suaire est jeté,
Et comprenons. Je dis que la société
N'est point à l'aise ayant sur elle ces fantômes;
Que leur rire est terrible entre tous les symptômes,
Et qu'il faut trembler, tant qu'on n'aura pu guérir
Cette facilité sinistre de mourir.

XIII

A CEUX QU'ON FOULE AUX PIEDS

Oh! je suis avec vous! j'ai cette sombre joie.
Ceux qu'on accable, ceux qu'on frappe et qu'on foudroie
M'attirent; je me sens leur frère; je défends
Terrassés ceux que j'ai combattus triomphants;
Je veux, car ce qui fait la nuit sur tous m'éclaire,
Oublier leur injure, oublier leur colère,
Et de quels noms de haine ils m'appelaient entre eux.
Je n'ai plus d'ennemis quand ils sont malheureux.
Mais surtout c'est le peuple, attendant son salaire,

Le peuple, qui parfois devient impopulaire,
C’est lui, famille triste, hommes, femmes, enfants,
Droit, avenir, travaux, douleurs, que je défends;
Je défends l’égaré, le faible, et cette foule
Qui, n’ayant jamais eu de point d’appui, s’écroule
Et tombe folle au fond des noirs événements;
Etant les ignorants, ils sont les incléments;
Hélas! combien de temps faudra-t-il vous redire
A vous tous, que c’était à vous de les conduire,
Qu’il fallait leur donner leur part de la cité,
Que votre aveuglement produit leur cécité;
D’une tutelle avare on recueille les suites,
Et le mal qu’ils vous font, c’est vous qui le leur fîtes.
Vous ne les avez pas guidés, pris par la main,
Et renseignés sur l’ombre et sur le vrai chemin;
Vous les avez laissés en proie au labyrinthe.
Ils sont votre épouvante et vous êtes leur crainte;
C’est qu’ils n’ont pas senti votre fraternité.
Ils errent; l’instinct bon se nourrit de clarté;
Ils n’ont rien dont leur âme obscure se repaisse;
Ils cherchent des lueurs dans la nuit, plus épaisse
Et plus morne là-haut que les branches des bois;
Pas un phare. A tâtons, en détresse, aux abois,
Comment peut-il penser celui qui ne peut vivre?
En tournant dans un cercle horrible, on devient ivre;
La misère, âpre roue, étourdit Ixion.
Et c’est pourquoi j’ai pris la résolution
De demander pour tous le pain et la lumière.

Ce n’est pas le canon du noir vendémiaire,
Ni les boulets de juin, ni les bombes de mai,
Qui font la haine éteinte et l’ulcère fermé.
Moi, pour aider le peuple à résoudre un problème,
Je me penche vers lui. Commencement: je l’aime.
Le reste vient après. Oui, je suis avec vous,
J’ai l’obstination farouche d’être doux,
O vaincus, et je dis: Non, pas de représailles!

O mon vieux coeur pensif, jamais tu ne tressailles
Mieux que sur l’homme en pleurs, et toujours tu vibras
Pour des mères ayant leurs enfants dans les bras.

Quand je pense qu’on a tué des femmes grosses,
Qu’on a vu le matin des mains sortir des fosses,
O pitié! quand le pense à ceux qui vont partir!
Ne disons pas: Je fus proscrit, je fus martyr.
Ne parlons pas de nous devant ces deuils terribles;
De toutes les douleurs ils traversent les cribles;
Ils sont vannés au vent qui les emporte, et vont
Dans on ne sait quelle ombre au fond du ciel profond.
Où? qui le sait? leurs bras vers nous en vain se dressent.
Oh! ces pontons sur qui j’ai pleuré reparaissent,
Avec leurs entreponts où l’on expire, ayant
Sur soi l’énormité du navire fuyant!
On ne peut se lever debout; le plancher tremble;
On mange avec les doigts au baquet tous ensemble,
On boit l’un après l’autre au bidon, on a chaud,
On a froid, l’ouragan tourmente le cachot,
L’eau gronde, et l’on ne voit, parmi ces bruits funèbres,
Qu’un canon allongeant son cou dans les ténèbres.
Je retombe en ce deuil qui jadis m’étouffait.
Personne n’est méchant, et que de mal on fait!

Combien d’êtres humains frissonnent à cette heure,
Sur la mer qui sanglote et sous le ciel qui pleure,
Devant l’escarpement hideux de l’inconnu!
Etre jeté là, triste, inquiet, tremblant, nu,
Chiffre quelconque au fond d’une foule livide,
Dans la brume, l’orage et les flots, dans le vide,
Pêle-mêle et tout seul, sans espoir, sans secours,
Ayant au coeur le fil brisé de ses amours!
Dire: - « Où suis-je? On s’en va. Tout pâlit, tout se creuse,
Tout meurt. Qu’est-ce que c’est que cette fuite affreuse?
La terre disparaît, le monde disparaît.
Toute l’immensité devient une forêt.

Je suis de la nuée et de la cendre. On passe.
Personne ne va plus penser à moi. L’espace!
Le gouffre! Où sont-ils ceux près de qui je dormais!” -
Se sentir oublié dans la nuit pour jamais!
Devenir pour soi-même une espèce de songe!
Oh! combien d’innocents, sous quelque vil mensonge
Et sous le châtiment féroce, stupéfaits!
— Quoi! disent-ils, ce ciel où je me réchauffais,
Je ne le verrai plus! on me prend la patrie!
Rendez-moi mon foyer, mon champ, mon industrie,
Ma femme, mes enfants! rendez-moi la clarté!
Qu’ai-je donc fait pour être ainsi précipité
Dans la tempête infâme et dans l’écume amère,
Et pour n’avoir plus droit à la France ma mère! -

Quoi! lorsqu’il s’agirait de sonder, ô vainqueurs,
L’obscur puits social béant au fond des coeurs,
D’étudier le mal, de trouver le remède,
De chercher quelque part le levier d’Archimède,
Lorsqu’il faudrait forger la clef des temps nouveaux;
Après tant de combats, après tant de travaux,
Et tant de fiers essais et tant d’efforts célèbres,
Quoi! pour solution, faire dans les ténèbres,
Nous, guides et docteurs, nous les frères aînés,
Naufrager un chaos d’hommes infortunés!
Décréter qu’on mettra dehors, qui? le mystère!
Que désormais l’énigme a l’ordre de se taire,
Et que le sphinx fera pénitence à genoux!
Quels vieillards sommes-nous! quels enfants sommes-nous!
Quel rêve, hommes d’Etat! quel songe, ô philosophes!
Quoi! pour que les griefs, pour que les catastrophes,
Les problèmes, l’angoisse et les convulsions
S’en aillent, suffit-il que nous les expulsions?
Rentrer chez soi, crier: - Français, je suis ministre
Et tout est bien! - tandis qu’à l’horizon sinistre,
Sous des nuages lourds, hagards, couleur de sang,
Chargé de spectres, noir, dans les flots décroissant,

Avec l’enfer pour aube et la mort pour pilote,
On ne sait quel radeau de la Méduse flotte!
Quoi! les destins sont clos, disparus, accomplis,
Avec ce que la vague emporte dans ses plis!
Ouvrir à deux battants la porte de l’abîme,
Y pousser au hasard l’innocence et le crime,
Tout, le mal et le bien, confusément puni,
Refermer l’océan et dire: c’est fini!
Etre des hommes froids qui jamais ne s’émoussent,
Qui n’attendrissent point leur justice, et qui poussent
L’impartialité jusqu’à tout châtier!
Pour le guérir, couper le membre tout entier!
Quoi! pour expédient prendre la mer profonde!
Au lieu d’être ceux-là par qui l’ordre se fonde,
Jeter au gouffre en tas les faits, les questions,
Les deuils que nous pleurions et que nous attestions,
La vérité, l’erreur, les hommes téméraires,
Les femmes qui suivaient leurs maris ou leurs frères,
L’enfant qui remua follement le pavé,
Et faire signe aux vents, et croire tout sauvé
Parce que sur nos maux, nos pleurs, nos inclémences,
On a fait travailler ces balayeurs immenses!

Eh bien, que voulez-vous que je vous dise, moi!
Vous avez tort. J’entends les cris, je vois l’effroi,
L’horreur, le sang, la mer, les fosses, les mitrailles,
Je blâme. Est-ce ma faute enfin? j’ai des entrailles.
Eternel Dieu! c’est donc au mal que nous allons?
Ah! pourquoi déchaîner de si durs aquilons
Sur tant d’aveuglements et sur tant d’indigences?
Je frémis.

Sans compter que toutes ces vengeances,
C’est l’avenir qu’on rend d’avance furieux!
Travailler pour le pire en faisant pour le mieux,
Finir tout de façon qu’un jour tout recommence,
Nous appelons sagesse, hélas! cette démence.

Flux, reflux. La souffrance et la haine sont soeurs.
Les opprimés refont plus tard des oppresseurs.

Oh! dussé-je, coupable aussi moi d'innocence,
Reprendre l'habitude austère de l'absence,
Dût se refermer l'âpre et morne isolement,
Dussent les cieux, que l'aube a blanchis un moment,
Redevenir sur moi dans l'ombre inexorables,
Que du moins un ami vous reste, ô misérables!
Que du moins il vous reste une voix! que du moins
Vous nous ayez, la nuit et moi, pour vos témoins?
Le droit meurt, l'espoir tombe, et la prudence est folle.
Il ne sera pas dit que pas une parole
N'a, devant cette éclipse affreuse, protesté.
Je suis le compagnon de la calamité.
Je veux être, - je prends cette part, la meilleure, -
Celui qui n'a jamais fait le mal, et qui pleure;
L'homme des accablés et des abandonnés.
Volontairement j'entre en votre enfer, damnés.
Vos chefs vous égaraient, je l'ai dit à l'histoire;
Certes, je n'aurais pas été de la victoire,
Mais je suis de la chute; et je viens, grave et seul,
Non vers votre drapeau, mais vers votre linceul.
Je m'ouvre votre tombe.

Et maintenant, huées,
Toi calomnie et toi haine, prostituées,
O sarcasmes payés, mensonges gratuits,
Qu'à Voltaire ont lancés Nonotte et Maupertuis,
Poings montrés qui jadis chassiez Rousseau de Bienne,
Cris plus noirs que les vents de l'ombre libyenne,
Plus vils que le fouet sombre aux lanières de cuir,
Qui forciez le cercueil de Molière à s'enfuir,
Ironie idiote, anathèmes farouches,
O reste de salive encor blanchâtre aux bouches
Qui crachèrent au front du pâle Jésus-Christ,
Pierre éternellement jetée à tout proscrit,

Acharnez-vous! Soyez les bien venus, outrages.
C’est pour vous obtenir, injures, fureurs, rages,
Que nous, les combattants du peuple, nous souffrons,
La gloire la plus haute étant faite d’affronts.

XIV

A VIANDEN

Il songe. Il s’est assis rêveur sous un érable.
Entend-il murmurer la forêt vénérable?
Regarde-t-il les fleurs? regarde-t-il les cieux?
Il songe. La nature au front mystérieux
Fait tout ce qu’elle peut pour apaiser les hommes;
Du coteau plein de vigne au verger plein de pommes
Les mouches viennent, vont, reviennent; les oiseaux
Jettent leur petite ombre errante sur les eaux;
Le moulin prend la source et l’arrête au passage;
L’étang est un miroir où le frais paysage
Se renverse et se change en vague vision;
Tout dans la profondeur fait une fonction;
Pas d’atome qui n’ait sa tâche; tout s’agite;
Le grain dans le sillon, la bête dans son gîte,
Ont un but; la matière obéit à l’aimant;
L’immense herbe infinie est un fourmillement;
Partout le mouvement sans relâche et sans trêve,
Dans ce qui pousse, croît, monte, descend, se lève,
Dans le nid, dans le chien harcelant les troupeaux,
Dans l’astre; et la surface est le vaste repos;
En dessous tout s’efforce, en dessus tout sommeille;
On dirait que l’obscure immensité vermeille
Qui balance la mer pour bercer l’alcyon,
Et que nous appelons Vie et Création,
Charmante, fait semblant de dormir, et caresse
L’universel travail avec de la paresse.
Quel éblouissement pour l’oeil contemplateur!
De partout, du vallon, du pré, de la hauteur,

Du bois qui s’épaissit et du ciel qui rougeoie,
Sort cette ombre, la paix, et ce rayon, la joie.
Et maintenant, tandis qu’à travers les ravins,
Une petite fille avec des yeux divins
Et de lestes pieds nus dignes de Praxitèle,
Chasse à coups de sarment sa chèvre devant elle,
Voici ce qui remue en l’âme du banni:

— Hélas! tout n’est pas dit et tout n’est pas fini
Parce qu’on a creusé dans la rue une fosse,
Parce qu’un chef désigne un mur où l’on adosse
De pauvres gens devant les feux de pelotons,
Parce qu’on exécute au hasard, à tâtons,
Sans choix, sous la mitraille et sous la fusillade,
Pères, mères, le fou, le brigand, le malade,
Et qu’on fait consumer en hâte par la chaux
Des corps d’hommes sanglants et d’enfants encor chauds!

XV

Toujours le même fait se répète; il le faut.
Le trône abject s’adosse à l’illustre échafaud;
L’aigle semble inutile et ridicule aux grues;
On traîne Coligny par les pieds dans les rues;
Dante est fou; Rome met à la porte Caton;
Et Rohan bat Voltaire à grands coups de bâton.
Soyez celui qui lutte, aime, console, pense,
Pardonne, et qui pour tous souffre, et pour récompense
Ayez la haine, l’onde amère, le reflux,
L’ombre, et ne demandez aux hommes rien de plus.
Toutes ces choses-là sont les vérités vraies
Depuis que la lumière indigne les orfraies,
Depuis Socrate, Eschyle, Épictète et Zénon,
Depuis qu’au Oui des cieux la terre répond Non,
Depuis que Sparte en deuil fait rire les Sodomes,
Depuis, - voilà bientôt deux mille ans, - que les hommes
Ont vu, sur un gibet et sur un piédestal,

Deux couronnes paraître au même instant fatal;
Chacune représente un côté de notre âme;
L’une est de laurier d’or, l’autre d’épine infâme;
Elles sont sur deux fronts dont rien ne les ôta.
L’une brille à Caprée et l’autre au Golgotha.

XVI

Je ne veux condamner personne, ô sombre histoire.
Le vainqueur est toujours traîné par sa victoire
Au-delà de son but et de sa volonté;
Guerre civile! ô deuil! le vainqueur emporté
Perd pied dans son triomphe et sombre en cette eau noire
Qu’on appelle succès n’osant l’appeler gloire.
C’est pourquoi tous, martyrs et bourreaux, je les plains.
Hélas! malheur à ceux qui font des orphelins!
Malheur! malheur! malheur à ceux qui font des veuves!
Malheur quand le carnage affreux rougit les fleuves,
Et quand, souillant leur lit d’un flot torrentiel,
Le sang de l’homme coule où coule l’eau du ciel!
Devant un homme mort un double effroi me navre.
J’ai pitié du tueur autant que du cadavre.
Le mort tient le vivant dans sa rigide main.
Le meurtrier prendra n’importe quel chemin,
Il peut chasser ce mort, et le chasser encore,
L’enfouir dans la nuit, le noyer dans l’aurore,
Le jeter à la mer, le perdre, et, plein d’ennui,
Mettre une épaisseur d’ombre entre son crime et lui;
Toujours il reverra ce spectre insubmersible.

*

De l’arc tendu là-haut nous sommes tous la cible;
Sa flèche tour à tour nous vise; le vainqueur
L’a dans l’esprit avant de l’avoir dans le coeur;
Il craint l’événement dont il est le ministre;
Il sent dans le lointain sourdre une heure sinistre;

Il sent que lui non plus, même en hâtant le pas,
A sa propre victoire il n’échappera pas.
Un jour, à son tour, pris par le piège des choses,
Tremblant du résultat dont il construit les causes,
Il fuira, demandant un asile, un appui,
Un abri. « Non! diront ses amis d’aujourd’hui,
Non! Va-t’en! - C’est pourquoi je tiens ma porte ouverte.”

*

Le penseur en songeant fait une découverte:
Personne n’est coupable.

Un si noir dénoûment
Laisse au fond de son gouffre entrevoir l’élément.
Le futur siècle gronde et s’enfle en d’âpres cuves
Comme la lave écume aux bouches des vésuves.
Qui donc dans ce chaos travaillait? Je ne sais.
Des foudres ont rugi, des aigles ont passé;
Tout ce que nous voyons s’est fait entre les serres
Des fléaux inconnus, hideux et nécessaires;
Ils se sont rués comme une troupe d’oiseaux;
Le sang profond du coeur, la moelle des os,
Tout l’homme a tressailli dans l’homme, à la venue
Du sombre essaim des faits nouveaux fendant la nue;
Et dans l’inattendu s’abattant sur nos fronts
Nous avons reconnu le mal dont nous souffrons;
Alors les appétits des foules redoutables
Se sont mis à mugir au fond de leurs étables,
Et nous avons senti que l’appétit enfin
A tort s’il est l’envie et droit s’il est la faim.
La lumière un moment s’est toute évanouie.
Qu’est-ce que c’était donc que cette heure inouïe?
Là des chocs furieux, là des venins subtils.
Pourquoi ces vents ont-ils soufflé? d’où viennent-ils?
Pourquoi ces becs de flamme écrasant ces couvées?
Pourquoi ces profondeurs brusquement soulevées?

On a fait des forfaits dont on est innocent.
Les révolutions parfois versent le sang,
Et, quand leur volonté de vaincre se déchaîne,
Leur formidable amour ressemble à de la haine.
Maintenons, maintenons les principes sacrés;
Mais quand par l'aquilon les coeurs sont égarés,
Quand ils soufflent sur nous comme sur de la cendre,
Au fond du noir problème il faut savoir descendre;
L'homme subit, le gouffre agit; les ouragans
Sont les seuls scélérats et sont les seuls brigands.
Envoyez la tempête et la trombe à Cayenne!
Non, notre âme n'est pas tout à coup une hyène,
Non, nous ne sommes pas brusquement des bandits;
Non, je n'accuse point l'homme faible, et je dis
Que la fureur du vent fatal qui nous emmène
Peut t'arracher ton ancre, ô conscience humaine!
L'homme qu'hier la mer sauvage secouait,
Répond-il de ce flot dont il fut le jouet?
Peut-il être à la fois le vautour et la proie?
Bien qu'ayant confiance en ce qui nous foudroie,
Bien que pour l'inconnu je me sente clément,
Je le dis, l'accusé pour moi, c'est l'élément.
L'élément, dur moteur que rien ne déconcerte.

*

Mais faut-il donc trembler devant l'avenir? Certe,
Il faut songer. Trembler, non pas. Sachez ceci:
Ce rideau du destin par l'énigme épaissi,
Cet océan difforme où flotte l'âme humaine,
La vaste obscurité de tout le phénomène,
Ce monde en mal d'enfant ébauchant le chaos,
Ces idéals ayant des profils de fléaux,
Ces émeutes manquant toujours la délivrance,
Toute cette épouvante, oui, c'est de l'espérance.
Le matin glacial consterne l'horizon;
Parfois le jour commence avec un tel frisson

Que le soleil levant semble une attaque obscure.
La branche offre la fleur au prix de la piqûre.
Par un sentier d'angoisse aux bleus sommets j'irai.
La vie ouvrant de farce un ventre déchiré,
A pour commencement une auguste souffrance.

L'onde de l'inconnu n'a qu'une transparence
Livide, où la clarté ne vient que par degrés;
Ce qu'elle montre flotte en plis démesurés.
La dilatation de la forme et du nombre
Etonne, et c'est hideux d'apercevoir dans l'ombre
Aujourd'hui ce qui doit n'être vu que demain.
Demain semble infernal tant il est surhumain.
Ce qui n'est pas encor germe en d'obscurs repaires;
Demain qui charmera les fils, fait peur aux pères,
L'azur est sous la nuit dont nous nous effrayons,
Et cet oeuf ténébreux est rempli de rayons.
Cette larve lugubre aura plus tard des ailes.
Spectre visible au fond des ombres éternelles,
Demain dans Aujourd'hui semble un embryon noir,
Rampant en attendant qu'il plane, étrange à voir,
Informe, aveugle, affreux; plus tard l'aube le change.
L'avenir est un monstre avant d'être un archange.

XVII

Il y avait dans les esprits une véritable exagération de la valeur, des facultés, de l'importance de la garde nationale... Mon Dieu, vous avez vu le képi de M. Victor Hugo qui symbolisait cette situation.
(Le Général Trochu à l'Assemblée Nationale, - 14 juin 1871.)

Participe passé du verbe Tropchoir, homme
De toutes les vertus sans nombre dont la somme
Est zéro, soldat brave, honnête, pieux, nul,
Bon canon, mais ayant un peu trop de recul,
Preux et chrétien, tenant cette double promesse,

Capable de servir ton pays et la messe,
Vois, je te rends justice; eh bien, que me veux-tu?
Tu fais sur moi, d’un style obtus, quoique pointu,
Un retour offensif qu’eût mérité la Prusse.
Dans ce siège allemand et dans cet hiver russe,
Je n’étais, j’en conviens, qu’un vieillard désarmé,
Heureux d’être en Paris avec tous enfermé,
Profitant quelquefois d’une nuit de mitraille
Et d’ombre, pour monter sur la grande muraille,
Pouvant dire Présent, mais non pas Combattant,
Bon à rien; je n’ai pas capitulé pourtant.
Tes lauriers dans ta main se changent en orties.
Quoi donc, c’est contre moi que tu fais des sorties!
Nous t’en trouvions avare en ce siège mauvais.
Eh bien, nous avions tort; tu me les réservais.
Toi qui n’as point franchi la Marne et sa presqu’île,
Tu m’attaques. Pourquoi? je te laissais tranquille.
D’où vient que ma coiffure en drap bleu te déplaît?
Qu’est-ce que mon képi fait à ton chapelet?

Quoi! tu n’es pas content! cinq longs mois nous subîmes
Le froid, la faim, l’approche obscure des abîmes,
Sans te gêner, unis, confiants, frémissants?
Si tu te crois un grand général, j’y consens;
Mais quand il faut courir au gouffre, aller au large,
Pousser toute une armée au feu, sonner la charge,
J’aime mieux un petit tambour comme Barra.
Songe à Garibaldi qui vint de Caprera,
Songe à Kléber au Caire, à Manin dans Venise,
Et calme-toi. Paris formidable agonise
Parce que tu manquas, non de coeur, mais de foi.
L’amère histoire un jour dira ceci de toi:
La France, grâce à lui, ne battit que d’une aile.
Dans ces grands jours, pendant l’angoisse solennelle,
Ce fier pays, saignant, blessé, jamais déchu,
Marcha par Gambetta, mais boita par Trochu.

XVIII

LES INNOCENTS

Mais les enfants sont là. Le murmure qui sort
De ces âmes en fleur est-il compris du sort?
L’enfant va devant lui gaiement; mais la prière,
Quand il rit, parle-t-elle à quelqu’un en arrière?
Le frais chuchotement du doux être enfantin
Attendrit-il l’oreille obscure du destin?
Oh! que d’ombre! Tous deux chantent, fragiles têtes
Où flotte la lueur d’on ne sait quelles fêtes,
Et que dore un reflet d’un paradis lointain!
Les enfants ont des coeurs faits comme le matin
Ils ont une innocence étonnée et joyeuse;
Et pas plus que l’oiseau gazouillant sous l’yeuse,
Pas plus que l’astre éclos sur les noirs horizons,
Ils ne sont inquiets de ce que nous faisons,
Ayant pour toute affaire et pour toute aventure
L’épanouissement de la grande nature;
Ils ne demandent rien à Dieu que son soleil;
Ils sont contents pourvu qu’un beau rayon vermeil
Chauffe les petits doigts de leur main diaphane
Et que le ciel soit bleu, cela suffit à Jeanne.

JUILLET

I

LES DEUX VOIX

LA VOIX SAGE

Toute la politique est un expédient.
Que fais-tu? Quoi! tu vas, niant, répudiant,
Blâmant toute action en dehors des principes.
Prends garde. En efforts vains et nuls tu te dissipes.
C’est moi qui guide l’homme errant dans la forêt.
J’ai pour nom la Raison, pour prénom l’Intérêt,
Et je suis la Sagesse. Ami, je parle, écoute.
Caton qui m’a bravée a su ce qu’il en coûte.
O poëte, chercheur du mieux, tu perds le bien.
Il t’échappe. Tu fais échouer Tout sur Rien.
Laisse donc succomber les choses qui succombent!
Ta pente est de toujours aller vers ceux qui tombent,
Ce qui fait que jamais tu ne seras vainqueur.
N’a pas assez d’esprit qui montre trop de coeur.
La vérité trop vraie est presque le mensonge.
En cherchant l’idéal, on rencontre le songe,
Si l’on plonge au-delà de l’exacte épaisseur;
Et l’on devient rêveur pour être trop penseur.
Le sage ne veut pas être injuste, mais, ferme,
Craint d’être aussi trop juste, et cherche un moyen terme;
Premier écueil, le faux; deuxième écueil, le vrai.
Le droit brut, pris en bloc, n’est que le minerai;
La loi, c’est l’or. Du droit il faut savoir l’extraire.
Quelquefois on a l’air de faire le contraire
De ce qu’on devrait faire, et c’est là le grand art.
Tu n’arrives jamais, et moi j’arrive tard;
Mieux vaut arriver tard que pas du tout. En somme,
Tu fais de l’homme un dieu, de dieu je fais un homme;

Voilà la différence entre nous. Réfléchis.
Tu braves le chaos, moi je crains le gâchis.
Es-tu sûr de finir par tirer de ton gouffre
Autre chose qu'un être imbécile qui souffre?
Crois-tu refaire à neuf l'homme et tripler ses sens?
Prends-moi donc tels qu'ils sont les vivants, ces passants!
Foin du déclamateur qui s'essouffle et qui beugle!
Trop de lumière autant que trop de nuit, aveugle.
On n'ouvre qu'à demi le volet, s'il le faut.
On n'aime pas la guerre et l'on hait l'échafaud
En théorie; eh bien, on s'en sert en pratique.
Mon cher, il faut au temple adosser la boutique;
Je sais qu'on a chassé les vendeurs du saint lieu,
Mais le tort de Jésus est d'être un peu trop dieu.
Il me faudrait de fiers garants pour que je crusse
Qu'il eût payé les cinq milliards à la Prusse.
Le sage se modère en tout. Calme en mon coin,
Je blâme l'infini, mon cher, qui va trop loin;
Sur la création, beaucoup trop large sphère,
Les bons esprits ont bien des critiques à faire;
L'excès est le défaut de ce monde, entre nous;
Le soleil est superbe et le printemps est doux,
L'un a trop de rayons et l'autre a trop de roses;
C'est l'inconvénient de ces sortes de choses,
Et Dieu n'est pas exempt d'exagération.
L'imiter, c'est tomber dans la perfection,
Grand danger; tout va mieux sur un patron moins ample,
Et Dieu ne donne pas toujours le bon exemple.
A quoi sert d'être à pic? Jésus passe le but
En n'examinant point l'offre de Belzébuth;
Je ne dis pas qu'il dût accepter; mais c'est bête
Que Dieu soit impoli quand le diable est honnête.
Il eût mieux valu dire: On verra, mon ami.
Le sage ne fait pas le fier. Une fourmi
Travaille plus avec sa routine ordinaire
Et son bon sens, qu'avec son vacarme un tonnerre.
L'homme est l'homme; il n'est pas méchant, il n'est pas bon.

Blanc comme neige, point; noir comme le charbon,
Non. Blanc et noir, mêlé, tigré, douteux, sceptique.
Tout homme médiocre est homme politique.
Cherchons, non la grandeur, mais la proportion.
Agir comme Aristide et comme Phocion,
Etre héroïque, épique et beau, mauvaise affaire.
Le sage au Parthénon en ruine préfère
La hutte confortable et chaude du castor.
Je fréquente Rothschild et fuis Adamastor.
Le titan d’aujourd’hui c’est le millionnaire.
L’homme d’Etat ne veut rien d’excessif; vénère
Le vote universel, mais travaille au scrutin;
Il supprime l’esclave et garde le pantin;
Il conserve le fil tout en brisant la chaîne.
Les hommes sont petits, leur conscience est naine;
L’homme d’Etat leur prend mesure avant d’oser;
Il s’ôte une vertu qui peut les dépasser;
Il les étonne, mais sans foudre et sans vertiges;
A leur dimension il leur fait des prodiges.
Ami, le médiocre est un très bon endroit,
Ni beau, ni laid, ni haut, ni bas, ni chaud, ni froid;
Moi, la raison, j’y fais mon lit, j’y mets ma table,
Et j’y vis, le sublime étant inhabitable.
Qui donc prend pour logis la cime du Mont-Blanc?
Le sage est médiocre et souple, ou fait semblant.
Vois, tu t’es fait jeter des pierres à Bruxelles.
Les journaux à sonnette agitent leurs crécelles;
La gazette des fonds secrets de l’empereur
Dit des choses sur toi qu’on lit avec horreur,
Que tu comptes les mots d’un télégramme, et même
Qu’on boit de mauvais vin chez toi, qu’on fait carême
A ta table, et que B. n’ira plus dîner là;
Et caetera. Tu t’es attiré tout cela.
Monsieur Veuillot t’appelle avec esprit citrouille;
A compter tes forfaits la mémoire s’embrouille:
Ivrognerie et vol, képi sans numéro,
Avarice. Tu vis sous clameur de haro.

C’est ta faute. Pourquoi n’es-tu pas raisonnable?
Renonce à tenir tête au mal. Sois convenable.
Tenir tête au mal, certe, est bon; mais être seul
Est mauvais. Tu n’es pas barbon, vieillard, aïeul,
Pour avancer alors que ton siècle recule;
Combattre en cheveux blancs et seul, est ridicule;
Un vaillant qui devient prudent grandit encor;
Nestor jeune est Ajax, Ajax vieux est Nestor;
Sois de ton âge; enseigne aux peuples la sagesse.
La Vérité trop nue est une sauvagesse;
Rudoyer le succès est l’acte d’un butor;
Tout vainqueur a raison, tout ce qui brille est or;
Aquilon est le dieu, Girouette est le culte.
Bonaparte est tombé, c’est pourquoi je l’insulte.
Est-ce ma faute, à moi, si le sort se dément?
Je ne sors pas de là; réussissez. Comment!
Aujourd’hui, l’on est tous, d’une façon oblique,
D’accord; c’est à cela que sert la République;
On sauve, en supprimant quiconque est ennemi,
A grands coups de canon, et de compte à demi,
L’ordre et la monarchie encor presque inédite;
Tu refuses d’entrer dans cette commandite!
C’est absurde. On s’indigne, on a raison. D’ailleurs
Jeunes, vieux, grands, petits, les pires, les meilleurs,
Ont tous la même loi, se rendre à l’évidence.
Toujours un peu de droit dans le fait se condense;
Le mal contient un peu de bien, qu’il faut chercher.
Si Torquemada règne, on se chauffe au bûcher.
La Politique est l’art de faire avec la fange,
Le fiel, l’abaissement qu’en modestie on change,
La bassesse des grands, l’insolence des nains,
Les fautes, les erreurs, les crimes, les venins,
Le oui, le non, le blanc, le noir, Genève et Rome,
Un breuvage que puisse avaler l’honnête homme.
Les principes n’ont pas grand’chose à faire là.
Ils rayonnent; c’est bien; Morus les contempla;
Saluons-les; tout astre a droit à ce péage;

Et couvrons-les parfois de quelque bon nuage.
Ils sont là-haut, pourquoi s’en servir ici-bas?
Laissons-les dans leur sphère; et nous, pour nos débats
Où se dépense en vain tant de force avortée,
Prenons une clarté mieux à notre portée:
L’expédient. Turgot a tort; vive Terray!
Je cherche le réel, toi tu cherches le vrai.
On vit par le réel, par le vrai l’on se brise;
Le réel craint le vrai. Reconnais ta méprise.
Le devoir, c’est l’emploi des faits. Tu l’as mal lu.
Au lieu du relatif, tu choisis l’absolu.
Un homme qui, voulant y voir clair pour descendre
Dans la cave, ou fouiller dans quelque tas de cendre,
Ou pour trouver, la nuit, dans les bois, son chemin,
Enfoncerait au fond du ciel sombre sa main,
Et prendrait une étoile en guise de chandelle,
C’est toi.

LA VOIX HAUTE

N’écoute pas. Reste une âme fidèle.
Un coeur, pas plus qu’un ciel, ne peut être obscurci.
Je suis la conscience, une vierge; et ceci
C’est la raison d’Etat, une fille publique.
Elle embrouille le vrai par le faux qu’elle explique.
Elle est la soeur bâtarde et louche du bon sens.
J’admets que la clarté basse ait des partisans;
Qu’on la trouve excellente et qu’elle soit utile
Pour éviter un choc, parer un projectile,
Marcher à peu près droit dans les carrefours noirs,
Et pour s’orienter dans les petits devoirs;
Les publicains en font leur lampe en leurs échoppes
Elle a pour elle, et c’est tout simple, les myopes,
Les habiles, les fins, les prudents, les discrets,
Ceux qui ne peuvent voir les choses que de près,
Ceux qui d’une araignée examinent les toiles;
Mais il faut bien quelqu’un qui soit pour les étoiles!

Il faut quelqu’un qui soit pour la fraternité,
La clémence, l’honneur, le droit, la liberté,
Et pour la vérité, resplendissement sombre!
Les constellations sont sublimes dans l’ombre,
Elles reluisent, fleurs de l’éternel été;
Mais elles ont besoin, dans leur sérénité,
Que l’univers guidé leur rende témoignage,
Et que, renouvelé sur terre d’âge en âge,
Un homme, rassurant ses frères condamnés,
Crie à travers la nuit: Astres, vous rayonnez!
Car rien ne serait plus effrayant que le crime,
La vertu, le rayon, l’ombre, égaux dans l’abîme;
Rien n’accuserait Dieu plus que de la clarté
Perdue, éparse au fond des cieux sans volonté;
Et rien ne prouverait là-haut plus de démence
Que l’inutilité de la lumière immense.
C’est pourquoi la justice est bonne, et l’astre est bon.
Dans vingt pays affreux, Soudan, Darfour, Gabon,
L’homme fut pris, lié, traîné, vendu de force,
Jusqu’au lever d’un astre appelé Wilberforce.
Etre juste, au hasard, dût-on être martyr,
Et laisser hors de soi la justice sortir,
C’est le rayonnement véritable de l’homme.
En quelque lieu qu’un acte inique se consomme,
Quel que soit le moment où le mal se construit,
Il faut qu’une voix parle, il faut que dans la nuit
On voie une lueur tout à coup apparaître.
Au ciel ce dieu, le Vrai, sur la terre ce prêtre,
Le Juste. Ce sont là les deux besoins. Il faut
Contredire le vent et résister au flot.
L’équité monte et plane et n’a pas d’autre règle.
Qui donc prend pour logis le haut du mont Blanc? l’aigle.

II

FLUX ET REFLUX

Il tombe. Est-ce fini? Non, cela recommence.
On se passe de peuple à peuple la démence;
Ce que la France fit, le Teuton le refait.
Sur l'enclume, où Forbach naguère triomphait,
L'Allemagne, ouvrier géant dont l'esprit flotte,
Forge un tyran avec les tronçons d'un despote.
Est-ce donc qu'on ne peut sortir de l'empereur?
César traître est chassé par César en fureur;
Je tiens peu, si l'un vient, à ce que l'autre parte,
Si l'an gagne Guillaume en perdant Bonaparte,
Et si, prenant son vol à l'heure où l'autre fuit,
L'oiseau de proie arrive après l'oiseau de nuit.
Deuil! honte! Est-ce fini? Non, cela recommence.
La tempête reprend avec plus d'inclémence;
Et les événements deviennent monstrueux.
Lequel des deux serpents est le plus tortueux?
Lequel des deux dragons fait la plus fauve entrée?
Et lequel est Thyeste? et lequel est Atrée?
L'invasion s'en va, le fratricide suit.
La victoire devant la conscience fuit
Et se cache, de peur que le ciel ne la voie.
L'énigme qu'il faudrait sonder, on la foudroie;
Mais que voulez-vous donc, sages pareils aux fous,
Que l'avenir devienne et qu'il fasse de vous,
Si vous ne lui montrez que haine, et si vous n'êtes
Bons qu'à le recevoir à coups de bayonnettes?
L'utopie est livrée au juge martial.
La faim, la pauvreté, l'obscur loup social
Mordant avec le pain la main qui le présente,
L'ignorance féroce, idiote, innocente,
Les misérables noirs, sinistrement moqueurs,
Et la nuit des esprits d'où naît la nuit des coeurs,
Tout est là devant nous, douleurs, familles blêmes;
Et nous avons recours, contre tous ces problèmes,
Au sombre apaisement que sait faire la mort.
Mais ces hommes qu'on tue ont tué; c'est le sort
Qui leur rend coup pour coup, et, sanglants, les supprime...

Est-ce qu’on remédie au crime par le crime?
Est-ce que l’assassin doit être assassiné?
Vers l’auguste idéal, d’aurore illuminé,
Vers le bonheur, la vie en fleurs, l’éden candide,
Qu’on nous mène, et nous prenons pour guide
Méduse, glaive au poing, l’oeil en feu, le sein nu!
Hélas, le cimetière est un puits inconnu;
Ce qu’on y jette tombe en des cavités sombres;
Ce sont des ossements qu’on ajoute aux décombres;
Morne ensemencement d’où la mort renaîtra.
Des questions où nul encor ne pénétra
Pressent de tous côtés notre lugubre sphère;
Et je ne pense pas qu’on se tire d’affaire
Par l’élargissement tragique du tombeau.

*

Le pauvre a le haillon, le riche a le lambeau,
Rien d’entier pour personne; et sur tous l’ombre infâme.
L’amour dans aucun coeur, l’azur dans aucune âme;
Hélas! partout frisson, colère, enfer, cachot;
Mais c’est si ténébreux que cela vient d’en haut.
L’esprit, sous ce nuage où tout semble se taire,
Sent l’incubation énorme d’un mystère.
Le fatal travail noir blanchira par degré.
Ce que nous rencontrons, c’est l’obstacle ignoré.
Les récifs montrent l’un après l’autre leurs têtes,
Car les événements ont leur cap des Tempêtes.
Derrière est la clarté. Ces flux et ces reflux,
Ces recommencements, ces combats, sont voulus.
Au-dessus de la haine immense, quelqu’un aime.
Ayons foi. Ce n’est pas sans quelque but suprême
Que sans cesse, en ce gouffre où rêvent les sondeurs,
Un prodigieux vent soufflant des profondeurs,
A travers l’âpre nuit, pousse, emporte et ramène
Sur tout l’écueil divin toute la mer humaine.

III

L'AVENIR

Polynice, Etéocle, Abel, Caïn! ô frères!
Vieille querelle humaine! échafauds! lois agraires!
Batailles! ô drapeaux, ô linceuls! noirs lambeaux!
Ouverture hâtive et sombre des tombeaux!
Dieu puissant! quand la mort sera-t-elle tuée?
O sainte paix!

La guerre est la prostituée;
Elle est la concubine infâme du hasard.
Attila sans génie et Tamerlan sans art
Sont ses amants; elle a pour eux des préférences;
Elle traîne au charnier toutes nos espérances,
Egorge nos printemps, foule aux pieds nos souhaits,
Et comme elle est la haine, ô ciel bleu, je la hais!
J'espère en toi, marcheur qui viens dans les ténèbres,
Avenir!

Nos travaux sont d'étranges algèbres;
Le labyrinthe vague et triste où nous rôdons
Est plein d'effrois subits, de pièges, d'abandons;
Mais toujours dans la main le fil obscur nous reste.
Malgré le noir duel d'Atrée et de Thyeste,
Malgré Léviathan combattant Béhémoth,
J'aime et je crois. L'énigme enfin dira son mot.
L'ombre n'est pas sur l'homme à jamais acharnée.
Non! Non! l'humanité n'a point pour destinée
D'être assise immobile au seuil froid des tombeaux,
Comme Jérôme, morne et blême, dans Ombos,
Ou comme dans Argos la douloureuse Electre.

Un jour, moi qui ne crains l'approche d'aucun spectre,
J'allai voir le lion de Waterloo. Je vins
Jusqu'à la sombre plaine à travers les ravins;

C’était l’heure où le jour chasse le crépuscule;
J’arrivai; je marchai droit au noir monticule.
Indigné, j’y montai; car la gloire du sang,
Du glaive et de la mort me laisse frémissant.
Le lion se dressait sur la plaine muette;
Je regardais d’en bas sa haute silhouette;
Son immobilité défiait l’infini;
On sentait que ce fauve, au fond des cieux banni,
Relégué dans l’azur, fier de sa solitude,
Portait un souvenir affreux sans lassitude;
Farouche, il était là, ce témoin de l’affront.
Je montais, et son ombre augmentait sur mon front.
Et tout en gravissant vers l’âpre plate-forme,
Je disais: Il attend que la terre s’endorme;
Mais il est implacable; et, la nuit, par moment
Ce bronze doit jeter un sourd rugissement;
Et les hommes, fuyant ce champ visionnaire,
Doutent si c’est le monstre ou si c’est le tonnerre.
J’arrivai jusqu’à lui, pas à pas m’approchant...

J’attendais une foudre et j’entendis un chant.

Une humble voix sortait de cette bouche énorme.
Dans cette espèce d’antre effroyable et difforme
Un rouge-gorge était venu faire son nid;
Le doux passant ailé que le printemps bénit,
Sans peur de la mâchoire affreusement levée,
Entre ces dents d’airain avait mis sa couvée;
Et l’oiseau gazouillait dans le lion pensif.
Le mont tragique était debout comme un récif
Dans la plaine jadis de tant de sang vermeille;
Et comme je songeais, pâle et prêtant l’oreille,
Je sentis un esprit profond me visiter,
Et, peuples, je compris que j’entendais chanter
L’espoir dans ce qui fut le désespoir naguère,
Et la paix dans la gueule horrible de la guerre.

IV

LES CRUCIFIES

La foule tient pour vrai ce qu'invente la haine.
Sur tout grand homme un ver, le mensonge, se traîne.
Tout front ceint de rayons est d'épines mordu;
A la lèvre d'un dieu le fiel atroce est dû;
Tout astre a pour manteau les ténèbres infâmes.
Ecoutez. Phidias était marchand de femmes,
Socrate avait un vice auquel son nom resta,
Horace ami des boucs faisait frémir Vesta,
Caton jetait un nègre esclave à la lamproie,
Michel-Ange, amoureux de l'or, homme de proie,
Vivait sous le bâton des papes, lui Romain,
Et leur tendait le dos en leur tendant la main;
Dans l'oeil de Dante errant la cupidité brille;
Molière était un peu le mari de sa fille;
Voltaire était avare et Diderot vénal;
Devant le genre humain, orageux tribunal,
Pas un homme qu'on n'ait puni de son génie;
Pas un qu'on n'ait cloué sur une calomnie;
Pas un, des temps anciens comme de maintenant,
Qui sur le Golgotha de la gloire saignant,
Une auréole au front, ne pende à la croix vile;
Et les uns ont Caïphe et les autres Zoïle.

V

FALKENFELS

Falkenfels, qu'on distingue au loin dans la bruine,
Est le burg démoli d'un vieux comte en ruine.
Je voulus voir le burg et l'homme. Je montai
La montagne, à travers le bois, un jour d'été.
On rencontre à mi-côte, en un ravin tombée,
Une vieille chapelle où court le scarabée;

Nul curé n’y venant prier, elle croula;
Car tous sont appauvris dans ce dur pays-là,
Hélas, c’est en haillons qu’on danse à la kermesse,
Et personne n’a plus de quoi payer la messe.
Or, pas d’argent, voilà ce que le prêtre craint;
Une niche indigente effarouche le saint,
Il déserte; au moment d’entrer, le dieu renâcle
Sur le seuil dédoré du pauvre tabernacle;
C’est pourquoi la chapelle est morte. Je laissai
Ce cadavre d’église au fond du noir fossé,
Et je continuai ma route vers la cime.
J’arrivai. Je parvins au burg fauve et sublime.
Même en plein jour, une ombre effrayante est dessus.
Sur la brèche qui sert de porte, j’aperçus
Au pied des larges tours qu’un haut blason surmonte,
Un grand vieux paysan pensif, c’était le comte.

Cet homme était assis; au bruit que fit mon pas,
Grave, il tourna la tête et ne se leva pas.
Il avait près de lui son fils, un enfant rose.
Saluer un vaincu, c’est déjà quelque chose,
Je saluai ce comte aboli. Je lui dis:
— Vous voilà pauvre, vous qui fûtes grand jadis.
Comte, je viens à vous d’une façon civile.
Donnez-moi votre fils pour qu’il vienne à la ville.
Redevenir sauvage est bon pour le vieillard
Et mauvais pour l’enfant; l’aube craint le brouillard;
La rose meurt dans l’ombre où se plaît la chouette.
Certe, avoir sur le front l’altière silhouette
De ces tours qu’aujourd’hui garde la ronce en fleur,
C’est beau; mais habiter dans son siècle est meilleur.
Votre fils s’éteindrait dans ces brumes, vous dis-je.
Le monstre est dans nos temps à côté du prodige;
Mais le prodige est sûr de vaincre. Donnez-nous,
O sombre aïeul, l’enfant charmant, farouche et doux,
Pour qu’il aille à Paris comme on allait à Rome,
Pour que, ne pouvant plus être comte, il soit homme,

Et pour qu'à son beau nom il ajoute un beau sort.
Il faut laisser entrer les autres quand on sort;
L'aigle laisse envoler l'aiglon; et que l'arbuste
Ne soit pas étouffé par le chêne, c'est juste.

Le sinistre vieillard sourit superbement,
Et me dit: - La ruine aime l'isolement.
Si je fus grand jadis, il me sied de m'en taire.
Les gens sont curieux de voir un homme à terre.
Vous m'avez vu, c'est bien. Pas de mots superflus.
Je ne connais personne et je n'existe plus.
Allez-vous-en.

— Mais quoi! dis-je, cette jeune aile
N'est pas faite, ô vieillard, pour la nuit éternelle.
L'enfant sans avenir laisse au père un remord.

Il répondit: - J'entends dire, moi qui suis mort,
De vous autres vivants, des choses misérables;
Que chez vous le triomphe est aux inexorables,
Que les hommes en sont encore au talion,
Qu'ils trouvent le renard plus grand que le lion,
Que leur vérité louche et que leur raison boite,
Et qu'on fusille à gauche et qu'on mitraille à droite,
Et qu'au milieu du sang, de l'horreur et des cris,
C'est un forfait d'offrir un asile aux proscrits.
Est-ce vrai? je le crains. Est-ce faux? je l'espère.
Mais laissez-moi, je suis honnête en mon repaire.
Mon fils boira la même eau pure que je bois.
Vous m'offrez la cité, je préfère les bois;
Car je trouve, voyant les hommes que vous êtes,
Plus de coeur aux rochers, moins de bêtise aux bêtes.

VI

LES INSULTEURS

Pourvu que son branchage, au-dessus du marais,
Verdisse, et soit le dôme énorme des forêts,
Qu'importe au chêne l'eau hideuse où ses pieds trempent!
Les insectes affreux de la poussière rampent
Sous le bloc immobile aux broussailles mêlé;
Mais au géant de marbre, auguste et mutilé,
Au sphinx de granit, rose et sinistre, qu'importe
Ce que de lui, sous lui, peut penser le cloporte!
Dans la nuit où frémit le palmier convulsif,
Le colosse, les mains sur ses genoux, pensif,
Calme, attend le moment de parler à l'aurore;
Si la limace bave à sa base, il l'ignore;
Ce dieu n'a jamais su qu'un crapaud remuait;
Pendant qu'un ver sur lui glisse, il garde, muet,
Son mystère effrayant de sonorité sombre;
Et le fourmillement des millepieds sans nombre
N'ôte pas à Memnon, subitement vermeil,
La formidable voix qui répond au soleil.

VII

LE PROCES A LA REVOLUTION

Lorsque vous traduisez, juges, à votre barre,
La Révolution, qui fut dure et barbare
Et féroce à ce point de chasser les hiboux;
Qui, sans respect, fakirs, derviches, marabouts,
Molesta tous les gens d'église, et mit en fuite,
Rien qu'en les regardant, le prêtre et le jésuite,
La colère vous prend.

Oui, c'est vrai, désormais
L'homme-roi, l'homme-dieu, fantômes des sommets,
S'effacent, revenants guerriers, goules papales;
Un vent mystérieux souffle sur ces fronts pâles;
Et vous, le tribunal, vous êtes indignés.
Quel deuil! les noirs buissons de larmes sont baignés;

Les fêtes de la nuit vorace sont finies;
Le monde ténébreux râle; que d'agonies!
Il fait jour, c'est affreux! et la chauve-souris
Est aveugle, et la fouine erre en poussant des cris;
Le ver perd sa splendeur; hélas, le renard pleure;
Les bêtes qui le soir allaient chasser, à l'heure
Où le petit oiseau s'endort, sont aux abois;
La désolation des loups remplit les bois;
Les spectres opprimés ne savent plus que faire;
Si cela continue, et si cette lumière
Persiste à consterner l'orfraie et le corbeau,
Le vampire mourra de faim dans le tombeau;
Le rayon sans pitié prend l'ombre et la dévore... -

O juges, vous jugez les crimes de l'aurore.

VIII

A HENRI V

J'étais adolescent quand vous étiez enfant;
J'ai sur votre berceau fragile et triomphant
Chanté mon chant d'aurore; et le vent de l'abîme
Depuis nous a jetés chacun sur une cime,
Car le malheur, lieu sombre où le sort nous admet,
Etant battu de coups de foudre, est un sommet.
Le gouffre est entre nous comme entre les deux pôles.
Vous avez le manteau de roi sur les épaules
Et dans la main le sceptre, éblouissant jadis;
Moi j'ai des cheveux blancs au front, et je vous dis:
C'est bien. L'homme est viril et fort qui se décide
A changer sa fin triste en un fier suicide;
Qui sait tout abdiquer, hormis son vieil honneur;
Qui cherche l'ombre ainsi qu'Hamlet dans Elseneur,
Et qui, se sentant grand surtout comme fantôme,
Ne vend pas son drapeau même au prix d'un royaume.
Le lys ne peut cesser d'être blanc. Il est bon,

Certes, de demeurer Capet, étant Bourbon;
Vous avez raison d’être honnête homme. L’histoire
Est une région de chute et de victoire
Où plus d’un vient ramper, où plus d’un vient sombrer.
Mieux vaut en bien sortir, prince, qu’y mal entrer.

IX

LES PAMPHLETAIRES D’EGLISE

Ils nous apportent Dieu dans une diatribe.
Ils sont le prêtre, ils sont le reître, ils sont le scribe.
Regardez écumer leur prose de bedeau.
Chacun d’eux mêle un cri d’orfraie à son credo,
Souligne avec l’estoc sa prière, et ponctue
Ses oremus avec une balle qui tue.
Voyez, leur chair est faible et leur esprit est prompt.
Ils jettent au hasard et devant eux l’affront
Comme le goupillon jette de l’eau bénite.
La faulx sombre à leur gré ne va pas assez vite;
On les entend crier au bourreau: Fainéant!
La mort leur semble avoir besoin d’un suppléant.
Ne pourrait-on trouver quelqu’un qui ressuscite
Besme et fasse sortir Laffemas du Cocyte?
Où donc est Trestaillon, instrumentum regni?
Où sont les bons chrétiens qui hachaient Coligny?
Puisque décidément quatre-vingt-neuf abuse
Rendez-nous le roi Charle avec son arquebuse,
Et Montrevel, le fauve et rude compagnon.
Où sont les portefaix utiles d’Avignon
Qui traînaient Brune mort le long du quai du Rhône?
Où sont ces grands bouchers de l’autel et du trône,
Dont le front au soleil des Cévennes suait,
Que conduisait Bâville et qu’aimait Bossuet?
Certe, on fait ce qu’on peut avec les mitrailleuses,
Mais le bourgeois incline aux douceurs périlleuses,
Il en arrive presque à blâmer Galifet,

Le sang finit par faire aux crétins de l’effet,
Et l’attendrissement a gagné ce bipède.
Quel besoin on aurait d’un président d’Oppède!
Comme un Laubardemont serait le bienvenu!
L’arc-en-ciel de la paix, c’est un grand sabre nu.
Sans le glaive, après tout le meilleur somnifère,
Nulle société ne se tire d’affaire,
Et c’est un dogme auquel on doit s’habituer
Que, lorsqu’on sauve, il faut commencer par tuer.

Donc on est écrivain comme on est trabucaire!
On se fait lieutenant de l’empereur, vicaire
Du pape, et le fondé de pouvoirs de la mort!
On est celui qui ment, déchire, aboie et mord!
Ils viennent, louches, vils, dévots, frapper à terre
Rochefort, l’archer fier, le puissant sagittaire
Dont la flèche est au flanc de l’empire abattu.
Tu déterres Flourens, chacal! qu’en feras-tu?
Ils outragent leurs pleurs, les veuvages, les tombes,
Blanchissent les corbeaux, noircissent les colombes,
Lapident un berceau que protège un linceul,
Blessent Dieu dans le peuple et l’enfant dans l’aïeul,
Les pères dans les fils, les hommes dans les femmes,
Et pensent qu’ils sont forts parce qu’ils sont infâmes!

*

Nous les voyons s’ébattre au-dessus de Paris
Comme un troupeau d’oiseaux jetant au vent des cris,
Ou comme ce bon vieux télégraphe de Chappe
Faisant un geste obscur dont le sens nous échappe;
Mais nous apercevons distinctement leur but.
L’opprobre que la France et que l’Europe but,
Ils veulent, meurtriers, nous le faire reboire.
Rome infaillible emploie à cela son ciboire.
Le sanglant droit divin, l’effrayant bon plaisir,
Le vice pour sultan, le crime pour visir,

Eux ayant le festin, le pauvre ayant les miettes,
L’espoir mort, la rentrée affreuse aux oubliettes,
Voilà leur rêve. Il faut pour vaincre jeter bas
Ce Christ, le peuple, et mettre au pavois Barabbas,
Il faut faire de tous et de tout table rase,
Il faut, si quelque front se dresse, qu’on l’écrase,
Il faut que le premier devienne le dernier,
Il faut jeter Voltaire et Jean-Jacque au panier!
Si Caton souffle un mot, qu’à la barre on le cite.
Et qu’on traîne devant monsieur Gaveau, Tacite!
Il s’agit du passé qu’on veut galvaniser;
Il faut tant diffamer, insulter, dénoncer,
Mentir, calomnier, baver, hurler et mordre,
Que le bon goût renaisse à côté du bon ordre!

*

Et quel rire! ô ciel noir! railler la France en deuil!
Ils lui font de la honte avec son vieil orgueil.
Ils l’accusent d’avoir mis en liberté l’homme,
D’avoir fait Sparte avec les débris de Sodome,
D’avoir au front du peuple essuyé la sueur,
D’être le grand orage et la grande lueur,
D’être sur l’horizon la haute silhouette,
De s’être réveillée au cri de l’alouette
Et d’avoir réparti la tâche aux travailleurs;
De dire à qui voit Dieu dans Rome: il est ailleurs;
De confronter le dogme avec la conscience;
D’avoir on ne sait quelle auguste impatience;
D’épier la blancheur que sur nos horizons
Doivent faire en s’ouvrant les portes des prisons;
De nous avoir crié: Marchez! quand nous agîmes
Contre tous les vieux jougs et tous les vieux régimes,
Et de tenir là-haut la balance, et d’avoir
Dans un plateau le droit, dans l’autre le devoir.
Ils lui reprochent, quoi? la fin des servitudes,
La chute du mur noir troué par les Latudes,

Le fanal allumé dans l’ombre où nous passions,
Le lever successif des constellations,
Tous ces astres parus au ciel l’un après l’autre,
Molière, ce moqueur pensif comme un apôtre,
Pascal et Diderot, Danton et Mirabeau;
Ses fautes sont le Vrai, le Bien, le Grand, le Beau;
Son crime, c’est cette oeuvre étoilée et profonde,
La Révolution, par qui renaît le monde,
Cette création deuxième qui refait
L’homme après Christ, après Cécrops, après Japhet.
Là-dessus ces gredins font le procès en règle
A la patrie, à l’ange immense aux ailes d’aigle;
Elle est vaincue, elle est sanglante; on crie: A bas
Sa gloire! à bas ses voeux, ses travaux, ses combats!
Le coupable de tous les désastres, c’est elle!
Et ces pieds ténébreux marchent sur l’immortelle;
Elle est perverse, absurde et folle! et chacun d’eux
Sur ce malheur sacré crache un rire hideux.
Or sachez-le, vous tous, toi vil bouffon, toi cuistre,
Mal parler de sa mère est un effort sinistre,
C’est un crime essayé qui fait frémir le ciel,
O monstres, c’est payer son lait avec du fiel,
C’est gangrener sa plaie, envenimer ses fièvres,
Et c’est le parricide, enfin, du bout des lèvres!

Mais quand donc ceux qui font le mal seront-ils las?
Une minute peut blesser un siècle, hélas!
Je plains ces hommes d’être attendus par l’histoire.

Comme elle frémira la grande muse noire,
Et comme elle sera stupéfaite de voir
Qu’on cloue au pilori ceux qui font leur devoir,
Que le peuple est toujours pâture, proie et cible,
Que la tuerie en masse est encore possible,
Et qu’en ce siècle, après Locke et Voltaire, ont pu
Reparaître, dans l’air tout à coup corrompu,
Les Fréron, les Sanchez, les Montluc, les Tavannes,

Plus nombreux que les fleurs dans l'herbe des savanes!

Peuple, tu resteras géant malgré ces nains.
France, un jour sur le Rhin et sur les Apennins,
Ayant sous le sourcil l'éclair de Prométhée,
Tu te redresseras, grande ressuscitée!
Tu surgiras; ton front jettera les frayeurs,
L'épouvante et l'aurore à tes noirs fossoyeurs;
Tu crieras: Liberté! Paix! Clémence! Espérance!
Eschyle dans Athène et Dante dans Florence
S'accouderont au bord du tombeau, réveillés,
Et te regardant, fiers, joyeux, les yeux mouillés,
Croiront voir l'un la Grèce et l'autre l'Italie.
Tu diras: Me voici! j'apaise et je délie!
Tous les hommes sont l'Homme! un seul peuple! un seul Dieu!
Ah! par toute la terre, ô patrie, en tout lieu,
Des mains se dresseront vers toi; nulle couleuvre,
Nulle hydre, nul démon ne peut empêcher l'oeuvre;
Nous n'avons pas encor fini d'être Français;
Le monde attend la suite et veut d'autres essais;
Nous entendrons encor des ruptures de chaînes,
Et nous verrons encor frissonner les grands chênes!

X

O Charles, je te sens près de moi. Doux martyr,
Sous terre où l'homme tombe,
Je te cherche, et je vois l'aube pâle sortir
Des fentes de ta tombe.

Les morts, dans le berceau, si voisin du cercueil,
Charmants, se représentent;
Et pendant qu'à genoux je pleure, sur mon seuil
Deux petits enfants chantent.

Georges, Jeanne, chantez! Georges, Jeanne, ignorez!
Reflétez votre père,

Assombris par son ombre indistincte, et dorés
Par sa vague lumière.

Hélas! que saurait-on si l'on ne savait point
Que la mort est vivante!
Un paradis, où l'ange à l'étoile se joint,
Rit dans cette épouvante.

Ce paradis sur terre apparaît dans l'enfant.
Orphelins, Dieu vous reste.
Dieu, contre le nuage où je souffre, défend
Votre lueur céleste.

Soyez joyeux pendant que je suis accablé.
A chacun son partage.
J'ai vécu presque un siècle, enfants; l'homme est troublé
Par de l'ombre à cet âge.

Est-on sûr d'avoir fait, ne fût-ce qu'à demi,
Le bien qu'on pouvait faire?
A-t-on dompté la haine, et de son ennemi
A-t-on été le frère?

Même celui qui fit de son mieux a mal fait.
Le remords suit nos fêtes.
Je sais que, si mon coeur quelquefois triomphait,
Ce fut dans mes défaites.

En me voyant vaincu je me sentais grandi.
La douleur nous rassure.
Car à faire saigner je ne suis pas hardi;
J'aime mieux ma blessure.

Et, loi triste! grandir, c'est voir grandir ses maux.
Mon faite est une cible.
Plus j'ai de branches, plus j'ai de vastes rameaux,
Plus j'ai d'ombre terrible.

De là mon deuil tandis que vous êtes charmants.
Vous êtes l’ouverture
De l’âme en fleur mêlée aux éblouissements
De l’immense nature.

George est l’arbuste éclos dans mon lugubre champ;
Jeanne dans sa corolle
Cache un esprit tremblant à nos bruits et tâchant
De prendre la parole.

Laissez en vous, enfants qu’attendent les malheurs,
Humbles plantes vermeilles,
Bégayer vos instincts, murmure dans les fleurs,
Bourdonnement d’abeilles.

Un jour vous apprendrez que tout s’éclipse, hélas!
Et que la foudre gronde
Dès qu’on veut soulager le peuple, immense Atlas,
Sombre porteur du monde.

Vous saurez que, le sort étant sous le hasard,
L’homme, ignorant auguste,
Doit vivre de façon qu’à son rêve plus tard
La vérité s’ajuste.

Moi-même un jour, après la mort, je connaîtrai
Mon destin que j’ignore,
Et je me pencherai sur vous, tout pénétré
De mystère et d’aurore.

Je saurai le secret de l’exil, du linceul
Jeté sur votre enfance,
Et pourquoi la justice et la douceur d’un seul
Semble à tous une offense.

Je comprendrai pourquoi, tandis que vous chantiez,

Dans mes branches funèbres,
Moi qui pour tous les maux veux toutes les pitiés,
J'avais tant de ténèbres.

Je saurai pourquoi l'ombre implacable est sur moi,
Pourquoi tant d'hécatombes,
Pourquoi l'hiver sans fin m'enveloppe, pourquoi
Je m'accrois sur des tombes;

Pourquoi tant de combats, de larmes, de regrets,
Et tant de tristes choses;
Et pourquoi Dieu voulut que je fusse un cyprès
Quand vous étiez des roses.

I

De tout ceci, du gouffre obscur, du fatal sort,
Des haines, des fureurs, des tombes, ce qui sort,
C'est de la clarté, peuple, et de la certitude.
Progrès! Fraternité! Foi! que la solitude
L'affirme, et que la foule y consente à grands cris;
Que le hameau joyeux le dise au grand Paris,
Et que le Louvre ému le dise à la chaumière!
La dernière heure est claire autant que la première
Fut sombre; et l'on entend distinctement au fond
Du ciel noir la rumeur que les naissances font.
On distingue en cette ombre un bruissement d'ailes.

Et moi, dans ces feuillets farouches et fidèles,
Dans ces pages de deuil, de bataille et d'effroi,
Si la clameur d'angoisse éclata malgré moi,
Si l'ai laissé tomber le mot de la souffrance,
Une négation quelconque d'espérance,
J'efface ce sanglot obscur qui se perdit;
Ce mot, je le rature et je ne l'ai pas dit.

Moi, le navigateur serein qui ne redoute
Aucun choc dans les flots profonds, j’aurais un doute!
J’admettrais qu’une main hideuse pût tenir
Le verrou du passé fermé sur l’avenir!
Quoi! le crime prendrait au collet la justice,
L’ombre étoufferait l’astre allant vers le solstice,
Les rois à coups de fouet chasseraient devant eux
La conscience aveugle et le progrès boiteux;
L’esprit humain, le droit, l’honneur, Jésus, Voltaire,
La vertu, la raison, n’auraient plus qu’à se taire,
La vérité mettrait sur ses lèvres son doigt,
Ce siècle s’en irait sans payer ce qu’il doit,
Le monde pencherait comme un vaisseau qui sombre,
On verrait lentement se consommer dans l’ombre,
A jamais, on ne sait sous quelles épaisseurs,
L’évanouissement sinistre des penseurs!
Non, et tu resteras, ô France, la première!
Et comment pourrait-on égorger la lumière?
Le soleil ne pourrait, rongé par un vautour,
S’il répandait son sang, répandre que du jour;
Quoi! blesser le soleil! tout l’enfer, s’il l’essaie,
Fera sortir des flots d’aurore de sa plaie.
Ainsi, France, du coup de lance à ton côté
Les rois tremblants verront jaillir la liberté.

II

Est-ce un écroulement? non. C’est une genèse.

Que t’importe, ô Paris, ville de la fournaise,
Puits de flamme, un brouillard qui passe, et dans ton flanc
Sur son gonflement sombre un vent de plus soufflant?
Que t’importe un combat de plus dans l’âpre joute?
Que t’importe un soufflet de forge qui s’ajoute
A tous les aquilons tourmentant ton brasier?
O fier volcan, qui donc peut te rassasier

D’explosions, de bruits, d’orage, de tonnerre,
De secousses faisant trembler toute la terre,
De métaux à mêler, d’âmes à mettre au feu!
Est-ce que tu t’éteins sous l’haleine de Dieu?
Non. Ton feu se rallume et ta houle profonde
Bouillonne, ô fusion formidable d’un monde.
Paris, comme à la mer Dieu seul te dit: Assez.
Ta rude fonction, vous deux la connaissez.
Souvent l’homme, penché sur ton foyer sonore,
Prend pour reflet d’enfer une rougeur d’aurore.
Tu sais ce que tu dois construire ou transformer.
Qui t’irrite ne peut que te faire écumer.
Toute pierre jetée au gouffre où tu ruisselles
T’arrache un crachement énorme d’étincelles.
Les rois viennent frapper sur toi. Comme le fer
Battu des marteaux jette aux cyclopes l’éclair,
Tu réponds à leurs coups en les couvrant d’étoiles.

O destin! déchirure admirable des toiles
Que tisse l’araignée et des pièges que tend
La noirceur sépulcrale au matin éclatant!
Ah! le piège est abject, la toile est misérable,
Et rien n’arrêtera l’avenir vénérable.

III

Ville, ton sort est beau! ta passion te met,
Ville, au milieu du genre humain, sur un sommet.
Personne ne pourra t’approcher sans entendre
Sortir de ton supplice auguste une voix tendre,
Car tu souffres pour tous et tu saignes pour tous.
Les peuples devant toi feront cercle à genoux.
Le nimbe de l’Etna ne craignait pas Eole,
Et nul vent n’éteindra ta farouche auréole;
Car ta lumière illustre et terrible, brûlant
Tout ce qui n’est pas vie, honneur, travail, talent,
Devoir, droit, guérison, baume, parfum, dictame,

Est pour l’avenir pourpre et pour le passé flamme;
Car dans ta clarté, triste et pure, braise et fleur,
L’immense amour se mêle à l’immense douleur.
Grâce à toi, l’homme croit, le progrès naît viable.
O ville, que ton sort tragique est enviable!
Ah! ta mort laisserait l’univers orphelin.
Un astre est dans ta plaie; et Carthage ou Berlin
Achèterait au prix de toutes ses rapines
Et de tous ses bonheurs ta couronne d’épines.
Jamais enclume autant que toi n’étincela.
Ville, tu fonderas l’Europe. Ah! d’ici là
Que de tourments! Paris, ce que ta gloire attire,
La dette qu’on te vient payer, c’est le martyre.
Accepte. Va, c’est grand. Sois le peuple héros.
Laisse après les tyrans arriver les bourreaux,
Après le mal subis le pire, et reste calme.
Ton épée en ta main devient lentement palme.
Fais ce qu’ont fait les Grecs, les Romains, les Hébreux.
Emplis de ta splendeur le moule ténébreux.
Les peuples t’auront vue, ô cité magnanime,
Après avoir été la lueur de l’abîme,
Après avoir lutté comme c’est le devoir,
Après avoir été cratère, après avoir
Fait bouillonner, forum, cirque, creuset, vésuve,
Toute la liberté du monde dans ta cuve,
Après avoir chassé la Prusse, affreux géant,
Te dressant tout à coup hors du gouffre béant,
En bronze, déité d’éternité vêtue,
Flamboyer lave, et puis te refroidir statue!

IV

Les hommes du passé se figurent qu’ils sont.
Ils s’imaginent vivre; et le travail qu’ils font,
Le glissement visqueux de leurs replis sans nombre,
Leur allée et venue à plat ventre dans l’ombre,
N’est qu’un fourmillement de vers de terre heureux.

Le couvercle muet du sépulcre est sur eux.
Mais, Paris, rien de toi n'est mort, ville sacrée.
Ton agonie enfante et ta défaite crée.
Rien ne t'est refusé; ce que tu veux sera.
Le jour où tu naquis, l'impossible expira.
Je l'affirme et l'affirme, et ma voix sans relâche
Le redit au parjure, au fourbe, au traître, au lâche,
Grande blessée, ô reine, ô déesse, tu vis.
Ceux qui de tes douleurs devraient être assouvis,
T'insultent; mais tu vis, Paris! dans ton artère,
D'où le sang de tout l'homme et de toute la terre
Coule sans s'arrêter, hélas, mais sans finir,
On sent battre le pouls profond de l'avenir.
On sent dans ton sein, mère en travail, ville émue,
Ce foetus, l'univers inconnu, qui remue.
Qu'importe les rieurs sinistres! Tout est bien.
Sans doute c'est lugubre; on cherche, on ne voit rien,
Il fait nuit, l'horizon semble être une clôture.
On craint pour toi, cité de l'Europe future.
Quelle ruine, hélas! quel aspect de cercueil!
Et quelle ressemblance avec l'éternel deuil!
Le plus ferme frissonne; on pleure, on tremble, on doute;
Mais si, penché sur toi, du dehors on écoute,
En cette ombre murée où ne luit nul flambeau,
En cette obscurité de gouffre et de tombeau,
On entend vaguement le chant d'une âme immense.
C'est quelque chose d'âpre et de grand qui commence.
C'est le siècle nouveau qui de la brume sort.

Tous nos pas ici-bas sont nocturnes, d'accord.
Hommes du passé, certe, il est vrai que la vie,
Malgré notre labeur et malgré notre envie,
Est terrestre et ne peut être divine avant
Que l'homme aille au grand ciel trouver le grand vivant.
La mort sera toujours la haute délivrance.
Le ciel a le bonheur, la terre a l'espérance
Rien de plus; mais l'espoir croissant, mais les regrets

S’effaçant, mais notre oeil s’ouvrant, c’est le progrès.
Tel atome est un astre; il luit. Nous voyons poindre
Le bien-être plus grand dans la misère moindre;
Et vous, vous savourez la morne obscurité.
Vous aimez la noirceur jusqu’à la cécité;
Et votre rêve affreux serait d’aveugler l’âme.
Le suaire est pour nous piqué de trous de flamme;
Qu’importe le zénith sombre si nous voyons
Des constellations se lever, des rayons
Resplendir, des soleils faire un échange auguste,
Là le vrai, là le beau, là le grand, là le juste,
Partout la vie avec mille auréoles d’or!
Vous, vous contemplez l’ombre, et l’ombre, et l’ombre encor,
Soit. C’est bien. Vous voyez, pris sous de triples voiles,
Les ténèbres, et nous, nous voyons les étoiles.
Nous cherchons ce qui sert. Vous cherchez ce qui nuit.
Chacun a sa façon de regarder la nuit.

XII

Terre et cieux! si le mal régnait, si tout n’était
Qu’un dur labeur, suivi d’un infâme protêt,
Si le passé devait revenir, si l’eau noire,
Vomie, était rendue à l’homme pour la boire,
Si la nuit pouvait faire un affront à l’azur,
Si rien n’était fidèle et si rien n’était sûr,
Dieu devrait se cacher de honte, la nature
Ne serait qu’une lâche et lugubre imposture,
Les constellations resplendiraient en vain!
Que l’empyrée abrite un scélérat divin,
Que derrière le voile étoilé de l’abîme
Il se cache quelqu’un qui prémédite un crime,
Que l’homme donnant tout, ses jours, ses pleurs, son sang,
Soit l’auguste jouet d’un lâche Tout-Puissant,
Que l’avenir soit fait de méchanceté noire,
C’est ce que pour ma part je refuse de croire.
Non, ce ne serait pas la peine que les vents

Remuassent le flot orageux des vivants,
Que le matin sortît des mers, semant des pluies
De diamants aux fleurs vaguement éblouies,
Et que l’oiseau chantât, et que le monde fût,
Si le destin n’était qu’un chasseur à l’affût,
Si tout l’effort de l’homme enfantait la chimère,
Si l’ombre était sa fille et la cendre sa mère,
S’il ramait nuit et jour, voulant, saignant, créant,
Pour une épouvantable arrivée au néant!
Non, je ne consens pas à cette banqueroute.
Zéro somme de tout! Rien au bout de la route!
Non, l’Infini n’est point capable de cela.
Quoi, pour berceau Charybde et pour tombeau Scylla?
Non, Paris, grand lutteur, France, grande vedette,
En faisant ton devoir, tu fais à Dieu sa dette.
Debout! combats!

Je sais que Dieu semble incertain
Vu par la claire-voie affreuse du destin.
Ce Dieu, je le redis, a souvent dans les âges
Subi le hochement de tête des vieux sages,
Je sais que l’Inconnu ne répond à l’appel
Ni du calcul morose et lourd, ni du scalpel;
Soit. Mais j’ai foi. La foi, c’est la lumière haute.
Ma conscience en moi, c’est Dieu que j’ai pour hôte.
Je puis, par un faux cercle, avec un faux compas,
Le mettre hors du ciel; mais hors de moi, non pas.
Il est mon gouvernail dans l’écume où je vogue.
Si j’écoute mon coeur, j’entends un dialogue.
Nous sommes deux au fond de mon esprit, lui, moi.
Il est mon seul espoir et mon unique effroi.
Si par hasard je rêve une faute que j’aime,
Un profond grondement s’élève dans moi-même;
Je dis: Qui donc est là? l’on me parle? Pourquoi?
Et mon âme en tremblant me dit: C’est Dieu. Tais-toi.

*

Quoi! nier le progrès terrestre auquel adhère
Le vaste mouvement du monde solidaire?
Non, non! s’il arrivait que ce Dieu me trompât,
Et qu’il mit l’espérance en moi comme un appât
Pour m’attirer au piège, et me prendre, humble atome,
Entre le présent, songe, et l’avenir, fantôme;
S’il n’avait d’autre but qu’une dérision;
Moi l’oeil sincère et lui la fausse vision,
S’il me leurrait de quelque exécrable mirage;
S’il offrait la boussole et donnait le naufrage;
Si par ma conscience il faussait ma raison;
Moi qui ne suis qu’un peu d’ombre sur l’horizon,
Moi, néant, je serais son accusateur sombre;
Je prendrais à témoin les firmaments sans nombre,
J’aurais tout l’infini contre ce Dieu, je croi
Que les gouffres prendraient fait et cause pour moi;
Contre ce malfaiteur j’attesterais les astres;
Je lui rejetterais nos maux et nos désastres;
J’aurais tout l’Océan pour m’en laver les mains;
Il ferait mes erreurs, ayant fait mes chemins;
Je serais l’innocent, il serait le coupable.
Cet être inaccessible, invisible, impalpable,
J’irais, je le verrais, et je le saisirais
Dans les cieux, comme on prend un loup dans les forêts,
Et terrible, indigné, calme, extraordinaire,
Je le dénoncerais à son propre tonnerre!

Oh! si le mal devait demeurer seul debout,
Si le mensonge immense était le fond de tout,
Tout se révolterait! Oh! ce n’est plus un temple
Qu’aurait sous les yeux l’homme en ce ciel qu’il contemple,
Dans la création pleine d’un vil secret,
Ce n’est plus un pilier de gloire qu’on verrait;
Ce serait un poteau de bagne et de misère.
A ce poteau serait adossé le faussaire,
A qui tout jetterait l’opprobre, et que d’en bas

Insulteraient nos deuils, nos haillons, nos grabats,
Notre faim, notre soif, nos vices et nos crimes;
Vers lui se tourneraient nos bourreaux ses victimes,
Et la guerre et la haine, et les yeux du savoir
Crevés, et le moignon sanglant du désespoir;
Des champs, des bois, des monts, des fleurs empoisonnées,
Du chaos furieux et fou des destinées,
De tout ce qui parait, disparaît, reparaît,
Une accusation lugubre sortirait;
Le réel suinterait par d'affreuses fêlures;
Les comètes viendraient tordre leurs chevelures;
L'air dirait: Il me livre aux souffles pluvieux!
Le ver dirait à l'astre: Il est ton envieux,
Et, pour t'humilier, il nous fait tous deux luire!
L'écueil dirait: C'est lui qui m'ordonne de nuire!
La mer dirait: Mon fiel, c'est lui. J'en fais l'aveu!
Et l'univers serait le pilori de Dieu!

*

Ah! la réalité, c'est un paiement sublime,
Je suis le créancier tranquille de l'abîme;
Mon oeil ouvert d'avance attend les grands réveils.
Non, je ne doute pas du gouffre des soleils!
Moi croire vide l'ombre où je vois l'astre éclore!
Quoi, le grand azur noir, quoi, le puits de l'aurore
Serait sans loyauté, promettrait sans tenir!
Non, d'où sort le matin sortira l'avenir.
La nature s'engage envers la destinée;
L'aube est une parole éternelle donnée.
Les ténèbres là-haut éclipsent les rayons;
C'est dans la nuit qu'errants et pensifs, nous croyons;
Le ciel est trouble, obscur, mystérieux; qu'importe!
Rien de juste ne frappe en vain à cette porte.
La plainte est un vain cri, le mal est un mot creux;
J'ai rempli mon devoir, c'est bien, je souffre heureux,
Car toute la justice est en moi, grain de sable.

Quand on fait ce qu’on peut on rend Dieu responsable,
Et je vais devant moi, sachant que rien ne ment,
Sûr de l’honnêteté du profond firmament!
Et je crie: Espérez! à quiconque aime et pense;
Et j’affirme que l’Etre inconnu qui dépense,
Sans compter, les splendeurs, les fleurs, les univers,
Et, comme s’il vidait des sacs toujours ouverts,
Les astres, les saisons, les vents, et qui prodigue
Aux monts perçant la nue, aux mers rongeant la digue,
Sans relâche, l’azur, l’éclair, le jour, le ciel;
Que celui qui répand un flot torrentiel
De lumière, de vie et d’amour dans l’espace,
J’affirme que celui qui ne meurt ni ne passe,
Qui fit le monde, un livre où le prêtre a mal lu,
Qui donne la beauté pour forme à l’absolu,
Réel malgré le doute et vrai malgré la fable,
L’éternel, l’infini, Dieu, n’est pas insolvable!

Épilogue

DANS L’OMBRE

LE VIEUX MONDE

O flot, c’est bien. Descends maintenant. Il le faut.
Jamais ton flux encor n’était monté si haut.
Mais pourquoi donc es-tu si sombre et si farouche?
Pourquoi ton gouffre a-t-il un cri comme une bouche?
Pourquoi cette pluie âpre, et cette ombre, et ces bruits,
Et ce vent noir soufflant dans le clairon des nuits?
Ta vague monte avec la rumeur d’un prodige!
C’est ici ta limite. Arrête-toi, te dis-je.
Les vieilles lois, les vieux obstacles, les vieux freins,
Ignorance, misère et néant, souterrains
Où meurt le fol espoir, bagnes profonds de l’âme,
L’ancienne autorité de l’homme sur la femme,
Le grand banquet, muré pour les déshérités,

Les superstitions et les fatalités,
N’y touche pas, va-t’en! ce sont les choses saintes.
Redescends, et tais-toi! j’ai construit ces enceintes
Autour du genre humain et j’ai bâti ces tours.
Mais tu rugis toujours! mais tu montes toujours!
Tout s’en va pêle-mêle à ton choc frénétique.
Voici le vieux missel, voici le code antique.
L’échafaud dans un pli de ta vague a passé.
Ne touche pas au roi! ciel! il est renversé.
Et ces hommes sacrés! je les vois disparaître.
Arrête! c’est le juge. Arrête! c’est le prêtre.
Dieu t’a dit: Ne va pas plus loin, ô flot amer!
Mais quoi! tu m’engloutis! au secours, Dieu! la mer
Désobéit! la mer envahit mon refuge!

LE FLOT

Tu me crois la marée et je suis le déluge.

L'ART D'ETRE GRAND-PERE

First published in 1877, this poetry collection details Hugo's endeavours as a grandparent. After the death of his daughter-in-law and his son Charles, Hugo supported his two grandchildren George and Jeanne Hugo. He wrote several poems depicting the innocence related to his grandchildren, whom he raised with tender care.

L’EXILÉ SATISFAIT

Solitude! silence! oh! le désert me tente.
L’âme s’apaise là, sévèrement contente;
Là d’on ne sait quelle ombre on se sent l’éclaireur.
Je vais dans les forêts chercher la vague horreur;
La sauvage épaisseur des branches me procure
Une sorte de joie et d’épouvante obscure;
Et j’y trouve un oubli presque égal au tombeau.
Mais je ne m’éteins pas; on peut rester flambeau
Dans l’ombre, et, sous le ciel, sous la crypte sacrée,
Seul, frissonner au vent profond de l’empyrée.
Rien n’est diminué dans l’homme pour avoir
Jeté la sonde au fond ténébreux du devoir.
Qui voit de haut, voit bien; qui voit de loin, voit juste.
La conscience sait qu’une croissance auguste
Est possible pour elle, et va sur les hauts lieux
Rayonner et grandir, loin du monde oublieux.
Donc je vais au désert, mais sans quitter le monde.

Parce qu’un songeur vient, dans la forêt profonde
Ou sur l’escarpement des falaises, s’asseoir
Tranquille et méditant l’immensité du soir,
Il ne s’isole point de la terre où nous sommes.
Ne sentez-vous donc pas qu’ayant vu beaucoup d’hommes
On a besoin de fuir sous les arbres épais,
Et que toutes les soifs de vérité, de paix,
D’équité, de raison et de lumière, augmentent
Au fond d’une âme, après tant de choses qui mentent?

Mes frères ont toujours tout mon coeur, et, lointain

Mais présent, je regarde et juge le destin;
Je tiens, pour compléter l'âme humaine ébauchée,
L'urne de la pitié sur les peuples penchée,
Je la vide sans cesse et je l'emplis toujours.
Mais je prends pour abri l'ombre des grands bois sourds.

Oh! j'ai vu de si près les foules misérables,

Les cris, les chocs, l'affront aux têtes vénérables,
Tant de lâches grandis par les troubles civils,
Des juges qu'on eût dû juger, des prêtres vils
Servant et souillant Dieu, prêchant pour, prouvant contre,
J'ai tant vu la laideur que notre beauté montre,
Dans notre bien le mal, dans notre vrai le faux,
Et le néant passant sous nos arcs triomphaux,
J'ai tant vu ce qui mord, ce qui fuit, ce qui ploie
Que, vieux, faible et vaincu, j'ai désormais pour joie
De rêver immobile en quelque sombre lieu;
Là, saignant, je médite; et, lors même qu'un dieu
M'offrirait pour rentrer dans les villes la gloire,
La jeunesse, l'amour, la force, la victoire,
Je trouve bon d'avoir un trou dans les forêts,
Car je ne sais pas trop si je consentirais.

II

Qu'est-ce que cette terre? Une tempête d'âmes.
Dans cette ombre, où, nochers errants, nous n'abordâmes
Jamais qu'à des écueils, les prenant pour des ports;
Dans l'orage des cris, des désirs, des transports,
Des amours, des douleurs, des veux, tas de nuées;
Dans les fuyants baisers de ces prostituées
Que nous nommons fortune, ambition, succès;
Devant Job qui, souffrant, dit: Qu'est-ce que je sais?
Et Pascal qui, tremblant, dit: Qu'est-ce que je pense?
Dans cette monstrueuse et féroce dépense
De papes, de césars, de rois, que fait Satan;

En présence du sort tournant son cabestan
Par qui toujours — de là l'effroi des philosophes —
Sortent des mêmes flots les mêmes catastrophes;
Dans ce néant qui mord, dans ce chaos qui ment,
Ce que l'homme finit par voir distinctement,
C'est, par-dessus nos deuils, nos chutes, nos descentes,
La souveraineté des choses innocentes.
Étant donnés le coeur humain, l'esprit humain,
Notre hier ténébreux, notre obscur lendemain,
Toutes les guerres, tous les chocs, toutes les haines,
Notre progrès coupé d'un traînement de chaînes,
Partout quelque remords, même chez les meilleurs,
Et par les vents soufflant du fond des cieux en pleurs
La foule des vivants sans fin bouleversée,
Certe, il est salutaire et bon pour la pensée,
Sous l'entre-croisement de tant de noirs rameaux,
De contempler parfois, à travers tous nos maux
Qui sont entre le ciel et nous comme des voiles,
Une profonde paix toute faite d'étoiles;
C'est à cela que Dieu songeait quand il a mis
Les poètes auprès des berceaux endormis.

JEANNE FAIT SON ENTRÉE

Jeanne parle; elle dit des choses qu'elle ignore;
Elle envoie à la mer qui gronde, au bois sonore,
A la nuée, aux fleurs, aux nids, au firmament,
A l'immense nature un doux gazouillement,
Tout un discours, profond peut-être, qu'elle achève
Par un sourire où flotte une âme, où tremble un rêve,
Murmure indistinct, vague, obscur, confus, brouillé,
Dieu, le bon vieux grand-père, écoute émerveillé.

IV

VICTOR, SED VICTUS

Je suis, dans notre temps de chocs et de fureurs,
Belluaire, et j’ai fait la guerre aux empereurs;
J’ai combattu la foule immonde des Sodomes,
Des millions de flots et des millions d’hommes
Ont rugi contre moi sans me faire céder;
Tout le gouffre est venu m’attaquer et gronder,
Et j’ai livré bataille aux vagues écumantes,
Et sous l’énorme assaut de l’ombre et des tourmentes
Je n’ai pas plus courbé la tête qu’un écueil;
Je ne suis pas de ceux qu’effraie un ciel en deuil,
Et qui, n’osant sonder les styx et les avernes,
Tremblent devant la bouche obscure des cavernes;
Quand les tyrans lançaient sur nous, du haut des airs,
Leur noir tonnerre ayant des crimes pour éclairs,
J’ai jeté mon vers sombre à ces passants sinistres;
J’ai traîné tous les rois avec tous leurs ministres,
Tous les faux dieux avec tous les principes faux,
Tous les trônes liés à tous les échafauds,
L’erreur, le glaive infâme et le sceptre sublime,
J’ai traîné tout cela pêle-mêle à l’abîme;
J’ai devant les césars, les princes, les géants
De la force debout sur l’amas des néants,
Devant tous ceux que l’homme adore, exècre, encense,
Devant les Jupiters de la toute-puissance,
Été quarante ans fier, indompté, triomphant;
Et me voilà vaincu par un petit enfant.

V

L’AUTRE

Viens, mon George. Ah! les fils de nos fils nous enchantent,
Ce sont de jeunes voix matinales qui chantent.
Ils sont dans nos logis lugubres le retour
Des roses, du printemps, de la vie et du jour!

Leur rire nous attire une larme aux paupières
Et de notre vieux seuil fait tressaillir les pierres;
De la tombe entr’ouverte et des ans lourds et froids
Leur regard radieux dissipe les effrois;
Ils ramènent notre âme aux premières années;
Ils font rouvrir en nous toutes nos fleurs fanées;
Nous nous retrouvons doux, naïfs, heureux de rien;
Le coeur serein s’emplit d’un vague aérien;
En les voyant on croit se voir soi-même éclore;
Oui, devenir aïeul, c’est rentrer dans l’aurore.
Le vieillard gai se mêle aux marmots triomphants.
Nous nous rapetissons dans les petits enfants.
Et, calmés, nous voyons s’envoler dans les branches
Notre âme sombre avec toutes ces âmes blanches.

VI

GEORGES ET JEANNE

Moi qu’un petit enfant rend tout à fait stupide,
J’en ai deux; George et Jeanne; et je prends l’un pour guide
Et l’autre pour lumière, et j’accours à leur voix,
Vu que George a deux ans et que Jeanne a dix mois.
Leurs essais d’exister sont divinement gauches;
On croit, dans leur parole où tremblent des ébauches,
Voir un reste de ciel qui se dissipe et fuit;
Et moi qui suis le soir, et moi qui suis la nuit,
Moi dont le destin pâle et froid se décolore,
J’ai l’attendrissement de dire: Ils sont l’aurore.
Leur dialogue obscur m’ouvre des horizons;
Ils s’entendent entr’eux, se donnent leurs raisons.
Jugez comme cela disperse mes pensées.
En moi, désirs, projets, les choses insensées,
Les choses sages, tout, à leur tendre lueur,
Tombe, et je ne suis plus qu’un bonhomme rêveur.
Je ne sens plus la trouble et secrète secousse
Du mal qui nous attire et du sort qui nous pousse.

Les enfants chancelants sont nos meilleurs appuis.
Je les regarde, et puis je les écoute, et puis
Je suis bon, et mon coeur s’apaise en leur présence;
J’accepte les conseils sacrés de l’innocence,
Je fus toute ma vie ainsi; je n’ai jamais
Rien connu, dans les deuils comme sur les sommets,
De plus doux que l’oubli qui nous envahit l’âme
Devant les êtres purs d’où monte une humble flamme;
Je contemple, en nos temps souvent noirs et ternis,
Ce point du jour qui sort des berceaux et des nids.

Le soir je vais les voir dormir. Sur leurs fronts calmes.
Je distingue ébloui l’ombre que font les palmes
Et comme une clarté d’étoile à son lever,
Et je me dis: À quoi peuvent-ils donc rêver?
Georges songe aux gâteaux, aux beaux jouets étranges,
Au chien, au coq, au chat; et Jeanne pense aux anges.
Puis, au réveil, leurs yeux s’ouvrent, pleins de rayons.

Ils arrivent, hélas! à l’heure où nous fuyons.

Ils jasent. Parlent-ils? Oui, comme la fleur parle
A la source des bois; comme leur père Charle,
Enfant, parlait jadis à leur tante Dédé;
Comme je vous parlais, de soleil inondé,
Ô mes frères, au temps où mon père, jeune homme,
Nous regardait jouer dans la caserne, à Rome,
A cheval sur sa grande épée, et tout petits.
Jeanne qui dans les yeux a le myosotis,
Et qui, pour saisir l’ombre entr’ouvrant ses doigts frêles,
N’a presque pas de bras ayant encor des ailes,
Jeanne harangue, avec des chants où flotte un mot,
Georges beau comme un dieu qui serait un marmot.
Ce n’est pas la parole, ô ciel bleu, c’est le verbe;
C’est la langue infinie, innocente et superbe
Que soupirent les vents, les forêts et les flots;
Les pilotes Jason, Palinure et Typhlos

Entendaient la sirène avec cette voix douce
Murmurer l’hymne obscur que l’eau profonde émousse;
C’est la musique éparse au fond du mois de mai
Qui fait que l’un dit: J’aime, et l’autre, hélas: J’aimai;
C’est le langage vague et lumineux des êtres
Nouveau-nés, que la vie attire à ses fenêtres,
Et qui, devant avril, éperdus, hésitants,
Bourdonnent à la vitre immense du printemps.
Ces mots mystérieux que Jeanne dit à George,
C’est l’idylle du cygne avec le rouge-gorge,
Ce sont les questions que les abeilles font,
Et que le lys naïf pose au moineau profond;
C’est ce dessous divin de la vaste harmonie,
Le chuchotement, l’ombre ineffable et bénie
Jasant, balbutiant des bruits de vision,
Et peut-être donnant une explication;
Car les petits enfants étaient hier encore
Dans le ciel, et savaient ce que la terre ignore.
Ô Jeanne! Georges! voix dont j’ai le coeur saisi!
Si les astres chantaient, ils bégaieraient ainsi.
Leur front tourné vers nous nous éclaire et nous dore.
Oh! d’où venez-vous donc, inconnus qu’on adore?
Jeanne a l’air étonné; Georges a les yeux hardis.
Ils trébuchent, encore ivres du paradis.

VII

Parfois, je me sens pris d’horreur pour cette terre;
Mon vers semble la bouche ouverte d’un cratère;
J’ai le farouche émoi
Que donne l’ouragan monstrueux au grand arbre;
Mon coeur prend feu; je sens tout ce que j’ai de marbre
Devenir lave en moi;

Quoi! rien de vrai! le scribe a pour appui le reître;
Toutes les robes, juge et vierge, femme et prêtre,
Mentent ou mentiront;

Le dogme boit du sang, l'autel bénit le crime;
Toutes les vérités, groupe triste et sublime,
Ont la rougeur au front;

La sinistre lueur des rois est sur nos têtes;
Le temple est plein d'enfer; la clarté de nos fêtes
Obscurcit le ciel bleu;
L'âme a le penchement d'un navire qui sombre;
Et les religions, à tâtons, ont dans l'ombre
Pris le démon pour Dieu!

Oh! qui me donnera des paroles terribles?
Oh! je déchirerai ces chartes et ces bibles,
Ces codes, ces korans!
Je pousserai le cri profond des catastrophes;
Et je vous saisirai, sophistes, dans mes strophes,
Dans mes ongles, tyrans.

Ainsi, frémissant, pâle, indigné, je bouillonne;
On ne sait quel essaim d'aigles noirs tourbillonne
Dans mon ciel embrasé;
Deuil! guerre! une euménide en mon âme est éclose!
Quoi! le mal est partout! Je regarde une rose
Et je suis apaisé.

VIII

LÆTITIA RERUM

Tout est pris d'un frisson subit.
L'hiver s'enfuit et se dérobe.
L'année ôte son vieil habit;
La terre met sa belle robe.

Tout est nouveau, tout est debout;
L'adolescence est dans les plaines;
La beauté du diable, partout,

Rayonne et se mire aux fontaines.

L’arbre est coquet; parmi les fleurs
C’est à qui sera la plus belle;
Toutes étalent leurs couleurs,
Et les plus laides ont du zèle.

Le bouquet jaillit du rocher;
L’air baise les feuilles légères;
Juin rit de voir s’endimancher
Le petit peuple des fougères.

C’est une fête en vérité,
Fête où vient le chardon, ce rustre;
Dans le grand palais de l’été
Les astres allument le lustre.

On fait les foins. Bientôt les blés.
Le faucheur dort sous la cépée;
Et tous les souffles sont mêlés
D’une senteur d’herbe coupée.

Qui chante là? Le rossignol.
Les chrysalides sont parties.
Le ver de terre a pris son vol
Et jeté le froc aux orties;

L’aragne sur l’eau fait des ronds;
Ô ciel bleu! l’ombre est sous la treille;
Le jonc tremble, et les moucherons
Viennent vous parler à l’oreille;

On voit rôder l’abeille à jeun,
La guêpe court, le frelon guette;
A tous ces buveurs de parfum
Le printemps ouvre sa guinguette.

Le bourdon, aux excès enclin
Entre en chiffonnant sa chemise;
Un oeillet est un verre plein
Un lys est une nappe mise.

La mouche boit le vermillon
Et l’or dans les fleurs demi-closes,
Et l’ivrogne est le papillon,
Et les cabarets sont les roses.

De joie et d’extase on s’emplit,
L’ivresse, c’est la délivrance;
Sur aucune fleur on ne lit:
Société de tempérance.

Le faste providentiel
Partout brille, éclate et s’épanche
Et l’unique livre, le ciel,
Est par l’aube doré sur tranche.

Enfants, dans vos yeux éclatants
Je crois voir l’empyrée éclore;
Vous riez comme le printemps
Et vous pleurez comme l’aurore.

IX

Je prendrai par la main les deux petits enfants;
J’aime les bois où sont les chevreuils et les faons,
Où les cerfs tachetés suivent les biches blanches
Et se dressent dans l’ombre effrayés par les branches;
Car les fauves sont pleins d’une telle vapeur
Que le frais tremblement des feuilles leur fait peur.
Les arbres ont cela de profond qu’ils vous montrent
Que l’éden seul est vrai, que les coeurs s’y rencontrent,
Et que, hors les amours et les nids, tout est vain;
Théocrite souvent dans le hallier divin

Crut entendre marcher doucement la ménade.
C’est là que je ferai ma lente promenade
Avec les deux marmots. J’entendrai tour à tour
Ce que Georges conseille à Jeanne, doux amour,
Et ce que Jeanne enseigne à George. En patriarche
Que mènent les enfants, je réglerai ma marche
Sur le temps que prendront leurs jeux et leurs repas,
Et sur la petitesse aimable de leurs pas.
Ils cueilleront des fleurs, ils mangeront des mûres.
Ô vaste apaisement des forêts! ô murmures!
Avril vient calmer tout, venant tout embaumer.
Je n’ai point d’autre affaire ici-bas que d’aimer.

X

PRINTEMPS

Tout rayonne, tout luit, tout aime, tout est doux;
Les oiseaux semblent d’air et de lumière fous;
L’âme dans l’infini croit voir un grand sourire.
À quoi bon exiler, rois? à quoi bon proscrire?
Proscrivez-vous l’été? m’exilez-vous des fleurs?
Pouvez-vous empêcher les souffles, les chaleurs,
Les clartés, d’être là, sans joug, sans fin, sans nombre,
Et de me faire fête, à moi banni, dans l’ombre?
Pouvez-vous m’amoindrir les grands flots haletants,
L’océan, la joyeuse écume, le printemps
Jetant les parfums comme un prodigue en démence,
Et m’ôter un rayon de ce soleil immense?
Non. Et je vous pardonne. Allez, trônez, vivez,
Et tâchez d’être rois longtemps, si vous pouvez.
Moi, pendant ce temps-là, je maraude, et je cueille,
Comme vous un empire, un brin de chèvrefeuille,
Et je l’emporte, ayant pour conquête une fleur.
Quand, au-dessus de moi, dans l’arbre, un querelleur,
Un mâle, cherche noise à sa douce femelle,
Ce n’est pas mon affaire et pourtant je m’en mêle,

Je dis: Paix là, messieurs les oiseaux, dans les bois!
Je les réconcilie avec ma grosse voix;
Un peu de peur qu'on fait aux amants les rapproche.
Je n'ai point de ruisseau, de torrent, ni de roche;
Mon gazon est étroit, et, tout près de la mer,
Mon bassin n'est pas grand, mais il n'est pas amer.
Ce coin de terre est humble et me plaît; car l'espace
Est sur ma tête, et l'astre y brille, et l'aigle y passe,
Et le vaste Borée y plane éperdument.
Ce parterre modeste et ce haut firmament
Sont à moi; ces bouquets, ces feuillages, cette herbe
M'aiment, et je sens croître en moi l'oubli superbe.
Je voudrais bien savoir comment je m'y prendrais
Pour me souvenir, moi l'hôte de ces forêts
Qu'il est quelqu'un, là-bas, au loin, sur cette terre,
Qui s'amuse à proscrire, et règne, et fait la guerre,
Puisque je suis là seul devant l'immensité,
Et puisqu'ayant sur moi le profond ciel d'été
Où le vent souffle avec la douceur d'une lyre,
J'entends dans le jardin les petits enfants rire.

FENÊTRES OUVERTES

LE MATIN. — EN DORMANT

J'entends des voix. Lueurs à travers ma paupière.
Une cloche est en branle à l'église Saint-Pierre .
Cris des baigneurs. Plus près! plus loin! non, par ici!
Non, par là! Les oiseaux gazouillent, Jeanne aussi.
Georges l'appelle. Chant des coqs. Une truelle
Racle un toit. Des chevaux passent dans la ruelle.
Grincement d'une faulx qui coupe le gazon.
Chocs. Rumeurs. Des couvreurs marchent sur la maison.
Bruits du port. Sifflement des machines chauffées.
Musique militaire arrivant par bouffées.

Brouhaha sur le quai. Voix françaises. Merci.
Bonjour. Adieu. Sans doute il est tard, car voici
Que vient tout près de moi chanter mon rouge-gorge.
Vacarme de marteaux lointains dans une forge.
L’eau clapote. On entend haleter un steamer.
Une mouche entre. Souffle immense de la mer.

XII

UN MANQUE

Pourquoi donc s’en est-il allé, le doux amour?
Ils viennent un moment nous faire un peu de jour,
Puis partent. Ces enfants, que nous croyons les nôtres,
Sont à quelqu’un qui n’est pas nous. Mais les deux autres,
Tu ne les vois donc pas, vieillard? Oui, je les vois,
Tous les deux. Ils sont deux, ils pourraient être trois.
Voici l’heure d’aller se promener dans l’ombre
Des grands bois, pleins d’oiseaux dont Dieu seul sait le nombre
Et qui s’envoleront aussi dans l’inconnu.
Il a son chapeau blanc, elle montre un pied nu,
Tous deux sont côte à côte; on marche à l’aventure,
Et le ciel brille, et moi je pousse la voiture.
Toute la plaine en fleur a l’air d’un paradis;
Le lézard court au pied des vieux saules, tandis
Qu’au bout des branches vient chanter le rouge-gorge.
Mademoiselle Jeanne a quinze mois, et George
En a trente; il la garde; il est l’homme complet;
Des filles comme ça font son bonheur; il est
Dans l’admiration de ces jolis doigts roses,
Leur compare, en disant toutes sortes de choses,
Ses grosses mains à lui qui vont avoir trois ans,
Et rit; il montre Jeanne en route aux paysans.
Ah dame! il marche, lui; cette mioche se traîne;
Et Jeanne rit de voir Georges rire; une reine
Sur un trône, c’est là Jeanne dans son panier;
Elle est belle; et le chêne en parle au marronnier,

Et l’orme la salue et la montre à l’érable,
Tant sous le ciel profond l’enfance est vénérable.
George a le sentiment de sa grandeur; il rit
Mais il protège, et Jeanne a foi dans son esprit;
Georges surveille avec un air assez farouche
Cette enfant qui parfois met un doigt dans sa bouche;
Les sentiers sont confus et nous nous embrouillons.
Comme tout le bois sombre est plein de papillons,
Courons, dit Georges. Il veut descendre. Jeanne est gaie.
Avec eux je chancelle, avec eux je bégaie.
Oh! l’adorable joie, et comme ils sont charmants!
Quel hymne auguste au fond de leurs gazouillements!
Jeanne voudrait avoir tous les oiseaux qui passent;
Georges vide un pantin dont les ressorts se cassent,
Et médite; et tous deux jasent; leurs cris joyeux
Semblent faire partout dans l’ombre ouvrir des yeux;
Georges, tout en mangeant des nèfles et des pommes,
M’apporte son jouet; moi qui connais les hommes
Mieux que Georges, et qui sait les secrets du destin,
Je raccommode avec un fil son vieux pantin.
Mon Georges, ne va pas dans l’herbe; elle est trempée.
Et le vent berce l’arbre, et Jeanne sa poupée.
On sent Dieu dans ce bois pensif dont la douceur
Se mêle à la gaîté du frère et de la soeur;
Nous obéissons, Jeanne et moi, Georges commande;
La nourrice leur chante une chanson normande,
De celles qu’on entend le soir sur les chemins,
Et Georges bat du pied, et Jeanne bat des mains.
Et je m’épanouis à leurs divins vacarmes,
Je ris; mais vous voyez sous mon rire mes larmes,
Vieux arbres, n’est-ce pas? et vous n’avez pas cru
Que j’oublierai jamais le petit disparu.

II

JEANNE ENDORMIE. — I

LA SIESTE

Elle fait au milieu du jour son petit somme;
Car l’enfant a besoin du rêve plus que l’homme,
Cette terre est si laide alors qu’on vient du ciel!
L’enfant cherche à revoir Chérubin, Ariel,
Ses camarades, Puck, Titania, les fées,
Et ses mains quand il dort sont par Dieu réchauffées.
Oh! comme nous serions surpris si nous voyions,
Au fond de ce sommeil sacré, plein de rayons,
Ces paradis ouverts dans l’ombre, et ces passages
D’étoiles qui font signe aux enfants d’être sages,
Ces apparitions, ces éblouissements!
Donc, à l’heure où les feux du soleil sont calmants,
Quand toute la nature écoute et se recueille,
Vers midi, quand les nids se taisent, quand la feuille
La plus tremblante oublie un instant de frémir,
Jeanne a cette habitude aimable de dormir;
Et la mère un moment respire et se repose,
Car on se lasse, même à servir une rose.
Ses beaux petits pieds nus dont le pas est peu sûr
Dorment; et son berceau, qu’entoure un vague azur
Ainsi qu’une auréole entoure une immortelle,
Semble un nuage fait avec de la dentelle;
On croit, en la voyant dans ce frais berceau-là,
Voir une lueur rose au fond d’un falbala;
On la contemple, on rit, on sent fuir la tristesse,
Et c’est un astre, ayant de plus la petitesse;
L’ombre, amoureuse d’elle, a l’air de l’adorer;
Le vent retient son souffle et n’ose respirer.
Soudain, dans l’humble et chaste alcôve maternelle,
Versant tout le matin qu’elle a dans sa prunelle,
Elle ouvre la paupière, étend un bras charmant,

Agite un pied, puis l’autre, et, si divinement
Que des fronts dans l’azur se penchent pour l’entendre,
Elle gazouille... — Alors, de sa voix la plus tendre,
Couvrant des yeux l’enfant que Dieu fait rayonner,
Cherchant le plus doux nom qu’elle puisse donner
À sa joie, à son ange en fleur, à sa chimère:
— Te voilà réveillée, horreur! lui dit sa mère.

III

LA LUNE

I

Jeanne songeait, sur l’herbe assise, grave et rose;
Je m’approchai: — Dis-moi si tu veux quelque chose,
Jeanne? — car j’obéis à ces charmants amours,
Je les guette, et je cherche à comprendre toujours
Tout ce qui peut passer par ces divines têtes.
Jeanne m’a répondu: — Je voudrais voir des bêtes.
Alors je lui montrai dans l’herbe une fourmi.
— Vois! Mais Jeanne ne fut contente qu’à demi.
— Non, les bêtes, c’est gros, me dit-elle.

Leur rêve,
C’est le grand. L’Océan les attire à sa grève,
Les berçant de son chant rauque, et les captivant
Par l’ombre, et par la fuite effrayante du vent;
Ils aiment l’épouvante, il leur faut le prodige.
— Je n’ai pas d’éléphant sous la main, répondis-je.
Veux-tu quelque autre chose? ô Jeanne, on te le doit!
Parle. — Alors Jeanne au ciel leva son petit doigt.
— Ça, dit-elle. — C’était l’heure où le soir commence.
Je vis à l’horizon surgir la lune immense.

II

CHOSES DU SOIR

Le brouillard est froid, la bruyère est grise;
Les troupeaux de boeufs vont aux abreuvoirs;
La lune, sortant des nuages noirs,
Semble une clarté qui vient par surprise.

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où, Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

Le voyageur marche et la lande est brune;
Une ombre est derrière, une ombre est devant;
Blancheur au couchant, lueur au levant;
Ici crépuscule, et là clair de lune.

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où,
Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

La sorcière assise allonge sa lippe;
L’araignée accroche au toit son filet;
Le lutin reluit dans le feu follet
Comme un pistil d’or dans une tulipe.

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où,
Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

On voit sur la mer des chasse-marées;
Le naufrage guette un mât frissonnant;
Le vent dit: demain! l’eau dit: maintenant!
Les voix qu’on entend sont désespérées.

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où,
Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

Le coche qui va d’Avranche à Fougère
Fait claquer son fouet comme un vif éclair;
Voici le moment où flottent dans l’air
Tous ces bruits confus que l’ombre exagère.

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où,
Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

Dans les bois profonds brillent des flambées;
Un vieux cimetière est sur un sommet;
Où Dieu trouve-t-il tout ce noir qu’il met

Dans les coeurs brisés et les nuits tombées?

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où,
Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

Des flaques d’argent tremblent sur les sables;
L’orfraie est au bord des talus crayeux;
Le pâtre, à travers le vent, suit des yeux
Le vol monstrueux et vague des diables.

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où,
Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

Un panache gris sort des cheminées;
Le bûcheron passe avec son fardeau;
On entend, parmi le bruit des cours d’eau,
Des frémissements de branches traînées.

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où,
Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

La faim fait rêver les grands loups moroses;
La rivière court, le nuage fuit;
Derrière la vitre où la lampe luit,
Les petits enfants ont des têtes roses.

Je ne sais plus quand, je ne sais plus où,
Maître Yvon soufflait dans son biniou.

III

Ah! vous voulez la lune? Où? dans le fond du puits?
Non; dans le ciel. Eh bien, essayons. Je ne puis.
Et c’est ainsi toujours. Chers petits, il vous passe
Par l’esprit de vouloir la lune, et dans l’espace
J’étends mes mains, tâchant de prendre au vol Phoebé.
L’adorable hasard d’être aïeul est tombé

Sur ma tête, et m’a fait une douce fêlure.
Je sens en vous voyant que le sort put m’exclure
Du bonheur, sans m’avoir tout à fait abattu.
Mais causons. Voyez-vous, vois-tu, Georges, vois-tu,
Jeanne? Dieu nous connaît, et sait ce qu’ose faire
Un aïeul, car il est lui-même un peu grand-père;
Le bon Dieu, qui toujours contre nous se défend,
Craint ceci: le vieillard qui veut plaire à l’enfant;
Il sait que c’est ma loi qui sort de votre bouche,
Et que j’obéirais; il ne veut pas qu’on touche
Aux étoiles, et c’est pour en être bien sûr
Qu’il les accroche aux clous les plus hauts de l’azur.

IV

— Oh! comme ils sont goulus! dit la mère parfois.
Il faut leur donner tout, les cerises des bois,
Les pommes du verger, les gâteaux de la table;
S’ils entendent la voix des vaches dans l’étable
Du lait! vite! et leurs cris sont comme une forêt
De Bondy quand un sac de bonbons apparaît.
Les voilà maintenant qui réclament la lune!

Pourquoi pas? Le néant des géants m’importune;
Moi j’admire, ébloui, la grandeur des petits.
Ah! l’âme des enfants a de forts appétits,
Certes, et je suis pensif devant cette gourmande
Qui voit un univers dans l’ombre, et le demande.
La lune! Pourquoi pas? vous dis-je. Eh bien, après?
Pardieu! si je l’avais, je la leur donnerais.

C’est vrai, sans trop savoir ce qu’ils en pourraient faire,
Oui, je leur donnerais, lune, ta sombre sphère,
Ton ciel, d’où Swedenborg n’est jamais revenu,
Ton énigme, ton puits sans fond, ton inconnu!
Oui, je leur donnerais, en disant: Soyez sages!
Ton masque obscur qui fait le guet dans les nuages,

Tes cratères tordus par de noirs aquilons,
Tes solitudes d’ombre et d’oubli, tes vallons,
Peut-être heureux, peut-être affreux, édens ou bagnes,
Lune, et la vision de tes pâles montagnes.
Oui, je crois qu’après tout, des enfants à genoux
Sauraient mieux se servir de la lune que nous;
Ils y mettraient leurs voeux, leur espoir, leur prière;
Ils laisseraient mener par cette aventurière
Leurs petits coeurs pensifs vers le grand Dieu profond.
La nuit, quand l’enfant dort, quand ses rêves s’en vont,
Certes, ils vont plus loin et plus haut que les nôtres.
Je crois aux enfants comme on croyait aux apôtres;
Et quand je vois ces chers petits êtres sans fiel
Et sans peur, désirer quelque chose du ciel,
Je le leur donnerais, si je l’avais. La sphère
Que l’enfant veut, doit être à lui, s’il la préfère.
D’ailleurs, n’avez-vous rien au delà de vos droits?
Oh! je voudrais bien voir, par exemple, les rois
S’étonner que des nains puissent avoir un monde!
Oui, je vous donnerais, anges à tête blonde,
Si je pouvais, à vous qui régnez par l’amour,
Ces univers baignés d’un mystérieux jour,
Conduits par des esprits que l’ombre a pour ministres,
Et l’énorme rondeur des planètes sinistres.
Pourquoi pas? Je me fie à vous, car je vous vois,
Et jamais vous n’avez fait de mal. Oui, parfois,
En songeant à quel point c’est grand, l’âme innocente,
Quand ma pensée au fond de l’infini s’absente,
Je me dis, dans l’extase et dans l’effroi sacré,
Que peut-être, là-haut, il est, dans l’Ignoré,
Un dieu supérieur aux dieux que nous rêvâmes,
Capable de donner des astres à des âmes.

LE POÈME: DU JARDIN DES PLANTES

I

Le comte de Buffon fut bonhomme, il créa
Ce jardin imité d’Évandre et de Rhéa
Et plein d’ours plus savants que ceux de la Sorbonne,
Afin que Jeanne y puisse aller avec sa bonne;
Buffon avait prévu Jeanne, et je lui sais gré
De s’être dit qu’un jour Paris un peu tigré,
Complétant ses bourgeois par une variante,
La bête, enchanterait cette âme souriante;
Les enfants ont des yeux si profonds, que parfois
Ils cherchent vaguement la vision des bois;
Et Buffon paternel, c’est ainsi qu’il rachète
Sa phrase sur laquelle a traîné sa manchette,
Pour les marmots, de qui les anges sont jaloux,
A fait ce paradis suave, orné de loups.

J’approuve ce Buffon. Les enfants, purs visages,
Regardent l’invisible, et songent, et les sages
Tâchent toujours de plaire à quelqu’un de rêveur.

L’été dans ce jardin montre de la ferveur;
C’est un éden où juin rayonne, où les fleurs luisent,
Où l’ours bougonne, et Jeanne et Georges m’y conduisent.
C’est du vaste univers un raccourci complet.
Je vais dans ce jardin parce que cela plaît
À Jeanne, et que je suis contre elle sans défense.
J’y vais étudier deux gouffres, Dieu, l’enfance,
Le tremblant nouveau-né, le créateur flagrant,
L’infiniment charmant et l’infiniment grand,
La même chose au fond; car c’est la même flamme
Qui sort de l’astre immense et de la petite âme.

Je contemple, au milieu des arbres de Buffon,
Le bison trop bourru, le babouin trop bouffon,
Des bosses, des laideurs, des formes peu choisies,
Et j’apprends à passer à Dieu ses fantaisies.
Dieu, n’en déplaise au prêtre, au bonze, au caloyer,
Est capable de tout, lui qui fait balayer
Le bon goût, ce ruisseau, par Nisard, ce concierge,
Livre au singe excessif la forêt, cette vierge,
Et permet à Dupin de ressembler aux chiens.
(Pauvres chiens!) — Selon l’Inde et les manichéens,
Dieu doublé du démon expliquerait l’énigme;
Le paradis ayant l’enfer pour borborygme,
La Providence un peu servante d’Anankè,
L’infini mal rempli par l’univers manqué,
Le mal faisant toujours au bien quelque rature,
Telle serait la loi de l’aveugle nature;
De là les contresens de la création.
Dieu, certe, a des écarts d’imagination;
Il ne sait pas garder la mesure; il abuse
De son esprit jusqu’à faire l’oie et la buse;
Il ignore, auteur fauve et sans frein ni cordeau,
Ce point juste où Laharpe arrête Colardeau;
Il se croit tout permis. Malheur à qui l’imite!
Il n’a pas de frontière, il n’a pas de limite;
Et fait pousser l’ivraie au beau milieu du blé,
Sous prétexte qu’il est l’immense et l’étoilé;
Il a d’affreux vautours qui nous tombent des nues;
Il nous impose un tas d’inventions cornues,
Le bouc, l’auroch, l’isard et le colimaçon;
Il blesse le bon sens, il choque la raison;
Il nous raille; il nous fait avaler la couleuvre!
Au moment où, contents, examinant son oeuvre,
Rendant pleine justice à tant de qualités,
Nous admirons l’oeil d’or des tigres tachetés,
Le cygne, l’antilope à la prunelle bleue,
La constellation qu’un paon a dans sa queue,
D’une cage insensée il tire le verrou,

Et voilà qu’il nous jette au nez le kangourou!
Dieu défait et refait, ride, éborgne, essorille,
Exagère le nègre, hélas, jusqu’au gorille,
Fait des taupes et fait des lynx, se contredit,
Mêle dans les halliers l’histrion au bandit,
Le mandrille au jaguar, le perroquet à l’aigle,
Lie à la parodie insolente et sans règle
L’épopée, et les laisse errer toutes les deux
Sous l’âpre clair-obscur des branchages hideux;
Si bien qu’on ne sait plus s’il faut trembler ou rire,
Et qu’on croit voir rôder, dans l’ombre que déchire
Tantôt le rayon d’or, tantôt l’éclair d’acier,
Un spectre qui parfois avorte en grimacier.
Moi, je n’exige pas que Dieu toujours s’observe,
Il faut bien tolérer quelques excès de verve
Chez un si grand poète, et ne point se fâcher
Si celui qui nuance une fleur de pêcher
Et courbe l’arc-en-ciel sur l’Océan qu’il dompte,
Après un colibri nous donne un mastodonte!
C’est son humeur à lui d’être de mauvais goût,
D’ajouter l’hydre au gouffre et le ver à l’égout,
D’avoir en toute chose une stature étrange,
Et d’être un Rabelais d’où sort un Michel-Ange.
C’est Dieu; moi je l’accepte.

Et quant aux nouveau-nés,
De même. Les enfants ne nous sont pas donnés
Pour avoir en naissant les façons du grand monde;
Les petits en maillot, chez qui la sève abonde,
Poussent l’impolitesse assez loin quelquefois;
J’en conviens. Et parmi les cris, les pas, les voix,
Les ours et leurs cornacs, les marmots et leurs mères,
Dans ces réalités semblables aux chimères,
Ébahi par le monstre et le mioche, assourdi
Comme par la rumeur d’une ruche à midi,
Sentant qu’à force d’être aïeul on est apôtre,
Questionné par l’un, escaladé par l’autre,

Pardonnant aux bambins le bruit, la fiente aux nids,
Et le rugissement aux bêtes, je finis
Par ne plus être, au fond du grand jardin sonore,
Qu'un bonhomme attendri par l'enfance et l'aurore,
Aimant ce double feu, s'y plaisant, s'y chauffant,
Et pas moins indulgent pour Dieu que pour l'enfant.

II

Les bêtes, cela parle; et Dupont de Nemours
Les comprend, chants et cris, gaîté, colère, amours.
C'est dans Perrault un fait, dans Homère un prodige;
Phèdre prend leur parole au vol et la rédige;
La Fontaine, dans l'herbe épaisse et le genêt
Rôdait, guettant, rêvant, et les espionnait;
Ésope, ce songeur bossu comme le Pinde,
Les entendait en Grèce, et Pilpaï dans l'Inde;
Les clairs étangs le soir offraient leurs noirs jargons
A monsieur Florian, officier de dragons;
Et l'âpre Ézéchiel, l'affreux prophète chauve,
Homme fauve, écoutait parler la bête fauve.
Les animaux naïfs dialoguent entr'eux.
Et toujours, que ce soit le hibou ténébreux,
L'ours qu'on entend gronder, l'âne qu'on entend braire,
Ou l'oie apostrophant le dindon, son grand frère,
Ou la guêpe insultant l'abeille sur l'Hybla,
Leur bêtise à l'esprit de l'homme ressembla.

CE QUE DIT LE PUBLIC

CINQ ANS
Les lions, c'est des loups.

SIX ANS

C'est très méchant, les bêtes.

CINQ ANS
Oui.

SIX ANS
Les petits oiseaux ce sont des malhonnêtes;
Ils sont des sales.

CINQ ANS
Oui.

SIX ANS, regardant les serpents.
Les serpents...

CINQ ANS, les examinant.
C’est en peau.

SIX ANS
Prends garde au singe; il va te prendre ton chapeau.

CINQ ANS, regardant le tigre.
Encore un loup!

SIX ANS
Viens voir l’ours avant qu’on le couche.

CINQ ANS, regardant l’ours.
Joli!

SIX ANS
Ça grimpe.

CINQ ANS, regardant l’éléphant.
Il a des cornes dans la bouche.

SIX ANS
Moi, j’aime l’éléphant, c’est gros.

SEPT ANS, survenant et les arrachant à la contemplation de l’éléphant.
Allons! venez!
Vous voyez bien qu’il va vous battre avec son nez.

À GEORGES

Mon doux Georges, viens voir une ménagerie
Quelconque, chez Buffon, au cirque, n’importe où;
Sans sortir de Lutèce allons en Assyrie,
Et sans quitter Paris partons pour Tombouctou.

Viens voir les léopards de Tyr, les gypaètes,
L’ours grondant, le boa formidable sans bruit,
Le zèbre, le chacal, l’once, et ces deux poètes,
L’aigle ivre de soleil, le vautour plein de nuit.

Viens contempler le lynx sagace, l’amphisbène
À qui Job comparait son faux ami Sepher,
Et l’obscur tigre noir, dont le masque d’ébène
A deux trous flamboyants par où l’on voit l’enfer.

Voir de près l’oiseau fauve et le frisson des ailes,
C’est charmant; nous aurons, sous de très sûrs abris,
Le spectacle des loups, des jaguars, des gazelles,
Et l’éblouissement divin des colibris.

Sortons du bruit humain. Viens au jardin des plantes.
Penchons-nous, à travers l’ombre où nous étouffons
Sur les douleurs d’en bas, vaguement appelantes,
Et sur les pas confus des inconnus profonds.

L’animal, c’est de l’ombre errant dans les ténèbres;
On ne sait s’il écoute, on ne sait s’il entend;
Il a des cris hagards, il a des yeux funèbres;

Une affirmation sublime en sort pourtant.

Nous qui régnons, combien de choses inutiles
Nous disons, sans savoir le mal que nous faisons!
Quand la vérité vient, nous lui sommes hostiles,
Et contre la raison nous avons des raisons.

Corbière à la tribune et Frayssinous en chaire
Sont fort inférieurs à la bête des bois;
L’âme dans la forêt songe et se laisse faire;
Je doute dans un temple, et sur un mont je crois.

Dieu par les voix de l’ombre obscurément se nomme;
Nul Quirinal ne vaut le fauve Pélion;
Il est bon, quand on vient d’entendre parler l’homme,
D’aller entendre un peu rugir le grand lion.

V

ENCORE DIEU, MAIS AVEC DES RESTRICTIONS

Quel beau lieu! Là le cèdre avec l’orme chuchote,
L’âne est Iyrique et semble avoir vu Don Quichotte,
Le tigre en cage a l’air d’un roi dans son palais,
Les pachydermes sont effroyablement laids;
Et puis c’est littéraire, on rêve à des idylles
De Viennet en voyant bâiller les crocodiles.
Là, pendant qu’au babouin la singesse se vend,
Pendant que le baudet contemple le savant,
Et que le vautour fait au hibou bon visage,
Certes, c’est un emploi du temps digne d’un sage
De s’en aller songer dans cette ombre, parmi
Ces arbres pleins de nids, où tout semble endormi
Et veille, où le refus consent, où l’amour lutte,
Et d’écouter le vent, ce doux joueur de flûte.

Apprenons, laissons faire, aimons, les cieux sont grands;
Et devenons savants, et restons ignorants.
Soyons sous l’infini des auditeurs honnêtes;
Rien n’est muet ni sourd; voyons le plus de bêtes
Que nous pouvons; tirons partie de leurs lec,ons.
Parce qu’autour de nous tout rêve, nous pensons.
L’ignorance est un peu semblable à la prière;
L’homme est grand par devant et petit par derrière;
C’est, d’Euclide à Newton, de Job à Réaumur,
Un indiscret qui veut voir par-dessus le mur,
Et la nature, au fond très moqueuse, paraphe
Notre science avec le cou de la girafe.
Tâchez de voir, c’est bien. Épiez. Notre esprit
Pousse notre science à guetter; Dieu sourit,
Vieux malin.

Je l’ai dit, Dieu prête à la critique.
Il n’est pas sobre. Il est débordant, frénétique,
Inconvenant; ici le nain, là le géant,
Tout à la fois; énorme; il manque de néant.
Il abuse du gouffre, il abuse du prisme.
Tout, c’est trop. Son soleil va jusqu’au gongorisme;
Lumière outrée. Oui, Dieu vraiment est inégal;
Ici la Sibérie, et là le Sénégal;
Et partout l’antithèse I il faut qu’on s’y résigne;
S’il fait noir le corbeau, c’est qu’il fit blanc le cygne;
Aujourd’hui Dieu nous gèle, hier il nous chauffait.
Comme à l’académie on lui dirait son fait!
Que nous veut la comète? À quoi sert le bolide?
Quand on est un pédant sérieux et solide,
Plus on est ébloui, moins on est satisfait;
La férule à Batteux, le sabre à Galifet
Ne tolèrent pas Dieu sans quelque impatience;
Dieu trouble l’ordre; il met sur les dents la science;
À peine a-t-on fini qu’il faut recommencer;
Il semble que l’on sent dans la main vous glisser
On ne sait quel serpent tout écaillé d’aurore.
Dès que vous avez dit: assez! il dit: encore!

Ce démagogue donne au pauvre autant de fleurs
Qu’au riche; il ne sait pas se borner; ses couleurs,
Ses rayons, ses éclairs, c’est plus qu’on ne souhaite.
Ah! tout cela fait mal aux yeux! dit la chouette.
Et la chouette, c’est la sagesse.

Il est sûr
Que Dieu taille à son gré le monde en plein azur;
Il mêle l’ironie à son tonnerre épique;
Si l’on plane il foudroie et si l’on broute il pique.
(Je ne m’étonne pas que Planche eût l’air piqué.)
Le vent, voix sans raison, sorte de bruit manqué,
Sans jamais s’expliquer et sans jamais conclure,
Rabâche, et l’océan n’est pas exempt d’enflure.

Quant à moi, je serais, j’en fais ici l’aveu,
Curieux de savoir ce que diraient de Dieu,
Du monde qu’il régit, du ciel qu’il exagère,
De l’infini, sinistre et confuse étagère,
De tout ce que ce Dieu prodigue, des amas
D’étoiles de tout genre et de tous les formats,
De sa facon d’emplir d’astres le télescope,
Nonotte et Baculard dans le café Procope.

VI

À JEANNE

Je ne te cache pas que j’aime aussi les bêtes;
Cela t’amuse. et moi cela m’instruit; je sens
Que ce n’est pas pour rien qu’en oes farouches têtes
Dieu met le clair-obscur des grands bois frémissants.

Je suis le curieux qui, né pour croire et plaindre,
Sonde, en voyant l’aspic sous des roses rampant,
Les sombres lois qui font que la femme doit craindre
Le démon, quand la fleur n’a pas peur du serpent.

Pendant que nous donnons des ordres à la terre,
Rois copiant le singe et par lui copiés,
Doutant s’il est notre oeuvre ou s’il est notre pére,
Tout en bas, dans l’horreur fatale, sous nos pieds,

On ne sait quel noir monde étonné nous regarde
Et songe, et sous un joug, trop souvent odieux,
Nous courbons l’humble monstre et la brute hagarde
Qui, nous voyant démons, nous prennent pour des dieux.

Oh! que d’étranges lois! quel tragique mélange!
Voit-on le dernier fait, sait-on le dernier mot,
Quel spectre peut sortir de Vénus, et quel ange
Peut naître dans le ventre affreux de Béhémoth?

Transfiguration! mystère! gouffre et cime!
L’âme rejettera le corps, sombre haillon;
La créature abjecte un jour sera sublime,
L’être qu’on hait chenille on l’aime papillon.

VII

Tous les bas âges sont épars sous ces grands arbres.

Certes, l’alignement des vases et des marbres,
Ce parterre au cordeau, ce cèdre résigné,
Ce chêne que monsieur Despréaux eut signé,
Ces barreaux noirs croisés sur la fleur odorante,
Font honneur à Buffon qui fut l’un des Quarante
Et mêla, de façon à combler tous nos voeux,
Le peigne de Lenôtre aux effrayants cheveux
De Pan, dieu des halliers, des rochers et des plaines;
Cela n’empêche pas les roses d’être pleines
De parfums, de désirs, d’amour et de clarté;
Cela n’empêche pas l’été d’être l’été;
Cela n’ôte à la vie aucune confiance;
Cela n’empêche pas l’aurore en conscience
D’apparaitre au zénith qui semble s’élargir,
Les enfants de jouer, les monstres de rugir.

Un bon effroi joyeux emplit ces douces têtes.
Écoutez-moi ces cris charmants. — Viens voir les bêtes!
Ils courent. Quelle extase! On s’arrête devant
Des cages où l’on voit des oiseaux bleus rêvant
Comme s’ils attendaient le mois où l’on émigre.
— Regarde ce gros chat. — Ce gros chat c’est le tigre.
Les grands font aux petits vénérer les guenons,
Les pythons, les chacals, et nomment par leurs noms
Les vieux ours qui, dit-on, poussent l’humeur maligne
Jusqu’à manger parfois des soldats de la ligne.

Spectacle monstrueux! Les gueules, les regards
De dragon, lueur fauve au fond des bois hagards,
Les écailles, les dards, la griffe qui s’allonge,
Une apparition d’abîme, l’affreux songe
Réel que l’oeil troublé des prophètes amers
Voit sous la transparence effroyable des mers
Et qui se traîne épars dans l’horreur inouïe,
L’énorme bâillement du gouffre qui s’ennuie,
Les mâchoires de l’hydre ouvertes tristement,
On ne sait quel chaos blême, obscur, inclément,

Un essai d’exister, une ébauche de vie
D’où sort le bégaiement furieux de l’envie.
C’est cela l’animal; et c’est ce que l’enfant
Regarde, admire et craint, vaguement triomphant;
C’est de la nuit qu’il vient contempler, lui l’aurore.
Ce noir fourmillement mugit, hurle, dévore;
On est un chérubin rose, frêle et tremblant;
On va voir celui-ci que l’hiver fait tout blanc,
Cet autre dont l’oeil jette un éclair du tropique;
Tout cela gronde, hait, menace, siffle, pique,
Mord; mais par sa nourrice on se sent protéger;
Comme c’est amusant d’avoir peur sans danger!
Ce que l’homme contemple, il croit qu’il le découvre.
Voir un roi dans son antre, un tigre dans son Louvre,
Cela plaît à l’enfance. — Il est joliment laid!
Viens voir! — Étrange instinct! Grâce à qui l’horreur plaît!
On vient chercher surtout ceux qu’il faut qu’on évite.
— Par ici! — Non, par là! — Tiens, regarde! — Viens vite!
— Jette-leur ton gâteau. — Pas tout. — Jette toujours.
— Moi, j’aime bien les loups. — Moi, j’aime mieux les ours.
Et les fronts sont riants, et le soleil les dore,
Et ceux qui, nés d’hier, ne parlent pas encore
Pendant ces brouhahas sous les branchages verts,
Sont là, mystérieux, les yeux tout grands ouverts,
Et méditent.

Afrique aux plis infranchissables,
Ô gouffre d’horizons sinistres, mer des sables,
Sahara, Dahomey, lac Nagain, Darfour,
Toi, l’Amérique, et toi, l’Inde, âpre carrefour
Où Zoroastre fait la rencontre d’Homère,
Paysages de lune où rôde la chimère,
Où l’orang-outang marche un bâton à la main,
Où la nature est folle et n’a plus rien d’humain,
Jungles par les sommeils de la fièvre rêvées,
Plaines où brusquement on voit des arrivées
De fleuves tout à coup grossis et déchaînés,

Où l’on entend rugir les lions étonnés
Que l’eau montante enferme en des îles subites,
Déserts dont les gavials sont les noirs cénobites,
Où le boa, sans souffle et sans tressaillement,
Semble un tronc d’arbre à terre et dort affreusement,
Terre des baobabs, des bambous, des lianes,
Songez que nous avons des Georges et des Jeannes,
Créez des monstres; lacs, forêts, avec vos monts
Vos noirceurs et vos bruits, composez des mammons;
Abîmes, condensez en eux toutes vos gloires,
Donnez-leur vos rochers pour dents et pour mâchoires,
Pour voix votre ouragan, pour regard votre horreur;
Donnez-leur des aspects de pape et d’empereur,
Et faites, par-dessus les halliers, leur étable
Et leur palais, bondir leur joie épouvantable.
Certes, le casoar est un bon sénateur,
L’oie a l’air d’un évêque et plaît par sa hauteur,
Dieu quand il fit le singe a rêvé Scaramouche,
Le colibri m’enchante et j’aime l’oiseau-mouche;
Mais ce que de ta verve, ô nature, j’attends
Ce sont les Béhémoths et les Léviathans.
Le nouveau-né qui sort de l’ombre et du mystère
Ne serait pas content de ne rien voir sur terre;
Un immense besoin d’étonnement, voilà
Toute l’enfance, et c’est en songeant à cela
Que j’applaudis, nature, aux géants que tu formes;
L’oeil bleu des innocents veut des bêtes énormes;
Travaillez, dieux affreux! Soyez illimités
Et féconds, nous tenons à vos difformités
Autant qu’à vos parfums, autant qu’à vos dictames,
Ô déserts, attendu que les hippopotames,
Que les rhinocéros et que les éléphants
Sont évidemment faits pour les petits enfants.

VIII

C’est une émotion étrange pour mon âme

De voir l’enfant, encor dans les bras de la femme,
Fleur ignorant l’hiver, ange ignorant Satan,
Secouant un hochet devant Léviathan,
Approcher doucement la nature terrible.
Les beaux séraphins bleus qui passent dans la bible,
Envolés d’on ne sait quel ciel mystérieux,
N’ont pas une plus pure aurore dans les yeux
Et n’ont pas sur le front une plus sainte flamme
Que l’enfant innocent riant au monstre infâme.
Ciel noir! Quel vaste cri que le rugissement!
Quand la bête, âme aveugle et visage écumant,
Lance au loin, n’importe où, dans l’étendue hostile
Sa voix lugubre, ainsi qu’un sombre projectile,
C’est tout le gouffre affreux des forces sans clarté
Qui hurle; c’est l’obscène et sauvage Astarté,
C’est la nature abjecte et maudite qui gronde;
C’est Némée, et Stymphale, et l’Afrique profonde
C’est le féroce Atlas, c’est l’Athos plus hanté
Par les foudres qu’un lac par les mouches d’été;
C’est Lerne, Pélion, Ossa, c’est Érymanthe,
C’est Calydon funeste et noir, qui se lamente.

*

L’enfant regarde l’ombre où sont les lions roux.
La bête grince; à qui s’adresse ce courroux?
L’enfant jase; sait-on qui les enfants appellent?
Les deux voix, la tragique et la douce se mêlent
L’enfant est l’espérance et la bête est la faim;
Et tous deux sont l’attente; il gazouille sans fin
Et chante, et l’animal écume sans relâche;
Ils ont chacun en eux un mystère qui tâche
De dire ce qu’il sait et d’avoir ce qu’il veut
Leur langue est prise et cherche à dénouer le noeud.
Se parlent-ils? Chacun fait son essai, l’un triste
L’autre charmant; l’enfant joyeusement existe;
Quoique devant lui l’Être effrayant soit debout

Il a sa mère, il a sa nourrice, il a tout;
Il rit.

*

De quelle nuit sortent ces deux ébauches?
L’une sort de l’azur; l’autre de ces débauches,
De ces accouplements du nain et du géant,
De ce hideux baiser de l’abîme au néant
Qu’un nomme le chaos.

Oui, cette cave immonde,
Dont le soupirail blême apparaît sous le monde,
Le chaos, ces chocs noirs, ces danses d’ouragans,
Les éléments gâtés et devenus brigands
Et changés en fléaux dans le cloaque immense,
Le rut universel épousant la démence,
La fécondation de Tout produisant Rien,
Cet engloutissement du vrai, du beau, du bien,
Qu’Orphée appelle Hadès, qu’Homère appelle Érèbe,
Et qui rend fixe l’oeil fatal des sphinx de Thèbe,
C’est cela, c’est la folle et mauvaise action
Qu’en faisant le chaos fit la création,
C’est l’attaque de l’ombre au soleil vénérable,
C’est la convulsion du gouffre misérable
Essayant d’opposer l’informe à l’idéal,
C’est Tisiphone offrant son ventre à Bélial,
C’est cet ensemble obscur de forces échappées
Où les éclairs font rage et tirent leurs épées,
Où périrent Janus, l’âge d’or et Rhéa,
Qui, si nous en croyons les mages, procréa
L’animal; et la bête affreuse fut rugie
Et vomie au milieu des nuits par cette orgie.

C’est de là que nous vient le monstre inquiétant.

L’enfant, lui, pur songeur rassurant et content,

Est l’autre énigme; il sort de l’obscurité bleue.
Tous les petits oiseaux, mésange, hochequeue,
Fauvette, passereau, bavards aux fraîches voix,
Sont ses frères, tandis que ces marmots des bois
Sentent pousser leur aile, il sent croître son âme
Des azurs embaumés de myrrhe et de cinname,
Des entre-croisements de fleurs et de rayons,
Ces éblouissements sacrés que nous voyons
Dans nos profonds sommeils quand nous sommes des justes,
Un pêle-mêle obscur de branchages augustes
Dont les anges au vol divin sont les oiseaux,
Une lueur pareille au clair reflet des eaux
Quand, le soir, dans l’étang les arbres se renversent,
Des lys vivants, un ciel qui rit, des chants qui bercent,
Voilà ce que l’enfant, rose, a derrière lui.
Il s’éveille ici-bas, vaguement ébloui;
Il vient de voir l’éden et Dieu; rien ne l’effraie,
Il ne croit pas au mal; ni le loup, ni l’orfraie,
Ni le tigre, démon taché, ni ce trompeur,
Le renard, ne le font trembler; il n’a pas peur,
Il chante; et quoi de plus touchant pour la pensée
Que cette confiance au paradis, poussée
Jusqu’à venir tout près sourire au sombre enfer!
Quel ange que l’enfant! Tout, le mal, sombre mer,
Les hydres qu’en leurs flots roulent les vils avernes,
Les griffes, ces forêts, les gueules, ces cavernes,
Les cris, les hurlements, les râles, les abois,
Les rauques visions, la fauve horreur des bois,
Tout, Satan, et sa morne et féroce puissance,
S’évanouit au fond du bleu de l’innocence!
C’est beau. Voir Caliban et rester Ariel!
Avoir dans son humble âme un si merveilleux ciel
Que l’apparition indignée et sauvage
Des êtres de la nuit n’y fasse aucun ravage,
Et se sentir si plein de lumière et si doux
Que leur souffle n’éteigne aucune étoile en vous!

*

Et je rêve. Et je crois entendre un dialogue
Entre la tragédie effroyable et l'églogue;
D'un côté l'épouvante, et de l'autre l'amour;
Dans l'une ni dans l'autre il ne fait encor jour;
L'enfant semble vouloir expliquer quelque chose;
La bête gronde, et, monstre incliné sur la rose,
Écoute... — Et qui pourrait comprendre, ô firmament,
Ce que le bégaiement dit au rugissement?

Quel que soit le secret, tout se dresse et médite,
La fleur bénie ainsi que l'épine maudite;
Tout devient attentif; tout tressaille; un frisson
Agite l'air, le flot, la branche, le buisson,
Et dans les clairs-obscurs et dans les crépuscules,
Dans cette ombre où jadis combattaient les Hercules,
Où les Bellérophons s'envolaient, où planait
L'immense Amos criant: Un nouveau monde naît!
On sent on ne sait quelle émotion sacrée,
Et c'est, pour la nature où l'éternel Dieu crée,
C'est pour tout le mystère un attendrissement
Comme si l'on voyait l'aube au rayon calmant
S'ébaucher par-dessus d'informes promontoires,
Quand l'âme blanche vient parler aux âmes noires.

IX

La face de la bête est terrible; on y sent
L'Ignoré, l'éternel problème éblouissant
Et ténébreux, que l'homme appelle la Nature;
On a devant soi l'ombre informe, l'aventure
Et le joug, l'esclavage et la rébellion,
Quand on voit le visage effrayant du lion;
Le monstre orageux, rauque, effréné, n'est pas libre,
Ô stupeur! et quel est cet étrange équilibre
Composé de splendeur et d'horreur, l'univers,

Où règne un Jéhovah dont Satan est l’envers;
Où les astres, essaim lumineux et livide,
Semblent pris dans un bagne, et fuyant dans le vide,
Et jetés au hasard comme on jette les dés,
Et toujours à la chaîne et toujours évadés?
Quelle est cette merveille effroyable et divine
Où, dans l’éden qu’on voit, c’est l’enfer qu’on devine,
Où s’éclipse, ô terreur, espoirs évanouis,
L’infini des soleils sous l’infini des nuits,
Où, dans la brute, Dieu disparaît et s’efface?
Quand ils ont devant eux le monstre face à face,
Les mages, les songeurs vertigineux des bois,
Les prophètes blêmis à qui parlent des voix,
Sentent on ne sait quoi d’énorme dans la bête;
Pour eux l’amer rictus de cette obscure tête,
C’est l’abîme, inquiet d’être trop regardé,
C’est l’éternel secret qui veut être gardé
Et qui ne laisse pas entrer dans ses mystères
La curiosité des pâles solitaires;
Et ces hommes, à qui l’ombre fait des aveux,
Sentent qu’ici le sphinx s’irrite, et leurs cheveux
Se dressent, et leur sang dans leurs veines se fige
Devant le froncement de sourcil du prodige.

X

Toutes sortes d’enfants, blonds, lumineux, vermeils,
Dont le bleu paradis visite les sommeils
Quand leurs yeux sont fermés la nuit dans les alcôves,
Sont là, groupés devant la cage aux bêtes fauves;
Ils regardent.

Ils ont sous les yeux l’élément,
Le gouffre, le serpent tordu comme un tourment,
L’affreux dragon, l’onagre inepte, la panthère,
Le chacal abhorré des spectres, qu’il déterre,
Le gorille, fantôme et tigre, et ces bandits,

Les loups, et les grands lynx qui tutoyaient jadis
Les prophètes sacrés accoudés sur des bibles;
Et, pendant que ce tas de prisonniers terribles
Gronde, l’un vil forçat, l’autre arrogant proscrit,
Que fait le groupe rose et charmant? Il sourit.

L’abîme est là qui gronde et les enfants sourient.

Ils admirent. Les voix épouvantables crient
Tandis que cet essaim de fronts pleins de rayons,
Presque ailé, nous émeut comme si nous voyions
L’aube s’épanouir dans une géorgique,
Tandis que ces enfants chantent, un bruit tragique
Va, chargé de colère et de rébellions
Du cachot des vautours au bagne des lions.

Et le sourire frais des enfants continue.

Devant cette douceur suprême, humble, ingénue,
Obstinée, on s’étonne, et l’esprit stupéfait
Songe, comme aux vieux temps d’Orphée et de Japhet,
Et l’on se sent glisser dans la spirale obscure
Du vertige, où tombaient Job, Thalès, Épicure,
Où l’on cherche à tâtons quelqu’un, ténébreux puits
Où l’âme dit: Réponds! où Dieu dit: Je ne puis!

Oh! si la conjecture antique était fondée,
Si le rêve inquiet des mages de Chaldée,
L’hypothèse qu’Hermès et Pythagore font,
Si ce songe farouche était le vrai profond;
La bête parmi nous, si c’était là Tantale!
Si la réalité redoutable et fatale
C’était ceci: les loups, les boas, les mammons
Masques sombres, cachant d’invisibles démons!
Oh! ces êtres affreux dont l’ombre est le repaire,
Ces crânes aplatis de tigre et de vipère,
Ces vils fronts écrasés par le talon divin,

L’ours, rêveur noir, le singe, effroyable sylvain,
Ces rictus convulsifs, ces faces insensées,
Ces stupides instincts menaçant nos pensées,
Ceux-ci pleins de l’horreur nocturne des forêts,
Ceux-là, fuyants aspects, flottants, confus, secrets,
Sur qui la mer répand ses moires et ses nacres,
Ces larves, ces passants des bois, ces simulacres,
Ces vivants dans la tombe animale engloutis,
Ces fantômes ayant pour loi les appétits,
Ciel bleu! s’il était vrai que c’est là ce qu’on nomme
Les damnés, expiant d’anciens crimes chez l’homme,
Qui, sortis d’une vie antérieure, ayant
Dans les yeux la terreur d’un passé foudroyant,
Viennent, balbutiant d’épouvante et de haine,
Dire au milieu de nous les mots de la géhenne,
Et qui tâchent en vain d’exprimer leur tourment
A notre verbe avec le sourd rugissement;
Tas de forçats qui grince et gronde, aboie et beugle;
Muets hurlants qu’éclaire un flamboiement aveugle;
Oh! s’ils étaient là. nus sous le destin de fer,
Méditant vaguement sur l’éternel enfer;
Si ces mornes vaincus de la nature immense
Se croyaient à jamais bannis de la clémence;
S’ils voyaient les soleils s’éteindre par degrés,
Et s’ils n’étaient plus rien que des désespérés;
Oh! dans l’accablement sans fond, quand tout se brise,
Quand tout s’en va, refuse et fuit, quelle surprise,
Pour ces êtres méchants et tremblants à la fois,
D’entendre tout à coup venir ces jeunes voix!
Quelqu’un est là! Qui donc? On parle! ô noir problème!
Une blancheur paraît sur la muraille blême
Où chancelle l’obscure et morne vision.
Le léviathan voit accourir l’alcyon!
Quoi! le déluge voit arriver la colombe!
La clarté des berceaux filtre à travers la tombe
Et pénètre d’un jour clément les condamnés!
Les spectres ne sont point haïs des nouveau-nés!

Quoi! l'araignée immense ouvre ses sombres toiles!
Quel rayon qu'un regard d'enfant, saintes étoiles!
Mais puisqu'on peut entrer, on peut donc s'en aller!
Tout n'est donc pas fini! L'azur vient nous parler!
Le ciel est plus céleste en ces douces prunelles!
C'est quand Dieu, pour venir des voûtes éternelles
Jusqu'à la terre, triste et funeste milieu,
Passe à travers l'enfant qu'il est tout à fait Dieu!
Quoi! le plafond difforme aurait une fenêtre!
On verrait l'impossible espérance renaître!
Quoi! l'on pourrait ne plus mordre, ne plus grincer!
Nous représentons-nous ce qui peut se passer
Dans les craintifs cerveaux des bêtes formidables?
De la lumière au bas des gouffres insondables!
Une intervention de visages divins!
La torsion du mal dans les brûlants ravins
De l'enfer misérable est soudain apaisée
Par d'innocents regards purs comme la rosée!
Quoi! l'on voit des yeux luire et l'on entend des pas!
Est-ce que nous savons s'ils ne se mettent pas,
Ces monstres, à songer, sitôt la nuit venue,
S'appelant, stupéfaits de cette aube inconnue
Qui se lève sur l'âpre et sévère horizon?
Du pardon vénérable ils ont le saint frisson;
Il leur semble sentir que les chaînes les quittent;
Les échevèlements des crinières méditent;
L'enfer, cette ruine, est moins trouble et moins noir;
Et l'oeil presque attendri de ces captifs croit voir
Dans un pur demi-jour qu'un ciel lointain azure
Grandir l'ombre d'un temple au seuil de la masure.
Quoi! l'enfer finirait! l'ombre entendrait raison!
Ô clémence! ô lueur dans l'énorme prison!
On ne sait quelle attente émeut ces coeurs étranges.

Quelle promesse au fond du sourire des anges!

JEANNE ENDORMIE. — II

Elle dort; ses beaux yeux se rouvriront demain;
Et mon doigt qu'elle tient dans l'ombre emplit sa main;
Moi, je lis, ayant soin que rien ne la réveille,
Des journaux pieux; tous m'insultent; l'un conseille
De mettre à Charenton quiconque lit mes vers;
L'autre voue au bûcher mes ouvrages pervers;
L'autre, dont une larme humecte les paupières,
Invite les passants à me jeter des pierres;
Mes écrits sont un tas lugubre et vénéneux
Où tous les noirs dragons du mal tordent leurs noeuds;
L'autre croit à l'enfer et m'en déclare apôtre;
L'un m'appelle Antechrist, l'autre Satan, et l'autre
Craindrait de me trouver le soir au coin d'un bois;
L'un me tend la ciguë et l'autre me dit: Bois!
J'ai démoli le Louvre et tué les otages;
Je fais rêver au peuple on ne sait quels partages;
Paris en flamme envoie à mon front sa rougeur;
Je suis incendiaire, assassin, égorgeur,
Avare, et j'eusse été moins sombre et moins sinistre
Si l'empereur m'avait voulu faire ministre;
Je suis l'empoisonneur public, le meurtrier;
Ainsi viennent en foule autour de moi crier
Toutes ces voix jetant l'affront, sans fin, sans trêve;
Cependant l'enfant dort, et, comme si son rêve
Me disait: — Sois tranquille, ô père, et sois clément! —
Je sens sa main presser la mienne doucement.

VI

GRAND AGE ET BAS AGE MÊLÉS

I

Mon âme est faite ainsi que jamais ni l'idée,
Ni l'homme, quels qu'ils soient, ne l'ont intimidée;
Toujours mon coeur, qui n'a ni bible ni koran,
Dédaigna le sophiste et brava le tyran;
Je suis sans épouvante étant sans convoitise;
La peur ne m'éteint pas et l'honneur seul m'attise;
J'ai l'ankylose altière et lourde du rocher;
Il est fort malaisé de me faire marcher
Par désir en avant ou par crainte en arrière;
Je résiste à la force et cède à la prière,
Mais les biens d'ici-bas font sur moi peu d'effet;
Et je déclare, amis, que je suis satisfait,
Que mon ambition suprême est assouvie,
Que je me reconnais payé dans cette vie,
Et que les dieux cléments ont comblé tous mes veux.
Tant que sur cette terre, où vraiment je ne veux
Ni socle olympien, ni colonne trajane,
On ne m'ôtera pas le sourire de Jeanne.

II

CHANT SUR LE BERCEAU

Je veille. Ne crains rien. J'attends que tu t'endormes.
Les anges sur ton front viendront poser leurs bouches.
Je ne veux pas sur toi d'un rêve ayant des formes
Farouches;

Je veux qu'en te voyant là, ta main dans la mienne,
Le vent change son bruit d'orage en bruit de lyre.
Et que sur ton sommeil la sinistre nuit vienne

Sourire.

Le poète est penché sur les berceaux qui tremblent;
Il leur parle, il leur dit tout bas de tendres choses,
Il est leur amoureux, et ses chansons ressemblent
Aux roses.

Il est plus pur qu’avril embaumant la pelouse
Et que mai dont l’oiseau vient piller la corbeille;
Sa voix est un frisson d’âme, à rendre jalouse
L’abeille;

Il adore ces nids de soie et de dentelles;
Son coeur a des gaîtés dans la fraîche demeure
Qui font rire aux éclats avec des douceurs telles
Qu’on pleure;

Il est le bon semeur des fraîches allégresses;
Il rit. Mais si les rois et leurs valets sans nombre
Viennent, s’il voit briller des prunelles tigresses
Dans l’ombre,

S’il voit du Vatican, de Berlin ou de Vienne
Sortir un guet-apens, une horde, une bible,
Il se dresse, il n’en faut pas plus pour qu’il devienne
Terrible.

S’il voit ce basilic, Rome, ou cette araignée,
Ignace, ou ce vautour, Bismarck, faire leur crime,
Il gronde, il sent monter dans sa strophe indignée
L’abîme.

C’est dit. Plus de chansons. L’avenir qu’il réclame,
Les peuples et leur droit, les rois et leur bravade,
Sont comme un tourbillon de tempête où cette âme
S’évade.

Il accourt. Reviens, France, à ta fierté première!
Délivrance! Et l'on voit cet homme qui se lève
Ayant Dieu dans le coeur et dans l'oeil la lumière
Du glaive.

Et sa pensée, errante alors comme les proues
Dans l'onde et les drapeaux dans les noires mêlées,
Est un immense char d'aurore avec des roues
Ailées.

III

LA CICATRICE

Une croûte assez laide est sur la cicatrice.
Jeanne l'arrache, et saigne, et c'est là son caprice;
Elle arrive, montrant son doigt presque en lambeau.
— J'ai, me dit-elle, ôté la peau de mon bobo. —
Je la gronde, elle pleure, et, la voyant en larmes,
Je deviens plat. — Faisons la paix, je rends les armes,
Jeanne, à condition que tu me souriras. —
Alors la douce enfant s'est jetée en mes bras,
Et m'a dit, de son air indulgent et suprême:
— Je ne me ferai plus de mal, puisque je t'aime. —
Et nous voilà contents, en ce tendre abandon,
Elle de ma clémence et moi de son pardon.

IV

UNE TAPE

la petite main sort une grosse tape.
— Grand-père, grondez-la! Quoi! c'est vous qu'elle frappe!
Vous semblez avec plus d'amour la regarder!
Grondez donc! — L'aïeul dit: — Je ne puis plus gronder!
Que voulez-vous? Je n'ai gardé que le sourire.
Quand on a vu Judas trahir, Néron proscrire,

Satan vaincre, et régner les fourbes ténébreux,
Et quand on a vidé son coeur profond sur eux;
Quand on a dépensé la sinistre colère;
Quand, devant les forfaits que l'église tolère,
Que la chaire salue et que le prêtre admet,
On a rugi, debout sur quelque âpre sommet;
Quand sur l'invasion monstrueuse du parthe,
Quand sur les noirs serments vomis par Bonaparte,
Quand sur l'assassinat des lois et des vertus,
Sur Paris sans Barbès, sur Rome sans Brutus,
Sur le tyran qui flotte et sur l'état qui sombre,
Triste, on a fait planer l'immense strophe sombre;
Quand on a remué le plafond du cachot;
Lorsqu'on a fait sortir tout le bruit de là-haut,
Les imprécations, les éclairs, les huées
De la caverne affreuse et sainte des nuées;
Lorsqu'on a, dans des jours semblables à des nuits,
Roulé toutes les voix du gouffre, les ennuis
Et les cris, et les pleurs pour la France trahie,
Et l'ombre, et Juvénal, augmenté d'Isaïe,
Et des écroulements d'iambes furieux
Ainsi que des rochers de haine dans les cieux;
Quand on a châtié jusqu'aux morts dans leurs tombes;
Lorsqu'on a puni l'aigle à cause des colombes,
Et souffleté Nemrod, César, Napoléon,
Qu'on a questionné même le Panthéon,
Et fait trembler parfois cette haute bâtisse;
Quand on a fait sur terre et sous terre justice,
Et qu'on a nettoyé de miasmes l'horizon,
Dame! on rentre un peu las, c'est vrai, dans sa maison;
On ne se fâche pas des mouches familières;
Les légers coups de bec qui sortent des volières,
Le doux rire moqueur des nids mélodieux,
Tous ces petits démons et tous ces petits dieux
Qu'on appelle marmots et bambins, vous enchantent;
Même quand on les sent vous mordre, on croit qu'ils chantent.
Le pardon, quel repos! Soyez Dante et Caton

Pour les puissants, mais non pour les petits. Va-t-on Faire la grosse voix contre ce frais murmure?
Va-t-on pour les moineaux endosser son armure?
Bah! contre de l'aurore est-ce qu'on se défend?
Le tonnerre chez lui doit être bon enfant.

V

Ma Jeanne, dont je suis doucement insensé,
Étant femme, se sent reine; tout l'A B C
Des femmes, c'est d'avoir des bras blancs, d'être belles,
De courber d'un regard les fronts les plus rebelles,
De savoir avec rien, des bouquets, des chiffons,
Un sourire, éblouir les coeurs les plus profonds,
D'être, à côté de l'homme ingrat, triste et morose,
Douces plus que l'azur, roses plus que la rose;
Jeanne le sait; elle a trois ans, c'est l'âge mûr;
Rien ne lui manque; elle est la fleur de mon vieux mur,
Ma contemplation, mon parfum, mon ivresse;
Ma strophe, qui près d'elle a l'air d'une pauvresse,
L'implore, et reçoit d'elle un rayon; et l'enfant
Sait déjà se parer d'un chapeau triomphant,
De beaux souliers vermeils, d'une robe étonnante;
Elle a des mouvements de mouche frissonnante;
Elle est femme, montrant ses rubans bleus ou verts,
Et sa fraîche toilette, et son âme au travers;
Elle est de droit céleste et par devoir jolie;
Et son commencement de règne est ma folie.

VI

Jeanne était au pain sec dans le cabinet noir,
Pour un crime quelconque, et, manquant au devoir,
J'allai voir la proscrite en pleine forfaiture,
Et lui glissai dans l'ombre un pot de confiture
Contraire aux lois. Tous ceux sur qui, dans ma cité,
Repose le salut de la société

S’indignèrent, et Jeanne a dit d’une voix douce:
— Je ne toucherai plus mon nez avec mon pouce;
Je ne me ferai plus griffer par le minet.
Mais on s’est recrié: — Cette enfant vous connaît;
Elle sait à quel point vous êtes faible et lâche.
Elle vous voit toujours rire quand on se fâche.
Pas de gouvernement possible. A chaque instant
L’ordre est troublé par vous; le pouvoir se détend;
Plus de règle. L’enfant n’a plus rien qui l’arrête.
Vous démolissez tout. — Et j’ai baissé la tête,
Et j’ai dit: — Je n’ai rien à répondre à cela,
J’ai tort. Oui, c’est avec ces indulgences-là
Qu’on a toujours conduit les peuples à leur perte.
Qu’on me mette au pain sec. — Vous le méritez, certe,
On vous y mettra. — Jeanne alors, dans son coin noir,
M’a dit tout bas, levant ses yeux si beaux à voir,
Pleins de l’autorité des douces créatures:
— Eh bien’ moi, je t’irai porter des confitures.

CHANSON: POUR FAIRE DANSER EN ROND

LES PETITS ENFANTS

Grand bal sous le tamarin.
On danse et l’on tambourine.
Tout bas parlent, sans chagrin,
Mathurin à Mathurine,
Mathurine à Mathurin.

C’est le soir, quel joyeux train!
Chantons à pleine poitrine
Au bal plutôt qu’au lutrin.
Mathurin a Mathurine,
Mathurine a Mathurin.

Découpé comme au burin,
L’arbre, au bord de l’eau marine,
Est noir sur le ciel serein.
Mathurin a Mathurine,
Mathurine a Mathurin.

Dans le bois rôde Isengrin.
Le magister endoctrine
Un moineau pillant le grain.
Mathurin a Mathurine,
Mathurine a Mathurin.

Broutant l’herbe brin à brin,
Le lièvre a dans la narine
L’appétit du romarin,
Mathurin a Mathurine,
Mathurine a Mathurin.

Sous l’ormeau le pèlerin
Demande à la pèlerine

Un baiser pour un quatrain.
Mathurin a Mathurine,
Mathurine a Mathurin.

Derrière un pli de terrain,
Nous entendons la clarine
Du cheval d’un voiturin.
Mathurin a Mathurine,
Mathurine a Mathurin.

VIII

LE POT CASSÉ

Ô ciel! toute la Chine est par terre en morceaux!
Ce vase pâle et doux comme un reflet des eaux,
Couverts d’oiseaux, de fleurs, de fruits, et des mensonges
De ce vague idéal qui sort du bleu des songes,
De ce vase unique, étrange, impossible, engourdi,
Gardant sur lui le clair de lune en plein midi,
Qui paraissait vivant, où luisait une flamme,
Qui semblait presque un monstre et semblait presque une âme,
Mariette, en faisant la chambre, l’a poussé
Du coude par mégarde, et le voilà brisé!
Beau vase! Sa rondeur était de rêves pleine,
Des boeufs d’or y broutaient des prés de porcelaine.
Je l’aimais, je l’avais acheté sur les quais,
Et parfois aux marmots pensifs je l’expliquais.
Voici l’Yak; voici le singe quadrumane;
Ceci c’est un docteur peut-être, ou bien un âne;
Il dit la messe, à moins qu’il ne dise hi-han;
Ça c’est un mandarin qu’on nomme aussi kohan;
Il faut qu’il soit savant, puisqu’il a ce gros ventre.
Attention, ceci, c’est le tigre en son antre,
Le hibou dans son trou, le roi dans son palais,
Le diable en son enfer; voyez comme ils sont laids!
Les monstres, c’est charmant, et les enfants le sentent.
Des merveilles qui sont des bêtes les enchantent.
Donc, je tenais beaucoup à ce vase. Il est mort.
J’arrivai furieux, terrible, et tout d’abord:
— Qui donc a fait cela? criai-je. Sombre entrée!
Jeanne alors, remarquant Mariette effarée,
Et voyant ma colère et voyant son effroi,
M’a regardé d’un air d’ange, et m’a dit: — C’est moi.

IX

Et Jeanne à Mariette a dit: — Je savais bien
Qu'en répondant c'est moi, papa ne dirait rien.
Je n'ai pas peur de lui puisqu'il est mon grand-père.
Vois-tu, papa n'a pas le temps d'être en colère,
Il n'est jamais beaucoup fâché, parce qu'il faut
Qu'il regarde les fleurs, et quand il fait bien chaud
Il nous dit: N'allez pas au grand soleil nu-tête,
Et ne vous laissez pas piquer par une bête,
Courez, ne tirez pas le chien par son collier,
Prenez garde aux faux pas dans le grand escalier,
Et ne vous cognez pas contre les coins des marbres.
Jouez. Et puis après il s'en va dans les arbres.

X

Tout pardonner, c'est trop; tout donner, c'est beaucoup!
Eh bien, je donne tout et je pardonne tout
Aux petits; et votre oeil sévère me contemple.
Toute cette clémence est de mauvais exemple.
Faire de l'amnistie en chambre est périlleux.
Absoudre des forfaits commis par des yeux bleus
Et par des doigts vermeils et purs, c'est effroyable.
Si cela devenait contagieux, que diable!
Il faut un peu songer à la société.
La férocité sied à la paternité;
Le sceptre doit avoir la trique pour compagne;
L'idéal, c'est un Louvre appuyé sur un bagne;
Le bien doit être fait par une main de fer.
Quoi! si vous étiez Dieu, vous n'auriez pas d'enfer?
Presque pas. Vous croyez que je serais bien aise
De voir mes enfants cuire au fond d'une fournaise?
Eh bien! non. Ma foi non! J'en fais mea-culpa;
Plutôt que Sabaoth je serais Grand-papa.
Plus de religion alors? Comme vous dites.
Plus de société? Retour aux troglodytes,
Aux sauvages, aux gens vêtus de peaux de loups?
Non, retour au vrai Dieu, distinct du Dieu jaloux,

Retour à la sublime innocence première,
Retour à la raison, retour à la lumière!
Alors, vous êtes fou, grand-père. J'y consens.
Tenez, messieurs les forts et messieurs les puissants,
Défiez-vous de moi, je manque de vengeance.
Qui suis-je? Le premier venu, plein d'indulgence,
Préférant la jeune aube à l'hiver pluvieux,
Homme ayant fait des lois, mais repentant et vieux,
Qui blâme quelquefois, mais qui jamais ne damne,
Autorité foulée aux petits pieds de Jeanne,
Pas sûr de tout savoir, en doutant même un peu,
Toujours tenté d'offrir aux gens sans feu ni lieu
Un coin du toit, un coin du foyer, moins sévère
Aux péchés qu'on honnit qu'aux forfaits qu'on révère,
Capable d'avouer les êtres sans aveu.
Ah! ne m'élevez pas au grade de bon Dieu!
Voyez-vous, je ferais toutes sortes de choses
Bizarres; je rirais; j'aurais pitié des roses,
Des femmes, des vaincus, des faibles, des tremblants;
Mes rayons seraient doux comme des cheveux blancs;
J'aurais un arrosoir assez vaste pour faire
Naître des millions de fleurs dans toute sphère,
Partout, et pour éteindre au loin le triste enfer:
Lorsque je donnerais un ordre, il serait clair;
Je cacherais le cerf aux chiens flairant sa piste;
Qu'un tyran pût jamais se nommer mon copiste,
Je ne le voudrais pas; je dirais: Joie à tous!
Mes miracles seraient ceci: — Les hommes doux. —
Jamais de guerre. — Aucun fléau. — Pas de déluge .
— Un croyant dans le prêtre, un juste dans le juge. -
Je serais bien coiffé de brouillard, étant Dieu,
C'est convenable; mais je me fâcherais peu,
Et je ne mettrais point de travers mon nuage
Pour un petit enfant qui ne serait pas sage;
Quand j'offrirais le ciel à vous, fils de Japhet,
On verrait que je sais comment le ciel est fait;
Je n'annoncerais point que les nocturnes toiles

Laisseraient pêle-mêle un jour choir les étoiles,
Parce que j’aurais peur, si je vous disais ça,
De voir Newton pousser le coude à Spinosa;
Je ferais à Veuillot le tour épouvantable
D’inviter Jésus-Christ et Voltaire à ma table.
Et de faire verser mon meilleur vin, hélas,
Par l’ami de Lazare à l’ami de Calas;
J’aurais dans mon éden, jardin à large porte,
Un doux water-closet mystérieux, de sorte
Qu’on puisse au paradis mettre le Syllabus;
Je dirais aux rois: Rois, vous êtes des abus,
Disparaissez J’irais, clignant de la paupière,
Rendre aux pauvres leurs sous sans le dire à Saint-Pierre,
Et, sournois, je ferais des trous à son panier
Sous l’énorme tas d’or qu’il nomme son denier;
Je dirais à l’abbé Dupanloup: Moins de zèle!
Vous voulez à la Vierge ajouter la Pucelle,
C’est cumuler, monsieur l’évêque; apaisez-vous.
Un Jéhovah trouvant que le peuple à genoux
Ne vaut pas l’homme droit et debout, tête haute,
Ce serait moi. J’aurais un pardon pour la faute,
Mais je dirais: Tâchez de rester innocents.
Et je demanderais aux prêtres, non l’encens,
Mais la vertu. J’aurais de la raison. En somme,
Si j’étais le bon Dieu, je serais un bon homme.

VII

L’IMMACULÉE CONCEPTION

L’IMMACULÉE CONCEPTION

Ô Vierge sainte, conçue sans péché!
(Prière chrétienne.)

L’enfant partout. Ceci se passe aux Tuileries.
Plusieurs Georges, plusieurs Jeannes, plusieurs Maries;

Un qui tette un qui dort; dans l’arbre un rossignol;
Un grand déjà rêveur qui voudrait voir Guignol;
Une fille essayant ses dents dans une pomme;
Toute la matinée adorable de l’homme;
L’aube et polichinelle; on court, on jase, on rit;
On parle à sa poupée, elle a beaucoup d’esprit;
On mange des gâteaux et l’on saute à la corde.
On me demande un sou pour un pauvre; j’accorde
Un franc; merci, grand-père! et l’on retourne au jeu,
Et l’on grimpe, et l’on danse, et l’on chante. Ô ciel bleu!
C’est toi le cheval. Bien. Tu traînes la charrette,
Moi je suis le cocher. A gauche; à droite; arrête.
Jouons aux quatre coins. Non; à colin-maillard.
Leur clarté sur son banc réchauffe le vieillard.
Les bouches des petits sont de murmures pleines,
Ils sont vermeils, ils ont plus de fraîches haleines
Que n’en ont les rosiers de mai dans les ravins,
Et l’aurore frissonne en leurs cheveux divins.
Tout cela c’est charmant. — Tout cela c’est horrible!
C’est le péché!

Lisez nos missels, notre bible,
L’abbé Pluche, saint Paul, par Trublet annoté,
Veuillot, tout ce qui fait sur terre autorité.
Une conception seule est immaculée;
Tous les berceaux sont noirs, hors la crèche étoilée;
Ce grand lit de l’abîme, hyménée, est taché.
Où l’homme dit Amour! le ciel répond Péché!
Tout est souillure, et qui le nie est un athée.
Toute femme est la honte, une seule exceptée.

Ainsi ce tas d’enfants est un tas de forfaits!
Oiseau qui fais ton nid, c’est le mal que tu fais.
Ainsi l’ombre sourit d’une façon maligne
Sur la douce couvée. Ainsi le bon Dieu cligne
Des yeux avec le diable et dit: Prends-moi cela!
Et c’est mon crime, ô ciel, l’innocent que voilà!

Ainsi ce tourbillon de lumière et de joie,
L’enfance, ainsi l’essaim d’âmes que nous envoie
L’amour mystérieux qu’avril épanouit,
Ces constellations d’anges dans notre nuit,
Ainsi la bouche rose, ainsi la tête blonde,
Ainsi cette prunelle aussi claire que l’onde,
Ainsi ces petits pieds courant dans le gazon,
Cette cohue aimable emplissant l’horizon
Et dont le grand soleil qui rit semble être l’hôte,
C’est le fourmillement monstrueux de la faute!
Péché! Péché! Le mal est dans les nouveau-nés.
Oh! quel sinistre affront! Prêtres infortunés!

Au milieu de la vaste aurore ils sont funèbres;
Derrière eux vient la chute informe des ténèbres.
Dans les plis de leur dogme ils ont la sombre nuit.
Le couple a tort, le fruit est vil, le germe nuit.
De l’enfant qui la souille une mère est suivie.
Ils sont les justiciers de ce crime, la vie.
Malheur! pas un hymen, non, pas même le leur,
Pas même leur autel n’est pur. Malheur! malheur!
Ô femmes, sur vos fronts ils mettent d’affreux doutes.
Le couronnement d’une est l’outrage de toutes.
Démence! ce sont eux les désobéissants.
On ne sait quel crachat se mêle à leur encens.
Ô la profonde insulte! ils jettent l’anathème
Sur l’oeil qui dit: je vois! sur le coeur qui dit: j’aime!
Sur l’âme en fête et l’arbre en fleur et l’aube en feu,
Et sur l’immense joie éternelle de Dieu
Criant: Je suis le père! et sans borne et sans voile
Semant l’enfant sur terre et dans le ciel l’étoile!

LES GRIFFONNAGES DE L’ÉCOLIER

LES GRIFFONNAGES DE L’ÉCOLIER

Charle a fait des dessins sur son livre de classe.
Le thème est fatigant au point, qu'étant très lasse,
La plume de l'enfant n'a pu se reposer
Qu'en faisant ce travail énorme: improviser
Dans un livre, partout, en haut, en bas, des fresques,
Comme on en voit aux murs des alhambras moresques,
Des taches d'encre, ayant des aspects d'animaux,
Qui dévorent la phrase et qui rongent les mots,
Et, le texte mangé, viennent mordre les marges.
Le nez du maître flotte au milieu de ces charges.
Troublant le clair-obscur du vieux latin toscan,
Dans la grande satire où Rome est au carcan,
Sur César, sur Brutus. sur les hautes mémoires,
Charle a tranquillement dispersé ses grimoires.
Ce chevreau, le caprice, a grimpé sur les vers.
Le livre, c'est l'endroit; l'écolier, c'est l'envers.
Sa gaîté s'est mêlée, espiègle, aux stigmates
Du vengeur qui voulait s'enfuir chez les Sarmates.
Les barbouillages sont étranges, profonds, drus.
Les monstres! Les voilà perchés, l'un sur Codrus,
L'autre sur Néron. L'autre égratigne un dactyle.
Un pâté fait son nid dans les branches du style.
Un âne, qui ressemble à monsieur Nisard, brait,
Et s'achève en hibou dans l'obscure forêt;
L'encrier sur lui coule, et, la tête inondée
De cette pluie, il tient dans sa patte un spondée.
Partout la main du rêve a tracé le dessin;
Et c'est ainsi qu'au gré de l'écolier, l'essaim
Des griffonnages, horde hostile aux belles-lettres,
S'est envolé parmi les sombres hexamètres.
Jeu! songe! on ne sait quoi d'enfantin, s'enlaçant
Au poème, lui donne un ineffable accent,
Commente le chef-d'oeuvre, et l'on sent l'harmonie
D'une naïveté complétant un génie.
C'est un géant ayant sur l'épaule un marmot.
Charle invente une fleur qu'il fait sortir d'un mot,

Ou lâche un farfadet ailé dans la broussaille
Du rythme effarouché qui s’écarte et tressaille.
Un rond couvre une page. Est-ce un dôme? est-ce un oeuf?
Une belette en sort qui peut-être est un boeuf.
Le gribouillage règne, et sur chaque vers pose
Les végétations de la métamorphose.
Charle a sur ce latin fait pousser un hallier.
Grâce à lui, ce vieux texte est un lieu singulier
Où le hasard, l’ennui, le lazzi, la rature
Dressent au second plan leur vague architecture.
Son encre a fait la nuit sur le livre étoilé.
Et pourtant, par instants, ce noir réseau brouillé,
A travers ses rameaux, ses porches, ses pilastres,
Laisse passer l’idée et laisse voir les astres.

C’est de cette façon que Charle a travaillé
Au dur chef-d’oeuvre antique, et qu’au bronze rouillé
Il a plaqué le lierre, et dérangé la masse
Du masque énorme avec une folle grimace.
Il s’est bien amusé. Quel bonheur d’écolier!
Traiter un fier génie en monstre familier!
Être avec ce lion comme avec un caniche!
Aux pédants, groupe triste et laid, faire une niche!
Rendre agréable aux yeux, réjouissant, malin,
Un livre estampillé par monsieur Delalain!
Gai, bondir à pieds joints par-dessus un poème!
Charle est très satisfait de son oeuvre, et lui-même
— L’oiseau voit le miroir et ne voit pas la glu —
Il s’admire.

Un guetteur survient, homme absolu.
Dans son oeil terne luit le pensum insalubre,
Sa lèvre aux coins baissés porte en son pli lugubre
Le rudiment, la loi, le refus des congés,
Et l’auguste fureur des textes outragés.
L’enfance veut des fleurs; on lui donne la roche.
Hélas! c’est le censeur du collège. Il approche,

Jette au livre un regard funeste, et dit, hautain:
— Fort bien. Vous copierez mille vers ce matin
Pour manque de respect à vos livres d’étude. —
Et ce geôlier s’en va, laissant là ce Latude.
Or c’est précisément la récréation.
Être à neuf ans Tantale, Encelade, Ixion!
Voir autrui jouer! Être un banni, qu’on excepte!
Tourner du châtiment la manivelle inepte!
Soupirer sous l’ennui, devant les cieux ouverts,
Et sous cette montagne affreuse, mille vers!
Charles sanglote, et dit: — Ne pas jouer aux barres!
Copier du latin! Je suis chez les barbares. —
C’est midi; le moment où sur l’herbe on s’assied,
L’heure sainte où l’on doit sauter à cloche-pied;
L’air est chaud, les taillis sont verts, et la fauvette
S’y débarbouille, ayant la source pour cuvette;
La cigale est là-bas qui chante dans le blé.
L’enfant a droit aux champs. Charles songe accablé
Devant le livre, hélas, tout noirci par ses crimes.
Il croit confusément ouïr gronder les rimes
D’un Boileau, qui s’entr’ouvre et bâille à ses côtés;
Tous ces bouquins lui font l’effet d’être irrités.
Aucun remords pourtant. Il a la tête haute.
Ne sentant pas de honte, il ne voit pas de faute.
— Suis-je donc en prison? Suis-je donc le vassal
De Noël, lâchement aggravé par Chapsal?
Qu’est-ce donc que j’ai fait? — Triste, il voit passer l’heure
De la joie. Il est seul. Tout l’abandonne. Il pleure.
Il regarde, éperdu, sa feuille de papier.
Mille vers! Copier! Copier! Copier!
Copier! Ô pédant, c’est là ce que tu tires
Du bois où l’on entend la flûte des satyres,
Tyran dont le sourcil, sitôt qu’on te répond,
Se fronce comme l’onde aux arches d’un vieux pont!
L’enfance a dès longtemps inventé dans sa rage
La charrue à trois socs pour ce dur labourage.
— Allons! dit-il, trichons les pions déloyaux!

Et, farouche, il saisit sa plume à trois tuyaux.
Soudain du livre immense une ombre, une âme, un homme
Sort, et dit: — Nois, pour ton sequin, blanc ou jaune,
Vil sou que tu crois précieux,
Dieu t'offre une étoile des cieux
Dans la main tendue à l'aumône.

A PROPOS DE LA LOI DITE LIBERTÉ DE L'ENSEIGNEMENT

Prêtres, vous complotez de nous sauver, à l'aide
Des ténèbres, qui sont en effet le remède
Contre l'astre et le jour;
Vous faites l'homme libre au moyen d'une chaîne;
Vous avez découvert cette vertu, la haine,
Le crime étant l'amour.

Vous êtes l'innombrable attaquant le sublime;
L'esprit humain, colosse, a pour tête la cime
Des hautes vérités;
Fatalement ce front qui se dresse dans l'ombre
Attire à sa clarté le fourmillement sombre
Des dogmes irrités.

En vain le grand lion rugit, gronde, extermine;
L'insecte vil s'acharne; et toujours la vermine
Fit tout ce qu'elle put;
Nous méprisons l'immonde essaim qui tourbillonne;
Nous vous laissons bruire, et contre Babylone
Insurger Lilliput.

Pas plus qu'on ne verrait sous l'assaut des cloportes
Et l'effort des cirons tomber Thèbe aux cent portes
Et Ninive aux cent tours,
Pas plus qu'on ne verrait se dissiper le Pinde,

Ou l’Olympe, ou l’immense Himalaya de l’Inde
Sous un vol de vautour,

On ne verra crouler sous vos battements d’ailes
Voltaire et Diderot, ces fermes citadelles,
Platon qu’Horace aimait,
Et ce vieux Dante ouvert, au fond des cieux qu’il dore,
Sur le noir passé, comme une porte d’aurore
Sur un sombre sommet.

Ce rocher, ce granit, ce mont, la pyramide,
Debout dans l’ouragan sur le sable numide,
Hanté par les esprits,
S’aperçoit-il qu’il est, lui l’âpre hiéroglyphe,
Insulté par la fiente ou rayé par la griffe
De la chauve-souris?

Non, l’avenir ne peut mourir de vos morsures.
Les flèches du matin sont divines et sûres;
Nous vaincrons, nous voyons!
Erreurs, le vrai vous tue; ô nuit, le jour te vise;
Et nous ne craignons pas que jamais l’aube épuise
Son carquois de rayons.

Donc, soyez dédaignés sous la voûte éternelle.
L’idéal n’aura pas moins d’aube en sa prunelle
Parce que vous vivrez.
La réalité rit et pardonne au mensonge.
Quant à moi, je serai satisfait, moi qui songe
Devant les cieux sacrés,

Tant que Jeanne sera mon guide sur la terre,
Tant que Dieu permettra que j’aie, ô pur mystère!
En mon âpre chemin,
Ces deux bonheurs où tient tout l’idéal possible,
Dans l’âme un astre immense, et dans ma main paisible
Une petite main.

V

LES ENFANTS PAUVRES

Prenez garde à ce petit être;
Il est bien grand, il contient Dieu.
Les enfants sont, avant de naître,
Des lumières dans le ciel bleu.

Dieu nous les offre en sa largesse;
Ils viennent; Dieu nous en fait don;
Dans leur rire il met sa sagesse
Et dans leur baiser son pardon.

Leur douce clarté nous effleure.
Hélas, le bonheur est leur droit.
S’ils ont faim, le paradis pleure.
Et le ciel tremble, s’ils ont froid.

La misère de l’innocence
Accuse l’homme vicieux.
L’homme tient l’ange en sa puissance.
Oh! quel tonnerre au fond des cieux,

Quand Dieu, cherchant ces êtres frêles
Que dans l’ombre où nous sommeillons
Il nous envoie avec des ailes,
Les retrouve avec des haillons!

VI

AUX CHAMPS

Je me penche attendri sur les bois et les eaux,
Rêveur, grand-père aussi des fleurs et des oiseaux;
J’empêche les enfants de maltraiter les roses;

Je dis: N’effarez point la plante et l’animal;
Riez sans faire peur, jouez sans faire mal.
Jeanne et Georges, fronts purs, prunelles éblouies,
Rayonnent au milieu des fleurs épanouies;
J’erre, sans le troubler, dans tout ce paradis;
Je les entends chanter, je songe, et je me dis
Qu’ils sont inattentifs, dans leurs charmants tapages,
Au bruit sombre que font en se tournant les pages
Du mystérieux livre où le sort est écrit,
Et qu’ils sont loin du prêtre et près de Jésus-Christ.

VII

ENCORE L’IMMACULÉE CONCEPTION

Attendez. Je regarde une petite fille.
Je ne la connais pas; mais cela chante et brille;
C’est du rire, du ciel, du jour, de la beauté,
Et je ne puis passer froidement à côté.
Elle n’a pas trois ans. C’est l’aube qu’on rencontre.
Peut-être elle devrait cacher ce qu’elle montre,
Mais elle n’en sait rien, et d’ailleurs c’est charmant.
Cela, certes, ressemble au divin firmament
Plus que la face auguste et jaune d’un évêque.
Le babil des marmots est ma bibliothèque;
J’ouvre chacun des mots qu’ils disent, comme on prend
Un livre, et j’y découvre un sens profond et grand,
Sévère quelquefois. Donc j’écoute cet ange;
Et ce gazouillement me rassure, me venge,
M’aide à rire du mal qu’on veut me faire, éteint
Ma colère, et vraiment m’empêche d’être atteint
Par l’ombre du hideux sombrero de Basile.
Cette enfant est un coeur, une fête, un asile,
Et Dieu met dans son souffle et Dieu mêle à sa voix
Toutes les fleurs des champs, tous les oiseaux des bois;
Ma Jeanne, qui pourrait être sa soeur jumelle,
Traînait, l’été dernier, un chariot comme elle,

L’emplissait, le vidait, riait d’un rire fou,
Courait. Tous les enfants ont le même joujou;
Tous les hommes aussi. C’est bien, va, sois ravie,
Et traîne ta charrette, en attendant la vie.

Louange à Dieu! Toujours un enfant m’apaisa.
Doux être! voyez-moi les mains que ça vous a!
Allons, remettez donc vos bas, mademoiselle.
Elle est pieds nus, elle est barbouillée, elle est belle;
Sa charrette est cassée, et, comme nous, ma foi,
Elle se fait un char avec n’importe quoi.
Tout est char de triomphe à l’enfant comme à l’homme.
L’enfant aussi veut être un peu bête de somme
Comme nous; il se fouette, il s’impose une loi;
Il traîne son hochet comme nous notre roi;
Seulement l’enfant brille où le peuple se vautre.
Bon, voici maintenant qu’on en amène une autre;
Une d’un an, sa soeur sans doute; un grand chapeau,
Une petite tête, et des yeux! une peau!
Un sourire! oh! qu’elle est tremblante et délicate!
Chef-d’oeuvre, montrez-moi votre petite patte.
Elle allonge le pied et chante... c’est divin.
Quand je songe, et Veuillot n’a pu le dire en vain,
Qu’elles ont toutes deux la tache originelle!
La Chute est leur vrai nom. Chacune porte en elle
L’affreux venin d’Adam (bon style Patouillet);
Elles sont, sous le ciel qu’Eve jadis souillait,
D’horribles péchés, faits d’une façon charmante;
La beauté qui s’ajoute à la faute l’augmente;
Leur grâce est un remords de plus pour le pécheur,
Et leur mère apparaît, noire de leur blancheur;
Ces enfants que l’aube aime et que la fleur encense,
C’est la honte portant ce masque, l’innocence;
Dans ces yeux purs, Trablet l’affirme en son sermon,
Brille l’incognito sinistre du démon;
C’est le mal, c’est l’enfer, cela sort des abîmes!
Soit. Laissez-moi donner des gâteaux à ces crimes.

VIII

MARIÉE ET MÈRE

Voir la Jeanne de Jeanne! oh! ce serait mon rêve!
Il est dans l’ombre sainte un ciel vierge où se lève
Pour on ne sait quels yeux on ne sait quel soleil;
Les âmes à venir sont là; l’azur vermeil
Les berce, et Dieu les garde, en attendant la vie;
Car, pour l’âme aux destins ignorés asservie,
Il est deux horizons d’attente, sans combats,
L’un avant, l’autre après le passage ici-bas;
Le berceau cache l’un, la tombe cache l’autre.
Je pense à cette sphère inconnue à la nôtre
Où, comme un pâle essaim confusément joyeux,
Des flots d’âmes en foule ouvrent leurs vagues yeux;
Puis, je regarde Jeanne, ange que Dieu pénètre,
Et les petits garçons jouant sous ma fenêtre,
Toute cette gaîté de l’âge sans douleur,
Tous ces amours dans l’oeuf, tous ces époux en fleur;
Et je médite; et Jeanne entre, sort, court, appelle,
Traîne son petit char, tient sa petite pelle,
Fouille dans mes papiers, creuse dans le gazon,
Saute et jase, et remplit de clarté la maison;
Son rire est le rayon, ses pleurs sont la rosée.
Et dans vingt ans d’ici je jette ma pensée,
Et de ce qui sera je me fais le témoin,
Comme on jette une pierre avec la fronde au loin.

Une aurore n’est pas faite pour rester seule.

Mon âme de cette âme enfantine est l’aïeule,
Et dans son jeune sort mon coeur pensif descend.

Un jour, un frais matin quelconque, éblouissant,
Épousera cette aube encor pleine d’étoiles;

Et quelque âme, à cette heure errante sous les voiles
Où l’on sent l’avenir en Dieu se reposer,
Profitera pour naître ici-bas d’un baiser
Que se donneront l’une à l’autre ces aurores.
Ô tendre oiseau des bois qui dans ton nid pérores,
Voix éparse au milieu des arbres palpitants
Qui chantes la chanson sonore du printemps
Ô mésange, ô fauvette, ô tourterelle blanche,
Sorte de rêve ailé fuyant de branche en branche,
Doux murmure envolé dans les champs embaumés,
Je t’écoute et je suis plein de songes. Aimez,
Vous qui vivrez! Hymen! chaste hymen! O nature!
Jeanne aura devant elle alors son aventure,
L’être en qui notre sort s’accroît et s’interrompt;
Elle sera la mère au jeune et grave front;
La gardienne d’une aube à qui la vie est due,
Épouse responsable et nourrice éperdue,
La tendre âme sévère, et ce sera son tour
De se pencher, avec un inquiet amour,
Sur le frêle berceau, céleste et diaphane;
Ma Jeanne, ô rêve! azur! contemplera sa Jeanne;
Elle l’empêchera de pleurer, de crier,
Et lui joindra les mains, et la fera prier,
Et sentira sa vie à ce souffle mêlée.
Elle redoutera pour elle une gelée,
Le vent, tout, rien. O fleur fragile du pêcher!
Et, quand le doux petit ange pourra marcher,
Elle le mènera jouer aux Tuileries;
Beaucoup d’enfants courront sous les branches fleuries,
Mêlant l’avril de l’homme au grand avril de Dieu;
D’autres femmes, gaîment, sous le même ciel bleu,
Seront là comme Jeanne, heureuses, réjouies
Par cette éclosion d’âmes épanouies;
Et, sur cette jeunesse inclinant leur beau front,
Toutes ces mères, soeurs devant Dieu, souriront
Dans l’éblouissement de ces roses sans nombre.

Moi je ne serai plus qu’un oeil profond dans l’ombre.

IX

Que voulez-vous? L’enfant me tient en sa puissance;
Je finis par ne plus aimer que l’innocence;
Tous les hommes sont cuivre et plomb, l’enfance est or.
J’adore Astyanax et je gourmande Hector.
Es-tu sûr d’avoir fait ton devoir envers Troie?
Mon ciel est un azur, qui, par instants, foudroie.
Bonté, fureur, c’est là mon flux et mon reflux,
Et je ne suis borné d’aucun côté, pas plus
Quand ma bouche sourit que lorsque ma voix gronde;
Je me sens plein d’une âme étoilée et profonde;
Mon coeur est sans frontière, et je n’ai pas d’endroit
Où finisse l’amour des petits, et le droit
Des faibles, et l’appui qu’on doit aux misérables;
Si c’est un mal, il faut me mettre aux Incurables.
Je ne vois pas qu’allant du ciel au genre humain,
Un rayon de soleil s’arrête à mi-chemin;
La modération du vrai m’est inconnue;
Je veux le rire franc, je veux l’étoile nue.
Je suis vieux, vous passez, et moi, triste ou content,
J’ai la paternité du siècle sur l’instant.
Trouvez-moi quelque chose, et quoi que ce puisse être
D’extrême, appartenant à mon emploi d’ancêtre,
Blâme aux uns ou secours aux autres, je le fais.
Un jour, je fus parmi les vainqueurs, j’étouffais;
Je sentais à quel point vaincre est impitoyable;
Je pris la fuite. Un roc, une plage de sable
M’accueillirent. La Mort vint me parler. “ Proscrit,
Me dit-elle, salut! “ Et quelqu’un me sourit,
Quelqu’un de grand qui rêve en moi, ma conscience.
Et j’aimai les enfants, ne voyant que l’enfance,
Ô ciel mystérieux, qui valût mieux que moi.
L’enfant, c’est de l’amour et de la bonne foi.
Le seul être qui soit dans cette sombre vie

Petit avec grandeur puisqu'il l'est sans envie,
C'est l'enfant.

C'est pourquoi j'aime ces passereaux.

*

Pourtant, ces myrmidons je les rêve héros.
France, j'attends qu'ils soient au devoir saisissables.
Dès que nos fils sont grands, je les sens responsables;
Je cesse de sourire; et je me dis qu'il faut
Livrer une bataille immense à l'échafaud,
Au trône, au sceptre, au glaive, aux Louvres, aux repaires.
Je suis tendre aux petits, mais rude pour les pères.
C'est ma façon d'aimer les hommes faits; je veux
Qu'on pense à la patrie, empoignée aux cheveux
Et par les pieds traînée autour du camp vandale;
Lorsqu'à Rome, à Berlin, la bête féodale
Renaît et rouvre, affront pour le soleil levant,
Deux gueules qui d'ailleurs s'entremordent souvent,
Je m'indigne. Je sens, ô suprême souffrance,
La diminution tragique de la France,
Et j'accuse quiconque a la barbe au menton;
Quoi! ce grand imbécile a l'âge de Danton!
Quoi! ce drôle est Jocrisse et pourrait être Hoche!
Alors l'aube à mes yeux surgit comme un reproche,
Tout s'éclipse, et je suis de la tombe envieux.
Morne, je me souviens de ce qu'ont fait les vieux;
Je songe à l'océan assiégeant les falaises,
Au vaste écroulement qui suit les Marseillaises,
Aux portes de la nuit, aux Hydres, aux dragons,
A tout ce que ces preux ont jeté hors des gonds!
Je les revois mêlant aux éclairs leur bannière;
Je songe à la joyeuse et farouche manière
Dont ils tordaient l'Europe entre leurs poings d'airain;
Oh! ces soldats du Nil, de l'Argonne et du Rhin,
Ces lutteurs, ces vengeurs, je veux qu'on les imite!

Je vous le dis, je suis un aïeul sans limite;
Après l'ange je veux l'archange au firmament;
Moi grand-père indulgent, mais ancêtre inclément,
Aussi doux d'un côté que sévère de l'autre,
J'aime la gloire énorme et je veux qu'on s'y vautre
Quand cette gloire est sainte et sauve mon pays!
Dans les Herculanums et dans les Pompéïs
Je ne veux pas qu'on puisse un jour compter nos villes;
Je ne vois pas pourquoi les âmes seraient viles;
Je ne vois pas pourquoi l'on n'égalerait pas
Dans l'audace, l'effort, l'espoir, dans le trépas,
Les hommes d'Iéna, d'Ulm et des Pyramides;
Les vaillants ont-ils donc engendré les timides?
Non, vous avez du sang aux veines, jeunes gens!
Nos aïeux ont été des héros outrageants
Pour le vieux monde infâme; il reste de la place
Dans l'avenir; soyez peuple et non populace;
Soyez comme eux géants! Je n'ai pas de raisons
Pour ne point souhaiter les mêmes horizons,
Les mêmes nations en chantant délivrées,
Le même arrachement des fers et des livrées,
Et la même grandeur sans tache et sans remords
À nos enfants vivants qu'à nos ancêtres morts!

DEUX CHANSONS

I

CHANSON DE GRAND-PÈRE

Dansez, les petites filles,
Toutes en rond.
En vous voyant si gentilles,
Les bois riront.

Dansez, les petites reines,
Toutes en rond.
Les amoureux sous les frênes
S’embrasseront.

Dansez, les petites belles,
Toutes en rond.
Les bouquins dans les écoles
Bougonneront.

Dansez, les petites belles,
Toutes en rond.
Les oiseaux avec leurs ailes
Applaudiront.

Dansez, les petites fées,
Toutes en rond.
Dansez, de bleuets coiffées,
L’aurore au front.

Dansez, les petites femmes,
Toutes en rond.
Les messieurs diront aux dames
Ce qu’ils voudront.

II

CHANSON D’ANCÊTRE

Parlons de nos aïeux sous la verte feuillée.
Parlons de nos pères, fils! — Ils ont rompu leurs fers,
Et vaincu; leur armure est aujourd’hui rouillée.
Comme il tombe de l’eau d’une éponge mouillée,
De leur âme dans l’ombre il tombait des éclairs,
Comme si dans la foudre on les avait trempées.
Frappez, écoliers,

Avec les épées
Sur les boucliers.

Ils craignaient le vin sombre et les pâles ménades;
Ils étaient indignés, ces vieux fils de Brennus,
De voir les rois passer fiers sous les colonnades,
Les cortèges des rois étant des promenades
De prêtres, de soldats, de femmes aux seins nus,
D’hymnes et d’encensoirs, et de têtes coupées.
Frappez, écoliers,
Avec les épées
Sur les boucliers.

Ils ont voulu, couvé, créé la délivrance;
Ils étaient les titans, nous sommes les fourmis;
Ils savaient que la Gaule enfanterait la France;
Quand on a la hauteur, on a la confiance;
Les montagnes, à qui le rayon est promis,
Songent, et ne sont point par l’aurore trompées.
Frappez, écoliers,
Avec les épées
Sur les boucliers.

Quand une ligue était par les princes construite,
Ils grondaient, et, pour peu que la chose en valût
La peine, et que leur chef leur criât: Tout de suite!
Ils accouraient; alors les rois prenaient la fuite
En hâte, et les chansons d’un vil joueur de luth
Ne sont pas dans les airs plus vite dissipées.
Frappez, écoliers,
Avec les épées
Sur les boucliers.

Lutteurs du gouffre, ils ont découronné le crime,
Brisé les autels noirs, détruit les dieux brigands;
C’est pourquoi, moi vieillard, penché sur leur abîme,
Je les déclare grands, car rien n’est plus sublime

Que l’océan avec ses profonds ouragans,
Si ce n’est l’homme avec ses sombres épopées.
Frappez, écoliers,
Avec les épées
Sur les boucliers.

Hélas! sur leur flambeau, nous leurs fils, nous soufflâmes.
Fiers aïeux! ils disaient au faux prêtre: Va-t’en!
Du bûcher misérable ils éteignaient les flammes,
Et c’est par leur secours que plusieurs grandes âmes,
Mises injustement au bagne par Satan,
Tu le sais, Dieu! se sont de l’enfer échappées.
Frappez, écoliers,
Avec les épées
Sur les boucliers.

Levez vos fronts; voyez oe pur sommet, la gloire,
Ils étaient là; voyez cette cime, l’honneur,
Ils étaient là; voyez ce hautain promontoire,
La liberté; mourir libres fut leur victoire;
Il faudra, car l’orgie est un lâche bonheur,
Se remettre à gravir ces pentes escarpées.
Frappez, chevaliers,
Avec les épées
Sur les boucliers.

JEANNE ENDORMIE. — IV

L’oiseau chante; je suis au fond des rêveries.

Rose, elle est là qui dort sous les branches fleuries,
Dans son berceau tremblant comme un nid d’alcyon,
Douce, les yeux fermés, sans faire attention
Au glissement de l’ombre et du soleil sur elle.
Elle est toute petite, elle est surnaturelle.

Ô suprême beauté de l’enfant innocent!
Moi je pense, elle rêve; et sur son front descend
Un entrelacement de visions sereines;
Des femmes de l’azur qu’on prendrait pour des reines,
Des anges, des lions ayant des airs benins,
De pauvres bons géants protégés par des nains,
Des triomphes de fleurs dans les bois, des trophées
D’arbres célestes, pleins de la lueur des fées,
Un nuage où l’éden apparaît à demi,
Voilà ce qui s’abat sur l’enfant endormi.
Le berceau des enfants est le palais des songes;
Dieu se met à leur faire un tas de doux mensonges;
De là leur frais sourire et leur profonde paix.
Plus d’un dira plus tard: Bon Dieu, tu me trompais.

Mais le bon Dieu répond dans la profondeur sombre:
— Non. Ton rêve est le ciel. Je t’en ai donné l’ombre.
Mais ce ciel, tu l’auras. Attends l’autre berceau;
La tombe. —
Ainsi je songe. Ô printemps! Chante, oiseau!

QUE LES PETITS LIRONT QUAND ILS SERONT GRANDS

I

PATRIE

Ô France, ton malheur m’indigne et m’est sacré.
Je l’ai dit, et jamais je ne me lasserai
De le redire, et c’est le grand cri de mon âme,
Quiconque fait du mal à ma mère est infâme.
En quelque lieu qu’il soit caché, tous mes souhaits
Le menacent; sur terre ou là-haut, je le hais.
César, je le flétris; destin, je le secoue.

Je questionne l’ombre et je fouille la boue;
L’empereur, ce brigand, le hasard, ce bandit,
Eveillent ma colère; et ma strophe maudit
Avec des pleurs sanglants, avec des cris funèbres,
Le sort, ce mauvais drôle errant dans les ténèbres;
Je rappelle la nuit, le gouffre, le ciel noir,
Et les événements farouches, au devoir.
Je n’admets pas qu’il soit permis aux sombres causes
Qui mêlent aux droits vrais l’aveuglement des choses
De faire rebrousser chemin à la raison;
Je dénonce un revers qui vient par trahison;
Quand la gloire et l’honneur tombent dans une embûche,
J’affirme que c’est Dieu lui-même qui trébuche;
J’interpelle les faits tortueux et rampants,
La victoire, l’hiver, l’ombre et ses guet-apens;
Je dis à ces passants quelconques de l’abîme
Que je les vois, qu’ils sont en train de faire un crime,
Que nous ne sommes point des femmes à genoux,
Que nous réfléchissons, qu’ils prennent garde à nous,
Que ce n’est pas ainsi qu’on doit traiter la France,
Et que, même tombée au fond de la souffrance,
Même dans le sépulcre, elle a l’étoile au front.
Je voudrais bien savoir ce qu’ils me répondront.
Je suis un curieux, et je gênerai, certe,
Le destin qu’un regard sévère déconcerte,
Car on est responsable au ciel plus qu’on ne croit.
Quand le progrès devient boiteux, quand Dieu décroît
En apparence, ayant sur lui la nuit barbare,
Quand l’homme est un esquif dont Satan prend la barre,
Il est certain que l’âme humaine est au cachot,
Et qu’on a dérangé quelque chose là-haut.
C’est pourquoi je demande à l’ombre la parole.
Je ne suis pas de ceux dont la fierté s’envole,
Et qui, pour avoir vu régner des ruffians
Et des gueux, cessent d’être à leur droit confiants;
Je lave ma sandale et je poursuis ma route;
Personne n’a jamais vu mon âme en déroute;

Je ne me trouble point parce qu'en ses reflux
Le vil destin sur nous jette un Rosbach de plus;
La défaite me fait songer à la victoire;
J'ai l'obstination de l'altière mémoire;
Notre linceul toujours eut la vie en ses plis;
Quand je lis Waterloo, je prononce Austerlitz.
Le deuil donne un peu plus de hauteur à ma tête.
Mais ce n'est pas assez, je veux qu'on soit honnête
Là-haut, et je veux voir ce que les destins font
Chez eux, dans la forêt du mystère profond,
Car ce qu'ils font chez eux, c'est chez nous qu'on le souffre.
Je prétends regarder face à face le gouffre.
Je sais que l'ombre doit rendre compte aux esprits.
Je désire savoir pourquoi l'on nous a pris
Nos villes, notre armée, et notre force utile;
Et pourquoi l'on filoute et pourquoi l'on mutile
L'immense peuple aimant d'où sortent les clartés;
Je veux savoir le fond de nos calamités,
Voir le dedans du sort misérable, et connaître
Ces recoins où trop peu de lumière pénètre;
Pourquoi l'assassinat du Midi par le Nord,
Pourquoi Paris vivant vaincu par Berlin mort,
Pourquoi le bagne à l'ange et le trône au squelette;
Ô France, je prétends mettre sur la sellette
La guerre, les combats, nos affronts, nos malheurs,
Et je ferai vider leur poche à ces voleurs,
Car juger le hasard, c'est le droit du prophète.
J'affirme que la loi morale n'est pas faite
Pour qu'on souffle dessus là-haut, dans la hauteur,
Et qu'un événement peut être un malfaiteur.
J'avertis l'inconnu que je perds patience;
Et c'est là la grandeur de notre conscience
Que, seule et triste, ayant pour appui le berceau,
L'innocence, le droit des faibles, le roseau,
Elle est terrible; elle a, par ce seul mot: Justice,
Entrée au ciel; et, si la comète au solstice
S'égare, elle pourrait lui montrer son chemin;

Elle requiert Dieu même au nom du genre humain;
Elle est la vérité, blanche, pâle, immortelle;
Pas une force n’est la force devant elle;
Les lois qu’on ne voit pas penchent de son côté;
Oui, c’est là la puissance et c’est là la beauté
De notre conscience, — écoute ceci, prêtre, —
Qu’elle ne comprend pas qu’un attentat puisse être
Par quelqu’un qui serait juste, prémédité;
Oui, sans armes, n’ayant que cette nudité,
Le vrai, quand un éclair tombe mal sur la terre,
Quand un des coups obscurs qui sortent du mystère
Frappe à tâtons, et met les peuples en danger,
S’il lui plaisait d’aller là-haut l’interroger
Au milieu de cette ombre énorme qu’on vénère,
Tranquille, elle ferait bégayer le tonnerre.

II

PERSÉVÉRANCE

N’importe. Allons au but, continuons. Les choses,
Quand l’homme tient la clef, ne sont pas longtemps closes.
Peut-être qu’elle-même, ouvrant ses pâles yeux,
La nuit, lasse du mal, ne demande pas mieux
Que de trouver celui qui saura la convaincre.
Le devoir de l’obstacle est de se laisser vaincre.

L’obscurité nous craint et recule en grondant
Regardons les penseurs de l’âge précédent,
Ces héros, ces géants qu’une même âme anime,
Détachés par la mort de leur travail sublime,
Passer, les pieds poudreux et le front étoilé;
Saluons la sueur du relais dételé;
Et marchons. Nous aussi, nous avons notre étape.
Le pied de l’avenir sur notre pavé frappe;
En route! Poursuivons le chemin commencé;
Augmentons l’épaisseur de l’ombre du passé;

Laissons derrière nous, et le plus loin possible,
Toute l’antique horreur de moins en moins visible.
Déjà le précurseur dans ces brumes brilla;
Platon vint jusqu’ici, Luther a monté là;
Voyez, de grands rayons marquent de grands passages;
L’ombre est pleine partout du flamboiement des sages;
Voici l’endroit profond où Pascal s’est penché.
Criant: gouffre! Jean-Jacque où je marche a marché;
C’est là que, s’envolant lui-même aux cieux, Voltaire,
Se sentant devenir sublime, a perdu terre,
Disant: Je vois! ainsi qu’un prophète ébloui.
Luttons, comme eux; luttons, le front épanoui;
Marchons! un pas qu’on fait, c’est un champ révèle;
Déchiffrons dans les temps nouveaux la loi nouvelle;
Le coeur n’est jamais sourd, l’esprit n’est jamais las,
Et la route est ouverte aux fiers apostolats.

Ô tous! vivez, marchez, croyez! soyez tranquilles.
— Mais quoi! le râle sourd des discordes civiles,
Ces siècles de douleurs, de pleurs, d’adversités,
Hélas! tous ces souffrants, tous ces déshérités,
Tous ces proscrits, le deuil, la haine universelle,
Tout ce qui dans le fond des âmes s’amoncelle,
Cela ne va-t-il pas éclater tout à coup?
La colère est partout, la fureur est partout;
Les cieux sont noirs; voyez, regardez; il éclaire! —
Qu’est-ce que la fureur? qu’importe la colère?
La vengeance sera surprise de son fruit;
Dieu nous transforme; il a pour tâche en notre nuit
L’auguste avortement de la foudre en aurore.

Dieu prend dans notre coeur la haine et la dévore;
Il se jette sur nous des profondeurs du jour,
Et nous arrache tout de l’âme, hors l’amour;
Avec ce bec d’acier, la conscience, il plonge
Jusqu’à notre pensée et jusqu’à notre songe,
Fouille notre poitrine et, quoi que nous fassions,

Jusqu’aux vils intestins qu’on nomme passions;
Il pille nos instincts mauvais, il nous dépouille
De ce qui nous tourmente et de ce qui nous souille;
Et, quand il nous a faits pareils au ciel béni,
Bons et purs, il s’envole, et rentre à l’infini;
Et, lorsqu’il a passé sur nous, l’âme plus grande
Sent qu’elle ne hait plus, et rend grâce, et demande:
Qui donc m’a prise ainsi dans ses serres de feu?
Et croit que c’est un aigle, et comprend que c’est Dieu.

III

PROGRÈS

En avant, grande marche humaine!
Peuple, change de région.
Ô larve, deviens phénomène;
Ô troupeau, deviens légion.
Cours, aigle, où tu vois l’aube éclore.
L’acceptation de l’aurore
N’est interdite qu’aux hiboux.
Dans le soleil Dieu se devine;
Le rayon a l’âme divine
Et l’âme humaine à ses deux bouts.

Il vient de l’une et vole à l’autre;
Il est pensée, étant clarté;
En haut archange, en bas apôtre,
En haut flamme, en bas liberté.
Il crée Horace ainsi que Dante,
Dore la rose au vent pendante,
Et le chaos où nous voguons;
De la même émeraude il touche
L’humble plume de l’oiseau-mouche
Et l’âpre écaille des dragons[48].
Prenez les routes lumineuses,
Prenez les chemins étoilés.

Esprits semeurs, âmes glaneuses,
Allez, allez, allez, allez!
Esclaves d'hier, tristes hommes,
Hors des bagnes, hors des sodomes,
Marchez, soyez vaillants, montez;
Ayez pour triomphe la gloire
Où vous entrez, ô foule noire,
Et l'opprobre dont vous sortez!

Homme, franchis les mers. Secoue
Dans l'écume tout le passé;
Allume en étoupe à ta proue
Le chanvre du gibet brisé.
Gravis les montagnes. Écrase
Tous les vieux monstres dans la vase;
Ressemble aux anciens Apollons;
Quand l'épée est juste, elle est pure;
Va donc! car l'homme a pour parure
Le sang de l'hydre à ses talons.

IV

FRATERNITÉ

Je rêve l'équité, la vérité profonde,
L'amour qui veut, l'espoir qui luit, la foi qui fonde,
Et le peuple éclairé plutôt que châtié.
Je rêve la douceur, la bonté, la pitié,
Et le vaste pardon. De là ma solitude.

*

La vieille barbarie humaine a l'habitude
De s'absoudre, et de croire, hélas, que ce qu'on veut,
Prêtre ou juge, on a droit de le faire, et qu'on peut
Ôter sa conscience en mettant une robe.
Elle prend l'équité céleste, elle y dérobe

Ce qui la gêne, y met ce qui lui plaît; biffant
Tout ce qu'on doit au faible, à la femme, à l'enfant,
Elle change le chiffre, elle change la somme,
Et du droit selon Dieu fait la loi selon l'homme.
De là les hommes-dieux, de là les rois-soleils;
De là sur les pavés tant de ruisseaux vermeils;
De là les Laffemas, les Vouglans, les Bâvilles;
De là l'effroi des champs et la terreur des villes,
Les lapidations, les deuils, les cruautés,
Et le front sérieux des sages insultés.

*

Jésus paraît; qui donc s'écrie: Il faut qu'il meure!
C'est le prêtre. Ô douleur! À jamais, à demeure,
Et quoi que nous disions, et quoi que nous songions,
Les euménides sont dans les religions;
Mégère est catholique; Alecton est chrétienne;
Clotho, nonne sanglante, accompagnait l'antienne
D'Arbuez, et l'on entend dans l'église sa voix;
Ces bacchantes du meurtre encourageaient Louvois;
Et les monts étaient pleins du cri de ces ménades
Quand Bossuet poussait Boufflers aux dragonnades.

*

Ne vous figurez pas, si Dieu lui-même accourt,
Que l'antique fureur de l'homme reste court,
Et recule devant la lumière céleste.
Au plus pur vent d'en haut elle mêle sa peste,
Elle mêle sa rage aux plus doux chants d'amour,
S'enfuit avec la nuit, mais rentre avec le jour.
Le progrès le plus vrai, le plus beau, le plus sage,
Le plus juste, subit son monstrueux passage.
L'aube ne peut chasser l'affreux spectre importun.
Cromwell frappe un tyran, Charles; il en reste un,
Cromwell. L'atroce meurt, l'atrocité subsiste.

Le bon sens, souriant et sévère exorciste,
Attaque ce vampire et n’en a pas raison.
Comme une sombre aïeule habitant la maison,
La barbarie a fait de nos coeurs ses repaires,
Et tient les fils après avoir tenu les pères.
L’idéal un jour naît sur l’ancien continent,
Tout un peuple ébloui se lève rayonnant,
Le quatorze juillet jette au vent les bastilles,
Les révolutions, ô Liberté, tes filles,
Se dressent sur les monts et sur les océans,
Et gagnent la bataille énorme des géants,
Toute la terre assiste à la fuite inouïe
Du passé, néant, nuit, larve, ombre évanouie!
L’inepte barbarie attente à ce laurier,
Et perd Torquemada, mais retrouve Carrier.
Elle se trouble peu de toute cette aurore.
La vaste ruche humaine, éveillée et sonore,
S’envole dans l’azur, travaille aux jours meilleurs,
Chante, et fait tous les miels avec toutes les fleurs;
La vieille âme du vieux Caïn, l’antique Haine
Est là, voit notre éden et songe à sa géhenne,
Ne veut pas s’interrompre et ne veut pas finir,
Rattache au vil passé l’éclatant avenir,
Et remplace, s’il manque un chaînon à sa chaîne,
Le père Letellier par le Père Duchêne;
De sorte que Satan peut, avec les maudits,
Rire de notre essai manqué de paradis.
Eh bien, moi, je dis: Non! tu n’es pas en démence,
Mon coeur, pour vouloir l’homme indulgent, bon, immense;
Pour crier: Sois clément! sois clément! sois clément!
Et parce que ta voix n’a pas d’autre enrouement!

*

Tu n’es pas furieux parce que tu souhaites
Plus d’aube au cygne et moins de nuit pour les chouettes;
Parce que tu gémis sur tous les opprimés;

Non, ce n’est pas un fou celui qui dit: Aimez!
Non, ce n’est pas errer et rêver que de croire
Que l’homme ne naît point avec une âme noire,
Que le bon est latent dans le pire, et qu’au fond
Peu de fautes vraiment sont de ceux qui les font.
L’homme est au mal ce qu’est à l’air le baromètre;
Il marque les degrés du froid, sans rien omettre,
Mais sans rien ajouter, et, s’il monte ou descend,
Hélas! la faute en est au vent, ce noir passant.
L’homme est le vain drapeau d’un sinistre édifice;
Tout souffle qui frémit, flotte, serpente, glisse
Et passe, il le subit, et le pardon est dû
À ce haillon vivant dans les cieux éperdu.
Hommes, pardonnez-vous. Ô mes frères, vous êtes
Dans le vent, dans le gouffre obscur, dans les tempêtes;
Pardonnez-vous. Les coeurs saignent, les ans sont courts;
Ah! donnez-vous les uns aux autres ce secours!
Oui, même quand j’ai fait le mal, quand je trébuche
Et tombe, l’ombre étant la cause de l’embûche,
La nuit faisant l’erreur, l’hiver faisant le froid,
Être absous, pardonné, plaint, aimé, c’est mon droit.

Un jour, je vis passer une femme inconnue.
Cette femme semblait descendre de la nue;
Elle avait sur le dos des ailes, et du miel
Sur sa bouche entr’ouverte, et dans ses yeux le ciel.
À des voyageurs las, à des errants sans nombre,
Elle montrait du doigt une route dans l’ombre,
Et semblait dire: On peut se tromper de chemin.
Son regard faisait grâce à tout le genre humain;
Elle était radieuse et douce; et, derrière elle,
Des monstres attendris venaient, baisant son aile,
Des lions graciés, des tigres repentants,
Nemrod sauvé, Néron en pleurs; et par instants
À force d’être bonne elle paraissait folle.
Et, tombant à genoux, sans dire une parole,
Je l’adorai, croyant deviner qui c’était.

Mais elle, — devant l’ange en vain l’homme se tait, —
Vit ma pensée, et dit: Faut-il qu’on t’avertisse?
Tu me crois la pitié; fils, je suis la justice.

V

L’ÂME À LA POURSUITE DU VRAI

I

Je m’en irai dans les chars sombres
Du songe et de la vision;
Dans la blême cité des ombres
Je passerai comme un rayon;
J’entendrai leurs vagues huées;
Je semblerai dans les nuées
Le grand échevelé de l’air;
J’aurai sous mes pieds le vertige,
Et dans les yeux plus de prodige
Que le météore et l’éclair.

Je rentrerai dans ma demeure,
Dans le noir monde illimité.
Jetant à l’éternité l’heure
Et la terre à l’immensité,
Repoussant du pied nos misères,
Je prendrai le vrai dans mes serres
Et je me transfigurerai,
Et l’on ne verra plus qu’à peine
Un reste de lueur humaine
Trembler sous mon sourcil sacré.

Car je ne serai plus un homme;
Je serai l’esprit ébloui
À qui le sépulcre se nomme,
À qui l’énigme répond: Oui.
L’ombre aura beau se faire horrible;

Je m’épanouirai terrible,
Comme Élie à Gethsémani,
Comme le vieux Thalès de Grèce,
Dans la formidable allégresse
De l’abîme et de l’infini.

Je questionnerai le gouffre
Sur le secret universel,
Et le volcan, l’urne de soufre,
Et l’océan, l’urne de sel;
Tout ce que les profondeurs savent,
Tout ce que les tourmentes lavent,
Je sonderai tout; et j’irai
Jusqu’à ce que, dans les ténèbres,
Je heurte mes ailes funèbres
À quelqu’un de démesuré.

Parfois m’envolant jusqu’au faîte,
Parfois tombant de tout mon poids,
J’entendrai crier sur ma tête
Tous les cris de l’ombre à la fois,
Tous les noirs oiseaux de l’abîme,
L’orage, la foudre sublime,
L’âpre aquilon séditieux,
Tous les effrois qui, pêle-mêle,
Tourbillonnent, battant de l’aile,
Dans le précipice des cieux.

La Nuit pâle, immense fantôme
Dans l’espace insondable épars,
Du haut du redoutable dôme,
Se penchera de toutes parts;
Je la verrai lugubre et vaine,
Telle que la vit Antisthène
Qui demandait aux vents: Pourquoi?
Telle que la vit Épicure,
Avec des plis de robe obscure

Flottant dans l’ombre autour de moi.

— Homme! la démence t’emporte,
Dira le nuage irrité.
— Prends-tu la nuit pour une porte?
Murmurera l’obscurité.
L’espace dira: — Qui t’égare?
Passeras-tu, barde, où Pindare
Et David ne sont point passés?
— C’est ici, criera la tempête,
Qu’Hésiode a dit: Je m’arrête!
Qu’Ézéchiel a dit: Assez!

Mais tous les efforts des ténèbres
Sur mon essor s’épuiseront
Sans faire fléchir mes vertèbres
Et sans faire pâlir mon front;
Au sphinx, au prodige, au problème,
J’apparaîtrai, monstre moi-même,
Être pour deux destins construit,
Ayant, dans la céleste sphère,
Trop de l’homme pour la lumière,
Et trop de l’ange pour la nuit.

II

L’ombre dit au poète: — Imite
Ceux que retient l’effroi divin;
N’enfreins pas l’étrange limite
Que nul n’a violée en vain;
Ne franchis pas l’obscure grève
Où la nuit, la tombe et le rêve
Mêlent leurs souffles inouïs,
Où l’abîme sans fond, sans forme,
Rapporte dans sa houle énorme
Les prophètes évanouis.

Tous les essais que tu peux faire
Sont inutiles et perdus.
Prends un culte; choisis; préfère;
Tes voeux ne sont pas entendus;
Jamais le mystère ne s’ouvre;
La tranquille immensité couvre
Celui qui devant Dieu s’enfuit
Et celui qui vers Dieu s’élance
D’une égalité de silence
Et d’une égalité de nuit.

Va sur l’Olympe où Stésichore,
Cherchant Jupiter, le trouva;
Va sur l’Horeb qui fume encore
Du passage de Jéhovah;
Ô songeur, ce sont là des cimes,
De grands buts, des courses sublimes...
On en revient désespéré,
Honteux, au fond de l’ombre noire,
D’avoir abdiqué jusqu’à croire!
Indigné d’avoir adoré!

L’Olympien est de la brume;
Le Sinaïque est de la nuit.
Nulle part l’astre ne s’allume,
Nulle part l’ombre ne bleuit.
Que l’homme vive et s’en contente;
Qu’il reste l’homme; qu’il ne tente
Ni l’obscurité, ni l’éther;
Sa flamme à la fange est unie,
L’homme est pour le ciel un génie,
Mais l’homme est pour la terre un ver.

L’homme a Dante, Shakspeare, Homère;
Ses arts sont un trépied fumant;
Mais prétend-il de sa chimère
Illuminer le firmament?

C’est toujours quelque ancienne idée
De l’Élide ou de la Chaldée
Que l’âge nouveau rajeunit.
Parce que tu luis dans ta sphère,
Esprit humain, crois-tu donc faire
De la flamme jusqu’au Zénith!

Après Socrate et le Portique,
Sans t’en douter, tu mets le feu
À la même chimère antique
Dont l’Inde ou Rome ont fait un dieu;
Comme cet Éson de la fable,
Tu retrempes dans l’ineffable,
Dans l’absolu, dans l’infini,
Quelque Ammon d’Égypte ou de Grèce,
Ce qu’avant toi maudit Lucrèce,
Ce qu’avant toi Job a béni.

Tu prends quelque être imaginaire,
Vieux songe de l’humanité,
Et tu lui donnes le tonnerre,
L’auréole, l’éternité.
Tu le fais, tu le renouvelles;
Puis, tremblant, tu te le révèles,
Et tu frémis en le créant;
Et, lui prêtant vie, abondance,
Sagesse, bonté, providence,
Tu te chauffes à ce néant!

Sous quelque mythe qu’il s’enferme,
Songeur, il n’est point de Baal
Qui ne contienne en lui le germe
D’un éblouissant idéal;
De même qu’il n’est pas d’épine,
Pas d’arbre mort dans la ruine.
Pas d’impur chardon dans l’égout,
Qui, si l’étincelle le touche,

Ne puisse, dans l’âtre farouche,
Faire une aurore tout à coup!

Vois dans les forêts la broussaille,
Culture abjecte du hasard;
Déguenillée, elle tressaille
Au glissement froid du lézard;
Jette un charbon, ce houx sordide
Va s’épanouir plus splendide
Que la tunique d’or des rois;
L’éclair sort de la ronce infâme;
Toutes les pourpres de la flamme
Dorment dans ce haillon des bois.

Comme un enfant qui s’émerveille
De tirer, à travers son jeu,
Une splendeur gaie et vermeille
Du vil sarment qu’il jette au feu,
Tu concentres toute la flamme
De ce que peut rêver ton âme
Sur le premier venu des dieux,
Puis tu t’étonnes, ô poussière,
De voir sortir une lumière
De cet Irmensul monstrueux.

À la vague étincelle obscure
Que tu tires d’un Dieu pervers,
Tu crois raviver la nature,
Tu crois réchauffer l’univers;
Ô nain, ton orgueil s’imagine
Avoir retrouvé l’origine,
Que tous vont s’aimer désormais,
Qu’on va vaincre les nuits immondes,
Et tu dis: La lueur des mondes
Va flamboyer sur les sommets!

Tu crois voir une aube agrandie

S’élargir sous le firmament
Parce que ton rêve incendie
Un Dieu, qui rayonne un moment.
Non. Tout est froid. L’horreur t’enlace.
Tout est l’affreux temple de glace,
Morne à Delphes, sombre à Béthel.
Tu fais à peine, esprit frivole,
En brûlant le bois de l’idole,
Tiédir la pierre de l’autel.

III

Je laisse ces paroles sombres
Passer sur moi sans m’émouvoir
Comme on laisse dans les décombres
Frissonner les branches le soir;
J’irai, moi le curieux triste;
J’ai la volonté qui persiste;
L’énigme traître a beau gronder;
Je serai, dans les brumes louches,
Dans les crépuscules farouches,
La face qui vient regarder.

Vie et mort! ô gouffre! Est-ce un piège
La fleur qui s’ouvre et se flétrit,
L’atome qui se désagrège,
Le néant qui se repétrit?
Quoi! rien ne marche! rien n’avance!
Pas de moi! Pas de survivance!
Pas de lien! Pas d’avenir!
C’est pour rien, ô tombes ouvertes,
Qu’on entend vers les découvertes
Les chevaux du rêve hennir!

Est-ce que la nature enferme
Pour des avortements bâtards
L’élément, l’atome, le germe,

Dans le cercle des avatars?
Que serait donc ce monde immense,
S’il n’avait pas la conscience
Pour lumière et pour attribut?
Épouvantable échelle noire
De renaissances sans mémoire
Dans une ascension sans but!

La larve du spectre suivie,
Ce serait tout! Quoi donc! ô sort,
J’aurais un devoir dans la vie
Sans avoir un droit dans la mort!
Depuis la pierre jusqu’à l’ange,
Qu’est-ce alors que ce vain mélange
D’êtres dans l’obscur tourbillon?
L’aube est-elle sincère ou fausse?
Naître, est-ce vivre? En quoi la fosse
Diffère-t-elle du sillon?

— Mange le pain, je mange l’homme,
Dit Tibère. A-t-il donc raison?
Satan la femme, Ève la pomme,
Est-ce donc la même moisson?
Nemrod souffle comme la bise;
Gengis le sabre au poing, Cambyse
Avec un flot d’hommes démons,
Tue, extermine, écrase, opprime,
Et ne commet pas plus de crime
Qu’un roc roulant du haut des monts!

Oh non! la vie au noir registre,
Parmi le genre humain troublé,
Passe, inexplicable et sinistre,
Ainsi qu’un espion voilé;
Grands et petits, les fous, les sages,
S’en vont, nommés dans les messages
Qu’elle jette au ciel triste ou bleu;

Malheur aux méchants! et la tombe
Est la bouche de bronze où tombe
Tout ce qu'elle dénonce à Dieu.

— Mais ce Dieu même, je le nie;
Car il aurait, ô vain croyant,
Créé sa propre calomnie
En créant ce monde effrayant. —
Ainsi parle, calme et funèbre,
Le doute appuyé sur l'algèbre;
Et moi qui sens frémir mes os,
Allant des langes aux suaires,
Je regarde les ossuaires
Et je regarde les berceaux.

Mort et vie! énigmes austères!
Dessous est la réalité.
C'est là que les Kants, les Voltaires,
Les Euclides ont hésité.
Eh bien! j'irai, moi qui contemple,
Jusqu'à ce que, perçant le temple,
Et le dogme, ce double mur,
Mon esprit découvre et dévoile
Derrière Jupiter l'étoile,
Derrière Jéhovah l'azur!

Car il faut qu'enfin on rencontre
L'indestructible vérité,
Et qu'un front de splendeur se montre
Sous ces masques d'obscurité;
La nuit tâche, en sa noire envie,
D'étouffer le germe de vie,
De toute-puissance et de jour,
Mais moi, le croyant de l'aurore,
Je forcerai bien Dieu d'éclore
À force de joie et d'amour!

Est-ce que vous croyez que l’ombre
A quelque chose à refuser
Au dompteur du temps et du nombre,
À celui qui veut tout oser,
Au poète qu’emporte l’âme,
Qui combat dans leur culte infâme
Les payens comme les hébreux,
Et qui, la tête la première,
Plonge, éperdu, dans la lumière,
À travers leur dieu téne crains rien, mon enfant. Je me nomme
Juvénal. Je suis bon. Je ne fais peur qu’aux grands. —
Charles lève ses yeux pleins de pleurs transparents,
Et dit: — Je n’ai pas peur. — L’homme, pareil aux marbres,
Reprend, tandis qu’au loin on entend sous les arbres
Jouer les écoliers, gais et de bonne foi:
— Enfant, je fus jadis exilé comme toi,
Pour avoir comme toi barbouillé des figures.
Comme toi les pédants, j’ai fâché les augures.
Élève de Jauffret que jalouse Massin,
Voyons ton livre. — Il dit, et regarde un dessin
Qui n’a pas trop de queue et pas beaucoup de tête.
— Qu’est-ce que c’est que ça! — Monsieur, c’est une bête.
— Ah! tu mets dans mes vers des bêtes! Après tout,
Pourquoi pas? puisque Dieu, qui dans l’ombre est debout,
En met dans les grands bois et dans les mers sacrées.
Il tourne une autre page, et se penche: — Tu crées.
Qu’est ceci? Ca m’a l’air fort beau, quoique tortu.
— Monsieur, c’est un bonhomme. — Un bonhomme, dis-tu?
Eh bien, il en manquait justement un. Mon livre
Est rempli de méchants. Voir un bonhomme vivre
Parmi tous ces gens-là me plaît. Césars bouffis,
Rangez-vous! ce bonhomme est dieu. Merci, mon fils. —
Et, d’un doigt souverain, le voilà qui feuillette
Nisard, l’âne, le nez du maître, la belette
Qui peut-être est un boeuf, les dragons, les griffons,
Les pâtés d’encre ailés, mêlés aux vers profonds,
Toute cette gaîté sur son courroux éparse,

Et Juvénal s’écrie ébloui: — C’est très farce!

Ainsi, la grande soeur et la petite soeur,
Ces deux âmes, sont là, jasant; et le censeur,
Obscur comme minuit et froid comme décembre, serait
bien étonné, s’il entrait dans la chambre,
De voir sous le plafond du collège étouffant,
Le vieux poète rire avec le doux enfant.

LES FREDAINES DU GRAND-PÈRE ENFANT

(1811)

PEPITA

Comme elle avait la résille,
D’abord la rime hésita.
Ce devait être Inésille... —
Mais non, c’était Pepita.

Seize ans. Belle et grande fille... — (Ici la rime insista:
Rimeur, c’était Inésille.
Rime, c’était Pepita.)

Pepita... — Je me rappelle!
Oh! le doux passé vainqueur,
Tout le passé, pêle-mêle
Revient à flots dans mon coeur;

Mer, ton flux roule et rapporte
Les varechs et les galets.
Mon père avait une escorte;
Nous habitions un palais;

Dans cette Espagne que j’aime,
Au point du jour, au printemps,

Quand je n’existais pas même,
Pepita — j’avais huit ans —

Me disait: — Fils, je me nomme
Pepa; mon père est marquis. —
Moi, je me croyais un homme,

Étant en pays conquis.

Dans sa résille de soie
Pepa mettait des doublons;
De la flamme et de la joie
Sortaient de ses cheveux blonds.

Tout cela, jupe de moire,
Veste de toréador,
Velours bleu, dentelle noire,
Dansait dans un rayon d’or.

Et c’était presque une femme
Que Pepita mes amours.
L’indolente avait mon âme
Sous son coude de velours.

Je palpitais dans sa chambre
Comme un nid près du faucon,
Elle avait un collier d’ambre,
Un rosier sur son balcon.

Tous les jours un vieux qui pleure
Venait demander un sou;
Un dragon à la même heure
Arrivait je ne sais d’où.

Il piaffait sous la croisée,
Tandis que le vieux râlait
De sa vieille voix brisée:
La charité, s’il vous plaît!

Et la belle au collier jaune,
Se penchant sur son rosier,
Faisait au pauvre l’aumône
Pour la faire à l’officier.

L’un plus fier, l’autre moins sombre,
Ils partaient, le vieux hagard
Emportant un sou dans l’ombre,
Et le dragon un regard.

J’étais près de la fenêtre,
Tremblant, trop petit pour voir,
Amoureux sans m’y connaître,
Et bête sans le savoir.

Elle disait avec charme:
Marions-nous! choisissant
Pour amoureux le gendarme
Et pour mari l’innocent.

Je disais quelque sottise;
Pepa répondait: Plus bas!
M’éteignant comme on attise;
Et, pendant ces doux ébats,

Les soldats buvaient des pintes
Et jouaient au domino
Dans les grandes chambres peintes
Du palais Masserano.

X

ENFANTS, OISEAUX ET FLEURS

I

J’aime un groupe d’enfants qui rit et qui s’assemble;
J’ai remarqué qu’ils sont presque tous blonds, il semble
Qu’un doux soleil levant leur dore les cheveux.
Lorsque Roland, rempli de projets et de voeux,
Était petit, après l’escrime et les parades,
Il jouait dans les champs avec ses camarades
Raymond le paresseux et Jean de Pau; tous trois
Joyeux; un moine un jour, passant avec sa croix,
Leur demanda, c’était l’abbé de la contrée:
— Quelle est la chose, enfants, qui vous plaît déchirée?
— La chair d’un boeuf saignant, répondit Jean de Pau.
— Un livre, dit Raymond. — Roland dit: Un drapeau.

II

Je suis des bois l’hôte fidèle,
Le jardinier des sauvageons.
Quand l’automne vient, l’hirondelle
Me dit tout bas: Déménageons.

Après frimaire, après nivôse,
Je vais voir si les bourgeons frais
N’ont pas besoin de quelque chose
Et si rien ne manque aux forêts.

Je dis aux ronces: Croissez, vierges!
Je dis: Embaume! au serpolet;
Je dis aux fleurs bordant les berges:
Faites avec soin votre ourlet.

Je surveille, entr’ouvrant la porte,

Le vent soufflant sur la hauteur;
Car tromper sur ce qu'il apporte
C'est l'usage de ce menteur.

Je viens dès l'aube, en diligence,
Voir si rien ne fait dévier
Toutes les mesures d'urgence
Que prend avril contre janvier.

Tout finit, mais tout recommence,
Je m'intéresse au procédé
De rajeunissement immense,
Vainement par l'ombre éludé.

J'aime la broussaille mouvante,
Le lierre, le lichen vermeil,
Toutes les coiffures qu'invente
Pour les ruines le soleil.

Quand mai fleuri met des panaches
Aux sombres donjons mécontents,
Je crie à ces vieilles ganaches:
Laissez donc faire le printemps!

III

DANS LE JARDIN

Jeanne et Georges sont là. Le noir ciel orageux
Devient rose, et répand l'aurore sur leurs jeux;
Ô beaux jours! Le printemps auprès de moi s'empresse;
Tout verdit; la forêt est une enchanteresse;
L'horizon change, ainsi qu'un décor d'opéra;
Appelez ce doux mois du nom qu'il vous plaira,
C'est mai, c'est floréal; c'est l'hyménée auguste
De la chose tremblante et de la chose juste,
Du nid et de l'azur, du brin d'herbe et du ciel;

C’est l’heure où tout se sent vaguement éternel;
C’est l’éblouissement, c’est l’espoir, c’est l’ivresse;
La plante est une femme, et mon vers la caresse;
C’est, grâce aux frais glaïeuls, grâce aux purs liserons,
La vengeance que nous poètes nous tirons
De cet affreux janvier, si laid; c’est la revanche
Qu’avril contre l’hiver prend avec la pervenche;
Courage, avril! Courage, ô mois de mai! Ciel bleu,
Réchauffe, resplendis, sois beau! Bravo, bon Dieu!
Ah! jamais la saison ne nous fait banqueroute.
L’aube passe en semant des roses sur sa route.
Flamme! ombre! tout est plein de ténèbres et d’yeux;
Tout est mystérieux et tout est radieux;
Qu’est-ce que l’alcyon cherche dans les tempêtes?
L’amour; l’antre et le nid ayant les mêmes fêtes,
Je ne vois pas pourquoi l’homme serait honteux
De ce que les lions pensifs ont devant eux,
De l’amour, de l’hymen sacré, de toi, nature!
Tout cachot aboutit à la même ouverture,
La vie; et toute chaîne, à travers nos douleurs,
Commence par l’airain et finit par les fleurs.
C’est pourquoi nous avons d’abord la haine infâme,
La guerre, les tourments, les fléaux, puis la femme,
La nuit n’ayant pour but que d’amener le jour.
Dieu n’a fait l’univers que pour faire l’amour.
Toujours, comme un poète aime, comme les sages
N’ont pas deux vérités et n’ont pas deux visages,
J’ai laissé la beauté, fier et suprême attrait,
Vaincre, et faire de moi tout ce qu’elle voudrait;
Je n’ai pas plus caché devant la femme nue
Mes transports, que devant l’étoile sous la nue
Et devant la blancheur du cygne sur les eaux.
Car dans l’azur sans fond les plus profonds oiseaux
Chantent le même chant, et ce chant, c’est la vie.
Sois puissant, je te plains; sois aimé, je t’envie.

IV

LE TROUBLE-FÊTE

Les belles filles sont en fuite
Et ne savent où se cacher.
Brune et blonde, grande et petite,
Elles dansaient près du clocher;

Une chantait, pour la cadence;
Les garçons aux fraîches couleurs
Accouraient au bruit de la danse,
Mettant à leurs chapeaux des fleurs;

En revenant de la fontaine,
Elles dansaient près du clocher.
J’aime Toinon, disait le chêne;
Moi, Suzon, disait le rocher.

Mais l’homme noir du clocher sombre
Leur a crié: — Laides! fuyez! —
Et son souffle brusque a dans l’ombre
Éparpillé ces petits pieds.

Toute la danse s’est enfuie,
Les yeux noirs avec les yeux bleus,
Comme s’envole sous la pluie
Une troupe d’oiseaux frileux.

Et cette déroute a fait taire
Les grands arbres tout soucieux,
Car les filles dansant sur terre
Font chanter les nids dans les cieux.

— Qu’a donc l’homme noir? disent-elles. —
Plus de chants; car le noir témoin
A fait bien loin enfuir les belles,
Et les chansons encor plus loin.

Qu’a donc l’homme noir? — Je l’ignore,
Répond le moineau, gai bandit;
Elles pleurent comme l’aurore.
Mais un myosotis leur dit:

— Je vais vous expliquer ces choses.
Vous n’avez point pour lui d’appas;
Les papillons aiment les roses,
Les hiboux ne les aiment pas.

V

ORA, AMA

Le long des berges court la perdrix au pied leste.

Comme pour l’entraîner dans leur danse céleste,
Les nuages ont pris la lune au milieu d’eux.
Petit Georges, veux-tu? nous allons tous les deux
Nous en aller jouer là-bas sous le vieux saule.

La nuit tombe; on se baigne; et, la faulx sur l’épaule,
Le faucheur rentre au gîte, essuyant sa sueur.
Le crépuscule jette une vague lueur
Sur des formes qu’on voit rire dans la rivière.

Monsieur le curé passe et ferme son bréviaire;
Il est trop tard pour lire, et ce reste de jour
Conseille la prière à qui n’a plus l’amour.
Aimer, prier, c’est l’aube et c’est le soir de l’âme.

Et c’est la même chose au fond; aimer la femme,
C’est prier Dieu; pour elle on s’agenouille aussi.
Un jour tu seras homme et tu liras ceci.
En attendant, tes yeux sont grands, et je te parle,

Mon Georges, comme si je parlais à mon Charle.
Quand l’aile rose meurt, l’aile bleue a son tour.
La prière a la même audace que l’amour,
Et l’amour a le même effroi que la prière.

Il fait presque grand jour encor dans la clairière.
L’angélus sonne au fond de l’horizon bruni.
Ô ciel sublime! sombre édifice infini!
Muraille inexprimable, obscure et rayonnante!

Oh! comment pénétrer dans la maison tonnante?
Le jeune homme est pensif, le vieillard est troublé,
Et devant l’inconnu, vaguement étoilé,
Le soir tremblant ressemble à l’aube frissonnante.

La prière est la porte et l’amour est la clé.

VI

LA MISE EN LIBERTÉ

Après ce rude hiver, un seul oiseau restait
Dans la cage où jadis tout un monde chantait.
Le vide s’était fait dans la grande volière.
Une douce mésange, autrefois familière,
Était là seule avec ses souvenirs d’oiseau.
N’être jamais sans grain, sans biscuit et sans eau,
Voir entrer quelquefois dans sa cage une mouche,
C’était tout son bonheur. Elle en était farouche.
Rien, pas même un serin, et pas même un pierrot.
La cage, c’est beaucoup; mais le désert, c’est trop.
Triste oiseau! dormir seul, et, quand l’aube s’allume,
Être seul à fouiller de son bec sous sa plume!
Le pauvre petit être était redevenu
Sauvage, à faire ainsi tourner ce perchoir nu.
Il semblait par moments s’être donné la tâche
De grimper d’un bâton à l’autre sans relâche;

Son vol paraissait fou; puis soudain le reclus
Se taisait, et, caché, morne, ne bougeait plus.
À voir son gonflement lugubre, sa prunelle,
Et sa tête ployée en plein jour sous son aile,
On devinait son deuil, son veuvage, et l’ennui
Du joyeux chant de tous dans l’ombre évanoui.
Ce matin j’ai poussé la porte de la cage.
J’y suis entré.

Deux mâts, une grotte, un bocage,
Meublent cette prison où frissonne un jet d’eau;
Et l’hiver on la couvre avec un grand rideau.

Le pauvre oiseau, voyant entrer ce géant sombre,
A pris la fuite en haut, puis en bas, cherchant l’ombre,
Dans une anxiété d’inexprimable horreur;
L’effroi du faible est plein d’impuissante fureur;
Il voletait devant ma main épouvantable.
Je suis, pour le saisir, monté sur une table.
Alors, terrifié, vaincu, jetant des cris,
Il est allé tomber dans un coin; je l’ai pris.
Contre le monstre immense, hélas, que peut l’atome?
À quoi bon résister quand l’énorme fantôme
Vous tient, captif hagard, fragile et désarmé?
Il était dans mes doigts inerte, l’oeil fermé,
Le bec ouvert, laissant pendre son cou débile,
L’aile morte, muet, sans regard, immobile,
Et je sentais bondir son petit coeur tremblant.

Avril est de l’aurore un frère ressemblant;
Il est éblouissant ainsi qu’elle est vermeille.
Il a l’air de quelqu’un qui rit et qui s’éveille.
Or, nous sommes au mois d’avril, et mon gazon,
Mon jardin, les jardins d’à côté, l’horizon,
Tout, du ciel à la terre, est plein de cette joie
Qui dans la fleur embaume et dans l’astre flamboie:
Les ajoncs sont en fête, et dorent les ravins

Où les abeilles font des murmures divins;
Penché sur les cressons, le myosotis goûte
À la source, tombant dans les fleurs goutte à goutte;
Le brin d’herbe est heureux; l’âcre hiver se dissout;
La nature parait contente d’avoir tout,
Parfums, chansons, rayons, et d’être hospitalière.
L’espace aime.

Je suis sorti de la volière,
Tenant toujours l’oiseau; je me suis approché
Du vieux balcon de bois par le lierre caché;
Ô renouveau! Soleil! tout palpite, tout vibre,
Tout rayonne; et j’ai dit, ouvrant la main: Sois libre!

L’oiseau s’est évadé dans les rameaux flottants,
Et dans l’immensité splendide du printemps;
Et j’ai vu s’en aller au loin la petite âme
Dans cette clarté rose où se mêle une flamme,
Dans l’air profond, parmi les arbres infinis,
Volant au vague appel des amours et des nids,
Planant éperdument vers d’autres ailes blanches,
Ne sachant quel palais choisir, courant aux branches,
Aux fleurs, aux flots, aux bois fraîchement reverdis,
Avec l’effarement d’entrer au paradis.

Alors, dans la lumière et dans la transparence,
Regardant cette faite et cette délivrance,
Et ce pauvre être, ainsi disparu dans le port,
Pensif, je me suis dit: Je viens d’être la mort.

XI

JEANNE LAPIDÉE

BRUXELLES. — NUIT DU 27 MAI

Je regardai.

Je vis, tout près de la croisée,
Celui par qui la pierre avait été lancée;
Il était jeune; encor presque un enfant, déjà
Un meurtrier.

Jeune homme, un dieu te protégea,
Car tu pouvais tuer cette pauvre petite!
Comme les sentiments humains s'écroulent vite
Dans les coeurs gouvernés par le prêtre qui ment,
Et comme un imbécile est féroce aisément!
Loyola sait changer Jocrisse en Schinderhanne,
Car un tigre est toujours possible dans un âne.
Mais Dieu n'a pas permis, sombre enfant, que ta main
Fit cet assassinat catholique et romain;
Le coup a manqué. Va, triste spectre éphémère,
Deviens de l'ombre. Fuis! Moi, je songe à ta mère.

Ô femme, ne sois pas maudite! Je reçois
Du ciel juste un rayon clément. Qui que tu sois,
Mère, hélas! quel que soit ton enfant, sois bénie!
N'en sois pas responsable et n'en sois pas punie!
Je lui pardonne au nom de mon ange innocent!
Lui-même il fut jadis l'être humble en qui descend
L'immense paradis, sans pleurs, sans deuils, sans voiles,
Avec tout son sourire et toutes ses étoiles.
Quand il naquit, de joie et d'amour tu vibras.
Il dormait sur ton sein comme Jeanne en mes bras;
Il était de ton toit le mystérieux hôte;
C'était un ange alors, et ce n'est pas ta faute,

Ni la sienne, s’il est un bandit maintenant.
Le prêtre, infortuné lui-même, et frissonnant,
À qui nous confions la croissance future,
Imposteur, a rempli cette âme d’imposture;
L’aveugle a dans ce coeur vidé l’aveuglement.
À ce lugubre élève, à ce maître inclément
Je pardonne; le mal a des pièges sans nombre;
Je les plains; et j’implore au-dessus de nous l’ombre.
Pauvre mère, ton fils ne sait pas ce qu’il fait.
Quand Dieu germait en lui, le prêtre l’étouffait.
Aujourd’hui le voilà dans cette Forêt-noire,
Le dogme! Ignace ordonne; il est prêt à tout boire,
Le faux, le vrai, le bien, le mal, l’erreur, le sang!
Tout! Frappe! il obéit. Assassine! il consent.
Hélas! comment veut-on que je lui sois sévère?
Le sommet qui fait grâce au gouffre est le Calvaire.
Mornes bourreaux, à nous martyrs vous vous fiez;
Et nous, les lapidés et les crucifiés,
Nous absolvons le vil caillou, le clou stupide;
Nous pardonnons. C’est juste. Ah! ton fils me lapide,
Mère, et je te bénis. Et je fais mon devoir.
Un jour tu mourras, femme, et puisses-tu le voir
Se frapper la poitrine, à genoux sur ta fosse!
Puisse-t-il voir s’éteindre en lui la clarté fausse,
Et sentir dans son coeur s’allumer le vrai feu,
Et croire moins au prêtre et croire plus à Dieu!

XII

JEANNE ENDORMIE. — III

Jeanne dort; elle laisse, ô pauvre ange banni,
Sa douce petite âme aller dans l'infini;
Ainsi le passereau fuit dans la cerisaie;
Elle regarde ailleurs que sur terre, elle essaie,
Hélas, avant de boire à nos coupes de fiel,
De renouer un peu dans l'ombre avec le ciel.
Apaisement sacré! ses cheveux, son haleine,
Son teint, plus transparent qu'une aile de phalène,
Ses gestes indistincts, son calme, c'est exquis.
Le vieux grand-père, esclave heureux, pays conquis,
La contemple.

Cet être est ici-bas le moindre
Et le plus grand; on voit sur cette bouche poindre
Un rire vague et pur qui vient on ne sait d'où;
Comme elle est belle! Elle a des plis de graisse au cou;
On la respire ainsi qu'un parfum d'asphodèle;
Une poupée aux yeux étonnés est près d'elle,
Et l'enfant par moments la presse sur son coeur.
Figurez-vous cet ange obscur, tremblant, vainqueur,
L'espérance étoilée autour de ce visage,
Ce pied nu, ce sommeil d'une grâce en bas âge.
Oh! quel profond sourire, et compris de lui seul,
Elle rapportera de l'ombre à son aïeul!
Car l'âme de l'enfant, pas encor dédorée,
Semble être une lueur du lointain empyrée,
Et l'attendrissement des vieillards, c'est de voir
Que le matin veut bien se mêler à leur soir.

Ne la réveillez pas. Cela dort, une rose.
Jeanne au fond du sommeil médite et se compose
Je ne sais quoi de plus céleste que le ciel.
De lys en lys, de rêve en rêve, on fait son miel,

Et l’âme de l’enfant travaille, humble et vermeille,
Dans les songes ainsi que dans les fleurs l’abeille.

XIII

L’ÉPOPÉE DU LION

L’ÉPOPÉE DU LION

I

LE PALADIN

Un lion avait pris un enfant dans sa gueule,
Et, sans lui faire mal, dans la forêt, aïeule
Des sources et des nids, il l’avait emporté.
Il l’avait, comme on cueille une fleur en été,
Saisi sans trop savoir pourquoi, n’ayant pas même
Mordu dedans, mépris fier ou pardon suprême;
Les lions sont ainsi, sombres et généreux.
Le pauvre petit prince était fort malheureux;
Dans l’antre, qu’emplissait la grande voix bourrue,
Blotti, tremblant, nourri d’herbe et de viande crue.
Il vivait, presque mort et d’horreur hébété.
C’était un frais garçon, fils du roi d’à côté;
Tout jeune, ayant dix ans, âge tendre où l’oeil brille;
Et le roi n’avait plus qu’une petite fille
Nouvelle-née, ayant deux ans à peine; aussi
Le roi qui vieillissait n’avait-il qu’un souci,
Son héritier en proie au monstre; et la province
Qui craignait le lion plus encor que le prince
Était fort effarée.

Un héros qui passait
Dans le pays fit halte, et dit: Qu’est-ce que c’est?
On lui dit l’aventure; il s’en alla vers l’antre.

*

Un creux où le soleil lui-même est pâle, et n’entre

Qu’avec précaution, c’était l’antre où vivait
L’énorme bête, ayant le rocher pour chevet.

Le bois avait, dans l’ombre et sur un marécage,
Plus de rameaux que n’a de barreaux une cage;
Cette forêt était digne de ce consul;
Un menhir s’y dressait en l’honneur d’Irmensul;
La forêt ressemblait aux halliers de Bretagne;
Elle avait pour limite une rude montagne,
Un de ces durs sommets où l’horizon finit;
Et la caverne était taillée en plein granit,
Avec un entourage orageux de grands chênes;
Les antres, aux cités rendant haines pour haines,
Contiennent on ne sait quel sombre talion.
Les chênes murmuraient: Respectez le lion!

*

Le héros pénétra dans ce palais sauvage;
L’antre avait ce grand air de meurtre et de ravage
Qui sied à la maison des puissants, de l’effroi,
De l’ombre, et l’on sentait qu’on était chez un roi;
Des ossements à terre indiquaient que le maître
Ne se laissait manquer de rien; une fenêtre
Faite par quelque coup de tonnerre au plafond
L’éclairait; une brume où la lueur se fond,
Qui semble aurore à l’aigle et nuit à la chouette,
C’est toute la clarté qu’un conquérant souhaite;
Du reste c’était haut et fier; on comprenait
Que l’être altier couchait sur un lit de genêt
Et n’avait pas besoin de rideaux de guipure,
Et qu’il buvait du sang, mais aussi de l’eau pure,
Simplement, sans valet, sans coupe et sans hanap.
Le chevalier était armé de pied en cap.
Il entra.

*

Tout de suite il vit dans la tanière
Un des plus grands seigneurs couronnés de crinière
Qu’on pût voir, et c’était la bête; elle pensait;
Et son regard était profond, car nul ne sait
Si les monstres des bois n’en sont pas les pontifes;
Et ce lion était un maître aux larges griffes,
Sinistre, point facile à décontenancer.
Le héros approcha, mais sans trop avancer.
Son pas était sonore, et sa plume était rouge.
Il ne fit remuer rien dans l’auguste bouge.
La bête était plongée en ses réflexions.
Thésée entrant au gouffre où sont les Ixions
Et les Sisyphes nus et les flots de l’Averne,
Vit à peu près la même implacable caverne.
Le paladin, à qui le devoir disait: va!
Tira l’épée. Alors le lion souleva
Sa tête doucement d’une façon terrible.

Et le chevalier dit: — Salut, ô bête terrible!
Tu caches dans les trous de ton antre un enfant;
J’ai beau fouiller des yeux ton repaire étouffant,
Je ne l’aperçois pas. Or, je viens le reprendre.
Nous serons bons amis si tu veux me le rendre;
Sinon, je suis lion aussi, moi, tu mourras;
Et le père étreindra son enfant dans ses bras,
Pendant qu’ici ton sang fumera, tiède encore;
Et c’est ce que verra demain la blonde aurore.

Et le lion pensif lui dit: — Je ne crois pas.

*

Sur quoi le chevalier farouche fit un pas,
Brandit sa grande épée, et dit: Prends garde, sire!
On vit le lion, chose effrayante, sourire.
Ne faites pas sourire un lion. Le duel

S’engagea, comme il sied entre géants, cruel,
Tel que ceux qui de l’Inde ensanglantent les jungles.
L’homme allongea son glaive et la bête ses ongles;
On se prit corps à corps, et le monstre écumant
Se mit à manier l’homme effroyablement;
L’un était le vaillant et l’autre le vorace;
Le lion étreignit la chair sous la cuirasse,
Et, fauve, et sous sa griffe ardente pétrissant
Ce fer et cet acier, il fit jaillir le sang
Du sombre écrasement de toute cette armure,
Comme un enfant rougit ses doigts dans une mûre;
Et puis l’un après l’autre il ôta les morceaux
Du casque et des brassards, et mit à nu les os.
Et le grand chevalier n’était plus qu’une espèce
De boue et de limon sous la cuirasse épaisse;
Et le lion mangea le héros. Puis il mit
Sa tête sur le roc sinistre et s’endormit.

II

L’ERMITE

Alors vint un ermite.

Il s’avança vers l’antre;
Grave et tremblant, sa croix au poing, sa corde au ventre,
Il entra. Le héros tout rongé gisait là
Informe, et le lion, se réveillant, bâilla.
Le monstre ouvrit les yeux, entendit une haleine,
Et, voyant une corde autour d’un froc de laine,
Un grand capuchon noir, un homme là dedans,
Acheva de bâiller, montrant toutes ses dents;
Puis, auguste, et parlant comme une porte grince,
Il dit: — Que veux-tu, toi? — Mon roi. — Quel roi? — Mon prince.
— Qui? — L’enfant. — C’est cela que tu nommes un roi!
L’ermite salua le lion. — Roi, pourquoi
As-tu pris cet enfant? — Parce que je m’ennuie.

Il me tient compagnie ici les jours de pluie.
— Rends-le-moi. — Non. Je l'ai. — Qu'en veux-tu faire enfin?
Le veux-tu donc manger? — Dame! si j'avais faim!
— Songe au père, à son deuil, à sa douleur amère.
— Les hommes m'ont tué la lionne, ma mère.
— Le père est roi, seigneur, comme toi. — Pas autant.
S'il parle, c'est un homme, et moi, quand on m'entend,
C'est le lion. — S'il perd ce fils... — Il a sa fille.
— Une fille, c'est peu pour un roi. — Ma famille
A moi, c'est l'âpre roche et la fauve forêt,
Et l'éclair qui parfois sur ma tête apparaît;
Je m'en contente. — Sois clément pour une altesse.
— La clémence n'est pas; tout est de la tristesse.
— Veux-tu le paradis? Je t'offre le blanc-seing
Du bon Dieu. — Va-t'en, vieil imbécile de saint!

L'ermite s'en alla.

LA CHASSE ET LA NUIT

Le lion solitaire,
Plein de l'immense oubli qu'ont les monstres sur terre,
Se rendormit, laissant l'intègre nuit venir.
La lune parut, fit un spectre du menhir,
De l'étang un linceul, du sentier un mensonge,
Et du noir paysage inexprimable un songe;
Et rien ne bougea plus dans la grotte, et, pendant
Que les astres sacrés marchaient vers l'occident
Et que l'herbe abritait la taupe et la cigale,
La respiration du grand lion, égale
Et calme, rassurait les bêtes dans les bois.

Tout à coup des clameurs, des cors et des abois.
Un de ces bruits de meute et d'hommes et de cuivres,
Qui font que brusquement les forêts semblent ivres,
Et que la nymphe écoute en tremblant dans son lit,
La rumeur d'une chasse épouvantable emplit

Toute cette ombre, lac, montagne, bois, prairie,
Et troubla cette vaste et fauve rêverie.
Le hallier s'empourpra de tous les sombres jeux
D'une lueur mêlée à des cris orageux.
On entendait hurler les chiens chercheurs de proies;
Et des ombres couraient parmi les claires-voies.
Cette altière rumeur d'avance triomphait.
On eût dit une armée; et c'était en effet
Des soldats envoyés par le roi, par le père,
Pour délivrer le prince et forcer le repaire,
Et rapporter la peau sanglante du lion.
De quel côté de l'ombre est la rébellion,
Du côté de la bête ou du côté de l'homme?
Dieu seul le sait; tout est le chiffre, il est la somme.

Les soldats avaient fait un repas copieux,
Étaient en bon état, armés d'arcs et d'épieux,
En grand nombre, et conduits par un fier capitaine.
Quelques-uns revenaient d'une guerre lointaine,
Et tous étaient des gens éprouvés et vaillants.
Le lion entendait tous ces bruits malveillants,
Car il avait ouvert sa tragique paupière;
Mais sa tête restait paisible sur la pierre,
Et seulement sa queue énorme remuait.

*

Au dehors, tout autour du grand antre muet,
Hurlait le brouhaha de la foule indignée;
Comme un essaim bourdonne autour d'une araignée,
Comme une ruche autour d'un ours pris au lacet,
Toute la légion des chasseurs frémissait;
Elle s'était rangée en ordre de bataille.
On savait que le monstre était de haute taille,
Qu'il mangeait un héros comme un singe une noix,
Qu'il était plus hautain qu'un tigre n'est sournois,
Que son regard faisait baisser les yeux à l'aigle;

Aussi lui faisait-on l’honneur d’un siège en règle.
La troupe à coups de hache abattait les fourrés;
Les soldats avançaient l’un sur l’autre serrés,
Et les arbres tendaient sur la corde les flèches.
On fit silence, afin que sur les feuilles sèches
On entendît les pas du lion, s’il venait.
Et les chiens, qui selon le moment où l’on est
Savent se taire, allaient devant eux, gueule ouverte,
Mais sans bruit. Les flambeaux dans la bruyère verte
Rôdaient, et leur lumière allongée en avant
Éclairait ce chaos d’arbres tremblant au vent;
C’est ainsi qu’une chasse habile se gouverne.
On voyait à travers les branches la caverne,
Sorte de masse informe au fond du bois épais,
Béante, mais muette, ayant un air de paix
Et de rêve, et semblant ignorer cette armée.
D’un âtre où le feu couve il sort de la fumée,
D’une ville assiégée on entend le beffroi;
Ici rien de pareil; avec un vague effroi,
Tous observaient, le poing sur l’arc ou sur la pique,
Cette tranquillité sombre de l’antre épique;
Les dogues chuchotaient entre eux je ne sais quoi;
De l’horreur qui dans l’ombre obscure se tient coi,
C’est plus inquiétant qu’un fracas de tempête.
Cependant on était venu pour cette bête,
On avançait, les yeux fixés sur la forêt,
Et non sans redouter ce que l’on désirait;
Les éclaireurs guettaient, élevant leur lanterne;
On regardait le seuil béant de la caverne;
Les arbres frissonnaient, silencieux témoins;
On marchait en bon ordre, on était mille au moins...
Tout à coup apparut la face formidable.

*

On vit le lion.
Tout devint inabordable

Sur-le-champ, et les bois parurent agrandis;
Ce fut un tremblement parmi les plus hardis;
Mais, fût-ce en frémissant, de vaillants archers tirent,
Et sur le grand lion les flèches s'abattirent,
Un tourbillon de dards le cribla. Le lion,
Pas plus que sous l'orage Ossa ni Pélion
Ne s'émeuvent, fronça son poil, et grave, austère,
Secoua la plupart des flèches sur la terre;
D'autres, sur qui ces dards se seraient enfoncés,
Auraient certes trouvé qu'il en restait assez,
Ou se seraient enfuis; le sang rayait sa croupe;
Mais il n'y prit point garde, et regarda la troupe;
Et ces hommes, troublés d'être en un pareil lieu,
Doutaient s'il était monstre ou bien s'il était dieu.
Les chiens muets cherchaient l'abri des fers de lance.
Alors le fier lion poussa, dans ce silence,
A travers les grands bois et les marais dormants,
Un de ces monstrueux et noirs rugissements
Qui sont plus effrayants que tout ce qu'on vénère,
Et qui font qu'à demi réveillé, le tonnerre
Dit dans le ciel profond: Qui donc tonne là-bas?

Tout fut fini. La fuite emporte les combats
Comme le vent la brume, et toute cette armée,
Dissoute, aux quatre coins de l'horizon semée,
S'évanouit devant l'horrible grondement.
Tous, chefs, soldats, ce fut l'affaire d'un moment,
Croyant être en des lieux surhumains où se forme
On ne sait quel courroux de la nature énorme,
Disparurent, tremblants, rampants, perdus, cachés.
Et le monstre cria: — Monts et forêts, sachez
Qu'un lion libre est plus que mille hommes esclaves.

*

Les bêtes ont le cri comme un volcan les laves;
Et cette éruption qui monte au firmament

D’ordinaire suffit à leur apaisement;
Les lions sont sereins plus que les dieux peut-être;
Jadis, quand l’éclatant Olympe était le maître,
Les Hercules disaient: — Si nous étranglions
A la fin, une fois pour toutes, les lions?
Et les lions disaient: — Faisons grâce aux Hercules.

Pourtant ce lion-ci, fils des noirs crépuscules,
Resta sinistre, obscur, sombre; il était de ceux
Qui sont à se calmer rétifs et paresseux,
Et sa colère était d’une espèce farouche.
La bête veut dormir quand le soleil se couche;
Il lui déplaît d’avoir affaire aux chiens rampants;
Ce lion venait d’être en butte aux guet-apens;
On venait d’insulter la forêt magnanime;
Il monta sur le mont, se dressa sur la cime,
Et reprit la parole, et, comme le semeur
Jette sa graine au loin, prolongea sa clameur
De façon que le roi l’entendit dans sa ville:

— Roi! tu m’as attaqué d’une manière vile!
Je n’ai point jusqu’ici fait mal à ton garçon;
Mais, roi, je t’avertis, par-dessus l’horizon
Que j’entrerai demain dans ta ville à l’aurore,
Que je t’apporterai l’enfant vivant encore,
Que j’invite à me voir entrer tous tes valets,
Et que je mangerai ton fils dans ton palais.

La nuit passa, laissant les ruisseaux fuir sous l’herbe
Et la nuée errer au fond du ciel superbe.

Le lendemain on vit dans la ville ceci:

L’aurore; le désert; des gens criant merci,
Fuyant, faces d’effroi bien vite disparues;
Et le vaste lion qui marchait dans les rues.

IV

L’AURORE

Le blême peuple était dans les caves épars.
A quoi bon résister? Pas un homme aux remparts;
Les portes de la ville étaient grandes ouvertes.
Ces bêtes à demi divines sont couvertes
D’une telle épouvante et d’un doute si noir,
Leur antre est un si morne et si puissant manoir,
Qu’il est décidément presque impie et peu sage,
Quand il leur plaît d’errer, d’être sur leur passage.
Vers le palais chargé d’un dôme d’or massif
Le lion à pas lents s’acheminait pensif,
Encor tout hérissé des flèches dédaignées;
Une écorce de chêne a des coups de cognées,
Mais l’arbre n’en meurt pas; et, sans voir un archer,
Grave, il continuait d’aller et de marcher;
Et le peuple tremblait, laissant la bête seule.
Le lion avançait, tranquille, et dans sa gueule
Effroyable il avait l’enfant évanoui.

Un petit prince est-il un petit homme? Oui.
Et la sainte pitié pleurait dans les ténèbres.
Le doux captif, livide entre ces crocs funèbres,
Était des deux côtés de la gueule pendant,
Pâle, mais n’avait pas encore un coup de dent;
Et, cette proie étant un bâillon dans sa bouche,
Le lion ne pouvait rugir, ennui farouche
Pour un monstre, et son calme était très furieux;
Son silence augmentait la flamme de ses yeux;
Aucun arc ne brillait dans aucune embrasure;
Peut-être craignait-on qu’une flèche peu sûre,
Tremblante, mal lancée au monstre triomphant,
Ne manquât le lion et ne tuât l’enfant.

*

Comme il l’avait promis par-dessus la montagne,
Le monstre, méprisant la ville comme un bagne,
Alla droit au palais, las de voir tout trembler,
Espérant trouver là quelqu’un à qui parler,
La porte ouverte, ainsi qu’au vent le jonc frissonne,
Vacillait. Il entra dans le palais. Personne.

Tout en pleurant son fils, le roi s’était enfui
Et caché comme tous, voulant vivre aussi lui,
S’estimant au bonheur des peuples nécessaire.
Une bête féroce est un être sincère
Et n’aime point la peur; le lion se sentit
Honteux d’être si grand, l’homme étant si petit;
Il se dit, dans la nuit qu’un lion a pour âme:
— C’est bien, je mangerai le fils. Quel père infâme! —
Terrible, après la cour prenant le corridor,
Il se mit à rôder sous les hauts plafonds d’or;
Il vit le trône, et rien dedans; des chambres vertes,
Jaunes, rouges, aux seuils vides, toutes désertes;
Le monstre allait de salle en salle, pas à pas,
Affreux, cherchant un lieu commode à son repas;
Il avait faim. Soudain l’effrayant marcheur fauve
S’arrêta.

*

Près du parc en fleur, dans une alcôve,
Un pauvre être, oublié dans la fuite, bercé
Par l’immense humble rêve à l’enfance versé,
Inondé de soleil à travers la charmille,
Se réveillait. C’était une petite fille;
L’autre enfant du roi. Seule et nue, elle chantait.
Car l’enfant chante même alors que tout se tait.

Une ineffable voix, plus tendre qu’une lyre,
Une petite bouche avec un grand sourire,

Un ange dans un tas de joujoux, un berceau,
Crèche pour un Jésus ou nid pour un oiseau,
Deux profonds yeux bleus, pleins de clartés inconnues,
Col nu, pieds nus, bras nus, ventre nu, jambes nues,
Une brassière blanche allant jusqu’au nombril.
Un astre dans l’azur, un rayon en avril,
Un lys du ciel daignant sur cette terre éclore,
Telle était cette enfant plus douce que l’aurore;
Et le lion venait d’apercevoir cela.

Il entra dans la chambre, et le plancher trembla.

Par-dessus les jouets qui couvraient une table,
Le lion avança sa tête épouvantable,
Sombre en sa majesté de monstre et d’empereur,
Et sa proie en sa gueule augmentait son horreur.
L’enfant le vit, l’enfant cria: — Frère! mon frère!
Ah! mon frère! — et debout, rose dans la lumière
Qui la divinisait et qui la réchauffait,
Regarda ce géant des bois, dont l’oeil eût fait
Reculer les Typhons et fuir les Briarées.
Qui sait ce qui se passe en ces têtes sacrées?
Elle se dressa droite au bord du lit étroit,
Et menaça le monstre avec son petit doigt.
Alors, près du berceau de soie et de dentelle,
Le grand lion posa son frère devant elle,
Comme eût fait une mère en abaissant les bras,
Et lui dit: — Le voici. Là! ne te fâche pas!

À DES ÂMES ENVOLÉES

Ces âmes que tu rappelles,
Mon coeur, ne reviennent pas.
Pourquoi donc s’obstinent-elles,
Hélas! à rester là-bas?

Dans les sphères éclatantes,
Dans l’azur et les rayons,
Sont-elles donc plus contentes
Qu’avec nous qui les aimions?

Nous avions sous les tonnelles
Une maison près Saint-Leu.
Comme les fleurs étaient belles!
Comme le ciel était bleu!

Parmi les feuilles tombées,
Nous courions au bois vermeil;
Nous cherchions des scarabées
Sur les vieux murs au soleil;

On riait de ce bon rire
Qu’Éden jadis entendit,
Ayant toujours à se dire
Ce qu’on s’était déjà dit;

Je contais la Mère l’Oie;
On était heureux, Dieu sait!
On poussait des cris de joie
Pour un oiseau qui passait.

LES ENFANTS GÂTÉS

En me voyant si peu redoutable aux enfants,
Et si rêveur devant les marmots triomphants,
Les hommes sérieux froncent leurs sourcils mornes.
Un grand-père échappé passant toutes les bornes,
C’est moi. Triste, infini dans la paternité,
Je ne suis rien qu’un bon vieux sourire entêté.
Ces chers petits! Je suis grand-père sans mesure;
Je suis l’ancêtre aimant ces nains que l’aube azure,
Et regardant parfois la lune avec ennui,
Et la voulant pour eux, et même un peu pour lui;
Pas raisonnable enfin. C’est terrible. Je règne
Mal, et je ne veux pas que mon peuple me craigne;
Or, mon peuple, c’est Jeanne et George; et moi, barbon,
Aïeul sans frein, ayant cette rage, être bon,
Je leur fais enjamber toutes les lois, et j’ose
Pousser aux attentats leur république rose;
La popularité malsaine me séduit;
Certe, on passe au vieillard, qu’attend la froide nuit,
Son amour pour la grâce et le rire et l’aurore;
Mais des petits, qui n’ont pas fait de crime encore,
Je vous demande un peu si le grand-père doit
Etre anarchique, au point de leur montrer du doigt,
Comme pouvant dans l’ombre avoir des aventures,
L’auguste armoire où sont les pots de confitures!
Oui, j’ai pour eux, parfois, — ménagères, pleurez! —
Consommé le viol de ces vases sacrés.
Je suis affreux. Pour eux je grimpe sur des chaises!
Si je vois dans un coin une assiette de fraises
Réservée au dessert de nous autres, je dis:

— Ô chers petits oiseaux goulus du paradis,
C’est à vous! Voyez-vous, en bas, sous la fenêtre,
Ces enfants pauvres, l’un vient à peine de naître,
Ils ont faim. Faites-les monter, et partagez. —

Jetons le masque. Eh bien! je tiens pour préjugés,
Oui, je tiens pour erreurs stupides les maximes
Qui veulent interdire aux grands aigles les cimes,
L’amour aux seins d’albâtre et la joie aux enfants.
Je nous trouve ennuyeux, assommants, étouffants.
Je ris quand nous enflons notre colère d’homme
Pour empêcher l’enfant de cueillir une pomme,
Et quand nous permettons un faux serment aux rois.
Défends moins tes pommiers et défends mieux tes droits,
Paysan. Quand l’opprobre est une mer qui monte,
Quand je vois le bourgeois voter oui pour sa honte;
Quand Scapin est évêque et Basile banquier;
Quand, ainsi qu’on remue un pion sur l’échiquier,
Un aventurier pose un forfait sur la France,
Et le joue, impassible et sombre, avec la chance
D’être forçat s’il perd et s’il gagne empereur;
Quand on le laisse faire, et qu’on voit sans fureur
Régner la trahison abrutie en orgie,
Alors dans les berceaux moi je me réfugie,
Je m’enfuis dans la douce aurore, et j’aime mieux
Cet essaim d’innocents, petits démons joyeux
Faisant tout ce qui peut leur passer par la tête,
Que la foule acceptant le crime en pleine fête
Et tout ce bas-empire infâme dans Paris;
Et les enfants gâtés que les pères pourris.

II

LE SYLLABUS

Tout en mangeant d’un air effaré vos oranges,
Vous semblez aujourd’hui, mes tremblants petits anges,

Me redouter un peu;
Pourquoi? c’est ma bonté qu’il faut toujours attendre,
Jeanne, et c’est le devoir de l’aïeul d’être tendre
Et du ciel d’être bleu.

N’ayez pas peur. C’est vrai, j’ai l’air fâché, je gronde,
Non contre vous. Hélas, enfants, dans ce vil monde,
Le prêtre hait et ment;
Et, voyez-vous, j’entends jusqu’en nos verts asiles
Un sombre brouhaha de choses imbéciles
Qui passe en ce moment.

Les prêtres font de l’ombre. Ah! je veux m’y soustraire.
La plaine resplendit; viens, Jeanne, avec ton frère,
Viens, George, avec ta soeur;
Un rayon sort du lac, l’aube est dans la chaumière;
Ce qui monte de tout vers Dieu, c’est la lumière;
Et d’eux, c’est la noirceur.

J’aime une petitesse et je déteste l’autre;
Je hais leur bégaiement et j’adore le vôtre;
Enfants, quand vous parlez,
Je me penche, écoutant ce que dit l’âme pure,
Et je crois entrevoir une vague ouverture
Des grands cieux étoilés.

Car vous étiez hier, ô doux parleurs étranges,
Les interlocuteurs des astres et des anges;
En vous rien n’est mauvais;
Vous m’apportez, à moi sur qui gronde la nue,
On ne sait quel rayon de l’aurore inconnue;
Vous en venez, j’y vais.

Ce que vous dites sort du firmament austère;
Quelque chose de plus que l’homme et que la terre
Est dans vos jeunes yeux;
Et votre voix où rien n’insulte, où rien ne blâme,

Où rien ne mord, s'ajoute au vaste épithalame
Des bois mystérieux.

Ce doux balbutiement me plaît, je le préfère;
Car j'y sens l'idéal; j'ai l'air de ne rien faire
Dans les fauves forêts.
Et pourtant Dieu sait bien que tout le jour j'écoute
L'eau tomber d'un plafond de rochers goutte à goutte
Au fond des antres frais.

Ce qu'on appelle mort et ce qu'on nomme vie
Parle la même langue à l'âme inassouvie;
En bas nous étouffons;
Mais rêver, c'est planer dans les apothéoses,
C'est comprendre; et les nids disent les mêmes choses
Que les tombeaux profonds.

Les prêtres vont criant: Anathème! anathème!
Mais la nature dit de toutes parts: Je t'aime!
Venez, enfants; le jour
Est partout, et partout on voit la joie éclore;
Et l'infini n'a pas plus d'azur et d'aurore
Que l'âme n'a d'amour.

J'ai fait la grosse voix contre ces noirs pygmées;
Mais ne me craignez pas; les fleurs sont embaumées,
Les bois sont triomphants;
Le printemps est la fête immense, et nous en sommes;
Venez, j'ai quelquefois fait peur aux petits hommes,
Non aux petits enfants.

III

ENVELOPPE D'UNE PIÈCE DE MONNAIE DANS UNE QUÊTE FAITE PAR JEANNE

Mes amis, qui veut de la joie?

Moi, toi, vous. Eh bien, donnons tous.
Donnons aux pauvres à genoux;
Le soir, de peur qu'on ne nous voie.

Le pauvre, en pleurs sur le chemin,
Nu sur son grabat misérable,
Affamé, tremblant, incurable,
Est l'essayeur du coeur humain.

Qui le repousse en est plus morne;
Qui l'assiste s'en va content.
Ce vieux homme humble et grelottant,
Ce spectre du coin de la borne,

Cet infirme aux pas alourdis,
Peut faire, en notre âme troublée,
Descendre la joie étoilée
Des profondeurs du paradis.

Êtes-vous sombre? Oui, vous l'êtes;
Eh bien, donnez; donnez encor.
Riche, en échange d'un peu d'or
Ou d'un peu d'argent que tu jettes,

Indifférent, parfois moqueur,
A l'indigent dans sa chaumière,
Dieu te donne de la lumière
Dont tu peux te remplir le coeur!

Vébreux!

LA VISION

D’OÙ EST SORTI CE LIVRE

J’eus un rêve : le mur des siècles m’apparut.

C’était de la chair vive avec du granit brut,
Une immobilité faite d’inquiétude,
Un édifice ayant un bruit de multitude,
Des trous noirs étoilés par de farouches yeux,
Des évolutions de groupes monstrueux,
De vastes bas-reliefs, des fresques colossales;
Parfois le mur s’ouvrait et laissait voir des salles,
Des antres où siégeaient des heureux, des puissants,
Des vainqueurs abrutis de crime, ivres d’encens,
Des intérieurs d’or, de jaspe et de porphyre;
Et ce mur frissonnait comme un arbre au zéphire;

Tous les siècles, le front ceint de tours ou d’épis,
Étaient là, mornes sphinx sur l’énigme accroupis;
Chaque assise avait l’air vaguement animée;
Cela montait dans l’ombre; on eût dit une armée
Pétrifiée avec le chef qui la conduit
Au moment qu’elle osait escalader la Nuit;
Ce bloc flottait ainsi qu’un nuage qui roule;
C’était une muraille et c’était une foule;
Le marbre avait le sceptre et le glaive au poignet,
La poussière pleurait et l’argile saignait,
Les pierres qui tombaient avaient la forme humaine.
Tout l’homme, avec le souffle inconnu qui le mène,
Ève ondoyante, Adam flottant, un et divers,
Palpitaient sur ce mur, et l’être, et l’univers,
Et le destin, fil noir que la tombe dévide.
Parfois l’éclair faisait sur la paroi livide
Luire des millions de faces tout à coup.
Je voyais là ce Rien que nous appelons Tout;
Les rois, les dieux, la gloire et la loi, les passages
Des générations à vau-l’eau dans les âges;

Et devant mon regard se prolongeaient sans fin
Les fléaux, les douleurs, l’ignorance, la faim,
La superstition, la science, l’histoire,
Comme à perte de vue une façade noire.

Et ce mur, composé de tout ce qui croula,
Se dressait, escarpé, triste, informe. Où cela?
Je ne sais. Dans un lieu quelconque des ténèbres.
*

Il n’est pas de brouillards, comme il n’est point d’algèbres,
Qui résistent, au fond des nombres ou des cieux,
À la fixité calme et profonde des yeux;
Je regardais ce mur d’abord confus et vague,
Où la forme semblait flotter comme une vague,
Où tout semblait vapeur, vertige, illusion;
Et, sous mon œil pensif, l’étrange vision
Devenait moins brumeuse et plus claire, à mesure
Que ma prunelle était moins troublée et plus sûre.
*

Chaos d’êtres, montant du gouffre au firmament!
Tous les monstres, chacun dans son compartiment;
Le siècle ingrat, le siècle affreux, le siècle immonde;

Brume et réalité! nuée et mappemonde!
Ce rêve était l’histoire ouverte à deux battants;
Tous les peuples ayant pour gradins tous les temps;
Tous les temples ayant tous les songes pour marches;
Ici les paladins et là les patriarches;
Dodone chuchotant tout bas avec Membré;
Et Thèbe, et Raphidim, et son rocher sacré
Où, sur les juifs luttant pour la terre promise,
Aaron et Hur levaient les deux mains de Moïse;
Le char de feu d’Amos parmi les ouragans;

Tous ces hommes, moitié princes, moitié brigands,
Transformés par la fable avec grâce ou colère,
Noyés dans les rayons du récit populaire,
Archanges, demi-dieux, chasseurs d’hommes, héros
Des Eddas, des Védas et des Romanceros;
Ceux dont la volonté se dresse fer de lance;
Ceux devant qui la terre et l’ombre font silence;
Saül, David; et Delphe, et la cave d’Endor
Dont on mouche la lampe avec des ciseaux d’or;
Nemrod parmi les morts; Booz parmi les gerbes;
Des Tibères divins, constellés, grands, superbes,
Étalant à Caprée, au forum, dans les camps,
Des colliers que Tacite arrangeait en carcans;
La chaîne d’or du trône aboutissant au bagne.
Ce vaste mur avait des versants de montagne.
Ô nuit! Rien ne manquait à l’apparition.

Tout s’y trouvait, matière, esprit, fange et rayon;
Toutes les villes, Thèbe, Athènes, des étages
De Romes sur des tas de Tyrs et de Carthages;
Tous les fleuves, l’Escaut, le Rhin, le Nil, l’Aar,
Le Rubicon disant à quiconque est césar :
— Si vous êtes encor citoyens, vous ne l’êtes
Que jusqu’ici. — Les monts se dressaient, noirs squelettes,
Et sur ces monts erraient les nuages hideux,
Ces fantômes traînant la lune au milieu d’eux.
La muraille semblait par le vent remuée;
C’étaient des croisements de flamme et de nuée,
Des jeux mystérieux de clartés, des renvois
D’ombre d’un siècle à l’autre et du sceptre aux pavois,
Où l’Inde finissait par être l’Allemagne,
Où Salomon avait pour reflet Charlemagne;
Tout le prodige humain, noir, vague, illimité;
La liberté brisant l’immuabilité;
L’Horeb aux flancs brûlés, le Pinde aux pentes vertes;
Hicétas précédant Newton, les découvertes

Secouant leurs flambeaux jusqu’au fond de la mer,
Jason sur le dromon, Fulton sur le steamer;
La Marseillaise, Eschyle, et l’ange après le spectre;
Capanée est debout sur la porte d’Électre,
Bonaparte est debout sur le pont de Lodi;
Christ expire non loin de Néron applaudi.
Voilà l’affreux chemin du trône, ce pavage
De meurtre, de fureur, de guerre, d’esclavage;
L’homme-troupeau! cela hurle, cela commet
Des crimes sur un morne et ténébreux sommet,
Cela frappe, cela blasphème, cela souffre,
Hélas! et j’entendais sous mes pieds, dans le gouffre,
Sangloter la misère aux gémissements sourds,
Sombre bouche incurable et qui se plaint toujours.
Et sur la vision lugubre, et sur moi-même
Que j’y voyais ainsi qu’au fond d’un miroir blême,
La vie immense ouvrait ses difformes rameaux;

Je contemplais les fers, les voluptés, les maux,
La mort, les avatars et les métempsycoses,
Et dans l’obscur taillis des êtres et des choses
Je regardais rôder, noir, riant, l’œil en feu,
Satan, ce braconnier de la forêt de Dieu.
*

Quel titan avait peint cette chose inouïe?
Sur la paroi sans fond de l’ombre épanouie
Qui donc avait sculpté ce rêve où j’étouffais?
Quel bras avait construit avec tous les forfaits,
Tous les deuils, tous les pleurs, toutes les épouvantes,
Ce vaste enchaînement de ténèbres vivantes?
Ce rêve, et j’en tremblais, c’était une action
Ténébreuse entre l’homme et la création;
Des clameurs jaillissaient de dessous les pilastres;
Des bras sortant du mur montraient le poing aux astres;
La chair était Gomorrhe et l’âme était Sion;
Songe énorme! c’était la confrontation

De ce que nous étions avec ce que nous sommes;

Les bêtes s’y mêlaient, de droit divin, aux hommes,
Comme dans un enfer ou dans un paradis;
Les crimes y rampaient, de leur ombre grandis;
Et même les laideurs n’étaient pas malséantes
À la tragique horreur de ces fresques géantes.
Et je revoyais là le vieux temps oublié.
Je le sondais. Le mal au bien était lié
Ainsi que la vertèbre est jointe à la vertèbre.

Cette muraille, bloc d’obscurité funèbre,
Montait dans l’infini vers un brumeux matin.
Blanchissant par degrés sur l’horizon lointain,
Cette vision sombre, abrégé noir du monde,
Allait s’évanouir dans une aube profonde,
Et, commencée en nuit, finissait en lueur.

Le jour triste y semblait une pâle sueur;
Et cette silhouette informe était voilée
D’un vague tournoiement de fumée étoilée.
*

Tandis que je songeais, l’œil fixé sur ce mur

Semé d’âmes, couvert d’un mouvement obscur
Et des gestes hagards d’un peuple de fantômes,
Une rumeur se fit sous les ténébreux dômes,
J’entendis deux fracas profonds, venant du ciel
En sens contraire au fond du silence éternel;
Le firmament que nul ne peut ouvrir ni clore
Eut l’air de s’écarter.
*

Du côté de l’aurore,
L’esprit de l’Orestie, avec un fauve bruit,
Passait; en même temps, du côté de la nuit,

Noir génie effaré fuyant dans une éclipse,
Formidable, venait l'immense Apocalypse;
Et leur double tonnerre à travers la vapeur,
À ma droite, à ma gauche, approchait, et j'eus peur
Comme si j'étais pris entre deux chars de l'ombre.

Ils passèrent. Ce fut un ébranlement sombre.
Et le premier esprit cria : Fatalité!
Le second cria : Dieu! L'obscure éternité
Répéta ces deux cris dans ses échos funèbres.

Ce passage effrayant remua les ténèbres;

Au bruit qu'ils firent, tout chancela; la paroi
Pleine d'ombres, frémit; tout s'y mêla; le roi
Mit la main à son casque et l'idole à sa mitre;
Toute la vision trembla comme une vitre,
Et se rompit, tombant dans la nuit en morceaux;
Et quand les deux esprits, comme deux grands oiseaux,
Eurent fui, dans la brume étrange de l'idée,
La pâle vision reparut lézardée,
Comme un temple en ruine aux gigantesques fûts,
Laissant voir de l'abîme entre ses pans confus.
*

Lorsque je la revis, après que les deux anges
L'eurent brisée au choc de leurs ailes étranges,
Ce n'était plus ce mur prodigieux, complet,
Où le destin avec l'infini s'accouplait,
Où tous les temps groupés se rattachaient au nôtre,
Où les siècles pouvaient s'interroger l'un l'autre
Sans que pas un fît faute et manquât à l'appel;
Au lieu d'un continent, c'était un archipel;
Au lieu d'un univers, c'était un cimetière;
Par places se dressait quelque lugubre pierre,

Quelque pilier debout, ne soutenant plus rien;

Tous les siècles tronqués gisaient; plus de lien;
Chaque époque pendait démantelée; aucune
N’était sans déchirure et n’était sans lacune;
Et partout croupissaient sur le passé détruit
Des stagnations d’ombre et des flaques de nuit.
Ce n’était plus, parmi les brouillards où l’œil plonge,
Que le débris difforme et chancelant d’un songe,
Ayant le vague aspect d’un pont intermittent
Qui tombe arche par arche et que le gouffre attend,
Et de toute une flotte en détresse qui sombre;
Ressemblant à la phrase interrompue et sombre
Que l’ouragan, ce bègue errant sur les sommets,
Recommence toujours sans l’achever jamais.

Seulement l’avenir continuait d’éclore
Sur ces vestiges noirs qu’un pâle orient dore,
Et se levait avec un air d’astre, au milieu
D’un nuage où, sans voir de foudre, on sentait Dieu.

*

De l’empreinte profonde et grave qu’a laissée

Ce chaos de la vie à ma sombre pensée,
De cette vision du mouvant genre humain,
Ce livre, où près d’hier on entrevoit demain,
Est sorti, reflétant de poëme en poëme
Toute cette clarté vertigineuse et blême;
Pendant que mon cerveau douloureux le couvait,
La légende est parfois venue à mon chevet,
Mystérieuse sœur de l’histoire sinistre;
Et toutes deux ont mis leur doigt sur ce registre.

Et qu’est-ce maintenant que ce livre, traduit
Du passé, du tombeau, du gouffre et de la nuit?
C’est la tradition tombée à la secousse
Des révolutions que Dieu déchaîne et pousse;
Ce qui demeure après que la terre a tremblé;

Décombre où l’avenir, vague aurore, est mêlé;
C’est la construction des hommes, la masure
Des siècles, qu’emplit l’ombre et que l’idée azure,
L’affreux charnier-palais en ruine, habité
Par la mort et bâti par la fatalité,
Où se posent pourtant parfois, quand elles l’osent,
De la façon dont l’aile et le rayon se posent,
La liberté, lumière, et l’espérance, oiseau;
C’est l’incommensurable et tragique monceau,
Où glissent, dans la brèche horrible, les vipères

Et les dragons, avant de rentrer aux repaires,
Et la nuée avant de remonter au ciel;
Ce livre, c’est le reste effrayant de Babel;
C’est la lugubre Tour des Choses, l’édifice
Du bien, du mal, des pleurs, du deuil, du sacrifice,
Fier jadis, dominant les lointains horizons,
Aujourd’hui n’ayant plus que de hideux tronçons,
Épars, couchés, perdus dans l’obscure vallée;
C’est l’épopée humaine, âpre, immense, — Écroulée.

LA TERRE

LA TERRE

HYMNE

Elle est la terre, elle est la plaine, elle est le champ.
Elle est chère à tous ceux qui sèment en marchant;
Elle offre un lit de mousse au pâtre;
Frileuse, elle se chauffe au soleil éternel,
Rit, et fait cercle avec les planètes du ciel
Comme des sœurs autour de l’âtre.

Elle aime le rayon propice aux blés mouvants,

Et l’assainissement formidable des vents,
Et les souffles, qui sont des lyres,
Et l’éclair, front vivant qui, lorsqu’il brille et fuit,
Tout ensemble épouvante et rassure la Nuit
À force d’effrayants sourires.

Gloire à la terre! Gloire à l’aube où Dieu paraît!
Au fourmillement d’yeux ouverts dans la forêt,
Aux fleurs, aux nids que le jour dore!
Gloire au blanchissement nocturne des sommets!
Gloire au ciel bleu qui peut, sans s’épuiser jamais,
Faire des dépenses d’aurore!

La terre aime ce ciel tranquille, égal pour tous,
Dont la sérénité ne dépend pas de nous,
Et qui mêle à nos vils désastres,
À nos deuils, aux éclats de rires effrontés,
À nos méchancetés, à nos rapidités,
La douceur profonde des astres.

La terre est calme auprès de l’océan grondeur;

La terre est belle; elle a la divine pudeur
De se cacher sous les feuillages;
Le printemps son amant vient en mai la baiser;

Elle envoie au tonnerre altier pour l’apaiser
La fumée humble des villages.

Ne frappe pas, tonnerre. Ils sont petits, ceux-ci.
La terre est bonne; elle est grave et sévère aussi;
Les roses sont pures comme elle;
Quiconque pense, espère et travaille lui plaît;
Et l’innocence offerte à tout homme est son lait,
Et la justice est sa mamelle.

La terre cache l’or et montre les moissons;
Elle met dans le flanc des fuyantes saisons
Le germe des saisons prochaines,
Dans l’azur les oiseaux qui chuchotent : aimons!
Et les sources au fond de l’ombre, et sur les monts
L’immense tremblement des chênes.

L’harmonie est son œuvre auguste sous les cieux;

Elle ordonne aux roseaux de saluer, joyeux
Et satisfaits, l’arbre superbe;
Car l’équilibre, c’est le bas aimant le haut;
Pour que le cèdre altier soit dans son droit, il faut
Le consentement du brin d’herbe.

Elle égalise tout dans la fosse; et confond
Avec les bouviers morts la poussière que font
Les Césars et les Alexandres;
Elle envoie au ciel l’âme et garde l’animal;
Elle ignore, en son vaste effacement du mal,
La différence de deux cendres.

Elle paie à chacun sa dette, au jour la nuit,

À la nuit le jour, l’herbe aux rocs, aux fleurs le fruit;
Elle nourrit ce qu’elle crée,
Et l’arbre est confiant quand l’homme est incertain;
Ô confrontation qui fait honte au destin,
Ô grande nature sacrée!

Elle fut le berceau d’Adam et de Japhet,
Et puis elle est leur tombe; et c’est elle qui fait

Dans Tyr qu’aujourd’hui l’on ignore,
Dans Sparte et Rome en deuil, dans Memphis abattu,
Dans tous les lieux où l’homme a parlé, puis s’est tu,
Chanter la cigale sonore.

Pourquoi? Pour consoler les sépulcres dormants.
Pourquoi? Parce qu’il faut faire aux écroulements
Succéder les apothéoses,
Aux voix qui disent Non les voix qui disent Oui,
Aux disparitions de l’homme évanoui
Le chant mystérieux des choses.

La terre a pour amis les moissonneurs; le soir,
Elle voudrait chasser du vaste horizon noir
L’âpre essaim des corbeaux voraces,
À l’heure où le bœuf las dit : Rentrons maintenant;
Quand les bruns laboureurs s’en reviennent traînant
Les socs pareils à des cuirasses.

Elle enfante sans fin les fleurs qui durent peu;
Les fleurs ne font jamais de reproches à Dieu;
Des chastes lys, des vignes mûres,
Des myrtes frissonnant au vent, jamais un cri

Ne monte vers le ciel vénérable, attendri
Par l’innocence des murmures.

Elle ouvre un livre obscur sous les rameaux épais;

Elle fait son possible; et prodigue la paix
Au rocher, à l’arbre, à la plante,
Pour nous éclairer, nous, fils de Cham et d’Hermès,
Qui sommes condamnés à ne lire jamais
Qu’à de la lumière tremblante.

Son but, c’est la naissance et ce n’est pas la mort;
C’est la bouche qui parle et non la dent qui mord;
Quand la guerre infâme se rue
Creusant dans l’homme un vil sillon de sang baigné,
Farouche, elle détourne un regard indigné
De cette sinistre charrue.

Meurtrie, elle demande aux hommes : À quoi sert

Le ravage? Quel fruit produira le désert?
Pourquoi tuer la plaine verte?
Elle ne trouve pas utiles les méchants,
Et pleure la beauté virginale des champs
Déshonorés en pure perte.

La terre fut jadis Cérès, Alma Cérès,
Mère aux yeux bleus des blés, des prés et des forêts;
Et je l’entends qui dit encore :
Fils, je suis Démèter, la déesse des dieux;
Et vous me bâtirez un temple radieux
Sur la colline Callichore.

SUPRÉMATIE

SUPRÉMATIE

Lorsque les trois grands dieux eurent dans un cachot
Mis les démons, chassé les monstres de là-haut,
Ôté sa griffe à l’hydre, au noir dragon son aile,
Et sur ce tas hurlant fermé l’ombre éternelle,
Laissant grincer l’enfer, ce sépulcre vivant,
Ils vinrent tous les trois, Vâyou, le dieu du Vent,
Agni, dieu de la Flamme, Indra, dieu de l’Espace,
S’asseoir sur le zénith, qu’aucun mont ne dépasse,
Et se dirent, ayant dans le ciel radieux
Chacun un astre au front : Nous sommes les seuls dieux!

Tout à coup devant eux surgit dans l’ombre obscure

Une lumière ayant les yeux d’une figure.

Ce que cette lumière était, rien ne saurait
Le dire, et, comme brille au fond d’une forêt
Un long rayon de lune en une route étroite,
Elle resplendissait, se tenant toute droite.
Ainsi se dresse un phare au sommet d’un récif.
C’était un flamboiement immobile, pensif,
Debout.
Et les trois dieux s’étonnèrent.
Ils dirent :

Qu’est ceci?
Tout se tut et les cieux attendirent.

— Dieu Vâyou, dit Agni, dieu Vâyou, dit Indra,
Parle à cette lumière. Elle te répondra.
Crois-tu que tu pourrais savoir ce qu’elle est?
— Certes,

Dit Vâyou. Je le puis.
Les profondeurs désertes
Songeaient; tout fuyait, l’aigle ainsi que l’alcyon.

Alors Vâyou marcha droit à la vision.
— Qu’es-tu? cria Vâyou, le dieu fort et suprême.
Et l’apparition lui dit : — Qu’es-tu toi-même?

Et Vâyou dit : — Je suis Vâyou, le dieu du Vent.
— Et qu’est-ce que tu peux?
— Je peux, en me levant,
Tout déplacer, chasser les flots, courber les chênes,
Arracher tous les gonds, rompre toutes les chaînes,
Et si je le voulais, d’un souffle, moi Vâyou,
Plus aisément qu’au fleuve on ne jette un caillou
Ou que d’une araignée on ne crève les toiles,
J’emporterais la terre à travers les étoiles.

L’apparition prit un brin de paille et dit :
— Emporte ceci.
Puis, avant qu’il répondît,
Elle posa devant le dieu le brin de paille.

Alors, avec des yeux d’orage et de bataille,
Le dieu Vâyou se mit à grandir jusqu’au ciel,
Il troua l’effrayant plafond torrentiel,
Il ne fut plus qu’un monstre ayant partout des bouches,
Pâle, il démusela les ouragans farouches
Et mit en liberté l’âpre meute des airs;
On entendit mugir le semoun des déserts
Et l’aquilon qui peut, par-dessus les épaules
Des montagnes, pousser l’océan jusqu’aux pôles;
Vâyou, géant des vents, immense, au-dessus d’eux
Plana, gronda, frémit et rugit, et, hideux,
Remua les profonds tonnerres de l’abîme;

Tout l’univers trembla de la base à la cime

Comme un toit où quelqu’un d’affreux marche à grands pas.

Le brin de paille aux pieds du dieu ne bougea pas.

Le dieu s’en retourna.
— Dieu du vent, notre frère,
Parle, as-tu pu savoir ce qu’est cette lumière?

Et Vâyou répondit aux deux autres dieux : — Non.

Agni, dit Indra; frère Agni, mon compagnon,
Dit Vâyou, pourrais-tu le savoir, toi?
— Sans doute,
Dit Agni.
Le dieu rouge, Agni, que l’eau redoute,
Et devant qui médite à genoux le Bouddha,
Alla vers la clarté sereine et demanda :
— Qu’es-tu, clarté?
— Qu’es-tu toi-même? lui dit-elle.
— Le dieu du Feu.
— Quelle est ta puissance?
— Elle est telle
Que, si je veux, je puis brûler le ciel noirci,

Les mondes, les soleils, et tout.
— Brûle ceci,
Dit la clarté, montrant au dieu le brin de paille.

Alors, comme un bélier défonce une muraille,
Agni, frappant du pied, fit jaillir de partout
La flamme formidable, et, fauve, ardent, debout,
Crachant des jets de lave entre ses dents de braise,
Fit sur l’humble fétu crouler une fournaise;
Un soufflement de forge emplit le firmament;
Et le jour s’éclipsa dans un vomissement
D’étincelles, mêlé de tant de nuit et d’ombre
Qu’une moitié du ciel en resta longtemps sombre;

Ainsi bout le Vésuve, ainsi flambe l’Hékla;
Lorsqu’enfin la vapeur énorme s’envola,
Quand le dieu rouge Agni, dont l’incendie est l’âme,
Eut éteint ce tumulte effroyable de flamme
Où grondait on ne sait quel monstrueux soufflet,
Il vit le brin de paille à ses pieds, qui semblait
N’avoir pas même été touché par la fumée.

Le dieu s’en revint.
— Dieu du feu, force enflammée,
Quelle est cette lumière enfin? Sais-tu son nom?
Dirent les autres dieux.
Agni répondit : Non.

— Indra, dit Vâyou; frère Indra, dit Agni, sage!
Roi! dieu! qui, sans passer, de tout vois le passage,
Peux-tu savoir, ô toi dont rien ne se perdra,

Ce qu’est cette clarté qui nous regarde?
Indra
Répondit : — Oui.
Toujours droite, la clarté pure
Brillait, et le dieu vint lui parler.
— Ô figure,
Qu’es-tu? dit Indra, d’ombre et d’étoiles vêtu.
Et l’apparition dit : — Toi-même, qu’es-tu?
Indra lui dit : — Je suis Indra, dieu de l’Espace.
— Et quel est ton pouvoir, dieu?
— Sur sa carapace
La divine tortue, aux yeux toujours ouverts,

Porte l’éléphant blanc qui porte l’univers.
Autour de l’univers est l’infini. Ce gouffre
Contient tout ce qui vit, naît, meurt, existe, souffre,
Règne, passe ou demeure, au sommet, au milieu,
En haut, en bas, et c’est l’espace, et j’en suis dieu.
Sous moi la vie obscure ouvre tous ses registres;

Je suis le grand voyant des profondeurs sinistres;
Ni dans les bleus édens, ni dans l’enfer hagard,
Rien ne m’échappe, et rien n’est hors de mon regard;
Si quelque être pour moi cessait d’être visible,
C’est lui qui serait dieu, pas nous; c’est impossible.
Étant l’énormité, je vois l’immensité;
Je vois toute la nuit et toute la clarté;
Je vois le dernier lieu, je vois le dernier nombre,
Et ma prunelle atteint l’extrémité de l’ombre;
Je suis le regardeur infini. Dans ma main
J’ai tout, le temps, l’esprit, hier, aujourd’hui, demain.
Je vois les trous de taupe et les gouffres d’aurore,
Tout! et, là même où rien n’est plus, je vois encore.
Depuis l’azur sans borne où les cieux sur les cieux
Tournent comme un rouage aux flamboyants essieux,
Jusqu’au néant des morts auquel le ver travaille,
Je sais tout! Je vois tout!
 — Vois-tu ce brin de paille?
Dit l’étrange clarté d’où sortait une voix.
Indra baissa la tête et cria : — Je le vois.
Lumière, je te dis que j’embrasse tout l’être;

Toi-même, entends-tu bien, tu ne peux disparaître
De mon regard, jamais éclipsé ni décru!

À peine eut-il parlé qu’elle avait disparu.

III

ENTRE GÉANTS ET DIEUX

LE GÉANT, AUX DIEUX

LE GÉANT.

Un mot. Si par hasard il vous venait l'idée
Que cette herbe où je dors, de rosée inondée,
Est faite pour subir n'importe quel pied nu,
Et que ma solitude est au premier venu,
Si vous pensiez entrer dans l'ombre où je séjourne
Sans que ma grosse tête au fond des bois se tourne,
Si vous vous figuriez que je vous laisserais
Tout déranger, percer des trous dans mes forêts,
Ployer mes vieux sapins et casser mes grands chênes,
Mettre à la liberté de mes torrents des chaînes,
Chasser l'aigle, et marcher sur mes petites fleurs;
Que vous pourriez venir faire les enjôleurs
Chez les nymphes des bois qui ne sont que des sottes,
Que vous pourriez le soir amener dans mes grottes
La Vénus avec qui tous vous vous mariez,
Que je n'ai pas des yeux pour voir, que vous pourriez

Vous vautrer sur mes joncs où les dragons des antres
Laissent en s'en allant la trace de leurs ventres,
Que vous pourriez salir la pauvre source en pleurs,
Que je vous laisserais, ainsi que des voleurs,
Aller, venir, rôder dans la grande nature;
Si vous imaginiez cette étrange aventure
Qu'ici je vous verrais rire, semer l'effroi,
Faire l'amour, vous mettre à votre aise chez moi,
Sans des soulèvements énormes de montagnes,
Et sans vous traiter, vous, princes, et vos compagnes,
Comme les ours qu'au fond des halliers je poursuis,
Vous me croiriez plus bête encor que je ne suis!
JUPITER.

Calme-toi.
VÉNUS.

Nous avons dans l’Olympe des chambres,
Bonhomme.
LE GÉANT.

Oui, je sais bien, parce que j’ai des membres
Vastes, et que les doigts robustes de mes pieds
Semblent sur l’affreux tronc des saules copiés,
Parce que mes talons sont tout noirs de poussière,
Parce que je suis fait de la pâte grossière

Dont est faite la terre auguste et dont sont faits
Les grands monts, ces muets et sacrés portefaix,
Vu que des plus vieux rocs j’ai passé les vieillesses,
Et que je n’ai pas moi toutes vos gentillesses,
Étant une montagne à forme humaine, au fond
Du gouffre, où l’ombre avec les pierres me confond,
Vu que j’ai l’air d’un bloc, d’une tour, d’un décombre,
Et que je fus taillé dans l’énormité sombre,
Je passe pour stupide. On rit de moi, vraiment,
Et l’on croit qu’on peut tout me faire impunément.
Soit. Essayez. Tâtez mon humeur endurante.
Combien de dards avait le serpent Stryx? Quarante.
Combien de pieds avait l’hydre Phluse? Trois cents.
J’ai broyé Stryx et Phluse entre mes poings puissants.
Osez donc! Ah! je sens la colère hagarde
Battre de l’aile autour de mon front. Prenez garde!
Laissez-moi dans mon trou plein d’ombre et de parfums.
Que les olympiens ne soient pas importuns,
Car il se pourrait bien qu’on vît de quelle sorte
On les chasse, et comment, pour leur fermer sa porte,
Un ténébreux s’y prend avec les radieux,
Si vous venez ici m’ennuyer, tas de dieux!

LES TEMPS PANIQUES

*

Les dieux ont dit entre eux : — Nous sommes la matière,
Les dieux. Nous habitons l’insondable frontière
Au delà de laquelle il n’est rien; nous tenons
L’univers par le mal qui règne sous nos noms,
Par la guerre, euménide éparse, par l’orgie
Chantante, dans la joie et le meurtre élargie,
Par Cupidon l’immense enfant, par Astarté,
Larve pleine de nuit d’où sort une clarté.
L’ouragan tourne autour de nos faces sereines;
Les saisons sont des chars dont nous tenons les rênes,
Nous régnons, nous mettons à la tempête un mors,
Et nous sommes au fond de la pâleur des morts.
L’Olympe est à jamais la cime de la vie;
Chronos est prisonnier; Géo tremble asservie;

Nous sommes tout. Nos coups de foudre sont fumants.
Jouissons. Sous nos pieds un pavé d’ossements,
C’est la terre; un plafond de néant sur nos têtes,
C’est le ciel; nous avons les temples et les fêtes;
L’ombre que nous faisons met le monde à genoux.
Les premiers-nés du gouffre étaient plus grands que nous;
Nous leur avons jeté l’Othryx et le Caucase;
À cette heure, un amas de roches les écrase;
Poursuivons, achevons notre œuvre, et consommons
La lapidation des géants par les monts!
*

Les dieux ont triomphé. Leur victoire est tombée
Sur Enna, sur Larisse et Pylos, sur l’Eubée;
L’horizon est partout difforme maintenant;
Pas un mont qui ne soit blessé; l’Atlas saignant
Est noir sous l’assemblage horrible des nuées;
Chalcis que les hiboux emplissent de huées,

La Thrace où l’on adore un vieux glaive rouillé,
L’Hémonie où l’éclair féroce a travaillé,
Sont de mornes déserts que la ruine encombre.
Une peau de satyre écorché pend dans l’ombre,
Car la lyre a puni la flûte au fond des bois.
La source aux pleurs profonds sanglote à demi-voix;
Où sont les jours d’Évandre et les temps de Saturne?
On s’aimait. On se craint. L’univers est nocturne;
L’azur hait le matin, inutile doreur;
L’ombre auguste et hideuse est pleine de terreur;
On entend des soupirs étouffés dans les marbres;
Des simulacres sont visibles sous les arbres,
Et des spectres sont là, signe d’un vaste ennui.
Les bois naguère étaient confiants, aujourd’hui
Ils ont peur, et l’on sent que leur tremblement songe
Aux autans, rauque essaim qui serpente et s’allonge

Et qui souvent remplit de trahisons l’éther;
Car l’orage est l’esclave obscur de Jupiter.
Les cavernes des fils d’Inachus sont vacantes;
Le grand Orphée est mort tué par les bacchantes;
Seuls les dieux sont debout, formidables vivants,
Et la terre subit la sombre horreur des vents.

Thèbe adore en tremblant la foudre triomphale;
Et trois fleuves, le Styx, l’Alphée et le Stymphale,
Se sont enfuis sous terre et n’ont plus reparu.
Aquilon passe avec un grondement bourru;
On ne sait ce qu’Eurus complote avec Borée;

Faune se cache ainsi qu’une bête effarée;
Plus de titans; Mercure éclipse Hypérion;
Zéphire chante et danse ainsi qu’un histrion;
Quant aux Cyclopes, fils puînés, ils sont lâches;
Ils servent; ils ont fait leur paix; les viles tâches
Conviennent aux cœurs bas; Vulcain, le dieu cagneux,

Les emploie à sa forge, a confiance en eux,
Les gouverne, et, difforme et boiteux, distribue
L’ouvrage à ces géants par qui la honte est bue;
Brontès fait des trépieds qui parlent, Pyracmon
Fait des spectres d’airain où remue un démon;
On ne résiste plus aux dieux, même en Sicile;

Polyphème amoureux n’est plus qu’un imbécile,
Et Galatée en rit avec Acis.
Les champs
N’ont presque plus de fleurs, tant les dieux sont méchants;
Les dieux semblent avoir cueilli toutes les roses.
Ils font la guerre à Pan, à l’être, au gouffre, aux choses;
Ils ont mis de la nuit jusque dans l’œil du lynx;
Ils ont pris l’ombre, ils ont fait avouer les sphinx,
Ils ont échoué l’hydre, éteint les ignivomes,
Et du sinistre enfer augmenté les fantômes,
Et, bouleversant tout, ondes, souffles, typhons,
Ils ont déconcerté les prodiges profonds.
La terre en proie aux dieux fut le champ de bataille;
Ils ont frappé les fronts qui dépassaient leur taille,
Et détruit sans pitié, sans gloire, sans pudeur,
Hélas! quiconque avait pour crime la grandeur.

Les lacs sont indignés des monts qu’ils réfléchissent,
Car les monts ont trahi; sur un faîte où blanchissent

Des os d’enfants percés par les flèches du ciel,
Cime aride et pareille aux lieux semés de sel,
La pierre qui jadis fut Niobé médite;
La vaste Afrique semble exilée et maudite;
Le Nil cache éperdu sa source à tous les yeux,
De peur de voir briser son urne par les dieux;
On sent partout la fin, la borne, la limite;
L’étang, clair sous l’amas des branchages, imite
L’œil tragique et brillant du fiévreux qui mourra;
L’effroi tient Delphe en Grèce et dans l’Inde Ellorah;

Phœbus Sminthée usurpe aux cieux le char solaire;

Que de honte! Et l’on peut juger de la colère
De Démèter, l’aïeule auguste de Cérès,
Par l’échevèlement farouche des forêts.
La terre avait une âme et les dieux l’ont tuée.
Hélas! dit le torrent. Hélas! dit la nuée.
Les vagues voix du soir murmurent : Oublions!
L’absence des géants attriste les lions.

LE TITAN

I

SUR L’OLYMPE

Une montagne emplit tout l’horizon des hommes;
L’Olympe. Pas de ciel. Telle est l’ombre où nous sommes.
L’orgueil, la volupté féroce aux chants lascifs,
La guerre secouant des éclairs convulsifs,
La splendide Vénus, nue, effrayante, obscure,
Le meurtre appelé Mars, le vol nommé Mercure,
L’inceste souriant, ivre, au sinistre hymen,
Le parricide ayant le tonnerre à la main,

Pluton livide avec l’enfer pour auréole,
L’immense fou Neptune en proie au vague Éole,
L’orageux Jupiter, Diane à l’œil peu sûr,
Des fronts de météore entrevus dans l’azur,
Habitent ce sommet; et tout ce que l’augure,
Le flamine, imagine, invente, se figure,
Et vénère à Corinthe, à Syène, à Paphos,
Tout le vrai des autels qui dans la tombe est faux,
L’oppression, la soif du sang, l’âpre carnage,
L’impudeur qui survit à la guerre et surnage,
L’extermination des enfants de Japhet,

Toute la quantité de crime et de forfait
Que de noms révérés la religion nomme,

Et que peut dans la nuit d’un temple adorer l’homme,
Sur ce faîte fatal que l’aube éclaire en vain,
Rayonne, et tout le mal possible est là, divin.

Jadis la terre était heureuse; elle était libre.
Et, donnant l’équité pour base à l’équilibre,
Elle avait ses grands fils, les géants; ses petits,
Les hommes; et tremblants, cachés, honteux, blottis
Dans les antres, n’osant nuire à la créature,
Les fléaux avaient peur de la sainte nature;
L’étang était sans peste et la mer sans autans;
Tout était beauté, fête, amour, blancheur, printemps;
L’églogue souriait dans la forêt; les tombes
S’entr’ouvraient pour laisser s’envoler des colombes;
L’arbre était sous le vent comme un luth sous l’archet;
L’ourse allaitait l’agneau que le lion léchait;
L’homme avait tous les biens que la candeur procure;
On ne connaissait pas Plutus, ni ce Mercure
Qui plus tard fit Sidon et Tharsis, et sculpta
Le caducée aux murs impurs de Sarepta;
On ignorait ces mots, corrompre, acheter, vendre.

On donnait. Jours sacrés! jours de Rhée et d’Évandre!
L’homme était fleur; l’aurore était sur les berceaux.
Hélas! au lait coulant dans les champs par ruisseaux
A succédé le vin d’où sortent les orgies;
Les hommes maintenant ont des tables rougies;
Le lait les faisait bons et le vin les rend fous;
Atrée est ivre auprès de Thyeste en courroux;
Les Centaures, prenant les femmes sur leurs croupes,
Frappent l’homme, et l’horreur tragique est dans les coupes.
Ô beaux jours passés! terre amante, ciel époux!
Oh! que le tremblement des branches était doux!
Les cyclopes jouaient de la flûte dans l’ombre.

La terre est aujourd’hui comme un radeau qui sombre.
Les dieux, ces parvenus, règnent, et, seuls debout,
Composent leur grandeur de la chute de tout.
Leur banquet resplendit sur la terre et l’affame.
Ils dévorent l’amour, l’âme, la chair, la femme,
Le bien, le mal, le faux, le vrai, l’immensité.
Ils sont hideux au fond de la sérénité.
Quels festins! Comme ils sont contents! Comme ils s’entourent
De vertiges, de feux, d’ombre! Comme ils savourent
La gloire d’être grands, d’être dieux, d’être seuls!
Comme ils raillent les vieux géants dans leurs linceuls!
Toutes les vérités premières sont tuées.

Les heures, qui ne sont que des prostituées,
Viennent chanter chez eux, montrant de vils appas,
Leur offrant l’avenir sacré, qu’elles n’ont pas.
Hébé leur verse à boire et leur soif dit : Encore!
Trois danseuses, Thalie, Aglaé, Terpsychore,
Sont là, belles, croisant leurs pas mélodieux.
Qu’il est doux d’avoir fait le mal qui vous fait dieux!
Vaincre! être situés aux lieux inabordables!
Torturer et jouir! Ils vivent formidables
Dans l’éblouissement des Grâces aux seins nus.
Ils sont les radieux, ils sont les inconnus.
Ils ont détruit Craos, Nephtis, Antée, Otase;

Être horribles et beaux, c’est une double extase;
Comme ils sont adorés! Comme ils sont odieux!
Ils perdent la raison à force d’être dieux;
Car la férocité, c’est la vraie allégresse,
Et Bacchus fait traîner par des tigres l’ivresse.
Ils inspirent Dodone, éléphantine, Endor.
Chacun d’eux à la main tient une coupe d’or
Pure à mouler dessus un sein de jeune fille.
Sur son trépied en Crète, à Cumes sous sa grille,

La sibylle leur livre à travers ses barreaux
Le secret de la foudre en ses vers fulguraux,
Car cette louve sait le fatal fond des choses;
Toute la terre tremble à leurs métamorphoses;
La forêt, où le jour pâle pénètre peu,
Quand elle voit un monstre a peur de voir un dieu.
Quelle joie ils se font avec l'univers triste!
Comme ils sont convaincus que rien hors d'eux n'existe!
Comme ils se sentent forts, immortels, éternels!
Quelle tranquillité d'être les criminels,
Les tyrans, les bourreaux, les dogmes, les idoles!

D'emplir d'ombre et d'horreur les pythonisses folles,
Les ménades d'amour, les sages de stupeur!
D'avoir partout pour soi l'autel noir de la peur!
D'avoir l'antre, l'écho, le lieu visionnaire,
Tous les fracas depuis l'Etna jusqu'au tonnerre,
Toutes les tours depuis Pharos jusqu'à Babel!
D'être, sous tous les noms possibles, Dagon, Bel,
Jovis, Horus, Moloch et Teutatès, les maîtres!
D'avoir à soi la nuit, le vent, les bois, les prêtres!
De posséder le monde entier, Éphèse et Tyr,
Thulé, Thèbe, et les flots dont on ne peut sortir,
Et d'avoir, au delà des colonnes d'Hercule,
Toute l'obscurité qui menace et recule!
Quelle toute-puissance! effarer le lion,
Dompter l'aigle, poser Ossa sur Pélion,

Avoir, du cap d'Asie aux pics Acrocéraunes,
Toute la mer pour peuple et tous les monts pour trônes,
Avoir le sable et l'onde, et l'herbe et le granit,
Et la brume ignorée où le monde finit!
En bas, le tremblement des flèches dans les cibles,
Le passage orageux des meutes invisibles,
Le roulement des chars, le pas des légions,
Le bruit lugubre fait par les religions,
D'étranges voix sortant d'une sombre ouverture,

L’obscur rugissement de l’immense nature,
Réalisent, au pied de l’Olympe inclément,
On ne sait quel sinistre anéantissement;
Et la terre, où la vie indistincte végète,
Sous ce groupe idéal et monstrueux qui jette
Les fléaux, à la fois moissonneur et semeur,
N’est rien qu’une nuée où flotte une rumeur.
Par moments le nuage autour du mont s’entr’ouvre;
Alors on aperçoit sur ces êtres, que couvre
Un divin flamboiement brusquement éclairci,
Des rejaillissements de rayons, comme si
L’on avait écrasé sur eux de la lumière;
Puis le hautain sommet rentre en son ombre altière
Et l’on ne voit plus rien que les sanglants autels;
Seulement on entend rire les immortels.

Et les hommes? Que font les hommes? Ils frissonnent.
Les clairons dans les camps et dans les temples sonnent,
L’encens et les bûchers fument, et le destin
Du fond de l’ombre immense écrase tout, lointain;
Et les blêmes vivants passent, larves, pygmées;
Ils regardent l’Olympe à travers les fumées,
Et se taisent, sachant que le sort est sur eux,
D’autant plus éblouis qu’ils sont plus ténébreux;
Leur seule volonté c’est de ne pas comprendre;
Ils acceptent tout, vie et tombeau, flamme et cendre,
Tout ce que font les rois, tout ce que les dieux font,
Tant le frémissement des âmes est profond!

II

SOUS L’OLYMPE

Cependant un des fils de la terre farouche,
Un titan, l’ombre au front et l’écume à la bouche,
Phtos le géant, l’aîné des colosses vaincus,

Tandis qu’en haut les dieux, enivrés par Bacchus,

Mêlent leur joie autour de la royale table,
Rêve sous l’épaisseur du mont épouvantable.
Les maîtres, sous l’Olympe, ont, dans un souterrain
Jeté Phtos, l’ont lié d’une corde d’airain,
Puis ils l’ont laissé là, car la victoire heureuse
Oublie et chante; et Phtos médite; il sonde, il creuse,
Il fouille le passé, l’avenir, le néant.
Oh! quand on est vaincu, c’est dur d’être géant!
Un nain n’a pas la honte ayant la petitesse.
Seuls, les cœurs de titans ont la grande tristesse;
Le volcan morne sent qu’il s’éteint par degrés,
Et la défaite est lourde aux fronts démesurés.

Ce vaincu saigne et songe, étonné.
Quelle chute!
Les dieux ont commencé la tragique dispute,
Et la terre est leur proie. Ô deuil! Il mord son poing.
Comment respire-t-il? Il ne respire point.
Son corps vaste est blessé partout comme une cible.
Le câble que Vulcain fit en bronze flexible
Le serre, et son cou râle, étreint d’un nœud d’airain.
Phtos médite, et ce grand furieux est serein;
Il méprise, indigné, les fers, les clous, les gênes.

III

CE QUE LES GÉANTS SONT DEVENUS

Il songe au fier passé des puissants terrigènes,
Maintenant dispersés dans vingt charniers divers,
Vastes membres d’un monstre auguste, l’univers;
Toute la terre était dans ces hommes énormes;
À cette heure, mêlés aux montagnes sans formes,
Ils gisent, accablés par le destin hideux,
Plus morts que le sarment qu’un pâtre casse en deux.
Où sont-ils? sous des rocs abjects, cariatides
Des Ténares ardents, des Cocytes fétides;

Encelade a sur lui l’infâme Etna fumant;

C’est son bagne; et l’on voit de l’âpre entassement
Sortir son pied qui semble un morceau de montagne;
Thor est sous l’écueil noir qui sera la Bretagne;
Sur Anax, le géant de Tyrinthe, Arachné
File sa toile, tant il est bien enchaîné;
Pluton, après avoir mis Kothos dans l’érèbe,
A cloué ses cent mains aux cent portes de Thèbe;
Mopse est évanoui sous l’Athos, c’est Hermès

Qui l’enferme; on ne peut espérer que jamais
Dans ces caves du monde aucun souffle ranime
Rhœtus, Porphyrion, Mégatlas, Evonyme;
Couché de tout son long sous le haut mont Liban,
Titlis souffre, et, saisi par Notus, vil forban,
Scrops flotte sous Délos, l’île errante et funeste;
Dronte est muré sous Delphe et Mimas sous Prœneste;

Cœbès, Géreste, Andès, Béor, Cédalion,
Jax, qui dormait le jour ainsi que le lion,
Tous ces êtres plus grands que des monts, sont esclaves,
Les uns sous des glaciers, les autres sous des laves,
Dans on ne sait quel lâche enfer fastidieux;

Et Prométhée! Hélas! quels bandits que ces dieux!
Personne au fond ne sait le crime de Tantale;
Pour avoir entrevu la baigneuse fatale,
Actéon fuit dans l’ombre; et qu’a fait Adonis?
Que de héros brisés! Que d’innocents punis!
Phtos repasse en son cœur l’affreux sort de ses frères;
Star dans Lesbos subit l’affront des stercoraires;
Cerbère garde Ephlops, par mille éclairs frappé,
Sur qui rampe en enfer la chenille Campé;

C’est sur Mégarios que le mont Ida pèse;
Darse endure le choc des flots que rien n’apaise;

Rham est si bien captif du Styx fuligineux
Qu’il n’en a pas encor pu desserrer les nœuds;
Atlas porte le monde, et l’on entend le pôle
Craquer quand le géant lassé change d’épaule;
Lié sous le volcan Liparis, noir récif,
Typhée est au milieu de la flamme, pensif.
Tous ces titans, Stellos, Talémon, Ecmonide,

Gès dont l’œil bleu faisait reculer l’euménide,
Ont succombé, percés des flèches de l’éther,
Sous le guet-apens brusque et vil de Jupiter.
Les géants qui gardaient l’âge d’or, dont la taille
Rassurait la nature, ont perdu la bataille,
Et les colosses sont remplacés par les dieux.
La terre n’a plus d’âme et le ciel n’a plus d’yeux;
Tout est mort. Seuls ces rois épouvantables vivent.
Les stupides saisons comme des chiens les suivent,
L’ordre éternel les semble approuver en marchant;
Dans l’Olympe, où le cri du monde arrive chant,
Où l’étourdissement conseille l’inclémence,
On rit. Tant de victoire a droit à la démence.
Et ces dieux ont raison. Phtos écume. — Oui, dit-il,
Ils ont raison. Eau, flamme, éléments, air subtil,
Vous ne vous êtes pas défendus. Votre orage

N’a pas eu dans la lutte affreuse assez de rage;
Vous vous êtes laissés museler lâchement.
Le mal triomphe! — Et Phtos frémit. Écroulement!
Tous les géants sont pris et garrottés. Que faire?
Il songe.

IV

L’EFFORT

Quoi! L’eau court, le cheval se déferre,
L’humble oiseau brise l’œuf à coups de bec, le vent
Prend la fuite, malgré l’éclair le poursuivant,

Le loup s’en va, bravant le pâtre et le molosse,
Le rat ronge sa cage, et lui, titan, colosse,
Lui dont le cœur a plus de lave qu’un volcan,
Lui Phtos, il resterait dans cette ombre, au carcan!
Ô fureur! Non. Il tord ses os, tend ses vertèbres,
Se débat. Lequel est le plus dur, ô ténèbres!
De la chair d’un titan ou de l’airain des dieux?
Tout à coup, sous l’effort... — ô matin radieux,
Quand tu remplis d’aurore et d’amour le grand chêne,
Ton chant n’est pas plus doux que le bruit d’une chaîne
Qui se casse et qui met une âme en liberté! —

Le carcan s’est fendu, les nœuds ont éclaté!
Le roc sent remuer l’être extraordinaire;
Ah! dit Phtos, et sa joie est semblable au tonnerre;
Le voilà libre!
Non, la montagne est sur lui.
Les fers sont les anneaux de ce serpent, l’ennui;
Ils sont rompus; mais quoi! Tout ce granit l’arrête;
Que faire avec ce mont difforme sur sa tête?
Qu’importe une montagne à qui brisa ses fers!
Certe, il fuira. Dût-il déranger les enfers,
Certe, il s’évadera dans la profondeur sombre!
Qu’importe le possible et les chaos sans nombre,
Le précipice en bas, l’escarpement en haut!
Fauve, il dépave avec ses ongles son cachot.
Il arrache une pierre, une autre, une autre encore;
Oh! quelle étrange nuit sous l’univers sonore!
Un trou s’offre, lugubre, il y plonge, et, rampant

Dans un vide où l’effroi du tombeau se répand,
Il voit sous lui de l’ombre et de l’horreur. Il entre.
Il est dans on ne sait quel intérieur d’antre;
Il avance, il serpente, il fend les blocs mal joints;
Il disloque la roche entre ses vastes poings;
Les enchevêtrements de racines vivaces,
Les fuites d’eau mouillant de livides crevasses,

Il franchit tout; des reins, des coudes, des talons,
Il pousse devant lui l’abîme et dit : Allons!
Et le voilà perdu sous des amas funèbres,
Remuant les granits, les miasmes, les ténèbres,
Et tout le noir dessous de l’Olympe éclatant.
Par moments il s’arrête, il écoute, il entend
Sur sa tête les dieux rire, et pleurer la terre.
Bruit tragique.
À plat ventre, ainsi que la panthère,

Il s’aventure; il voit ce qui n’a pas de nom.
Il n’est plus prisonnier; s’est-il échappé? Non.
Où fuir, puisqu’ils ont tout? Rage! ô pensée amère!
Il rentre au flanc sacré de la terre sa mère;
Stagnation. Noirceur. Tombe. Blocs étouffants.
Et dire que les dieux sont là-haut triomphants!
Et que la terre est tout, et qu’ils ont pris la terre!
L’ombre même lui semble hostile et réfractaire.
Mourir, il ne le peut; mais renaître, qui sait?
Il va. L’obscurité sans fond, qu’est-ce que c’est?
Il fouille le néant et le néant résiste.
Parfois un flamboiement, plus noir que la nuit triste,
Derrière une cloison de fournaise apparaît.
Le titan continue. Il se tient en arrêt,
Guette, sape, reprend, creuse, invente sa route,

Et fuit, sans que le mont qu’il a sur lui s’en doute,
Les olympes n’ayant conscience de rien.

V

LE DEDANS DE LA TERRE

Pas un rayon de jour; nul souffle aérien;
Des fentes dans la nuit; il rampe. Après des caves
Où gronde un gonflement de soufres et de laves,
Il traverse des eaux hideuses; mais que font
L’onde et la flamme et l’ombre à qui cherche le fond,

Le dénouement, la fin, la liberté, l’issue?
Son crâne est son levier, sa main est sa massue;
Plongeur de l’Ignoré, crispant ses bras noueux,
Il écarte des tas d’obstacles monstrueux,
Il perce du chaos les pâles casemates;
Il est couvert de sang, de fange, de stigmates;
Comme, ainsi formidable, il plairait à Vénus!
La pierre âpre et cruelle écorche ses flancs nus,
Et sur son corps, criblé par l’éclair sanguinaire,
Rouvre la cicatrice énorme du tonnerre.

Glissement colossal sous l’amoncellement
De la nuit, du granit affreux, de l’élément!

L’eau le glace, le feu le mord, l’ombre l’accable;
Mais l’évasion fière, indignée, implacable,
L’entraîne; et que peut-il craindre, étant foudroyé?
Il va. Râlant, grinçant, luttant, saignant, ployé,
Il se fraie un chemin tortueux, tourne, tombe,
S’enfonce, et l’on dirait un ver trouant la tombe;
Il tend l’oreille au bruit qui va s’affaiblissant,
S’enivre de la chute et du gouffre, et descend.
Il entend rire, tant la voix des dieux est forte.
Il troue, il perce, il fuit... — Le puits que de la sorte
Il creuse est effroyable et sombre, et maintenant
Ce n’est plus seulement l’Olympe rayonnant
Que ce fuyard terrible a sur lui, c’est la terre.
Tout à coup le bruit cesse.
Et tout ce qu’il faut taire,
Il l’aperçoit. La fin de l’être et de l’espoir,
L’inhospitalité sinistre du fond noir,
Le cloaque où plus tard crouleront les Sodomes,
Le dessous ténébreux des pas de tous les hommes,
Le silence gardant le secret. Arrêtez!
Plus loin n’existe pas. L’ombre de tous côtés!

Ce gouffre est devant lui. L’abject, le froid, l’horrible,

L’évanouissement misérable et terrible,
L’espèce de brouillard que ferait le Léthé,
Cette chose sans nom, l’univers avorté,
Un vide monstrueux où de l’effroi surnage,
L’impossibilité de tourner une page,
Le suprême feuillet faisant le dernier pli!
C’est cela qu’on verrait si l’on voyait l’oubli.
Plus bas que les effets et plus bas que les causes,
La clôture à laquelle aboutissent les choses,
Il la touche, et dans l’ombre, inutile éclaireur,
Il est à l’endroit morne où Tout n’est plus. Terreur.
C’est fini. Le titan regarde l’invisible.

Se rendre sans avoir épuisé le possible,
Les colosses n’ont point cette coutume-là;
Les géants qu’un amas d’infortune accabla
Luttent encore; ils ont un fier reste de rage;

La résistance étant ressemblante à l’outrage
Plaît aux puissants vaincus; l’aigle mord ses barreaux;
Faire au sort violence est l’humeur des héros,
Et ce désespoir-là seul est grand et sublime
Qui donne un dernier coup de talon à l’abîme.
Phtos, comme s’il voulait, de ses deux bras ouverts,
Arracher le dernier morceau de l’univers,
Se baisse, étreint un bloc et l’écarte...

VI

LA DÉCOUVERTE DU TITAN

Ô vertige!
Ô gouffres! l’effrayant soupirail d’un prodige
Apparaît; l’aube fait irruption; le jour,
Là, dehors, un rayon d’allégresse et d’amour,
Formidable, aussi pur que l’aurore première,
Entre dans l’ombre, et Phtos, devant cette lumière,
Brusque aveu d’on ne sait quel profond firmament,

Recule, épouvanté par l’éblouissement.

Le soupirail est large et la brèche est béante.
Phtos y passe son bras, puis sa tête géante;
Il regarde.

*

Il croyait, quand sur lui tout croula,
Voir l’abîme; eh bien non! L’abîme, le voilà.
Phtos est à la fenêtre immense du mystère.
Il voit l’autre côté monstrueux de la terre;
L’inconnu, ce qu’aucun regard ne vit jamais;
Des profondeurs qui sont en même temps sommets,
Un tas d’astres derrière un gouffre d’empyrées,
Un océan roulant aux plis de ses marées
Des flux et des reflux de constellations;
Il voit les vérités qui sont les visions;
Des flots d’azur, des flots de nuit, des flots d’aurore,
Quelque chose qui semble une croix météore,
Des étoiles après des étoiles, des feux
Après des feux, des cieux, des cieux, des cieux, des cieux!
Le géant croyait tout fini; tout recommence!
Ce qu’aucune sagesse et pas une démence,
Pas un être sauvé, pas un être puni
Ne rêverait, l’abîme absolu, l’infini,
Il le voit. C’est vivant, et son œil y pénètre.

Cela ne peut mourir et cela n’a pu naître,
Cela ne peut s’accroître ou décroître en clarté,

Toute cette lumière étant l’éternité.
Phtos a le tremblement effrayant qui devine.
Plus d’astres qu’il n’éclôt de fleurs dans la ravine,
Plus de soleils qu’il n’est de fourmis, plus de cieux
Et de mondes à voir que les hommes n’ont d’yeux!
Ces blancheurs sont des lacs de rayons; ces nuées

Sont des créations sans fin continuées;

Là plus de rives, plus de bords, plus d'horizons.
Dans l'étendue, où rien ne marque les saisons,
Où luisent les azurs, où les chaos sanglotent,
Des millions d'enfers et de paradis flottent,
Éclairant de leurs feux, lugubres ou charmants,
D'autres humanités sous d'autres firmaments.
Où cela cesse-t-il? Cela n'a pas de terme.
Quel styx étreint ce ciel? Aucun. Quel mur l'enferme?
Aucun. Globes, soleils, lunes, sphères. Forêt.
L'impossible à travers l'évident transparaît.
C'est le point fait soleil, c'est l'astre fait atôme;
Tant de réalité que tout devient fantôme;
Tout un univers spectre apparu brusquement.
Un globe est une bulle; un siècle est un moment;
Mondes sur mondes; l'un par l'autre ils se limitent.
Des sphères restent là, fixes; d'autres imitent
L'évanouissement des passants inconnus,
Et s'en vont. Portant tout et par rien soutenus,
Des foules d'univers s'entrecroisent sans nombre;
Point de Calpé pour l'aube et d'Abyla pour l'ombre;
Des astres errants vont, viennent, portent secours;
Ténèbres, clartés, gouffre. Et puis après? Toujours.
Phtos voit l'énigme; il voit le fond, il voit la cime.

Il sent en lui la joie obscure de l'abîme;
Il subit, accablé de soleils et de cieux,
L'inexprimable horreur des lieux prodigieux.
Il regarde, éperdu, le vrai, ce précipice.
Évidence sans borne, ou fatale, ou propice!
Ô stupeur! Il finit par distinguer, au fond
De ce gouffre où le jour avec la nuit se fond,
À travers l'épaisseur d'une brume éternelle,
Dans on ne sait quelle ombre énorme, une prunelle!
*

Cependant sur le haut de l’Olympe on riait;
Les Immortels, sereins sur le monde inquiet,
Resplendissaient, debout dans un brouillard de gloire;
Tout à coup, une étrange et haute forme noire
Surgit en face d’eux, et Vénus dit : Quelqu’un!
C’était Phtos. Comme un feu hors du vase à parfum,
Ou comme un flamboiement au-dessus du cratère,
Le colosse, en rampant dans l’ombre et sous la terre,
S’était fait libre, était sorti de sa prison,
Et maintenant montait, sinistre, à l’horizon.
Il avait traversé tout le dessous du monde.
Il avait dans les yeux l’éternité profonde.
Il se fit un silence inouï; l’on sentit
Que ce spectre était grand, car tout devint petit;
L’aigle ouvrit son œil fauve où l’âpre éclair palpite,

Et sembla regarder du côté de la fuite;
L’Olympe fut noirci par l’ombre du géant;
Jupiter se dressa, pâle, sur son séant;
Le dur Vulcain cessa de battre son enclume
Qui sonna si souvent, dans sa forge qui fume,
Sur les fers des vaincus lorsqu’il les écrouait;
Afin qu’on n’entendît pas même leur rouet
Les trois Grâces d’en haut firent signe aux trois Parques;
Alors le titan, grave, altier, portant les marques
Des tonnerres sur lui tant de fois essayés,
Ayant l’immense aspect des sommets foudroyés
Et la difformité sublime des décombres,
Regarda fixement les Olympiens sombres
Stupéfaits sur leur cime au fond de l’éther bleu,
Et leur cria, terrible : Ô dieux, il est un Dieu!

IV

LA VILLE DISPARUE

LA VILLE DISPARUE

Peuple, l’eau n’est jamais sans rien faire. Mille ans
Avant Adam, qui semble un spectre en cheveux blancs,
Notre aïeul, c’est du moins ainsi que tu le nommes,
Quand les géants étaient encor mêlés aux hommes,
Dans des temps dont jamais personne ne parla,

Une ville bâtie en briques était là
Où sont ces flots qu’agite un aquilon immense
Et cette ville était un lieu plein de démence
Que parfois menaçait de loin un blême éclair.
On voyait une plaine où l’on voit une mer;
Alors c’étaient des chars qui passaient, non des barques;
Les ouragans ont pris la place des monarques;
Car pour faire un désert, Dieu, maître des vivants,
Commence par les rois et finit par les vents.
Ce peuple, voix, rumeurs, fourmillement de têtes,
Troupeau d’âmes, ému par les deuils et les fêtes,
Faisait le bruit que fait dans l’orage l’essaim,
Point inquiet d’avoir l’Océan pour voisin.

Donc cette ville avait des rois; ces rois superbes
Avaient sous eux les fronts comme un faucheur les herbes.
Étaient-ils méchants? Non. Ils étaient rois. Un roi
C’est un homme trop grand que trouble un vague effroi,
Qui, faisant plus de mal pour avoir plus de joie,
Chez les bêtes de somme est la bête de proie;
Mais ce n’est pas sa faute, et le sage est clément.
Un roi serait meilleur s’il naissait autrement;
L’homme est homme toujours; les crimes du despote
Sont faits par sa puissance, ombre où son âme flotte,
Par la pourpre qu’il traîne et dont on le revêt,
Et l’esclave serait tyran s’il le pouvait.

Donc cette ville était toute bâtie en briques.
On y voyait des tours, des bazars, des fabriques,
Des arcs, des palais pleins de luths mélodieux,
Et des monstres d’airain qu’on appelait les dieux.
Cette ville était gaie et barbare; ses places
Faisaient par leurs gibets rire les populaces;
On y chantait des chœurs pleins d’oubli, l’homme étant
L’ombre qui jette un souffle et qui dure un instant;
De claires eaux luisaient au fond des avenues;
Et les reines du roi se baignaient toutes nues
Dans les parcs où rôdaient des paons étoilés d’yeux;
Les marteaux, au dormeur nonchalant odieux,
Sonnaient, de l’aube au soir, sur les noires enclumes;

Les vautours se posaient, fouillant du bec leurs plumes,
Sur les temples, sans peur d’être chassés, sachant
Que l’idole féroce aime l’oiseau méchant;
Le tigre est bien venu près de l’hydre; et les aigles
Sentent qu’ils n’ont jamais enfreint aucunes règles,
Quand le sang coule auprès des autels radieux,
En venant partager le meurtre avec les dieux.
L’autel du temple était d’or pur, que rien ne souille,
Le toit était en cèdre et, de peur de la rouille,
Au lieu de clous avait des chevilles de bois.
Jour et nuit les clairons, les cistres, les hautbois,
De crainte que le Dieu farouche ne s’endorme,
Chantaient dans l’ombre. Ainsi vivait la ville énorme.
Les femmes y venaient pour s’y prostituer.
Mais un jour l’Océan se mit à remuer;
Doucement, sans courroux, du côté de la ville
Il rongea les rochers et les dunes, tranquille,
Sans tumulte, sans chocs, sans efforts haletants,
Comme un grave ouvrier qui sait qu’il a le temps;
Et lentement, ainsi qu’un mineur solitaire,
L’eau jamais immobile avançait sous la terre;
C’est en vain que sur l’herbe un guetteur assidu

Eût collé son oreille, il n’eût rien entendu;

L’eau creusait sans rumeur comme sans violence,
Et la ville faisait son bruit sur ce silence.
Si bien qu’un soir, à l’heure où tout semble frémir,
À l’heure où, se levant comme un sinistre émir,
Sirius apparaît, et sur l’horizon sombre
Donne un signal de marche aux étoiles sans nombre,
Les nuages qu’un vent l’un à l’autre rejoint
Et pousse, seuls oiseaux qui ne dormissent point,
La lune, le front blanc des monts, les pâles astres,
Virent soudain, maisons, dômes, arceaux, pilastres,
Toute la ville, ainsi qu’un rêve, en un instant,
Peuple, armée, et le roi qui buvait en chantant
Et qui n’eut pas le temps de se lever de table,
Crouler dans on ne sait quelle ombre épouvantable;
Et pendant qu’à la fois, de la base au sommet,
Ce chaos de palais et de tours s’abîmait,
On entendit monter un murmure farouche,
Et l’on vit brusquement s’ouvrir comme une bouche
Un trou d’où jaillissait un jet d’écume amer,
Gouffre où la ville entrait et d’où sortait la mer.
Et tout s’évanouit; rien ne resta que l’onde.

Maintenant on ne voit au loin que l’eau profonde
Par les vents remuée et seule sous les cieux.
Tel est l’ébranlement des flots mystérieux.

APRÈS LES DIEUX, LES ROIS

I

DE MESA À ATTILA

INSCRIPTION

(Neuf cents ans avant J.-C.)

C’est moi qui suis le roi, Mesa, fils de Chémos,
J’ai coupé la forêt de pins aux noirs rameaux,
Et j’ai bâti Baal-Méon, ville d’Afrique.
J’ai fait le mur de bois, j’ai fait le mur de brique;
Et j’ai dit : que chaque homme, à peine de prison,
Se creuse une citerne auprès de sa maison;
Car en hiver on a deux mois de grandes pluies;
Afin que les brebis, les chèvres et les truies
Puissent paître dehors au temps des maïs mûrs,

Je réserve aux troupeaux un champ fermé de murs.
C’est moi qui fis la porte et qui fis la tourelle.
Astarté règne, et j’ai fait la guerre pour elle;
Le dieu Chémos, mon père et son mari, m’aida
Quand je chassai de Gad Omri, roi de Juda.
J’ai construit Aroër, une ville très-forte;
J’ai bâti la tourelle et j’ai bâti la porte.
Les peuples me louaient parce que j’étais bon;
J’étais roi de l’armée immense de Dibon

Qui boit en chantant l’ombre et la mort, et qui mêle
Le sang fumant de l’aigle au lait de la chamelle;
Je marchais, étant juge et prince, à la clarté
De Chémos, de Dagon, de Bel et d’Astarté;
Et ce sont là les quatre étoiles qui sont reines.

J’ai creusé d’Ur à Tyr des routes souterraines.

Chémos m’a dit : « Reprends Nebo sur Israël. »
Et je n’ai jamais fait que ce que veut le ciel.
Maintenant dans ce puits je ferme la paupière.
Sachez que vous devez adorer cette pierre
Et brûler du bétel devant ce grand tombeau;
Car j’ai tué tous ceux qui vivaient dans Nebo,
J’ai nourri les corbeaux qui volent dans les nues,
J’ai fait vendre au marché les femmes toutes nues,
J’ai chargé de butin quatre cents éléphants,
J’ai cloué sur des croix tous les petits enfants,
Ma droite a balayé toutes ces races viles
Dans l’ombre, et j’ai rendu leurs anciens noms aux villes.

CASSANDRE SUR UN CHAR. CLYTEMNESTRE
LE CHŒUR

LE CHŒUR.

Elle est fille de roi. — Mais sa ville est en cendre.
Elle a droit à ce char et n’en veut pas descendre.
Depuis qu’on l’a saisie elle n’a point parlé.
Le marbre de Syrta, la neige de Thulé
N’ont pas plus de froideur que cette âpre captive.
Elle est à l’avenir formidable attentive.
Elle est pleine d’un dieu redoutable et muet;
Le sinistre Apollon d’Ombos, qui remuait
Dodone avec le souffle et Thèbe avec la lyre,

Mêle une clarté sombre à son morne délire.
Elle a la vision des choses qui seront;

Un reflet de vengeance est déjà sur son front;
Elle est princesse, elle est pythie, elle est prêtresse,
Elle est esclave. Étrange et lugubre détresse!
Elle vient sur un char, étant fille de roi.
Le peuple qui regarde aller, pâles d'effroi,
Les prisonniers pieds nus qu'on chasse à coups de lance,
Et qui rit de leurs cris, a peur de son silence.
(Le char s'arrête.)
CLYTEMNESTRE.

Femme, à pied. Tu n'es pas ici dans ton pays.
LE CHŒUR.

Allons, descends du char, c'est la reine, obéis.
CLYTEMNESTRE.

Crois-tu que j'ai le temps de t'attendre à la porte?
Hâte-toi. Car bientôt il faut que le roi sorte.
Peut-être entends-tu mal notre langue d'ici?
Si ce que je te dis ne se dit pas ainsi
Au pays dont tu viens et dont tu te sépares,
Parle en signes alors, fais comme les barbares.
LE CHŒUR.

Si l'on parlait sa langue, on saurait son secret.
On sent en la voyant ce qu'on éprouverait
Si l'on venait de prendre une bête farouche.
CLYTEMNESTRE.

Je ne lui parle plus. L'horreur ferme sa bouche.

Triste, elle songe à Troie, au ciel jadis serein.
Elle ne prendra pas l'habitude du frein
Sans le couvrir longtemps d'une sanglante écume.
(Clytemnestre sort.)
LE CHŒUR.

Cède au destin. Crois-moi. Je suis sans amertume.
Descends du char. Reçois la chaîne à ton talon.
CASSANDRE.

Dieux! Grands dieux! Terre et ciel! Apollon! Apollon!
APOLLON LOXIAS, dans l’ombre.

Je suis là. Tu vivras, afin que ton œil voie
Le flamboiement d’Argos plein des cendres de Troie.

L’ASIE

L’Asie est monstrueuse et fauve; elle regarde
Toute la terre avec une face hagarde,
Et la terre lui plaît, car partout il fait nuit;
L’Asie, où la hauteur des rois s’épanouit,
À ce contentement que l’univers est sombre;
Ici la Cimmérie, au-delà la Northumbre,

Au delà l’âpre hiver, l’horreur, les glaciers nus,
Et les monts ignorés sous les cieux inconnus;
Après l’inhabitable on voit l’infranchissable;
La neige fait au Nord ce qu’au Sud fait le sable;
Le pâle genre humain se perd dans la vapeur;
Le Caucase est hideux, les Dofrines font peur;
Au loin râle, en des mers d’où l’hirondelle émigre,
Thulé sous son volcan comme un daim sous un tigre.
Au pôle, où du corbeau l’orfraie entend l’appel,
Les cent têtes d’Orcus font un blême archipel,

Et, pareils au chaos, les océans funèbres
Roulent cette nuit, l’eau, sous ces flots, les ténèbres;
L’Asie en ce sépulcre a la couronne au front;
Nulle part son pouvoir sacré ne s’interrompt;
Elle règne sur tous les peuples qu’on dénombre;
Et tout ce qui n’est point à l’Asie est à l’ombre,
À la nuit, au désert, au sauvage aquilon;
Toutes les nations rampent sous son talon
Ou grelottent au Nord, sous la bise et la pluie;
Mais la Grèce est un point lumineux qui l’ennuie;
Il se pourrait qu’un jour cette clarté perçât,
Et rendît l’espérance à l’univers forçat;
L’Asie obscure et vaste en frémit sous son voile;
Et l’énorme noirceur cherche à tuer l’étoile.

II

LE DÉNOMBREMENT

On se mettait en route à l’heure où le jour naît.

Le bagage marchait le premier, puis venait
Le gros des nations, foule au hasard semée,
Qui faisait à peu près la moitié de l’armée.
Dire leurs noms, leurs cris, leurs chants, leurs pas, leur bruit,
Serait vouloir compter les souffles de la nuit;
Les peuples n’ont pas tous les mêmes mœurs; les Scythes,

Qui font à l’Occident de sanglantes visites,
Vont tout nus; le Macron, qui du Scythe est rival,
A pour casque une peau de tête de cheval
Dont il a sur le front les deux oreilles droites;
Ceux de Paphlagonie ont des bottes étroites
De peau tigrée, avec des clous sous les talons,
Et leurs arcs sont très-courts et leurs dards sont très-longs;
Les Daces, dont les rois ont pour palais un bouge,

Ont la moitié du corps peinte en blanc, l’autre en rouge,
Le Sogde emmène en guerre un singe, Béhémos,
Devant lequel l’augure inquiet dit des mots
Ténébreux, et pareils aux couleuvres sinistres;
On voit passer parmi les tambours et les cistres
Les deux sortes de fils du vieil Éthiopus,
Ceux-ci les cheveux plats, ceux-là les fronts crépus;
Les Bars au turban vert viennent des deux Chaldées;

Les piques des guerriers de Thrace ont dix coudées;
Ces peuples ont chez eux un oracle de Mars;
Comment énumérer les Sospires camards,

Les Lygiens, pour bain cherchant les immondices,
Les Saces, les Micois, les Parthes, les Dadyces,
Ceux de la mer Persique au front ceint de varechs,
Et ceux d’Assur armés presque comme les Grecs,

Artée et Sydamnès, rois du pays des fièvres,
Et les noirs Caspiens, vêtus de peaux de chèvres,
Et dont les javelots sont brûlés par le bout.

Comme dans la chaudière une eau se gonfle et bout,
Cette troupe s’enflait en avançant, de sorte
Qu’on eût dit qu’elle avait l’Afrique pour escorte,
Et l’Asie, et tout l’âpre et féroce Orient.
C’étaient les Nims, qui vont à la guerre en criant,
Les Sardes, conquérants de Sardaigne et de Corse,

Les Mosques tatoués sous leur bonnet d’écorce,
Les Gètes, et, hideux, pressant leurs rangs épais,
Les Bactriens, conduits par le mage Hystapès.
Les Tybarènes, fils des races disparues,
Avaient des boucliers couverts de peaux de grues;
Les Lybs, nègres des bois, marchaient au son des cors;

Leur habit était ceint par le milieu du corps,
Et chacun de ces noirs, outre les cimeterres,
Avait deux épieux, bons à la chasse aux panthères;
Ils habitaient jadis sur le fleuve Strymon.
Les Abrodes avaient l’air fauve du démon,
Et l’arc de bois de palme et la hache de pierre;
Les Gandars se teignaient de safran la paupière;

Les Syriens portaient des cuirasses de bois;
On entendait au loin la flûte et le hautbois
Des montagnards d’Abysse et le cri des Numides
Amenant, du pays où sont les Pyramides,
Des chevaux près desquels l’éclair est paresseux;
Ceux de Lydie étaient coiffés de cuivre, et ceux
D’Hyrcanie acceptaient pour chef de leur colonne
Megapane, qui fut prince de Babylone;
Puis s’avançaient les blonds Miliens, studieux
De ne point offenser les démons ni les dieux;
Puis ceux d’Ophir, enfants des mers mystérieuses;

Puis ceux du fleuve Phta, qu’ombragent les yeuses,
Cours d’eau qui, hors des monts où l’asphodèle croît,
Sort par un défilé long et sinistre, étroit
Au point qu’il n’y pourrait passer une charrette;
Puis les Gours, nés dans l’ombre où l’univers s’arrête;
Les satrapes du Gange avaient des brodequins
Jusqu’à mi-jambe, ainsi que les chefs africains.
Leur prince était Arthane, homme de renommée,

Fils d’Artha, que le roi Cambyse avait aimée
Au point de lui bâtir un temple en jade vert.
Puis venait un essaim de coureurs du désert,
Les Sagastes, ayant pour toute arme une corde.
La légion marchait à côté de la horde,
L’homme nu coudoyait l’homme cuirassé d’or.
Une captive en deuil, la sibylle d’Endor,
S’indignait, murmurant de lugubres syllabes;

Les chevaux ayant peur des chameaux, les Arabes
Se tenaient à distance et venaient les derniers;
Après eux cheminaient, encombrés des paniers
Où brillait le butin rapporté des ravages,
Cent chars d'osier traînés par des ânes sauvages.

L'attroupement formé de cette façon-là
Par tous ceux que la Perse en ses rangs appela,
Épais comme une neige au souffle de la bise,
Commandé par vingt chefs monstrueux, Mégabise,
Hermamythre, Masange, Acrise, Artaphernas,
Et poussé par les rois aux grands assassinats,
Cet énorme tumulte humain, semblable aux rêves,
Cet amas bigarré d'archers, de porte-glaives,
Et de cavaliers droits sur les lourds étriers,
Défilait, et ce tas de marcheurs meurtriers

Passait pendant sept jours et sept nuits dans les plaines,
Troupeau de combattants aux farouches haleines,
Vaste et terrible, noir comme le Phlégéton,
Et qu'on faisait marcher à grands coups de bâton.
Et ce nuage était de deux millions d'hommes.

III

LA GARDE

Ninive, Sybaris, Chypre, et les cinq Sodomes

Ayant fourni beaucoup de ces soldats, la loi
Ne les admettait point dans la garde du roi.
L'armée est une foule; elle chante, elle hue;
Mais la garde, jamais mêlée à la cohue,
Muette, comme on est muet près des autels,
Marchait seule; et d'abord venaient les Immortels,
Semblables aux lions secouant leurs crinières;
Rien n'était comparable au frisson des bannières

Ouvrant et refermant leurs plis pleins de dragons;
Tout le sérail du roi suivait dans des fourgons;

Puis marchaient, plus pressés que l’herbe des collines,
Les eunuques, armés de longues javelines;
Puis les bourreaux, masqués, traînant les appareils
De torture et d’angoisse, à des griffes pareils,
Et la cuve où l’on fait bouillir l’huile et le nitre.
Le Perse a la tiare et le Mède a la mitre;
Les Dix mille, persans, mèdes, tous couronnés,
S’avançaient, fiers, ainsi que des frères aînés,
Et ces soldats mitrés étaient sous la conduite
D’Alphès, qui savait tous les chemins, hors la fuite;
Et devant eux couraient, libres et sans liens,

Ces grands chevaux sacrés qu’on nomme Nyséens.
Puis, commandés chacun par un roi satellite,
Venaient trente escadrons de cavaliers d’élite,
Tous la pique baissée à cause du roi, tous
Vêtus d’or sous des peaux de zèbres ou de loups;
Ces hommes étaient beaux comme l’aube sereine;
Puis des prêtres portaient le pétrin où la reine
Faisait cuire le pain sans orge et sans levain;
Huit chevaux blancs tiraient le chariot divin
De Jupiter, devant lequel le clairon sonne
Et dont le cocher marche à pied, vu que personne
N’a le droit de monter au char de Jupiter.

Les constellations qu’au fond du sombre éther
On entrevoit ainsi qu’en un bois les dryades,
Tous ces profonds flambeaux du ciel, ces myriades
De clartés, Arcturus, Céphée, et l’alcyon
De la mer étoilée et noire, Procyon,
Pollux qui vient vers nous, Castor qui s’en éloigne,
Cet amas de soleils qui pour les dieux témoigne,
N’a pas plus de splendeur et de fourmillement
Que cette armée en marche autour du roi dormant;

Car le roi sommeillait sur son char formidable.

IV

LE ROI

Il était là, superbe, obscur, inabordable;
Par moments, il bâillait, disant : quelle heure est-il?
Artabane son oncle, homme auguste et subtil,
Répondait : Fils des dieux, roi des trois Ecbatanes,
Où les fleuves sacrés coulent sous les platanes,
Il n’est pas nuit encor, le soleil est ardent,
Ô roi, reposez-vous, dormez, et cependant,
Je vais vous dénombrer votre armée inconnue
De vous-même et pareille aux aigles dans la nue.
Dormez. Alors, tandis qu’il nommait les drapeaux
Du monde entier, le roi rentrait dans son repos,
Et se rendormait, sombre; et le grand char d’ébène
Avait, sur son timon de structure thébaine,
Pour cocher un seigneur nommé Patyramphus.

Deux mille bataillons, mêlant leurs pas confus,
Mille éléphants portant chacun sa tour énorme,
Suivaient, et d’un croissant l’armée avait la forme;
L’archer suprême était Mardonius, bâtard;
L’armée était nombreuse à ce point que, plus tard,
Elle but en un jour tout le fleuve Scamandre;
Les villes derrière elle étaient des tas de cendre;
Tout saignait et brûlait quand elle avait passé.
On enjamba l’Indus comme on saute un fossé.
Artabane ordonnait tout ce qu’un chef décide;

Pour le reste on prenait les conseils d’Hermécyde,
Homme considéré des peuples du Levant.

L’armée partit ainsi de Lydie, observant

Le même ordre jusqu'au Caÿce, et, de ce fleuve,
Gagna la vieille Thèbe après la Thèbe neuve,
Et traversa le sable immense où la guida
Par-dessus l'horizon le haut du mont Ida.
Puis on vit l'Ararat, cîme où s'arrêta l'Arche.
Les gens de pied faisaient dans cette rude marche
Dix stades chaque jour et les cavaliers vingt.

Quand l'armée eut passé le fleuve Halys, on vint

En Phrygie, et l'on vit les sources du Méandre;
C'est là qu'Apollon prit la peine de suspendre
Dans Célène, à trois clous, au poteau du marché,
La peau de Marsyas, le satyre écorché.
On gagna Colossos, chère à Minerve Aptère,
Où le fleuve Lycus se cache sous la terre,
Puis Cydre où fut Crésus, le maître universel,
Puis Anane, et l'étang d'où l'on tire le sel;
Puis on vit Canos, mont plus affreux que l'Érèbe,
Mais sans en approcher; et l'on prit Callathèbe
Où des chiens de Diane on entend les abois,
Ville où l'homme est pareil à l'abeille des bois

Et fait du miel avec de la fleur de bruyère.
Le jour d'après on vint à Sardes, ville altière
D'où l'on fit dire aux Grecs d'attendre avec effroi,
Et de tout tenir prêt pour le souper du roi.
Puis on coupa l'Athos que la foudre fréquente;
Et, des eaux de Sanos jusqu'à la mer d'Acanthe,
On fit un long canal évasé par le haut;
Enfin, sur une plage où souffle ce vent chaud
Qui vient d'Afrique, terre ignorée et maudite,
On fit près d'Abydos, entre Seste et Médyte,
Un vaste pont porté par de puissants donjons,

Et Tyr fournit la corde et l'Égypte les joncs.
Ce pont pouvait donner passage à des armées.

Mais une nuit, ainsi que montent des fumées,
Un nuage farouche arriva, d'où sortit
Le semoun, près duquel l'ouragan est petit;
Ce vent sur ces travaux poussa les flots humides,
Rompit arches, piliers, tabliers, pyramides,
Et heurtant l'Hellespont contre le Pont-Euxin,
Fauve, il détruisit tout, comme on chasse un essaim;
Et la mer fut fatale. Alors le roi sublime

Cria : — Tu n'es qu'un gouffre, et je t'insulte, abîme!
Moi je suis le sommet. Lâche mer, souviens-t'en. —
Et donna trois cents coups de fouet à l'Océan.

Et chacun de ces coups de fouet toucha Neptune.

Alors ce dieu, qu'adore et que sert la Fortune,
Mouvante comme lui, créa Léonidas,
Et de ces trois cents coups il fit trois cents soldats,
Gardiens des monts, gardiens des lois, gardiens des villes,
Et Xercès les trouva debout aux Thermopyles.

LE DÉTROIT DE L'EURIPE

Il faisait nuit; le ciel sinistre était sublime;
La terre offrait sa brume et la mer son abîme.
Voici la question qui se posait devant
Des hommes secoués par l'onde et par le vent :
Faut-il fuir le détroit d'Euripe? Y faut-il faire

Un front terrible à ceux que le destin préfère,
Et qui sont les affreux conquérants sans pitié?
Ils ont une moitié, veulent l'autre moitié,
Et ne s'arrêteront qu'ayant toute la terre.
Demeurer, ou partir? Choix grave. Angoisse austère.
Les chefs délibéraient sur un grand vaisseau noir;
Bien que ce ne soit pas la coutume d'avoir

Des colloques la nuit entre les capitaines,
La guerre ayant déjà des chances incertaines,
Et l'ombre ne pouvant dans les camps soucieux,
Qu'ajouter à la nuit des cœurs la nuit des cieux,
Bien que l'heure lugubre où le prêtre médite
Soit aux discussions des soldats interdite,
On était en conseil, vu l'urgence. Il fallait
Savoir si l'on peut prendre une hydre en un filet,
Et la Perse en un piège, et forcer les passages
De l'Euripe malgré l'abîme et les présages.
Les hommes ont l'énigme éternelle autour d'eux.
Devait-on accepter un combat hasardeux?
Les nefs étaient à l'ancre autour du grand navire.
Les mâts se balançaient sur le flot qui chavire,
L'aquilon remuait l'eau que rien ne corrompt;
Et sur la poupe altière où veillaient, casque au front,
Les archers de Platée, hommes de haute taille,

Thémistocle, debout en habit de bataille,
Cherchant à distinguer dans l'ombre des lueurs,
Parlait aux commandants de la flotte, rêveurs.

— Eurybiade, à qui Pallas confie Athène,
Noble Adymanthe, fils d'Ocyre, capitaine

De Corinthe, et vous tous, princes et chefs, sachez
Que les dieux sont sur nous à cette heure penchés;
Tandis que ce conseil hésite, attend, varie,
Je vois poindre une larme aux yeux de la patrie;
La Grèce en deuil chancelle et cherche un point d'appui.
Rois, je sais que tout ment, demain trompe aujourd'hui,
Le jour est louche, l'air est fuyant, l'onde est lâche;
Le sort est une main qui nous tient, puis nous lâche;
J'estime peu la vague instable; mais je dis
Qu'un gouffre est moins souvent sous des pieds plus hardis
Et qu'il faut traiter l'eau comme on traite la vie,
Avec force et dédain; et, n'ayant d'autre envie

Que la bataille, ô grecs, je la voudrais tenter!
Il est temps que les cœurs renoncent à douter,
Et tout sera perdu, peuple, si tu n'opposes
La fermeté de l'homme aux trahisons des choses.
Nous sommes de fort près par Némésis suivis,
Tout penche, et c'est pourquoi je vous dis mon avis.
Restons dans ce détroit. Ce qui me détermine,
C'est de sauver Mégare, Égine et Salamine,
Et je trouve prudent en même temps que fier

De protéger la terre en défendant la mer.
L'immense roi venu des ténèbres profondes
Est sur le tremblement redoutable des ondes,
Qu'il y reste, et luttons corps à corps. Rois, je veux
Prendre aux talons celui qui nous prend aux cheveux,
Et frapper cet Achille à l'endroit vulnérable.
Que l'augure, appuyé sur son sceptre d'érable,
Interroge le foie et le cœur des moutons,
Et tende dans la nuit ses deux mains à tâtons,
C'est son affaire; moi soldat, j'ai pour augure
Le Glaive, et c'est par lui que je me transfigure.
Combattre, c'est démence? Ah! soyons insensés!
Je sais bien que ce prince est effrayant, je sais
Que du vaisseau qu'il monte un démon tient la barre;
Ces Mèdes sont hideux, et leur flotte barbare
Fait fuir éperdûment la flottante Délos;
Ils ont bouleversé la mer, troublé ses flots,
Et dispersé si loin devant eux les écumes
Que l'eau de l'Hellespont va se briser à Cumes;
Je sais cela. Je sais aussi qu'on peut mourir.

UN PRÊTRE.

Ce n'est point pour l'Hadès, trop pressé de s'ouvrir,
Que la nature, source et principe des choses,
Tend sa triple mamelle à tant de bouches roses;
Elle n'a point pour but le monstrueux tombeau;

Elle hait l’affreux Mars soufflant sur son flambeau;
Tendre, elle donne, au seuil des jours pleins de chimères,
Pour berceuse aux enfants l’espérance des mères,
Et le glaive farouche est par elle abhorré
Quand elle fait jaillir des seins le lait sacré.
THÉMISTOCLE.

Prêtre, je sais cela. Mais la patrie existe.
Pour les vaincus, la lutte est un grand bonheur triste

Qu’il faut faire durer le plus longtemps qu’on peut.
Tâchons de faire au fil des Parques un tel nœud
Que leur fatal rouet déconcerté s’arrête.
Ici nous couvrons tout, de l’Eubée à la Crète;
C’est donc ici qu’il faut frapper ce roi, contraint
De confier sa flotte au détroit qui l’étreint;
Nous sommes peu nombreux, mais profitons de l’ombre;
La grande audace peut cacher le petit nombre,
Et d’ailleurs à la mort nous irons radieux.
Montrons nos cœurs vaillants à ce grand ciel plein d’yeux.
Si l’abîme est obscur, les étoiles sont claires;
Les heures noires sont de bonnes conseillères,
Ô rois, et je reçois volontiers de la nuit
L’avis sombre qui fait que l’ennemi s’enfuit.
Par le tombeau béant je me laisse convaincre;
Consentir à mourir c’est consentir à vaincre;
La tombe est la maison du pâle sphinx guerrier
Qui promet un cyprès et qui donne un laurier;
Elle se ferme au brave osant heurter sa porte;
Car, devant un héros, la mort est la moins forte.
C’est pourquoi ceux qui sont imprudents ont raison.
Les deux mille vaisseaux qu’on voit à l’horizon
Ne me font pas peur. J’ai nos quatre cents galères,
L’onde, l’ombre, l’écueil, le vent, et nos colères.
Il est temps que les dieux nous aident, et d’ailleurs
Nous serons pires, nous, s’ils ne sont pas meilleurs.

Nous les ferons rougir de nous trahir. Le sage,
C’est le hardi. Vaincu, moi, je crache au visage
Du destin; et, vainqueur, et mon pays sauvé,
J’entre au temple et je baise à genoux le pavé.
Combattons. —
Comme s’ils entendaient ces paroles

Les vaisseaux secouaient aux vents leurs banderolles;
Deux jours après, à l’heure où l’aube se leva,
Les chevaux du soleil dirent : Xercès s’en va!

LA CHANSON DE SOPHOCLE

À SALAMINE

Me voilà, je suis un éphèbe,
Mes seize ans sont d’azur baignés;
Guerre, déesse de l’érèbe,
Sombre guerre aux cris indignés,

Je viens à toi, la nuit est noire!
Puisque Xercès est le plus fort,
Prends-moi pour la lutte et la gloire
Et pour la tombe; mais d’abord

Toi dont le glaive est le ministre,
Toi que l’éclair suit dans les cieux,
Choisis-moi de ta main sinistre
Une belle fille aux doux yeux,

Qui ne sache pas autre chose
Que rire d’un rire ingénu,
Qui soit divine, ayant la rose
Aux deux pointes de son sein nu,

Et ne soit pas plus importune

À l’homme plein du noir destin

Que ne l’est au profond Neptune
La vive étoile du matin.

Donne-la-moi, que je la presse
Vite sur mon cœur enflammé,
Je veux bien mourir, ô déesse,
Mais pas avant d’avoir aimé.

LES BANNIS

Cynthée, Athénien proscrit, disait ceci :
Un jour, moi Cynthœus et Méphialte aussi,
Tous deux exilés, lui de Sparte, moi d’Athènes,
Nous suivions le sentier que voici dans les plaines,
Car on nous a bannis au désert de Thryos.
Un bruit pareil au bruit de mille chariots,
Un fracas comme en peut faire un million d’hommes,
S’éleva tout à coup dans la plaine où nous sommes;
Alors pour écouter nous nous sommes assis;
Et ce grand bruit venait du côté d’éleusis;
Or Éleusis était alors abandonnée,

Et tout était désert de Thèbe à Mantinée
À cause du ravage horrible des Persans.
Les champs sans laboureurs, les routes sans passants,
Attristaient le regard depuis plus d’une année.
Nous étions là, la face à l’orient tournée,
Et l’étrange rumeur sur nos têtes passait;
Et Méphialte alors me dit : Qu’est-ce que c’est?
— Je l’ignore, lui dis-je. Il reprit : C’est l’Attique
Qui se soulève, ou bien c’est l’Iacchus mystique
Qui parle bruyamment dans le ciel à quelqu’un.
— Ami, ce que l’exil a de plus importun,
Repris-je, c’est qu’on est en proie à la chimère.

Et cependant le bruit cessa. — Fils de ta mère,
Me dit-il, je suis sûr qu'on parle en ce ciel bleu,
Et c'est la voix d'un peuple ou c'est la voix d'un dieu.
Maintenant comprends-tu ce que cela veut dire?
— Non. — Ni moi. Cependant je sens comme une lyre
Qui dans mon cœur s'éveille et chante, et qui répond,
Sereine, à ce fracas orageux et profond.
— Et moi, dis-je, j'entends de même une harmonie
Dans mon âme, et pourtant la rumeur est finie.
Alors Méphialtès s'écria : — Crois et vois.

Nous avons tous les deux entendu cette voix;
Elle n'a point passé pour rien sur notre tête;
Elle nous donne avis que la revanche est prête;
Qu'aux champs où, jeune, au tir de l'arc je m'exerçais
Des enfants ont grandi qui chasseront Xercès!
Cette voix a l'accent farouche du prodige.
Si c'est le cri d'un peuple, il est pour nous, te dis-je;
Si c'est un cri des dieux, il est contre ceux-là
Par qui le sol sacré de l'Olympe trembla.
Xercès souille la Grèce auguste. Il faut qu'il parte! —
Et moi banni d'Athène et lui banni de Sparte,
Nous disions; lui : — Que Sparte, invincible à jamais,
Soit comme un lever d'astre au-dessus des sommets! —
Et moi : — Qu'Athènes vive et soit du ciel chérie! —
Et nous étions ainsi pensifs pour la patrie.

L’HOMME.
Nous nous offrons à toi.
Car avec du néant nous pouvons faire un roi.
MAJORIEN.
César vous a vaincus.
L’HOMME.
Qui, César?
MAJORIEN.
Nul ne doute
Que Dentatus n’ait mis vos hordes en déroute.

L’HOMME.
Va-t’en le demander aux os de Dentatus.
MAJORIEN.
Spryx vous dompta.
L’HOMME.
Je ris.
MAJORIEN.
Cimber vous a battus.
L’HOMME.
Nous n’avons de battu que le fer de nos casques.
MAJORIEN
Qui donc vous a chassés jusqu’ici?
L’HOMME.
Les bourrasques,
Les tempêtes, la pluie et la grêle, le vent,

L’éclair, l’immensité; personne de vivant.
Nul n’est plus grand que nous sur la terre où nous sommes.
Nous fuyons devant Dieu, mais non devant les hommes.
Nous voulons notre part des tièdes horizons.
Si tu nous la promets, nous t’aidons. Finissons.
Veux-tu de nous? La paix. N’en veux-tu pas? La guerre.
MAJORIEN.
Me redoutez-vous?
L’HOMME.
Non.
MAJORIEN.
Me connaissez-vous?
L’HOMME.
Guère.
MAJORIEN.
Que suis-je pour vous?
L’HOMME.
Rien. Un homme. Le romain.
MAJORIEN.
Mais où donc allez-vous?
L’HOMME.
La terre est le chemin,
Le but est l’infini, nous allons à la vie.
Là-bas une lueur immense nous convie.
Nous nous arrêterons lorsque nous serons là.

MAJORIEN.
Quel est ton nom à toi qui parles?
L’HOMME.
Attila.

APRÈS LES DIEUX, LES ROIS

II

DE RAMIRE À COSME DE MÉDICIS

L’HYDRE

Quand le fils de Sancha, femme du duc Geoffroy,
Gil, ce grand chevalier nommé l’Homme qui passe,
Parvint, la lance haute et la visière basse,
Aux confins du pays dont Ramire était roi,
Il vit l’hydre. Elle était effroyable et superbe;
Et, couchée au soleil, elle rêvait dans l’herbe.
Le chevalier tira l’épée et dit : C’est moi.
Et l’hydre, déroulant ses torsions farouches,
Et se dressant, parla par une de ses bouches,
Et dit : — Pour qui viens-tu, fils de dona Sancha?
Est-ce pour moi, réponds, ou pour le roi Ramire?
— C’est pour le monstre. — Alors c’est pour le roi, beau sire.
Et l’hydre, reployant ses nœuds, se recoucha.

LE ROMANCERO DU CID

I

L’ENTRÉE DU ROI.

Vous ne m’allez qu’à la hanche;
Quoique altier et hasardeux,
Vous êtes petit, roi Sanche;
Mais le Cid est grand pour deux.

Quand chez moi je vous accueille

Dans ma tour et dans mon fort,
Vous tremblez comme la feuille,
Roi Sanche, et vous avez tort.

Sire, ma herse est fidèle;
Sire, mon seuil est pieux;
Et ma bonne citadelle
Rit à l’aurore des cieux.

Ma tour n’est qu’un tas de pierre,
Roi, mais j’en suis le seigneur;
Elle porte son vieux lierre
Comme moi mon vieil honneur.

Mes hirondelles sont douces;
Mes bois ont un pur parfum;
Mes nids n’ont pas dans leurs mousses
Un cheveu pris à quelqu’un.

Tout passant, roi de Castille,
More ou juif, rabbin, émir,
Peut entrer dans ma bastille
Tranquillement, et dormir.

Je suis le Cid calme et sombre
Qui n’achète ni ne vend,
Et je n’ai sur moi que l’ombre
De la main du Dieu vivant.

Cependant je vous admire,
Vous m’avez fait triste et nu,
Et vous venez chez moi, sire;
Roi, soyez le mal venu.

II

SOUVENIR DE CHIMÈNE.

Si le mont faisait reproche
À l’air froid, aigre et jaloux,
C’est moi qui serais la roche,
Et le vent ce serait vous.

Roi, j’en connais qui trahissent,
Mais je suis le vieux soumis;

Tous vos amis me haïssent,
Moi je hais vos ennemis.

Et dans mon dédain je mêle
Tous vos favoris, ô roi;
L’épaisseur de ma semelle
Me suffit entre eux et moi.

Roi, quand j’épousai ma femme,
J’eus à me plaindre de vous;
Pourtant je n’ai rien dans l’âme,
Dieu fut grand, le ciel fut doux,

L’évêque avait sa barette;
On marchait sur des tapis;
Chimène eut sa gorgerette
Pleine de fleurs et d’épis.

J’avais un habit de moire
Sous l’acier de mon corset.

Je ne garde en ma mémoire
Que le soleil qu’il faisait.

Entrez en paix dans ma ville.
On vous parlerait pourtant
D’une façon plus civile
Si l’on était plus content.
III

LE ROI JALOUX.

Parce que, Léon, la Manche,
L’Èbre, on vous a tout donné,
Et qu’on était grand, don Sanche,
Avant que vous fussiez né,

Est-ce une raison pour être
Vil envers moi qui suis vieux?
Roi, c’est trop d’être le maître
Et d’être aussi l’envieux.

Nous, fils de race guerrière,
Seigneur, nous vous en voulons
Pour vos rires par derrière
Qui nous mordent les talons.

Est-ce qu’à votre service
Le Cid s’est estropié
Au point d’avoir quelque vice
Dans le poignet ou le pié,

Qu’il s’entend, sans frein ni règle,
Moquer par vos gens à vous?
Ne suis-je plus qu’un vieux aigle
À réjouir les hiboux?

Roi, qu’on mette, avec sa chape,
Sa mître et son palefroi,
Dans une balance un pape
Portant sur son dos un roi;

Ils pèseront dans leur gloire
Moins que moi, Campeador,
Quand le roi serait d’ivoire,
Quand le pape serait d’or!

IV

LE ROI INGRAT.

Je vous préviens qu'on me fâche,
Moi qui n'ai rien que ma foi,

Lorsqu'étant homme, on est lâche,
Et qu'on est traître, étant roi.

Je sens vos ruses sans nombre;
Oui, je sens tes trahisons.
Moi pour le bien, toi pour l'ombre,
Dans la nuit nous nous croisons.

Je te sers, et je m'en vante;
Tu me hais et tu me crains;
Et mon cheval t'épouvante
Quand il jette au vent ses crins.

Tu te fais, tristes refuges,
Adorer soir et matin
En castillan par tes juges,
Par tes prêtres en latin.

Roi, si deux et deux font quatre,
Un fourbe est un mécréant.
Quant à moi, je veux rabattre
Plus d'un propos malséant.

Quand don Sanche est dans sa ville,
Il me parle avec hauteur;
Je suis un bien vieux pupille
Pour un si jeune tuteur.

Je ne veux pas qu'on me manque.
Quand tu me fais défier

Par ton clerc à Salamanque,
À Jaen par ton greffier;

Quand, derrière tes murailles
Où tu chasses aux moineaux,

Roi, je t’entends qui me railles,
Moi, l’arracheur de créneaux,

Je pourrais y mettre un terme;
Je t’enverrais, roi des Goths,
D’une chiquenaude à Lerme
Ou d’un soufflet à Burgos.

V

LE ROI DÉFIANT.

Quand je songe en ma tanière
Mordant ma barbe et rêvant,
Regardant dans ma bannière
Les déchirures du vent,

Ton effroi sur moi se penche.
Tremblant, par tes alguazils
Tu te fais garder, roi Sanche,
Contre mes sombres exils.

Moi, je m’en ris. Peu m’importe
Ô roi, quand un vil gardien

Couche en travers de ta porte,
Qu’il soit homme ou qu’il soit chien!

Tu dis à ton économe,
À tes pages blancs ou verts :
— « À quoi pense ce bonhomme
« Qui regarde de travers?

« À quoi donc est-ce qu’il songe?
« Va-t-il rompre son lien?
« J’ai peur. Quel est l’os qu’il ronge?
« Est-ce son nom ou le mien?

« Qu’est-ce donc qu’il prémédite?
« S’il n’est traître, il en a l’air.
« Dans sa montagne maudite
« Ce baron-là n’est pas clair.

« À quoi pense ce convive
« Des loups et des bûcherons?
« J’ai peur. Est-ce qu’il ravive
« La fraîcheur des vieux affronts?

« Le laisser libre est peu sage;
« Le Cid est mal muselé. » —
Roi, c’est moi qui suis ma cage
Et c’est moi qui suis ma clé.

C’est moi qui ferme mon antre;
Mes rocs sont mes seuls trésors;

Et c’est moi qui me dis : rentre!
Et c’est moi qui me dis : sors!

Soit que je vienne ou que j’aille,
Je tire seul mon verrou.
Ah! Tu trouves que je bâille
Trop librement dans mon trou!

Tu voudrais dans ma vieillesse,
Comme un dogue dans ta cour,
M’avoir, moi, le Cid, en laisse,
Et me tenir dans ma tour,

Et me tenir dans mes lierres,
Gardé comme les brigands... —
Va mettre des muselières
Aux gueules des ouragans!

VI

LE ROI ABJECT.

Roi que gêne la cuirasse,
Roi qui m’as si mal payé,

Tu fais douter de ta race;
Et, dans sa tombe ennuyé,

Ton vieux père, âme loyale,
Dit : — Quelque bohémien
A dans la crèche royale
Mis son fils au lieu du mien! —

Roi, ma meilleure cuisine
C’est du pain noir, le sais-tu,
Avec quelque âpre racine,
Le soir quand on s’est battu.

M’as-tu nourri sous ta tente,
Et suis-je ton écolier?
M’as-tu donné ma patente
De comte et de chevalier?

Roi, je vis dans la bataille.
Si tu veux, comparons-nous.
Pour ne point passer ta taille,
Je vais me mettre à genoux.

Pendant que tu fais tes pâques
Et que tu dis ton credo,
Je prends les tours de Saint-Jacques

Et les monts d’Oviédo.

Je ne m’en fais pas accroire.
Toi-même tu reconnais
Que j’ai la peau toute noire
D’avoir porté le harnais.

Seigneur, tu fis une faute
Quand tu me congédias;
C’est mal de chasser un hôte,
Fou de chasser Ruy Diaz.

Roi, c’est moi qui te protége.
On craint le son de mon cor.
On croit voir dans ton cortége
Un peu de mon ombre encor.

Partout, dans les abbayes,
Dans les forts baissant leurs ponts,
Tes volontés obéies
Font du mal, dont je réponds.

Roi par moi; sans moi, poupée!
Le respect qu’on a pour toi,
La longueur de mon épée
En est la mesure, ô roi!

Ce pays ne connaît guère,
Du Tage à l’Almonacid,
D’autre musique de guerre
Que le vieux clairon du Cid.

Mon nom prend toute l’Espagne,
Toute la mer à témoin;
Ma fanfare de montagne
Vient de haut et s’entend loin.

Mon pas fait du bruit sur terre,
Et je passe mon chemin
Dans la rumeur militaire
D’un triomphateur romain.

Et tout tremble, Irun, Coïmbre,
Santander, Almodovar,

Sitôt qu’on entend le timbre
Des cymbales de Bivar.

VII

LE ROI FOURBE.

Certe, il tient moins de noblesse
Et de bonté, vois-tu bien,
Roi, dans ton collier d’Altesse,
Que dans le collier d’un chien!

Ta foi royale est fragile.
Elle affirme, jure et fuit.
Roi, tu mets sur l’évangile
Une main pleine de nuit.

Avec toi tout est précaire,
Surtout quand tu t’es signé
Devant quelque reliquaire
Où le saint tremble indigné.

À tes traités, verbiage,
Je préférerais souvent

Les promesses du nuage
Et la parole du vent.

La parole qu’un roi fausse
Derrière les gens trahis,

N’est plus que la sombre fosse
De la pudeur d’un pays.

Moi, je tiens pour périls graves,
Et je dois le déclarer,
Ce qu’en arrière des braves
Les traîtres peuvent jurer.

Roi, vous l’avouerez, j’espère,
Mieux vaut avoir au talon
Le venin d’une vipère
Que le serment d’un félon.

Je suis dans ma seigneurie,
Parlant haut, quoique vassal.
Après cela, je vous prie
De ne pas le prendre mal.

VIII

LE ROI VOLEUR.

Roi, fallait-il que tu vinsses
Pour nous écraser d’impôts?
Nous vivons dans nos provinces,
Pauvres sous nos vieux drapeaux.

Nous bravons tes cavalcades.
Sommes-nous donc des vilains
Pour engraisser des alcades
Et nourrir des chapelains?

Quant à payer, roi bravache,
Jamais! Et j’en fais serment.
Ma ville est-elle une vache
Pour la traire effrontément?

Je vais continuer, sire,

Et te parler du passé,
Puisqu’il est bon de tout dire
Et puisque j’ai commencé.

Roi, tu m’as pris mes villages,
Roi, tu m’as pris mes vassaux;
Tu m’as pris mes grands feuillages
Où j’écoutais les oiseaux;

Roi, tu m’as pris mon domaine,
Mon champ, de saules bordé;
Tu m’allais prendre Chimène,
Roi, mais je t’ai regardé.

Si les rois étaient pendables,
Je t’aurais offert déjà
Dans mes ongles formidables
Au gibet d’Albavieja.

D’ombre en vain tu t’environnes;
Ma colère un jour pensa
Prendre l’or de tes couronnes
Pour ferrer Babieça.

Je suis plein de rêves sombres,
Ayant, vieux suspect vainqueur,
Toute ma gloire en décombres
Dans le plus noir de mon cœur.

IX

LE ROI SOUDARD.

Quand vous entrez en campagne,
Louche orfraie au fatal vol,
On ferait honte à l’Espagne
De vous nommer espagnol.

Sire, on se bat dans les plaines,
Sire, on se bat dans les monts;
Les campagnes semblent pleines
D’archanges et de démons.

On se bat dans les provinces;
Et ce choc de boucliers
Va de vous les petits princes
À nous les grands chevaliers.

Les rocs ont des citadelles
Et les villes ont des tours
Où volent à tire d’ailes
Les aigles et les vautours.

La guerre est le cri du reitre,
Du vaillant et du maraud,
Un jeu d’en bas, et peut-être
Un jugement de là-haut;

La guerre, cette aventure
Sur qui plane le corbeau,
Se résout en nourriture
Pour les bêtes du tombeau;

Le chacal se désaltère
À tous ces sanglants hasards;
Et c’est pour les vers de terre
Que travaillent les césars;

Les camps sont de belles choses;
Mais l’homme loyal ne croit

Qu’à la justice des causes
Et qu’à la bonté du droit.

Car la guerre est folle et rude.

Pour la faire honnêtement
Il faut une certitude
Prise dans le firmament.

Je remarque en mes tristesses
Que la gloire aux durs sentiers
Ne connaît pas les altesses
Et s’en passe volontiers.

Un soldat vêtu de serge
Est parfois son favori;
Et l’épée est une vierge
Qui veut choisir son mari.

Roi, les guerres que vous faites
Sont les guerres d’un félon
Qui souffle dans des trompettes
Avec un bruit d’aquilon;

Qui, ne risquant son panache
Qu’à demi dans les brouillards,
S’il voit des hommes se cache,
Et vient s’il voit des vieillards;

Qui, se croyant Alexandre,
Ne laisse dans les maisons
Que des os dans de la cendre
Et du sang sur des tisons;

Et qui, riant sous les portes,
Vous montre, quand vous entrez,
Sur des tas de femmes mortes
Des tas d’enfants éventrés.

X

LE ROI COUARD.

Roi, dans tes courses damnées,
Avec tes soldats nouveaux,
Ne va pas aux Pyrénées,
Ne va pas à Roncevaux.

Ces roches sont des aïeules;
Les mères des océans.
Elles se défendraient seules;
Car ces monts sont des géants.

Une forte race d’hommes,
Pleins de l’âpreté du lieu,
Vit là loin de vos sodomes
Avec les chênes de Dieu.

Y passer est téméraire.
Nul encor n’a deviné
Si le chêne est le grand frère
Ou bien si l’homme est l’aîné.

Ce peuple est là, loin du monde,
Libre hier, libre demain.
Sur ces hommes l’éclair gronde;
Leur chien leur lèche la main.

Hercule y vint. Tout recule
Dans ces monts où fuit l’isard.
Roi, César après Hercule,
Charlemagne après César,

Ont crié miséricorde
Devant ces pâtres jaloux
Chaussés de souliers de corde
Et vêtus de peaux de loups.

Dieu, caché sous leur feuillage,
Prit ce noir pays vaillant

Pour faire naître Pélage,
Pour faire mourir Roland.

Si jamais, dans ces repaires,
Risquant tes hautains défis,
Tu venais voir si les pères
Vivent encor dans les fils,

Eusses-tu vingt mille piques,
Eusses-tu, roi fanfaron,

Tes bannières, tes musiques,
Tout ton bruit de moucheron,

Pour que tu t’en ailles vite,
Fussent-ils un contre cent,
Et pour qu’on te voie en fuite,
De mont en mont bondissant,

Comme on voit des rocs descendre
Les torrents en février,
Il te suffirait d’entendre
La trompe d’un chevrier.

XI

LE ROI MOQUEUR.

Quand, barbe grise, je parle
Du saint pays montagnard,
Et du grand empereur Charle
Et du grand bâtard Bernard,

Et d’Hercule et de Pélage,
Roi Sanche, tu me crois fou;
Tu prends ces fiertés de l’âge
Pour la rouille d’un vieux clou.

Mais ton vain rire farouche,
Roi, n’est pas une raison

Qui puisse fermer la bouche
À quelqu’un dans ma maison;

C’est pourquoi je continue,
Te saluant du drapeau,
Et te parlant tête nue
Quand tu gardes ton chapeau.

XII

LE ROI MÉCHANT.

J’ai, dans Albe et dans Girone,
Vu l’honnête homme flétri,
Et des gens dignes d’un trône
Qu’on liait au pilori;

J’ai vu, c’est mon amertume,
Tes bourreaux abattre, ô roi,
Des fronts qu’on avait coutume
De saluer plus que toi.

Rois, Dieu fait croître où nous sommes,
Dans ce monde de péchés,
Une herbe de têtes d’hommes,
Et c’est vous qui la fauchez.

Ah! nos maîtres, quand vous n’êtes,
Avec vos vils compagnons,
Occupés que de sornettes,
Nous pleurons et nous saignons.

Roi, cela fendrait des pierres
Et toucherait des voleurs
Que de si fermes paupières

Versent de si sombres pleurs!

Sous toi l’Espagne est mal sûre
Et tremble, et finit par voir,
Roi, que ta main lui mesure
Trop d’aunes de crêpe noir.

J’ai reconnu, car vous êtes
Le sinistre et l’inhumain,
Des amis dans des squelettes
Qui pendaient sur le chemin.

J’ai, dans les forêts prochaines,
Vu le travail des bourreaux,
Et la tristesse des chênes
Pliant au poids des héros.

J’ai vu râler sous des porches
De vieux corps désespérés.
Roi, de lances et de torches
Ces pays sont effarés.

J’ai vu des ducs et des comtes
S’agenouiller au billot.
Tu ne nous dois pas de comptes,
Cœur trop bas et front trop haut!

Roi, le sang qu’un roi pygmée
Verse à flots par ses valets
Fait une sombre fumée
Sur les dalles des palais.

Ô roi des noires sentences,
Un vol de corbeaux te suit,
Tant les chaînes des potences
Dans ton règne font de bruit!

Vous avez fouetté des femmes
Dans Vich et dans Alcala,
Ce sont des choses infâmes
Que vous avez faites là!

Tu n’es qu’un méchant, en somme.
Mais je te sers, c’est la loi;
La difformité de l’homme
N’étant pas comptée au roi.

XIII

LE CID FIDÈLE.

Princes, on voit souvent croître
Des gueux entre les pavés
Qui font de vous dans un cloître
Des moines aux yeux crevés.

Je ne suis pas de ces traîtres;
Je suis muré dans ma foi,
Les grands spectres des ancêtres
Sont toujours autour de moi,

Comme on a, dans les campagnes
Où rit la verte saison,
Une chaîne de montagnes
Qui ferme l’âpre horizon.

Il n’est pas de cœurs obliques
Voués aux vils intérêts
Dans nos vieilles républiques
De torrents et de forêts.

Le traître est pire qu’un more;
De son souffle il craint le bruit;
Il met un masque d’aurore

Sur un visage de nuit;

Rouge aujourd'hui comme braise,
Noir hier comme charbon.

Roi, moi je respire à l'aise;
Et quand je parle, c'est bon.

Roi, je suis un homme probe
De l'antique probité.
Chimène recoud ma robe,
Mais non pas ma loyauté.

Je sonne à l'ancienne mode
La cloche de mon beffroi.
Je trouve même incommode
D'avoir des fourbes chez moi.

Sous cette fange, avarice,
Vol, débauche, trahison,
Je ne veux pas qu'on pourrisse
Le plancher de ma maison.

Reconnais à mes paroles
Le Cid aimé des meilleurs

À qui les pâtres d'Eroles
Donnent des chapeaux de fleurs.

XIV

LE CID HONNÊTE.

Donc, sois tranquille, roi Sanche.
Tu n'as rien à craindre ici.
La vieille âme est toute blanche
Dans le vieux soldat noirci.

Grondant, je te sers encore.
Dieu m’a donné pour emploi,
Sire, de courber le more
Et de redresser le roi.

Étant durs pour vous, nous sommes
Doux pour le peuple aux abois,
Nous autres les gentilshommes
Des bruyères et des bois.

Personne sur nous ne marche.
Il suffit de oui, de non,
Pour rompre à nos ponts une arche,
À notre chaîne un chaînon.

Loin de vos palais infâmes
Pleins de gens aux vils discours,

La fierté pousse en nos âmes
Comme l’herbe dans nos cours.

Les vieillards ont des licences,
Seigneur, et ce sont nos mœurs
De rudoyer les puissances
Dans nos mauvaises humeurs.

Le Cid est, suivant l’usage
Droit, sévère et raisonneur.
Peut-être n’est-ce point sage;
Mais c’est honnête, seigneur.

Pour avoir ce qu’il désire,
Le flatteur baise ton pied.
Nous disons ce qu’il faut, sire,
Et nous faisons ce qui sied.

Nous vivons aux solitudes

Où tout croît dans les sentiers
Excepté les habitudes
Des valets et des portiers.

Nous fauchons nos foins, nos seigles,
Et nos blés aux flancs des monts;

Nous entendons des cris d’aigles
Et nous nous y conformons.

Nous savons ce que vous faites,
Sire, et, loin de son lever,
De ses gibets, de ses fêtes,
Le prince nous sent rêver.

Nous avons l’absence fière;
Et sommes peu courtisans,
Ayant sur nous la poussière
Des batailles et des ans.

Et c’est pourquoi je te parle
Comme parlait, grave et seul,
À ton aïeul Boson d’Arle
Gil de Bivar mon aïeul.

D’où nait ton inquiétude?
D’où vient que ton œil me suit
Épiant mon attitude
Comme un nuage de nuit?

Craindrais-tu que je te prisse
Un matin dans mon manteau?
Et que j’eusse le caprice
D’une ville ou d’un château?

Roi, la chose qui m’importe
C’est de vivre exempt de fiel;

Non de glisser sous ma porte
Ma main jusqu’à Penafiel.

Roi, le Cid que l’âge gagne
S’aime mieux, en vérité,
Montagnard dans sa montagne
Que roi dans ta royauté.

Roi, le Cid qu’on amadoue,
Mais que nul n’intimida,
Ne t’a pas donné Cordoue
Pour te prendre Lérida.

Qu’ai-je besoin de Tortose,
De tes tours d’Alcacébé,

Et de ta chambre mieux close
Que la chambre d’un abbé,

Et des filles de la reine,
Et des plis de brocart d’or
De ta robe souveraine
Que porte un corrégidor,

Et de tes palais de marbre?
Moi qui n’ai qu’à me pencher
Pour prendre une mûre à l’arbre
Et de l’eau dans le rocher!

XV

LE ROI EST LE ROI.

Roi, vous vous croyez moins prince
Et vous jurez par l’enfer
Dans cette montagne où grince
Ma vieille herse de fer;

D’effroi votre âme est frappée;
Vous vous défiez, trompeur;
Traître et poltron, mon épée
Vous fait honte et vous fait peur.

Vous me faites garder, sire;
Vous me faites épier

Par tous vos barons de cire
Dans leurs donjons de papier;

Derrière vos capitaines
Vous tremblez en m’approchant;
Comme l’eau sort des fontaines,
Le soupçon sort du méchant;

Votre altesse scélérate
N’aurait pas d’autre façon
Quand je serais un pirate,
Le spectre de l’horizon!

Vous consultez des sorcières
Pour que je meure bientôt;
Vous cherchez dans mes poussières
De quoi faire un échafaud;

Vous rêvez quelque équipée;
Vous dites bas au bourreau
Que, lorsqu’un homme est épée,
Le sépulcre est le fourreau;

Votre habileté subtile
Me guette à tous les instants;
Eh bien! c’est peine inutile
Et vous perdez votre temps;

Vos précautions sont vaines;

Pourquoi? je le dis à tous :
C’est que le sang de mes veines
N’est pas à moi, mais à vous.

Quoique vous soyez un prince
Vil, on ne peut le nier,
Le premier de la province,
De la vertu le dernier;

Quoique à ta vue on se sauve,
Seigneur; quoique vous ayez
Des allures de loup fauve
Dans des chemins non frayés;

Quoiqu’on ait pour récompense
La haine de vos bandits;
Et malgré ce que je pense,
Et malgré ce que je dis,

Roi, devant vous je me courbe,
Raillé par votre bouffon;
Le loyal devant le fourbe,
L’acier devant le chiffon;

Devant vous, fuyard, s’efface
Le Cid, l’homme sans effroi.
Que voulez-vous que j’y fasse
Puisque vous êtes le roi!

XVI

LE CID EST LE CID.

Don Sanche, une source coule
À l’ombre de mes donjons;
Comme le Cid dans la foule
Elle est pure dans les joncs.

Je n’ai pas d’autre vignoble;
Buvez-y; je vous absous.
Autant que vous je suis noble
Et chevalier plus que vous.

Les savants, ces prêcheurs mornes,
Sire, ont souvent pour refrains
Qu’un trône même a des bornes
Et qu’un roi même a des freins;

De quelque nom qu’il se nomme,
Nul n’est roi sous le ciel bleu
Plus qu’il n’est permis à l’homme
Et qu’il ne convient à Dieu;

Mais pour marquer la limite
Il faudrait étudier;
Il faudrait être un ermite
Ou bien un contrebandier.

Moi, ce n’est pas mon affaire;
Je ne veux rien vous ôter;

Étant le Cid, je préfère
Obéir à disputer.

Accablez nos sombres têtes
De désespoir et d’ennuis,
Roi, restez ce que vous êtes;
Je reste ce que je suis.

J’ai toujours, seul dans ma sphère,
Souffert qu’on me dénigrât.
Je n’ai pas de compte à faire
Avec le roi, mon ingrat.

Je t’ai, depuis que j’existe,
Donné Jaen, Balbastro,
Et Valence, et la mer triste
Qui fait le bruit d’un taureau,

Et Zamora, rude tâche,
Huesca, Jaca, Teruel,

Et Murcie où tu fus lâche,
Et Vich où tu fus cruel,

Et Lerme et ses sycomores,
Et Tarragone et ses tours,
Et tous les ans des rois mores,
Et le grand Cid tous les jours!

Nos deux noms iront ensemble
Jusqu’à nos derniers neveux.
Souviens-t-en, si bon te semble;
N’y songe plus, si tu veux.

Je baisse mes yeux, j’en ôte
Tout regard audacieux;

Entrez sans peur, roi mon hôte;
Car il n’est qu’un astre aux cieux!

Cet astre de la nuit noire,
Roi, ce n’est pas le bonheur,
Ni l’amour, ni la victoire,
Ni la force; c’est l’honneur.

Et moi qui sur mon armure
Ramasse mes blancs cheveux,
Moi sur qui le soir murmure,
Moi qui vais mourir, je veux

Que, le jour où sous son voile
Chimène prendra le deuil,
On allume à cette étoile
Le cierge de mon cercueil.
*

Ainsi le Cid, qui harangue
Sans peur ni rébellion,
Lèche son maître, et sa langue
Est rude, étant d’un lion.

LE ROI DE PERSE

Le roi de Perse habite, inquiet, redouté,
En hiver Ispahan et Tiflis en été;
Son jardin, paradis où la rose fourmille,
Est plein d’hommes armés, de peur de sa famille;
Ce qui fait que parfois il va dehors songer.
Un matin, dans la plaine il rencontre un berger
Vieux, ayant près de lui son fils, un beau jeune homme.
— Comment te nommes-tu? dit le roi. — Je me nomme
Karam, dit le vieillard, interrompant un chant
Qu’il chantait au milieu des chèvres, en marchant;
J’habite un toit de jonc sous la roche penchante,
Et j’ai mon fils que j’aime, et c’est pourquoi je chante,
Comme autrefois Hafiz, comme à présent Sadi,

Et comme la cigale à l’heure de midi. —
Et le jeune homme alors, figure humble et touchante,
Baise la main du pâtre harmonieux qui chante
Comme à présent Sadi, comme autrefois Hafiz.
— Il t’aime, dit le roi, pourtant il est ton fils.

LES DEUX MENDIANTS

LA TAXE AU SAINT-EMPIRE. — LA DÎME AU SAINT-SIÉGE

L’un s’appelle César, l’autre se nomme Pierre.
Celui-là fait le guet, celui-ci la prière;
Tous deux sont embusqués au détour du chemin,
Ont au poing l’escopette, et la sébile en main,

Vident les sacs d’argent, partagent les maraudes,
Et l’on règne, et l’on fait payer les émeraudes
Des tiares à ceux qui n’ont pas de souliers.
Les dogmes et les lois sont de profonds halliers
Où des tas de vieux droits divins mêlent leurs branches;
Qui mendie en cette ombre a ses allures franches;
Nul n’échappe. Arrêtez! il faut payer, de gré
Ou de force, en passant dans le noir bois sacré.
Les peuples, que l’infâme ignorance ravage,
Ont au front la sueur de l’antique esclavage.
Christ, c’est pour eux qu’au pied de ta croix, tu prias!

Ils sont les travailleurs; ils sont les parias;
Ils sont les patients qu’on traîne sur des claies.
Certes, rien ne leur manque; ils ont beaucoup de plaies,
Beaucoup d’infirmités qu’ils ne peuvent guérir,
Beaucoup de maux, beaucoup de petits à nourrir;
C’est à ces riches-là que demandent l’aumône
Ce meurt-de-faim, l’autel, et ce pauvre, le trône.

MONTFAUCON

I

POUR LES OISEAUX.

À l’heure où le soleil descend tiède et pâli,
Seul à seul, près du bois de Saint-Jean-d’Angely,

L’archevêque Bertrand parlait au roi Philippe :

— Roi, le trône et l’autel sont le même principe;
Défendons-nous ensemble; il faut de tous côtés

Du front du peuple obscur chasser les nouveautés.
Sauver l’Église, ô roi, c’est vous sauver vous-même.
L’État devient plus fort par la terreur qu’il sème,
Et par le tremblement du peuple s’affermit;
Toujours, quand elle eut peur, la foule se soumit.
Il n’est qu’un droit : régner. Le nécessaire est juste.
Les quatre grands baillis du roi Philippe-Auguste,
Toutes les vieilles lois, c’est trop peu désormais;
Pour arrêter le mal, sur de hautains sommets,
Il faut la permanence étrange de l’exemple;
Sire, les schismes vont à l’attaque du temple;
Le peuple semble las d’être sur les genoux;
La révolte est sur vous, l’hérésie est sur nous;
D’où viennent ces essaims tumultueux d’idées?
Des profondeurs que nul prophète n’a sondées,
Peut-être de la nuit, ou peut-être du ciel.
Parlons bas. Écoutez, roi providentiel.
Rien n’est plus effrayant que ces sombres descentes

D’instincts nouveaux parmi les foules frémissantes;
Ces chimères d’en haut s’abattant tout à coup
Volent, courent, s’en vont, reviennent, sont partout,
Ouvrent les yeux fermés, fouillent les têtes pleines,
Se mêlent aux esprits, se mêlent aux haleines,
Blessent les dogmes saints dans l’ombre, et, fatal jeu,
Frappent l’homme endormi de mille becs de feu;
Elles tentent, troublant le mystère où nous sommes,
Un travail inconnu sur le cerveau des hommes,
Leur ôtant quelque chose et leur donnant aussi;
Quoi? c’est là votre perte et c’est là mon souci.
Que font-elles? du jour, du mal? Qu’apportent-elles?
Un souffle, un bruit, le vent qui tombe de leurs ailes;

Je l’ignore; ici Dieu m’échappe; mais je sai
Qu’il ne nous reste rien quand elles ont passé.

Le roi Philippe écoute, et l’archevêque songe,
Et vers la papauté son bras pensif s’allonge.

— Chassez les nouveautés, roi Philippe.
En marchant,
Tous deux rêveurs, ils sont arrivés près d’un champ
Qu’emplit de son frisson toute une moisson mûre;
Au-dessus des épis jetant un long murmure,
Sous de hauts échalas plantés parmi les blés,
Flottent, mouillés de pluie et de soleil brûlés,
À des cordes que l’air pousse, éloigne et ramène,
De hideux sacs de paille ayant la forme humaine;
Nœuds de débris sans nom, lambeaux fous, balançant
On ne sait quel aspect farouche et menaçant;
Les oiseaux, les moineaux que le blé d’or invite,
L’alouette criant aux autres : Vite! vite!
Accourent vers le champ plein d’épis; mais, au vent,
Chaque haillon devient lugubrement vivant,
Et tout l’essaim chantant s’effraie et se dissipe.

— Quel est donc le moyen de régner? dit Philippe.

Comme le roi parlait, l’archevêque pieux
Vit ce champ, hérissé de poteaux et de pieux
Où pendaient, à des fils tremblant quand l’air s’agite,
Des larves qui mettaient tous les oiseaux en fuite.

Et, le montrant au roi, Bertrand dit : Le voici.

II

POUR LES IDÉES.

Et c’est pourquoi, dans l’air par la brume obscurci,
Depuis ces temps de deuil, d’angoisse et de souffrance,

Au-dessus de la foule, au-dessus de la France,
Comme sur Babylone on distingue Babel,
On voit, dans le Paris de Philippe-le-Bel,

On ne sait quel difforme et funèbre édifice.
Tas de poutres hideux où le jour rampe et glisse,
Lourd enchevêtrement de poteaux, de crampons,
Et d’arcs-boutants pareils aux piles des vieux ponts.
Terrible, il apparaît sur la colline infâme.
Les autres monuments, où Paris met son âme,
Colléges, hôpitaux, tours, palais radieux,
Sont les docteurs, les saints, les héros et les dieux;
Lui, misérable, il est le monstre. Fauve, il traîne
Sur sa pente d’où sort une horreur souterraine,
Son funeste escalier qui dans la mort finit;
Tout ce que le ciment, la brique, le granit,
Le fer, peuvent avoir de la bête féroce,
Il l’a; ses piliers bruts, runes d’un dogme atroce,

Semblent des Irmensuls livides, et ses blocs
Dans l’obscurité vague ébauchent des Molochs;
Baal pour le construire a donné ses solives
Où flottaient des anneaux que secouaient les dives,
Saturne ses crochets, Teutatès ses menhirs;
Tous les cultes sanglants ont là leurs souvenirs;
Si le lierre ou le houx dans ses dalles végète,
Si quelque ronce y croît, la feuille horrible jette
Une ombre onglée et noire, affreux stigmate obscur,
Qui ressemble aux cinq doigts du bourreau sur le mur.

Vil bâtiment des temps fatals fatal complice!
Il est la colonnade immonde du supplice,
L’échafaud que le Louvre a pour couronnement,
La caresse au tombeau, l’insulte au firmament;
Et cette abominable et fétide bâtisse
Devant le ciel sacré se nomme la Justice,
Et ce n’est pas la moindre horreur du monument

De s’appeler l’autel en étant l’excrément.
Morne, il confine moins aux Paris qu’aux Sodomes.
Spectre de pierre ayant au front des spectres d’hommes,
Inexorable plus que l’airain et l’acier,
Il est, il vit, farouche et sans se soucier
Que le monde à ses pieds souffre, existe ou périsse,
Et contre on ne sait quoi dans l’ombre il se hérisse;
À de certains moments ce charnier qui se tait
Frissonne, et comme si, triste, il se lamentait,
Mêle une clameur sourde aux vents, et continue

En râle obscur le bruit des souffles dans la nue;
Là grince le rouet sinistre du cordier.
Du cadavre au squelette on peut étudier
Le progrès que les morts font dans la pourriture;
Chaque poteau chargé d’un corps sans sépulture
Marque une date abjecte, et chaque madrier
Semble le signe affreux d’un noir calendrier.

La nuit il semble croître, et dans le crépuscule
Il a l’air d’avancer sur Paris qui recule.

Rien de plus ténébreux n’a jamais été mis
Sur ce tas imbécile et triste de fourmis
Que la hautaine histoire appelle populace.
Ô pâle humanité, quand donc seras-tu lasse?

Lugubre vision! au-dessus d’un mur blanc

Quelque chose d’informe et qui paraît tremblant
Se dresse; chaos morne et ténébreux; broussaille
De silence, d’horreur et de nuit qui tressaille;
On ne voit le nuage, et l’ombre aux vagues yeux,
Et le blêmissement formidable des cieux,
Et la brume qui flotte, et l’astre qui flamboie,
Qu’à travers une vaste et large claire-voie
De poutres, dont chacune est un sanglant barreau;

On dirait que Satan, l’infâme ange bourreau,
Dont la rage et la joie et la haine, acharnées,
Exécutent Adam depuis six mille années,
Sur ces fauves piliers a posé de sa main
La grande claie où fut traîné le genre humain.
C’est, dans l’obscurité lugubrement émue,
De la terreur, bâtie en pierre, et qui remue;

C’est délabré, croulant, lépreux, désespéré;
Les poteaux ont pour toit le vide; le degré
Aboutit à l’échelle et l’échelle aux ténèbres;
Le crépuscule passe à travers des vertèbres
Et montre dans la nuit des pieds aux doigts ouverts;
Entre les vieux piliers, de moisissure verts,
Blêmes quand les rayons de lune s’y répandent,
Là-haut, des larves vont et viennent, des morts pendent,
Et la fouine a rongé leur crâne et leur fémur,
Et leur ventre effrayant se fend comme un fruit mûr;
Si la mort connaissait les trépassés, si l’homme
Valait que le tombeau sût comment il se nomme,
Si l’on comptait les grains du hideux chapelet,
On dirait : — Celui-ci, c’est Tryphon, qui voulait

Fêter le jour de Pâques autrement qu’Irénée;
Ceux-là sont des routiers, engeance forcenée,

Gueux qui contre le sceptre ont croisé le bâton;
Cet autre, c’est Glanus, traducteur de Platon;
Celui-ci, que des lois frappa la prévoyance,
Osa propager l’art du sorcier de Mayence,
Et jeter à la foule un Virgile imprimé;
C’est Pierre Albin; l’oubli sur lui s’est refermé;
Cet autre est un voleur, cet autre est un poëte.
Derrière leur tragique et noire silhouette,
L’azur luit, le soir vient, l’aube blanchit le ciel;
Le vent, s’il entre là, sort pestilentiel;
Chacun d’eux sous le croc du sépulcre tournoie;

Et tous, que juin les brûle ou que janvier les noie,
S'entreheurtent, fameux, chétifs, obscurs, marquants,
Et sont la même nuit dans les mêmes carcans;
Le craquement farouche et massif des traverses
Accompagne leurs chocs sous les âpres averses,
Et, comble de terreur, on croirait par instant
Que le cadavre, au gré des brises s'agitant,
Avec son front sans yeux et ses dents sans gencives,
Rit dans la torsion des chaînes convulsives;
L'exécrable charnier, sous ses barres de fer,
Regardant du côté de Rome et de l'enfer,

Dans l'étrange épaisseur des brumes infinies
Semble chercher au loin ses sœurs les gémonies,
Et demander au gouffre où nul astre n'a lui
Si Josaphat sera plus sinistre que lui;
Et toujours, au-dessus des clochers et des dômes,
Le vent lugubre joue avec tous ces fantômes,
Hier, demain, le jour, la nuit, l'été, l'hiver;
Et ces morts sans repos, où fourmille le ver
Plus que l'abeille d'or dans le creux des yeuses,
Cette agitation d'ombres mystérieuses,
L'affreux balancement de ces spectres hagards,
Ces crânes sans cheveux, ces sourcils sans regards,
Ce grelottement sourd de ferrailles funèbres,
Chassent dans la nuée, à travers les ténèbres,
Les purs esprits de l'aube et de l'azur, venus
Pour s'abattre au milieu des vivants inconnus,
Pour faire leur moisson sublime dans la foule,
Dire au peuple le mot du siècle qui s'écoule,
Et leur jeter une âme et leur apporter Dieu;
Et l'on voit, reprenant leur vol vers le ciel bleu,
La sainte vérité, la pensée immortelle,
L'amour, la liberté, le droit, heurtant de l'aile
Le Louvre et son beffroi, l'église et son portail,
Fuir, blancs oiseaux, devant le sombre épouvantail.

LES REÎTRES

CHANSON BARBARE

Sonnez, clairons,
Sonnez, cymbales!
On entendra siffler les balles;
L’ennemi vient, nous le battrons;
Les déroutes sont des cavales
Qui s’envolent quand nous soufflons;
Nous jouerons aux dés sur les dalles;
Sonnez, rixdales,
Sonnez, doublons!

Sonnez, cymbales,
Sonnez, clairons!
On entendra siffler les balles;
Nous sommes les durs forgerons
Des victoires impériales;
Personne n’a vu nos talons;
Nous jouerons aux dés sur les dalles;
Sonnez, doublons,
Sonnez, rixdales!
Sonnez, clairons,
Sonnez, cymbales!
On entendra siffler les balles;
Sitôt qu’en guerre nous entrons
Les rois ennemis font leurs malles,
Et commandent leurs postillons;
Nous jouerons aux dés sur les dalles;
Sonnez, rixdales,
Sonnez, doublons!
Sonnez, cymbales,
Sonnez, clairons!
On entendra siffler les balles;
Sur les villes nous tomberons;

Toutes femmes nous sont égales,
Que leurs cheveux soient bruns ou blonds;
Nous jouerons aux dés sur les dalles;
Sonnez, doublons,
Sonnez, rixdales!

Sonnez, clairons,
Sonnez, cymbales!
On entendra siffler les balles;
Du vin! Du faro! Nous boirons!
Dieu, pour nos bandes triomphales
Fit les vignes et les houblons;
Nous jouerons aux dés sur les dalles;
Sonnez, rixdales,
Sonnez, doublons!
Sonnez, cymbales,
Sonnez, clairons!
On entendra siffler les balles;
Quelquefois, ivres, nous irons
À travers foudres et rafales,
En zigzag, point à reculons.
Nous jouerons aux dés sur les dalles;
Sonnez, doublons,
Sonnez, rixdales!
Sonnez, clairons,
Sonnez, cymbales!
On entendra siffler les balles;
Nous pillons, mais nous conquérons;
La guerre a parfois les mains sales,
Mais la victoire a les bras longs;
Nous jouerons aux dés sur les dalles;
Sonnez, rixdales,
Sonnez, doublons!

Sonnez, rixdales,
Sonnez, doublons!
Nous jouerons aux dés sur les dalles;

Rois, nous sommes les aquilons;
Vos couronnes sont nos vassales;
Et nous rirons quand nous mourrons.
On entendra siffler les balles;
Sonnez, clairons,
Sonnez, cymbales!

LE COMTE FÉLIBIEN

Attendu qu'il faut mettre à la raison la ville,
Qu'il faut tout écraser dans la guerre civile
Et vaincre les forfaits à force d'attentats,
Cosme vient d'égorger, pêle-mêle, des tas
De misérables, vieux, jeunes, toute une foule,

Dans Sienne où la fierté des grands siècles s'écroule.
Tous les murs sont criblés de biscayens de fer.
Le massacre est fini; mais un reste d'enfer
Est sur la ville, en proie aux cohortes lombardes.
La fumée encor flotte aux gueules des bombardes;
Et l'horreur du combat, des chocs et des assauts
Est visible partout, dans les rouges ruisseaux,
Et dans l'effarement des morts, faces farouches;
On dirait que les cris sont encor dans les bouches,
On dirait que la foudre est encor dans les yeux,
Tant les cadavres sont vivants et furieux.
Cependant les marchands ont rouvert leurs boutiques.
Des gens quelconques vont et viennent; domestiques,
Patrons, clercs, artisans, chacun a son souci;
Chacun a son regard qui dit : — C'est bien ainsi.
Finissons-en. Silence! un nouveau maître arrive. —

L'indifférence aux morts qu'on a, pourvu qu'on vive,
L'acceptation froide et calme des affronts,
Cette lâcheté-là se lit sur tous les fronts.
— Pourquoi ces vanupieds sortaient-ils de leurs sphères?

Ils sont morts. C’est bien fait. Nous avons nos affaires.
Les rois qui sont un peu tyrans sont presque dieux.
Nous serons muselés et rudoyés; tant mieux.
Enterrons. Oublions. Et parlons d’autre chose. —
Ainsi le vieux troupeau bourgeois raisonne et glose.
Et tous sont apaisés, et beaucoup sont contents.

Seul, un homme, — on dirait qu’il a près de cent ans
Et qu’il n’en a pas vingt, et qu’un astre est son âme,
À voir son front de neige, à voir ses yeux de flamme, —
Cet homme, moins semblable aux vivants qu’aux aïeux,

Rôde, et, quand il s’arrête, il n’a plus dans les yeux
Qu’un vague reste obscur de lueurs disparues,
Tant il songe et médite! et les passants des rues,
Voyant ce noir rêveur qui vient on ne sait d’où,
Disent : C’est un génie; et d’autres : C’est un fou.
L’un crie : Alighieri! c’est lui! c’est l’homme-fée
Qui revient des enfers comme en revint Orphée;
Orphée a vu Pluton et Dante a vu Satan,
Il arrive de chez les morts; Dante, va-t’en!
L’autre dit : Ce n’est pas Dante, c’est Jérémie.
La plainte a presque peur d’avoir été gémie,
Et se cache devant le vainqueur irrité;
Mais cet homme est un tel spectre dans la cité
Qu’il semble effrayant même à la horde ennemie;
Et pourtant ce n’est point Dante ni Jérémie;

C’est simplement le vieux comte Félibien
Qui ne croit que le vrai, qui ne veut que le bien,
Et par qui fut fondé le collége de Sienne;
Il porte haut la tête étant une âme ancienne,
Et fait trembler; cet homme affronte les vainqueurs;
Mais, dans l’écroulement des esprits et des cœurs,
On le hait; le meilleur semble aux lâches le pire,
Et celui qui n’a pas d’épouvante en inspire.

Qu’importe à ce passant? Dans ce vil guet-apens,
Les uns étant gisants et les autres rampants,
Les uns étant la tombe et les autres la foule,
Il est le seul debout; il songe; le sang coule,
Le sang fume, le sang est partout; sombre, il va.

Tout à coup au détour de la Via Corva,
Il aperçoit dans l’ombre une femme inconnue;
Une morte étendue à terre toute nue,
Corps terrible aux regards de tous prostitué
Et dont le ventre ouvert montre un enfant tué.

Alors il crie : — Ô ciel! un enfant! guerre affreuse!
Où donc s’arrêtera le gouffre qui se creuse?
Massacrer l’inconnu, l’enfant encor lointain!
Supprimer la promesse obscure du destin!
Mais on poussera donc l’horreur jusqu’au prodige!
Mais vous êtes hideux et stupides, vous dis-je!
Mais c’est abominable, ô ciel! ciel éclatant!
Et les bêtes des bois n’en feraient pas autant!
Qu’on ait tort et raison des deux côtés, qu’on fasse

Au fond le mal, croyant bien faire à la surface,
Vous êtes des niais broyant des ignorants,
Cette justice-là, c’est bien, je vous la rends;
Je vous hais et vous plains. Mais, quoi! quand l’empyrée
Attend du nouveau-né l’éclosion sacrée,
Quoi! ces soldats, ces rois, sans savoir ce qu’ils font,
Touchent avec leur main sanglante au ciel profond!
Ils interrompent l’ombre ébauchant son ouvrage!
Ils veulent en finir d’un coup, et dans leur rage
D’avoir bien fait justice, et d’avoir bien vaincu,
Ils vont jusqu’à tuer ce qui n’a pas vécu!
Mais, bandits, laissez donc au moins venir l’aurore!
Brutes, vous châtiez ce qui n’est pas encore!
La femme que voilà morte sur le pavé,
Qui cachait dans son sein l’enfant inachevé,

L’avenir, l’écheveau des jours impénétrables,
Était de droit divin parmi vous, misérables;
Car la maternité, c’est la grande action.
Sachez qu’on doit avoir la même émotion
Devant Ève portant les races inconnues
Que devant l’astre immense entrevu dans les nues;

Sachez-le, meurtriers! les respects sont pareils
Pour la femme et le ciel, l’abîme des soleils
Étant continué par le ventre des mères.
Rois, le vrai c’est l’enfant; vous êtes des chimères.
Ah! maudits! Mais voyons, réfléchissez un peu.
Crime inouï! l’enfant arrive en un milieu
Ignoré, parmi nous, il sort des sphères vierges;
Il quitte les soleils remplacés par vos cierges;
Sa mère qui le sent remuer, s’attendrit;
Il n’est pas encor l’homme, il est déjà l’esprit,
Il cherche à deviner sa nouvelle patrie,
Et dans le bercement de cette rêverie
Où tout l’azur divin est vaguement mêlé,
Voilà que, brusque, affreux, de mitraille étoilé,
L’assassinat, au fond de ce flanc qu’on vénère,
Entre avec le fracas infâme du tonnerre,
Et se rue et s’abat, monstrueux ennemi,
Sur le pauvre doux être, ange encor endormi!
Qu’est-ce que ce réveil sans nom, et cette tombe

Ouverte par l’orfraie horrible à la colombe!
Ah! prêtres, qu’a domptés César, vous qu’à leurs plis
Toutes les actions des grands ont assouplis,
Vous qui leur amenez chez eux cette servante,
La prière, et mettez le Te Deum en vente,
Vous qui montrez devant les rois le Tout-Puissant
Agenouillé, lavant les pavés teints de sang,
Vous qui pourtant parfois, fronts chauves, barbes grises,
Avez des tremblements dans vos mornes églises
Et sentez que la tombe est peut-être un cachot,

Prêtres, que pensez-vous qui se passe là-haut,

Dans l’abîme du vrai sans fond, dans le mystère,
Dans le sombre équilibre ignoré, quand la terre
Sinistre, renvoyant l’innocence au ciel bleu,
Jette une petite âme épouvantée à Dieu!

VI

ENTRE LIONS ET ROIS

QUELQU’UN MET LE HOLÀ

Les grands lions ont dit aux rois épouvantables :
Vous couchez dans des lits, vous buvez à des tables,
Nous couchons sur la pierre et buvons aux ruisseaux;
Vous faites en marchant le bruit des grandes eaux,
Ô rois, tant vous avez autour de vous d’armées.
Vos femelles, au bain, pour être parfumées,
Se laissent par l’eunuque infâme manier;
Les nôtres ont l’odeur féroce du charnier,
Et, comme leur caresse est féconde en blessures,
Nous leur rendons parfois leurs baisers en morsures,

Mais elles ont la fauve et sombre chasteté.
La nuit perfide a beau regarder de côté,
Elle a peur devant nous, et la terreur la gagne
Quand nous questionnons sur l’ombre la montagne;
Vous, elle vous méprise, et nous, elle nous craint.
Rois, vous croyez avoir le monde, humble et contraint;
Mais c’est nous qui l’avons. La forêt nous encense.
Rois, nous sommes la faim, la soif, et la puissance;
Pour manger les agneaux et pour manger les loups
Nos mâchoires font plus de besogne que vous;
Vous disparaîtriez, ô princes, que nos gueules
Sauraient bien dévorer les hommes toutes seules;
Chacun de nous au fond de sa caverne est roi;
Et nous tenons ce sceptre en nos pattes, l’effroi.
Rois, l’échevèlement que notre tête épaisse

Secoue en sa colère est de la même espèce
Que l’avalanche énorme et le torrent des monts.
Rois, vous régnez un peu parce que nous dormons;
Nos femmes font téter leurs petits sous leurs ventres,
Mais lorsqu’il nous plaira de sortir de nos antres,

Vous verrez. Le seigneur des forêts vous vaut tous.
Sachez que nous n’avons rien au-dessus de nous.
Ô rois, dans notre voix nous avons le tonnerre.
Le seigneur des forêts n’est pas un mercenaire
Qu’on leurre et qu’on désarme avec un sac d’argent;
Et nous nous coucherons sur vous en vous rongeant,
Comme vous vous couchez, maîtres, sur vos provinces.
C’est vous les faux bandits et c’est nous les vrais princes.
Vous, et vos légions, vous, et vos escadrons,

Quand nous y penserons et quand nous le voudrons,
Ô princes, nous ferons de cela des squelettes.
Lâches, vous frissonnez devant des amulettes;
Mais nous, les seuls puissants, nous maîtres des sommets,
Nous rugissons toujours et ne prions jamais;
Car nous ne craignons rien. Puisqu’on nous a faits bêtes,
N’importe qui peut bien exister sur nos têtes
Sans que nous le sachions et que nous y songions.
Vous les rois, le ciel noir, plein de religions,
Vous voit, mains jointes, vils, prosternés dans la poudre;
Mais, tout rempli qu’il est de tempête et de foudre,
De rayons et d’éclairs, il ne sait pas si nous
Qui sommes les lions, nous avons des genoux.

Ainsi les fiers lions parlaient aux rois farouches.
Ce verbe monstrueux rugissait dans leurs bouches,
Et les bois demandaient aux monts : Qu’est-ce que c’est?

Soudain on entendit une voix qui disait :

Vous êtes les lions, moi je suis Dieu. Crinières,
Ne vous hérissez pas, je vous tiens prisonnières.
Toutes vos griffes sont, devant mon doigt levé,
Ce qu’est sous une meule un grain de sénevé;
Je tolère les rois comme je vous tolère;
La grande patience et la grande colère,
C’est moi. J’ai mes desseins. Brutes et rois, tyrans,

Tremblez, eux les mangeurs et vous les dévorants;
Sachez que je suis là. J’abaisse et j’humilie;
Je tiens, je tords, je courbe, et je lie et délie
La vague adriatique et le vent syrien;

Je suis celui qui prouve à tous qu’ils ne sont rien;
Je suis toute l’aurore et je suis toute l’ombre;
Je suis celui qui sème au hasard et sans nombre,
Et qui, lorsqu’il lui plaît, donne des millions
D’astres aux firmaments et de poux aux lions.

LE CID EXILÉ

LE CID EXILÉ

I

Le Cid est exilé. Qui se souvient du Cid?
Le roi veut qu’on l’oublie; et Reuss, Almonacid,
Graos, tous ses exploits, ressemblent à des songes;
Les rois maures chassés ou pris sont des mensonges;

Et quant à ces combats puissants qu’il a livrés,
Pancorbo, la bataille illustre de Givrez
Qui semble une volée effrayante d’épées,
Coca, dont il dompta les roches escarpées,
Gor où le Cid pleurait de voir le jour finir,
C’est offenser le roi que de s’en souvenir.
Même il est malséant de parler de Chimène.

Un homme étant allé visiter un domaine
Dans les pays qui sont entre l’Èbre et le Cil,

Du côté que le Cid habite en son exil,
A passé par hasard devant son écurie;
Le duc Juan, dont cet homme est serf en Asturie,
Bon courtisan, l’a fait à son retour punir
Pour avoir entendu Babieça hennir.

Donc, chacun l’a pour dit, n’est pas sujet fidèle
Qui parle de Tortose et de la citadelle
Où le glorieux Cid arbora son drapeau;
Dire ces mots : Baxa, Médina del Campo,
Vergara, Salinas, Mondragon-les-Tours-Noires,

Avec l’intention de nommer des victoires,
Ce n’est point d’un loyal Espagnol; qu’autrefois

Un homme ait fait lâcher au comte Odet de Foix
Les infantes d’Irun, Payenne et Manteline;
Que cet homme ait sauvé la Castille orpheline;
Qu’il ait dans la bataille été le grand cimier;
Que les Maures, foulés par lui comme un fumier,
L’admirent, et, vaincus, donnent son nom célèbre

Au ruisseau Cidacos qui se jette dans l’Èbre;
Qu’il ait rempli du bruit de ses fiers pas vainqueurs
Astorga, Zamora, l’Aragon, tous les cœurs;
Qu’il ait traqué, malgré les gouffres et les piéges,
L’horrible Abdulmalic dans la sierra des Neiges,
En janvier, sans vouloir attendre le dégel;
Qu’il ait osé défendre aux notaires d’Urgel
De dater leurs contrats de l’an du roi de France;
Que cet homme ait pour tous été la délivrance,
Allant, marchant, courant, volant de tous côtés,
Effarant l’ennemi dans ces rapidités;
Qu’on l’ait vu sous Lorca, figure surhumaine,

Et devant Balbastro, dans la même semaine;
Qu’il ait, sur la tremblante échelle des hasards,
Calme, donné l’assaut à tous les alcazars,
Toujours ferme, et toujours, à Tuy comme à Valence,
Fier dans le tourbillon sombre des coups de lance,
C’est possible; mais l’ombre est sur cet homme-là;
Silence. Est-ce après tout grand’chose que cela?
Le pont Matamoros peut vous montrer ses brèches,
Mais s’il parle du Cid vainqueur, bravant les flèches,
On fera démolir le pont Matamoros!
Le roi ne veut pas plus qu’on nomme le héros
Que le pape ne veut qu’on nomme la comète;
Il n’est pas démontré que l’aigle se permette
De faire encor son nid dans ce mont Muradal
Qui fit de Tizona la sœur de Durandal.

II

Du reste, comme il faut des héros pour la guerre,
Le roi cassant le Cid, a trouvé bon d’en faire :
Il en a fait. L’Espagne a des hommes nouveaux.
Alvar Rambla, le duc Nuno Saz y Calvos,
Don Gil, voilà les noms dont la foule s’effare;
Ils sont dans la lumière, ils sont dans la fanfare;
Leur moindre geste s’enfle au niveau des exploits;
Et, dans leur antichambre, on entend quelquefois
Les pages, d’une voix féminine et hautaine,
Dire : — Ah oui-da, le Cid! C’était un capitaine
D’alors. Vit-il encor, ce Campéador-là?

Le Cid n’existe plus auprès d’Alvar Rambla;
Gil, plus grand que le Cid, dans son ombre le cache;
Nuno Saz engloutit le Cid sous son panache;

Sur Achille tombé les myrmidons ont crû;
Et du siècle du Cid le Cid a disparu.

L’exil, est-ce l’oubli vraiment? une mémoire
Qu’un prince étouffe, est-elle éteinte pour la gloire?
Est-ce à jamais qu’Alvar, Nuno, Gil, nains heureux,
Éclipsent le grand Cid exilé derrière eux?

Quand le voyageur sort d’Oyarzun, il s’étonne,
Il regarde, il ne voit, sous le noir ciel qui tonne,
Que le mont d’Oyarzun, médiocre et pelé :
— Mais ce Pic du Midi dont on m’avait parlé,
Où donc est-il? Ce Pic, le plus haut des Espagnes,
N’existe point. S’il m’est caché par ces montagnes,
Il n’est pas grand. Un peu d’ombre l’anéantit. —
Cela dit, il s’en va, point fâché, lui petit,
Que ce mont qu’on disait si haut ne soit qu’un rêve.
Il marche, la nuit vient, puis l’aurore se lève,
Le voyageur repart, son bâton à la main,

Et songe, et va disant tout le long du chemin :
— Bah! s’il existe un Pic du Midi, que je meure!
La montagne Oyarzun est belle, à la bonne heure! —
Laissant derrière lui hameaux, clochers et tours,
Villes et bois, il marche un jour, deux jours, trois jours;
— Le genre humain dirait trois siècles; — il s’enfonce
Dans la lande à travers la bruyère et la ronce;
Enfin, par hasard, las, inattentif, distrait,
Il se tourne, et voici qu’à ses yeux reparaît,
Comme un songe revient confus à la pensée,
La plaine dont il sort et qu’il a traversée,
L’église et la forêt, le puits et le gazon;
Soudain, presque tremblant, là-bas, sur l’horizon
Que le soir teint de pourpre et le matin d’opale,
Dans un éloignement mystérieux et pâle,
Au-delà de la ville et du fleuve, au-dessus
D’un tas de petits monts sous la brume aperçus
Où se perd Oyarzun avec sa butte informe,
Il voit dans la nuée une figure énorme;
Un mont blême et terrible emplit le fond des cieux;
Un pignon de l’abîme, un bloc prodigieux
Se dresse, aux lieux profonds mêlant les lieux sublimes,
Sombre apparition de gouffres et de cîmes,
Il est là; le regard croit sous son porche obscur
Voir le nœud monstrueux de l’ombre et de l’azur,
Et son faîte est un toit sans brouillard et sans voile,
Où ne peut se poser d’autre oiseau que l’étoile;

C’est le Pic du Midi.
L’histoire voit le Cid.
III

Grande nouvelle. Émoi dans tout Valladolid.
Quoi? Qu’est-ce donc? Le roi se dément! Le roi cède!
Alphonse a pour maîtresse une fille assez laide,
Et qui, par cela même, on ne sait pas pourquoi,
Fait tout ce qu’elle veut de la raison du roi,

Au point qu’elle en pourrait tirer des choses sages;
Cette fille a-t-elle eu quelques mauvais présages?
Ou bien le roi du peuple entend-il la rumeur?
Est-il las des héros qu’il a faits par humeur?
Finit-il par trouver cette gloire trop plate?
Craint-il que tout à coup une guerre n’éclate
Qui soit vraiment méchante et veuille un vrai héros?

Le certain, c’est qu’après le combat de taureaux
Son Altesse un dimanche a dit dans la chapelle :
— Ruy Diaz de Bivar revient. Je le rappelle.
Je le veux. — Ils sont là plus d’un esprit subtil;
Pourtant pas un n’a dit : mais le Cid voudra-t-il?
N’importe, il plaît au roi de revoir ce visage.

Pour éblouir le Cid, il charge du message
Un roi, l’homme entre tous vénéré dans sa cour,
Son vassal, son parent, le roi d’Acqs-en-Adour,
Santos-le-Roux, qu’on nomme aussi le Magnanime,
Parce qu’étant tuteur d’Atton, comte de Nîme,
Il le fit moine, et prit sa place, et confisqua
Ses biens pour les donner au couvent de Huesca.
IV

Ce sont de braves cœurs que les gens de la plaine;
Ils chantent dans les blés un chant bizarre et fou;

Et quant à leurs habits faits de cuir et de laine,
Boire les use au coude et prier, au genou.

Étant fils du sang basque, ils ont cet avantage
Sur les froids Espagnols murés dans leurs maisons,
Qu’ils préfèrent à l’eau, fût-elle prise au Tage,
Le vin mystérieux d’où sortent les chansons.

Ils sont hospitaliers, prodigues, bons dans l’âme;
L’homme dit aux passants; Entrez, les bienvenus!

Pour un petit enfant qu’elle allaite, la femme
Montre superbement deux seins de marbre nus.

Lorsque l’homme est aux champs, la femme reste seule;
N’importe, entrez! passants, le lard est sur l’étal,
Mangez! Et l’enfant joue, et dans un coin l’aïeule
Raccommode un vieux cistre aux cordes de métal.

Quelques-uns sont bergers dans les grands terrains vagues,
Champs que les bataillons ont légués aux troupeaux,
Mer de plaines ayant les collines pour vagues,
Où César a laissé l’ombre de ses drapeaux.

Là passent des bœufs roux qui sonnent de la cloche,
Avertissant l’oiseau de leur captivité;
L’homme y féconde un sol plus âpre que la roche,
Et de cette misère extrait de la fierté.

L’égyptienne y rôde, et suspend en guirlandes
Sur sa robe en lambeaux les bleuets du sillon;

La fleur s’offre aux gypsis errantes dans ces landes,
Car, fille du fumier, elle est sœur du haillon.

Là, tout est rude; août flamboie et janvier gèle;
Le zingaro regarde, en venant boire aux puits,
Les ronds mouillés que font les seaux sur la margelle,
Tout cercle étant la forme effrayante des nuits.

Là, dans les grès hideux, l’ermite fait sa grotte.
Lieux tristes! Le boucher y vient trois fois par an;
Le grelot des moutons y semble la marotte
Dont l’animal, fou sombre, amuse Dieu tyran.

Peu d’herbe; les brebis paissent exténuées;
Le pâtre a tout l’hiver sur son toit de roseaux
Le bouleversement farouche des nuées

Quand les hydres de pluie ouvrent leurs noirs naseaux.

Ces hommes sont vaillants. Âmes de candeur pleines,
Leur regard est souvent fauve, jamais moqueur;
Rien ne gêne le souffle immense dans les plaines;
La liberté du vent leur passe dans le cœur.

Leurs filles qui s'en vont laver aux cressonnières,
Plongent leur jambe rose au courant des ruisseaux;
On ne sait, en entrant dans leurs maisons tanières,
Si l'on voit des enfants ou bien des lionceaux.

Voisins du bon proscrit, ils labourent, ils sèment,
À l'ombre de la tour du preux Campéador;
Contents de leur ciel bleu, pauvres, libres, ils aiment
Le Cid plus que le roi, le soleil plus que l'or.

Ils récoltent au bas des monts, comme en Provence,
Du vin qu'ils font vieillir dans des outres de peau;
Le fisc, quand il leur fait payer leur redevance,
Leur fait l'effet du roi qui leur tend son chapeau.

Les rayons du grand Cid sur leurs toits se répandent;
Il est l'auguste ami du chaume et du grabat;
Car avec les héros les laboureurs s'entendent;
L'épée a sa moisson, le soc a son combat.

La charrue est de fer comme les pertuisanes;
Les victoires, sortant du champ et du hallier,
Parlent aux campagnards étant des paysannes,
Et font le peuple avec la gloire familier.

Ils content que parfois ce grand Cid les arrête,
Les fait entrer chez lui, les nomme par leur nom,
Et que, lorsqu'à l'étable ils attachent leur bête,
Babieça n'est pas hautaine pour l'ânon.

Le barbier du hameau le plus proche raconte
Que parfois chez lui vient le Cid paisible et franc,
Et, vrai! qu’il s’assied là sur l’escabeau, ce comte
Et ce preux qui serait, pour un trône, trop grand.

Le barbier rase bien le héros, quoiqu’il tremble;
Puis, une loque est là pour tous ceux qui viendront;
Le Cid prend ce haillon, torchon du peuple, et semble
Essuyer le regard des princes sur son front.

Comment serait-il fier puisqu’il a tant de gloire?
Les filles dans leur cœur aiment cet Amadis;
La main blanche souvent jalouse la main noire
Qui serre ce poing fort, plein de foudres jadis.

Ils se disent, causant, quand les nuits sont tombées,
Que cet homme si doux, dans des temps plus hardis,
Fut terrible, et, géant, faisait des enjambées
Des tours de Pampelune aux clochers de Cadix.

Il n’est pas un d’entre eux qui ne soit prêt à suivre
Partout ce Ruy Diaz comme un céleste esprit,
En mer, sur terre, au bruit des trompettes de cuivre,
Malgré le groupe blond des enfants qui sourit.

Tels sont ces laboureurs. Pour défendre l’Espagne,
Ces rustres au besoin font plus que des infants;
Ils ont des chariots criant dans la campagne,
Et sont trop dédaigneux pour être triomphants.

Ils cultivent les blés où chantent les cigales;
Pélage à lui jadis les voyait accourir,
Et jamais ne trouva leurs âmes inégales
Au danger, quel qu’il fût, quand il fallait mourir.

V

Ruy Diaz de Bivar est leur plus belle gerbe.

Dans un beau train de guerre et de chevaux fougueux,
Don Santos traversa leurs villages, superbe,
Avec le bruit d’un roi qui passe chez des gueux.

On ne le suivit point comme on fait dans les villes;
Nul ne le harangua, ces hommes aux pieds nus
Ayant la nuque dure aux saluts inutiles
Et se dérangeant peu pour des rois inconnus.

— Je suis l’ami du roi, disait-il avec gloire;
Et nul ne s’inclinait que le corrégidor;
Le lendemain, ayant grand soif et voulant boire,
Il dit : Je suis l’ami du Cid Campéador.

Don Santos traversa la plaine vaste et rude,
Et l’on voyait au fond la tour du fier banni;
C’est là qu’était le Cid. Le ciel, la solitude,
Et l’ombre, environnaient sa grandeur d’infini.

Quand Santos arriva, Ruy, qui sortait de table,
Était dans l’écurie avec Babieça;
Et Santos apparut sur le seuil de l’étable;
Ruy ne recula point, et le roi s’avança.

La jument, grasse alors comme un cheval de moine,
Regardait son seigneur d’un regard presque humain;
Et le bon Cid, prenant dans l’auge un peu d’avoine,
La lui faisait manger dans le creux de sa main.

VI

Le roi Santos parla de sa voix la plus haute :
— « Cid, je viens vous chercher. Nous vous honorons tous.
« Vous avez une épine au talon, je vous l’ôte.
« Voici pourquoi le roi n’est pas content de vous :

« Votre allure est chez lui si fière et si guerrière,
« Que, tout roi qu’est le roi, son Altesse a souvent

« L’air de vous annoncer quand vous marchez derrière,
« Et de vous suivre, ô Cid, quand vous marchez devant.

« Vous regardez fort mal toute la servidumbre.
« Cid, vous êtes Bivar, c’est un noble blason;
« Mais le roi n’aime pas que quelqu’un fasse une ombre
« Plus grande que la sienne au mur de sa maison.

« Don Ruy, chacun se plaint : — Le Cid est dans la nue;
« Du sceptre à son épée il déplace l’effroi;
« Ce sujet-là se tient trop droit; il diminue
« L’utile tremblement qu’on doit avoir du roi. —

« Vous n’êtes qu’à peu près le serviteur d’Alphonse;
« Quand le roi brise Arcos, vous sauvez Ordonez;
« Vous retirez l’épée avant qu’elle s’enfonce;
« Le roi dit : Frappe! Alors, vous Cid, vous pardonnez.

« Qui s’arrête en chemin sert à demi son maître;
« Jamais d’un vain scrupule un preux ne se troubla;

« La moitié d’un ami, c’est la moitié d’un traître;
« Et ce n’est pas pour vous, Cid, que je dis cela.

« Enfin, et j’y reviens, vous êtes trop superbe;
« Le roi jeta sur vous l’exil comme un rideau;
« Rayon d’astre, soyez moins lourd pour lui, brin d’herbe;
« Ce qui d’abord est gloire à la fin est fardeau.

« Vous êtes au-dessus de tous, et cela gêne;
« Quiconque veut briller vous sent comme un affront,
« Tant Valence, Graos, Givrez et Carthagène
« Font d’éblouissement autour de votre front.

« Tel mot, qui par moments tombe de vous, fatigue
« Son Altesse à la cour, à la ville, au Prado;

« Le creusement n’est pas moins importun, Rodrigue,
« De la goutte d’orgueil que de la goutte d’eau.

« Je ne dis pas ceci pour vous, Cid redoutable.
« Vous êtes sans orgueil, étant de bonne foi;
« Si j’étais empereur, vous seriez connétable;
« Mais seulement tâchez de faire cas du roi.

« Quand vous lui rapportez, vainqueur, quelque province,
« Le roi trouve, et ceci de nous tous est compris,
« Que jamais un vassal n’a salué son prince,
« Cid, avec un respect plus semblable au mépris.

« Votre bouche en parlant sourit avec tristesse;
« On sent que le roi peut avoir Burgos, Madrid,
« Tuy, Badajoz, Léon, soit; mais que Son Altesse
« N’aura jamais le coin de la lèvre du Cid.

« Le vassal n’a pas droit de dédain sur le maître.
« On vous tire d’exil; mais, Cid, écoutez-moi,
« Il faut dorénavant qu’il vous convienne d’être
« Aussi grand devant Dieu, moins haut devant le roi.

« Pour apaiser l’humeur du roi, fort légitime,
« Il suffit désormais que le roi, comme il sied,
« Sente qu’en lui parlant vous avez de l’estime. »
Babieça frappait sa litière du pied,

Les chiens tiraient leur chaîne et grondaient à la porte,
Et le Cid répondit au roi Santos-le-Roux :
— Sire, il faudrait d’abord que vous fissiez en sorte
Que j’eusse de l’estime en vous parlant à vous.

WELF

CASTELLAN D’OSBOR

WELF.
CYADMIS.
HUG.
OTHON.
SYLVESTRE.
UNE PETITE FILLE, mendiante.
L’HUISSIER DE L’EMPIRE.
PAYSANS, BOURGEOIS, ÉTUDIANTS
DE L’UNIVERSITÉ CARLOVINGIENNE,
SOLDATS.
Devant le précipice d’Osbor.

WELF

CASTELLAN D’OSBOR

Le rebord d’un précipice.

Au delà du précipice, qui est très-étroit, se profile une haute tour crénelée sans fenêtres. Des meurtrières çà et là. Le pont-levis dressé cache la porte.

Le précipice sert de fossé à cette tour.

Derrière la tour monte, à perte de vue, la montagne couverte de sapins. On ne voit pas le ciel.

SCÈNE PREMIÈRE

L’HUISSIER DE L’EMPIRE, un groupe de GENS
DU PEUPLE.

L’huissier de l’empire, en dalmatique d’argent semée d’aigles noirs, entre, précédé des quatre massiers de la Diète. Il est suivi d’un groupe de paysans et de bourgeois.

Il se tourne vers la tour, où l’on ne voit personne.

L’HUISSIER.

Je fais sommation, moi l’huissier de l’empire,

À toi, baron, rebelle à la Diète de Spire.
Rends-toi, sors. Comparais.

UN BOURGEOIS, survenant, aux autres.

A-t-il répondu?

UN PAYSAN.

Non.

L’HUISSIER.

J’ai dit.

Il passe, et disparaît avec les quatre massiers.

LE BOURGEOIS, montrant la tour.

Quel fier dédain! Quel rude compagnon!

UN ÉTUDIANT de l’Université carlovingienne.

Compagnon de personne.

LE PAYSAN.

Oui, pas un ne l’égale.

L’ÉTUDIANT.

Parfois aux champs fauchés il reste une cigale;
Ainsi cet homme libre est demeuré debout.

LE BOURGEOIS.

Oui, ce mont excepté, l’esclavage est partout.

L’ÉTUDIANT.

Welf, à lui seul, tient tête aux princes d’Allemagne.

UN VIEILLARD.

Il ne veut pas qu’on passe à travers sa montagne,
Il est le protecteur d’un pays inconnu.
Qui troublerait ces monts serait le mal venu.
Il est père des bois. Sa tour fait sentinelle.
Il défend le sapin, l’if, la neige éternelle,

La route avec ses fleurs, la biche avec ses faons,
Et les petits oiseaux sont ses petits enfants.
Il guette. Son regard a des éclairs funèbres
Pour quiconque oserait attaquer ces ténèbres.
On voit la silhouette âpre du chevalier
Dans l’entrecroisement des branches du hallier.
Une sérénité nocturne l’environne.
Son casque n’a jamais salué de couronne.
Il se tient là, barrant le chemin, rassurant
La forêt, le ravin, le rocher, le torrent,
Et garde vierge, aux yeux de toute la contrée,
L’ombre où cette montagne auguste donne entrée.

LE BOURGEOIS.
Il est seul dans sa tour?
LE VIEILLARD.
Il n’a pas un archer.
LE PAYSAN à un autre paysan, montrant la tour.
Tiens! entre les créneaux on peut le voir marcher.
L’ÉTUDIANT.
Tant qu’il vit, la patrie aux fers n’est pas éteinte.
LE VIEILLARD.
Il n’a jamais voulu se marier, de crainte
D’introduire en son antre une timidité.
L’ÉTUDIANT.
Ici l’on rampe.
LE VIEILLARD.
Il est seul de l’autre côté.
LE BOURGEOIS.
On dit qu’il vit là, fauve et noir, sans chefs, sans règles,
Qu’il se fait apporter à manger par les aigles,
Et qu’il n’a jamais ri.

LE VIEILLARD.
Deuil fièrement porté!
Il est veuf.
LE BOURGEOIS.

Veuf de qui?
LE VIEILLARD.
Veuf de la liberté.
L'ÉTUDIANT.
Puissant vieillard!
LE VIEILLARD.
Il est inaccessible; il garde
Son fossé, tient dressé son pont-levis, regarde
Par les trous de sa herse, et n'a jamais d'ennui,
Sentant le mont immense en paix derrière lui.
LE BOURGEOIS, regardant à ses pieds.
Le précipice est sombre.
L'ÉTUDIANT, regardant au-dessus de sa tête.
Et la muraille est haute.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Mais s'il repousse un maître, admettrait-il un hôte?
LE VIEILLARD.
Un pauvre, oui.

L'ÉTUDIANT.
Jamais roi dans sa coupe ne but.
LE VIEILLARD.
Il vit sans rendre hommage et sans payer tribut.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Qu'il est heureux! Hélas, les impôts nous obèrent.
LE VIEILLARD.
Mais cela va finir. Les princes délibèrent.
Montrant le revers de la montagne opposée au précipice.
Ils sont là.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Qui donc?
LE VIEILLARD.
Qui? Notre duc Cyadmis,
Le roi d'Arle, et les deux formidables amis
Qui ne se quittent pas, l'un maudit, l'autre frappe,
Othon Trois, empereur, et Sylvestre Deux, pape.

L’ÉTUDIANT.
Qu’importe! Le rocher est fort, Welf est viril.
Welf ignore la peur, mais connaît le péril.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Aussi marche-t-il droit sur lui.
L’ÉTUDIANT.
Pas plus qu’Hercule
Il ne tremble, et pas plus qu’Achille il ne recule.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Robuste, il songe, au bord de l’abîme béant.
L’ÉTUDIANT.
Une douceur d’étoile, et le bras d’un géant!
LE VIEILLARD.
Oui. Mais les rois sont las de voir debout dans l’ombre
Le grand ermite armé de la montagne sombre.
Il se penche et leur désigne du doigt un point qu’on ne voit pas.

Vous voyez bien d’ici cette cabane, au flanc
Du ravin, à l’abri de l’aquilon sifflant?
C’est là que les rois sont assemblés.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Combien?
LE PAYSAN.
Quatre.
LE VIEILLARD.
Ce burg les gêne. Ils sont résolus à l’abattre.
C’est dit. Pour vaincre ils ont leurs troupes et leurs gens
Et le dépit amer, force des assiégeants.
LE PAYSAN.
Le castellan va-t-il enfin livrer passage,
Baisser le pont, céder aux rois?

LE BOURGEOIS.
Oui, s’il est sage.
L’ÉTUDIANT.
Non, s’il est grand.
LE VIEILLARD.

Il est sage et grand.
L’ÉTUDIANT, montrant la tour.
La maison
Tiendra ferme, ayant Welf tout seul pour garnison;
Le vieux songeur n’est pas d’humeur accommodante.
Il mettra des chaudrons sur de la braise ardente,
Et saura leur payer, va, ce qui leur est dû
De poix bouillante, d’huile en feu, de plomb fondu!
LE PAYSAN.
Certes!
L’ÉTUDIANT.
Et l’on verra si leur peau s’accoutume
Au ruissellement large et fumant du bitume.
On voit une fumée sortir du haut de la tour.
LE VIEILLARD.
Tenez, précisément! Il allume son feu.
Voyez-vous la fumée!

L’ÉTUDIANT.
Il va jouer son jeu,
Faire sa fête, offrir la bataille.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Posture
D’un héros!
LE PAYSAN.
Je veux voir la fin de l’aventure.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Nous, en voyant venir des princes, nous fuyons
Devant ce flamboiement de sinistres rayons;
Welf les brave.
Montrant le burg.
C’est beau, cette porte fermée.
L’ÉTUDIANT.
D’un côté ce bonhomme, et de l’autre une armée!
LE VIEILLARD.
À lui seul il est grand comme une nation.
D’ordinaire, tout est dans la proportion,

Et le petit est grand près du moindre, et l’arbuste,

Si vous le comparez au brin d’herbe, est robuste.
Mais Welf dépasse tout. C’est un dieu.
On entend une fanfare de trompettes.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Les clairons!
Silence! Où sont nos trous dans les rochers? Rentrons.

Tous se dispersent de divers côtés. Entre une troupe de valets de la lance avec de longues piques. En tête les clairons.
Puis un gendarme portant un pennon de guerre.
Derrière le pennon, paraît un homme à cheval entièrement couvert d’une chemise de fer à capuchon, et ayant sur le capuchon une couronne ducale.
Les soldats s’arrêtent, le pennon s’arrête, l’homme à cheval s’arrête, et se tourne vers la tour. Les clairons se taisent.
L’homme à cheval tire son épée.
La tour continue de fumer.

SCÈNE DEUXIÈME

CYADMIS, LA TOUR, puis HUG, puis OTHON, puis SYLVESTRE.

CYADMIS, parlant à la tour.
Personne n’a le droit de prendre un coin de terre
Au prince armé par Dieu d’un titre héréditaire.
S’isoler, c’est trahir. Welf, castellan d’Osbor,

Toi qu’on doit comme un ours traquer au bruit du cor,
Je te provoque au bruit du clairon, comme un homme;
Mais d’abord je te parle en ami. Je te somme
D’être un garçon prudent, docile aux bons avis.
Chevalier, haut la herse et bas le pont-levis.
Je veux entrer. Je veux passer. Cette montagne
N’est pas comme la Crète et comme la Bretagne,

Une île, et ce fossé n’est pas la mer. Baron,
Viens, je te chausserai moi-même l’éperon;
Je t’admets dans ma troupe, à vaincre habituée;
Tu seras capitaine, avec une nuée
De trompettes courant et sonnant devant toi.
Descends, ouvre ta porte, et causons. Par ma foi,
Tu n’es pas fait pour vivre entre quatre murailles.
Ami, nous gagnerons ensemble des batailles.
C’est beau d’avoir l’épée au poing, d’être le bras
De la victoire, et d’être un soldat! Tu verras
Comme c’est un bonheur de partir pour la guerre,
Et comme avec orgueil, quittant tout soin vulgaire,
Rois et vassaux, soldats et chefs, nous nous offrons

Un vaste gonflement des drapeaux sur nos fronts!
Quelle joie et quels cris lorsqu’on force une ville!
On se vautre à travers la populace vile!
La femme qu’on fait veuve, on lui prend un baiser.
Tu n’es pas encor d’âge à ne point t’amuser.
En échange d’un burg sur un rocher, je t’offre
Une tente de soie et de l’or à plein coffre,
Et l’altière rumeur des camps et des clairons.
Nous irons conquérir le monde, et nous aurons
Des filles et du vin, et tu feras ripaille
Au lieu de coucher seul dans ton trou sur la paille.
Lève ta herse, accepte, et soyons bons amis.
Ouvre-moi, je tiendrai tout ce que j’ai promis.
Sinon, prends garde à toi. J’ai l’habitude d’être
Patient à l’affront comme au feu le salpêtre.
J’aurai bien vite fait d’écraser ton donjon.
Cueillir un burg ainsi qu’on sarcle un sauvageon,
Et coucher une tour tout de son long dans l’herbe,
Ce sont mes jeux. Sais-tu, de ton château superbe
Ce qui restera, dis, lorsque j’aurai passé?
Une baraque informe au fond d’un noir fossé.
Et de ta haute tour de guerre? Une masure

Bonne aux moineaux cachant leurs nids dans l’embrasure.
Et du sauvage aspect de tes créneaux altiers?
Un tas de pierres, plein de houx et d’églantiers,
Où les femmes viendront faire sécher leur linge.
Je suis Cyadmis, duc et marquis de Thuringe.
Ouvre-moi.

Silence dans la tour.
Paraît un étendard portant à la hampe une couronne de roi.
Entre, derrière un groupe de trompettes, un homme à cheval vêtu de drap d’or, ayant une couronne royale sur la tête. Il a un sceptre à la main. À sa suite, marche une compagnie d’arbalétriers bourguignons couronnés de fleurs; ils ont de grandes arbalètes, des boucliers faits d’une peau de bœuf et hauts comme un homme, et les pieds nus dans des chaussures de corde.
Tous s’arrêtent.
Le duc et sa troupe se rangent.
L’homme à couronne royale fait face à la tour. La fanfare cesse.
HUG, parlant à la tour.
Je suis roi d’Arle aux verts coteaux,
Et j’ai pour fiefs Orange et Saint-Paul-Trois-Châteaux;
À quiconque me brave on sait ce qu’il en coûte,
Et je m’appelle Hug, fils de Boron. Écoute,

Homme de ces monts, toi qui fais de l’ombre ici.
Je ne te vois pas, maître obscur du burg noirci;
Mais derrière ton mur, tu songes; je te parle.
Tu n’es pas sans avoir entendu parler d’Arle,
Dont l’aïeul est Priam, car sur nos monts chenus,
Avant les Phocéens, les Troyens sont venus;
Arle est fille de Troie et mère de Grenoble,
Isidore la nomme une ville très-noble,
Et Théodoric, comte et roi des goths, l’aima.
Les Français ne l’auront jamais. Gênes, Palma,
Mayorque, Rhode et Tyr sont mes ports tributaires,

J’ai le Rhône, et l’Autriche est une de mes terres.

Arle est riche; à la Diète elle achète des voix;
Les califes lui font de précieux envois;
Elle reçoit par mer les dons de ces hautesses,
Les odeurs d’Arabie, et les délicatesses
De l’Asie, et telle est la beauté de ses tours
Qu’elles attirent l’aigle et chassent les vautours.
Mon sceptre est salué par cent vassaux, tous princes.
J’ai le Rhin aux sept monts, la Gaule aux sept provinces.
T’attaquer, toi vieillard, j’en serais bien fâché.
Donne-nous ta montagne, et je t’offre un duché.
Je t’offre en ma Bourgogne autant de bonne terre
Qu’on en voit de mauvaise en ce mont solitaire.
Accepte, car nos champs donnent beaucoup de blé.
Le trouvère Ericus d’Auxerre en a parlé.

Arles t’attend. Je t’offre en ma ville latine
Un palais où, vieillards à la voix enfantine,
Les poëtes viendront, hôtes mélodieux,
Te chanter, comme au temps qu’on croyait aux faux dieux.
Tu seras un seigneur dans mon pompeux cortége,
Et tu présideras des cours d’amour. La neige,
La bise, le brouillard, les ouragans hurlants,
Font une sombre fête à tes fiers cheveux blancs,
Car cet âpre sommet a, sous le vent sonore,
Plus d’hiver que d’été, plus de nuit que d’aurore.

Viens te chauffer, vieillard. Je t’offre le midi.
Tu cueilleras la rose et le lys d’Engaddi.
Accepte. On trouve ainsi moyen de plaire aux femmes;
Car il est gracieux de s’approcher des dames
En souriant avec des bouquets dans les mains.
L’aloès, le palmier, les œillets, les jasmins
Emplissent nos jardins d’encens et d’allégresse,
Et l’ancien dieu Printemps, qu’on adorait en Grèce,
N’avait pas plus de fleurs quand il les rassembla

Toutes, pour les offrir aux abeilles d’Hybla.
Lève la herse, abats le pont, ouvre la porte,
Accepte ce que moi, roi d’Arles, je t’apporte.

Silence dans la tour.
La fumée s’épaissit et devient rougeâtre.
Le roi se range près du duc.
Fanfare.
Paraît une bannière de drap d’or, portant un grand aigle de sable, éployé. Des sonneurs de trompes et des batteurs de cymbales la précèdent.
Derrière la bannière, entre un homme à cheval, vêtu de pourpre, ayant dans la main un globe, et sur la tête la couronne impériale.
Il est suivi d’une poutre à tête de bélier de bronze, portée par des Croates nus, hauts de six pieds. Le Bélier est flanqué de montagnards tyroliens en jaquettes bariolées, armés de frondes.

Tout ce cortège s’arrête et fait face à la tour. Les trompes et les cymbales se taisent.
OTHON, tourné vers la tour.
Othon, empereur, parle à Welf, baron bandit,
Et le bandit se cache, et l’empereur lui dit :
Vassal, ouvre ton burg. Je viens te faire grâce.
Welf, quand c’est l’empereur d’Allemagne qui passe,
La clémence au doux front marche à côté de lui.
Mais l’homme absous, c’est peu; je veux l’homme Ébloui.
Quand l’empereur pardonne, il donne une province.
Le duc te fait soldat, le roi duc, et moi prince.
Chacun de nous, suivant sa taille, te grandit.
Je puis, si je le veux, te mettre en interdit;
J’aime mieux t’attirer, moi centre, dans ma sphère,
Te couvrir de splendeur et d’aurore, et te faire
Roi près de l’empereur, astre près du soleil.
Ton pennon couronné sera presque pareil
À ma bannière, alors qu’on tremble, et que la terre
Se courbe et cherche à fuir sous mon cri militaire,
Et qu’on voit s’envoler dans l’orage en avant

L’hydre noire au bec d’aigle ouvrant son aile au vent!
Welf, obéis. Je suis celui qui tient le globe.
J’ai la guerre et la paix dans les plis de ma robe.
Je t’offre la Hongrie, un royaume. Veux-tu?

Silence dans la tour.

Fanfare.

L’empereur se range près du roi et du duc.

Paraît une grande croix d’or à trois branches. Derrière le porte-croix, qui est habillé de violet, vient, sur une mule blanche, un vieillard vêtu de blanc, qui a la tiare en tête. Il est seul, sans gardes. Le porte-croix s’arrête.

La fanfare se tait. Le vieillard parle à la tour.

SYLVESTRE.

Moi, j’ai les clefs. La force est moins que la vertu.
Deux mains jointes font plus d’ouvrage sur la terre
Que tout le roulement des machines de guerre.
César est grand; mais Christ, à la douceur enclin,
Près de l’homme de pourpre a mis l’homme de lin.
Je suis le Père. En moi la lumière se lève,
Et ce que l’empereur commence, je l’achève;
Il absout pour la terre, et j’absous pour le ciel.
Le grand César ne peut rien donner d’éternel.
Il t’offre une couronne, et moi je t’offre une âme;

La tienne. En t’isolant, comme en un schisme infâme,
Triste excommunié, tu l’as perdue, hélas!
Je te la rends. Frémis, vieillard, tu reculas
Vers Satan, et tu fis outrage au ciel propice
Quand tu mis entre nous et toi ce précipice.
Fils, veux-tu regagner ta part du paradis,
Rentrer chez les élus, fuir de chez les maudits?
Cède à moi qui suis pape, héritier des apôtres.

Un homme paraît entre deux créneaux au haut de la tour. Il est tout habillé de fer. Sa barbe blanche passe sous sa visière baissée. Il se découpe en noir sur le fond de neige de la montagne.

La nuit commence à tomber.

SCÈNE TROISIÈME

LES MÊMES, WELF.

WELF, du haut de la tour.

Que me veut-on? Passez votre chemin, vous autres.
Je hais ton glaive, ô duc. Je hais ton sceptre, ô roi.
César, je hais ton globe impérial. Et toi,
Pape, je ne crois pas à tes clefs. Qu’ouvrent-elles?
Des enfers. Tu mens, pape, et tes fureurs sont telles
Que Rome est le cachot du Christ, je te le dis.
Et pour voir en toi l’homme ouvrant le paradis,
Le Père, j’attendrai, pape, que tu détèles
Tous ces hideux chevaux, Guerre aux rages mortelles,
Haine, Anathème, Orgueil, Vengeance à l’œil de feu.

Monstres par qui tu fais traîner le char de Dieu!
Les chevriers, qu’on voit rôdant de cime en cime,
Sont de meilleurs pasteurs que vous, prêtres; j’estime
Plus que vos crosses d’or d’archevêque ou d’abbé,
Leur bâton d’olivier sauvage au bout courbé.
Bénis soient leurs troupeaux paissant dans les cytises!
Oui, les femmes font faire aux hommes des sottises,
Roi d’Arles; mais j’ai, moi, c’est pourquoi je suis fort,
Pour épouse ma tour, pour amante la mort.
En guise de clairon l’ouragan m’accompagne.
Que peux-tu donc m’offrir qui vaille ma montagne,
César, roi des Romains et des Bohémiens?
Quand tu me donnerais ton aigle! J’ai les miens.
Que venez-vous chercher? Qu’est-ce qui vous amène?
Rois, je suis dans ces bois la seule face humaine.
La terre sait vos noms et les mêle à ses pleurs.
Vous êtes des preneurs de villes, des voleurs
De nations, les chefs de l’éternel pillage.
Que voulez-vous de moi? Je n’ai pas un village.

Vous êtes ici-bas les semeurs de l’effroi.
Le genre humain subit le duc, souffre le roi;
Tu l’opprimes, César; Saint-Père, tu le pilles.

Vos lansquenets font rage, et violent les filles
Qui plongent leurs bras blancs dans le van plein de blé;
Il semble, tant par vous l’univers est troublé,
Que l’air manque aux humains et la rosée aux plantes;
Sur la sainte charrue on voit vos mains sanglantes.
Rien n’ose croître, et rien n’ose aimer. Moi je suis
Un spectre en liberté songeant au fond des nuits.
Vous êtes des héros faisant des faits célèbres.
Est-ce que j’ai besoin de vous dans mes ténèbres?
Je n’ai rien. Pas un homme auprès de moi ne vit.
On trouve dans ces monts l’air que rien n’asservit,
Le ravin, le rocher, des ronces, des cavernes,
Des lacs tristes, pareils aux antiques Avernes,
Le bois noir, le vieux mur par les hiboux choisi,
Le nuage, et c’est tout. Qui vous attire ici?
Pourquoi venir? C’est donc pour me prendre de l’ombre?
Moi, baron dans ma tour, larve dans un décombre,
Je garde ce désert terrible, et j’en ai soin.
L’immense liberté du tonnerre a besoin

De gouffres, de sommets, d’espace, de nuées
Sans cesse par le vent de l’ombre remuées,
D’azur sombre, et de rien qui ressemble à des rois,
Si ce n’est pour tomber sur leur tête. Je crois
En Dieu. Prêtre, entends-tu? Quoi, ce bois où nous sommes
Tente les rois! Les rois n’ont pas assez des hommes!
Mais contentez-vous donc, compagnons couronnés,
De ce tas de vivants que vous exterminez!
Je possède ce mont, et ce mont me possède,
Il m’abrite, et sur lui je veille. Ainsi l’on s’aide.
Moi, je suis l’âme, et vous, vous êtes les démons.
Je descends des géants qui, marchant sur les monts,
Et les pressant du pied, faisaient jaillir des marbres

Les sources au-dessus desquelles sont les arbres.
Puisqu'autour du sommet superbe, tout s'éteint,
Puisque la bête brute, en son auguste instinct,
Proteste, alors que l'homme à plat ventre se couche,

Ah! puisque rien n'est libre à moins d'être farouche,
De mes noirs sangliers, de mes ours, de mes loups,
Vous n'approcherez pas, princes; j'en suis jaloux.
Messeigneurs, savez-vous pourquoi? C'est que ces bêtes
Ces êtres lourds et durs, ces monstres, sont honnêtes.
Ils n'ont pas de Séjan, ils n'ont pas de Rufin;
Leur cruauté n'est pas le crime; c'est la faim.
Vous, rois, dans vos festins, au bruit sacré des lyres,
Gais, couronnés de fleurs, échangeant des sourires,
Pour usurper un trône, ou même sans raison,
Vous vous versez les uns aux autres du poison;
Vos poignards emmanchés de perles font des choses
Horribles, et, parmi les lauriers et les roses,
Teints de sang, vous restez éblouissants toujours;
Moi, je choisis les loups, et j'aime mieux les ours;
Et je préfère, rois qu'un vil cortége encense,
À vos crimes riants leur féroce innocence.
Allez-vous-en. — Fuyez. Quoi! ne sentez-vous pas
Tout un hérissement fauve autour de vos pas!
Vous bravez donc, puissants aveugles, le murmure
Qui répond dans l'abîme au bruit de mon armure,
L'amour qu'a pour moi l'ombre, et l'appui que j'aurais
Dans la virginité des profondes forêts.
J'ai sous ma garde un coin de paradis sauvage,
Un mont farouche et doux. Ici point de ravage
Montrant que l'homme fut heureux dans ces beaux lieux;

Point de honte montrant qu'il y fut orgueilleux.
L'onde est libre, le vent est pur, la foudre est juste.
Rois, que venez-vous faire en ce désert auguste?
Le gouffre est noir sans vous, sans vous le ciel est bleu.
N'usurpez pas ce mont; je le conserve à Dieu.

Rois, l’honneur exista jadis. J’en suis le reste.
C’est bien. Partez. S’il est un bruit que je déteste,
C’est le bourdonnement inutile des voix.
Il disparaît.
CYADMIS.
Il nous brave!
HUG.
Couvrons nos soldats de pavois.
Traînons une baliste. Apportons les échelles.
À l’assaut!
OTHON.
À l’assaut!
SYLVESTRE, montrant le précipice.
Si vous n’avez pas d’ailes,
Vous ne franchirez pas cet abîme. Vos ponts
Ne pourront au roc vif enfoncer leurs crampons.
Les torrents dans ce trou tombent. Et votre armée,
Comme eux, en y croulant, y deviendra fumée.

CYADMIS, regardant.
C’est vrai, le précipice est sans fond.
HUG, se penchant.
Quel fossé!
OTHON, regardant et reculant.
On ne peut passer là que par le pont baissé.
CYADMIS, touchant le rocher.
Auprès de ce granit le marbre serait tendre.
OTHON, à Sylvestre.
Que nous conseille donc Ta Sainteté?
SYLVESTRE.
D’attendre.
La nuit vient. Et le temps qui s’écoule est pour nous.
Cachez dans le ravin des gardes à genoux.
Faites le guet.

Tous s’en vont. Il ne reste que des pointes de piques presque indistinctes dans un pli du ravin.

Il commence à neiger.
Crépuscule. Noirceur croissante de la tour et de la montagne. Un enfant paraît dans un coude du rocher. C'est une petite fille, pieds nus, en haillons; une mendiante.
Elle vient du côté opposé à celui par où les rois sont sortis.
Elle se traîne dans la neige qui s'épaissit.
Elle regarde autour d'elle avec inquiétude, et monte péniblement la pente qui mène au bord du précipice.
Profond silence. Les pointes des piques restent immobiles.

SCÈNE QUATRIÈME

UNE MENDIANTE, ENFANT.

LA MENDIANTE.
J'ai froid. Comme il fait noir! Personne.
Du bruit? Je crois que c'est une cloche qui sonne.
Non, c'est le vent.
Apercevant la tour.
Un mur! On dirait un beffroi.
Frissonnant.

Il me semble que j'ai des bêtes près de moi.
Jésus!
Avançant.
Ah! le chemin finit ici. Pourrai-je
Aller plus loin?
Regardant dans le précipice.
Ceci, c'est un trou.
Grelottant.
Comme il neige!
Pourtant je crois bien voir en face une maison.
Non, c'est noir.
Songeant.
Est-ce vrai qu'on vous met en prison
Parce que vous allez dans les champs toute seule?
Mon Dieu, j'ai peur! Et puis les loups ouvrent la gueule

Et marchent dans les bois avec les revenants.

Où suis-je? Cette route est pleine de tournants.
J’ai perdu mon chemin. Ce n’est plus que des pierres.
Si j’essayais un peu de dire mes prières?
Regardant le burg.

Est-ce une maison? Non. C’est du rocher que j’ai
Pris pour un mur. Je meurs! Ah! je n’ai pas mangé.
J’ai les pieds écorchés par les cailloux. Ma mère!
WELF, paraissant entre les créneaux.
Qui m’appelle?
SCÈNE CINQUIÈME

LA MENDIANTE, WELF.

WELF, tournant une lanterne sourde vers le précipice.
Quelqu’un est là?
LA MENDIANTE.
De la lumière!
WELF, regardant.
On dirait un enfant. Qu’es-tu? fille ou garçon?
LA MENDIANTE.
Monseigneur, je voudrais entrer dans la maison.
WELF.
D’où viens-tu?

LA MENDIANTE.
Je n’ai pas de pays sur la terre.
WELF.
Où vas-tu?
LA MENDIANTE.
Je ne sais.
WELF.
Où sont tes père et mère?
LA MENDIANTE.
Je n’en ai pas. Je sais que les autres en ont.

Voilà tout.
WELF.
En venant du côté de ce mont,
N’as-tu pas rencontré des gens armés?
LA MENDIANTE.
Personne.
WELF.
Comme ils ont pris la fuite! Ainsi le daim frissonne
Devant l’ours.
LA MENDIANTE.
Je suis fille, et j’ai dix ans; je vais
Devant moi, je mendie, et le temps est mauvais,
Je voudrais me chauffer devant la cheminée,
Et je n’ai pas mangé de toute la journée.
WELF.
Entre, enfant. Viens souper, et viens, sous l’œil de Dieu,

Dormir sur un bon lit à côté d’un bon feu.
La montagne est l’aïeule et je suis le grand-père.
Le burg sera ton nid comme il est mon repaire.
Le brasier, qui devait chasser les bataillons,
Va faire mieux encore et sécher tes haillons;
Au lieu de voir, devant sa flamme, tout l’empire
Reculer effrayé, je te verrai sourire.
Dieu soit béni! je n’ai pas fait mon feu pour rien.
Cela commençait mal et cela finit bien.
Ah! tu t’en allais donc sans savoir où, perdue,
Ne voyant que du noir dans toute l’étendue!
Il ne sera pas dit, ma fille, qu’à ton cri,
Le vieux roc foudroyé ne s’est pas attendri.
Dans la grande montagne entre, pauvre petite;
Et sois chez toi. Je vais baisser le pont.

Il disparaît. La lumière descend de meurtrière en meurtrière. Le pont commence à s’abaisser. On voit la lumière entre les barreaux de la herse. La herse se lève, le pont se baisse et rejoint le bord du précipice.

Welf, la lanterne à la main, traverse le pont et vient à l’enfant.
Viens.

L’enfant prend la main de Welf.
Mouvement dans les piques. Clameurs dans le ravin. Des soldats sortent d’une embuscade, et se précipitent sur Welf. Cyadmis est à leur tête.

SCÈNE SIXIÈME

LES MÊMES, CYADMIS, SOLDATS, puis les GENS DU PEUPLE.

CYADMIS, l’épée nue.
Vite!
Tous sur lui!

Welf est saisi. Il se débat. On le garrotte. Le pont est occupé. Le burg est envahi. La forteresse s’emplit de soldats portant des torches. Cyadmis regarde avec triomphe Welf enchaîné et silencieux.
Welf est pris!
LA MENDIANTE, joignant les mains devant Welf.
Monseigneur! ...
LES SOLDATS.
Nous l’avons!
CYADMIS.
Le sauvage est pris! Gloire aux drapeaux esclavons!
Accourent les bourgeois et les paysans du commencement.
Ils se groupent autour de Welf prisonnier.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Tiens, il s’est laissé prendre. Imbécile!
LE PAYSAN.
Une grive
Prise au miroir.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Tant mieux.

LE VIEILLARD.

Oui. Vive le duc!
L’ÉTUDIANT.
Vive
Le roi!
LE BOURGEOIS.
Vive le pape!
LE PAYSAN.
Et vive l’empereur!
LE VIEILLARD, regardant Welf garrotté.
Je le croyais plus grand qu’un autre.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Quelle erreur!
Il est petit.
LE PAYSAN, au bourgeois.
Il n’est pas plus grand que vous n’êtes.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Quelle idée avait-il de défendre les bêtes?
Les hommes, passe encor.

LE VIEILLARD.
Tout au plus.
L’ÉTUDIANT.
C’est un fou.
LE VIEILLARD.
S’amuser à monter la garde au bord d’un trou!
C’est ridicule.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Il est même laid. À tout prendre,
Je le vaux. À bas Welf!
LE PAYSAN.
Moi, j’irai le voir pendre.
LE BOURGEOIS.
Je ne donnerais pas de sa peau deux écus.
Huées et ricanements autour de Welf.
WELF.
Tant le rire est aisé derrière les vaincus!

LE POËTE, À WELF

Tu fus grand, c’est pourquoi l’on t’outrage. Sois triste,
Et pardonne. La foule ingrate et vaine existe,
Elle livre quiconque est par le sort livré,
Et raille d’autant plus qu’elle a plus admiré.
Que ton souvenir reste à la sombre vallée,
Qu’on entende pleurer la source inconsolée,
Que l’humble oiseau t’appelle et te mêle à son chant,
Et que le grand œil bleu des biches te cherchant
Se mouille, et soit rempli de lueurs effarées.
Si la mer prononçait des noms dans ses marées,
Ô vieillard, ce serait des noms comme le tien.
Tu fus l’ami, l’appui, le tuteur, le soutien
En haut, de l’arbre immense, en bas, du frêle arbuste;

Un jour les voyageurs sur ton rocher robuste
Monteront, et, penchés, tâcheront de te voir,
Vaincu superbe, au fond du précipice noir,
Et leurs yeux chercheront ton fantôme sublime
Sous l’entrecroisement des branches dans l’abîme.

AVERTISSEMENTS

ET

CHÂTIMENTS

LE TRAVAIL DES CAPTIFS

Dieu dit au roi : Je suis ton Dieu. Je veux un temple.

C’est ainsi, dans l’azur où l’astre le contemple,
Que Dieu parla; du moins le prêtre l’entendit.
Et le roi vint trouver les captifs, et leur dit :
— En est-il un de vous qui sache faire un temple?
— Non, dirent-ils. — J’en vais tuer cent pour l’exemple,
Dit le roi. Dieu demande un temple en son courroux.
Ce que Dieu veut du roi, le roi le veut de vous.
C’est juste. —
C’est pourquoi l’on fit mourir cent hommes.

Alors un des captifs cria : — Sire, nous sommes
Convaincus. Faites-nous, roi, dans les environs,
Donner une montagne, et nous la creuserons.
— Une caverne? dit le roi. — Roi qui gouvernes,
Dieu ne refuse point d’entrer dans les cavernes,
Dit l’homme, et ce n’est pas une rébellion
Que faire un temple à Dieu de l’antre du lion.
— Faites, dit le roi.
L’homme eut donc une montagne;

Et les captifs, traînant les chaînes de leur bagne,
Se mirent à creuser ce mont, nommé Galgal;
Et l’homme était leur chef, bien qu’il fût leur égal,
Mais dans la servitude, ombre où rien ne pénètre,
On a pour chef l’esclave à qui parle le maître.

Ils creusèrent le mont Galgal profondément.
Quand ils eurent fini, l’homme dit : — Roi clément,
Vos prisonniers ont fait ce que le ciel désire;
Mais ce temple est à vous avant d’être à Dieu, sire;

Que votre Éternité daigne venir le voir.
— J’y consens, répondit le roi. — Notre devoir,
Reprit l’humble captif prosterné sur les dalles,
Est d’adorer la cendre où marchent vos sandales;
Quand vous plaît-il de voir notre œuvre? — Sur-le-champ.
Alors le maître et l’homme, à ses pieds se couchant,
Furent mis sous un dais sur une plate-forme;
Un puits était bouché par une pierre énorme,
La pierre fut levée, un câble hasardeux
Soutint les quatre coins du trône, et tous les deux

Descendirent au fond du puits, unique entrée
De la montagne à coups de pioches éventrée.
Quand ils furent en bas, le prince s’étonna.
— C’est de cette façon qu’on entre dans l’Etna,
C’est ainsi qu’on pénètre au trou de la Sibylle,
C’est ainsi qu’on aborde à l’Hadès immobile,
Mais ce n’est pas ainsi qu’on arrive au saint lieu.
— Qu’on monte ou qu’on descende, on va toujours à Dieu,
Dit l’architecte ayant comme un forçat la marque;
Ô roi, soyez ici le bienvenu, monarque
Qui parmi les plus grands et parmi les premiers
Rayonnez, comme un cèdre au milieu des palmiers
Règne, et comme Pathmos brille entre les Sporades.
— Qu’est ce bruit? dit le roi. — Ce sont mes camarades
Qui laissent retomber le couvercle du puits.
— Mais nous ne pourrons plus sortir. — Rois, vos appuis
Sont les astres, ô prince, et votre cimeterre
Fait reculer la foudre, et vous êtes sur terre
Le soleil comme au ciel le soleil est le roi.
Que peut craindre ici-bas Votre Hautesse? — Quoi!
Plus d’issue! — Ô grand roi, roi sublime, qu’importe!
Vous êtes l’homme à qui Dieu même ouvre la porte.
Alors le roi cria : — Plus de jour, plus de bruit,
Tout est noir, je ne vois plus rien. Pourquoi la nuit
Est-elle dans ce temple ainsi qu’en une cave?
Pourquoi? — Parce que c’est ta tombe, dit l’esclave.

HOMO DUPLEX

Un jour, le duc Berthold, neveu du comte Hugo,
Marquis du Rhin, seigneur de Fribourg en Brisgau,
Traversait en chassant la forêt de Thuringe.
Il vit sous un grand arbre un ange auprès d'un singe.
Ces deux êtres, pareils à deux lutteurs grondants,
Se regardaient l'un l'autre avec des yeux ardents;
Le singe ouvrait sa griffe et l'ange ouvrait son aile.
Et l'ange dit : — Berthold de Zœhringen, qu'appelle
Dans la verte forêt le bruit joyeux des cors,
Tu vois ici ton âme à côté de ton corps.
Écoute : moi je suis ton esprit, lui ta bête.
Chacun de tes péchés lui fait lever la tête;
Chaque bonne action que tu fais me grandit.
Tant que tu vis, je lutte et j'étreins ce bandit;
À ta mort tout finit dans l'ombre ou dans l'aurore.
Car c'est moi qui t'enlève ou lui qui te dévore.

VERSET DU KORAN

La terre tremblera d'un profond tremblement,
Et les hommes diront : Qu'a-t-elle? En ce moment,
Sortant de l'ombre en foule ainsi que des couleuvres,
Pâles, les morts viendront pour regarder leurs œuvres.
Ceux qui firent le mal le poids d'une fourmi
Le verront, et pour eux Dieu sera moins ami;
Ceux qui firent le bien ce que pèse une mouche

Le verront, et Satan leur sera moins farouche.

L'AIGLE DU CASQUE

Ô sinistres forêts, vous avez vu ces ombres
Passer, l’une après l’autre, et, parmi vos décombres,
Vos ruines, vos lacs, vos ravins, vos halliers,
Vous avez vu courir ces deux noirs chevaliers;
Vous avez vu l’immense et farouche aventure;
Les nuages, qui sont errants dans la nature,
Ont eu cette épouvante énorme au-dessous d’eux;
La victoire fut sourde et l’exploit fut hideux;
Et l’herbe et la broussaille et les fleurs et les plantes
Et les branches en sont encor toutes tremblantes.
L’arbre en parle au rocher, l’antre en parle au menhir;
Le vieux mont Lothian semble se souvenir;

Et la fauvette en cause avec la tourterelle.
Et maintenant, disons ce que fut la querelle
Entre cet homme fauve et ce tragique enfant.
*

Le fond, nul ne le sait. L’obscur passé défend
Contre le souvenir des hommes l’origine
Des rixes de Ninive et des guerres d’Égine,
Et montre seulement la mort des combattants
Après l’échange amer des rires insultants;
Ainsi les anciens chefs d’Écosse et de Northumbre
Ne sont guère pour nous que du vent et de l’ombre;

Ils furent orageux, ils furent ténébreux,
C’est tout; ces sombres lords se dévoraient entr’eux;
L’homme vient volontiers vers l’homme à coups d’épée
Bruce hait Baliol comme César Pompée;
Pourquoi? Nous l’ignorons. Passez, souffles du ciel.
Dieu seul connaît la nuit.
Le comte Strathaël,
Roi d’Angus, pair d’Écosse, est presque centenaire;
Le gypaëte cache un petit dans son aire,
Et ce lord a le fils de son fils près de lui;
Toute sa race ainsi qu’un blême éclair a lui

Et s’est éteinte; il est ce qui reste d’un monde;
Mais Dieu près du front chauve a mis la tête blonde,
L’aïeul a l’orphelin. Jacque a six ans. Le lord

Un soir l’appelle, et dit : — Je sens venir la mort.
Dans dix ans, tu seras chevalier. Fils, écoute.
Et, le prenant à part sous une sombre voûte,
Il parla bas longtemps à l’enfant adoré,
Et quand il eut fini l’enfant lui dit : — J’irai.
Et l’aïeul s’écria : — Pourtant il est sévère
En sortant du berceau de monter au calvaire,
Et seize ans est un âge où, certe, on aurait droit
De repousser du pied le seuil du tombeau froid,
D’ignorer la rancune obscure des familles,
Et de s’en aller rire avec les belles filles!
L’aïeul mourut.
*

Le temps fuit. Dix ans ont passé.
*

Tiphaine est dans sa tour que protége un fossé,
Debout, les bras croisés, sur la haute muraille.
Voilà longtemps qu’il n’a tué quelqu’un, il bâille.

Dix ans, cela suffit pour que les chênes verts
Soient d’une obscurité plus épaisse couverts;
Dix ans, cela suffit pour qu’un enfant grandisse.

En dix ans, certe, Orphée oublierait Eurydice,
Admète son épouse et Thisbé son amant,
Mais pas un chevalier n’oublierait un serment.

C’est le soir; et Tiphaine est oisif. Les mélèzes
Font au loin un bruit vague au penchant des falaises.

Ce Tiphaine est le lord sauvage des forêts;

Pas un loup n'oserait l'approcher de trop près;
Il s'est fait un royaume avec une montagne;
On le craint en Écosse, en Northumbre, en Bretagne;
On ne l'attaque pas, tant il est toujours seul;
Être dans le désert, c'est vivre en un linceul.
Il fait peur. Est-il prince? est-il né sous le chaume?
On ne sait; un bandit qui serait un fantôme,
C'est Tiphaine; et les vents et les lacs et les bois
Semblent ne prononcer son nom qu'à demi-voix;
Pourtant ce n'est qu'un homme; il bâille.
Lord Tiphaine
A mis autour de lui l'effroi comme une chaîne;
Mais il en sent le poids; tout s'enfuit devant lui;
Mais l'orgueil est la forme altière de l'ennui.
N'ayant personne à vaincre, il ne sait plus que faire.
Soudain il voit venir l'écuyer qu'il préfère,
Bernard, un bon archer qui sait lire, et Bernard
Dit : — Milord, préparez la hache et le poignard.
Un seigneur vous écrit. — Quel est ce seigneur? — Sire,

C'est Jacques, lord d'Angus. — Soit. Qu'est-ce qu'il désire?
— Vous tuer. — Réponds-lui que c'est bien.
Peu de temps
Suffit pour rapprocher deux hautains combattants
Et pour dire à la mort qu'elle se tienne prête,
L'éclair n'entendrait pas Dieu lui criant : Arrête!
Arriver, c'est la loi du sort.
Il s'écoula
Une semaine. Puis, de Lorne à Knapdala,
Douze sonneurs de cor en dalmatiques rouges
Firent savoir à tous, aux manants dans leurs bouges,
Au prêtre en son église, au baron dans sa tour,
Que deux lords entendaient se rencontrer tel jour,
Que saint Gildas serait patron de la rencontre,
Et qu'Angus étant pour, Tiphaine serait contre;
Car l'usage est d'avoir un saint pour les soldats,
En Irlande Patrick, en Écosse Gildas;

C’est pour ou contre un saint que tout combat se livre;
Avec la liberté de fuir et de poursuivre,
D’être ferme ou tremblant, magnanime ou couard,
Cruel comme Beauclerc, ou bon comme Édouard.
*

L’endroit pour le champ-clos fut choisi très-farouche.
Le dur hiver, qui change en pierre l’eau qu’il touche,
Ne laissait pousser là sous la pluie et le vent
Que des sapins cassés l’un par l’autre souvent,
Les arbres n’étant pas plus calmes que les hommes;
Tout sur terre est en proie, ainsi que nous le sommes,
Au souffle, à la tempête, au funeste aquilon.

Une corde est nouée aux sapins d’un vallon;
Elle marque une enceinte, une clairière ouverte
Sur des champs où la Tweed coule dans l’herbe verte,
Lente et molle rivière aux roseaux murmurants.
Un pêle-mêle obscur d’arbres et de torrents,
D’ombre et d’écroulement, de vie et de ravage,
Entoure affreusement la clairière sauvage.
On en sort du côté de la plaine. Et de là
Viennent les paysans que le cor appela.

La lice est pavoisée, et sur les banderolles
On lit de fiers conseils et de graves paroles :
« — Brave qui n’est pas bon n’est brave qu’à demi. »
« — Soyez hospitalier, même à votre ennemi;
« Le chêne au bûcheron ne refuse pas l’ombre. »

Les pauvres gens des bois accourent en grand nombre;
Plusieurs sont encor peints comme étaient leurs aïeux,
Des cercles d’un bleu sombre agrandissent leurs yeux,
Sur leur tête attentive, étonnée et muette,

Les uns ont le héron, les autres la chouette,

Et l’on peut distinguer aux plumes du bonnet
Les Scots d’Abernethy des Pictes de Menheit;
Ils ont l’habit de cuir des antiques provinces;
Ils viennent contempler le combat de deux princes,
Mais restent à distance et regardent de loin,
Car ils ont peur; le peuple est un pâle témoin.

Si l’on ne voyait pas au ciel le tatouage
De l’azur, du rayon, de l’ombre et du nuage,
On n’apercevrait rien qu’un paysage noir;
L’œil dans un clair-obscur inquiétant à voir
S’enfonce, et la bruyère est morne, et dans la brume
On devine, au-delà des mers, l’Hékla qui fume
Ainsi qu’un soupirail d’enfer à l’horizon.
Le juge du camp, fils d’une altière maison,
Lord Kaine, est assisté de deux crieurs d’épée;
L’estrade est de peaux d’ours et de rennes drapée;
Et quatre exorciseurs redoutés du sabbat
Font la police, ainsi qu’il sied dans un combat.

Un prêtre dit la messe, et l’on chante une prose.
*

Fanfares. C’est Angus.
Un cheval d’un blanc rose
Porte un garçon doré, vermeil, sonnant du cor,
Qui semble presque femme et qu’on sent vierge encor;
Doux être confiant comme une fleur précoce.
Il a la jambe nue à la mode d’Écosse;
Plus habillé de soie et de lin que d’acier,
Il vient, gaîment suivi d’un bouffon grimacier;
Il regarde, il écoute, il rayonne, il ignore;
Et l’on croit voir l’entrée aimable de l’aurore.
On sent que, dans le monde étrange où nous passons,

Ce nouveau venu, plein de joie et de chansons,
Tel que l’oiseau qui sort de l’œuf et se délivre,

A le mystérieux contentement de vivre;
Pas d’être éblouissant qui ne soit ébloui,
Il rit. Ses témoins sont du même âge que lui;
Tous chantent, légers, fiers, laissant flotter les brides;
C’est Mar, Argyle, Athol, Rothsay, roi des Hébrides,
David, roi de Stirling, Jean, comte de Glascow;
Ils ont des colliers d’or ou de roses au cou;
Ainsi se presse, au fond des halliers, sous les aulnes,
Derrière un petit dieu l’essaim des jeunes faunes.
Hurrah! Cueillir des fleurs ou bien donner leur sang,
Que leur importe? Autour du comte adolescent,
Page et roi, dont Hébé serait la sœur jumelle,
Un vacarme charmant de panaches se mêle.
Ô jeunes gens, déjà risqués, à peine éclos!
Son cortége le suit jusqu’au seuil du champ-clos.
Puis on le quitte. Il faut qu’il soit seul; et personne
Ne peut plus l’assister dès que le clairon sonne;

Quoi qu’il advienne, il est en proie au dur destin.
On lit sur son écu, pur comme le matin,
La devise des rois d’Angus : Christ et lumière.
La jeunesse toujours arrive la première;
Il approche, joyeux, fragile, triomphant,
Plume au front; et le peuple applaudit cet enfant.
Et le vent profond souffle à travers les campagnes.

Tout à coup on entend la trompe des montagnes,
Chant des bois plus obscur que le glas du beffroi;
Et brusquement on sent de l’ombre autour de soi;
Bien qu’on soit sous le ciel, on se croit dans un antre.
Un homme vient du fond de la forêt. Il entre.
C’est Tiphaine.
C’est lui.
Hautain, dans le champ-clos,
Refoulant les témoins comme une hydre les flots,

Il pénètre. Il est droit sous l’armure saxonne.

Son cheval, qui connaît ce cavalier, frissonne.
Ce cheval noir et blanc marche sans se courber;
Il semble que le ciel sombre ait laissé tomber
Des nuages mêlés de lueurs sur sa croupe.
Tiphaine est seul; aucune escorte, aucune troupe;
Il tient sa lance; il a la chemise de fer,
La hache comme Oreste, et, comme Gaïfer,
Le poignard; sa visière est basse; elle le masque;
Grave, il avance, avec un aigle sur son casque.
Un mot sur sa rondache est écrit : Bellua.

Quand il vint, tout trembla, mais nul ne salua.
*

Les motifs du combat étaient sérieux, certes;
Mais ni le pâtre errant dans les landes désertes,

Ni l'ermite adorant dans sa grotte Jésus,
Personne sous le ciel ne les a jamais sus;
Et le juge du camp les ignorait lui-même.

Les deux lords, comme il sied à ce moment suprême,
Se parlèrent de loin.
— Bonjour, roi. — Bonjour, roi.
— Je viens te demander raison. Tu sais pourquoi?
— Que t'importe?
Et tous deux mirent la lance haute.
Le juge du camp dit : — Chacun de vous est l'hôte
Du sépulcre, et ne peut en sortir maintenant
Que si Dieu le permet au fond du ciel tonnant.
Puis il reprit, selon la coutume écossaise :
— Milord, quel âge as-tu? — Quarante ans. — Et toi? — Seize.
— C'est trop jeune, cria la foule. — Combattez,
Dit le juge. Et l'on fit le champ des deux côtés.

Être de même taille et de même équipage,
Combattre homme contre homme ou page contre page,

S’adosser à la tombe en face d’un égal,
Être Ajax contre Mars, Fergus contre Fingal,
C’est bien, et cela plaît à la romance épique;
Mais là le brin de paille, et là la lourde pique,

Ici le vaste Hercule, ici le doux Hylas,
Polyphème devant Acis, c’est triste, hélas!
Le péril de l’enfant fait songer à la mère;
Tous les Astyanax attendrissent Homère,
Et la lyre héroïque hésite à publier
Le combat du chevreuil contre le sanglier.

L’huissier fit le signal. Allez!
*

Tous deux partirent.
Ainsi deux éclairs vont l’un vers l’autre et s’attirent.

L’enfant aborda l’homme et fit bien son devoir;
Mais l’homme n’eut pas l’air de s’en apercevoir.
Tiphaine s’arrêta, muet, le laissant faire;
Ainsi, prête à crouler, l’avalanche diffère;

Ainsi l’enclume semble insensible au marteau;
Il était là, le poing fermé comme un étau,
Démon par le regard et sphinx par le silence;
Et l’enfant en était à sa troisième lance
Que Tiphaine n’avait pas encor riposté;
Sur cet homme de fer et de fatalité
Qui paraissait rêver au centre d’une toile,
Pas plus ému d’un choc que d’un souffle une étoile,
L’enfant frappait, piquait, taillait, recommençait,
Tantôt sur le cimier, tantôt sur le corset;
Et l’on eût dit la mouche attaquant l’araignée.
Sa face de sueur était toute baignée.
Tiphaine, tel qu’un roc, immobile et debout,
Méditait, et l’enfant s’essoufflait. Tout à coup

Tiphaine dit : Allons! Il leva sa visière,
Fit un rugissement de bête carnassière,

Et sur le jeune comte Angus il s'abattit
D'un tel air infernal que le pauvre petit
Tourna bride, jeta sa lance, et prit la fuite.

Alors commença l'âpre et sauvage poursuite,
Et vous ne lirez plus ceci qu'en frémissant.
*

Tremblant, piquant des deux, du côté qui descend,
Devant lui, n'importe où, dans la profondeur fauve,
Les bras au ciel, l'enfant épouvanté se sauve.
Son cheval l'aime et fait de son mieux. La forêt
L'accepte et l'enveloppe, et l'enfant disparaît.
Tous se sont écartés pour lui livrer passage.
En le risquant ainsi son aïeul fut-il sage?
Nul ne le sait; le sort est de mystères plein;
Mais la panique existe et le triste orphelin
Ne peut plus que s'enfuir devant la destinée.
Ah! pauvre douce tête au gouffre abandonnée!
Il s'échappe, il s'esquive, il s'enfonce à travers

Les hasards de la fuite obscurément ouverts,
Hagard, à perdre haleine, et sans choisir sa route;
Une clairière s'offre, il s'arrête, il écoute,
Le voilà seul; peut-être un dieu l'a-t-il conduit?
Tout à coup il entend dans les branches du bruit... —

Ainsi dans le sommeil notre âme d'effroi pleine
Parfois s'évade et sent derrière elle l'haleine
De quelque noir cheval de l'ombre et de la nuit;
On s'aperçoit qu'au fond du rêve on vous poursuit.
Angus tourne la tête, il regarde en arrière;
Tiphaine monstrueux bondit dans la clairière.
Ô terreur! et l'enfant, blême, égaré, sans voix,

Court et voudrait se fondre avec l’ombre des bois.
L’un fuit, l’autre poursuit. Acharnement lugubre!
Rien, ni le roc debout, ni l’étang insalubre,
Ni le houx épineux, ni le torrent profond,
Rien n’arrête leur course; ils vont, ils vont, ils vont!

Ainsi le tourbillon suit la feuille arrachée.
D’abord dans un ravin, tortueuse tranchée,
Ils serpentent, parfois se touchant presque; puis,
N’ayant plus que la fuite et l’effroi pour appuis,
Rapide, agile et fils d’une race écuyère,
L’enfant glisse, et, sautant par-dessus la bruyère,
Se perd dans le hallier comme dans une mer.
Ainsi courrait avril poursuivi par l’hiver.
Comme deux ouragans l’un après l’autre ils passent.
Les pierres sous leurs pas roulent, les branches cassent,
L’écureuil effrayé sort des buissons tordus.
Oh! comment mettre ici dans des vers éperdus
Les bonds prodigieux de cette chasse affreuse,
Le coteau qui surgit, le vallon qui se creuse,
Les précipices, l’antre obscur, l’escarpement,
Les deux sombres chevaux, le vainqueur écumant,
L’enfant pâle, et l’horreur des forêts formidables?

Il n’est pas pour l’effroi de lieux inabordables,
Et rien n’a jamais fait reculer la fureur;
Comme le cerf, le tigre est un ardent coureur;
Ils vont!
On n’entend plus, même au loin, les haleines
Du peuple bourdonnant qui s’en retourne aux plaines.
Le vaincu, le vainqueur courent tragiquement.
*

Le bois, calme et désert sous le bleu firmament,
Remuait mollement ses branchages superbes;
Les nids chantaient, les eaux murmuraient dans les herbes;
On voyait tout briller, tout aimer, tout fleurir.

Grâce! criait l’enfant, je ne veux pas mourir!

Mais son cheval se lasse et Tiphaine s’approche.

Tout à coup, d’un réduit creusé dans une roche,
Un vieillard au front blanc sort, et, levant les bras,
Dit : De tes actions un jour tu répondras;
Qui que tu sois, prends garde à la haine; elle enivre;
Celui qui va mourir pour celui qui doit vivre
T’implore. Ô chevalier, épargne cet enfant!

Tiphaine furieux d’un coup de hache fend
L’âpre rocher qui sert à ce vieillard d’asile,
Et dit : Tu vas le faire échapper, imbécile!
Et, sinistre, il remet son cheval au galop.

Quelle que soit la course et la hâte du flot,
Le vent lointain finit toujours par le rejoindre;
Angus entend venir Tiphaine, et le voit poindre
Parmi des profondeurs d’arbres, à l’horizon.

Un couvent d’où s’élève une vague oraison
Apparaît; on entend une cloche qui tinte;
Et des rayons du soir la haute église atteinte
S’ouvre, et l’on voit sortir du portail à pas lents
Une procession d’ombres en voiles blancs;
Ce sont des sœurs ayant à leur tête l’abbesse,
Et leur chant grave monte au ciel où le jour baisse;

Elles ont vu s’enfuir l’enfant désespéré;
Alors leur voix profonde a dit miserere;
L’abbesse les amène; elle dresse sa crosse
Entre l’adolescent frêle et l’homme féroce;
On porte devant elle un grand crucifix noir;
Toutes ces vierges, sœurs qu’enchaîne un saint devoir,
Pleurent sur le vainqueur comme sur la victime,
Et viennent opposer au passage d’un crime

Le Christ immense ouvrant ses bras au genre humain.
Tiphaine arrive sombre et la hache à la main,
Et crie à ce troupeau murmurant grâce! grâce!
— Colombes, ôtez-vous de là; le vautour passe!

La nuit vient, et toujours, tremblant, pleurant, fuyant,
L’enfant effaré court devant l’homme effrayant.
C’est l’heure où l’horizon semble un rêve, et recule.
Clair de lune, halliers, bruyères, crépuscule.
La poursuite s’acharne, et, plus qu’auparavant
Forcenée, à travers les arbres et le vent,

Fait peur à l’ombre même, et donne le vertige
Aux sapins sur les monts, aux roses sur leur tige.
L’enfant sans armes, l’homme avec son couperet,
Courent dans la noirceur des bois, et l’on dirait
Que dans la forêt spectre ils deviennent fantômes.

Une femme, d’un groupe obscur de toits de chaumes,
Sort, et ne peut parler, les larmes l’étouffant;
C’est une mère, elle a dans les bras son enfant,
Et c’est une nourrice, elle a le sein nu. — Grâce!
Dit-elle, en bégayant; et dans le vaste espace
Angus s’enfuit. — Jamais! dit Tiphaine inhumain.
Mais la femme à genoux lui barre le chemin.
— Arrête! sois clément, afin que Dieu t’exauce!
Grâce! Au nom du berceau, n’ouvre pas une fosse!
Sois vainqueur, c’est assez; ne sois pas assassin.
Fais grâce. Cet enfant que j’ai là sur mon sein

T’implore pour l’enfant que cherche ton épée.
Entends-moi; laisse fuir cette proie échappée.
Ah! tu ne tueras point, et tu m’écouteras,
Chevalier, puisque j’ai l’aurore dans mes bras.
Songe à ta mère. Eh bien, je suis mère comme elle.
Homme, respecte en moi la femme. — À bas, femelle!
Dit Tiphaine, et du pied il frappe ce sein nu.

Ce fut dans on ne sait quel ravin inconnu
Que Tiphaine atteignit le pauvre enfant farouche;
L’enfant pris n’eut pas même un râle dans la bouche;
Il tomba de cheval, et morne, épuisé, las,
Il dressa ses deux mains suppliantes, hélas!
Sa mère morte était dans le fond de la tombe,
Et regardait.
Tiphaine accourt, s’élance, tombe
Sur l’enfant, comme un loup dans les cirques romains,
Et d’un revers de hache il abat ces deux mains
Qui dans l’ombre élevaient vers les cieux la prière;

Puis, par ses blonds cheveux dans une fondrière
Il le traîne.
Et riant de fureur, haletant,
Il tua l’orphelin et dit : Je suis content!
Ainsi rit dans son antre infâme la tarasque.
*

Alors l’aigle d’airain qu’il avait sur son casque,
Et qui, calme, immobile et sombre, l’observait,
Cria : Cieux étoilés, montagnes que revêt
L’innocente blancheur des neiges vénérables,
Ô fleuves, ô forêts, cèdres, sapins, érables,
Je vous prends à témoin que cet homme est méchant!
Et cela dit, ainsi qu’un piocheur fouille un champ,
Comme avec sa cognée un pâtre brise un chêne,
Il se mit à frapper à coups de bec Tiphaine;
Il lui creva les yeux; il lui broya les dents;
Il lui pétrit le crâne en ses ongles ardents
Sous l’armet d’où le sang sortait comme d’un crible,
Le jeta mort à terre, et s’envola terrible.

LES SEPT

MERVEILLES DU MONDE

LES SEPT

*

Des voix parlaient; pour qui? Pour l'espace sans bornes,
Pour le recueillement des solitudes mornes,
Pour l'oreille, partout éparse, du désert;
Nulle part, dans la plaine où le regard se perd,
On ne voyait marcher la foule aux bruits sans nombre,
Mais on sentait que l'homme écoutait dans cette ombre.
Qui donc parlait? C'étaient des monuments pensifs,
Debout sur l'onde humaine ainsi que des récifs,
Calmes, et chacun d'eux semblait un personnage
Vivant, et se rendant lui-même témoignage.
Nulle rumeur n'osait à ces voix se mêler,
Et le vent se taisait pour les laisser parler,
Et le flot apaisait ses mystérieux râles.
Un soleil vague au loin dorait les frontons pâles.
Les astres commençaient à se faire entrevoir
Dans l'assombrissement religieux du soir.

I

LE TEMPLE D'ÉPHÈSE

Et l'une de ces voix, c'était la voix d'un temple,
Disait :
— Admirez-moi! Qui que tu sois, contemple;
Qui que tu sois, regarde et médite, et reçois
À genoux mon rayon sacré, qui que tu sois;
Car l'idéal est fait d'une étoile, et rayonne;
Et je suis l'idéal. Troie, Argos, Sicyone,

Ne sont rien près d’éphèse, et l’envieront toujours,
Ô peuple, éphèse ayant mon ombre sur ses tours.
Éphèse heureuse dit : « Si j’étais Delphe ou Thèbe,

« On verrait flamboyer sur mes dômes l’érèbe,
« Mes oracles feraient les hommes soucieux;
« Si j’étais Cos, j’irais forgeant les durs essieux;
« Si j’étais Tentyris, sombre ville du rêve,

« Mes pâtres, fronts sacrés en qui le ciel se lève,
« Regarderaient, à l’heure où naît le jour riant,
« Les constellations, penchant sur l’Orient,
« Verser dans l’infini leurs chariots pleins d’astres;
« Si j’étais Bactria, j’aurais des Zoroastres;
« Si j’étais Olympie en Élide, mes jeux
« Montreraient une palme aux lutteurs courageux,
« Les devins combattraient chez moi les astronomes,
« Et mes courses, rendant les dieux jaloux des hommes,
« Essouffleraient le vent à suivre Corœbus; —

« Mais à quoi bon chercher tant d’inutiles buts,
« Ayant, que l’aube éclate ou que le soir décline,
« Ce temple ionien debout sur ma colline,
« Et pouvant faire dire à la terre : c’est beau! »
Et ma ville a raison. Ainsi qu’un escabeau
Devant un trône, ainsi devant moi disparaissent
Les Parthénons fameux que les rayons caressent;
Ils sont l’effort, je suis le miracle.
À celui
Qui ne m’a jamais vu, le jour n’a jamais lui.
Ma tranquille blancheur fait venir les colombes;
Le monde entier me fête, et couvre d’hécatombes,

Et de rois inclinés, et de mages pensifs,
Mes grands perrons de jaspe aux clous d’argent massifs.
L’homme élève vers moi ses mains universelles.
Les éphèbes, portant de sonores crécelles,

Dansent sur mes parvis, jeunes fronts inégaux;
Sous ma porte est la pierre où Deuxippe d’Argos
S’asseyait, et d’Orphée expliquait les passages;
Mon vestibule sert de promenade aux sages,
Parlant, causant, avec des gestes familiers,
Tour à tour blancs et noirs dans l’ombre des piliers.

Corinthe en me voyant pleure, et l’art ionique
Me revêt de sa pure et sereine tunique.

Le mont porte en triomphe à son sommet hautain
L’épanouissement glorieux du matin,
Mais ma beauté n’est point par la sienne éclipsée,
Car le soleil n’est pas plus grand que la pensée;
Ce que j’étais hier, je le serai demain;
Je vis, j’ai sur mon front, siècles, l’esprit humain,
Et le génie, et l’art, ces égaux de l’aurore.

La pierre est dans la terre; âpre et froide, elle ignore;
Le granit est la brute informe de la nuit,
L’albâtre ne sait pas que l’aube existe et luit,
Le porphyre est aveugle et le marbre est stupide;
Mais que Ctésiphon passe, ou Dédale, ou Chrespide,

Qu’il fixe ses yeux pleins d’un divin flamboiement
Sur le sol où les rocs dorment profondément,
Tout s’éveille; un frisson fait remuer la pierre;
Lourd, ouvrant on ne sait quelle trouble paupière,
Le granit cherche à voir son maître, le rocher
Sent la statue en lui frémir et s’ébaucher,
Le marbre obscur s’émeut dans la nuit infinie
Sous la parenté sombre et sainte du génie,
Et l’albâtre enfoui ne veut plus être noir;
Le sol tressaille, il sent là-haut l’homme vouloir;
Et voilà que, sous l’œil de ce passant qui crée,
Des sourdes profondeurs de la terre sacrée,
Tout à coup, étageant ses murs, ses escaliers,

Sa façade et ses rangs d’arches et de piliers,
Fier, blanchissant, cherchant le ciel avec sa cime,
Monte et sort lentement l’édifice sublime,
Composé de la terre et de l’homme, unissant
Ce que dans sa racine a le chêne puissant
Et ce que rêve Euclide aidé de Praxitèle,
Mêlant l’éternel bloc à l’idée immortelle!

Mon frontispice appuie au calme entablement
Ses deux plans lumineux inclinés mollement,
Si doux qu’ils semblent faits pour coucher des déesses;

Parfois, comme un sein nu sous l’or des blondes tresses,
Je me cache parmi les nuages d’azur;
Trois sculpteurs sur ma frise, un volsque, Albus d’Anxur,
Un mède, Ajax de Suze, un grec, Phtos de Mégare,
Ont ciselé les monts où la meute s’égare,
Et la pudeur sauvage, et les dieux de la paix,
Des Triptolèmes nus parmi les blés épais,
Et des Cérès foulant sous leurs pieds des Bellones;
Cent-vingt-sept rois ont fait mes cent vingt-sept colonnes;
Je suis l’art radieux, saint, jamais abattu;
Ma symétrie auguste est sœur de la vertu;

Mon resplendissement couvre toute la Grèce;
Le rocher qui me porte est rempli d’allégresse,
Et la ville à mes pieds adore avec ferveur;
Sparte a reçu sa loi de Lycurgue rêveur,
Mantinée a reçu sa loi de Nicodore,
Athènes, qu’un reflet de divinité dore,
De Solon, grand pasteur des hommes convaincus,
La Crète de Minos, Locres de Séleucus,
Moi, le temple, je suis législateur d’Éphèse;
Le peuple en me voyant comprend l’ordre et s’apaise;
Mes degrés sont les mots d’un code, mon fronton
Pense comme Thalès, parle comme Platon,

Mon portique serein, pour l’âme qui sait lire,
A la vibration pensive d’une lyre,
Mon péristyle semble un précepte des cieux;
Toute loi vraie étant un rhythme harmonieux,
Nul homme ne me voit sans qu’un dieu l’avertisse;
Mon austère équilibre enseigne la justice;
Je suis la vérité bâtie en marbre blanc;
Le beau, c’est, ô mortels, le vrai plus ressemblant;
Venez donc à moi, foule, et, sur mes saintes marches,
Mêlez vos cœurs, jetez vos lois, posez vos arches;
Hommes, devenez tous frères en admirant;

Réconciliez-vous devant le pur, le grand,
Le chaste, le divin, le saint, l’impérissable;
Car, ainsi que l’eau coule et comme fuit le sable,
Les ans passent, mais moi je demeure; je suis
Le blanc palais de l’aube et l’autel noir des nuits;
Quand l’aurore apparaît, je ris, doux édifice;
Le soir, l’horreur m’emplit; un sombre sacrifice
Semble en mes profondeurs muettes s’apprêter;
De derrière mon faîte, on voit la nuit monter
Ainsi qu’une fumée avec mille étincelles.
Tous les oiseaux de l’air m’effleurent de leurs ailes,
Hirondelles, faisans, cigognes au long cou;
Mon fronton n’a pas plus la crainte du hibou
Que Calliope n’a la crainte de Minerve.
Tous ceux que Sybaris voluptueuse énerve
N’ont qu’à franchir mon seuil d’austérité vêtu
Pour renaître, étonnés, à la forte vertu;
Sous ma crypte en entend chuchoter la sibylle;

Parfois, troublé soudain dans sa brume immobile,
Le plafond, où des mots de l’ombre sont écrits,
Tremble à l’explosion tragique de ses cris;
Sur ma paroi secrète et terrible, l’augure
Du souriant Olympe entrevoit la figure,
Et voit des mouvements confus et radieux

De visages qui sont les visages des dieux;
De vagues aboiements sous ma voûte se mêlent;
Et des voix de passants invisibles s’appellent;
Et le prêtre, épiant mon redoutable mur,
Croit par moments qu’au fond du sanctuaire obscur,
Assise près d’un chien qui sous ses pieds se couche,
La grande chasseresse, éclatante et farouche,
Songe, ayant dans les yeux la lueur des forêts.
Ô temps, je te défie. Est-ce que tu pourrais
Quelque chose sur moi, l’édifice suprême?
Un siècle sur un siècle accroît mon diadème;
J’entends autour de moi les peuples s’écrier :
Tu nous fais admirer et tu nous fais prier;
Nos fils t’adoreront comme nous t’adorâmes,
Chef-d’œuvre pour les yeux et temple pour les Âmes!

II

LES JARDINS DE BABYLONE

Une deuxième voix s’éleva; celle-ci,
Dans l’azur par degrés mollement obscurci,
Parlait non loin d’un fleuve à la farouche plage,
Et cette voix semblait le bruit d’un grand feuillage :

— Gloire à Sémiramis la fatale! Elle mit
Sur ses palais nos fleurs sans nombre où l’air frémit.
Gloire! en l’épouvantant elle éclaira la terre;
Son lit fut formidable et son cœur solitaire;
Et la mort avait peur d’elle en la mariant.
La lumière se fit spectre dans l’Orient,
Et fut Sémiramis. Et nous, les arbres sombres

Qui, tandis que les toits s’écroulent en décombres,
Grandissons, rajeunis sans cesse et reverdis,
Nous que sa main posa sur ce sommet jadis,
Nous saluons au fond des nuits cette géante;

Notre verdure semble une ruche béante
Où viennent s’engouffrer les mille oiseaux du ciel;
Nos bleus lotus penchés sont des urnes de miel;
Nos halliers, tout chargés de fleurs rouges et blanches,
Composent, en mêlant confusément leurs branches,
En inondant de gomme et d’ambre leurs sarments,
Tant d’embûches, d’appeaux et de pièges charmants,
Et de filets tressés avec les rameaux frêles,
Que le printemps s’est pris dans cette glu les ailes,
Et rit dans notre cage et ne peut plus partir.
Nos rosiers ont l’air peints de la pourpre de Tyr;
Nos murs prodigieux ont cent portes de cuivre;
Avril s’est fait titan pour nous et nous enivre
D’âcres parfums qui font végéter le caillou,
Vivre l’herbe, et qui font penser l’animal fou,

Et qui, quand l’homme vient errer sous nos pilastres,
Font soudain flamboyer ses yeux comme des astres;
Les autres arbres, fils du silence hideux,
Ont la terre muette et sourde au-dessous d’eux;
Nous, transplantés dans l’air, plus haut que Babylone
Pleine d’un peuple épais qui roule et tourbillonne,
Et de pas, et de chars par des buffles traînés,
Nous vivons au niveau du nuage, étonnés
D’entendre murmurer des voix sous nos racines;
Le voyageur qui vient des campagnes voisines
Croit que la grande reine au bras fort, à l’œil sûr,
A volé dans l’éden ces forêts de l’azur.
Le rayon de midi dans nos fraîcheurs s’émousse;
La lune s’assoupit dans nos chambres de mousse;
Les paons ouvrent leur queue éblouissante au fond
Des antres que nos fleurs et nos feuillages font;
Plus d’une nymphe y songe, et dans nos perspectives
Parfois se laissent voir des nudités furtives;
La ville, nous ayant sur sa tête, va, vient,
Se parle et se répond, querelle, s’entretient,
Travaille, achète, vend, forge, allume ses lampes;

Le vent, sur nos plateaux et sur nos longues rampes,

Mêle l’horizon vague et les murs et les toits
Et les tours au frisson vertigineux des bois,
Et nos blancs escaliers, nos porches, nos arcades
Flottent dans le nuage écumant des cascades;
Sous nos abris sacrés, nul bruit ne les troublant,
Vivent le martinet, l’ibis, le héron blanc
Qui porte sur le front deux longues plumes noires;
L’air ride nos bassins, inquiètes baignoires
Où viennent s’apaiser les pâles voluptés;
Des bœufs à face humaine, à nos portes sculptés,
Témoignent que Belus est le seul roi du monde;
À de certains endroits notre ombre est si profonde
Que la nuit en montant aux cieux n’y change rien;
Nous avons vu grandir le trône assyrien;
Nos troncs, contemporains des anciens jours de l’homme,
Ont vu le premier arbre et la première pomme,
Et, vieux, ils sont puissants, et leurs antiques fûts
Ont des rameaux si durs, si noueux, si touffus,

Et d’un balancement si noir, que le zéphyre
Épuisé s’y fatigue et ne peut leur suffire;
Et leur vaste branchage est fait d’un tel granit
Qu’il faudrait l’ouragan pour y bercer un nid.

Gloire à Sémiramis qui posa nos terrasses
Sur des murs que vient battre en vain le flot des races
Et sur des ponts dont l’arche est au-dessus du temps!
Cette reine parfois, sous nos rameaux flottants,
Venait rire entre deux écroulements d’empires;
Elle abattait au loin les rois moindres ou pires,
Puis s’en allait ayant l’homme jusqu’aux genoux,
Et venait respirer contente parmi nous;
Gaie, elle se couchait sur des peaux de panthère;
Quels lieux, quels champs, quels murs, quels palais sur la terre,
Hors nous, ont entendu rire Sémiramis?

Nous, les arbres hautains, nous étions ses amis;
Nos taillis ont été les parvis et les salles

Où s'épanouissaient ses fêtes colossales;
C'est dans nos bras, que n'a jamais touchés la faulx,
Que cette reine a fait ses songes triomphaux;
Nos parfums ont parfois conseillé des supplices;
De ses enivrements nos fleurs furent complices;
Nos sentiers n'ont gardé qu'une trace, son pas.
Fils de Sémiramis, nous ne périrons pas;
Ce qu'assembla sa main, qui pourrait le disjoindre?
Nous regardons le siècle après le siècle poindre;
Nous regardons passer les peuples tour à tour;
Nous sommes à jamais, et jusqu'au dernier jour,
Jusqu'à ce que l'aurore au front des cieux s'endorme,
Les jardins monstrueux pleins de sa joie énorme.

III

LE MAUSOLÉE

Une troisième voix dit :
— Sésostris est grand;

Cadmus est sur la terre un homme fulgurant;
Comme Typhon cent bras, Cyrus a cent batailles;
Ochus, portant sa hache aux profondes entailles,
Du Taurus fièrement garde l'âpre ravin;
Hécube est sainte; Achille est terrible et divin;
Il semble, après Thésée, Astyage, Alexandre,
Que l'homme trop grandi ne peut plus que descendre;
La calme majesté revêt Belochus trois;
Xercès, de Salamine assiégeant les détroits,
Ressemble à l'aquilon des mers; Penthésilée
A sur son dos la peau d'une bête étoilée,
Et, superbe, apparaît tendant son arc courbé;
Didon, Sémiramis, Thalestris, Niobé,
Resplendissent parmi les profondeurs sereines;

Mais entre tous ces rois, entre toutes ces reines,
Reines au sceptre d’or qu’admire un peuple heureux,
Rois vainqueurs ou bénis, se disputant entr’eux
Ces fiers surnoms, le grand, le beau, le fort, le juste,
Artémise est sublime et Mausole est auguste.

Je suis le monument du cœur démesuré;

La mort n’est plus la mort sous mon dôme azuré;
Elle est splendide, elle est prospère, elle est vivante;
Elle a tant de porphyre et d’or qu’elle s’en vante;
Je suis le deuil triomphe et le tombeau palais;
Oh! tant qu’on chantera ce chant : — Oublions-les,
Vivons, soyons heureux! — aux morts gisant sous terre;
Tant que les voluptés riront près du mystère;
Tant qu’on noiera ses deuils dans les vins décevants,
Moi l’édifice sombre et superbe, ô vivants,
Je jetterai mon ombre à vos joyeux visages;
Jusqu’à la fin des ans, jusqu’au terme des âges,
Jusqu’à ce que le temps, las, demande à s’asseoir,
Mes cippes, mes piliers, mes arcs, l’aube et le soir
Découpant sur le ciel mes frontons taciturnes
Où des colosses noirs rêvent, portant des urnes,
Mon bronze glorieux et mon marbre sacré
Diront : Mausole est mort, Artémise a pleuré.

Les siècles, vénérable et triomphante épreuve,
À jamais en passant verront la grande veuve
Assise sur mon seuil, fantôme saint et doux;

Elle attend le moment d’aller, près de l’époux,
Se coucher dans le lit de la noce éternelle;
Elle pare son front d’ache et de fraxinelle,
Et se parfume afin de plaire à son mari;
Elle tient un miroir qui n’a jamais souri,
Et se met des anneaux aux doigts, et sous ses voiles
Peigne ses longs cheveux d’où tombent des étoiles.

LE JUPITER OLYMPIEN

Quand cette voix se tut, à Pise, près de là,
Du haut d’une acropole une autre voix parla :
— Je suis l’Olympien, je suis le Musagète;

Tout ce qui vit, respire, aime, pense et végète,
Végète, pense, vit, aime et respire en moi;
L’encens monte à mes pieds mêlé d’un vague effroi;
L’angle de mon sourcil touche à l’axe du monde;
La tempête me parle avant de troubler l’onde;
Je dure sans vieillir, j’existe sans souffrir;
Je ne sais qu’une chose impossible, mourir.
J’ai sur mon front, que l’ombre en reculant adore,
La bandelette bleue et rose de l’aurore.
Ô mortels effrénés, emportés, hagards, fous,
L’urne des jours me lave en vous noircissant tous;
À mesure qu’au fond des nuits et sous la voûte
Du temps d’où l’instant suinte et tombe goutte à goutte,
Les siècles, partant l’un après l’autre, s’en vont,
Ainsi que des oiseaux volant sous un plafond,
Hébé plus fraîche rit en mes hautes demeures;
Ma jeunesse renaît sous le baiser des heures;
J’empêche, en abaissant mon sceptre lentement
Vers le trou monstrueux plein du triple aboîment,

Cerbère de saisir les astres dans sa gueule;
La chaîne du destin immuable peut seule
Meurtrir ma main égale à tout l’effort des dieux;
Mon temple offre son mur au nid mélodieux;
Et c’est du vol de l’aigle et du vol de la foudre,
C’est du cri de l’enfer tremblant de se dissoudre,
C’est du choc convulsif des groupes des typhons,
C’est du rassemblement des nuages profonds,
Que le vieux Phidias d’Athènes, statuaire,

Composa, dans l’horreur sainte du sanctuaire,
L’immense apaisement de ma sérénité.
Quand, dans le saint pœan par les mondes chanté,
L’harmonie amoindrie avorte ou dégénère,
Je rends le rhythme aux cieux par un coup de tonnerre;
Mon crâne plein d’échos, plein de lueurs, plein d’yeux,
Est l’antre éblouissant du grand Pan radieux;
En me voyant on croit entendre le murmure

De la ville habitée et de la moisson mûre,
Le bruit du gouffre au chant de l’azur réuni,
L’onde sur l’océan, le vent dans l’infini,
Et le frémissement des deux ailes du cygne;
On sent qu’il suffirait à Jupiter d’un signe
Pour mêler sur le front des hommes le chaos;
Que seul je mets la bride aux bouches des fléaux,
Que l’abîme est mon hydre, et que je pourrais faire
Heurter le pôle au pôle et l’étoile à la sphère,
Et rouler à flots noirs les nuits sur les clartés,
Et s’entre-regarder les dieux épouvantés,
Plus aisément qu’un pâtre au flanc hâlé ne jette
Une pierre aux chevreaux broutant sur le Taygète.

V

LE PHARE

Les nuages erraient dans les souffles des airs,
Et la cinquième voix monta du bord des mers :

— Sostrate Gnidien regardait les étoiles.
De la tente des cieux dorant les larges toiles,
Elles resplendissaient dans le nocturne azur;
Leur rayonnement calme emplissait l’éther pur
Où le soir le grand char du soleil roule et sombre;
Elles croisaient, au fond des clairs plafonds de l’ombre
Où le jour met sa pourpre et la nuit ses airains,
Leurs chœurs harmonieux et leurs groupes sereins;

Le sinistre océan grondait au-dessous d’elles;
L’onde à coups de nageoire et les vents à coups d’ailes
Luttaient, et l’âpre houle et le rude aquilon
S’attaquaient dans un blême et fauve tourbillon;
Éole fou prenait aux cheveux Neptune ivre;
Et c’était la pitié du songeur que de suivre
Les pauvres nautoniers de son œil soucieux;
Partout piége et naufrage; il tombait de ces cieux
Sur l’esquif et la barque et les fortes trirèmes
Une foule d’instants terribles ou suprêmes;
Et pas une clarté pour dire : Ici le port!
Le gouffre, redoublant de tourmente et d’effort,
Vomissait sur les nefs, d’horreur exténuées,
Toute son épouvante et toutes ses nuées;
Et les brusques écueils surgissaient; et comment
S’enfuir dans ce farouche et noir déchirement?
Et les marins perdus se courbaient sous l’orage;

La mort leur laissait voir, comme un dernier mirage,
La terre s’éclipsant derrière les agrès,
Les maisons, les foyers pleins de tant de regrets,
Des fantômes d’enfants à genoux, et des rêves
De femmes se tordant les bras le long des grèves;
On entendait crier de lamentables voix :
— Adieu, terre! patrie, adieu! collines, bois,
Village où je suis né, vallée où nous vécûmes! ... —
Et tout s’engloutissait dans de vastes écumes,
Tout mourait; puis le calme, ainsi que le jour naît,
Presque coupable et presque infâme, revenait;
Le ciel, l’onde, achevaient en concert leur mêlée;
L’hydre verte laissait luire l’hydre étoilée;
L’océan se mettait, plein de morts, teint de sang,
À gazouiller ainsi qu’un enfant innocent;

Cependant l’algue allait et venait dans les chambres
Des navires roulant au fond de l’eau leurs membres;
Les bâtiments noyés rampaient au plus profond

Des flots qui savent seuls dans l’ombre ce qu’ils font.
Tristes esquifs partis, croyant aux providences!
Et les sphères menaient dans le ciel bleu leurs danses;
Et, n’ayant pu montrer ni le port ni l’écueil,
Ni préserver la nef de devenir cercueil,
Les constellations, jetant leur lueur pâle
Jusqu’au lit ténébreux de la grande eau fatale,
Et sous l’onde, et parmi les effrayants roseaux,
Dessinant la figure obscure des vaisseaux,
Poupes et mâts, débris des sapins et des ormes,
Éclairaient vaguement ces squelettes difformes,
Et faisaient sous l’écume, au fond du gouffre amer,
Rire aux dépens des dieux les monstres de la mer.
Les morts flottaient sous l’eau qui jamais ne s’arrête,
Et par moments, levant hors de l’onde la tête,
Ils semblaient adresser, dans leurs vagues réveils,
Une question sombre et terrible aux soleils.

C’est alors que, des flots dorant les sombres cimes,
Voulant sauver l’honneur des Jupiters sublimes,
Voulant montrer l’asile aux matelots, rêvant
Dans son Alexandrie, à l’épreuve du vent,
La haute majesté d’un phare inébranlable
À la solidité des montagnes semblable,
Présent jusqu’à la fin des siècles sur la mer,
Avec du jaspe, avec du marbre, avec du fer,
Avec les durs granits taillés en tétraèdres,
Avec le roc des monts, avec le bois des cèdres,
Et le feu qu’un titan a presque osé créer,
Sostrate Gnidien me fit, pour suppléer,
Sur les eaux, dans les nuits fécondes en désastres,
À l’inutilité magnifique des astres.

VI

LE COLOSSE DE RHODES

Et ceci dans l’espace était à peine dit
Qu’une voix du côté de Rhodes s’entendit :

— Mon nom, Lux; ma hauteur, soixante-dix coudées;
Ma fonction, veiller sur les mers débordées;
Le vrai phare, c’est moi.
Rhode est sous mon orteil.
Devant la fixité de mes yeux sans sommeil,
L’hiver blanchit les monts où le milan séjourne,
Le zodiaque vaste et formidable tourne,
L’homme vit, l’océan roule, les matelots
Débarquent sur les quais les sacs et les ballots,
Le jour luit, l’ouragan s’endort ou s’exaspère,
Et, gardien de l’eau bleue en son brumeux repaire,

Sentinelle que nul ne viendra relever,
Je regarde la nuit venir, l’aube arriver,
La voile fuir, le flot hurler comme un molosse,
Avec la rêverie immense du colosse.

Ô tristes mers, l’airain c’est l’immobilité;
L’airain, ô large gouffre à jamais agité,
C’est la victoire; il sort de la forge géante;
Il a Vulcain pour père, ou Lysippe, ou Cléanthe,
Ou Phidias; il sort, fier, vivant; après quoi,
Il monte au piédestal comme à son trône un roi,
Et s’empare du temps et de la solitude;
Et l’airain, c’est le calme, ô vaste inquiétude.

Lui l’immuable, il fut à son heure orageux;
Dans tes fixes écueils, dans tes rapides jeux,
Tu ne lui montres rien, ô mer, qu’il ne connaisse;
Il t’égale en durée, il t’égale en jeunesse;
Il a rongé la cuve ainsi que toi les ports;
Étant le bronze, il est rocher comme tes bords,
Et flot comme ton onde, ayant été la lave.
Il est du piédestal le triomphal esclave,

Et le piédestal morne et soumis est son chien.

Le ciel auteur de tout, du mal comme du bien,
Amalgame, construit, veut, rejette, préfère,
Et seul crée, et seul fait ce que l’homme croit faire;
Le ciel, — sans demander si c’est à l’immortel
Ou si c’est au tyran qu’on élève un autel,
Sans s’informer à qui la foule prostitue
Ou consacre l’airain, le marbre, la statue, —
Anime l’ouvrier, fondeur ou forgeron,
Et sur le moule obscur, béant comme un clairon,
Où l’artiste sculpta Cécrops ou Polyphonte,
Penche et fait basculer les chaudières de fonte;
Eh bien, ce ciel sacré, pur, jamais endormi,
Qui donne au combattant le cheval pour ami,
Au laboureur le bœuf ruminant dans l’étable,
Ô mer, c’est lui qui veut que, saint et respectable,
Le bronze soit formé d’or, de cuivre et d’étain;
Comme un sage, envoyé pour vaincre le destin,
Étant la souveraine et grande conscience,
Est composé de foi, d’honneur, de patience;
L’un affronte les ans, et l’autre les bourreaux;
Et le ciel fait l’airain comme il fait le héros.

C’est ainsi que je fus créé comme un athlète;
Aujourd’hui ta colère énorme me complète,

Ô mer, et je suis grand sur mon socle divin
De toute ta grandeur rongeant mes pieds en vain;
Nu, fort, le front plongé dans un gouffre de brume,
Enveloppé de bruit et de grêle et d’écume
Et de nuits et de vents qui se heurtent entr’eux,
Je dresse mes deux bras vers l’éther ténébreux,
Comme si j’appelais à mon aide l’aurore;
Mais il se tromperait s’il croit que je l’implore,
Le matin passager et court du jour changeant;
Le soleil large et chaud et la lune d’argent

Pour mon sourcil profond ne sont que des fantômes;
L’étincelle des cieux, l’étincelle des chaumes,
Étoile ou paille, sont pour moi de la lueur;
La goutte de l’orage est ma seule sueur;
Je ne suis jamais las; et, sans que je me courbe,
Vainqueur, je sens frémir sous moi l’abîme fourbe.
Parfois l’aigle, évadé du désert nubien,

Au-dessus de mon front plane, et me dit : C’est bien.
Stable, plus que le gouffre éternel mais mobile,
Plus que les peuples, plus que l’astre, plus que l’île,
Je regarde errer l’eau, l’ombre, l’homme, et Délos;
J’ai sous mes yeux l’amas mystérieux des flots,
Image des humains, des songes et des nombres;
Le vaisseau convulsif passe entre mes pieds sombres;
Le mât frissonnant bat ma cuisse ou mon genou;
Et l’on voit s’engouffrer, fuyant l’aquilon fou,
Sous l’arc prodigieux de mes jambes ouvertes,
La flotte qui revient du fond des ondes vertes.
Ma droite élève au loin sur ma tête un flambeau;
La tempête, vautour, le naufrage, corbeau,
Viennent autour de moi s’abattre, et mon visage
Les effraie, et devient sévère à leur passage;
Le salut me connaît, moi le grand chandelier,
Ainsi que le chameau connaît le chamelier,
Le char Automédon et l’esquif Palinure;
De même que la scie agrandit la rainure,
La proue en me voyant fend l’eau plus fièrement;
Comme une fille craint son redoutable amant,

La mer au sein lascif, cette prostituée,
A peur de m’apporter quelque barque tuée;
Et le flot, dont le pli roule un pauvre nocher,
En s’approchant de moi, tâche de le cacher;
Je suis le dieu cherché par tout ce qui chancelle
Sur le frémissement de l’onde universelle;
Le naufragé m’invoque en embrassant l’écueil;

La nuit je suis cyclope, et le phare est mon œil;
Rouge comme la peau d’un taureau qu’on écorche,
La ville semble un rêve aux lueurs de ma torche;
Pour les marins perdus, c’est l’aurore qui point;

Et je règne; et le gouffre inquiet ne sait point
S’il doit japper de joie ou rugir de colère
Quand, jusqu’aux profondeurs les plus mornes, j’éclaire
L’immense tremblement de l’horizon confus.

Tais-toi, mer! Je serai toujours ce que je fus.
Car il ne se peut pas qu’en ma sombre aventure
J’aie à combattre rien dans toute la nature
De plus fort que ton flot terrible dont je ris;
Car il ne se peut pas, ô gouffre aux tristes cris,
Qu’après avoir fondu les briques des fournaises,
Après s’être roulé sur la pourpre des braises,
Après avoir lassé les soufflets haletants,
Mon fauve airain soit tendre aux morsures du temps;
Que moi qui brave, roi des vagues éblouies,
Le ruissellement vaste et farouche des pluies,
Moi qui l’été, l’hiver, me dresse sans savoir
Si la bourrasque est dure et si l’orage est noir,

Qui vois l’éclair à peine, ayant pour ordinaire
D’émousser sur ma peau de bronze le tonnerre,
Je sois vaincu, détruit, aboli, ruiné,
Par l’heure, égratignure au sein blanc de Phryné;
Que jamais rien m’ébranle, et que, parce qu’il passe
Des astres au zénith, des zéphyrs dans l’espace,
Mes muscles, enviés par le granit souvent,
Se déforment ainsi qu’une nuée au vent;
Et qu’une vaine année arrivant acharnée,
Et rapide, et prodigue, après une autre année,
Une saison venant après une saison,
Janvier remplaçant mai dans le vague horizon,
En soufflant sur les nids et sur les fleurs, dissipe

L’ouvrage de Charès, élève de Lysippe.

Je suis là pour jamais; lève les yeux et vois
Sur ton front le colosse, ô mer aux rudes voix!
Que m’importe! rugis, tonne, éclabousse, gronde,
Je suis enraciné dans le crâne du monde,
Comme le mont Ossa, comme le mont Athos;
Et la seule statue ayant deux piédestaux,
C’est moi; je brave Hadès et je vaincrai Saturne;
On m’a nommé Soleil, mais le bronze est nocturne;
Vulcain forgea de l’ombre et fit l’airain; j’ai beau

Jeter sur l’océan le frisson d’un flambeau,
J’ai beau porter au poing une flamme qui guide
L’homme, battu des mers, dans cette nuit liquide,
Autour de moi, sur l’île et sur l’eau, clair miroir,
L’aube a beau resplendir, je suis le géant noir;
J’ai la durée obscure et lourde des ténèbres;
Je sens l’énigme en moi liée à mes vertèbres,
Et Pan mystérieux met sa force en mes reins;
Je vis; les ténébreux sont aussi les sereins;
Puissant, je suis tranquille; et la terre âpre ou blonde,
Le bouleversement tumultueux de l’onde,
Les races succédant aux races, les tribus
Et les peuples changeant de lois, de mœurs, de buts,
La transformation lente des destinées,
La déroute effarée et sombre des années,
Tous les êtres du globe ou du bleu firmament,
Entrant, sortant, flottant, surgissant, s’abîmant,
Sur mon front, qui domine et la vague et la plage,
Sont de la vision, mais ne sont pas de l’âge;
Les siècles sont pour moi, colosse, des instants;
Et, tant qu’il coulera des jours des mains du temps,
Tant que poussera l’herbe et tant que vivra l’homme,
Tant que les chars pesants et les bêtes de somme
Marcheront sur la plaine, usant les durs pavés,

Mes deux pieds écartés et mes deux bras levés,
Devant la mer qui vient, s'enfle, approche et recule,
Devant l'astre, devant le pâle crépuscule,
Sembleront au passant vers ces rochers venu
Le grand X de la nuit debout dans l'inconnu.

VII

LES PYRAMIDES

Et, comme dans un chœur les strophes s'accélèrent,
Toutes ces voix dans l'ombre obscure se mêlèrent.

Les jardins de Bélus répétèrent : — Les jours
Nous versent les rayons, les parfums, les amours;
Le printemps immortel, c'est nous, nous seuls; nous sommes
La joie épanouie en roses sur les hommes. —
Le mausolée altier dit : — Je suis la douleur;
Je suis le marbre, auguste en sa sainte pâleur;
Cieux! je suis le grand trône et le grand mausolée;
Contemplez-moi. Je pleure une larme étoilée.
— La sagesse, c'est moi, dit le phare marin;
— Je suis la force, dit le colosse d'airain;
Et l'olympien dit : — Moi, je suis la puissance.
Et le temple d'Éphèse, autel que l'âme encense,
Fronton qu'adore l'art, dit : — Je suis la beauté.
— Et moi, cria Chéops, je suis l'éternité.

Et je vis, à travers le crépuscule humide,
Apparaître la haute et sombre pyramide.

Superposant au fond des espaces béants
Les mille angles confus de ses degrés géants,
Elle se dressait, blême et terrible, étagée
De plus de plis brumeux que l'âpre mer Égée,
Et sur ses flots, jamais par le vent secoués,

Avait au lieu d'esquifs les siècles échoués.

Elle était là, montagne humaine; et sa stature,
Monstrueuse, donnait du trouble à la nature;
Son vaste cône d’ombre éclipsait l’horizon;
Les troupeaux des vapeurs lui laissaient leur toison;
Le désert sous sa base était comme une table;
Elle montait aux cieux, escalier redoutable
D’on ne sait quelle entrée étrange de la nuit;
Son bloc fatal semblait de ténèbres construit;
Derrière elle, au milieu des palmiers et des sables,
On en voyait surgir deux autres, formidables;
Mais, comme les coteaux devant le Pélion,
Comme les lionceaux à côté du lion,
Elles restaient en bas, et ces deux pyramides
Semblaient près de Chéops petites et timides;
Au-dessus de Chéops planaient, allant, venant,
Jetant parfois de l’ombre à tout un continent,
Des aigles effrayants ayant la forme humaine;
Et des foules sans nom éparses dans la plaine,
Dans de vagues cités dont on voyait les tours,
S’écriaient, chaque fois qu’un de ces noirs vautours
Passait, hérissé, fauve et sanglant, dans la bise :
— Voilà Cyrus! Voilà Rhamsès! Voilà Cambyse! —
Et ces spectres ailés secouaient dans les airs

Des lambeaux flamboyants de lumière et d’éclairs,
Comme si, dans les cieux, faisant à Dieu la guerre,
Ils avaient arraché des haillons au tonnerre.
Chéops les regardait passer sans s’émouvoir.
Un brouillard la cachait tout en la laissant voir;
L’obscure histoire était sur ses marches gravée;
Les sphinx dans ses caveaux déposaient leur couvée;
Les ans fuyaient, les vents soufflaient; le monument
Méditait, immobile et triste, et, par moment,
Toute l’humanité, comme une fourmilière,
Satrape au sceptre d’or, prêtre au thyrse de lierre,
Rois, peuples, légions, combats, trônes croulants,
Était subitement visible sur ses flancs

Dans quelque déchirure immense des nuées.
Tout flottait sur sa base en ombres dénouées;
Et Chéops répéta : — Je suis l’éternité.

Ainsi parlent, le soir, dans la molle clarté,
Ces monuments, les sept étonnements de l’homme.

La nuit vient, et s’étend d’Elinunte à Sodome,
Ouvrant son aile où vont s’endormir tour à tour
L’onde avec son rocher, la ville avec sa tour;
Elle élargit sa brume où le silence pèse;
Les voix et les rumeurs expirent; tout s’apaise,
Tout bruit s’éteint, à Rhode, en Élide, au Delta,
Tout cesse.
Alors le ver du sépulcre chanta :
*

Je suis le ver. Je suis fange et cendre. Ô ténèbres,
Je règne. Monuments, entassements célèbres,

Panthéons, Rhamséïons,
Façades de l’immense orgueil humain, si fières,
Que l’homme devant vous doute s’il voit des pierres
Ou s’il voit des rayons,

Sanctuaires chargés d’astres et d’empyrées,
Splendides profondeurs de colonnes dorées,
Vaste enceinte d’Assur,
Mur où Nemrod cloua l’hippanthrope Phœanthe,
Et dont la ronde tour, sous les oiseaux béante,
Leur semble un puits obscur,

Terrasses de Theglath, avec vos avenues
Augustes par deux rangs de sphinx aux gorges nues,

Cirque d’Anthrops-le-Noir
Si beau que, résistant à l’heure qui s’arrête,

Les chevaux du soleil, cabrés, baissent la tête
Pour tâcher de te voir!

Jardins, frontons ailés aux larges envergures,
Portiques, piédestaux qui portez des figures
Au geste souverain,
Et qui, du haut des caps que votre masse encombre,
Ajoutez à la mer vaste et sinistre l’ombre
Des déesses d’airain,

Acropole où l’on vient des confins de la terre,

Tour du Bœuf, où Jason, raillant le Sagittaire,
Vint sonner du buccin,
Qui fais aux voyageurs, vains comme les abeilles
Et vivants par leurs yeux avides de merveilles,
Braver le Pont-Euxin,

Ô temple Acrocéraune, ô pilier d’Érythrée,
Fiers de votre archipel, car c’est la mer sacrée,
La mer où luit Pylos,
Ses vagues ont noyé la horde massagète,
Et, comme le vent vient de la montagne, il jette
Des plumes d’aigle aux flots,

Chéops bâtie avec un art épouvantable,
Si terrible qu’à l’heure où, couché dans l’étable,
Le chien n’ose gronder,
Sirius, devant qui toute étoile s’efface,
Est forcé de tourner vers toi sa sombre face
Et de te regarder!

Édifices! montez, et montez davantage.

Superposez l’étage et l’étage à l’étage,
Et le dôme aux cités;
Montez; sous votre base écrasez les campagnes;

Plus haut que les forêts, plus haut que les montagnes,
Montez, montez, montez!

Soyez comme Babel, âpre, indignée, austère,
Cette tour qui voudrait échapper à la terre,
Et qui dans les cieux fuit.
Montez. À l’archivolte ajoutez l’architrave.
Encor! encor! Mettez le palais sur la cave,
Le néant sur la nuit!

Montez dans le nuage, étant de la fumée!
Montez, toi sur l’Égypte, et toi sur l’Idumée,
Toi, sur le mont Caspé!
Pleurez avec le deuil, chantez avec la noce.

Va noircir le zénith, flamme que le colosse
Tient dans son poing crispé.

Ne vous arrêtez pas. Montez! montez encore!
Moi je rampe, et j’attends. Du couchant, de l’aurore,
Et du sud et du nord,
Tout vient à moi, le fait, l’être, la chose triste,
La chose heureuse; et seul je vis, et seul j’existe,
Puisque je suis la mort.

La ruine est promise à tout ce qui s’élève.
Vous ne faites, palais qui croissez comme un rêve,
Frontons au dur ciment,
Que mettre un peu plus haut mon tas de nourriture,
Et que rendre plus grand, par plus d’architecture,
Le sombre écroulement.

XI

L’ÉPOPÉE DU VER

L’ÉPOPÉE DU VER

*

Au fond de la poussière inévitable, un être
Rampe, et souffle un miasme ignoré qui pénètre
L’homme de toutes parts,
Qui noircit l’aube, éteint le feu, sèche la tige,
Et qui suffit pour faire avorter le prodige
Dans la nature épars.

Le monde est sur cet être et l’a dans sa racine,
Et cet être, c’est moi. Je suis. Tout m’avoisine.
Dieu me paie un tribut.
Vivez. Rien ne fléchit le ver incorruptible.
Hommes, tendez vos arcs; quelle que soit la cible,
C’est moi qui suis le but.

Ô vivants, je l’avoue, on voit des hommes rire.
Plus d’une barque vogue avec un bruit de lyre;

On est prince et seigneur;
Le lit nuptial brille, on s’aime, on se le jure,
L’enfant naît, les époux sont beaux; — j’ai pour dorure
Ce qu’on nomme bonheur.

Je mords Socrate, Eschyle, Homère, après l’envie.
Je mords l’aigle. Le bout visible de la vie
Est à tous et partout,
Et quand au mois de mai le rouge-gorge chante,
Ce qui fait que Satan rit dans l’ombre méchante,
C’est que j’ai l’autre bout.

Je suis l’Inconnu noir qui, plus bas que la bête,

Remplit tout ce qui marche au-dessus de sa tête
D’angoisse et de terreur;
La preuve d’Alecton pareille à Cléopâtre,
De la pourpre identique au haillon, et du pâtre
Égal à l’empereur.

Je suis l’extinction du flambeau, toujours prête.
Il suffit qu’un tyran pense à moi dans la fête
Où les rois sont assis,
Pour que sa volupté, sa gaîté, sa débauche,
Devienne on ne sait quoi de lugubre où s’ébauche
La pâle Némésis.

Je ne me laisse point oublier des satrapes;
La nuit, lascifs, leur main touche à toutes les grappes

Du plaisir hasardeux,
Et, pendant que leurs sens dans l’extase frémissent,
Des apparitions de méduses blêmissent
La voûte au-dessus d’eux.

Je suis le créancier. L’échéance m’est due.
J’ai, comme l’araignée, une toile tendue.
Tout l’univers, c’est peu.
Le fil imperceptible et noir que je dévide
Ferait l’aurore veuve et l’immensité vide
S’il allait jusqu’à Dieu.

J’attends. L’obscurité sinistre me rend compte.
Le capitaine armé de son sceptre, l’archonte,
Le grave amphictyon,
L’augure, le poëte étoilé, le prophète,
Tristes, songent à moi, cette vie étant faite
De disparition.

Le visir sous son dais, le marchand sur son âne,
Familles et tribus, les seigneurs d’Ecbatane

Et les chefs de l’Indus
Passent, et seul je sais dans quelle ombre est conduite
Cette prodigieuse et misérable fuite
Des vivants éperdus.

Brillez, cieux. Vis, nature. Ô printemps, fais des roses.
Rayonnez, papillons, dans les métamorphoses.
Que le matin est pur!
Et comme les chansons des oiseaux sont charmantes,
Au-dessus des amants, au-dessus des amantes,
Dans le profond azur!
*

Quand, sous terre rampant, j’entre dans Babylone,
Dans Tyr qui porte Ammon sur son double pylone,
Dans Suze où l’aube luit,
Lorsqu’entendant chanter les hommes, je me glisse,
Invisible, caché, muet, dans leur délice,
Leur triomphe et leur bruit,

Quoique l’épaisseur vaste et pesante me couvre,
Quoique la profondeur, qui jamais ne s’entr’ouvre,

Morne et sans mouvement,
Me cache à tous les yeux dans son horreur tranquille,
Tout, quel que soit le lieu, quelle que soit la ville,
Quel que soit le moment,

Tout, Vesta comme Églé, Zénon comme Épicure,
A le tressaillement de ma présence obscure;
On a froid, on a peur;
L’un frémit dans son faste et l’autre dans ses crimes,
Et l’on sent dans l’orgueil démesuré des cimes
Une vague stupeur;

Et le Vatican tremble avec le Capitole,
Et le roi sur le trône, et sur l’autel l’idole,

Et Moloch et Sylla
Frissonnent, et le mage épouvanté contemple,
Sitôt que le palais a dit tout bas au temple :
Le ver de terre est là!

*

Je suis le niveleur des frontons et des dômes;
Le dernier lit où vont se coucher les Sodomes
Est arrangé par moi;
Je suis fourmillement et je suis solitude;
Je suis sous le blasphème et sous la certitude,
Et derrière Pourquoi.

Nul dogme n'oserait affronter ma réponse.
Laïs pour moi se frotte avec la pierre ponce.

Je fais parler Pyrrhon,
La guerre crie, enrôle, ameute, hurle, vole,
Et je suis dans sa bouche alors que cette folle
Souffle dans son clairon.

Je suis l'intérieur du prêtre en robe blanche,
Je bave dans cette âme où la vérité penche;
Quand il parle, je mens.
Le destin, labyrinthe, aboutit à ma fosse.
Je suis dans l'espérance et dans la femme grosse,
Et, rois, dans vos serments.

Quel sommeil effrayant, la vie! En proie, en butte
À des combinaisons de triomphe ou de chute,
Passifs, engourdis, sourds,
Les hommes, occupés d'objets qui se transforment,
Sont hagards, et devraient s'apercevoir qu'ils dorment,
Puisqu'ils rêvent toujours!

J'ai pour l'ambitieux les sept couleurs du prisme.
C'est moi que le tyran trouve en son despotisme

Après qu’il l’a vomi.
Je l’éveille, sitôt sa colère rugie.
Qu’est la méchanceté? C’est de la léthargie;
Dieu dans l’âme endormi.
*

Hommes, riez. La chute adhère à l’apogée.
L’écume manquerait à la mer submergée,

L’éclat au diamant,
La neige à l’Athos, l’ombre aux loups, avant qu’on voie
Manquer la confiance et l’audace et la joie
À votre aveuglement.

L’éventrement des monts de jaspe et de porphyre
À bâtir vos palais peut à peine suffire,
Larves sans lendemain!
Vous avez trop d’autels. Vos sociétés folles
Meurent presque toujours par un excès d’idoles
Chargeant l’esprit humain.

Qu’est la religion? L’abîme et ses fumées.
Les simulacres noirs flottant sous les ramées
Des bois insidieux,
La contemplation de l’ombre, les passages
De la nue au-dessus du front pensif des sages,
Ont créé tous vos dieux.

Vos prêtres insensés chargent Satan lui-même
D’un dogme et d’un devoir, lui le monstre suprême,
Lui la rébellion!
Ils en font leur bourreau, leur morne auxiliaire,
Sans même s’informer si cette muselière
Convient à ce lion!

Pour aller jusqu’à Dieu dans l’infini, les cultes,
Les religions, l’Inde et ses livres occultes

Par Hermès copiés,
Offrent leurs points d’appui, leurs rites, leurs prières,
Leurs dogmes, comme un gué montre à fleur d’eau des pierres
Où l’on pose ses pieds.

Songes vains! Les Védas trompent leurs clientèles,
Car les religions sont des choses mortelles
Qu’emporte un vent d’hiver;
Hommes, comme sur vous sur elles je me traîne;
Et, pour ronger l’autel, Dieu n’a pas pris la peine
De faire un autre ver.
*

Je suis dans l’enfant mort, dans l’amante quittée,
Dans le veuvage prompt à rire, dans l’athée,
Dans tous les noirs oublis.
Toutes les voluptés sont pour moi fraternelles.
C’est moi que le fakir voit sortir des prunelles
Du vague spectre Iblis.

Mon œil guette à travers les fêlures des urnes.

Je vois vers les gibets voler les becs nocturnes
Quêtant un noir lambeau.
Je suis le roi muré. J’habite le décombre.
La mort me regardait quand d’une goutte d’ombre
Elle fit le corbeau.

Je suis. Vous n’êtes pas, feu des yeux, sang des veines,
Parfum des fleurs, granit des tours, ô fiertés vaines!
Tout d’avance est pleuré.
On m’extermine en vain, je renais sous ma voûte;
Le pied qui m’écrasa peut poursuivre sa route,
Je le dévorerai.

J’atteins tout ce qui vole et court. L’argiraspide
Ne peut me fuir, eût-il un cheval plus rapide

Que l’oiseau de Vénus;
Je ne suis pas plus loin des chars qui s’accélèrent
Que du cachot massif où des lueurs éclairent
De sombres torses nus.

*

Un peuple s’enfle et meurt comme un flot sur la grève.
Dès que l’homme a construit une cité, le glaive
Vient et la démolit;
Ce qui résiste au fer croule dans les délices;
Pour te tuer, ô Rome, Octave a les supplices,
Messaline a son lit.

Tout ici-bas perd pied, se renverse, trébuche,
Et partout l’homme tombe, étant sa propre embûche;
Partout l’humanité
Se lève dans l’orgueil et dans l’orgueil se couche;
Et le manteau de poil du prophète farouche
Est plein de vanité.

Puisque ce sombre orgueil s’accroît toujours et monte,
Puisque Tibère est Dieu, puisque Rome sans honte
Lui chante un vil pœan,
Puisque l’austérité des Burrhus se croit vierge,
Puisqu’il est des Xercès qui prennent une verge
Et fouettent l’Océan,

Il faut bien que le ver soit là pour l’équilibre.
Ce que le Nil, l’Euphrate et le Gange et le Tibre
Roulent avec leur eau,
C’est le reflet d’un tas de villes inouïes
Faites de marbre et d’or, plus vite évanouies
Que la fleur du sureau.

Fétide, abject, je rends les majestés pensives.
Je mords la bouche, et quand j’ai rongé les gencives,

Je dévore les dents.
Oh! ce serait vraiment dans la nature entière
Trop de faste, de bruit, d’emphase et de lumière,
Si je n’étais dedans!

Le néant et l’orgueil sont de la même espèce.
Je les distingue peu lorsque je les dépèce.
J’erre éternellement
Dans une obscurité d’horreur et d’anathème,
Redoutable brouillard dont Satan n’est lui-même
Qu’un épaississement.
*

Tout me sert. Glaive et soc, et sagesse et délire.
De tout temps la trompette a combattu la lyre;
C’est le double éperon,
C’est la double fanfare aux forces infinies;
Le prodige jaillit de ce choc d’harmonies;
Luttez, lyre et clairon.

Lyre, enfante la paix. Clairon, produis la guerre.
Mettez en mouvement cette tourbe vulgaire
Des camps et des cités;
Luttez; poussez les uns aux batailles altières,

Les autres aux moissons, et tous aux cimetières;
Lyre et clairon, chantez!

Chantez! le marbre entend. La pierre n’est pas sourde,
Les tours sentent frémir leur dalle la plus lourde,
Le bloc est remué,
Le créneau cède au chant qui passe par bouffée,
Et le mur tressaillant qui naît devant Orphée,
Meurt devant Josué.
*

Tout périt. C’est pour moi, dernière créature,

Que travaille l’effort de toute la nature.
Le lys prêt à fleurir,

La mésange au printemps qui dans son nid repose,
Et qui sent l’œuf, cassé par un petit bec rose,
Sous elle s’entr’ouvrir,

Les Moïses emplis d’une puissance telle
Que le peuple, écoutant leur parole immortelle
Au pied du mont fumant,
Leur trouve une lueur de plus en plus étrange,
Tremble, et croit derrière eux voir deux ailes d’archange
Grandir confusément,

Les passants, le despote aveugle et sans limites,
Les rois sages avec leurs trois cents sulamites,
Les pâles inconnus,
L’usurier froid, l’archer habile aux escarmouches,
Les cultes et les dieux plus nombreux que les mouches
Dans les joncs du Cydnus,

Tout m’appartient. À moi symboles, mœurs, images!
À moi ce monde affreux de bourreaux et de mages
Qui passe, groupe noir,

Sur qui l’ombre commence à tomber, que Dieu marque,
Qu’un vent pousse, et qui semble une farouche barque
De pirates le soir.

À moi la courtisane! À moi le cénobite!
Dieu me fait Sésostris afin que je l’habite.
En arrière, en avant,
À moi tout! À toute heure, et qu’on entre ou qu’on sorte!
Ma morsure, qui va finir à Phryné morte,
Commence à Job vivant.

À moi le condamné dans sa lugubre loge!

Il regarde effaré les pas que fait l’horloge;
Et, quoiqu’en son ennui

La Mort soit invisible à ses fixes prunelles,
À d’obscurs battements il sent d’horribles ailes
Qui s’approchent de lui.

Rhode est fière, Chéops est grande, éphèse est rare.
Le Mausolée est beau, le Dieu tonne, le Phare
Sauve les mâts penchés,
Babylone suspend dans l’air les fleurs vermeilles,
Et c’est pour moi que l’homme a créé sept merveilles,
Et Satan sept péchés.

À moi la vierge en fleur qui rit et se dérobe,
Fuit, passe les ruisseaux, et relève sa robe
Dans les prés ingénus!
À moi les cris, les chants, la gaîté qui redouble!
À moi l’adolescent qui regarde avec trouble
La blancheur des pieds nus!

Rois, je me roule en cercle et je suis la couronne;
Buveurs, je suis la soif; murs, je suis la colonne;
Docteurs, je suis la loi;
Multipliez les jeux et les épithalames,
Les soldats sur vos tours, dans vos sérails les femmes;
Faites, j’en ai l’emploi.

Sage ici-bas celui qui pense à moi sans cesse!
Celui qui pense à moi vit calme et sans bassesse;
Juste, il craint le remord;
Sous son toit frêle il songe aux maisons insondables;

Il voit de la lumière aux deux trous formidables
De la tête de mort.

Votre prospérité n’est que ma patience.

Hommes, la volonté, la raison, la science,
Tentent; seul j'accomplis.
Toute chose qu'on donne est à moi seul donnée.
Il n'est pas de fortune et pas de destinée
Qui ne m'ait dans ses plis.

Le héros qui, dictant des ordres à l'histoire,
Croit laisser sur sa tombe un nuage de gloire,
N'est sûr que de moi seul.
C'est à cause de moi que l'homme désespère.
Je regarde le fils naître, et j'attends le père
En dévorant l'aïeul.

Je suis l'être final. Je suis dans tout. Je ronge
Le dessous de la joie, et quel que soit le songe
Que les poëtes font,
J'en suis, et l'hippogriffe ailé me porte en croupe;
Quand Horace en riant te fait boire à sa coupe,
Chloé, je suis au fond.

La dénudation absolue et complète,
C'est moi. J'ôte la force aux muscles de l'athlète;
Je creuse la beauté;
Je détruis l'apparence et les métamorphoses;
C'est moi qui maintiens nue, au fond du puits des choses,
L'auguste vérité.

Où donc les conquérants vont-ils? mes yeux les suivent.
À qui sont-ils? à moi. L'heure vient; ils m'arrivent,
Découronnés, pâlis,
Et tous je les dépouille, et tous je les mutile,
Depuis Cyrus vainqueur de Tyr jusqu'à Bathylle
Vainqueur d'Amaryllis.

Le semeur me prodigue au champ qu'il ensemence.
Tout en achevant l'être expiré, je commence
L'être encor jeune et beau.

Ce que Fausta, troublée en sa pensée aride,
Voit dans le miroir pâle où s'ébauche une ride,
C'est un peu de tombeau.

Toute ivresse m'aura dans sa dernière goutte;
Et sur le trône il n'est rien à quoi je ne goûte.
Les Trajans, les Nérons
Sont à moi, honte et gloire, et la fange est épaisse

Et l'or est rayonnant pour que je m'en repaisse.
Tout marche; j'interromps.

J'habite Ombos, j'habite Élis, j'habite Rome.
J'allonge mes anneaux dans la grandeur de l'homme;
J'ai l'empire et l'exil;
C'est moi que les puissants et les forts représentent;
En ébranlant les cieux, les Jupiters me sentent
Ramper dans leur sourcil.

Je prends l'homme, ébauche humble et tremblante qui pleure,
Le nerf qui souffre, l'œil qu'en vain le jour effleure,
Le crâne où dort l'esprit,
Le cœur d'où sort le sang ainsi qu'une couleuvre,
La chair, l'amour, la vie, et j'en fais un chef-d'œuvre,
Le squelette qui rit.
*

L'eau n'a qu'un bruit; l'azur n'a que son coup de foudre;
Le juge n'a qu'un mot, punir, ou bien absoudre;
L'arbre n'a que son fruit;
L'ouragan se fatigue à de vaines huées,
Et n'a qu'une épaisseur quelconque de nuées;
Moi, j'ai l'énorme nuit.

L'Etna n'est qu'un charbon que creuse un peu de soufre;
L'erreur de l'Océan, c'est de se croire un gouffre;
Je dirai : C'est profond

Quand vous me trouverez un précipice, un piége,
Où l’univers sera comme un flocon de neige
Qui décroît et qui fond.

Quoique l’enfer soit triste, et quoique la géhenne,
Sans pitié, redoutable aux hommes pleins de haine,
Ouverte au-dessous d’eux,
Soit étrange et farouche, et quoiqu’elle ait en elle
Les immenses cheveux de la flamme éternelle,
Qu’agite un vent hideux,

Le néant est plus morne encor, la cendre est pire
Que la braise, et le lieu muet où tout expire
Est plus noir que l’enfer;
Le flamboiement est pourpre et la fournaise montre;
Moi je bave et j’éteins. L’hydre est une rencontre
Moins sombre que le ver.

Je suis l’unique effroi. L’Afrique et ses rivages
Pleins du barrissement des éléphants sauvages,
Magog, Thor, Adrasté,

Sont vains auprès de moi. Tout n’est qu’une surface
Qui sert à me couvrir. Mon nom est Fin. J’efface
La possibilité.

J’abolis aujourd’hui, demain, hier. Je dépouille
Les âmes de leurs corps ainsi que d’une rouille;
Et je fais à jamais
De tout ce que je tiens disparaître le nombre
Et l’espace et le temps, par la quantité d’ombre
Et d’horreur que j’y mets.
*

Amant désespéré, tu frappes à ma porte,
Redemandant ton bien et ta maîtresse morte,
Et la chair de ta chair,

Celle dont chaque nuit tu dénouais les tresses,

Plus fier, plus éperdu, plus ivre en ses caresses
Que l’aigle au vent de mer.

Tu dis : « — Je la veux! Terre et cieux, je la réclame!
Le jour où je la vis, je crus voir une flamme.
Viens, dit-elle. Je vins.
Sa jeune taille était plus souple que l’acanthe;
Elle errait éblouie, idéale bacchante,
Sous des pampres divins.

« Son cœur fut si profond que j’y perdis mon âme.
Je l’aimais! quand le soir, les yeux de cette femme
Au front pur, au sein nu,
Me regardaient, pensifs, clairs, à travers ses boucles,
Je croyais voir briller les vagues escarboucles
D’un abîme inconnu.

« C’est elle qui prenait ma tête en ses mains blanches!
Elle qui me chantait des chansons sous les branches,

Des chansons dans les bois,
Si douces qu’on voyait sur l’eau rêver le cygne,
Et que les dieux là-haut se faisaient entr’eux signe
D’écouter cette voix!

« Elle est morte au milieu d’une nuit de délices...
Elle était le printemps, ouvrant de frais calices;
Elle était l’Orient;
Gaie, elle ressemblait à tout ce qu’on désire;
L’esquif, entrant dès l’aube au golfe de Nisyre,
N’est pas plus souriant.

« Elle était la plus belle et la plus douce chose!

Son âme était le lys, son corps était la rose;

Son chant chassait les pleurs;
Nue, elle était Déesse, et, Vierge sous ses voiles;
Elle avait le parfum que n’ont pas les étoiles,
L’éclair qui manque aux fleurs.

« Elle était la lumière et la grâce; je l’aime!
Je la veux! ô transports! ô volupté suprême!
Ô regrets déchirants! ... » —
Voilà huit jours qu’elle est dans mon ombre farouche;
Si tu veux lui donner un baiser sur la bouche,
Prends-la, je te la rends!

Reprends ce corps, reprends ce sein, reprends ces lèvres;
Cherches-y ton plaisir, ton extase, tes fièvres;
Je la rends à tes vœux;
Viens, tu peux, pour ta joie et tes jeux et tes fautes,
La reprendre, pourvu seulement que tu m’ôtes
De ses sombres cheveux.

Nous rions, l’ombre et moi, de tout ce qui vous navre,
Nous avons, nous aussi, notre fleur, le cadavre;

La femme au front charmant,
Blanche, embaumant l’alcôve et parfumant la table,
Se transforme en ma nuit... — Viens voir quel formidable Épanouissement!

Cette rose du fond du tombeau, viens la prendre,
Je te la rends. Reprends, jeune homme, dans ma cendre,
Dans mon fatal sillon,
Cette fleur où ma bave épouvantable brille,
Et qui, pâle, a le ver du cercueil pour chenille,
L’âme pour papillon.

Elle est morte, — Et c’est là ta poignante pensée, —
Au moment le plus doux d’une nuit insensée;
Eh bien, tu n’es plus seul,

Reprends-la; ce lit froid vaut bien ton lit frivole;
Entre; et toi qui riais de la chemise folle,
Viens braver le linceul.

Elle t’attend, levant son crâne où l’œil se creuse,

T’offrant sa main verdie et sa hanche terreuse,
Son flanc, mon noir séjour...
Viens, couvrant de baisers son vague rire horrible,
Dans ce commencement d’éternité terrible
Finir ta nuit d’amour!
*

Ô vie universelle, où donc est ton dictame?
Qu’est-ce que ton baiser? Un lèchement de flamme.
Le cœur humain veut tout,
Prend tout, l’or, le plaisir, le ciel bleu, l’herbe verte...
Et dans l’éternité sinistrement ouverte
Se vide tout à coup.

La vie est une joie où le meurtre fourmille,
Et la création se dévore en famille.
Baal dévore Pan.
L’arbre, s’il le pouvait, épuiserait la sève;
Léviathan, bâillant dans les ténèbres, rêve
D’engloutir l’Océan;

L’onagre est au boa qui glisse et l’enveloppe;
Le lynx tacheté saute et saisit l’antilope;
La rouille use le fer;

La mort du grand lion est la fête des mouches;
On voit sous l’eau s’ouvrir confusément les bouches
Des bêtes de la mer;

Le crocodile affreux, dont le Nil cache l’antre,
Et qui laisse aux roseaux la marque de son ventre,

A peur de l’ichneumon;
L’hirondelle devant le gypaète émigre;
Le colibri, sitôt qu’il a faim, devient tigre;
L’oiseau-mouche est démon.

Le volcan, c’est le feu chez lui, tyran et maître,
Mâchant les durs rochers, féroce et parfois traître,
Tel qu’un sombre empereur,
Essuyant la fumée à sa bouche rougie,
Et son cratère enflé de lave est une orgie
De flammes en fureur;

La louve est sur l’agneau comme l’agneau sur l’herbe;
Le pâle genre humain n’est qu’une grande gerbe
De peuples pour les rois;
Avril donne aux fleurs l’ambre et la rosée aux plantes
Pour l’assouvissement des abeilles volantes
Dans la lueur des bois;

De toutes parts on broute, on veut vivre, on dévore,
L’ours dans la neige horrible et l’oiseau dans l’aurore;
C’est l’ivresse et la loi.
Le monde est un festin. Je mange les convives.

L’océan a des bords, ma faim n’a pas de rives;
Et le gouffre, c’est moi.

Vautour, qu’apportes-tu? — Les morts de la mêlée,
Les morts des camps, les morts de la ville brûlée,
Et le chef rayonnant. —
C’est bien, donne le sang, vautour; donne la cendre,
Donne les légions, c’est bien; donne Alexandre,
C’est bien. Toi maintenant!

Le miracle hideux, le prodige sublime,
C’est que l’atome soit en même temps l’abîme;
Tout d’en haut m’est jeté;

Je suis d’autant plus grand que je suis plus immonde;
Et l’amoindrissement formidable du monde
Fait mon énormité.
*

Fouillez la mort. Fouillez l’écroulement terrible.
Que trouvez-vous? L’insecte. Et, quoique ayant la bible,
Quoique ayant le koran,
Je ne suis rien qu’un ver. Ô vivants, c’est peut-être
Parce que je suis fait des croyances du prêtre,
Des splendeurs du tyran,

C’est parce qu’en ma nuit j’ai mangé vos victoires,
C’est parce que je suis composé de vos gloires
Dont l’éclat retentit,
De toutes vos fiertés, de toutes vos durées,
De toutes vos grandeurs, tour à tour dévorées,
Que je reste petit.

Qu’est-ce que l’univers? Qu’est-ce que le mystère?
Une table sans fin servie au ver de terre;
Le nain partout béant;
Un engloutissement du géant par l’atome,
Tout lentement rongé par Rien; et le fantôme
Créé par le néant.
*

L’épouvante m’adore, et, ver, j’ai des pontifes.
Mon spectre prend une aile et mon aile a des griffes.
Vil, infect, chassieux,
Chétif, je me dilate en une immense forme,
Je plane, et par moments, chauve-souris énorme,
J’enveloppe les cieux.
*

Dieu qui m’avez fait ver, je vous ferai fumée.
Si je ne puis toucher votre essence innommée,

Je puis ronger du moins
L’amour dans l’homme, et l’astre au fond du ciel livide,
Dieu jaloux, et, faisant autour de vous le vide,
Vous ôter vos témoins.

Parce que l’astre luit, l’homme aurait tort de croire
Que le ver du tombeau n’atteint pas cette gloire;
Hors moi, rien n’est réel;
Le ver est sous l’azur comme il est sous le marbre;
Je mords, en même temps que la pomme sur l’arbre,
L’étoile dans le ciel.

L’astre à ronger là-haut n’est pas plus difficile
Que la grappe pendante aux pampres de Sicile;

J’abrége les rayons;
L’éternité n’est point aux splendeurs complaisante;
La mouche, la fourmi, tout meurt, et rien n’exempte
Les constellations.

Il faut, dans l’océan d’en haut, que le navire
Fait d’étoiles s’entr’ouvre à la fin, et chavire;
Saturne au large anneau
Chancelle, et Sirius subit ma sombre attaque,
Comme l’humble bateau qui va du port d’Ithaque
Au port de Calymno.

Il est dans le ciel noir des mondes plus malades
Que la barque au radoub sur un quai des Cyclades;
L’abîme est un tyran;
Arcturus dans l’éther cherche en vain une digue;
La navigation de l’infini fatigue
Le vaste Aldebaran.

Les lunes sont, au fond de l’azur, des cadavres;
On voit des globes morts dans les célestes havres
Là-haut se dérober;

La comète est un monde éventré dans les ombres
Qui se traîne, laissant de ses entrailles sombres
Sa lumière tomber.

Regardez l’abbadir et voyez le bolide;
L’un tombe, et l’autre meurt; le ciel n’est pas solide;
L’ombre a d’affreux recoins;
Le point du jour blanchit les fentes de l’espace,
Et semble la lueur d’une lampe qui passe
Entre des ais mal joints.

Le monde, avec ses feux, ses chants, ses harmonies,
N’est qu’une éclosion immense d’agonies
Sous le bleu firmament,
Un pêle-mêle obscur de souffles et de râles,
Et de choses de nuit, vaguement sépulcrales,
Qui flottent un moment.

Dieu subit ma présence; il en est incurable.
Toute forme créée, ô nuit, est peu durable.
Ô nuit, tout est pour nous;
Tout m’appartient, tout vient à moi, gloire guerrière,
Force, puissance et joie, et même la prière,
Puisque j’ai ses genoux.

La démolition, voilà mon diamètre.
Le zodiaque ardent, que Rhamsès a beau mettre
Sur son sanglant écu,
Craint le ver du sépulcre, et l’aube est ma sujette;

L’escarboucle est ma proie, et le soleil me jette
Des regards de vaincu.

L’univers magnifique et lugubre a deux cimes.
Ô vivants, à ses deux extrémités sublimes,
Qui sont aurore et nuit,
La création triste, aux entrailles profondes,

Porte deux Tout-puissants, le Dieu qui fait les mondes,
Le ver qui les détruit.

LE POËTE AU VER DE TERRE

LE POËTE AU VER DE TERRE

Non, tu n’as pas tout, monstre! et tu ne prends point l’âme.
Cette fleur n’a jamais subi ta bave infâme.
Tu peux détruire un monde et non souiller Caton.
Tu fais dire à Pyrrhon farouche : Que sait-on?
Et c’est tout. Au-dessus de ton hideux carnage
Le prodigieux cœur du prophète surnage;
Son char est fait d’éclairs; tu n’en mords pas l’essieu,
Tu te vantes. Tu n’es que l’envieux de Dieu.
Tu n’es que la fureur de l’impuissance noire.
L’envie est dans le fruit, le ver est dans la gloire.
Soit. Vivons et pensons, nous qui sommes l’Esprit.
Toi, rampe. Sois l’atome effrayant qui flétrit
Et qui ronge, et qui fait que tout ment sur la terre,
Mets cette tromperie au fond du grand mystère,
Le néant, sois le nain qui croit être le roi,
Serpente dans la vie auguste, glisse-toi,
Pour la faire avorter, dans la promesse immense;
Ton lâche effort finit où le réel commence,
Et le juste, le vrai, la vertu, la raison,
L’esprit pur, le cœur droit, bravent ta trahison.

Tu n’es que le mangeur de l’abjecte matière.
La vie incorruptible est hors de ta frontière;
Les âmes vont s’aimer au-dessus de la mort;
Tu n’y peux rien. Tu n’es que la haine qui mord.
Rien tâchant d’être Tout, c’est toi. Ta sombre sphère
C’est la négation, et tu n’es bon qu’à faire
Frissonner les penseurs qui sondent le ciel bleu
Indignés, puisqu’un ver s’ose égaler à Dieu,
Puisque l’ombre atteint l’astre, et puisqu’une loi vile
Sur l’Homère éternel met l’éternel Zoïle.

CLARTÉ D’ÂMES

CLARTÉ D’ÂMES

Sait-on si ce n’est pas de la clarté qui sort

Du cerveau des songeurs sacrés, creusant le sort,

La vie et l’inconnu, travailleurs de l’abîme?
Voici ce que j’ai vu dans une nuit sublime :

Cette nuit-là pas une étoile ne brillait;
C’était au mois d’Eglad que nous nommons juillet;
Et sous l’azur noir, face immense du mystère,
Dans tous les lieux déserts qui sont sur cette terre,
Forêts, plages, ravins, caps où rien ne fleurit,
Les solitaires, ceux qui vivent par l’esprit,
Sondant l’éternité, l’âme, le temps, le nombre,
Effarés et sereins, étaient épars dans l’ombre;
L’un en Europe; l’autre en Inde, où, dans les bois
Cachant ses jeunes faons, la gazelle aux abois
Attend pour s’endormir que le lion s’endorme;
Un autre dans l’horreur de l’Afrique difforme.
Tous ces hommes avaient l’idéal pour objet;
Et chacun d’eux était dans son antre et songeait.

Ces prophètes étaient frères sans se connaître;
Pas un d’eux ne savait, isolé dans son être
Et sa pensée ainsi qu’un roi dans sonÉtat,
Que quelqu’un de semblable à lui-même existât;
Ils veillaient, et chacun se croyait seul au monde;
Aucun lien entre eux que l’énigme profonde
Et la recherche obscure et terrible de Dieu.
Ils pensaient; l’infini sans borne et sans milieu
Pesait sur eux; pas un qui de la solitude
N’eût la mystérieuse et sinistre attitude;

Pourtant ils étaient doux ces hommes effrayants.

Sphar était attentif aux nuages fuyants;
Stélus laissait, du fond des mers, du bord des grèves,
Du haut des cieux, venir à lui les vastes rêves;
Pythagore disait : Dieu! fais ce que tu dois!
Thur regardait l'abîme et comptait sur ses doigts;

Sadoch rêvait l'éden, ayant pour lit des pierres;
Zès, qui n'ouvrait jamais qu'à demi les paupières,
Contemplait cette chose implacable, la nuit;
Sadoch guettait l'autre être insondable, le bruit;
Sostrate étudiait, dans l'eau qu'un souffle mène,
Dans la fumée et l'air, la destinée humaine;
Lycurgue, formidable et pâle, méditait;
Eschyle était semblable au rocher qui se tait,
Et tournait vers l'Etna fumant son grand front chauve;

Isaïe, habitant d'un sépulcre, esprit fauve,
Adressait la parole à ceux qui ne sont plus;
Comme Isaïe, un sage, un fou, Phégorbélus
Parlait dans la nuée aux faces invisibles,
Et disait, feuilletant on ne sait quelles bibles :
— Je parle, et ne sais pas si je suis écouté;
Les spectres plus nombreux que les mouches d'été
M'entourent, et sur moi se précipite et tombe
La légion de ceux qui rêvent dans la tombe;
On me hait dans le monde étrange de la mort;
Je sens parfois, la nuit, un rêve qui me mord,
Et les êtres de l'ombre, essaim, foule inconnue,
M'attaquent quand je dors; pourtant je continue,
Et je cherche à savoir le grand secret caché
Qu'Ève devina presque et qu'entrevit Psyché. —
Orobanchus, gardien de l'autel des Trois Grâces,

Maudissait vaguement les casques, les cuirasses
Et les glaives, semeurs tragiques du trépas,

Et, sombre, murmurait : — Mortels, n’oubliez pas
Qu’Aglaé dans sa main tient un bouton de rose. —
Chacun recommandait à l’ombre quelque chose
De faible, le haillon, le chaume, le grabat;
Phtès, les damnés sur qui trop de haine s’abat,
Hermanès, l’humble toit du lépreux sans défense,
Gyr le droit, et Lysis la vénérable enfance.
Tous voulaient secourir l’homme, et le protéger
Contre ce monstre obscur, l’innombrable danger;
Tous calculaient le mal à fuir, le bien à faire.
La terre est sous les yeux du destin; cette sphère
Semble être par quelqu’un confiée aux penseurs.

La nuit était immense, et dans ses épaisseurs

Tout sommeillait, les bois, les monts, les mers, les sables;
Eux, ils ne dormaient point, étant les responsables.
Les heures s’écoulaient, la nuit passait; mais rien,
Ni la faim, ni la soif, ni le vent syrien
Qui va des mers d’Adram jusqu’au Tibre de Rome,
Ne troublait ces esprits, souffrant des maux de l’homme;
Ils avaient la révolte en eux, l’altier frisson
Que donne, à qui se sent des ailes, la prison;
Chacun tâchait de rompre un anneau de la chaîne;
Plus d’imposture! plus de guerre! plus de haine!
Il sortait de chacun de ces séditieux
Une sommation qui s’en allait aux cieux.
La vérité faisait, claire, auguste, insensée,
De chacun de ces fronts jaillir une pensée,
La justice, la paix, l’enfer amnistié.
Ces cerveaux lumineux dégageaient la pitié,
La bonté, le pardon aux vivants éphémères,

L’espérance, la joie et l’amour, des chimères,
Des rêves comme en font les astres, s’ils en font;
Cela se répandait sous le zénith profond;
Tous ces hommes étaient plongés dans les ténèbres;

Seuls et noirs, combinant les rhythmes, les algèbres,
Le chiffre avec le chant, le passé, le présent,
Ajoutant quelque chose à l’homme, agrandissant
La prunelle, l’esprit, la parole, l’ouïe,
Ils songeaient; et l’aurore apparut, éblouie.

LES CHUTES

FLEUVES ET POËTES

LES CHUTES

FLEUVES ET POËTES

Le grand Niagara s’écroule, le Rhin tombe;
L’abîme monstrueux tâche d’être une tombe,
Il hait le géant fleuve, et dit : j’engloutirai.
Et le fleuve, pareil au lion attiré
Dans l’antre inattendu d’une hydre aux mille têtes,
Lutte avec tous ses cris et toutes ses tempêtes.
Quoi! la nature immense est donc un lieu peu sûr!
Il se cabre, il résiste au précipice obscur,
Bave et bouillonne, et blanc et noir comme le marbre,
Se cramponne aux rochers, se retient aux troncs d’arbre,
Penche, et comme frappé de malédiction,
Roule, ainsi que tournait l’éternel Ixion.
Tordu, brisé, vaincu, Dieu même étant complice,
Le fleuve échevelé subit son dur supplice.

Le gouffre veut sa mort; mais l’effort des fléaux
Pour faire le néant, ne fait que le chaos;
L’affreux puits de l’enfer ouvre ses flancs funèbres,
Et rugit. Quel travail pour créer les ténèbres!
Il est l’envie, il est la rage, il est la nuit;
Et la destruction, voilà ce qu’il construit.
Pareil à la fumée au faîte du Vésuve,
Un nuage sinistre est sur l’énorme cuve,
Et cache le tourment du grand fleuve trahi.
Lui, le fécondateur, d’où vient qu’il est haï?
Qu’est-ce donc qu’il a fait aux bois, au mont sublime,
Aux prés verts, pour que tous le livrent à l’abîme?
Sa force, sa splendeur, sa beauté, sa bonté,
Croulent. Quel guet-apens et quelle lâcheté!
L’eau s’enfle comme l’outre où grondent les Borées,

Et l’horreur se disperse en voix désespérées;
Tout est chute, naufrage, engloutissement, nuit,
Et l’on dirait qu’un rire infâme est dans ce bruit;
Rien n’est épargné, rien ne vit, rien ne surnage;
Le fleuve se débat dans l’atroce engrenage,
Tombe, agonise, et jette au lointain firmament
Une longue rumeur d’évanouissement.

Tout à coup, au-dessus de ce chaos qui souffre,
Apparaît, composé de tout ce que le gouffre
A de hideux, d’hostile et de torrentiel,
Un éblouissement auguste, l’arc-en-ciel;
Le piége est vil, la roche est traître, l’onde est noire,
Et tu sors de cette ombre épouvantable, ô gloire!

LE CYCLE PYRÉNÉEN

GAÏFFER-JORGE

DUC D’AQUITAINE

Au bas d’une muraille on ouvre une tranchée.
Les travailleurs, bras nus et la tête penchée,
Vont et viennent, fouillant dans l’obscur entonnoir;
Sous la pioche, pareille au bec d’un oiseau noir,
Le rocher sonne, ainsi que le fer dans la forge;
Dur labeur. Gaïffer, qu’on appelle aussi Jorge,
Fait creuser un fossé large et profond autour
De son donjon, palais de roi, nid de vautour,
Forteresse où ce duc, voisin de la tempête,
Habite, avec le cri des aigles sur sa tête;
On éventre le mont, on défonce le champ;
— Creusez! creusez! dit-il aux terrassiers, piochant
De l’aube jusqu’à l’heure où le soleil se couche,
Je veux faire à ma tour un fossé si farouche
Qu’un homme ait le vertige en regardant au fond. —

On creuse, et le travail que les ouvriers font
Trace au pied des hauts murs un tortueux cratère;
Il descend chaque jour plus avant dans la terre;
Un terrassier parfois dit : — Seigneur, est-ce assez?
Et Gaïffer répond : — Creusez toujours, creusez.
Je veux savoir sur quoi ma demeure est bâtie.

Qu’est-ce que Gaïffer? La fauve dynastie
Qu’installa, sous un dais fait d’une peau de bœuf,
Le patrice Constance en quatre-cent-dix-neuf,
Reçut de Rome en fief la troisième Aquitaine.
Aujourd’hui Gaïffer en est le capitaine.
De Bayonne à Cahors son pouvoir est subi;
Les huit peuples qui sont à l’orient d’Alby,

Les quatorze qui sont entre Loire et Garonne,
Sont comme les fleurons de sa fière couronne;
Auch lui paie un tribut; du Tursan au Marsan
Il reçoit un mouton de chaque paysan;
Le Roc-Ferrat, ce mont où l’on trouve l’opale,
Saint-Sever sur l’Adour, Aire l’épiscopale,
Sont à lui; son état touche aux deux océans;

Le roi de France entend jusque dans Orléans
Le bruit de son épée aiguisée et fourbie
Aux montagnes d’Irun et de Fontarabie;
Gaïffer a sa cour plénière de barons;
La foule, autour de lui, se tait et les clairons
Font un sinistre éclat de triomphe et de fête;
Au point du jour, sa tour, dont l’aube teint le faîte,
Noire en bas et vermeille en haut, semble un tison
Qu’un bras mystérieux lève sur l’horizon;
Gaïffer-Jorge est prince, archer et chasseur d’hommes;
On le trouve très-grand parmi ses majordomes,
Ses baillis font sonner sa gloire, et ses prévôts
Sont plus qu’à Dieu le père à Gaïffer dévots.
Seulement, il a pris, pour élargir sa terre,
Aux infants d’Oloron leur ville héréditaire;

Mais ces infants étaient de mauvaise santé,
Et si jeunes que c’est à peine, en vérité,
S’ils ont su qu’on changeait leur couronne en tonsure;
De plus son amitié n’est pas toujours très-sûre;
Il a, pour cent francs d’or, livré son maître Aymon
Au noir Miramolin, Hécuba-le-démon;
Aymon, ce chevalier dont tout parlait naguère,
Avait instruit le duc Gaïffer dans la guerre,
Aymon était un fier et bon campéador,
Mais Gaïffer était sans le sou, cent francs d’or
Font cent mille tomans, et son trésor étique

Avait besoin d’un coup de grande politique;
Par la vente d’Aymon il a réalisé
De quoi pouvoir donner un tournoi, l’an passé,
Et bien vivre, et jeter l’argent par la fenêtre;
La grandeur veut le faste, il ne convient pas d’être
À la fois duc superbe et prince malaisé;
Enfin on dit qu’un soir il a, chasseur rusé,
Conduit, tout en riant, au fond d’une clairière,
Son frère Astolphe, et l’a poignardé par derrière;
Mais ils étaient jumeaux, Astolphe un jour pouvait
Prétendre au rang ducal dont Jorge se revêt,
Et pour la paix publique on peut tuer son frère.

Étançonner le sable, ôter l’argile, extraire

La brèche et le silex, et murer le talus,
C’est rude. Après les huit premiers jours révolus :
— Sire, ce fossé passe en profondeur moyenne
Tous ceux de Catalogne et tous ceux de Guyenne,
Dit le maître ouvrier, vieillard aux blancs cheveux.
— Creusez! répond le duc. Je vous l’ai dit. Je veux
Voir ce que j’ai sous moi dans la terre profonde. —
Huit jours encore on creuse, on sape, on fouille, on sonde;
Tout à coup on déterre une pierre, et, plus bas,
Un cadavre, et le nom sur le roc : Barabbas.
— Creusez, dit Jorge. — On creuse. Au bout d’une semaine
Une autre pierre avec une autre forme humaine
Perce l’ombre, affreux spectre au fond d’un trou hideux;
Et ce cadavre était le plus sombre des deux;
Une corde à son cou rampait; une poignée
De drachmes d’or sortait de sa main décharnée;
Sur la pierre on lisait : Judas. — Creusez toujours!
Allez! creusez! cria le duc du haut des tours. —
Et le bruit du maçon que le maçon appelle
Recommença; la pioche et la hotte et la pelle
Plongèrent plus avant qu’aucun mineur ne va.
Après huit autres jours de travail, on trouva

Soudain, dans la nuit blême où rien n’a plus de forme,
Un squelette terrible, et sur son crâne énorme

Quatre lettres de feu traçaient ce mot : Caïn.
Les pâles fossoyeurs frémirent, et leur main
Laissa rouler l’outil dans l’obscurité vide;
Mais le duc apparaît, noir sur le ciel livide :
— Continuez, dit-il, penché sur le fossé,
Allez! — On obéit; et l’un d’eux s’est baissé,
Morne esclave, il reprend le pic pesant et frappe;
Et la roche sonna comme une chausse-trappe,
Au second coup la terre obscure retentit;
Du trou que fit la pioche une lueur sortit,
Lueur qui vint au front heurter la tour superbe,
Et fit, sur le talus, flamboyer les brins d’herbe
Comme un fourmillement de vipères de feu;
On la sentait venir de quelque horrible lieu;
Tout le donjon parut sanglant comme un mystère;
— Allez! dit Jorge. — Alors on entendit sous terre
Une lugubre voix qui disait : — Gaïffer,
Ne creuse point plus bas, tu trouverais l’enfer.

MASFERRER

I

NEUVIÈME SIÈCLE. — PYRÉNÉES.

C’est un funeste siècle et c’est un dur pays.
Oh! que d’Herculanums et que de Pompéis
Enfouis dans la cendre épaisse de l’histoire!
D’horribles rois sont là; la montagne en est noire.

Assistés au besoin par ceux du mont Ventoux,

Ceux-ci basques, ceux-là catalans, méchants tous,

Ils ont de leurs donjons couvert la chaîne entière;
Du pertuis de Biscaye au pas de l’Argentière,
La guerre gronde, ouvrant ses gueules de dragon
Sur toute la Navarre et sur tout l’Aragon;
Tout tremble; pas un coin de ravine où ne grince
La mâchoire d’un tigre ou la fureur d’un prince;
Ils sont maîtres des cols et maîtres des sommets.
Ces pays garderont leurs traces à jamais;
La tyrannie avec le fer du glaive creuse
Sur la terre sa forme et sa figure affreuse,
Là ses dents, là son pied monstrueux, là son poing;

Linéaments hideux qu’on n’effacera point,
Tant avec son épée impérieuse et dure
Chaque despote en fait profonde la gravure!
Or jamais ces vieux pics pleins de tours, exhaussés
De forts ayant le gouffre et la nuit pour fossés,
N’ont paru plus mauvais et plus haineux aux hommes
Que dans le siècle étrange et funèbre où nous sommes;
Ils se dressent, chaos de blocs démesurés;
Leur cime, par delà les vallons et les prés,
Guette, gêne et menace, à vingt ou trente lieues,
Les villes dont au loin on voit les flèches bleues;
De quelque chef de bande implacable et trompeur
Chacun d’eux est l’abri redouté; leur vapeur
Semble empoisonner l’air d’un miasme insalubre;
Ils sont la vision colossale et lugubre;
La neige et l’ombre font, dans leurs creux entonnoirs,

Des pans de linceuls blancs et des plis de draps noirs;
L’eau des torrents, éparse et de lueurs frappée,
Ressemble aux longs cheveux d’une tête coupée;
Dans la brume on dirait que leurs escarpements
Sont d’une boucherie encor tiède fumants;
Tous ces géants ont l’air de faire dans la nue
Quelque exécution sombre qui continue;
L’air frémit; le glacier peut-être en larmes fond;

Fatals, calmes, muets, et debout dans le fond
De la place publique effrayante des plaines,
Sur leurs vagues plateaux, sur leurs croupes hautaines,

Ils ont tous le carré hideux des castillos,
Comme des échafauds qui portent des billots.

II

TERREUR DES PLAINES

Certes, c’est ténébreux; et, devant deux provinces,
Devant deux gras pays, un tel réseau de princes
N’attache pas pour rien des mailles et des nœuds
Et des fils aux pitons des pics vertigineux;
C’est dans un but qu’armés et tenant deux rivages,
D’affreux chefs, hérissés de couronnes sauvages,
Barrant l’isthme espagnol de l’une à l’autre mer,
Aux pointes des granits, dans le vent, dans l’éclair,

Sur la montagne d’ombre et d’aurore baignée,
Accrochent cette toile énorme d’araignée.

Comme en Grèce jadis les chefs thessaliens,
Ils tiennent tout, la terre et l’homme, en leurs liens;
Pas une triste ville au loin qui ne frissonne;
Vaillante, on la saccage, et lâche, on la rançonne;
Pour dernier mot le meurtre; ils battent sans remord
Monnaie à l’effigie infâme de la mort;
Ils chassent devant eux les blêmes populaces,
Ils sont les grands marcheurs de nuit, rasant les places,
Brisant les tours, du mal et du crime ouvriers,
Et de la chèvre humaine effrayants chevriers.
Être le centre où vient le butin, où ruisselle
Un torrent de bijoux, de piastres, de vaisselle;
Se faire d’un pays une proie, arrachant
Les blés au canton riche et l’or au bourg marchand,

C’est beau; voilà leur gloire. Et c’est leur fait, en outre,
Quand de quelque chaumière on voit fumer la poutre,
Ou quand, vers l’aube, on trouve un pauvre homme dagué,
Nu, sanglant, dans le creux d’un bois, au bord d’un gué;
Le vol des routes suit le pillage des villes;
Car la chose féroce amène aux choses viles.

L’été, la bande met à profit la douceur
De la saison, voyant dans l’aurore une sœur,
Prenant les plus longs jours pour sa sanglante escrime,
Et donnant à l’azur un rôle dans le crime;
Juin radieux consent à la complicité;
C’est l’instant d’appliquer l’échelle à la cité;
C’est le moment de battre une muraille en brèche;
L’air est tiède, la nuit vient tard, la terre est sèche,
La mousse pour dormir fait le roc moins rugueux;
Comme le tas de fleurs cache le tas de gueux!
Le bruit des pas s’efface au bruit de la cascade;
La feuille traître accueille et couvre l’embuscade,
L’églantier, pour le piége épaissi tout exprès,
Semble ami du sépulcre autant que le cyprès;
Aussi, jusqu’à l’hiver, — quoique janvier lui-même

Parfois aux attentats prête sa clarté blême, —
Ce ne sont que combats, assauts et coups de main.

Dès que l’hiver décline, et quand le pont romain,
Le sentier, le ravin que les brises caressent,
Sous la neige qui fond vaguement reparaissent,
Quand la route est possible à des pas hasardeux,
Tous ces aventuriers s’assemblent chez l’un d’eux,
Noirs, terribles, autour d’un âtre où flambe un chêne,
Ils construisent leurs plans pour la saison prochaine;
Ils conviennent d’aller à trois, à quatre, à dix,
Font quelques mouvements d’ours encore engourdis,
Et préparent les vols, les meurtres, les descentes;
Tandis que les oiseaux, sous les feuilles naissantes,

Joyeux, sentant venir les souffles infinis,
Commencent à choisir des mousses pour leurs nids.

À quoi bon ta splendeur, ô sereine nature,
Ô printemps refaisant tous les ans l'ouverture

Du mystérieux temple où la lumière éclot?
À quoi bon le torrent, le lac, le vent, le flot?
À quoi bon le soleil, et les doux mois propices
Semant à pleines mains les fleurs aux précipices,
Les sources et les prés et les oiseaux divins?
À quoi bon la beauté charmante des ravins?
La fierté du sapin, la grâce de l'érable,
Ciel juste! à quoi bon? l'homme étant un misérable,
Et mettant, lui qui rampe et qui dure si peu,
Le masque de l'enfer sur la face de Dieu!
Hélas, hélas, ces monts font peur! leurs fondrières
D'un bastion géant semblent les meurtrières;
Du crime qui médite ils ont la ride au front.
Malheur au peuple, hélas, lorsque l'ombre du mont
Tombe sur les forêts ombre de forteresse!

III

LES HAUTES TERRES

N'importe, loin des forts dont l'aspect seul oppresse,
Quand on peut s'enfoncer entre deux pans de rocs,

Et, comme l'ours, l'isard et les puissants aurochs,
Entrer dans l'âpreté des hautes solitudes,
Le monde primitif reprend ses attitudes,
Et, l'homme étant absent, dans l'arbre et le rocher
On croit voir les profils d'infini s'ébaucher.
Tout est sauvage, inculte, âpre, rauque; on retrouve
La montagne, meilleure avec son air de louve
Qu'avec l'air scélérat et pensif qu'elle prend
Quand elle prête au mal son gouffre et son torrent,

S’associe aux fureurs que la guerre combine,
Et devient des forfaits de l’homme concubine.
Grands asiles! le gave erre à plis écumants;
La sapinière pend dans les escarpements;
Les églises n’ont pas d’obscurité qui vaille
Ce mystère où le temps, dur bûcheron, travaille;

Le pied humain n’entrant point là, ce charpentier
Est à l’aise, et choisit dans le taillis entier;
On entend l’eau qui roule, et la chute éloignée
Des mélèzes qu’abat l’invisible cognée.
L’homme est de trop; souillé, triste, il est importun
À la fleur, à l’azur, au rayon, au parfum;
C’est dans les monts, ceux-ci glaciers, ceux-là fournaises,
Qu’est le grand sanctuaire effrayant des genèses;
On sent que nul vivant ne doit voir à l’œil nu,
Et de près, la façon dont s’y prend l’Inconnu,
Et comment l’être fait de l’atome la chose;
La nuée entre l’ombre et l’homme s’interpose;

Si l’on prête l’oreille on entend le tourment
Des tempêtes, des rocs, des feux, de l’élément,
La clameur du prodige en gésine, derrière
Le brouillard, redoutable et tremblante barrière;
L’éclair à chaque instant déchire ce rideau.
L’air gronde. Et l’on ne voit pas une goutte d’eau
Qui dans ces lieux profonds et rudes s’assoupisse,
Ayant, après l’orage, affaire au précipice;
Selon le plus ou moins de paresse du vent,
Les nuages tardifs s’en vont comme en rêvant,
Ou prennent le galop ainsi que des cavales;
Tout bourdonne, frémit, rugit; par intervalles

Un aigle, dans le bruit des écumes, des cieux,
Des vents, des bois, des flots, passe silencieux.

L’aigle est le magnanime et sombre solitaire;

Il laisse les vautours s'entendre sur la terre,
Les chouettes en cercle autour des morts s'asseoir,
Les corbeaux se parler dans les plaines le soir;
Il se loge tout seul, et songe dans son aire,
S'approchant le plus près possible du tonnerre,
Dédaigneux des complots et des rassemblements.
Il plane immense et libre au seuil des firmaments,
Dans les azurs, parmi les profondes nuées,
Et ne fait rien à deux que ses petits. Huées

De l'abîme, fracas des rocs, cris des torrents,
Hurlements convulsifs des grands arbres souffrants,
Chocs d'avalanches, l'aigle ignore ces murmures.

Donc, au printemps, réveil des rois; trahisons mûres;
On parle, on va, l'on vient; les guet-apens sont prêts;
Et les villes en bas, tremblantes, loin et près,
Pansant leur vieille plaie, arrangeant leur décombre,
Écoutent tous ces pas des cyclopes de l'ombre.
Éternelle terreur du faible et du petit!
Qu'est-ce qu'ils font là-haut, ces rois? On se blottit,
On regarde quel point de l'horizon s'allume,
On entend le bruit sourd d'on ne sait quelle enclume,
On guette ce qui vient, surgit, monte ou descend;
Chaque ville en son coin se cache, frémissant
Des flammèches que l'air et la nuée apportent
Dans ce jaillissement d'étincelles qui sortent
Du rude atelier, plein des souffles de l'autan,
Où l'on forge le sceptre énorme de Satan.

MASFERRER

Or dans ce même temps, du Llobregat à l'Èbre,
Du Tage au Cil, un nom, Masferrer, est célèbre;
C'est un homme des rocs et des bois, qui vit seul;

Il prend l’ombre des monts tragiques pour linceul;
Avant d’être avec l’arbre, il était avec l’homme;
Comme un loup refusant d’être bête de somme,
Fauve, il s’est du milieu des vivants évadé,
Au hasard, comme sort du noir cornet le dé;
Et maintenant il est dans la montagne immense;
Sa zone est le désert redoutable; où commence
La semelle des ours marquant dans les chemins
Des espèces de pas horribles presque humains,
Il est chez lui. Cet être a fui dès son jeune âge.
De l’énormité sombre il est le personnage;
Il rit, ayant l’azur; ses dents au lieu de pain
Cassent l’amande huileuse et rance du sapin;
La montagne, acceptant cet homme sur les cimes,
Trouve son vaste bond ressemblant aux abîmes,
Sa voix, comme les bois et comme les torrents,
Sonore, et de l’éclair ses yeux peu différents;
De sorte que ces monts et que cette nature
Se sentent augmentés presque de sa stature.

Il va du col au dôme et du pic au vallon.
Le glissement n’est pas connu de son talon;
Sa marche n’est jamais plus altière et plus sûre
Qu’au bord vertigineux de quelque âpre fissure;
Il franchit tout, distance, avalanches, hasards,
Tempêtes, précédé d’une fuite d’isards;

Hier, il côtoyait Irun; aujourd’hui l’aube
Le voit se refléter dans le vert lac de Gaube,
Chassant, pêchant, perçant de flèches les hérons,
Ou voguant, à défaut de barque et d’avirons,
Sur un tronc de sapin qui flotte et qu’il manœuvre
Avec le mouvement souple de la couleuvre.
Il entre, apparaît, sort, sans qu’on sache par où.
S’il veut un pont, il ploie un arbre sur le trou;
La façon dont il va le long d’une corniche

Fait peur même à l’oiseau qui sur les rocs se niche.
A-t-il apprivoisé la rude hostilité
Du vent, du pic, du flot à jamais irrité,
Et des neiges soufflant en livides bouffées?
Oui. Car la sombre pierre oscillante des fées
Le salue; il vit calme et formidable, ayant

Avec la ronce et l’ombre et l’éclair flamboyant
Et la trombe et l’hiver de farouches concordes.
Armé d’un arc, vêtu de peaux, chaussé de cordes,
Au-dessus des lieux bas et pestilentiels,
Il court dans la nuée et dans les arc-en-ciels.

Il passe sa journée à l’affût, l’arbalète
Tendue à la cigogne, au gerfaut, à l’alète,
Suit l’isard, ou, pensif, s’accoude aux parapets
Des gouffres sur les lacs et les halliers épais,
Et songe dans les rocs que le lierre tapisse,
Tandis que cet enfer qu’on nomme précipice,
Faisant vociférer l’eau dans le gave amer,
Dans la forêt la terre et dans l’ouragan l’air,
Emploie à blasphémer trois langues différentes.
Avec leurs rameaux d’or et leurs fleurs amarantes,
La lande et la bruyère au reflet velouté
Lui brodent des tapis gigantesques l’été.
Pour la terre, il s’éloigne, et, pour l’astre, il s’approche.

Il avait commencé par bâtir sur la roche,
À la mode des rois construisant des donjons,
Un bouge qu’il avait couvert d’un toit de joncs,
Ayant l’escarpement pour joie et pour défense;

Car l’abîme l’enivre, et depuis son enfance
Qu’il erre plein d’extase et de sublime ennui,
Il cherche on ne sait quoi de grand qui soit à lui
Dans ces immensités favorables à l’aigle.
L’ouragan emporta sa cabane. — Espiègle!

Dit l’homme, en regardant son vieux toit chassieux
S’en aller à travers les foudres dans les cieux.

À cette heure, parmi les crevasses bourrues
Pleines du tournoiement des milans et des grues,
Un repaire, ébauchant une ogive au milieu

D’une haute paroi toute de marbre bleu,
Souterrain pour le loup, aérien pour l’aigle,
Est son gîte; le houx, l’épi barbu du seigle,
L’ortie et le chiendent encombrent l’antre obscur,
Sorte de trou hideux dans un monstrueux mur;
Au-dessus du repaire, au haut du mur de marbre,
Se tord et se hérisse une hydre de troncs d’arbre;
Cette espèce de bête immobile lui sert
À retrouver sa route en ce morne désert;
On aperçoit du fond des solitudes vertes
Ce nœud de cous dressés et de gueules ouvertes,
Penché sur l’ombre, ayant pour rage et pour tourment
De ne pouvoir jeter au gouffre un aboiement.
L’antre est comme enfoui dans les ronces grimpantes;
Parfois, au loin, le pied leur manquant sur les pentes,
Dans l’entonnoir sans fond des précipices sourds,
Comme des gouttes d’encre on voit tomber les ours;
Le ravin est si noir que le vent peut à peine
Jeter quelque vain râle et quelque vague haleine
Dans ce mont, muselière au sinistre aquilon.

Un titan enterré dont on voit le talon,

Ce dur talon fendu d’une affreuse manière,
Voilà l’antre. À côté de la haute tanière,
Un gave insensé gronde et bave et croule à flots
Dans le gouffre, parmi les pins et les bouleaux;
L’antre au bord du torrent s’ouvre sur l’étendue;
La chute est au-dessous. Quand la neige fondue
Et la pluie ont grossi les cours d’eau, le torrent

Monte jusqu'à la grotte, enflé, hurlant, courant,
Terrible, avec un bruit d'horreur et de ravage,
Et familièrement entre chez ce sauvage;
Et lui, laissant frémir les grands arbres pliés,
Profite de l'écume et s'y lave les pieds.

Dans un grossissement de brume et de fumée,
Entouré d'un nuage obscur de renommée,
Quoique invisible au fond de ses rocs, mais debout
Dans son fantôme allant, venant, dominant tout,
Cet homme s'aperçoit de très loin en Espagne.

Chacun des rois a pris sa part de la montagne.
Fervehan a Lordos, Bermudo Cauteretz;

Sanche a le Canigo, pic chargé de forêts
Que blanchit du matin la clarté baptismale;
Padres a la Prexa, Juan tient le Vignemale;
Sforon est roi d'Urgel, Blas est roi d'Obité;
La part de Masferrer s'appelle Liberté.
Pas un plus grand que lui sur ces monts ne se pose.

Qu'est-ce que ce géant? C'est un voleur. La chose
Est simple; tout colosse a toujours deux côtés;
Et les difformités et les sublimités
Habitent la montagne ainsi que des voisines.
Le prodige et le monstre ont les mêmes racines.
Monstre, jusqu'où? Jamais de pas vils et rampants;
Jamais de trahisons, jamais de guet-apens;
Masferrer attaquait tout seul des groupes d'hommes;
Au pâle rustre allant vendre au marché ses pommes,

Il disait : Va! c'est bien! Il laissait volontiers
Aux pauvres gens, tremblant la nuit dans les sentiers,
Leur âne, leur cochon, leur orge, leur avoine;
Mais il se gênait moins avec le sac du moine;
Il n'écrasait pas tout dans ce qu'on nomme droit;

Si quelqu’un avait faim, si quelqu’un avait froid,
Ce n’était pas son nom qui sortait de la plainte;
La malédiction, cette voix fauve et sainte,
Ne le poursuivait point dans son farouche exil;
Aux actions des rois il fronçait le sourcil.
Un jour, devant un fait lugubre et sanguinaire,
— Ces hommes sont méchants, et plus qu’à l’ordinaire,
Cria-t-il. A-t-il donc neigé rouge aujourd’hui? —
Les rois déshonoraient la montagne; mais lui
N’importunait pas trop l’ombre du grand Pélage.
Voilà ce que disaient de lui dans le village

Les pâtres de Héas et de l’Aquatonta.
Du reste confiant et terrible. Il lutta
Tout un jour contre un ours entré dans sa tanière;
L’ours, l’ayant habitée à la saison dernière,
La voulait; vers le soir l’ours fatigué râla.
— Soit, nous continuerons demain matin. Dors là,
Dit l’homme. Il ajouta : — Fais un pas! je t’assomme!
Puis s’endormit. Au jour, l’ours, sans réveiller l’homme
Et se souciant peu de la suite, partit.

V

LE CASTILLO

Noir ravin. Hors un coin vivant où retentit
Dans la forêt le son des buccins et des sistres,
Tout est désert. Halliers, bruit de feuilles sinistres,
Tristesse, immensité; c’est un de ces lieux-là
Où se trouvait Caïn lorsque Dieu l’appela.
Le Caïn qui se cache en cette ombre est de pierre,
C’est un donjon. Des gueux à la longue rapière
Le gardent; des soudards sur ses tours font le guet.

Il date du temps rude où Rollon naviguait.
À quelque heure du jour qu’on le voie, il effraie;
Quelque couleur qu’il prenne, il convient à l’orfraie;

S’il est noir, c’est la nuit; s’il est blanc, c’est l’hiver.
L’archer fourmille là comme au cercueil le ver.

Dans la tour, une salle aux murailles très-hautes.
Avec ses grands arceaux qui sont comme des côtes,
Cette salle, où pétille un brasier frémissant,
Écarlate de flamme, a l’air rouge de sang.
Ouvrez Léviathan, ce sera là son ventre.

Cette salle est un lieu de rendez-vous.
Au centre,
Autour d’un tréteau vaste où fument tous les mets,
Perdrix, pluviers, chevreuils tués sur les sommets,
Mouton d’Anjou, pourceau d’Ardenne ou de Belgique,

Des hommes radieux font un groupe tragique;
Ces hommes sont assis, parlant, buvant, mangeant,
Sur des chaires d’ivoire aux pinacles d’argent,
Ou sur des fronts de bœuf entre les larges cornes;
Leur rire monstreux et fou n’a pas de bornes;
Leur splendeur est féroce, et l’on voit sortir d’eux
Une sorte de lustre implacable et hideux;
Le nœud de perles sert d’agrafe aux peaux de bêtes;
Ils sont comme éblouis de guerre et de tempêtes;
Tous, le jeune homme blond et le vieillard barbu,
Causent, chantent, beaucoup de vin chaud étant bu,
De la fin du repas la nappe ayant les rides;
Chasseurs vertigineux ou bûcherons splendides,
Chacun a sa cognée et chacun a son cor;
L’âtre fait flamboyer leurs torses couverts d’or;
La flamme empourpre, autour de la table fournaise,
Ces hommes écaillés de lumière et de braise,
Étranges, triomphants, gais, funèbres, vermeils;
D’un ciel qui serait tombe ils seraient les soleils.

Ce sont les rois.

Ce sont les princes de l’embûche
Gigantesque où le Nord de l’Espagne trébuche,
Les seigneurs du glacier, du pic et du torrent,
Les vastes charpentiers de l’abattage en grand,
Les dieux, les noirs souffleurs des trompes titaniques
D’où sortent les terreurs, les fuites, les paniques.

Germes du maître altier que l’avenir construit,
Semences du grand trône encor couvert de nuit,
Grains de ce qui sera plus tard le roi d’Espagne,
Ils sont là. C’est Pancho que la crainte accompagne,
Genialis, Sforon qu’Urgel a pour fardeau,
Gildebrand, Égina, Pervehan, Bermudo,
Juan, Blas-le-Captieux, Sanche-le-Fratricide;

Le vieux tigre, Vasco Tête-Blanche, préside.
Près de lui, deux géants : Padres et Tarifet;
L’armure de ceux-ci, dans les récits qu’on fait,
Avec le plomb bouillant de l’enfer est soudée,
Et les clous des brassards sont longs d’une coudée.
Au bas bout de la table est Gil, prince de Gor,
En huque rouge avec la chapeline d’or.

Cependant le haillon sur leur pourpre se fronce;
Ce sont des majestés qui marchent dans la ronce;
La montagne est là toute avec son fauve effroi;
Ils sont déguenillés et couronnés; tel roi

Qui commence en fleurons finit en alpargates.

Vases, meubles, émaux, onyx, rubis, agates,
Argenterie, écrins étincelants, rouleaux
D’étoffes, se mêlant l’un à l’autre à longs flots,
Tout ce qu’on peut voler, tout ce dont on trafique,
Fait dans un coin un bloc lugubre et magnifique;
Rien n’y manque; ballots apportés là d’hier,
Joyaux de femme avec quelque lambeau de chair,

Lourds coffres, sacs d’argent; tout ce tas de décombres
Qu’on appelle le tas de butin.
Dans les ombres
Marche et se meut l’armée horrible des sierras;
Secouant des tambours, courant, levant les bras,

Des femmes, qu’effarouche une sombre allégresse,
Avec des regards d’ange et des bonds de tigresse,
Tâchant de faire choir les piastres de leur main
À force de seins nus, de fard et de carmin,
Dansent autour des rois, car ils sont les Mécènes
De la jupe effarée et des groupes obscènes.
Parmi ces femmes, deux, l’une grande aux crins blonds,
L’autre petite avec des colliers de doublons,
Toutes deux gitanas au flanc couleur de brique,
Mêlent une âpre lutte au bolero lubrique;
La petite, ployant ses reins, tordant son corps,
Rit et raille la grande, et la géante alors

Se penche sur la naine avec gloire et furie,
Comme une Pyrénée insulte une Asturie.

La cheminée, où sont creusés d’étroits grabats,
Remplit un pan de mur du haut jusques en bas;
On voit sur le fronton Saint George, et sur la plaque,
Le combat d’un satyre avec un brucolaque.

Autour de ces rois luit le pillage flagrant.
Le deuil, les campagnards par milliers émigrant,
La plaine qui frémit, l’horizon qui rougeoie,
Les pueblos dévastés et morts, voilà leur joie.
C’est de ces noirs seigneurs que la misère sort.
Peut-être ce pays serait prospère et fort
Si l’on pouvait ôter à l’Espagne l’épine
Qu’elle porte au talon et qu’on nomme rapine.

De ce dont ils sont fiers plus d’un serait honteux;

Ils sont grands sur un fond d’opprobre; devant eux
Des parfums allumés fument; cet encens pue.

Du reste, arceaux géants, colonnade trapue;

Des viandes à des crocs comme dans un charnier;
La même joie allant du premier au dernier;
Plus de cris que le soir au fond des marécages;
D’affreux chiens-loups gardant des captifs dans des cages;
Dans un angle un gibet; partout le choc brutal
Du palais riche, heureux, joyeux, contre l’étal.

Les murs ont par endroits des trous où s’enracine
Un poing de fer portant un cierge de résine.

Vaguement écouté par Blas et Gildebrand,
Un pâtre, près du seuil, sur le sistre vibrant,
Chante des montagnards la féroce romance;
Et des trois madriers brûlant dans l’âtre immense
Il sort tout un dragon de flamme, ayant pour frein
Une chaîne liée à deux chenets d’airain.

VI

UNE ÉLECTION

Cependant les voilà qui causent d’une affaire.
Si grands qu’ils soient, la mort entre en leur haute sphère;
Guy, roi d’Oloron, veuf et sans enfants, est mort.
À qui le mont? à qui la ville? à qui le fort?
Question. La querelle éclaterait. Mais Sanche :

— Paix là! l’heure est mauvaise et notre pouvoir penche;
Les villes contre nous font pacte avec les bourgs;
Les hommes des hameaux, des vignes, des labours,
S’arment pour nous combattre, et la ligue est certaine
Du comte de Castille et du duc d’Aquitaine.

Est-ce en un tel moment qu’autour de nous groupés,
Princes, nos ennemis vont nous voir occupés
À nous mordre en rongeant un os dans la montagne?
Par Jésus! les démons sont d’accord dans leur bagne;

Va-t-on se quereller entre rois dans les cieux?

— La dispute est un mal, dit Blas-le-Captieux,
Qui la cherche est félon, qui l’accepte imbécile;
Mais comment s’accorder?
Sanche dit :
— C’est facile.

— Qui donc ferais-tu roi d’Oloron?
— Masferrer.

Ce nom sur tous les fronts passa comme un éclair.

— Mes frères, reprit Sanche, il faut songer aux guerres;
(Sanche, étant fratricide, aimait ce mot : mes frères.)
Et, pardieu, mon avis, le voici : notre cor
S’entendrait de plus loin et ferait mieux encor,
Et la rumeur qui sort de nous dans la campagne
Et la nuée, irait plus au fond de l’Espagne,
Si Masferrer était élu roi d’Oloron,
Et si, subitement, dans notre altier clairon
Ce voleur engouffrait son souffle formidable.

— Mais n’habite-t-il pas un antre inabordable?

— Puisqu’il l’aborde, lui?
— C’est juste.
— Nous voulons,
Dit Sanche, tout glacer sous nos rudes talons,

Et jeter bas ce peuple et cette ligue infime.
Il nous faut de la chute; eh bien, prenons l’abîme!

Il nous faut de la glace; eh bien, prenons l’hiver!

— Soit, cria Fervehan, nommons roi Masferrer.

— J’y consens, dit Sforon, la bête est d’envergure.

— Ce serait un roi, certe, et de haute figure,
Ajouta Bermudo.
— Le sanglier me plaît,
Dit Juan.
— Mais comme roi, seigneurs, est-il complet?
Dit Blas. On passe mal d’une bauge à la tente.

— Qu’est-ce donc que tu veux de plus? Je m’en contente,
Hurla Gil. Je le prends avec ses marcassins,
S’il en a. Ce serait, j’en jure par les saints,
Quelque chose de grand, d’altier, de salutaire,
Et d’égal à l’effet que ferait sur la terre,
En s’y dressant soudain, l’ombre de Totila,
Si l’on voyait un sceptre entre ces pattes-là!

Le vieux Vasco dressa sous le dais de sa chaire
Son front blanc éclairé d’une blême torchère :

— Il nous faut du renfort. Puisque nous en gagnons
En étant de ce gueux quelconque compagnons,

Amen, l’homme me va. J’accepte l’épousaille.
Mais, princes, qui l’ira chercher dans sa broussaille?

— Deux d’entre nous.
— C’est dit.
Et le sort désigna
Le roi Genialis et le duc Agina.

VII

LES DEUX PORTE-SCEPTRE

Un torrent effréné roule entre deux falaises;
À droite est l’antre; à gauche, au milieu des mélèzes,
Un dur sentier fait face au terrier du bandit,
Mince corniche au flanc du roc; l’eau qui bondit,
L’affreux souffle sortant du gouffre, la colère
D’un trou prodigieux et perpendiculaire,

Séparent le sentier de l’antre. Pas de pont.
Rien. La chute où l’écho tumultueux répond.
Les antres, là, sont sûrs; les abîmes les gardent;
Les deux escarpements ténébreux se regardent;
À peine, en haut, voit-on un frêle jour qui point.
La fente épouvantable est étroite à ce point
Qu’on pourrait du sentier parler à la caverne;
On cause ainsi d’un mur à l’autre de l’Averne.

Un sentier, mais jamais de passants.
Dans ces monts,
Le sol n’est que granits, herbes, glaces, limons;
Le cheval y fléchit, la mule s’y déferre;
Tout ce que les deux rois envoyés purent faire,
Ce fut de pénétrer jusqu’au rude sentier.
Parvenus au tournant, où l’antre tout entier,
Comme ces noirs tombeaux que les chacals déterrent,
Lugubre, apparaissait, les deux rois s’arrêtèrent.
Le bandit, que les rois apercevaient dedans,
Raccommodait son arc, coupait avec ses dents
Les nœuds, de peur qu’un fil sur le bois ne se torde,
Songeait, et par moments crachait un bout de corde.
L’eau du gave semblait à la hâte s’enfuir.

L’homme avait à ses pieds un vieux carquois de cuir
Plein de ces dards qui font de loin trembler la cible.
On voyait dans un coin sa femelle terrible.
Une pierre servait à ce voleur de banc.

Alors, haussant la voix, car le gave en tombant
Faisait le bruit d'un buffle échappé de l'étable,
L'un des deux rois cria dans l'antre redoutable :

— Salut, homme, au milieu des gouffres! Devant toi
Tu vois Agina, duc, et Genialis, roi;
Nous sommes envoyés par Vasco Tête-Blanche,
Fervehan, Gildebrand, don Blas, don Juan, don Sanche,
Gil, Bermudo, Sforon, et je te dis ceci
De la part de ceux-là qui sont des rois aussi :
On te donne Oloron, ville dans la montagne,
Sois l'un de nous; sois roi; viens; le sceptre se gagne,

Tu l'as gagné. Nous rois, nous venons te chercher.
Un fils comme toi peut, du haut de son rocher,
Entrer parmi les rois de plain-pied, sans démence;
C'est à ta liberté que le trône commence.
Règne sur Oloron et sur vingt bourgs encor.
Tu mettras sur ta tête une tiare d'or,
Et ce qu'on nomme vol se nommera conquête;
Car rien n'est crime et tout est vertu, sur le faîte;
Et ceux qui t'appelaient bandit, t'adoreront.
Viens, règne. Nous avons des couronnes au front,
Des draps d'or et d'argent à dix onces la vare,
Des châteaux, des pays, l'Aragon, la Navarre,
Des femmes, des banquets, le monde à nos genoux;
Prends ta part. Tout cela t'appartient comme à nous.
Entre dans le palais et sors de la tanière,
Remplace le nuage, ami, par la lumière;

Quitte ta nuit, ton roc, ton haillon, ton torrent,
Viens; et sois comme nous un roi superbe et grand,
N'ayant rien à ses pieds qui ne soit une fête.
Viens.
Sans lever les yeux et sans tourner la tête,
Le bandit, sur son arc gardant toujours la main,
Leur fit signe du doigt de passer leur chemin.

LA PATERNITÉ

Le père a souffleté le fils.
Tous deux sont grands.
Don Ascagne est le fils. Nager dans les torrents,
Dompter l’ours, être un comte âpre et dur comme un rustre,
Ce furent là les mœurs de son enfance illustre;
Il étonnait les monts où l’éclair retentit
Par la grandeur des pas qu’il faisait tout petit;
Il risquait, par-dessus maint gouffre redoutable,
Des sauts de chevrier, de l’air d’un connétable;
Il n’avait pas vingt ans qu’il avait déjà pris
Tout le pays qui va d’Irun à Lojariz,

Et Tormez, et Sangra, cité des sycomores,
Et détruit sur les bords du Zaban cinq rois maures.
Le père est Jayme; il est plus formidable encor;
Tell eût voulu léguer son arc, Roland son cor,
Hercule sa massue à ce comte superbe.
Ce que le titan chauve est à l’archange imberbe,
Don Jayme l’est à don Ascagne; il a blanchi;
Il neige sur un mont qu’on n’a jamais franchi,
Et l’âge atteint le front que nul roi n’a pu vaincre.
La mer parfois s’arrête et se laisse convaincre
Par la dune ou l’écueil, et s’abaisse et décroît,
Mais Jayme n’a jamais reculé dans son droit

Et toujours il a fait son devoir d’être libre;
Ses vieux monts qu’envieraient les collines du Tibre
Sur l’horizon brumeux de loin sont aperçus,
Et sa tour sur les monts, et son âme au-dessus.
Jayme a chassé Kernoch, pirate de Bretagne.
Il verrait Annibal attaquer sa montagne
Qu’il dirait : me voilà! rien ne le surprenant.
Il habite un pays sauvage et frissonnant;

L’orage est éternel sur son château farouche;
Les vents dont un courroux difforme emplit la bouche
Y soufflent et s’y font une âpre guerre entr’eux,

Et sur ses tours la pluie en longs fils ténébreux
Tombe comme à travers les mille trous d’un crible;
Jayme parfois se montre aux ouragans, terrible;
Il se dresse entre deux nuages entr’ouverts,
Il regarde la foudre et l’autan de travers,
Et fronce un tel sourcil que l’ombre est inquiète;
Le pâtre voit d’en bas sa haute silhouette

Et croit que ce seigneur des monts et des torrents
Met le holà parmi ces noirs belligérants.
Sa tour est indulgente au lierre parasite.
On a recours à lui quand la victoire hésite,
Il la décide, ayant une altière façon
De pousser l’ennemi derrière l’horizon;
Il ne permet aucun pillage sur ses terres;
Il est de ceux qui sont au clergé réfractaires;
Il est le grand rebelle et le grand justicier;
Il a la franchise âpre et claire de l’acier;
Ce n’est pas un voleur, il ne veut pas qu’on dise
Qu’un noble a droit de prendre aux juifs leur marchandise;
Il jure rarement, donne de bons avis,
Craint les femmes, dort vite, et les lourds ponts-levis
Sont tremblants quand il bat leur chaîne à coups de hache;
Il est sans peur, il est sans feinte, il est sans tache,

Croit en Dieu, ne ment pas, ne fuit pas, ne hait pas;
Les défis qu’on lui jette ont pour lui des appas;
Il songe à ses neveux, il songe à ses ancêtres;
Quant aux rois, que l’enfer attend, car ils sont traîtres,
Il les plaint quelquefois et ne les craint jamais;
Quand la loyauté parle, il dit : Je me soumets;
Étant baron des monts, il est roi de la plaine;
La ville de la soie et celle de la laine,

Grenade et Ségovie, ont confiance en lui.
Cette gloire hautaine et scrupuleuse a lui
Soixante ans, sans coûter une larme à l’Espagne.
Chaque fois qu’il annonce une entrée en campagne,
Chaque fois que ses feux, piquant l’horizon noir,
Clairs dans l’ombre, ont couru de monts en monts le soir,
Appels mystérieux flamboyant sur les cimes,
Les tragiques vautours et les cygnes sublimes
Accourent, voulant voir, quand Jayme a combattu,
Les vautours son exploit, les cygnes sa vertu;
Car il est bon.
Le fils n’est pas un chef vulgaire;
Mais le père a souvent pardonné dans la guerre,

Ce qui fait que le père est le plus grand des deux.

Ils tiennent Reuss, le mont Cantabre dépend d’eux,
Ils habitent la case Arcol, tour féodale
Faite par don Maldras qui fut un roi vandale,
Sur un sommet jadis hanté par un dragon;
L’èbre est leur fleuve; au temps des guerres d’Aragon,
Ils ont bravé le roi de France Louis onze.

Ascagne est fils de Jayme et Jayme est fils d’Alonze.
Qu’est-ce qu’Alonze? Un mort; larve, ombre dans les vents,

Fantôme, mais plus grand que ceux qui sont vivants.

Il a fait dans son temps des choses inconnues,
Et superbes; parfois sa face dans les nues
Apparaît; c’est de lui que parlent les vieillards;
On l’aperçoit qui rêve au fond des noirs brouillards.
Sa statue est au bas de la tour, dans la crypte,
Assise sur sa tombe ainsi qu’un dieu d’Égypte,
Toute en airain, énorme, et touchant au plafond;
Car les sépulcres sont ce que les morts les font,
Grands si le mort est grand; si bien que don Alonze

Est spectre dans la brume et géant dans le bronze.

Voilà quinze cents ans que le monde est chrétien;
Les fières mœurs s’en vont; jadis le mal, le bien,
Le bon, le beau vivaient dans la chevalerie;
L’épée avait fini par être une patrie;
On était chevalier comme on est citoyen;
Atteindre un juste but par un juste moyen,
Être clément au faible, aux puissants incommode,
Vaincre, mais rester pur, c’était la vieille mode;
Jayme fut de son siècle, Ascagne est de son temps.
Les générations mêlent leurs pas flottants;

Hélas, souvent un père, en qui brûle une flamme,
Dans son fils qui grandit voit décroître son âme.
Jadis la guerre, ayant pour loi l’honneur grondeur
Et la foi sainte, était terrible avec pudeur;
Les paladins étaient à leurs vieux noms fidèles;
Les aigles avaient moins de griffes et plus d’ailes;
On n’est plus à présent les hommes d’autrefois;
On ne voit plus les preux se ruer aux exploits
Comme des tourbillons d’âmes impétueuses;
On a pour s’attaquer des façons tortueuses
Et sûres, dont le Cid, certes, n’eût pas voulu,
Et que dédaignerait le lion chevelu;
Jadis les courts assauts, maintenant les longs siéges;
Et tout s’achève, après les ruses et les piéges,

Par le sac des cités en flammes sous les cieux,
Et, comme on est moins brave, on est plus furieux;
Ce qui fait qu’aujourd’hui les victoires sont noires.
Ascagne a désiré franchir des territoires
D’Alraz, ville qui doit aux Arabes son nom;
Il a voulu passer, mais la ville a dit non;
Don Ascagne a trouvé la réponse incivile,
Et, lance au poing, il a violé cette ville,
Lui chevalier, risquant sa part de paradis,

Laissant faire aux soldats des choses de bandits;
Ils ont enfreint les lois de guerre aragonaises;
Des enfants ont été jetés dans les fournaises;

Les noirs effondrements mêlés aux tourbillons
Ont dévoré la ville, on a crié : Pillons!
Et ce meurtre a duré trois jours; puis don Ascagne,
Vainqueur, a ramené ses gens dans la montagne
Sanglants, riants, joyeux et comptant des profits,
Et c'est pourquoi le père a souffleté le fils.

Alors le fils a dit : — Je m'en vais. L'ombre est faite
Pour les fuites sans fond, et la forêt muette
Est une issue obscure où tout s'évanouit.
L'insulte est une fronde et nous jette à la nuit.
J'ai droit à la colère à mon âge. L'offense,
Tombant du père au fils, est la fin de l'enfance.
Nul ne répond du gouffre, et qui s'en va, va loin.
L'affront du père, ô bois, je vous prends à témoin,
Suffit pour faire entrer le fils en rêverie.
Quoi! pour avoir senti gronder ma seigneurie
Dans mon âme, devant des manants, pour avoir
Ramené comme il sied des vassaux au devoir,
Pour quelques vils bourgeois brûlés dans leurs masures,
Comte, vous m'avez fait la pire des blessures,
Et l'outrage est venu, seigneur, de vous à moi;
Et j'ai connu la honte et j'ai connu l'effroi;
La honte de l'avoir et l'effroi de le rendre;
Et jusqu'à ce moment nul ne m'eût fait comprendre
Que je pusse rougir ou trembler. Donc, adieu.
Le désert me convient, et l'âpreté du lieu,

Quand la bête des bois devient haute et géante,
N'est point à ses grands pas farouches malséante;
La croissance rend grave et sauvage l'oiseau;
Et l'habitude d'être esclave ou lionceau
Se perd quand on devient lion ou gentilhomme;

L’aiglon qui grandit parle au soleil et se nomme
Et lui dit je suis aigle, et, libre et révolté,
N’a plus besoin de père ayant l’immensité.
D’ailleurs qu’est-ce que c’est qu’un père? La fenêtre
Que la vie ouvre à l’âme et qu’on appelle naître
Est sombre, et quant à moi je n’ai point pardonné
À mon père le jour funeste où je suis né.
Si je vis, c’est sa faute, et je n’en suis pas cause.
Enfin, en admettant qu’on doive quelque chose
À l’homme qui nous mit dans ce monde mauvais,
Il m’a délié, soit, c’est fini, je m’en vais.
Il n’est pas de devoir qu’un outrage n’efface;
J’ai désormais la nuit sinistre sur la face;
Il ne me convient plus d’être fils de quelqu’un.
Je me sens fauve, et voir son père est importun.
Je veux être altier, fier, libre, et je ne l’espère
Que hors de toi, donjon, que hors de vous, mon père.

Je vais dans la sierra que battent les éclairs;
Leur cime me ressemble; un souffle est dans les airs,
Il m’enlève. Je pars. Toute lumière est morte,
Le désert s’ouvre; et l’homme est bienvenu qui porte
Chez des monts foudroyés un souvenir d’affront. —

Et, cela dit, le fils s’en alla.
L’homme est prompt;
Et nos rapidités, voix, colères, querelles,
Vont au hasard, laissant de l’ombre derrière elles.
Ce père aimait ce fils.
Du haut de sa maison,
Morne, et les yeux fixés sur le pâle horizon,
Il regarda celui qui partait disparaître;
Puis, quand son fils se fut effacé, le vieux maître
Descendit dans la crypte où son père dormait.
Le crépuscule froid qu’un soupirail admet
Éclairait cette cave, et la voûte était haute.
Dans le profond sépulcre il entra comme un hôte.

Au fond était assis le grand comte d’airain;
Et dans l’obscurité du blême souterrain,
Brume livide où l’œil par degrés s’habitue,
Flottait le rêve épars autour d’une statue.

Le colosse posait ses mains sur ses genoux.
Il avait ce regard effrayant des yeux doux
Qui peuvent foudroyer quand leur bonté se lasse.
Le vague bruit vivant qui sur la terre passe,
Chocs, rumeurs, chants d’oiseaux, cris humains, pas perdus,

Voix et vents, n’étaient point dans cette ombre entendus,
Et l’on eût dit que rien de ce que l’homme écoute,
Chante, invoque ou poursuit, n’osait sous cette voûte
Pénétrer, tant la tombe est un lieu qui se tait,
Et tant le chevalier de bronze méditait.
Trois degrés, que n’avait touchés nulle sandale,
Exhaussaient la statue au-dessus de la dalle;
Don Jayme les monta. Pensif, il contempla
Quelque temps la figure auguste assise là,
Puis il s’agenouilla comme devant son juge;
Puis il sentit, vaincu, comme dans un déluge
Une montagne sent l’ascension des flots,
Se rompre en son vieux cœur la digue des sanglots,
Il cria :
— Père! ah Dieu! tu n’es plus sur la terre,
Je ne t’ai plus! Comment peut-on quitter son père!
Comme on est différent de son fils, ô douleur!
Mon père! ô toi le plus terrible, le meilleur,
Je viens à toi. Je suis dans ta sombre chapelle,
Je tombe à tes genoux, m’entends-tu? Je t’appelle.
Tu dois me voir, le bronze ayant d’étranges yeux.
Ah! j’ai vécu; je suis un homme glorieux,
Un soldat, un vainqueur; mes trompettes altières
Ont passé bien des fois par-dessus des frontières;
Je marche sur les rois et sur les généraux;
Mais je baise tes pieds. Le rêve du héros

C’est d’être grand partout et petit chez son père.
Le père c’est le toit béni, l’abri prospère,
Une lumière d’astre à travers les cyprès,
C’est l’honneur, c’est l’orgueil, c’est Dieu qu’on sent tout près.
Hélas! le père absent c’est le fils misérable.
Ô toi, l’habitant vrai de la tour vénérable,
Géant de la montagne et sire du manoir,
Superbement assis devant le grand ciel noir,
Occupé du lever de l’aurore éternelle,
Comte, baisse un moment ta tranquille prunelle
Jusqu’aux vivants, passants confus, roseaux tremblants,
Et regarde à tes pieds cet homme en cheveux blancs,
Abandonné tout près du sépulcre, qui pleure,
Et qui va désormais songer dans sa demeure,
Tandis que les tombeaux seront silencieux
Et que le vent profond soufflera dans les cieux.
Mon fils sort de chez moi comme un loup d’un repaire.
Mais est-ce qu’on peut être offensé par son père?
Ni le père, ni Dieu n’offensent; châtier
C’est aimer; l’Océan superbe reste entier
Quel que soit l’ouragan que les gouffres lui jettent,
Et les sérénités éternelles n’admettent
Ni d’affront paternel, ni d’outrage divin.
Eh quoi, ce mot sacré, la source, serait vain!
Ne suis-je pas la branche et n’es-tu pas la tige?
Je t’aime. Un père mort, c’est, glorieux prodige,
De l’ombre par laquelle on se sent soutenir.
La beauté de l’enfance est de ne pas finir.
Au-dessus de tout homme, et quoi qu’on puisse faire,
Quelqu’un est toujours Dieu, quelqu’un est toujours père.

Nous sommes regardés, dans l’âpre nuit du sort,
Par des yeux qui se sont étoilés dans la mort.
Que n’es-tu là, debout! Comme tu serais maître,
Seigneur, guide, gardien, juge! Oh! je voudrais être
Ton esclave, t’offrir mon cœur, courber mon front,

Et te sentir vivant, fût-ce par un affront!
Les avertissements des pères sont farouches
Mais bons, et, quel que soit l’éclair dont tu me touches,
Tout ce qui vient d’en haut par l’âme est accepté,
Et le coup de tonnerre est un coup de clarté.
Avoir son père, ô joie! Ô géant d’un autre âge,
Gronde, soufflète-moi, frappe-moi, sois l’outrage,
Sois la foudre, mais sois mon père! Sois présent
À ma vie, à l’emploi que je fais de ton sang,
À tous mes pas, à tous mes songes! Que m’importe
De n’être que le chien couché devant ta porte,
Ô mon seigneur, pourvu que je te sente là!
Ah! c’est vrai, soixante ans la montagne trembla
Sous mes pas, et j’ai pris et secoué les princes
Nombreux et noirs, sous qui râlaient trente provinces,
Gil, Vermond, Araül, Barruza, Gaïffer,
J’ai tordu dans mes poings tous ces barreaux de fer;

J’ai fait tomber du mur les toiles d’araignées,
Les prêtres; j’ai mon lot de batailles gagnées
Comme un autre; pourtant frappe-moi si j’ai tort!
Oui, mon épée est fière et mon donjon est fort,
J’ai protégé beaucoup de villes orphelines,
J’ai dans mon ombre un tas de tyrans en ruines,
Je semble presque un roi tant je suis triomphant;
Et je suis un vieillard, mais je suis ton enfant!

Ainsi parlait don Jayme en ces caveaux funèbres
À son père de bronze assis dans les ténèbres,
Fantôme plein de l’âme immense des aïeux;
Et pendant qu’il parlait Jayme fermait les yeux;
Sa tête était posée, humble, et comme abattue,
Sur les puissants genoux de la haute statue;
Et cet homme, fameux par tant d’altiers défis
Et tant de beaux combats, pleurait; l’amour d’un fils
Est sans fond, la douleur d’un père est insondable;
Il pleurait.

Tout à coup, — rien n’est plus formidable

Que l’immobilité faisant un mouvement,
Le farouche sépulcre est vivant par moment,
Et le profond sanglot de l’homme le secoue, —
Le vieux héros sentit un frisson sur sa joue
Que dans l’ombre, d’un geste auguste et souverain,
Caressait doucement la grande main d’airain.

LA COMÈTE

1759

LA COMÈTE

Il avait dit : — Tel jour cet astre reviendra. —

Quelle huée! Ayez pour Vishnou, pour Indra,
Pour Brahma, pour Odin ou pour Baal un culte;
Affirmez par le fer, par le feu, par l'insulte,
L'idole informe et vague au fond des bleus éthers,
Et tous les Jéhovahs et tous les Jupiters
Échoués dans notre âme obscure sur la grève
De Dieu, gouffre où le vrai flotte et devient le rêve;
Sur les Saint-Baboleyns et sur les Saint-Andrés

Soyez absurde et sombre autant que vous voudrez;
Dites que vous avez vu, parmi les mouettes
Et les aigles, passer dans l'air des silhouettes
De maisons qu'en leurs bras tenaient des chérubins;
Dites que pour avoir aperçu dans leurs bains
Des déesses, rondeurs célestes, gorges blanches,
On est cerf à jamais errant parmi les branches;
Croyez à tout, aux djinns, aux faunes, aux démons
Apportant Dieu tremblant et pâle sur les monts;
Soyez bonze au Tonquin, mage dans les Chaldées;
Croyez que les Lédas sont d'en haut fécondées
Et que les cygnes font aux vierges des enfants;
Donnez l'Égypte aux bœufs et l'Inde aux éléphants;
Affirmez l'oignon dieu, Vénus, Ève, et leur pomme;
Et le soleil cloué sur place par un homme

Pour offrir un plus long carnage à des soldats;

Inventez des Korans, des Talmuds, des Védas,
Soyez un imposteur, un charlatan, un fourbe,
C’est bien. Mais n’allez pas calculer une courbe,
Compléter le savoir par l’intuition,
Et, quand on ne sait quel flamboyant alcyon
Passe, astre formidable, à travers les étoiles,
N’allez pas mesurer le trou qu’il fait aux toiles
Du grand plafond céleste, et rechercher l’emploi
Qu’il a dans ce chaos d’où sort la vaste loi;
Laissez errer là-haut la torche funéraire;
Ne questionnez point sur son itinéraire
Ce fantôme, de nuit et de clarté vêtu;
Ne lui demandez pas : Où vas-tu? D’où viens-tu?

Ne faites pas, ainsi que l’essaim sur l’Hymète,
Rôder le chiffre en foule autour de la comète;
Ne soyez pas penseur, ne soyez pas savant,
Car vous seriez un fou. Docte, obstiné, rêvant,
Ne faites pas lutter l’espace avec le nombre;
Laissez ses yeux de flamme à ce masque de l’ombre;
Ne fixez pas sur eux vos yeux; et ce manteau
De lueur où s’abrite un sombre incognito,
Ne le soulevez pas, car votre main savante
Y trouverait la vie et non pas l’épouvante,
Et l’homme ne veut point qu’on touche à sa terreur;
Il y tient; le calcul l’irrite; sa fureur
Contre quiconque chercher à l’éclairer, commence
Au point où la raison ressemble à la démence;
Alors il a beau jeu. Car imagine-t-on
Rien qui semble ici-bas mieux fait pour Charenton
Qu’un ascète perdu dans des recherches sombres
Après le chiffre, après le rêve, après des ombres,
Guetteur pâle, appliquant des verres grossissants

Aux faits connus, aux faits possibles, au bon sens,
Regardant le ciel spectre au fond du télescope,
Chez les astres voyant, chez les hommes myope!

Quoi de plus ressemblant aux insensés que ceux
Qui, voyant les secrets d’en haut venir vers eux,
Marchent à leur rencontre et donnent aux algèbres
L’ordre de prendre un peu de lumière aux ténèbres,
Et, sondant l’infini, mer qui veut se voiler,
Disent à la science impassible d’aller
Voir de près telle ou telle étoile voyageuse,
Et de ne revenir, ruisselante plongeuse,

De l’abîme qu’avec cette perle, le vrai!
D’ailleurs ce diamant, cet or, ce minerai,
Le réel, quel mineur le trouve? Qui donc creuse
Et fouille assez avant dans la nature affreuse
Pour pouvoir affirmer quoi que que ce soit? Hormis
L’autel connu, les jougs sacrés, les dieux permis,
Et le temple doré que la foule contemple,
Et l’espèce de ciel qui s’adapte à ce temple,
Rien n’est certain. Est-il rien de plus surprenant
Qu’un rêveur qui demande au mystère tonnant,
À ces bleus firmaments où se croisent les sphères,
De lui conter à lui curieux leurs affaires,
Et qui veut avec l’ombre et le gouffre profond
Entrer en pourparlers pour savoir ce qu’ils font,
Quel jour un astre sort, quel jour un soleil rentre,
Et qui, pour éclairer l’immensité de l’antre

Où la Pléïade avec Sirius se confond,
Allume sa chandelle et dit : J’ai vu le fond!
Un pygmée à ce point peut-il être imbécile?
Oui, Cardan de Pavie, Hicétas de Sicile
Furent extravagants, mais parmi les songeurs
Qui veillent, épiant les nocturnes rougeurs,
En est-il un, parmi les pires, qui promette
Le retour de ce monstre éperdu, la comète?
La comète est un monde incendié qui court,
Furieux, au delà du firmament trop court;
Elle a la ressemblance affreuse de l’épée;

Est-ce qu’on ne voit pas que c’est une échappée?
Peut-être est-ce un enfer dans le ciel envolé.
Ah! vous ouvrez sa porte! Ah! vous avez sa clé!
Comme du haut d’un pont on voit l’eau fuir sous l’arche,
Vous voyez son voyage et vous suivez sa marche;
Vous distinguez de loin sa sinistre maison;
Ah! vous savez au juste et de quelle façon
Elle s’évade et prend la fuite dans l’abîme!
Ce qu’ignorait Jésus, ce que le Kéroubime
Ne sait pas, ce que Dieu connaît, vous le voyez!
Les yeux d’une lumière invisible noyés,
Pensif, vous souhaitez déjà la bienvenue
Dans notre gouffre d’ombre à l’immense inconnue!
Vous savez le total quand Dieu jette les dés!
Quoi! cet astre est votre astre, et vous lui défendez
De s’attarder, d’errer dans quelque route ancienne,
Et de perdre son temps, et votre heure est la sienne!
Ah! vous savez le rhythme énorme de la nuit!
Il faut que ce volcan échevelé qui fuit,
Que cette hydre, terreur du Cancer et de l’Ourse,
Se souvienne de vous au milieu de sa course
Et tel jour soit exacte à votre rendez-vous!
Quoi! pour avoir, ainsi qu’à l’épouse l’époux,

Donné vos nuits à l’âpre algèbre, quoi! pour être
Attentif au zénith comme au dogme le prêtre,
Quoi! pour avoir pâli sur les nombres hagards
Qui d’Hermès et d’Euclide ont troublé les regards,
Vous voilà le seigneur des profondes contrées!
Vous avez dans la cage horrible vos entrées!
Vous pouvez, grâce au chiffre escorté de zéros,
Prendre aux cheveux l’étoile à travers les barreaux!
Vous connaissez les mœurs des fauves météores,
Vous datez les déclins, vous réglez les aurores,
Vous montez l’escalier des firmaments vermeils,
Vous allez et venez dans la fosse aux soleils!

Quoi! vous tenez le ciel comme Orphée une lyre!
En vertu des bouquins qu'on peut sur les quais lire

Qui sur les parapets s'étalent tout l'été
Feuilletés par le vent sans curiosité,
Vous atome, âme aveugle à tâtons élargie,
De par Bezout, de par l'X et l'Y grec, magie
Dont l'informe grimoire emplit votre grenier,
Vous nain, vous avez fait l'Infini prisonnier!
Votre altière hypothèse à vos calculs l'attelle!
Vous savez tout! Le temps que met l'aube immortelle
À traverser l'azur d'un bout à l'autre bout,
Ce qui, dans les chaos, couve, fermente et bout,
Le bouvier, le lion, le chien, les dioscures,
La possibilité des rencontres obscures,
L'empyrée en tous sens par mille feux rayé,
Les cercles que peut faire un satan ennuyé
En crachant dans le puits de l'abîme, les ondes

Du divin tourbillon qui tourmente les mondes
Et les secoue ainsi que le vent le sapin,
Vous avez tout noté sur votre calepin!
Vous êtes le devin d'en haut, le cicerone

Du pâle Aldebaran inquiet sur son trône!
Vous êtes le montreur d'Allioth, d'Arcturus,
D'Orion, des lointains univers apparus,
Et de tous les passants de la forêt des astres!
Vous en savez plus long que les grands Zoroastres
Et qu'Esdras qui hantait les chênes de Membré;
Vous êtes le cornac du prodige effaré;
La comète est à vous; vous êtes son pontife;
Et vous avez lié votre fil à la griffe
De cet épouvantable oiseau mystérieux,
Et vous l'allez tirer à vous du fond des cieux!
Londre, offre ton Bedlam! Paris, ouvre Bicêtre!

Tout cela s’écroula sur Halley.
Votre ancêtre,
Ô rêveurs! c’est le noir Prométhée, et vos cœurs,

Mordus comme le sien par les vautours moqueurs,
Saignent, et vous avez au pied la même chaîne;
L’homme a pour les chercheurs un Caucase de haine;
Empédocle est toujours brûlé par son volcan;
Tous les songeurs, marqués au front, mis au carcan,
Râlent sur l’éternel pilori des génies
Et des fous. Ce Halley, certes, qu’aux gémonies
Rome eût traîné, qu’Athène au cloaque eût poussé,
Était impie, à moins qu’il ne fût insensé!
Jamais homme ici-bas ne s’était vu proscrire
Par un si formidable et sombre éclat de rire;
Tout l’accabla, les gens légers, les sérieux,
Et les grands gestes noirs des prêtres furieux.
Quoi! cet homme saurait ce que la Bible ignore!
La vaste raillerie est un dôme sonore
Au-dessus d’une tête, et ce sinistre mur
Parle et de mille échos emplit un crâne obscur.
C’est ainsi que le rire, infâme et froid visage,
Parvient à faire un fou de ce qui fut un sage.

Halley morne s’alla cacher on ne sait où.
Avait-il été sage et fut-il vraiment fou?
On ne sait. Le certain c’est qu’il courba la tête
Sous le sarcasme, atroce et joyeuse tempête,
Et qu’il baissa les yeux qu’il avait trop levés.
Les petits enfants nus courant sur les pavés
Le suivaient, et la foule en tumulte accourue
Riait, quand il passait le soir dans quelque rue,
Et l’on disait : C’est lui! chacun voulant punir
L’homme qui voit de loin une étoile venir.
C’est lui! le fou! Les cris allaient jusqu’aux nuées;
Et le pauvre homme errait triste sous les huées.
Il mourut.

L’ombre est vaste et l’on n’en parla plus.
L’homme que tout le monde insulte est un reclus,
On l’évite vivant et mort on le rature.
Ce noir vaincu rentra dans la sombre nature;
Il fut ce qui s’en va le soir sous l’horizon;

On le mit dans un coin quelconque d’un gazon
À côté d’une église obscure, vraie ou fausse;
Et la blême ironie autour de cette fosse
Voleta quelque temps, étant chauve-souris;
Un mort donne fort peu de joie aux beaux esprits;
Un cercueil bafoué ne vaut pas qu’on s’en vante;
Ce qui plaît, c’est de voir saigner la chair vivante;
Contre ce qui n’est plus pourquoi s’évertuer,
Et, quand un homme est mort, à quoi bon le tuer?
Que sert d’assassiner de l’ombre et de la cendre?
Donc chez les vers de terre on le laissa descendre;
La haine s’éteignit comme toute rumeur;
On finit par laisser tranquille ce dormeur,
Et tu t’en emparas, profonde pourriture;
Ce jouet des vivants tomba dans l’ouverture
De l’inconnu, silence, ombre où s’épanouit
La grande paix sinistre éparse dans la nuit;
Et l’herbe, ce linceul, l’oubli, ce crépuscule,
Eurent vite effacé ce tombeau ridicule.
L’oubli, c’est la fin morne; on oublia le nom,
L’homme, tout; ce rêveur digne du cabanon,
Ces calculs poursuivant dans leur vagabondage
Des astres qui n’ont point d’orbite et n’ont point d’âge,

Ces soleils à travers les chiffres aperçus;
Et la ronce se mit à pousser là-dessus.

Un nom, c’est un haillon que les hommes lacèrent,
Et cela se disperse au vent.
Trente ans passèrent.
On vivait. Que faisait la foule? Est-ce qu’on sait?

Et depuis bien longtemps personne ne pensait
Au pauvre vieux rêveur enseveli sous l’herbe.
Soudain, un soir, on vit la nuit noire et superbe,
À l’heure où sous le grand suaire tout se tait,
Blêmir confusément, puis blanchir, et c’était

Dans l’année annoncée et prédite, et la cime
Des monts eut un reflet étrange de l’abîme
Comme lorsqu’un flambeau rôde derrière un mur,
Et la blancheur devint lumière, et dans l’azur
La clarté devint poupre, et l’on vit poindre, éclore,
Et croître on ne sait quelle inexprimable aurore
Qui se mit à monter dans le haut firmament
Par degrés et sans hâte et formidablement;
Les herbes des lieux noirs que les vivants vénèrent
Et sous lesquelles sont les tombeaux, frissonnèrent;
Et soudain, comme un spectre entre en une maison,
Apparut, par-dessus le farouche horizon,
Une flamme emplissant des millions de lieues,
Monstrueuse lueur des immensités bleues,
Splendide au fond du ciel brusquement éclairci;
Et l’astre effrayant dit aux hommes : « Me voici! »

CHANGEMENT D’HORIZON

CHANGEMENT D’HORIZON

Homère était jadis le poëte; la guerre
Était la loi; vieillir était d’un cœur vulgaire;
La hâte des vivants et leur unique effort
Était l’embrassement tragique de la mort.
Ce que les dieux pouvaient donner de mieux à l’homme,
C’était un grand linceul libérateur de Rome,
Ou quelque saint tombeau pour Sparte et pour ses lois;
L’adolescent hagard se ruait aux exploits;
C’était à qui ferait plus vite l’ouverture
Du sépulcre, et courrait cette altière aventure.
La mort avec la gloire, ô sublime présent!
Ulysse devinait Achille frémissant;
Une fille fendait du haut en bas sa robe,
Et tous criaient : Voilà le chef qu’on nous dérobe!

Et la virginité sauvage de Scyros
Était le masque auguste et fatal des héros;
L’homme était pour l’épée un fiancé fidèle;
La muse avait toujours un vautour auprès d’elle;
Féroce, elle menait aux champs ce déterreur.
Elle était la chanteuse énorme de l’horreur,
La géante du mal, la déesse tigresse,
Le grand nuage noir de l’azur de la Grèce.
Elle poussait aux cieux des cris désespérés.
Elle disait : Tuez! tuez! tuez! mourez!
Des chevaux monstrueux elle mordait les croupes,
Et, les cheveux au vent, s’effarait sur les groupes
Des hommes dieux étreints par les héros titans;
Elle mettait l’enfer dans l’œil des combattants,
L’éclair dans le fourreau d’Ajax, et des courroies

Dans les pieds des Hectors traînés autour des Troies;
Pendant que les soldats touchés du dard sifflant,
Pâles, tombaient, avec un ruisseau rouge au flanc,

Que les crânes s’ouvraient comme de sombres urnes,
Que les lances trouaient son voile aux plis nocturnes,
Que les serpents montaient le long de son bras blanc,
Que la mêlée entrait dans l’Olympe en hurlant,
Elle chantait, terrible et tranquille, et sa bouche
Fauve, bavait du sang dans le clairon farouche!
Et les casques, les tours, les tentes, les blessés,
Les noirs fourmillements de morts dans les fossés,
Les tourbillons de chars et de drapeaux, les piques
Et les glaives, volaient dans ses souffles épiques!
La muse est aujourd’hui la Paix, ayant les reins
Sans cuirasse et le front sous les épis sereins;
Le poëte à la mort dit : Meurs, guerre, ombre, envie! —
Et chasse doucement les hommes vers la vie;
Et l’on voit de ses vers, goutte à goutte, des pleurs
Tomber sur les enfants, les femmes et les fleurs,
Et des astres jaillir de ses strophes volantes;
Et son chant fait pousser des bourgeons verts aux plantes;
Et ses rêves sont faits d’aurore, et, dans l’amour,
Sa bouche chante et rit, toute pleine de jour.
*

En vain, montrant le poing dans tes mornes bravades,
Tu menaces encor, noir passé; tu t’évades!
C’est fini. Les vivants savent que désormais,
S’ils le veulent, les plans hideux que tu formais

Crouleront, qu’il fait jour, que la guerre est impie,
Et qu’il faut s’entr’aider, car toujours l’homme expie
Ses propres lâchetés, ses propres trahisons;
Ce que nous serons sort de ce que nous faisons.
Moi, proscrit, je travaille à l’éclosion sainte
Des temps où l’homme aura plus d’espoir que de crainte

Et contemplera l’aube, afin de s’ôter mieux
L’enfer du cœur, ayant le ciel devant les yeux.

LE GROUPE DES IDYLLES

LE GROUPE DES IDYLLES

I

ORPHÉE

J’atteste Tanaïs, le noir fleuve aux six urnes,
Et Zeus qui fait traîner sur les grands chars nocturnes
Rhéa par des taureaux et Nyx par des chevaux,
Et les anciens géants et les hommes nouveaux,
Pluton qui nous dévore, Uranus qui nous crée,
Que j’adore une femme et qu’elle m’est sacrée.
Le monstre aux cheveux bleus, Poséidon, m’entend;

Qu’il m’exauce. Je suis l’âme humaine chantant,
Et j’aime. L’ombre immense est pleine de nuées,
La large pluie abonde aux feuilles remuées,
Borée émeut les bois, Zéphyr émeut les blés,
Ainsi nos cœurs profonds sont par l’amour troublés.
J’aimerai cette femme appelée Eurydice,
Toujours, partout! Sinon que le ciel me maudisse,
Et maudisse la fleur naissante et l’épi mur!
Ne tracez pas de mots magiques sur le mur.

SALOMON

Je suis le roi qu’emplit la puissance sinistre;
Je fais bâtir le temple et raser les cités;
Hiram mon architecte et Charos mon ministre
Rêvent à mes côtés;

L’un étant ma truelle et l’autre étant mon glaive,
Je les laisse songer et ce qu’ils font est bien;
Mon souffle monte au ciel plus haut que ne s’élève

L’ouragan libyen;

Dieu même en est parfois remué. Fils d’un crime,

J’ai la sagesse énorme et sombre; et le démon
Prendrait, entre le ciel suprême et son abîme,
Pour juge Salomon.

C’est moi qui fais trembler et c’est moi qui fais croire;
Conquérant on m’admire, et, pontife, on me suit;
Roi, j’accable ici-bas les hommes par la gloire,
Et, prêtre, par la nuit;

J’ai vu la vision des festins et des coupes
Et le doigt écrivant Mané Thécel Pharès,
Et la guerre, les chars, les clairons, et les croupes
Des chevaux effarés;

Je suis grand; je ressemble à l’idole morose;
Je suis mystérieux comme un jardin fermé;
Pourtant, quoique je sois plus puissant que la rose
N’est belle au mois de mai,

On peut me retirer mon sceptre d’or qui brille,

Et mon trône, et l’archer qui veille sur ma tour,
Mais on n’ôtera pas, ô douce jeune fille,
De mon âme l’amour;

On n’en ôtera pas l’amour, ô vierge blonde
Qui comme une lueur te mires dans les eaux,
Pas plus qu’on n’ôtera de la forêt profonde
La chanson des oiseaux.

III

ARCHILOQUE

Le pilote connaît la figure secrète
Du fond de la mer sombre entre Zante et la Crète,
Le sage médecin connaît le mal qu’on a,
Le luthier, par la muse instruit, sait qu’Athana
A fait la flûte droite et Pan la flûte oblique;
Moi, je ne sais qu’aimer. Tout ce qu’un mage explique
En regardant un astre à travers des cyprès,
Dans les bois d’Éleusis la nuit, n’est rien auprès
De ce que je devine en regardant Stellyre.
Stellyre est belle. Ayez pitié de mon délire,
Dieux immortels! je suis en proie à sa beauté.
Sans elle je serais l’Archiloque irrité,

Mais elle m’attendrit. Muses, Stellyre est douce.
Pour que l’agneau la broute il faut que l’herbe pousse
Et que l’adolescent croisse pour être aimé.
Par l’immense Vénus le monde est parfumé;
L’amour fait pardonner à l’Olympe la foudre;
L’océan en créant Cypris voulut s’absoudre,
Et l’homme adore, au bord du gouffre horrible et vain,
La tempête achevée en sourire divin.
Stellyre a la gaîté du nid chantant dans l’arbre.
Moi qui suis de Paros, je me connais en marbre,
Elle est blanche; et pourtant femme comme Aglaura
Et Glycère; et, rêveur, je sais qu’elle mourra.
Tout finit par finir, hélas, même les roses!
Quoique Stellyre, ô dieux, ressemble aux fleurs écloses
À l’aurore, en avril, dans les joncs des étangs,
Faites, dieux immortels, qu’elle vive longtemps,
Car il sort de cette âme une clarté sereine;
Je la veux pour esclave, et je la veux pour reine;
Je suis un cœur dompté par elle, et qui consent;
Et ma haine est changée en amour. Ô passant,

Sache que la chanson que voici fut écrite
Quand Hipparque chassa d’Athène Onomacrite
Parce qu’il parlait bas à des dieux infernaux

Pour faire submerger l’archipel de Lemnos.

IV

ARISTOPHANE

Les jeunes filles vont et viennent sous les saules;
Leur chevelure cache et montre leurs épaules;
L’amphore sur leur front ne les empêche pas,
Quand Ménalque apparaît, de ralentir leur pas,
Et de dire : Salut, Ménalque! et la feuillée,
Par le rire moqueur des oiseaux réveillée,
Assiste à la rencontre ardente des amants;
Tant de baisers sont pris sous les rameaux charmants

Que l’amphore au logis arrive à moitié vide.
L’aïeule, inattentive au fil qu’elle dévide,
Gronde : Qu’as-tu donc fait, qui donc t’a pris la main,
Que l’eau s’est répandue ainsi sur le chemin?
La jeune fille dit : Je ne sais pas; et songe.
À l’heure où dans les champs l’ombre des monts s’allonge,
Le soir, quand on entend des bruits de chars lointains,
Il est bon de songer aux orageux destins
Et de se préparer aux choses de la vie;
C’est par le peu qu’il sait, par le peu qu’il envie,
Que l’homme est sage. Aimons. Le printemps est divin;
Nous nous sentons troublés par les fleurs du ravin,
Par l’indulgent avril, par les nids peu moroses,
Par l’offre de la mousse et le parfum des roses,
Et par l’obscurité des sentiers dans les bois.
Les femmes au logis rentrent, mêlant leurs voix,
Et plus d’une à causer sous les portes s’attarde.

Femme, qui parles mal de ton mari, prends garde,
Car ton petit enfant te regarde étonné.
Muses, vénérons Pan, de lierre couronné.

V

ASCLÉPIADE

Vous qui marchez, tournant vos têtes inquiètes,
Songez-y, le dieu Pan sait toujours où vous êtes.
Amants, si vous avez des raisons pour ne pas
Laisser voir quelle est l’ombre où se perdent vos pas,
Vous êtes mal cachés dans ce bois, prenez garde;
La tremblante forêt songe, écoute et regarde;

À tout ce hallier noir vous donnez le frisson;
Craignez que vos baisers ne troublent le buisson,
Craignez le tremblement confus des branches d’arbre;
La nature est une âme, elle n’est pas de marbre;
L’obscur souffle inconnu qui dans ce demi-jour
Passe et que vous prenez pour le vent, c’est l’amour;
Et vous êtes la goutte et le monde est le vase.
Amants, votre soupir fait déborder l’extase;
Au-dessus de vos fronts les rameaux frémissants
Mêlent leurs bruits, leurs voix, leurs parfums, leur encens;
L’émotion au bois profond se communique,
Et la fauve dryade agite sa tunique.

VI

THÉOCRITE

Ô belle, crains l’Amour, le plus petit des dieux,
Et le plus grand; il est fatal et radieux;
Sa pensée est farouche et sa parole est douce;
On le trouve parfois accroupi dans la mousse,
Terrible et souriant, jouant avec les fleurs;
Il ne croit pas un mot de ce qu’il dit; les pleurs
Et les cris sont mêlés à son bonheur tragique;
Maïa fit la prairie, il fait la géorgique;
L’Amour en tout temps pleure, et triomphe en tout lieu;

La femme est confiante aux baisers de ce dieu,
Car ils ne piquent pas, sa lèvre étant imberbe,

— Tu vas mouiller ta robe à cette heure dans l’herbe,
Lyda, pourquoi vas-tu dans les champs si matin?
Lyda répond : — Je cède au ténébreux destin,
J’aime, et je vais guetter Damœtas au passage,
Et je l’attends encor le soir, étant peu sage,
Quand il fait presque nuit dans l’orme et le bouleau,
Quand la nymphe aux yeux verts danse au milieu de l’eau.
— Lyda, fuis Damœtas! — Je l’adore et je tremble.
Je ne puis lui donner toutes les fleurs ensemble,
Car l’une vient l’automne et l’autre vient l’été;
Mais je l’aime. — Lyda, Lyda, crains Astarté.
Cache ton cœur en proie à la sombre chimère.
Il ne faut raconter ses amours qu’à sa mère
À l’heure matinale où le croissant pâlit,
Quand elle se réveille en riant dans son lit.

VII

BION

Allons-nous-en rêveurs dans la forêt lascive.
L’amour est une mer dont la femme est la rive,
Les saintes lois d’en haut font à ses pieds vainqueurs
Mourir le grand baiser des gouffres et des cœurs.
Viens, la forêt s’ajoute à l’âme, et Cythérée
Devient fauve et terrible en cette horreur sacrée;
Viens, nous nous confierons aux bois insidieux,
Et nous nous aimerons à la façon des dieux;
Il faut que l’empyrée aux voluptés se mêle,
Et l’aigle, la colombe étant sa sœur jumelle,
S’envole volontiers du côté des amants.
Les cœurs sont le miroir obscur des firmaments;

Toutes nos passions reflètent les étoiles.

Par le déchirement magnifique des voiles
La nature constate et prouve l’unité;
Le rayon c’est l’amour, l’astre c’est la beauté.
Hyménée! Hyménée! allons sous les grands chênes.
Ô belle, je te tiens, parce que tu m’enchaînes,
Et tu m’as tellement dans tes nœuds enchantés
Lié, saisi, que j’ai toutes les libertés;
Je les prends; tu ne peux t’en plaindre, en étant cause.
Si le zéphyr te fâche, alors ne sois plus rose.

VIII

MOSCHUS

Ô nymphes, baignez-vous à la source des bois.
Le hallier, bien qu’il soit rempli de sombres voix,
Quoiqu’il ait des rochers où l’aigle fait son aire,
N’est jamais envahi par l’ombre qui s’accroît
Au point d’être sinistre et de n’avoir plus droit
À la nudité de Néère.

Néère est belle, douce et pure, et transparaît
Blanche, à travers l’horreur de la noire forêt;
Un essaim rôde et parle aux fleurs de la vallée,
Un écho dialogue avec l’écho voisin,
Qu’est-ce que dit l’écho? qu’est-ce que dit l’essaim?
Qu’étant nue, elle est étoilée!

Car l’éblouissement des astres est sur toi
Quand tu te baignes, chaste, avec ce vague effroi

Que toujours la beauté mêle à sa hardiesse,
Sous l’arbre où l’œil du faune ardent te cherchera.
Tu sais bien que montrer la femme, ô Néèra,
C’est aussi montrer la déesse.

Moi, quoique par les rois l’homme soit assombri,

Je construis au-dessus de ma tête un abri
Avec des branches d’orme et des branches d’yeuse;
J’aime les prés, les bois, le vent jamais captif,
Néère et Phyllodoce, et je suis attentif
À l’idylle mélodieuse.

Parce que, dans cette ombre où parfois nous dormons,
De lointains coups de foudre errent de monts en monts,
Parce que tout est plein d’éclairs visionnaires,
Parce que le ciel gronde, est-il donc en marchant
Défendu de rêver, et d’écouter le chant
D’une flûte entre deux tonnerres?

IX

VIRGILE

Déesses, ouvrez-moi l’Hélicon maintenant.
Ô bergers, le hallier sauvage est surprenant;
On y distingue au loin de confuses descentes
D’hommes ailés, mêlés à des nymphes dansantes;

Des clartés en chantant passent, et je les suis.
Les bois me laissent faire et savent qui je suis.
Ô pasteurs, j’ai Mantoue et j’aurai Parthénope;
Comme le taureau-dieu pressé du pied d’Europe,
Mon vers, tout parfumé de roses et de lys,
A l’empreinte du frais talon d’Amaryllis;
Les filles aux yeux bleus courent dans mes églogues;
Bacchus avec ses lynx, Diane avec ses dogues,
Errent, sans déranger une branche, à travers
Mes poëmes, et Faune est dans mes antres verts.

Quel qu’il soit, et fût-il consul, fût-il édile,
Le passant ne pourra rencontrer mon idylle
Sans trouble, et, tout à coup, voyant devant ses pas
Une pomme rouler et fuir, ne saura pas

Si dans votre épaisseur sacrée elle est jetée,
Forêts, pour Atalante, ou bien par Galatée.
Mes vers seront si purs qu'après les avoir lus
Lycoris ne pourra que sourire à Gallus.
La forêt où je chante est charmante et superbe;

Je veux qu'un divin songe y soit couché dans l'herbe,
Et que l'homme et la femme, ayant mon âme entre eux,
S'ils entrent dans l'églogue en sortent amoureux.

X

CATULLE

Que faire au mois d'avril à moins de s'adorer?
Viens, nous allons songer, viens, nous allons errer.
Laissons Plaute à Chloé prouver qu'il la désire
Par un triple collier de corail de Corcyre;
Laissons Psellas charmer Fuscus par ses grands yeux,
Et par l'âpre douceur d'un chant mystérieux;
Laissons César dompter la fortune changeante,
Mettre un mors à l'équestre et sauvage Agrigente,
Au Numide, à l'Ibère, au Scythe hasardeux;
Ayons le doux souci d'être seuls tous les deux.

Nous avons à nous l'air, le ciel, l'ombre, l'espace.
Nous ferons arrêter le muletier qui passe,
Nous boirons dans son outre un peu de vin sabin;
Et le soir, quand la lune, éclairant dans leur bain
La faune et la naïade indistincte, se lève,
Nous chercherons un lit pour finir notre rêve,
Une mousse cachée au fond du hallier noir.
Ô belle, rien n'existe ici-bas que l'espoir,
Rien n'est sûr que l'hymen, rien n'est vrai que la joie;
L'amour est le vautour et nos cœurs sont la proie.
Quand, ainsi qu'y monta jadis la nymphe Hellé,
Une femme apparaît sur l'Olympe étoilé,

Les dieux donnent de tels baisers à ses épaules,
Qu'une lueur subite éclaire les deux pôles,
Et la terre comprend qu'en ce ciel redouté
L'humanité s'accouple à la divinité.
Aimons. Allons aux bois où chantent les fauvettes.

Il faut vivre et sourire, il faut que tu revêtes
Cette robe d'azur qu'on nomme le bonheur.
L'Amour est un divin et tendre empoisonneur.
Laissons ce charmant traître approcher de nos bouches
Sa coupe où nous boirons les extases farouches
Et le sombre nectar des baisers éperdus.
Les cœurs sont insensés et les cieux leur sont dus;
Car la démence auguste et profonde des âmes
Met dans l'homme une étoile, et quand nous nous aimâmes
Nous nous sentîmes pleins de rayons infinis,
Et tu devins Vénus et je fus Adonis.
Le tremblement sacré des branches dans l'aurore
Conseille aux cœurs d'aimer, conseille aux nids d'éclore.
Il faut craindre et vouloir, chercher les prés fleuris
Et rêver, et s'enfuir, mais afin d'être pris.
Adorons-nous. Ainsi je médite et je chante.
Je songe à ta pudeur souveraine et touchante,
Je regarde attendri l'antre où tu me cédas;
Pendant que, fatiguée à suivre nos soldats,
La Victoire, au-dessus de nous, dans la nuée,
Rattache sa sandale, un instant dénouée.

XI

LONGUS

Chloé nue éblouit la forêt doucement;
Elle rit, l'innocence étant un vêtement;
Elle est nue, et s'y plaît; elle est belle, et l'ignore.
Elle ressemble à tous les songes qu'on adore;
Le lys blanc la regarde et n'a point l'air fâché;

La nuit croit voir Vénus, l’aube croit voir Psyché.
Le printemps est un tendre et farouche mystère;
On sent flotter dans l’air la faute involontaire
Qui se pose, au doux bruit du vent et du ruisseau,
Dans les âmes ainsi que dans les bois l’oiseau.
Sève! hymen! le printemps vient, et prend la nature
Par surprise, et, divin, apporte l’aventure
De l’amour aux forêts, aux fleurs, aux cœurs. Aimez.

Dans la source apparaît la nymphe aux doigts palmés,
Dans l’arbre la dryade et dans l’homme le faune;
Le baiser envolé fait aux bouches l’aumône.

XII

DANTE

Thalès n’était pas loin de croire que le vent
Et l’onde avaient créé les femmes; et, devant
Phellas, fille des champs, bien qu’il fût de la ville,
Ménandre n’était point parfaitement tranquille;
Moschus ne savait pas au juste ce que c’est
Que la femme, et tremblait quand Glycère passait;
Anaxagore, ayant l’inconnu pour étude,
Regardait une vierge avec inquiétude;
Virgile méditait sur Lycoris; Platon

Dénonçait à Paphos l’odeur du Phlégéton;
Plaute évitait Lydé; c’est que ces anciens hommes
Redoutaient vaguement la planète où nous sommes;
Agd et Tellus étaient des femelles pour eux;
Ils craignaient le travail perfide et ténébreux
Des parfums, des rayons, des souffles et des sèves.
Les femmes après tout sont peut-être des rêves;
Quelle âme ont-elles? Nul ne peut savoir quel dieu
Ou quel démon sourit dans la nuit d’un œil bleu;
Nul ne sait, dans la vie immense enchevêtrée,

Si l’antre où rêve Pan, l’herbe où se couche Astrée,
Si la roche au profil pensif, si le zéphyr,
Si toute une forêt acharnée à trahir,
À force d’horreur, d’ombre, et d’aube, et de jeunesse,
Ne peut transfigurer en femme une faunesse;
Dans tout ils croyaient voir quelque spectre caché
Poindre, et Démogorgon s’ajoutait à Psyché.

Ces sages d’autrefois se tenaient sur leurs gardes.
La possibilité des méduses hagardes
Surgissant tout à coup les rendait attentifs;
De la sombre nature ils se sentaient captifs;
Perse reconnaissait dans Églé, la bouffonne
Qui se barbouille avec des mûres, Tisiphone;
Et plusieurs s’attendaient à voir subitement
Transparaître Erynnis sous le masque charmant
De la naïve Aglaure ou d’Iphis la rieuse;
Tant la terre pour eux était mystérieuse.

XIII

PÉTRARQUE

Elle n’est plus ici; cependant je la vois
La nuit au fond des cieux, le jour au fond des bois!
Qu’est-ce que l’œil de chair auprès de l’œil de l’âme?
On est triste; on n’a pas près de soi cette femme,
On est dans l’ombre; eh bien, cette ombre aide à la voir,
Car l’étoile apparaît surtout dans le ciel noir.
Je vois ma mère morte, et je te vois absente,

Ô Laure! Où donc es-tu? là-bas, éblouissante.
Je t’aime, je te vois. Sois là, ne sois pas là,
Je te vois. Tout n’est rien, si tout n’est pas cela,
Aimer. Aimer suffit; pas d’autre stratagème
Pour être égal aux dieux que ce mot charmant : J’aime.
L’amour nous fait des dons au-dessus de nos sens,

Laure, et le plus divin, c’est de nous voir absents;
C’est de t’avoir, après que tu t’es exilée;
C’est de revoir partout ta lumière envolée!
Je demande : Es-tu là, doux être évanoui?
La prunelle dit : Non, mais l’âme répond : Oui.

XIV

RONSARD

C’est fort juste, tu veux commander en cédant;
Viens, ne crains rien; je suis éperdu, mais prudent;
Suis-moi; c’est le talent d’un amant point rebelle
De conduire au milieu des forêts une belle,
D’être ardent et discret, et d’étouffer sa voix
Dans le chuchotement mystérieux des bois.
Aimons-nous au-dessous du murmure des feuilles;
Viens, je veux qu’en ce lieu voilé tu te recueilles,
Et qu’il reste au gazon par ta langueur choisi
Je ne sais quel parfum de ton passage ici;
Laissons des souvenirs à cette solitude.
Si tu prends quelque molle et sereine attitude,
Si nous nous querellons, si nous faisons la paix,
Et si tu me souris sous les arbres épais,

Ce lieu sera sacré pour les nymphes obscures;
Et le soir, quand luiront les divins Dioscures,
Ces sauvages halliers sentiront ton baiser
Flotter sur eux dans l’ombre et les apprivoiser;
Les arbres entendront des appels plus fidèles,
De petits cœurs battront sous de petites ailes,
Et les oiseaux croiront que c’est toi qui bénis
Leurs amours, et la fête adorable des nids.
C’est pourquoi, belle, il faut qu’en ce vallon tu rêves.
Et je rends grâce à Dieu, car il fit plusieurs Èves,
Une aux longs cheveux d’or, une autre au sein bruni,
Une gaie, une tendre, et quand il eut fini

Ce Dieu, qui crée au fond toujours les mêmes choses,

Avec ce qui restait des femmes, fit les roses.

SHAKESPEARE

Ô doux être, fidèle et cependant ailé,
Ange et femme, est-il vrai que tu t’en sois allé?
Pour l’âme, la lueur inexprimable reste;
L’âme ne perd jamais de vue un front céleste;
Et quiconque est aimé devient céleste. Hélas,
L’absence est dure, mais le cœur noir, l’esprit las
Sont consolés par l’âme, invincible voyante.
L’éclair est passager, la nuée est fuyante,
Mais l’être aimé ne peut s’éclipser. Je te vois,
Je sens presque ta main, j’entends presque ta voix.
Oui, loin de toi je vis comme on vit dans un songe;
Ce que je touche est larve, apparence, mensonge;

J’aperçois ton sourire à travers l’infini;
Et, sans savoir pourquoi, disant : Suis-je puni?
Je pleure vaguement si loin de moi tu souffres.
La nature ignorée et sainte a de ces gouffres
Où le visionnaire est voisin du réel;
Ainsi la lune est presque un spectre dans le ciel;
Ainsi tout dans les bois en fantôme s’achève;
Ainsi c’est presque au fond d’un abîme et d’un rêve
Qu’un rossignol est triste et qu’un merle est rieur.

Quel mystère insondé que l’œil intérieur!
Quelle insomnie auguste en nous! Quelle prunelle
Ouverte sur le bien et le mal, éternelle!
À quelle profondeur voit cet œil inconnu!
Comme devant l’esprit toute l’ombre est à nu!
L’œil de chair bien souvent pour l’erreur se décide.

La cécité pensive est quelquefois lucide;
Quoi donc! est-ce qu’on a besoin des yeux pour voir

L’héroïsme, l’honneur, la vertu, le devoir,
La réalité sainte et même la chimère?
Qui donc passe en clarté le grand aveugle Homère?

XVI

RACAN

Si toutes les choses qu’on rêve
Pouvaient se changer en amours,
Ma voix, qui dans l’ombre s’élève,
Osant toujours, tremblant toujours,

Qui, dans l’hymne qu’elle module,
Mêle Astrée, Eros, Gabriel,
Les dieux et les anges, crédule
Aux douces puissances du ciel,

Pareille aux nids qui, sous les voiles
De la nuit et des bois touffus,
Échangent avec les étoiles
Un grand dialogue confus,

Sous la sereine et sombre voûte
Sans murs, sans portes et sans clés,
Mon humble voix prendrait la route
Que prennent les cœurs envolés,

Et vous arriverait, touchante,
À travers les airs et les eaux,
Si toutes les chansons qu’on chante,
Pouvaient se changer en oiseaux.

XVII

SEGRAIS

Ô fraîche vision des jupes de futaine
Qui se troussent gaîment autour de la fontaine!
Ô belles aux bras blancs follement amoureux!
J’ai vu passer Aminthe au fond du chemin creux;
Elle a seize ans, et tant d’aurore sur sa tête
Qu’elle semble marcher au milieu d’une fête;
Elle est dans la prairie, elle est dans les forêts
La plus belle, et n’a pas l’air de le faire exprès;
C’est plus qu’une déesse et c’est plus qu’une fée,
C’est la bergère; c’est une fille coiffée
D’iris et de glaïeuls avec de grands yeux bleus;
Elle court dans les champs comme aux temps fabuleux
Couraient Leontium, Phyllodoce et Glycère;
Elle a la majesté du sourire sincère;
Quand elle parle on croit entendre, ô bois profond,

Un rossignol chanter au-dessus de son front;
Elle est pure, sereine, aimable, épanouie;
Et j’en ai la prunelle à jamais éblouie;
Comme Faune la suit d’un regard enflammé!
Comme on sent que les nids, l’amour, le mois de mai,
Guettent dans le hallier ces douces âmes neuves!
Dans des prés où ne coule aucun des divins fleuves
Qu’on appelle Céphise, Eurotas ou Cydnus,
Elle trouve moyen d’avoir de beaux pieds nus;
Cette fille d’Auteuil semble née à Mégare!
Parfois dans des sentiers pleins d’ombre elle s’égare;
Oh! comme les oiseaux chuchotaient l’autre soir!
Pas plus que le raisin ne résiste au pressoir,
Pas plus que le roseau n’est au zéphyr rebelle,
Nul cœur pouvant aimer n’élude cette belle.
Comme la biche accourt et fuit à notre voix
Elle est apprivoisée et sauvage à la fois;
Elle est toute innocente et n’a pas de contrainte;

Elle donne un baiser confiant et sans crainte
À quiconque est naïf comme un petit enfant;
Contre les beaux parleurs, fière, elle se défend;
Et c’est pourquoi je fais semblant d’être stupide;
Telle est la profondeur des amoureux. Et Gnide,
Amathonte et Paphos ne sont rien à côté
Du vallon où parfois passe cette beauté.
Muses, je chante, et j’ai près de moi Stésichore,
Plaute, Horace et Ronsard, d’autres bergers encore,
J’aime, et je suis Segrais qu’on nomme aussi Tircis;
Nous sommes sous un hêtre avec Virgile assis,
Et cette chanson s’est de ma flûte envolée,
Pendant que mes troupeaux paissent dans la vallée,
Et que du haut des cieux l’astre éclaire et conduit
La descente sacrée et sombre de la nuit.

VOLTAIRE

Dans la religion voir une bucolique;
Être assez huguenot pour être catholique,
Aimer Clorinde assez pour caresser Suzon;
Suivre un peu la sagesse et beaucoup la raison,
Planter là ses amis, mais ne pas les proscrire,
Croire aux dogmes tout juste assez pour en sourire,
Être homme comme un diable, abbé comme Chaulieu,

Ne rien exagérer, pas même le bon Dieu,
Baiser le saint chausson qu’offre à la gent dévote
Le pape, et préférer le pied nu de Javotte,
Tels sont les vrais instincts d’un sage en bon état.
Force tentations, et jamais d’attentat;
Avoir on ne sait quoi d’aimable dans la faute;
Ressembler à ce bon petit chevreau qui saute
Joyeux, libre, et qui broute, et boit aux étangs verts,
Si content qu’il en met l’oreille de travers;

Donner son cœur au ciel si Goton vous le laisse,
Commettre des péchés pour aller à confesse,
Car les péchés sont gais, et font avec douceur
Aux frais du confessé vivre le confesseur;
Pas trop de passion, pas trop d'apostasie,
C'est le bon sens. Suivez cette route choisie
Et sûre. C'est ainsi qu'on vieillit sans effroi;
Et c'est ainsi qu'on a de l'esprit, fût-on roi,
Et qu'on est Henri quatre, et qu'on a ses entrées
À la grand'messe, et chez Gabrielle d'Estrées.

XIX

CHAULIEU

Ayez de la faiblesse, ô femmes; c'est charmant
D'être faibles, et l'ombre est dans le firmament
Pour prouver le besoin que parfois ont de voiles
Même la blanche aurore et même les étoiles.
Les fleurs ne savent pas ce que va faire avril,
Elles ont peur; de quoi? D'un charme, ou d'un péril?
D'un péril et d'un charme. Eh bien, toi qui te mêles
Aux fleurs, et qui les vois trembler, tremble comme elles,
Mais pas plus. Oui, tremblez, belles; mais, croyez-moi,
Sur la frayeur des fleurs copiez votre émoi.
Voyez comme elles sont promptement rassurées.
Les roses sont autant de molles Cythérées,

Point méchantes; l'épine est la sœur du parfum.
Le ciel n'est point pour l'homme un témoin importun.
Aimons. On y consent au fond des empyrées.
Après avoir aimé les âmes sont sacrées.
L'heure où nous brillons touche à l'heure où nous tombons,
Brillez, tombez. Jadis les sages étaient bons;
Ils conseillaient la gloire aux héros, et la chute
Aux belles. L'herbe douce après la douce lutte
Devient un trône; Horace y fait asseoir Chloé.

Ainsi qu’un vieux trumeau dépeint et décloué

L’idylle aujourd’hui pend au grand plafond céleste;
Restaurons-la : suivons Galatée au pied leste;
Et je serai Virgile, et vous serez Églé,
Ô belle au frais fichu vainement épinglé!
Nous sommes des bergers, Gnide est notre village.
Attention! je vais commencer le pillage
Des appas, et l’on va courir dans les sillons;
Et vous ne ferez pas la chasse aux papillons,
Belle, les papillons étant de bon exemple.
Ô cieux profonds, l’amour est dieu, le bois est temple,
Et cette jeune fille à l’œil un peu moqueur
Est ma victorieuse et je suis son vainqueur!

XX

DIDEROT

Les philosophes sont d’avis que la nature
Se passe d’eux, ne tient qu’à sa propre droiture,
Ne consulte que l’ordre auguste, et que les lois
Sont les mêmes au fond des cieux, au fond des bois.
Vivre, aimer, tout est là. Le reste est ignorance;
Et la création est une transparence;
L’univers laisse voir toujours le même sceau,
L’amour, dans le soleil ainsi que dans l’oiseau;
Nos sens sont des conseils; des voix sont dans les choses;
Ces voix disent : Beautés, faites comme les roses;
Faites comme les nids, amants. Avril vainqueur
Sourit, laissez le ciel vous entrer dans le cœur.
Théocrite, ô ma belle, était tendre et facile;
Ces bons ménétriers de Grèce et de Sicile

Chantaient juste, et leur vers reste aimable et charmeur
Même quand la saison est de mauvaise humeur;
Ils étaient un peu fous comme tous les vrais sages;

Ils baisaient les pieds nus, guettaient les purs visages,
N’avaient point de sophas et point de canapés,
Et couchaient sur des lits de pampres frais coupés;
Ils se hâtaient d’aimer, car la vie est rapide;
La dernière heure éclôt dans la première ride;
Hélas, la pâle mort pousse d’un pied égal
Votre beauté, madame, et notre madrigal.
Vivons. Moi, j’ai l’amour pour devoir, et personne
N’a droit de s’informer, belles, si je frissonne
Parce que j’entrevois dans l’ombre un sein charmant;
Je prends ma part du vaste épanouissement;
Le plus sage en ce monde immense est le plus ivre.

Femme, écoute ton cœur, ne lis pas d’autre livre;
Ce qu’ont fait les aïeux les enfants le refont,
Et l’amour est toujours la même idylle au fond;
L’églogue en souriant se copie; elle calque
Margot sur Phyllodoce et Gros-Jean sur Ménalque.
Comme souffle le vent, comme luit le rayon,
Sois belle, aime! La vie est une fonction,
Et cette fonction par tout être est remplie
Sans qu’aucun instinct mente et qu’aucune loi plie;
Les accomplissements sont au-dessus de nous;
Le lys est pur, le ciel est bleu, l’amour est doux
Sans la permission de l’homme; nul système
N’empêche Églé de dire à Tityre : Je t’aime!
La Sorbonne n’a rien à voir dans tout cela;
Madame de Genlis peut faire Paméla

Sans gêner les oiseaux des bois; et les mésanges,
Les pinsons, les moineaux, bêtes qui sont des anges,
Ne s’inquiètent point d’Arnauld ni de Pascal;
Et, quand des profondeurs du ciel zodiacal,
Vers l’aurore, à travers d’invisibles pilastres,
Il redescend, avec son attelage d’astres,
Là-haut, dans l’infini, l’énorme chariot
Sait peu ce que Voltaire écrit à Thiriot.

BEAUMARCHAIS

Allez-vous-en aux bois, les belles paysannes!
Par-dessus les moulins, dont nous sommes les ânes,
Jetez tous vos bonnets, et mêlez à nos cœurs
Vos caprices, joyeux, charmants, tendres, moqueurs;
C’est dimanche. On entend jaser la cornemuse;
Le vent à chiffonner les fougères s’amuse;
Fête aux champs. Il s’agit de ne pas s’ennuyer.
Les oiseaux, qui n’ont point à payer de loyer,
Changent d’alcôve autant de fois que bon leur semble;
Tout frémit; ce n’est pas pour rien que le bois tremble;

Les fourches des rameaux sur les faunes cornus
Tressaillent; copions les oiseaux ingénus;
Ah! les petits pillards et comme ils font leurs orges!
Regardons s’entr’ouvrir les mouchoirs sur les gorges;
Errons, comme Daphnis et Chloé frémissants;
Nous n’aurons pas toujours le temps d’être innocents;
Soyons-le; jouissons du hêtre, du cytise,
Des mousses, du gazon; faisons cette bêtise,
L’amour, et livrons-nous naïvement à Dieu.
Puisque les prés sont verts, puisque le ciel est bleu,
Aimons. Par les grands mots l’idylle est engourdie;
N’ayons pas l’air de gens jouant la tragédie;
Disons tout ce qui peut nous passer par l’esprit;
Allons sous la charmille où l’églantier fleurit,
Dans l’ombre où sont les grands chuchotements des chênes.
Les douces libertés avec les douces chaînes,
Et beaucoup de réel dans un peu d’idéal,
Voilà ce que conseille en riant floréal.

L’enfant amour conduit ce vieux monde aux lisières;
Adorons les rosiers et même les rosières.

Oublions les sermons du pédant inhumain;
Que tout soit gaîté, joie, éclat de rire, hymen;
Et toi, viens avec moi, ma fraîche bien-aimée;
Qu’on entende chanter les nids sous la ramée,
L’alouette dans l’air, les coqs au poulailler,
Et que ton fichu seul ait le droit de bâiller.

ANDRÉ CHÉNIER

Ô belle, le charmant scandale des oiseaux
Dans les arbres, les fleurs, les prés et les roseaux,
Les rayons rencontrant les aigles dans les nues,
L’orageuse gaîté des néréides nues
Se jetant de l’écume et dansant dans les flots,
Blancheurs qui font rêver au loin les matelots,

Ces ébats glorieux des déesses mouillées
Prenant pour lit les mers comme toi les feuillées,
Tout ce qui joue, éclate et luit sur l’horizon
N’a pas plus de splendeur que ta fière chanson.
Ton chant ajouterait de la joie aux dieux mêmes.
Tu te dresses superbe. En même temps tu m’aimes;
Et tu viens te rasseoir sur mes genoux. Psyché
Par moments comme toi prenait un air fâché,
Puis se jetait au cou du jeune dieu, son maître.
Est-ce qu’on peut bouder l’amour? Aimer, c’est naître;
Aimer, c’est savourer, aux bras d’un être cher,

La quantité de ciel que Dieu mit dans la chair;
C’est être un ange avec la gloire d’être un homme.
Oh! ne refuse rien. Ne sois pas économe.
Aimons! Ces instants-là sont les seuls bons et sûrs.
Ô volupté mêlée aux éternels azurs!
Extase! ô volonté de là-haut! Je soupire,
Tu songes. Ton cœur bat près du mien. Laissons dire

Les oiseaux, et laissons les ruisseaux murmurer.
Ce sont des envieux. Belle, il faut s’adorer.
Il faut aller se perdre au fond des bois farouches.
Le ciel étoilé veut la rencontre des bouches;
Une lionne cherche un lion sur les monts.
Chante! il faut chanter. Aime! il faut aimer. Aimons.

Pendant que tu souris, pendant que mon délire
Abuse de ce doux consentement du rire,
Pendant que d’un baiser complice tu m’absous,
La vaste nuit funèbre est au-dessous de nous,
Et les morts, dans l’Hadès plein d’effrayants décombres,
Regardent se lever, sur l’horizon des ombres,
Les astres ténébreux de l’Érèbe qui font
Trembler leurs feux sanglants dans l’eau du Styx profond.

L’IDYLLE DU VIEILLARD

LA VOIX D’UN ENFANT D’UN AN

Que dit-il? Croyez-vous qu’il parle? J’en suis sûr.
Mais à qui parle-t-il? À quelqu’un dans l’azur;
À ce que nous nommons les esprits; à l’espace,
Au doux battement d’aile invisible qui passe,
À l’ombre, au vent, peut-être au petit frère mort.
L’enfant apporte un peu de ce ciel dont il sort;
Il ignore, il arrive; homme, tu le recueilles.
Il a le tremblement des herbes et des feuilles.
La jaserie avant le langage est la fleur
Qui précède le fruit, moins beau qu’elle, et meilleur,
Si c’est être meilleur qu’être plus nécessaire.
L’enfant candide, au seuil de l’humaine misère,

Regarde cet étrange et redoutable lieu,
Ne comprend pas, s’étonne, et, n’y voyant pas Dieu,
Balbutie, humble voix confiante et touchante;

Ce qui pleure finit par être ce qui chante;
Ses premiers mots ont peur comme ses premiers pas.
Puis il espère.
Au ciel où notre œil n’atteint pas
Il est on ne sait quel nuage de figures
Que les enfants, jadis vénérés des augures,
Aperçoivent d’en bas et qui les fait parler.
Ce petit voit peut-être un œil étinceler;
Il l’interroge; il voit, dans de claires nuées,

Des faces resplendir sans fin diminuées,
Et, fantômes réels qui pour nous seraient vains,
Le regarder, avec des sourires divins;
L’obscurité sereine étend sur lui ses branches;
Il rit, car de l’enfant les ténèbres sont blanches.
C’est là, dans l’ombre, au fond des éblouissements,
Qu’il dialogue avec des inconnus charmants;
L’enfant fait la demande et l’ange la réponse;
Le babil puéril dans le ciel bleu s’enfonce,
Puis s’en revient, avec les hésitations
Du moineau qui verrait planer les alcyons.
Nous appelons cela bégaiement; c’est l’abîme
Où, comme un être ailé qui va de cime en cime,
La parole, mêlée à l’éden, au matin,
Essayant de saisir là-haut un mot lointain,
Le prend, le lâche, cherche et trouve, et s’inquiète.
Dans ce que dit l’enfant le ciel profond s’émiette.

Quand l’enfant jase avec l’ombre qui le bénit,
La fauvette, attentive, au rebord de son nid
Se dresse, et ses petits passent, pensifs et frêles,
Leurs têtes à travers les plumes de ses ailes;
La mère semble dire à sa couvée : Entends,
Et tâche de parler aussi bien. — Le printemps,
L’aurore, le jour bleu du paradis paisible,
Les rayons, flèches d’or dont la terre est la cible,
Se fondent, en un rhythme obscur, dans l’humble chant

De l’âme chancelante et du cœur trébuchant.
Trébucher, chanceler, bégayer, c’est le charme
De cet âge où le rire éclôt dans une larme.
Ô divin clair-obscur du langage enfantin!
L’enfant semble pouvoir désarmer le destin;
L’enfant sans le savoir enseigne la nature;
Et cette bouche rose est l’auguste ouverture
D’où tombe, ô majesté de l’être faible et nu!
Sur le gouffre ignoré le logos inconnu.
L’innocence au milieu de nous, quelle largesse!

Quel don du ciel! Qui sait les conseils de sagesse,
Les éclairs de bonté, qui sait la foi, l’amour,
Que versent, à travers leur tremblant demi-jour,
Dans la querelle amère et sinistre où nous sommes,
Les âmes des enfants sur les âmes des hommes?
Le voit-on jusqu’au fond ce langage, où l’on sent
Passer tout ce qui fait tressaillir l’innocent?
Non. Les hommes émus écoutent ces mêlées
De syllabes dans l’aube adorable envolées,
Idiome où le ciel laisse un reste d’accent,
Mais ne comprennent pas, et s’en vont en disant :
— Ce n’est rien; c’est un souffle, une haleine, un murmure;
Le mot n’est pas complet quand l’âme n’est pas mûre. —
Qu’en savez-vous? Ce cri, ce chant qui sort d’un nid,
C’est l’homme qui commence et l’ange qui finit.
Vénérez-le. Le bruit mélodieux, la gamme

Dénouée et flottante où l’enfance amalgame
Le parfum de sa lèvre et l’azur de ses yeux,
Ressemble, ô vent du ciel, aux mots mystérieux
Que, pour exprimer l’ombre ou le jour, tu proposes
À la grande âme obscure éparse dans les choses.
L’être qui vient d’éclore en ce monde où tout ment,
Dit comme il peut son triste et doux étonnement.
Pour l’animal perdu dans l’énigme profonde,
Tout vient de l’homme. L’homme ébauche dans ce monde

Une explication du mystère, et par lui
Au fond du noir problème un peu de jour a lui.
Oui, le gazouillement, musique molle et vague,
Brouillard de mots divins confus comme la vague,
Chant dont les nouveaux-nés ont le charmant secret,
Et qui de la maison passe dans la forêt,
Est tout un verbe, toute une langue, un échange

De l’aube avec l’étoile et de l’âme avec l’ange,
Idiome de nids, truchement des berceaux,
Pris aux petits enfants par les petits oiseaux.

TOUT LE PASSÉ

ET

TOUT L’AVENIR

I

L’être mystérieux qui me parle à ses heures
Disait :
*

— Vivants! l’orgueil habite vos demeures.
Il fait nuit dans votre cité!
Le ciel s’étonne, ô foule en vices consumée,
Qu’il sorte de la paille en feu tant de fumée,
De l’homme tant de vanité!

Tu regardes les cieux de travers, triste race!
Tu ne te trouves pas sous l’azur à ta place.
Tu te plains, homme, ombre, roseau!
Balbutiant : Peut-être, et bégayant : Que sais-je?
Tu reproches le soir à l’aube, au lys la neige,
Et ton sépulcre à ton berceau!

Tu reproches à Dieu l’œuvre incommensurable.
Tu frémis de traîner sur ton dos misérable
Tes vieux forfaits mal expiés,
D’être pris dans ton ciel comme en un marécage,
Et de sentir, ainsi qu’un écureuil en cage,
Tourner ta prison sous tes pieds!

Homme, si tu pouvais, tu tenterais l’espace.
Ce globe, si ta force égalait ton audace,
S’évaderait sous ton orteil,
Et la création irait à l’aventure
Si ton souffle pouvait, ô folle créature,
Casser l’amarre du soleil!

Car rien n’est à ton gré; tout te met mal à l’aise.

Ce coin du ciel est donc fait de plomb, qu’il te pèse!
Oh! tu voudrais rompre le sceau!
Comme tu frapperais dans tes mains, ombre frêle,
Pour la faire envoler de sa branche éternelle,
Si la terre était un oiseau!

Hautain, dédaignant tout, que ta nef vogue ou sombre,
Tu voudrais t’en aller dans le désert de l’ombre,
Fuir, comme fuyaient les Hébreux.

Tu dis : Rien de nouveau! tu dis avec colère :
Toujours la même aurore! et l’étoile polaire
T’ennuie, ô pauvre œil ténébreux.

Tu t’irrites d’être homme, oubli, poussière, atome;
D’ignorer quel épi tu portes, ô vil chaume!
D’être une algue dans le reflux;
De trembler comme un cerf que suit une lionne,
Et d’être, sous le ciel qui reste et qui rayonne,
Celui qui passe et qui n’est plus;

Et de ne pouvoir pas faire avec tes menaces,
Avec tes doigts crispés et tes ongles tenaces,
Ta sagesse et ta passion,
Tes faux temples, tes faux soleils, tes faux tonnerres,
Tes meurtres, tes fureurs, tes crimes et tes guerres,
Un pli dans la création!
*

Ces myopes, jugeant le monde à leur optique,
Disent : — « Tout est manqué, la mer épileptique
« Bave sur les écueils grondants;
« La nuit fait le hibou si le jour fait le cygne,
« La mort, chienne de l’ombre, à qui Satan fait signe,
« Tient l’âme humaine entre ses dents.

« Que nous veut la planète? et le globe? et la sphère?

« Un monde est un néant. Dieu ne savait que faire,
« Et bâillait, seul dans son réduit,
« Quand, semant au hasard son œuvre et ses paroles,
« Il jeta dans les cieux toutes ces outres folles,
« Ivres de vent, pleines de bruit.

« Qu'est-ce qu'un Dieu masqué dans l'incompréhensible?
« Pourquoi le bien voilé? Pourquoi le mal visible?
« Pourquoi tant de brume autour d'eux?
« Pourquoi tant de fléaux sur la terre indignée?
« Et pourquoi voyons-nous ces toiles d'araignée
« Dans le crépuscule hideux?

« Pourquoi le dur taureau qui frappe à coups de corne?
« Pourquoi l'impur typhus sorti du marais morne
« Où jadis l'hydre s'embourbait?
« Christ voyait; à quoi bon aveugler Pythagore?
« Le lys est beau; pourquoi créer la mandragore
« Des gouttes de sang du gibet?

« L'azur est radieux; mais pourquoi le nuage?
« L'amour rit; mais pourquoi la douleur, ce péage?
« Pourquoi Caïn auprès d'Abel?
« Pourquoi livrer l'esprit de l'homme au trouble immense,
« Et faire tournoyer l'alphabet en démence
« Dans la spirale de Babel?

« Pourquoi la pourriture et pourquoi les décombres?
« Pourquoi le mille-pieds traînant ses pattes sombres?
« Pourquoi la ronce qui nous hait?
« Pourquoi l'épine au seuil des bois, comme une lance?
« Pourquoi la mort? Pourquoi l'espace, ce silence?
« Pourquoi l'univers, ce muet?

« On comprend le printemps, l'aube, le nid, la rose;
« Mais pourquoi les glaçons? Pourquoi le houx morose?
« Pourquoi l'autour, ce criminel?

« Pourquoi cette ombre froide où le jour se termine?
« Pourquoi la bête fauve, et pourquoi la vermine? »
— Pourquoi vous? répond l’Éternel.
*

Ainsi parlent ces fous malheureux. Pour ces hommes
Qui ne t’épèlent pas, mystère en qui nous sommes,
Et qui regardent sans les voir

Les rites transparents qu’en ta nuit tu célèbres,
Dieu, c’est une figure au milieu des ténèbres,
C’est l’horreur difforme au front noir,

C’est on ne sait quel spectre accroupi dans son antre,
Monstre dont on voit moins la face que le ventre,
Blême au seuil des gouffres ouverts,
Idiot éternel que l’immensité porte,
Et qui rêve, ayant l’ombre en sa prunelle morte,
Au cou ce goître, l’univers.
*

Ah! tu trouves tout mal! trop d’ombre et de misères!
D’autres mondes mieux faits te semblent nécessaires.
L’astre naît de brouillard terni;
On peut se servir mieux du germe et du mystère! —
Parle. Dieu formidable attend, ô ver de terre,
Tes commandes dans l’infini.

Ah! le travail te pèse et la douleur t’étonne!

Ah! décembre après juin te semble monotone!
Ah! pourrir répugne à ta chair!
Ah! tu n’es pas content de ce cercle où l’on erre!
Bien. Fais la guerre à Dieu. Canonne le tonnerre;
Croise l’épée avec l’éclair.

Ah! tu portes en toi, reptile, un exemplaire

D’idéal qu’il eût dû copier pour te plaire!
Tu compares, homme de peu,
Moucheron que prendrait l’araignée en ses toiles,
Ce que ton front contient au ciel rempli d’étoiles,
Ce dedans du crâne de Dieu!

Montre ta force. Allons, règne. Que l’étendue
Sous ton vaste regard se prosterne éperdue;
Prouve aux astres leur cécité;
Déplace les milieux, les axes et les centres;
Fouille l’onde et l’éther; poursuis dans tous ses antres
La monstrueuse immensité!

Questionne, surprends, scrute, découvre, arrache!
Harponne au fond des mers le typhon qui s’y cache;
Trouve ce que nul n’a trouvé;

Sois le Tout-Puissant; fais des pêches inouïes;
Sonde et plonge; et reviens, traînant par les ouïes
L’hydre Océan sur le pavé!
*

Ah! tu dis : — Dieu n’est pas, puisque le mal existe.

Je chasse Jéhova parce que je suis triste. —
Bien. Dresse-toi sur ton séant;
Étouffe en toi l’amour et l’espoir; raille et blâme;
Ferme ton volet sourd; allume dans ton âme
Le hideux réchaud du néant!

Mars, Jupiter, Saturne, ô planètes profondes,
Vous du moins, vous croyez! Le jour où tous les mondes
Épars dans le gouffre vermeil,
Retirant l’air céleste à leur voûte obscurcie,
Nieraient à la fois Dieu, cette sombre asphyxie
Irait éteindre le soleil!

Oh! la création est une apothéose.
Le mont, l’arbre, l’oiseau, le lion et la rose
Disent dans l’ombre : Sois béni!
L’immense azur écoute, et leurs hymmes l’enchantent;
Et l’océan farouche et l’âpre ouragan chantent
Chacun leur strophe à l’infini.

L’homme seul nie et crie : — À bas! tout est mensonge,
Rien n’existe. Le ciel est creux. L’être est un songe.
Pillons les jours comme un butin! —
Dieu tranquille et lointain, dore, à travers la brume,
Toute cette colère et toute cette écume
Brisée à ce roc, le destin.
*

Donc tu fais de toi l’axe et le sommet des êtres!
Ton ventre est ton autel et tes sens sont tes prêtres;
Vivre est le but que tu poursuis.
Tu prétends que le ciel redoutable te craigne.
Tu dis aux mers : Je veux! tu dis au vent : Je règne!
Tu dis aux étoiles : Je suis!

Ta chair s’adore et met à la torture l’âme.
Toi! toi seul! t’assouvir, voilà ton culte infâme;
Tes plaisirs sont des cruautés;

Tu fais le mal au bord du mystère sublime;
Tu viens t’accouder là; dans le puits de l’abîme
Tu craches tes iniquités.

Rien ne rassasierait ta folie incurable.
Tu voudrais exprimer dans le broc misérable
Où tu bois, homme plein d’ennuis,

Dans ton verre où les vins immondes se répandent,
Les constellations, grappes d’astres qui pendent
À la treille immense des nuits.

Car ton bâillement croit avoir, ô créature,
Droit de vie et de mort sur toute la nature;
Jéhova n’est pas excepté.
Oh! comme frémirait d’orgueil ton âme noire,
Bandit, si tu pouvais condenser, prendre et boire
Le monde en une volupté!

Hélas! pour en extraire une goutte d’ivresse,
Tu tordrais l’univers, l’aube qui te caresse,
La femme, l’enfant à l’œil bleu,
Content, sans hésiter à la savourer toute,
Et sans t’inquiéter si cette sombre goutte
Est une larme devant Dieu!

Dieu n’est pas! Et d’ailleurs, quand, faisant ton entrée,

Beau, fier, devant la rampe assez mal éclairée,
Tu viens éblouir tes pareils,
Toi, premier rôle, roi du drame où tu te plonges,
Toi, l’acteur du destin, veut-on pas que tu songes
À cet allumeur de soleils?

S’il existe — Il faudrait d’abord que je le visse —
Dis-tu, c’est bon, qu’il soit! et fasse son service! —
Ah! l’homme en qui rien n’éteindra
La folle volonté de sonder l’insondable,
Mériterait qu’on mît son orgueil formidable
Sous ta douche, ô Niagara!

Nains! Dieu vous met sa marque afin qu’on vous réclame.

Croyez-vous que la mort, qui n’accepte que l’âme,
Et qui pèse tout dans sa main,
Si son incorruptible et sinistre prunelle
N’y reconnaissait pas l’effigie éternelle,
Recevrait le liard humain?

*

Dieu n’est pas! ce seul mot serait une torture.
Vous n’avez donc jamais regardé la nature?

Heureux le sage, humble roseau,
Qui songe, et qui, pensif, voit bondir l’avalanche
De montagne en montagne, et qui, de branche en branche
Voit sauter le petit oiseau!

Vous n’avez donc jamais erré dans les ravines?
Vous n’avez donc jamais, parmi les fleurs divines,
Respiré la brise en marchant,
Et jamais écouté, dans les fermes lointaines,
Mugir les bœufs rêveurs quand rampent dans les plaines
Les longues ombres du couchant?

Vous n’avez donc jamais contemplé l’invisible?
Jamais vu l’idéal, et gravi du possible
Le sommet désert, triste et grand?
Hélas! vous n’avez donc jamais, sous le ciel calme,
Vu luire l’auréole et frissonner la palme
Et sourire un martyr mourant?

Vous n’avez donc jamais vu dans votre pensée
L’étendue, où s’en vont, d’une course insensée,
Les ténèbres, fuyant le jour?
Jamais vu l’infini qui rit à la chaumière,
Que le soleil ne peut emplir de sa lumière,
Mais que l’âme remplit d’amour?

Dis, tu n’as donc jamais attaché ta prunelle
Sur la profondeur morne, obscure et solennelle,
À l’heure où le croissant reluit,
Où l’on voit s’arrondir sur les mers remuées
Ce fer d’or qu’a laissé tomber dans les nuées
Le sombre cheval de la nuit?

*

D’autres sont les croyants, pires que les impies.
Toutes les passions dans leur âme accroupies
Leur disent tout bas : Jouissez!
De Jéhova qui tonne ils font leur économe;
Dieu n’est que le valet du coffre-fort de l’homme;
Hélas, hélas, ces insensés

De la religion ont fait leur sentinelle;
Cieux profonds! ils ont mis leur sac d’or sous son aile;
L’ange veille au lot du mortel;

Leur champ importe au monde, à l’astre, à l’aube austère;
Ils ont fait une borne à ce morceau de terre
Avec la pierre de l’autel.

Pour faire une clôture à leur haie, à leur ferme,
Pour servir de lien à la barre qui ferme
Leur verger, leur vigne ou leur pré,
Pour joindre les poteaux de leur porte en ruines,
Ils prennent, ô Jésus, la couronne d’épines
Qui fit saigner ton front sacré!

Leur visage rayonne et plaît; leur voix caresse;
Ils sont doux et charmants; la grâce enchanteresse
Mêle son miel à leur jargon;
Leur sourire est la fleur s’ouvrant sous les rosées;
Le dedans est horrible, et toutes leurs pensées
Ont la figure du dragon.

De leur humilité leur vanité se venge;
Ils disent : Que me font, si je vis et je mange,
La famine et le choléra!
Le faux poids dans leur droite, ils vendent, ils achètent;
Leur âme a des secrets que les démons cachètent
Et qu’un jour Dieu seul ouvrira.

La femme sous leurs pieds souffre, à peine vivante;
Autrefois leur esclave, aujourd’hui leur servante!
Ils la pèsent avec l’argent.
L’enfant rampe ignorant et nu; que leur importe!
De quel droit est-il né? Le marteau de leur porte
Glace la main de l’indigent.

Les maximes d’amour sur leur visage écrites
Mentent; ils sont méchants, avares, hypocrites,
Faux devant l’aurore qui naît;
Ils remettent aux fers ceux que Jésus délivre;
Puis, parce qu’à des jours indiqués sur un livre,
Pendant qu’une cloche sonnait,

Ils ont pris sous leur bras un recueil de cantiques,
Décroché leur enseigne et fermé leurs boutiques
Et dit un benedicite,
Et qu’ils ont regardé pendant une heure un prêtre,
Et crié du latin dans l’ombre, ils pensent être
Quittes avec l’immensité!

Ce grand Dieu se corrompt en vous, engeance folle!
Il entre dans votre âme idée, et sort idole;
Vous l’insultez dans vos korans;

Vous lui donnez vos yeux, vos vices, vos visages,
Vous le faites d’argile, hélas! comme vos sages,
Et d’airain comme vos tyrans!

Partout bûchers, trépieds, pagodes éphémères;
Temples monstres bâtis par des dogmes chimères;
Thor, Vishnou, Teutatès, Ammon,
Bel qui rugit, Dagon qui siffle, Apis qui beugle;
La synagogue sourde et la mosquée aveugle;
Noirs autels pleins d’un Dieu démon!

Les Parthénons font boire au juste la ciguë.
La cathédrale avec sa double tour aiguë,
Debout devant le jour qui fuit,
Ignore, et, sans savoir, affirme, absout, condamne;
Dieu voit avec pitié ces deux oreilles d’âne
Se dresser dans la vaste nuit.

Dieu! Dieu! Dieu! le rocher où la lame déferle
Compte sur lui; c’est lui qui règne; il fait la perle
Et l’étoile pour les sondeurs;
L’azur le voile; il met, pour que le tigre y dorme,
De la mousse dans l’antre; il parle, voix énorme,
À l’ombre dans les profondeurs.

Il règne, il songe; il fond les granits dans les soufres;
Il crée en même temps les soleils dans les gouffres
Et le liseron dans le pré;
Pour l’avoir un jour vu, la mer est encore ivre;
Les versants du Sina sont de son vaste livre
Le pupitre démesuré.

L’Océan calme, c’est le plat de son épée.
La montagne à sa voix s’enfuirait dissipée
Comme de l’eau dans le gazon;

Dans les éternités sans fin continuées
Ce Père habite; il fait des arches de nuées
Aux quatre coins de l’horizon.

Il pense, il règle, il mène, il pèse, il juge, il aime;
Et laisse les festins rire à Lucullus blême
Qui paît, hideux, chauve et jauni,
Et se gonfle de vin comme une poche pleine;
Ce qu’une outre peut dire au ventre de Silène
N’importe pas à l’infini.

Ce même Dieu qui fit d’avril une corbeille,

Qui fait l’oiseau chanteur pour les bois, et l’abeille
Pour l’herbe où l’aube étincela,
Donne au Pôle effrayant, sans jour, sans fleur, sans arbre,

Pour qu’il puisse parfois chauffer ses mains de marbre,
Ta cheminée, ô sombre Hékla!

Sous l’œil de cet esprit suprême et formidable,
L’eau monte en brume au front du pic inabordable
Et tombe en flots du haut des monts;
La créature éteinte est d’une autre suivie,
L’univers, où ce Dieu met la mort et la vie,
Respire par ces deux poumons.

Devant ce Dieu s’enfuit tout ce qui hait son œuvre,
La tempête, le mal, l’épervier, la couleuvre,
Le méchant qui ment et qui nuit,
La trombe, affreux bandit qui dans les flots se vautre,
L’hiver boiteux qui fait marcher l’un après l’autre
Son jour court et sa longue nuit.

Il fait lâcher la proie aux bêtes carnassières.
Les morts dans le sépulcre ont perdu leurs poussières;
Il rêve, et sait où sont leurs os.
En entendant passer son souffle dans l’espace,
Subitement l’enfer à la gueule rapace,
Les mondes hurlants du chaos,

Les univers punis dont la clameur s’élance,

Les bagnes monstrueux de l’ombre, font silence,
Et dans la nuit des noirs arrêts
Cessent de secouer les chaînes qui leur pèsent,
Comme le soir, au pas d’un voyageur, se taisent
Les grenouilles dans le marais.

Il tient une balance immense en équilibre;

Il met dans un plateau les cieux, la mer qui vibre,
Ceux qui sur le trône ont vécu,
Le monde et ses clartés, le mystère et ses voiles,
Et l’abîme jetant son écume d’étoiles;
Dans l’autre il met Caton vaincu,

Ce qu’il est? regardez au-dessus de vos têtes;
Voyez le ciel, le jour, la nuit! Ce que vous êtes?
Cherchez dans votre cendrier.
Son année est sans fin. Prosternez vos pensées.

Les constellations sont des mouches posées
Sur l’énorme calendrier.

Mais voyez-le donc, vous dont les chants sont des râles,
Vivants qui ne pouvez que mourir, ombres pâles,
Et qui ne savez qu’oublier!
L’Océan goutte à goutte en sa clepsydre pleure;
Tout Sahara, tombant grain à grain, marque l’heure
Dans son effrayant sablier.

Mêlez-le maintenant à vos anniversaires!
Allumez vos flambeaux, égrenez vos rosaires,
Sur vos lutrins soyez béants;
Ayez vos jours sacrés que plus de clarté dore;
Mettez, devant ce Dieu que couronne l’aurore,
Des tiares à vos néants!

La bête des bois rit quand les hommes, vain nombre,
Vont clouant leurs erreurs sur Dieu, leur nom sur l’ombre,
Leur date sur l’immensité,

Se font centre du monde, eux les passants rapides,
Et s’en viennent chanter leurs bouts de l’an stupides
À la muette éternité.
*

Hélas! l’ange Justice ouvre ses yeux sinistres.
Il écrit en rêvant des noms sur ses registres.
Ah! ces tristes vivants ont tort!
Devant Dieu, qui d’en haut à la paix les convie,
Et donne aux cœurs l’amour et verse aux fronts la vie,
Ils font la haine, ils font la mort!

Ils bravent l’océan plein de magnificence,
Où flottent le mystère et la toute-puissance;
Ils souillent le gouffre irrité;
Sans prendre garde au vent qui s’épuise en huées,
Ils lèvent leur bannière au milieu des nuées,
Ces drapeaux de l’immensité!

Ils ont pour dieux la force et la ruse aux yeux louches;
Ils font chanter des chants aux trompettes farouches
Dont nous, esprits, nous frissonnons,
Et rouler, balafrant la nature sacrée,
Sur les champs, sur les blés, sur les fleurs que Dieu crée
La roue horrible des canons.

Les générations meurent pour leur caprice.
Ils disent au tombeau : Prends l’homme et qu’il périsse!
Ô nains, pires que les géants!
Ils ouvrent cette nuit que nul rayon ne perce;
Ils y font brusquement tomber à la renverse
Les pâles cadavres béants!

Ils rougissent de sang l’onde et les herbes vertes;
Ils dressent au sommet des collines désertes
Le noir gibet silencieux

Qui reste tout le jour sans changer d’attitude,
Mais qui, dès que la nuit brunit la solitude,
Élève ses bras vers les cieux.

Nous sommes la justice auguste, immaculée!

Disent-ils, s’étalant dans leur chambre étoilée
Qu’entourent les spectres camards;
Et, pendant que la foule approuve et les admire,
Un long sanglot mêlé d’un long éclat de rire
Va des Montfaucons aux Clamarts!

Ces hommes insensés se vautrent dans la joie;
Ils ont des lits de pourpre et des manteaux de soie;
Ils vivent, d’ombre et d’or chargés;

Cette vie est pour eux un palais plein de fêtes;
Ils laissent derrière eux les choses qu’ils ont faites.
C’est bien, buvez; c’est bien, mangez;

Pendant qu’en haut la table éblouit les convives,
Et que les bouches sont comme des sources vives,
Que la chair fume avec l’encens,
Pendant que les archers gardent les avenues,
Que l’amour rit au spectre, et que les toutes nues
Chantent auprès des tout-puissants;

Pendant que le banquet, rayonnant comme un phare,
Mêle le choc du verre au son de la fanfare,
Et qu’ils s’enivrent dans la nuit,

Sans même, dans leur joie immonde et sépulcrale,
S’informer s’il n’est pas quelque obscure spirale
Sous la salle pleine de bruit,

Ô morts qui vous taisez au fond des catacombes,
L’expiation prend les pierres de vos tombes
Dans l’insondable profondeur,
Et de ces marbres froids qui dans l’ombre descendent
Fait un sombre escalier dont les marches attendent
Les lourds talons du commandeur!

II

Pensif, je répondis à l’archange nocturne :
*

— Sévère esprit, ta voix sanglote comme l’urne
Qui verse un flot noir et glacé.
Sur qui te penches-tu? Tes paroles s’adressent
Aux tristes nations d’hier qui disparaissent,
Aux pâles foules du passé.

Ton cri ressemble au chant des mornes Isaïes.
Le mystère autrefois, de ses brumes haïes,
Obstruait la terre et les cieux;
Et l’homme avait besoin que les prophètes blêmes
Lui parlassent du seuil de tous ces noirs problèmes
Ouvrant leurs porches monstrueux.

L’homme ignorait. Marchant loin du sentier qui sauve,
Il allait au hasard dans la nature fauve,
Comme le loup au fond des bois,
Sourd à ces alphabets, perdu dans ces algèbres;
Les prophètes alors, dans ces grandes ténèbres
Élevèrent leurs grandes voix.

Il fallait avertir l’homme au bord de l’abîme,
Tout ici-bas semblait lui conseiller le crime;
Temps rude où le mal triomphait!
La forêt, de l’embûche était le noir ministre.
L’arbre avait l’air d’un monstre, et le rocher sinistre
Avait la forme du forfait.

Ici gémissait Job, et là chantait Sodome.
L’homme à tous les fléaux, horrible, ajoutait l’homme;
La guerre infâme aidait la faim;

Comme on brûle une paille on allumait les villes;
Et l’on voyait Judas sortir des choses viles,

Et des choses sombres Caïn.

Les prophètes chassaient le mal; ces personnages
Rendaient au Dieu vivant d’augustes témoignages;
L’homme de ces temps inhumains,
Affreux, baignant de sang les champs, l’onde et les sables,
S’arrêtait, s’il voyait ces songeurs formidables,
Pâles et levant leurs deux mains.

Ils descendaient des monts, portant de sombres tables;
Ils mouraient en laissant les Talmuds redoutables
Ouverts sur l’aile des griffons,
Les farouches Védas, les Eddas, les Genèses,
Registres éclairés du reflet des fournaises,
Pages pleines de bruits profonds.

Ils épouvantaient l’homme et la terre méchante;
Et depuis cinq mille ans, pendant que l’aube chante
Et que la fleur verse l’encens,
Le genre humain qui passe et que le temps dénombre
Entend, dans la caverne effrayante de l’ombre,
Gronder ces livres rugissants.

Mais le passé s’en va. Regarde-nous; nous sommes
Un autre Adam, une autre Ève, de nouveaux hommes
Nous bénissons quand nous souffrons.
Hier vivait d’horreur, de deuil, de sang, de fange;
Hier était le monstre et Demain sera l’ange;
Le point du jour blanchit nos fronts.

Deux êtres sont en nous : l’un ailé, l’autre immonde;
L’un montant vers Dieu; l’autre ombre et tache du monde,
Se ruant dans d’infâmes lits;
Et, pendant que le corps, marchant sur des semelles,
Vil, abject, boit l’opprobre et la lie aux gamelles,
L’âme boit la rosée aux lys.

L’œuvre du genre humain, c’est de délivrer l’âme;
C’est de la dégager du triste épithalame
Que lui chante le corps impur;
C’est de la rendre, chaste, à la clarté première;
Car Dieu rêveur a fait l’âme pour la lumière
Comme il fit l’aile pour l’azur.

Nous ne sommes plus ceux qui riaient à la face
De l’ombre impénétrable où tout rentre et s’efface,

Qui faisaient le mal sans frayeur,
Qui jetaient au cercueil ce cri : Va-t’en! je nie!
Et mettaient le néant, le rire et l’ironie
Dans la pelle du fossoyeur.

Nous croyons en ce Dieu vivant; sa foi nous brûle;
Il inspire Brutus sur la chaise curule,
Guillaume Tell sous le sayon;
Nous allumons, courbés sous son vent qui nous pousse,
Notre liberté fière à sa majesté douce
Et notre foudre à son rayon.

Il fait germer le ver dans sa morne cellule,
Change la larve affreuse en vive libellule,
Transfigure, affranchit, construit,
Émeut les tours de pierre et les tentes de toiles,
Et crée et vit! c’est lui qui pénètre d’étoiles
Les ailes noires de la nuit.

Sa tiare splendide est une ruche immense,
Où, des roses soleils apportant la semence

Et de l’astre apportant le miel,
Essaim de flamme ayant les mondes pour Hymètes,
Mouches de l’infini, les abeilles comètes
Volent de tous les points du ciel.

Le Mal, le glaive au poing, voilé d'un voile d'ombre,
Nous guette; et la forêt que la broussaille encombre,
L'âpre rocher, le flot ingrat,
L'aident, complices noirs, contre la créature,
Et semblent par moments faire de la nature
L'antre où rêve ce scélérat.

Mais nous luttons, esprit! nous vaincrons. Dieu nous mène.
Il est le feu qui va devant l'armée humaine,
Le Dieu d'Ève et de Débora.
Un jour, bientôt, demain, tout changera de forme,
Et dans l'immensité, comme une fleur énorme,
L'univers s'épanouira!

Nous vaincrons l'élément! cette bête de somme
Se couchera dans l'ombre à plat ventre sous l'homme;
La matière aura beau hurler;

Nous ferons de ses cris sortir l'hymne de l'ordre;
Et nous remplacerons les dents qui veulent mordre
Par la langue qui sait parler.

Quand nous aurons fini le travail de la vigne,
Quand au Dieu qui fit l'aigle et l'air, l'onde et le cygne,
La tourmente et Léviathan,
Nous aurons rapporté toutes nos âmes anges,
Nous ferons du panier de ces saintes vendanges
La muselière de Satan.

Satan, c'est l'appétit, pourceau qui mord l'idée;
C'est l'ivresse, fond noir de la coupe vidée;
Satan, c'est l'orgueil sans genoux;
C'est l'égoïsme, heureux du sang où ses mains trempent;
C'est le ventre hideux, cette caverne où rampent
Tous les monstres qui sont en nous.

Satan, c'est la douleur, c'est l'erreur, c'est la borne,

C’est le froid ténébreux, c’est la pesanteur morne,
C’est la vis du sanglant pressoir;
C’est la force d’en bas liant tout de ses chaînes,
Qui fait dans le ravin, sous l’ombre des grands chênes,
Crier les chariots le soir.

Nous allons à l’amour, au bien, à l’harmonie.
Ô vivants qui flottez dans l’énigme infinie,
Un arbre, auguste à tous les yeux,
Conduit votre navire à travers l’âpre abîme;
Jésus ouvre ses bras sur la vergue sublime
De ce grand mât mystérieux.

Derrière nous décroît le mal, noire masure.
Bientôt nous toucherons au port, le flot s’azure.
L’homme qu’en vain le deuil poursuit,
Ne verra plus tomber dans l’ombre sur sa tête
L’effroi, l’hiver, l’horreur, l’ouragan, la tempête,
Ces vomissements de la nuit.

Nous chasserons la guerre et le meurtre à coups d’aile,
Et cette frémissante et candide hirondelle
Qui vole vers l’éternité,
L’espérance, adoptant notre maison amie,
Viendra faire son nid dans la gueule endormie
Du vieux monstre Fatalité.

Les peuples trouveront de nouveaux équilibres;
Oui, l’aube naît, demain les âmes seront libres;
Le jour est fait par le volcan;
L’homme illuminera l’ombre qui l’environne;
Et l’on verra, changeant l’esclavage en couronne,
Des fleurons sortir du carcan.

Et quand ces temps viendront, ô joie! ô cieux paisibles!
Les astres, aujourd’hui l’un pour l’autre terribles,
Se regarderont doucement;

Les globes s’aimeront comme l’homme et la femme;
Et le même rayon qui traversera l’âme
Traversera le firmament.

Les sphères vogueront avec le son des lyres.
Au lieu des mondes noirs pleins d’horribles délires,
Qui rugissent vils et maudits,
On entendra chanter sous le feuillage sombre
Les édens enivrés, et l’on verra dans l’ombre
Resplendir les bleus paradis.

Dieu voudra. Tout à coup on verra les discordes,
La hache et son billot, les gibets et leurs cordes,
L’impur serpent des cieux banni,
Le sang, le cri, la haine, et l’ordure, et la vase,
Se changer en amour et devenir extase
Sous un baiser de l’infini.

Dieu met, quand il lui plaît, sur l’orage et la haine,
Sur la foudre, forçat dont on entend la chaîne,
La sainte serrure des cieux,

Et, laissant écumer leurs voix exténuées,
Ferme avec l’arc-en-ciel courbé dans les nuées
Ce cadenas mystérieux.

Au fond du gouffre où sont ceux qui se font proscrire,
Des plus profonds enfers, stupéfaits de sourire,
L’amour ira baiser les gonds,
Comme un rayon de l’aube, à l’orient ouverte,
Va dans la profondeur de l’eau sinistre et verte
Jusqu’aux écailles des dragons.

Les globes se noueront par des nœuds invisibles;
Ils s’enverront l’amour comme la flèche aux cibles;
Tout sera vie, hymne et réveil;
Et comme des oiseaux vont d’une branche à l’autre,

Le Verbe immense ira, mystérieux apôtre,
D’un soleil à l’autre soleil.

Les mondes, qu’aujourd’hui le mal habite et creuse,
Échangeront leur joie à travers l’ombre heureuse
Et l’espace silencieux;
Nul être, âme ou soleil, ne sera solitaire;
L’avenir, c’est l’hymen des hommes sur la terre
Et des étoiles dans les cieux.

XX

Un poëte est un monde enfermé dans un homme.
Plaute en son crâne obscur sentait fourmiller Rome;
Mélésigène, aveugle et voyant souverain
Dont la nuit obstinée attristait l’œil serein,

Avait en lui Calchas, Hector, Patrocle, Achille;
Prométhée enchaîné remuait dans Eschyle;
Rabelais porte un siècle; et c’est la vérité
Qu’en tout temps les penseurs couronnés de clarté,
Les Shakspeares féconds et les vastes Homères,
Tous les poëtes saints, semblables à des mères,
Ont senti dans leurs flancs des hommes tressaillir,
Tous, l’un le roi Priam et l’autre le roi Lear.
Leur fruit croît sous leur front comme au sein de la femme.
Ils vont rêver aux lieux déserts; ils ont dans l’âme
Un éternel azur qui rayonne et qui rit;
Ou bien ils sont troublés, et dans leur sombre esprit
Ils entendent rouler des chars pleins de tonnerres.

Ils marchent effarés, ces grands visionnaires.
Ils ne savent plus rien, tant ils vont devant eux,
Archiloque appuyé sur l’iambe boiteux,
Euripide écoutant Minos, Phèdre et l’inceste.
Molière voit venir à lui le morne Alceste,
Arnolphe avec Agnès, l’aube avec le hibou,
Et la sagesse en pleurs avec le rire fou.
Cervantes pâle et doux cause avec don Quichotte;
À l’oreille de Job Satan masqué chuchote;

Dante sonde l’abîme en sa pensée ouvert;
Horace voit danser les faunes à l’œil vert;
Et Marlow suit des yeux au fond des bois l’émeute

Du noir sabbat fuyant dans l’ombre avec sa meute.

Alors, de cette foule invisible entouré,
Pour la création le poëte est sacré.
L’herbe est pour lui plus molle et la grotte plus douce;
Pan fait plus de silence en marchant sur la mousse;
La nature, voyant son grand enfant distrait,
Veille sur lui; s’il est un piége en la forêt,
La ronce au coin du bois le tire par la manche
Et dit : Ne va pas là! Sous ses pieds la pervenche
Tressaille; dans le nid, dans le buisson mouvant,
Dans la feuille, une voix, vague et mêlée au vent,
Murmure : — C’est Shakspeare et Macbeth! — C’est Molière
Et don Juan! — C’est Dante et Béatrix! — Le lierre
S’écarte, et les halliers, pareils à des griffons,
Retirent leur épine, et les chênes profonds,
Muets, laissent passer sous l’ombre de leurs dômes
Ces grands esprits parlant avec ces grands fantômes.

LE TEMPS PRÉSENT

LA VÉRITÉ

La Vérité, lumière effrayée, astre en fuite,
Évitant on ne sait quelle obscure poursuite,
Après s’être montrée un instant, disparaît.
Ainsi qu’une clarté passe en une forêt,
Elle s’en est allée au loin dans l’étendue,
Et s’est dans l’infini mystérieux perdue,
Mêlée à l’ouragan, mêlée à la vapeur,
Sombre, et de leur côté les hommes ont eu peur.
Peur d’elle, comme elle a peur des hommes peut-être.
Son effacement laisse obscure la fenêtre
Ouverte dans notre âme et béante au milieu
De l’ombre où l’épaisseur du temple cache Dieu.

Maintenant il fait nuit, le mensonge est à l'aise.
Cependant, par moments, sur la noire falaise,
D'où l'on voit l'inconnu sans borne, et les roulis

Du firmament tordant les astres dans ses plis,
Sommet d'où l'on entend Dieu tourner son registre,
Et d'où l'on aperçoit le modelé sinistre
Des mondes ignorés, des vagues univers,
L'un pour l'autre effrayants parce qu'ils sont divers,
Faîte où les visions se confrontent entr'elles,
Où les réalités, pour nous surnaturelles,
Semblent avoir parfois la figure du mal,
Du haut de cette cime appelée Idéal,
Par instants un chercheur fait l'annonce sacrée,
Et dit : — La Vérité, qui guide, échauffe et crée,
Haute lueur par qui l'âme s'épanouit,
Vivants, va revenir bientôt dans votre nuit;
Attendez-la. Soyez prêts à la voir paraître. —
La terre alors se met à rire; alors le prêtre,

Alors le juge, alors le reître, alors le roi,
Quiconque vit d'erreur, d'imposture et d'effroi,
Dracon au nom des lois, Tibère au nom des hommes,
Caïphe au nom du ciel, tout ce que les Sodomes
Contiennent de plus sage et de plus vertueux,
Tous les cœurs nés, ainsi que l'hydre, tortueux,
Les frivoles, les purs, les doctes, les obscènes,
Tout le bourdonnement de ces mouches malsaines,
S'acharne; un homme est fou du moment qu'il est seul.
On rit d'abord; le rire a fait plus d'un linceul;
Puis on s'indigne : — Il faut qu'un tel forfait s'expie;
L'homme osant n'être pas aveugle, est un impie!
Quoi! celui-ci prétend qu'il voit de la clarté!
Il dit qu'il voit de loin venir la vérité!
Il sait l'heure, il connaît l'astre, il a l'insolence
D'être une voix chez nous qui sommes le silence,
D'être un flambeau chez nous qui sommes la noirceur!

Il vit là-haut! il est ce monstre, le penseur!
Quoi! sa prunelle est sainte, et serait la première
Qu'éblouirait l'auguste et lointaine lumière!
L'abîme est noir pour nous et pour lui serait bleu!

Si ce n'est pas un fou, ce serait donc un dieu!
À bas! — Et cris, fureur, sarcasme, affronts, supplices!
Les ignorants naïfs et les savants complices,
Tous, car c'est l'homme auquel on ne pardonne point,
Arrivent, et chacun avec sa pierre au poing.
Ah! tu viens annoncer la vérité! prédire
La fin de la bataille et la fin du délire,
La fin des guerres, plus d'échafaud, le grand jour,
Le plein midi, la paix, la liberté, l'amour!
Ah! tu vois tout cela d'avance! Plus d'envie,
L'homme buvant la joie aux sources de la vie,
Et la Fraternité, de ses larges rameaux
Laissant tomber les biens en foule et non les maux.
Pour avoir de tels yeux il faut être stupide!
À mort! Et chacun grince, et trépigne, et lapide;
Avec tout ce qu'on a sous la main, fouets, bâtons,
On frappe, on raille, on tue au hasard, à tâtons,
Tant les âmes ont peur de manquer de ténèbres,
Et tant les hommes sont facilement funèbres!
L'ennemi public meurt. Bien. Tout s'évanouit.
Nous allons donc avoir tranquillement la nuit!
La sainte cécité publique est rétablie.

On boit, on mange, on rampe, on chuchote, on oublie,
L'ordre n'est plus troublé par un noir songe-creux;
On est des loups contents et des ânes heureux;
Le bonze met son masque et le temple son voile;
Quant au rêveur marchant en avant de l'étoile,
Qui venait déranger Moïse et Mahomet,
On ne sait même plus comment il se nommait.
Et qu'annonçait-il donc? La vérité? Quel songe!
Au fond, la vérité, vivants, c'est un mensonge;

La vérité n’est pas. Fermons les yeux. Dormons.
Tout à coup, au milieu des psaumes, des sermons,
Des hymnes, des chansons, des cris, des ironies,
Quelque chose à travers les brumes infinies
Semble apparaître au seuil du ciel, et l’on croit voir
Un point confus blanchir au fond du gouffre noir,
Comme un aigle arrivant dont grandit l’envergure;

Et le point lumineux devient une figure,
Et la figure croît de moment en moment,
Et devient, ô terreur, un éblouissement!
C’est elle, c’est l’étoile inouïe et profonde,
La Vérité! c’est elle, âme errante du monde,
Avec son évidence où nul rayon ne ment,
Et son mystère aussi d’où sort un flamboiement;
Elle, de tous les yeux le seul que rien n’endorme,
Elle, la regardée et la voyante énorme,
C’est elle! Ô Vérité, c’est toi! Divinement,
Elle surgit; ainsi qu’un vaste apaisement
Son radieux lever s’épand dans l’ombre immense;
Menace pour les uns, pour les autres clémence,
Elle approche; elle éclaire, à Thèbes, dans Ombos,
Dans Rome, dans Paris, dans Londres, des tombeaux,
Une ciguë en Grèce, une croix en Judée,
Et dit : Terre, c’est moi. Qui donc m’a demandée?

Tout était vision sous les ténébreux dômes;
J’aperçus dans l’espace étoilé trois fantômes;
Les deux premiers très-loin et le dernier plus près.
Le premier spectre dit : — Mané Thécel Pharès.
Son doigt levé montrait l’obscurité maudite;
Il ressemblait au sphinx monstrueux qui médite
Dans Assur, accroupi parmi les dieux camards.
Le second murmura ce mot : — Ides de Mars.
Et le troisième esprit cria : — Quatre-vingt-treize.

Devant mes yeux erraient des lueurs de fournaise;
Et, par je ne sais quel étrange changement,
Chacun de ces trois mots, au fond du firmament,
Était une des trois syllabes redoutables
D'un autre mot, écrit par Aaron sur les tables,
Et que, longtemps avant que Jésus triomphât,
Les gouffres répétaient aux gouffres : — Josaphat.

JEAN CHOUAN

Les blancs fuyaient, les bleus mitraillaient la clairière.

Un coteau dominait cette plaine, et derrière
Le monticule nu, sans arbre et sans gazon,
Les farouches forêts emplissaient l'horizon.

En arrière du tertre, abri sûr, rempart sombre,
Les blancs se ralliaient, comptant leur petit nombre,
Et Jean Chouan parut, ses longs cheveux au vent.
— Ah! personne n'est mort, car le chef est vivant!
Dirent-ils. Jean Chouan écoutait la mitraille.
— Nous manque-t-il quelqu'un? — Non. — Alors qu'on s'en aille!

Fuyez tous! — Les enfants, les femmes aux abois
L'entouraient, effarés. — Fils, rentrons dans les bois!
Dispersons-nous! — Et tous, comme des hirondelles
S'évadent dans l'orage immense à tire-d'ailes,
Fuirent vers le hallier noyé dans la vapeur;
Ils couraient; les vaillants courent quand ils ont peur;
C'est un noir désarroi qu'une fuite où se mêle
Au vieillard chancelant l'enfant à la mamelle;
On craint d'être tué, d'être fait prisonnier!
Et Jean Chouan marchait à pas lents, le dernier,
Se retournant parfois et faisant sa prière.

Tout à coup on entend un cri dans la clairière,

Une femme parmi les balles apparaît.
Toute la bande était déjà dans la forêt,
Jean Chouan seul restait; il s’arrête, il regarde;
C’est une femme grosse, elle s’enfuit, hagarde

Et pâle, déchirant ses pieds nus aux buissons;
Elle est seule; elle crie : À moi, les bons garçons!
Jean Chouan rêveur dit : C’est Jeanne-Madeleine.
Elle est le point de mire au milieu de la plaine;
La mitraille sur elle avec rage s’abat.
Il eût fallu que Dieu lui-même se courbât
Et la prît par la main et la mît sous son aile,
Tant la mort formidable abondait autour d’elle;
Elle était perdue. — Ah! criait-elle, au secours!
Mais les bois sont tremblants et les fuyards sont sourds.
Et les balles pleuvaient sur la pauvre brigande.

Alors sur le coteau qui dominait la lande
Jean Chouan bondit, fier, tranquille, altier, viril,
Debout : — C’est moi qui suis Jean Chouan! cria-t-il.
Les bleus dirent : — C’est lui, le chef! Et cette tête,
Prenant toute la foudre et toute la tempête,

Fit changer à la mort de cible. — Sauve-toi!
Cria-t-il, sauve-toi, ma sœur! — Folle d’effroi,
Jeanne hâta le pas vers la forêt profonde.
Comme un pin sur la neige ou comme un mât sur l’onde,
Jean Chouan, qui semblait par la mort ébloui,
Se dressait, et les bleus ne voyaient plus que lui.
— Je resterai le temps qu’il faudra. Va, ma fille!
Va, tu seras encor joyeuse en ta famille,
Et tu mettras encor des fleurs à ton corset!
Criait-il. — C’était lui maintenant que visait
L’ardente fusillade, et sur sa haute taille
Qui semblait presque prête à gagner la bataille,
Les balles s’acharnaient, et son puissant dédain
Souriait; il levait son sabre nu... — Soudain

Par une balle, ainsi l’ours est frappé dans l’antre,
Il se sentit trouer de part en part le ventre;
Il resta droit et dit : — Soit. Ave Maria!
Puis, chancelant, tourné vers le bois, il cria :
— Mes amis! mes amis! Jeanne est-elle arrivée?
Des voix dans la forêt répondirent : — Sauvée!
Jean Chouan murmura : C’est bien! et tomba mort.

Paysans! paysans! hélas! vous aviez tort,
Mais votre souvenir n’amoindrit pas la France;
Vous fûtes grands dans l’âpre et sinistre ignorance;

Vous que vos rois, vos loups, vos prêtres, vos halliers
Faisaient bandits, souvent vous fûtes chevaliers;
À travers l’affreux joug et sous l’erreur infâme
Vous avez eu l’éclair mystérieux de l’âme;
Des rayons jaillissaient de votre aveuglement;
Salut! Moi le banni, je suis pour vous clément;
L’exil n’est pas sévère aux pauvres toits de chaumes;
Nous sommes des proscrits, vous êtes des fantômes;
Frères, nous avons tous combattu; nous voulions
L’avenir; vous vouliez le passé, noirs lions;
L’effort que nous faisions pour gravir sur la cime,
Hélas! vous l’avez fait pour rentrer dans l’abîme;
Nous avons tous lutté, diversement martyrs,
Tous sans ambitions et tous sans repentirs,
Nous pour fermer l’enfer, vous pour rouvrir la tombe;
Mais sur vos tristes fronts la blancheur d’en haut tombe,
La pitié fraternelle et sublime conduit
Les fils de la clarté vers les fils de la nuit,
Et je pleure en chantant cet hymne tendre et sombre,
Moi, soldat de l’aurore, à toi, héros de l’ombre.

LE CIMETIÈRE D’EYLAU

À mes frères aînés, écoliers éblouis,

Ce qui suit fut conté par mon oncle Louis,
Qui me disait à moi, de sa voix la plus tendre :
— Joue, enfant! — me jugeant trop petit pour comprendre.
J’écoutais cependant, et mon oncle disait :

— Une bataille, bah! savez-vous ce que c’est?
De la fumée. À l’aube on se lève, à la brune
On se couche; et je vais vous en raconter une.
Cette bataille-là se nomme Eylau; je crois
Que j’étais capitaine et que j’avais la croix;
Oui, j’étais capitaine. Après tout, à la guerre,
Un homme, c’est de l’ombre, et ça ne compte guère,
Et ce n’est pas de moi qu’il s’agit. Donc, Eylau
C’est un pays en Prusse; un bois, des champs, de l’eau,
De la glace, et partout l’hiver et la bruine.

Le régiment campa près d’un mur en ruine;
On voyait des tombeaux autour d’un vieux clocher.
Bénigssen ne savait qu’une chose, approcher
Et fuir; mais l’empereur dédaignait ce manége.
Et les plaines étaient toutes blanches de neige.
Napoléon passa, sa lorgnette à la main.
Les grenadiers disaient : Ce sera pour demain.
Des vieillards, des enfants pieds nus, des femmes grosses
Se sauvaient; je songeais; je regardais les fosses.
Le soir on fit les feux, et le colonel vint,
Il dit : — Hugo? — Présent. — Combien d’hommes? — Cent-vingt.
— Bien. Prenez avec vous la compagnie entière,
Et faites-vous tuer. — Où? — Dans le cimetière.
Et je lui répondis : — C’est en effet l’endroit.

J’avais ma gourde, il but et je bus; un vent froid
Soufflait. Il dit : — La mort n’est pas loin. Capitaine,
J’aime la vie, et vivre est la chose certaine,
Mais rien ne sait mourir comme les bons vivants.
Moi, je donne mon cœur, mais ma peau, je la vends.
Gloire aux belles! Trinquons. Votre poste est le pire. —

Car notre colonel avait le mot pour rire.
Il reprit : — Enjambez le mur et le fossé,
Et restez là; ce point est un peu menacé,
Ce cimetière étant la clef de la bataille.
Gardez-le. — Bien. — Ayez quelques bottes de paille.
— On n’en a point. — Dormez par terre. — On dormira.
— Votre tambour est-il brave? — Comme Barra.
— Bien. Qu’il batte la charge au hasard et dans l’ombre,
Il faut avoir le bruit quand on n’a pas le nombre.
Et je dis au gamin : — Entends-tu, gamin? — Oui,
Mon capitaine, dit l’enfant, presque enfoui

Sous le givre et la neige, et riant. — La bataille,
Reprit le colonel, sera toute à mitraille;
Moi, j’aime l’arme blanche, et je blâme l’abus
Qu’on fait des lâchetés féroces de l’obus;
Le sabre est un vaillant, la bombe une traîtresse;
Mais laissons l’empereur faire. Adieu, le temps presse.
Restez ici demain sans broncher. Au revoir.
Vous ne vous en irez qu’à six heures du soir. —
Le colonel partit. Je dis : — Par file à droite!
Et nous entrâmes tous dans une enceinte étroite;
De l’herbe, un mur autour, une église au milieu,
Et dans l’ombre, au-dessus des tombes, un bon Dieu.

Un cimetière sombre, avec de blanches lames,
Cela rappelle un peu la mer. Nous crénelâmes
Le mur, et je donnai le mot d’ordre, et je fis
Installer l’ambulance au pied du crucifix.
— Soupons, dis-je, et dormons. La neige cachait l’herbe;
Nos capotes étaient en loques; c’est superbe,
Si l’on veut, mais c’est dur quand le temps est mauvais.
Je pris pour oreiller une fosse; j’avais

Les pieds transis, ayant des bottes sans semelle;
Et bientôt, capitaine et soldats pêle-mêle,
Nous ne bougeâmes plus, endormis sur les morts.

Cela dort, les soldats; cela n’a ni remords,
Ni crainte, ni pitié, n’étant pas responsable;
Et, glacé par la neige ou brûlé par le sable,
Cela dort; et d’ailleurs, se battre rend joyeux.
Je leur criai : Bonsoir! et je fermai les yeux;
À la guerre on n’a pas le temps des pantomimes.
Le ciel était maussade, il neigeait, nous dormîmes.
Nous avions ramassé des outils de labour,
Et nous en avions fait un grand feu. Mon tambour
L’attisa, puis s’en vint près de moi faire un somme.
C’était un grand soldat, fils, que ce petit homme.
Le crucifix resta debout, comme un gibet.
Bref, le feu s’éteignit; et la neige tombait.
Combien fut-on de temps à dormir de la sorte?

Je veux, si je le sais, que le diable m’emporte!
Nous dormions bien. Dormir, c’est essayer la mort.
À la guerre c’est bon. J’eus froid, très-froid d’abord;
Puis je rêvai; je vis en rêve des squelettes
Et des spectres, avec de grosses épaulettes;
Par degrés, lentement, sans quitter mon chevet,
J’eus la sensation que le jour se levait,
Mes paupières sentaient de la clarté dans l’ombre;
Tout à coup, à travers mon sommeil, un bruit sombre
Me secoua, c’était au canon ressemblant;
Je m’éveillai; j’avais quelque chose de blanc
Sur les yeux; doucement, sans choc, sans violence,
La neige nous avait tous couverts en silence
D’un suaire, et j’y fis, en me dressant un trou;
Un boulet, qui nous vint je ne sais trop par où,
M’éveilla tout à fait; je lui dis : Passe au large!
Et je criai : — Tambour, debout! et bats la charge!

Cent-vingt têtes alors, ainsi qu’un archipel,
Sortirent de la neige; un sergent fit l’appel,
Et l’aube se montra, rouge, joyeuse et lente;
On eût cru voir sourire une bouche sanglante.

Je me mis à penser à ma mère; le vent

Semblait me parler bas; à la guerre souvent
Dans le lever du jour c'est la mort qui se lève.
Je songeais. Tout d'abord nous eûmes une trêve;
Les deux coups de canon n'étaient rien qu'un signal,
La musique parfois s'envole avant le bal
Et fait danser en l'air une ou deux notes vaines.
La nuit avait figé notre sang dans nos veines,
Mais sentir le combat venir, nous réchauffait.
L'armée allait sur nous s'appuyer en effet;
Nous étions les gardiens du centre, et la poignée
D'hommes sur qui la bombe, ainsi qu'une cognée,
Va s'acharner; et j'eusse aimé mieux être ailleurs.
Je mis mes gens le long du mur; en tirailleurs.
Et chacun se berçait de la chance peu sûre
D'un bon grade à travers une bonne blessure;
À la guerre on se fait tuer pour réussir.
Mon lieutenant, garçon qui sortait de Saint-Cyr,
Me cria : — Le matin est une aimable chose;
Quel rayon de soleil charmant! La neige est rose!
Capitaine, tout brille et rit! quel frais azur!
Comme ce paysage est blanc, paisible et pur!
— Cela va devenir terrible, répondis-je.
Et je songeais au Rhin, aux Alpes, à l'Adige,

À tous nos fiers combats sinistres d'autrefois.

Brusquement la bataille éclata. Six cents voix
Énormes, se jetant la flamme à pleines bouches,
S'insultèrent du haut des collines farouches,
Toute la plaine fut un abîme fumant,
Et mon tambour battait la charge éperdûment.
Aux canons se mêlait une fanfare altière,
Et les bombes pleuvaient sur notre cimetière,
Comme si l'on cherchait à tuer les tombeaux;
On voyait du clocher s'envoler les corbeaux;

Je me souviens qu’un coup d’obus troua la terre,
Et le mort apparut stupéfait dans sa bière,
Comme si le tapage humain le réveillait.
Puis un brouillard cacha le soleil. Le boulet
Et la bombe faisaient un bruit épouvantable.
Berthier, prince d’empire et vice-connétable,

Chargea sur notre droite un corps hanovrien
Avec trente escadrons, et l’on ne vit plus rien
Qu’une brume sans fond, de bombes étoilée;
Tant toute la bataille et toute la mêlée
Avaient dans le brouillard tragique disparu.
Un nuage tombé par terre, horrible, accru
Par des vomissements immenses de fumées,
Enfants, c’est là-dessous qu’étaient les deux armées;
La neige en cette nuit flottait comme un duvet,
Et l’on s’exterminait, ma foi, comme on pouvait.
On faisait de son mieux. Pensif, dans les décombres,
Je voyais mes soldats rôder comme des ombres;
Spectres le long du mur rangés en espalier;
Et ce champ me faisait un effet singulier,
Des cadavres dessous et dessus des fantômes.
Quelques hameaux flambaient; au loin brûlaient des chaumes.
Puis la brume où du Harz on entendait le cor
Trouva moyen de croître et d’épaissir encor,

Et nous ne vîmes plus que notre cimetière;
À midi nous avions notre mur pour frontière,
Comme par une main noire, dans de la nuit,
Nous nous sentîmes prendre, et tout s’évanouit.
Notre église semblait un rocher dans l’écume.
La mitraille voyait fort clair dans cette brume,
Nous tenait compagnie, écrasait le chevet
De l’église, et la croix de pierre, et nous prouvait
Que nous n’étions pas seuls dans cette plaine obscure.
Nous avions faim, mais pas de soupe; on se procure
Avec peine à manger dans un tel lieu. Voilà

Que la grêle de feu tout à coup redoubla.
La mitraille, c’est fort gênant; c’est de la pluie;
Seulement ce qui tombe et ce qui vous ennuie,
Ce sont des grains de flamme et non des gouttes d’eau.
Des gens à qui l’on met sur les yeux un bandeau,
C’était nous. Tout croulait sous les obus, le cloître,
L’église et le clocher, et je voyais décroître
Les ombres que j’avais autour de moi debout;
Une de temps en temps tombait. — On meurt beaucoup,
Dit un sergent pensif comme un loup dans un piége;
Puis il reprit, montrant les fosses sous la neige :
— Pourquoi nous donne-t-on ce champ déjà meublé? —
Nous luttions. C’est le sort des hommes et du blé
D’être fauchés sans voir la faulx. Un petit nombre
De fantômes rôdait encor dans la pénombre;
Mon gamin de tambour continuait son bruit;
Nous tirions par-dessus le mur presque détruit.

Mes enfants, vous avez un jardin; la mitraille
Était sur nous, gardiens de cette âpre muraille,
Comme vous sur les fleurs avec votre arrosoir.
— Vous ne vous en irez qu’à six heures du soir.
Je songeais, méditant tout bas cette consigne.
Des jets d’éclairs mêlés à des plumes de cygne,
Des flammèches rayant dans l’ombre les flocons,
C’est tout ce que nos yeux pouvaient voir. — Attaquons!
Me dit le sergent. — Qui? dis-je, on ne voit personne.
— Mais on entend. Les voix parlent; le clairon sonne.
Partons, sortons; la mort crache sur nous ici;
Nous sommes sous la bombe et l’obus. — Restons-y.
J’ajoutai : — C’est sur nous que tombe la bataille.
Nous sommes le pivot de l’action. — Je bâille,
Dit le sergent. — Le ciel, les champs, tout était noir;
Mais quoiqu’en pleine nuit, nous étions loin du soir,
Et je me répétais tout bas : Jusqu’à six heures.
— Morbleu! nous aurons peu d’occasions meilleures
Pour avancer! me dit mon lieutenant. Sur quoi,

Un boulet l’emporta. Je n’avais guère foi
Au succès; la victoire au fond n’est qu’une garce.
Une blême lueur, dans le brouillard éparse,
Éclairait vaguement le cimetière. Au loin
Rien de distinct, sinon que l’on avait besoin
De nous pour recevoir sur nos têtes les bombes.

L’empereur nous avait mis là, parmi ces tombes;
Mais, seuls, criblés d’obus et rendant coups pour coups,
Nous ne devinions pas ce qu’il faisait de nous.
Nous étions, au milieu de ce combat, la cible.
Tenir bon, et durer le plus longtemps possible,
Tâcher de n’être morts qu’à six heures du soir,
En attendant, tuer, c’était notre devoir.
Nous tirions au hasard, noirs de poudre, farouches;
Ne prenant que le temps de mordre les cartouches,
Nos soldats combattaient et tombaient sans parler.
— Sergent, dis-je, voit-on l’ennemi reculer?
— Non. — Que voyez-vous? — Rien. — Ni moi. — C’est le déluge,

Mais en feu. — Voyez-vous nos gens? — Non. Si j’en juge
Par le nombre de coups qu’à présent nous tirons,
Nous sommes bien quarante. — Un grognard à chevrons
Qui tiraillait pas loin de moi dit : — On est trente.
Tout était neige et nuit; la bise pénétrante
Soufflait, et, grelottants, nous regardions pleuvoir
Un gouffre de points blancs dans un abîme noir.
La bataille pourtant semblait devenir pire.
C’est qu’un royaume était mangé par un empire!
On devinait derrière un voile un choc affreux;
On eût dit des lions se dévorant entr’eux;
C’était comme un combat des géants de la fable;
On entendait le bruit des décharges, semblable
À des écroulements énormes; les faubourgs
De la ville d’Eylau prenaient feu; les tambours
Redoublaient leur musique horrible, et sous la nue
Six cents canons faisaient la basse continue;

On se massacrait; rien ne semblait décidé;
La France jouait là son plus grand coup de dé;
Le bon Dieu de là-haut était-il pour ou contre?
Quelle ombre! et je tirais de temps en temps ma montre.

Par intervalle un cri troublait ce champ muet,
Et l’on voyait un corps gisant qui remuait.
Nous étions fusillés l’un après l’autre, un râle
Immense remplissait cette ombre sépulcrale.
Les rois ont les soldats comme vous vos jouets.
Je levais mon épée, et je la secouais
Au-dessus de ma tête, et je criais : Courage!
J’étais sourd et j’étais ivre, tant avec rage
Les coups de foudre étaient par d’autres coups suivis;
Soudain mon bras pendit, mon bras droit, et je vis
Mon épée à mes pieds, qui m’était échappée;
J’avais un bras cassé; je ramassai l’épée
Avec l’autre, et la pris dans ma main gauche : — Amis!
Se faire aussi casser le bras gauche est permis!
Criai-je, et je me mis à rire, chose utile,
Car le soldat n’est point content qu’on le mutile,
Et voir le chef un peu blessé ne déplaît point.

Mais quelle heure était-il? Je n’avais plus qu’un poing,
Et j’en avais besoin pour lever mon épée;
Mon autre main battait mon flanc, de sang trempée,
Et je ne pouvais plus tirer ma montre. Enfin
Mon tambour s’arrêta : — Drôle, as-tu peur? — J’ai faim,
Me répondit l’enfant. En ce moment la plaine
Eut comme une secousse, et fut brusquement pleine
D’un cri qui jusqu’au ciel sinistre s’éleva.
Je me sentais faiblir; tout un homme s’en va
Par une plaie; un bras cassé, cela ruisselle;
Causer avec quelqu’un soutient quand on chancelle;
Mon sergent me parla; je dis au hasard : Oui,
Car je ne voulais pas tomber évanoui.
Soudain le feu cessa, la nuit sembla moins noire.

Et l’on criait : Victoire! et je criai : Victoire!
J’aperçus des clartés qui s’approchaient de nous.
Sanglant, sur une main et sur les deux genoux
Je me traînai; je dis : — Voyons où nous en sommes.
J’ajoutai : — Debout, tous! Et je comptai mes hommes.
— Présent! dit le sergent. — Présent! dit le gamin.
Je vis mon colonel venir, l’épée en main.
— Par qui donc la bataille a-t-elle été gagnée?
— Par vous, dit-il. — La neige était de sang baignée.
Il reprit : — C’est bien vous, Hugo? c’est votre voix?
— Oui. — Combien de vivants êtes-vous ici? — Trois.

CHOIX ENTRE DEUX PASSANTS

Je vis la Mort, je vis la Honte; toutes deux
Marchaient au crépuscule au fond du bois hideux.

L’herbe informe était brune et d’un souffle agitée.

Et sur un cheval mort la Mort était montée;
La Honte cheminait sur un cheval pourri.

Des vagues oiseaux noirs on entendait le cri.

Et la Honte me dit : — Je m’appelle la Joie.
Je vais au bonheur. Viens. L’or, la pourpre, la soie,

Les festins, les palais, les prêtres, les bouffons,
Le rire triomphal sous les vastes plafonds,
Les richesses en hâte ouvrant leurs sacs de piastres,
Les parcs, éden nocturne aux grands arbres pleins d’astres,
Les femmes accourant avec une aube aux fronts,
La fanfare, à sa bouche appuyant les clairons,
Fière, et faisant sonner la gloire dans le cuivre,

Tout cela t’appartient; viens, tu n’as qu’à me suivre.

Et je lui répondis : — Ton cheval sent mauvais.

La Mort me dit : — Mon nom est Devoir; et je vais
Au sépulcre, à travers l’angoisse et le prodige.

— As-tu derrière toi de la place? lui dis-je.

Et depuis lors, tournés vers l’ombre où Dieu paraît,
Nous faisons route ensemble au fond de la forêt.

ÉCRIT EN EXIL

L’heureux n’est pas le vrai, le droit n’est pas le nombre;
Un vaincu toujours triste, un vainqueur toujours sombre,
Le sort n’a-t-il donc pas d’autre oscillation?
Toujours la même roue et le même Ixion!
Qui que vous soyez, Dieu vers qui tout me ramène,
Si le faible souffrait en vain, si l’âme humaine
N’était qu’un grain de cendre aux ouragans jeté,
Je serais mécontent de votre immensité;
Il faut, dans l’univers, fatal et pourtant libre,
Aux âmes l’équité comme aux cieux l’équilibre;
J’ai besoin de sentir de la justice au fond
Du gouffre où l’ombre avec la clarté se confond;
J’ai besoin du méchant mal à l’aise, et du crime

Retombant sur le monstre et non sur la victime;
Un Caïn triomphant importune mes yeux;
J’ai besoin, quand le mal est puissant et joyeux,
D’un certain grondement là-haut, et de l’entrée
Du tonnerre au-dessus de la tête d’Atrée.

LA COLÈRE DU BRONZE

*

Et voilà donc l'emploi que vous faites, vivants,
De moi l'airain, vous cendre éparse aux quatre vents!

Ainsi la certitude est morte! Ainsi la rue
Offre en exemple un fourbe à la foule accourue,
Et les passants diront du plus vil des bourreaux,
D'un voleur, d'un goujat : Ce doit être un héros!
La statue est un lâche abus de confiance!
Et l'on verra le peuple, ému, plein de croyance,
Ayant foi dans le bronze infaillible et serein,

Découvrir son grand front pour un faquin d'airain!

Vous allumez la braise et vous creusez le moule;
Mon bloc fumant se gonfle et tombe, s'enfle et croule;
Vous fouillez mon flot rouge avec des crocs de fer
Comme font des satans remuant un enfer;
Vous attisez avec le zinc incendiaire
Mon cratère où bascule et s'épand la chaudière,

Et tout mon dur métal devient une eau de feu,
Et j'écume, et je dis : Hommes, faites-moi dieu!
J'y consens. Et je brûle avec furie et joie.
Faites. Dans mon tourment mon triomphe flamboie.
Quiconque voit ma pourpre auguste est ébloui.
Le noir moule béant, sous la terre enfoui,
S'ouvre à moi comme un gouffre obscur au fond d'un antre,
Et ma voix sombre gronde et crie : Oui, c'est bien, j'entre,
Je serai Washington!... — Je sors, je suis Morny!

Ah! sous le ciel sacré, sous l'azur infini,
Soyez maudits! Rugir dans la fournaise ardente,
Moi le bronze! pour qui? Pour Gutenberg? Pour Dante?
Pour Thrasybule? Non. Pour Billault, pour Dupin!

J’attends Léonidas, on me jette Scapin.
Mais de quoi donc sont faits les hommes? C’est à croire
Que l’ordure est pour vous ressemblante à la gloire;
Que votre âme est troublée au point de ne plus voir;
Et que le bien, le mal, le crime, le devoir,
Bayard, Judas, Barbès le preux, Georgey l’impie,

Flottent confusément sous votre myopie!
Vous hissez sur un faîte abject le facies
De Fould, ou le profil abruti de Siéyès,
Et vous avez le goût de regarder sans cesse
En haut, bien au-dessus de vos fronts, la bassesse.
*

Savez-vous que je suis le métal souverain?
Que j’ai mis sur Corinthe un quadrige d’airain,
Et que mes dieux, mes rois, mes victoires ailées,
Font de l’ombre sur vous du haut des Propylées?
Savez-vous qu’autrefois j’étais sacré? J’avais
L’impossibilité d’être vil et mauvais;

Et c’est pourquoi, vivants, je valais mieux que l’homme;
Je connaissais Athène et j’ignorais Sodome.
Les Grecs disaient de moi : Le bronze est un héros.
J’étais Jupiter, Mars, Pallas, Diane, Éros;
On me voyait durer autant qu’un vers d’Eschyle;
Et j’étais pour les Grecs la chair du grand Achille.
Ces populaces, foule aux yeux pleins de clarté,
Honoraient ma noirceur et ma virginité;
Les portefaix de Sparte et les marchandes d’herbes
Ne me regardaient point sans devenir superbes,
Et j’étais à tel point l’âme de la cité
Que les petits enfants bégayaient : Liberté!

Aujourd’hui, sur un socle, en vos places publiques
Pour qui le ciel n’a plus que des rayons obliques,
Vous mettez la statue énorme d’un pasquin

Qui devient un colosse et reste un mannequin,
D’un chenapan, d’un gueux qui prend un air d’archonte
Et qui se drape avec orgueil dans de la honte.
C’est de l’opprobre altier et qui se tient debout.
On monte au Panthéon par le trou de l’égout.
Les voilà tous, Magnan, puis Delangle, Espinasse,

Puis Troplong, ce qui rampe avec ce qui menace,
Spectres hideux qu’entoure, en plein air, au soleil,
Le brouhaha des voix inutiles, pareil
À l’agitation du vent dans les branchages.
Et je suis le complice! Et les bardes, les sages,

Les vaillants, les martyrs à mourir acharnés,
Les grands hommes que j’ai tant de fois incarnés,
Ne m’ont pas défendu de cette ignominie
D’être pantin après avoir été génie!

Vous condamnez l’airain aux avilissements.
Comme vous, je trahis et, comme vous, je mens.
Je trahis la vertu, je trahis la durée;
Je trahis la colère, âpre muse azurée,
Qui rend et fait justice, et n’a pas d’autre soin;
Et devant Juvénal je suis un faux témoin.
Chute et deuil! Je trahis le lever de l’étoile,
Qui dans l’ombre, à travers la nuit, son chaste voile,
Cherchant à l’horizon des bronzes radieux,
Aperçoit des bandits au lieu de voir des dieux!

Ma fournaise m’indigne, à mal faire occupée.
Ceux qui vendent la loi, ceux qui vendent l’épée,
Brumaire avec Leclerc, Décembre avec Morny,
Un tas d’ingrédients, faux droits, sceptre impuni,

Le vieil autel, le vieux billot, la vieille chaîne,
Auxquels on a mêlé la conscience humaine,

Tout cela dans la cuve obscure flotte et fond.
Et la statue en sort, vile.
Le Dieu profond
Vous donne les héros, les penseurs, les prophètes,
Et le bronze, et voilà, vous, ce que vous en faites.
Vous donnez le cachot à Christophe Colomb,
À Dante l’exil triste et sa chape de plomb,

À Jésus le calvaire et sa risée ingrate,
À Morus l’échafaud, la ciguë à Socrate,
Le bûcher à Jean Huss, et le bronze aux valets.
*

Je sais bien qu’on dira : Passez, méprisez-les.
Ce sont des gredins.
Soit. Mais ce sont des statues.
Mais ces indignités sont de splendeur vêtues.
Mais on croit tellement le bronze honnête, et sûr
Du bon choix des héros qu’il dresse dans l’azur,
On est si convaincu que lorsque, sous les arbres,
Au milieu des enfants rieurs, parmi les marbres,
Sur les degrés d’un temple ou sur l’arche d’un pont,
Le bronze montre au peuple un homme, il en répond;
Mais tous ces malfaiteurs, mais tous ces misérables,
Devenus au passant stupide vénérables,
Ont si profondément, de leurs pieds de métal,
Pris racine au granit puissant du piédestal;

J’ai mis sur leur bassesse une si grande armure,
Qu’en vain l’âpre aquilon sur leurs têtes murmure!
Ils sont là, fermes, froids, rayonnants, ténébreux,
L’heure, goutte du siècle, en vain tombe sur eux;
Et vienne la tempête et vienne la nuée,
La foudre et son éclair, la trombe et sa huée,
Qu’importe! ils sont d’airain; et l’airain jamais vieux
Rit des coups d’ongles noirs de l’hiver pluvieux.
Novembre a beau venir après juillet; l’année,

Cette dent qui mord tout, les respecte, indignée!
L’ondée, en les rouillant, les conserve; leurs fronts
Se dressent immortels, plus fiers sous plus d’affronts;

Sur eux s’abattent neige, averse, givre, orage,
Et tout le tourbillon des bises, folle rage,
Et la grêle insultante et le soleil rongeur,
Et, sans qu’il leur en reste une ombre, une rougeur,
Tous les soufflets du temps, ils les ont sur la joue;
De sorte que le bronze éternise la boue.

Tel homme, à quelque crime effroyable rêvant,
Et qu’on flétrira mort, vous l’adorez vivant;
Vous le faites statue avant qu’il soit fantôme;
Vous ne distinguez pas le géant de l’atome,
Vous ne distinguez pas le faux vainqueur du vrai;
Un jour Tacite, un jour Salluste et Mézeray
Diront : Ce scélérat a trahi la patrie,
Et traîneront sa gloire abjecte à la voirie;
Vous l’avez déclaré sublime en attendant.
Moi sur qui vous mettez plus d’un masque impudent,
J’ai l’instinct qui vous manque, hélas! et dans le reître
Qui vous semble un héros, souvent je sens un traître.

Ah! fourmilière humaine! il vous importe peu
Qu’un immonde stylite offense le ciel bleu.
Faire de la statue une prostituée!
Votre prunelle, au jour de cave habituée,
N’a plus d’éclairs, sourit au mal, se plaît à voir
L’ombre que du plateau d’un socle blanc ou noir

Jette le courtisan, le fripon, le transfuge,
Et l’aboiement du chien semble la voix d’un juge.
Les seuls dogues grondants protestent vaguement.

L’histoire ne peut plus me croire. Un monument
La déconcerte, ayant pour auréole un crime.

Pourtant j’étais jadis l’avertisseur sublime;
Je suis l’apothéose ou bien le châtiment.
Mon immobilité vaut mon bouillonnement.
Ardent, je suis la lave, et froid, je suis le bronze.
*

Quoi! pas même un Néron! pas même un Louis onze!
J’eusse rougi du maître, on me livre au laquais!
Dans les noirs carrefours, dans les parcs, sur les quais,
Je suis Dave ou Frontin, et j’indigne Pétrone!
Quoi! pas même un opprobre avec une couronne!
Pas même une infamie ayant droit au laurier!
Oui, c’est Dupin, Dupin qu’on prend dans son terrier,
Et qu’on fait bronze! Il a son temple, il est au centre.
Mort, il se tient droit, lui qui vécut à plat ventre!
Et lui, c’est moi! L’airain moule, incarne et subit
Quiconque a retourné lestement son habit.

Oui, voyez, c’est bien lui, lourd fuyard, faux augure;
La honte le déforme, et je le transfigure!
Plus souillé qu’un haillon qu’on brocante au bazar,
J’en suis à regretter la face de César.
C’était du moins le monstre, à présent c’est le drôle.
Je ressuscite, ô lâche et misérable rôle,
Tel affreux gueux, qui n’est pas même un empereur!
Je me dresse, assombri, sous ce masque d’horreur,
Dans le forum, où nul, hélas! ne délibère.
Honteux d’être Séjan, je me voudrais Tibère.

Il fut du moins auguste en même temps que vil.
Si de face il fut singe, il fut dieu de profil.
L’histoire le revêt d’une honte immortelle;
Et son abjection sans bornes n’est pas telle
Qu’on se sente Troplong et Baroche au-dessous.

Oh! vous me sauverez de ce bagne, gros sous!
Vous me délivrerez. Le peuple sur la claie

Traînera la statue émiettée en monnaie,
Et je serai joyeux que Chodruc et Vadé

Me jettent aux ruisseaux, moi le bronze évadé.
Ô penseur, deviens peuple! Ô bronze, deviens cuivre!
Car c'est une façon superbe de revivre,
Et rien n'est plus sublime, et rien n'est plus charmant
Que de se disperser sur tous, à tout moment,
Que d'être l'obole humble et de bienfaits remplie,
Le denier qui va, vient, court et se multiplie,
Et qui, chétif, obscur, trivial, triomphant,
Donne au vieillard la vie et la joie à l'enfant.
On méprisait ce bronze, et ce cuivre on l'estime.
Plutôt qu'être Troplong mieux vaut être un centime,
Et lorsqu'il fut Dupin aux yeux de tout Paris,
L'airain s'en débarbouille avec du vert-de-gris.

Donc, j'attends. Quelque jour j'aurai cette revanche.
Déjà le pavé tremble et le piédestal penche,

Car tout a ses retours. Le reflux est de droit.
Jamais le genre humain ne reste au même endroit.
De la main du hasard l'homme parfois accepte
On ne sait quels élus de la fortune inepte;
Il en fait des dieux; quitte, et je l'aime ainsi mieux,
À faire des liards ensuite avec ces dieux!

FRANCE ET ÂME

Je m'étais figuré que lorsque cet Etna,
La Révolution, prit feu, s'ouvrit, tonna,
Rugit, fendit la terre, et cracha sur le monde
Sa lave alors terrible et maintenant féconde,
Que, lorsque, vierge altière et proclamant nos droits,
L'Idée offrit la guerre au groupe affreux des rois,
Lorsqu'apparut, hautaine, à travers les fumées,

Cette Diane, en laisse ayant quatorze armées,
Que lorsque Danton prit l’Europe corps à corps,
Que lorsqu’on entendit les meutes et les cors,
Quand la forêt laissa voir dans sa transparence

L’âpre chasse donnée aux tyrans par la France,
Moi, pensif, regardant Kléber et Mirabeau,
Jean-Jacques, ce tison, Voltaire, ce flambeau,
Je m’étais, je l’avoue, imaginé qu’en somme
L’écroulement des rois c’est le sacre de l’homme,
Que nous avions vaincu la matière et la mort,
Et que le résultat de cet illustre effort,
Le triomphe, l’orgueil, l’honneur, le phénomène,
C’était d’avoir grandi jusqu’aux cieux l’âme humaine;
C’était d’avoir montré dans l’aube qui sourit
L’homme beau par le glaive et plus beau par l’esprit;
C’était d’avoir prouvé que cet être qui change,
Sur son épaule d’homme a des ailes d’archange,
Qu’il peut s’épanouir demi-dieu tout à coup,
Et que, lorsqu’il lui plaît de se dresser debout,
Son immense rayon mystérieux éclaire
Toutes les profondeurs de haine et de colère
Et leur verse l’aurore et les emplit d’amour;
J’avais pensé que c’est pour accroître le jour,
Pour embraser le cœur, pour incendier l’âme,
Pour tirer de l’esprit humain toute sa flamme,
Que nos pères, Français plus grands que les Romains,
Avaient pris et tordu le passé dans leurs mains,
Et jeté dans le feu de la forge profonde
Ce combustible utile et hideux, le vieux monde;
Je m’étais dit que l’homme avait soif, avait faim
D’être une âme immortelle, et qu’il avait enfin

Su montrer et prouver sa divinité fière
Par l’agrandissement subit de la lumière
Et par la délivrance auguste des vivants;
J’ai dit que ni les rois, ni les flots, ni les vents,

Ne pouvaient désormais rien contre un tel prodige;
Qu’on avait pour cela passé le Rhin, l’Adige,
Le Nil, l’Èbre, et crié sur les monts : Liberté!
Oui, j’avais cru pouvoir dire qu’une clarté
Sortait de ce grand siècle, et que cette étincelle
Rattachait l’âme humaine à l’âme universelle,
Qu’ici-bas, où le sceptre est un triste hochet,
La solidarité des hommes ébauchait
La solidarité des mondes, composée
De toute la bonté, de toute la pensée,
Et de toute la vie éparse dans les cieux;
Oui, je croyais, les yeux fixés sur nos aïeux,
Que l’homme avait prouvé superbement son âme.

Aussi, lorsqu’à cette heure un Allemand proclame

Zéro, pour but final, et me dit : — Ô néant,
Salut! — j’en fais ici l’aveu, je suis béant;
Et quand un grave Anglais, correct, bien mis, beau linge,
Me dit : — Dieu t’a fait homme et moi je te fais singe;
Rends-toi digne à présent d’une telle faveur! —
Cette promotion me laisse un peu rêveur.

DÉNONCÉ À CELUI QUI CHASSA LES VENDEURS DU TEMPLE

La vieille en pleurs disait : — La misère en est cause,
Pour mon bon vieux défunt je n’aurai pas grand’chose,
Un seul cierge, un seul prêtre, et deux mots d’oraison
À la porte. On peut bien entrer dans la maison,
Avoir l’autel, avoir les saints, avoir les châsses,
Tout le clergé chantant des actions de grâces,
Des psaumes, des bedeaux, tout; mais il faut payer,
Hélas! et moi qui dois trois termes de loyer,
Je n’ai pas de quoi faire enterrer mon pauvre homme. —

Ainsi parlait la veuve, et je songeais à Rome.
Quoi! le riche et le pauvre ont des enterrements
Différents; l'un a droit aux embellissements,

L'autre pas; l'un descend chez les morts, l'autre y tombe,
Et l'un n'est pas l'égal de l'autre dans la tombe!

Quoi! Dieu n'est pas gratis! Quoi! prêtres, le Martyr,
Le Saint, l'Ange, ne veut de sa boîte sortir
Que pour de l'or; sinon vous refermez l'armoire
Sur le ciel, sur la Vierge et sa robe de moire,
Et sur l'enfant Jésus rose et couleur de chair!
Quoi! votre crucifix coûte plus ou moins cher,
Selon qu'il va devant ou qu'il marche derrière!
Prêtres, vous mesurez au cercueil la prière;
Longue, si le cadavre est grand; courte, s'il n'est
Qu'un méchant pauvre mort, — le prêtre s'y connaît, —
Cloué dans une bière étroite et misérable!
Prêtres, le hêtre aux champs, l'aulne, l'ormeau, l'érable,
Versent l'ombre pour rien; Mai ne dit pas aux prés :

Les fleurs, c'est tant. Voyez mon tarif. Vous paierez
Tant pour la violette et tant pour la lavande!
Ah! Dieu veut qu'on le donne et non pas qu'on le vende!
La mort fut toujours juste et toujours nivela;
Reconnaissez au moins cette égalité-là;
Respectez le cercueil sans mépriser la bière;
Faites le même accueil à la même poussière,
Sur le même silence ayez le même chant.
Quoi! je cherche un apôtre et je trouve un marchand!
C'est d'un comptoir que part l'escalier de la chaire.
Que diraient-ils de voir leurs psaumes à l'enchère,
Ces hommes qui songeaient, pâles, dans le désert?
Ah! ce De Profundis superfin qui ne sert
Qu'aux riches, et qu'on met en musique, et qu'on brode,
Que Jésus n'aurait pas et qu'obtiendrait Hérode,

Ô terreur! il n’en faut pas tant pour faire Dieu
Farouche, et pour changer en ciel noir le ciel bleu!
La prière vendue a l’accent du blasphème.

Hélas! c’est de la nuit que dans les cœurs on sème.
L’ombre, au-dessus de vous, mages qui brocantez,
Efface brusquement toutes les vérités.
Quoi! vous ne voyez pas l’éclipse formidable!
Vous qui savez combien l’abîme est insondable,
Vous vous faites vendeurs!
Prêtres, l’adossement
De l’échoppe suffit pour que le firmament
Épaississe au-dessus de l’église ses voiles;
La boutique retire au temple les étoiles.

LES ENTERREMENTS CIVILS

Oh! certes, je sais bien, moi souffrant et rêvant,
Que tout cet inconnu qui m’entoure est vivant,
Que le néant n’est pas, et que l’Ombre est une Âme;
La cendre ne parvient qu’à me prouver la flamme;
Faire voir clairement le ciel, l’éternel port,
La vie enfin, c’est là le succès de la mort;
Oh! certes, je voudrais qu’au ténébreux passage
Mon cercueil, esquif sombre, eût pour pilote un sage,
Un pontife, un apôtre, un auguste songeur,
Un mage, ayant au front l’attente, la rougeur
Et l’éblouissement de la profonde aurore;
Je voudrais qu’à la fosse où meurt le rien sonore,
Un sénateur du vrai, du réel, un magnat
Du sépulcre, un docteur du ciel, m’accompagnât;
Oui, je réclamerais cette sainte prière!
Devant la formidable et noire fondrière,

Oui, je trouverais bon que pour moi, loin du bruit,
Une voix s’élevât et parlât à la nuit!

Car c’est l’heure où se fend du haut en bas le voile;
C’est dans cette nuit-là que se lève l’étoile!
Je le voudrais! et rien ne me serait meilleur
Qu’une telle prière après un tel malheur,
Ma vie ayant été dure et funèbre, en somme.
Mais, ô Toi! dis, réponds, parle. Est-ce que cet homme
Qui sait mal, et qui fait exprès de mal savoir,
Qui pour un dogme obscur déserte un clair devoir,
Qui prêche le miracle et rit du phénomène,
Mal penché sur l’angoisse et sur l’énigme humaine,
Qui, d’un côté bassesse et de l’autre fureur,
Flétrit l’escroc forçat et l’adore empereur,

Qui dit au genre humain : Malheur, si tu raisonnes!
Qui damne et ment, qui met l’abîme en trois personnes,
Qui rêve un univers petit, sinistre et noir,
Fait de notre seul globe, et qui ne veut pas voir
Luire en tous tes soleils toutes tes évidences,
Qui crèverait cet œil, l’astre où tu te condenses,
S’il pouvait, et ferait la nuit sur l’horizon,
Qui tarife l’autel, l’antienne, l’oraison,
Qui, par devant superbe et vendu par derrière,
Offre au riche et refuse au pauvre sa prière,
Si le pauvre ne peut le payer assez cher;
Est-ce que ce vivant à regret, que la chair
Indigne, et qui jadis nia l’âme des femmes,

Qui préfère à l’hymen, aux purs épithalames,

Aux nids, ce suicide affreux, le célibat;
Qui voudrait qu’à son gré le firmament tombât,
Qui devant Josué soufflette Galilée,
Qui dresse un noir bûcher dans ton ombre étoilée,
Et tâche d’éclipser l’aube au sommet du mont,
Torquemada là-bas, chez nous Laubardemont;
Qui, dans l’Inde, en Espagne, au Mexique, aux Cévennes,

Saigna l’humanité gisante aux quatre veines,
Qui voit la guerre, et chante un Te Deum dessus,
Qui repaierait Judas et reclouerait Jésus,
Indulgent à qui règne et sévère à qui souffre,
Ayant sous lui l’erreur comme l’onde a le gouffre,
Sorte d’homme terrible où l’on peut naufrager;
Dis, est-ce que moi, pâle et flottant passager
Qui veux la clarté vraie et non la lueur fausse,
Je dois faire appeler cet homme sur ma fosse?
Est-ce que sur la tombe il est le bien venu?
Est-ce qu’il est celui qu’écoute l’Inconnu?
Est-ce que sa voix porte au delà de la terre?
Est-ce qu’il a le droit de parler au mystère?
Est-ce qu’il est ton prêtre? Est-ce qu’il sait ton nom?

Je vois Dieu dans les cieux faire signe que non.

LE PRISONNIER

Cet homme a pour prison l’ignominie immense.

On pouvait le tuer, mais on fut sans clémence,
Il vit.
Il est dans l’âpre et lugubre prison
Invisible, toujours debout sur l’horizon,
L’opprobre.
Cette tour a la hauteur du songe.
Sa crypte jusqu’aux lieux ignorés se prolonge,
Ses remparts ont de noirs créneaux vertigineux,
Si vains qu’on n’y pourrait pendre une corde à nœuds,
Si terribles que rien jamais ne vous procure

Une échelle appliquée à la muraille obscure.
Aucun trousseau de clefs n’ouvre ce qui n’est plus.
On est captif. Dans quoi? Dans de l’ombre. Et reclus;
Où? Dans son propre gouffre. On a sur soi le voile.

C’est fini. Deuil! Jamais on ne verra l’étoile
Ni l’azur apparaître au plafond sidéral.
Là, rien qui puisse rendre à l’affreux général
Cette virginité, la France point trahie.
Sa mémoire est déjà de lui-même haïe.
Pas d’enceinte à ce bagne épars dans tous les sens,
Qui va plus loin que tous les nuages passants,
Car l’élargissement du déshonneur imite
Un rayonnement d’astre et n’a point de limite.
Pour bâtir la prison qui jamais ne finit

La loi ne se sert pas d’airain ni de granit;
C’est la fange qu’on prend, la fange étant plus dure;
Cette bastille-là toujours vit, toujours dure,
Pleine d’un crépuscule au pâle hiver pareil,
Brume où manque l’honneur comme aux nuits le soleil,
Oubliette où l’aurore est éteinte, où médite
Ce qui reste d’une âme après qu’elle est maudite.

Ce misérable est seul dans cette ombre; son front
Est plié, car la honte est basse de plafond,
Tant l’informe cerveau du fourbe est peu lucide,
Tant est lourd à porter le poids du parricide.
Si cet homme eût voulu, la France triomphait.
Il porte au coup ce noir carcan : ce qu’il a fait.
De la déroute affreuse il fut le vil ministre.
Sa conscience nue, indignée et sinistre,
Est près de lui, disant : L’abject sort du félon,
Ganelon de Judas et toi de Ganelon.

Sois le désespéré. Dors si tu peux, je veille. —
Il entend cette voix sans cesse à son oreille.
Morne, il n’a même plus cet espoir, un danger.
Il faut qu’il reste, il faut qu’il vive, pour songer
Aux vieilles légions de France prisonnières,
Pour qu’il soit souffleté par toutes nos bannières
Frémissantes, la nuit, dans ses rêves hideux.

D’ailleurs nos aïeux morts n’auraient au milieu d’eux
Pas voulu de ce spectre, et leur grand souffle sombre
Certe, eût chassé d’abîme en abîme cette ombre,
Et fouetté, ramené, repris, poussé, traîné
Ce fuyard à la fuite à jamais condamné!
Car, grâce à lui, l’on peut cracher sur notre gloire,
Car c’est par toi, maudit, que nos preux, notre histoire,

Nos régiments, de tant de victoire étoilés,
Que Wagram, Austerlitz, Lodi, s’en sont allés
En prison, sous les yeux de l’Anglais et du Russe,
Le dos zébré du plat du sabre de la Prusse!
Inexprimable deuil!
Donc cet homme est muré
Au fond d’on ne sait quel mépris démesuré;
Le regard effrayant du genre humain l’entoure;
Il est la trahison comme Cid la bravoure.
Sa complice, la Peur, sa sœur, la Lâcheté,
Le gardent. Ce rebut vivant, ce rejeté,
Sous l’exécration de tous, sur lui vomie,
Râle, et ne peut pas plus sortir de l’infamie
Que l’écume ne peut sortir de l’Océan.
L’opprobre, ayant horreur de lui, dirait : Va-t’en,
Les anges justiciers, secouant sur cette âme
Leur glaive où la lumière, hélas, s’achève en flamme,
Crieraient : Sors d’ici! rentre au néant qui t’attend!
Qu’il ne pourrait; aucune ouverture n’étant
Possible, ô cieux profonds, hors d’une telle honte!
Cet homme est le Forçat! Qu’il descende ou qu’il monte,

Que trouve-t-il? En bas l’abjection; en haut
L’abjection. Son cœur est brûlé du fer chaud.
Le criminel, eût-il plus d’or qu’il n’en existe,
Ne corrompra jamais son crime, geôlier triste.
Deux verrous ont fermé sa porte pour jamais,
L’un qu’on nomme Strasbourg, l’autre qu’on nomme Metz.
Ah! cet infâme a mis le pied sur la patrie.

Quand une âme ici-bas est à ce point flétrie,
Lorsqu’on l’a vue au fond des forfaits se vautrer,
L’honneur libre et vivant n’y peut pas plus rentrer
Que l’abeille ne vient sur une rose morte.
Ah! le Spielberg est noir, la Bastille était forte,
Le Saint-Michel rempli de cages était haut,
Le vieux château Saint-Ange est un puissant cachot;
Mais aucun mur n’égale en épaisseur la honte.
Dieu tient ce prisonnier et lui demande compte.
Comment a-t-il changé notre armée en troupeau?

Qu’a-t-il fait des canons, des soldats, du drapeau,
Du clairon réveillant les camps, de l’espérance,
De nous tous, et combien a-t-il vendu la France?
Oh! quelle ombre de tels coupables ont sur eux!
Cave et forêt! rameaux croisés! murs douloureux!
Stigmate! abaissement! chute! dédains horribles!
Comment fuir de dessous ces branchages terribles?
Ô chiens, qu’avez-vous donc dans les dents? C’est son nom.
Il habite la faute, éternel cabanon,
Labyrinthe aux replis monstrueux et funèbres
Où les ténèbres sont derrière les ténèbres,
Geôle où l’on est captif tant qu’on est regardé.

Et qui donc maintenant dit qu’il s’est évadé?

APRÈS LES FOURCHES CAUDINES

Rome avait trop de gloire, ô dieux, vous la punîtes
Par le triomphe énorme et lâche des Samnites;
Et nous vîmes ce deuil, nous qui vivons encor.
Cela n’empêche pas l’aurore aux rayons d’or
D’éclore et d’apparaître au-dessus des collines.
Un champ de course est près des tombes Esquilines,
Et parfois, quand la foule y fourmille en tous sens,

J’y vais, l’œil vaguement fixé sur les passants.

Ce champ mène aux logis de guerre où les cohortes
Vont et viennent ainsi que dans les villes fortes;
Avril sourit, l’oiseau chante, et, dans le lointain,
Derrière les coteaux où reluit le matin,
Où les roses des bois entr’ouvrent leurs pétales,
On entend murmurer les trompettes fatales;
Et je médite, ému. J’étais aujourd’hui là.
Je ne sais pas pourquoi le soleil se voila;
Les nuages parfois dans le ciel se resserrent.
Tout à coup, à cheval et lance au poing, passèrent
Des vétérans aux fronts halés, aux larges mains.
Ils avaient l’ancien air des grands soldats romains;
Et les petits enfants accouraient pour les suivre;
Trois cavaliers, soufflant dans des buccins de cuivre,
Marchaient en tête, et comme, au front de l’escadron,
Chacun d’eux embouchait à son tour le clairon,

Sans couper la fanfare ils reprenaient haleine.
Ces gens de guerre étaient superbes dans la plaine;
Ils marchaient de leur pas antique et souverain.
Leurs boucliers portaient des méduses d’airain,
Et l’on voyait sur eux Gorgone et tous ses masques;
Ils défilaient, dressant les cimiers de leurs casques
Dignes d’être éclairés par des soleils levants,
Sous des crins de lion qui se tordaient aux vents.
Que ces hommes sont beaux! disaient les jeunes filles.
Tout souriait, les fleurs embaumaient les charmilles,
Le peuple était joyeux, le ciel était doré,
Et, songeant que c’étaient des vaincus, j’ai pleuré.

XXII

L’ÉLÉGIE DES FLÉAUX

LE POËTE
Tu ne l’as pourtant pas mérité, ma patrie!
LE CHŒUR
Oh! quel acharnement sur la grande meurtrie!
La bataille a passé, chaos sombre et tonnant.
Voici la vision des vagues maintenant.
Une meute de flots terribles, des montagnes

D’eau farouche, l’horreur dans les pâles campagnes,
Et l’apparition des torrents forcenés!
L’auguste France, en proie aux chocs désordonnés,
Semble un titan ayant de l’eau jusqu’aux épaules;
Et l’on voit une fuite immense vers les pôles
De la pluie et de l’ombre et des brouillards mouvants,
Sous la cavalerie effroyable des vents;
La mort accourt avec la rumeur d’une foule;
Tout un peuple, sous qui l’effondrement s’écroule,
Crie et se tord les bras, prêt à couler à fond;
Comme un flocon de neige un toit s’efface et fond;
Une rivière, hier dans les prés endormie,
Gronde, et subitement devient une ennemie;
Le fleuve brusque et noir surprend l’homme inquiet,
Et trahit les hameaux auxquels il souriait;
Tout tombe, égalité des chaumes et des marbres;
Les mourants sont par l’eau tordus autour des arbres;
Rien n’échappe, et la nuit monte. Profonds sanglots!
LE POËTE
Quoi! deux invasions! Après les rois, les flots!

LE CHŒUR
Deux inondations! L’onde après les vandales!
Ce n’était pas assez d’avoir eu les sandales
D’on ne sait quel césar tudesque sur nos fronts;
Ce n’était pas assez d’avoir, sous les affronts,

Vu nos drapeaux hagards frissonner dans nos villes;
Ce n’était pas assez, lorsque des hordes viles
Marchaient sur nous, souillant ce que nous adorons,
De nous être bouché l’oreille à leurs clairons;
Le deuil succède au deuil, le ravage au ravage;
L’onde fatale arrive après le roi sauvage;
Et voilà de nouveau sous un noir tourbillon
L’écrasement des blés, du verger, du sillon!
Ô désastres! ô chute! où sera le refuge
Si l’eau fait un tel gouffre et l’homme un tel déluge?
Jadis le sort frappa Rome et s’interrompit,
La laissant respirer; mais pour nous nul répit.
LE POËTE
Deux supplices. Le Nord, le Sud. L’un après l’autre.

LE CHŒUR
Hier nous avions sur nous la bête qui se vautre
Cyniquement, au gré des rois épanouis,
La guerre, et des troupeaux de canons inouïs
Nous jetant l’aboiement de l’abîme; la France
Subissait, sous un ciel d’où fuyait l’espérance,
Le bombardement lâche et tortueux, crachant
L’éclair, et foudroyant le toit, le mur, le champ,
La forêt, la cité, l’homme, l’enfant, la femme;
L’eau sombre aujourd’hui vient au secours de la flamme;
Elle vient achever ce fier pays blessé;
Les fléaux avaient hâte, ils ont recommencé;
Après l’embrasement, le torrent nous accable;
À présent ce n’est plus sous l’obus implacable,
C’est dans les flots qu’on voit les villes succomber.
Dures heures de nuit que le temps fait tomber
Goutte à goutte sur nous de sa morne clepsydre!
Hier c’était le dragon, et maintenant c’est l’hydre.

LE POËTE
Est-ce fini? Pensif, je dis au gouffre : Après?
LE CHŒUR

Ô France! mourras-tu? Non. Car, si tu mourais,
Le mal vivrait, l’effroi vivrait; cette fenêtre,
L’aube, se fermerait; on verrait la mort naître.
L’immense mort de tout. France, l’extinction
De Ninive, de Tyr, d’Athènes, de Sion,
Rome oubliant son nom, Thèbes perdant sa forme,
Ne seraient rien auprès de ton éclipse énorme.
Le passé monstrueux se dresserait debout.
Ce cadavre crierait : — J’existe. Éteignez tout.
Plus de flambeaux. Vivez, spectres. La France est morte! —

Alors, ô cieux profonds! l’ombre ouvrirait sa porte;
On verrait revenir toute l’antique horreur,
Les larves, l’ancien pape et l’ancien empereur,
Tous les forfaits sacrés, toutes les basses gloires,
Les sanglants constructeurs des religions noires,
Arbuez, l’âme terrible où se réfugia
L’affreux dogme sorti de l’antre à Borgia,
Bossuet bénissant Montrevel, les bastilles
Faisant comme des dents grincer leurs sombres grilles;

Ces masques, Loyola, de Maistre, dont l’œil luit,
Tomberaient, laissant voir ce visage, la nuit;
Alors reparaîtraient Cisneros, Farinace,
Louvois, Maupeou, la vieille autorité tenace
Sous qui rampe la foule aux confuses rumeurs;
Et ces lugubres lois, et ces lugubres mœurs
Qui livrent aux bûchers l’Italie et l’Espagne,
Jettent au cabanon Colomb, mettent au bagne
Des peuples tout entiers, juifs ou bohémiens,
Et qui font Louis-quinze assassin de Damiens.
LE POËTE
On reverrait ce Styx, le passé! mornes rives!

LE CHŒUR
Non, France. L’univers a besoin que tu vives.
Tu vivras. L’avenir mourrait sous ton linceul.

LE POËTE
France, France, sans toi le monde serait seul.
LE CHŒUR
Tu vivras.
Cependant il ne faut pas qu’on dorme.
On sent derrière soi rôder la mort difforme,
On dirait qu’ennuyé d’attendre les vivants,
Le naufrage hideux, blême et battu des vents,
Sort de la mort et vient chercher l’homme sur terre.
Une lave nouvelle ouvre un nouveau cratère.
LE POËTE
La France est prise en traître une seconde fois.
LE CHŒUR
L’eau perfide s’ajoute au guet-apens des rois.
D’où vient cette colère odieuse des fleuves?
L’eau devient un suaire et tout meurt. Que de veuves!
Que d’orphelins! Massacre inepte d’innocents!
L’horreur, du sombre amas des nuages pesants,

Pleut, comme si le ciel devenait haïssable;
La rose est sous la fange et l’épi sous le sable.
Le miasme impur flotte où flottait le parfum.
Cadavres qui passez, accusez-vous quelqu’un?
Ô berceau à vau-l’eau, que criez-vous dans l’ombre?
Est-ce qu’il se pourrait que les forces sans nombre
Dont le balancement remplit l’immensité,
Eussent on ne sait quelle étrange volonté?
Est-ce que quelque part la nature est maudite?
Est-ce qu’un tel malheur, ciel noir, se prémédite?
D’un astre qu’on ignore est-ce donc le lever?
Et les hommes tremblants se sont mis à rêver.
Les écumes au sud, dans le nord les fumées!
Tout broyé, fleurs et fruits, moissons, peuples, armées,
Sous les chars de la nuit dont l’éclair est l’essieu!
Ruine et mort. Qui donc fait tout cela?
LE PRÊTRE
C’est Dieu.

LE POËTE
Prêtre, que dis-tu là? Dieu serait le coupable!
LE CHŒUR
Quoi! de tant de forfaits ce Dieu serait capable!
Quoi! Dieu viendrait marcher sur nous comme un géant!

LE POËTE
Quoi! prêtres! ce chaos, ce hasard, ce néant
Promenant son niveau sur la foule innocente,
Ces désastres faisant ensemble leur descente,
Ce serait l'action de ce maître hagard!
Quoi! cet aveuglement, ce serait son regard!
Quoi! la Fatalité serait la Providence!
Quoi! dans cette noirceur c'est Dieu qui se condense!
C'est là votre façon d'adorer! Taisez-vous!

Cela fait frissonner, le blasphème à genoux!
Horreur! jusqu'à l'affront pousser l'idolâtrie!
Hélas! nous le savons, qu'en la fauve Syrie
On aille réveiller Baal, qu'on aille au Nil
Fouiller les dieux d'Égypte au fond de leur chenil,
Du Moloch de granit au Jupiter de bronze,
Qu'on rôde, interrogeant le flamine et le bonze,
Ceux de Dodone, ceux de Tyr, ceux de Membré,
Hélas! on trouvera Dieu toujours adoré,
Et l'on constatera toujours, dans tous les cultes,

Le même amour prouvé par les mêmes insultes!
Synagogue ou wigwam, syringe ou parthénon,
Pas un temple ne sait nommer Dieu par son nom;
Leur ignorance à voir l'invisible s'obstine.
Ô triste erreur. Védas, croix grecque, croix latine,
Koran, Talmud, tous font par Dieu même, a Deo ,
Commettre ce forfait qu'on appelle un fléau!
Ah! qui que vous soyez, vous qui, dans la mosquée,
Accouplant à l'erreur la vérité masquée,

Offrant tantôt de l’ombre et tantôt des rayons,
Vendez ce Dieu, sachez ceci, nous y croyons!
Et nous ne voulons pas qu’on l’outrage! ô misère!
Quoi, lui le paternel, quoi, lui le nécessaire,
Il serait sans raison, sans loi, sans cœur, sans yeux!
Il tomberait du ciel, stupide et furieux,
Comme un caillou roulant d’un mont, comme une pierre!
Et quand l’homme dirait en le voyant à terre :
Quel est ce projectile imbécile au milieu
De ce ravage atroce? il reconnaîtrait Dieu!
LE PRÊTRE
Courbez vos fronts. C’est juste et même salutaire;
Il faut bien que le ciel punisse enfin la terre.
Le châtiment descend des éternels sommets.
LE POËTE
Châtier! Punir! Quoi? nos crimes? Soit. J’admets

Qu’il se fait ici-bas bien des actions viles;
Il est des fronts souillés, il est des cœurs serviles;
L’homme est souvent hideux. Soit. Eh bien, supposons
L’impossible, entassons l’Ossa des trahisons
Sur l’abject Pélion des lâchetés; qu’on rêve,
Comme à perte de vue un flot sur une grève,
Toute la faute et tout le crime, et le frisson
De la honte emplissant le livide horizon;
Oui, supposons l’absurde, imposture ou démence,
Le culte de l’agneau produisant l’inclémence,
Un pontife quelconque, indou, juif ou romain,
Essayant d’arrêter Dieu dans l’esprit humain,
Et ne comprenant rien au foudroyant mystère
Qui fait surgir, après Torquemada, Voltaire;
Imaginons, quoi? Tout! Qu’on en vienne à bâtir
Dans ce Paris qui fut soldat, qui fut martyr,
Devant le Panthéon sublime, une pagode;
Qu’on mette Messaline et Tartuffe à la mode;
Qu’on fasse le mensonge évêque ou sénateur,

Si bien que la bassesse ait droit à la hauteur;
Supposons ce qu’on n’a jamais vu, la chimère :
Un faussaire escroquant l’empire; notre mère,
La France, violée et tombant tout en pleurs
Du bivouac des héros dans l’antre des voleurs;
Supposons que trahir devienne une devise;
Que le juge indigné d’un crime, se ravise
Et lui prête serment, puis, sur la loi monté,
Fasse de la justice une fidélité
À ce crime, toujours infâme, mais auguste;
Supposons que le vrai soit faux, le juste injuste,
Le scélérat sacré, l’honnête homme puni;
Et que le prêtre mente et devienne infini
Dans l’opprobre, à ce point de donner pour exemple
Le mal, et d’ébranler les colonnes du temple
Par de prodigieux Tedeums bénissant
La griffe impériale encor rouge de sang!

Tout ce que vous voudrez d’attentats, de folies;
Soit. Rêvez des horreurs sans mesure accomplies
Par n’importe quel roi, n’importe quel sénat!
Eh bien, je ne crois pas que cela me donnât
Le droit d’amonceler des gouffres de nuées,
D’appeler les autans poussant d’aigres huées
Au-dessus d’un logis paisible, et de noyer
L’humble nouveau-né, joie et rayon du foyer,
Qui dans son petit lit chante, rit, jase et cause
En tâchant de baiser le bout de son pied rose!

Non, je ne pense pas que tous ces forfaits-là,
Même en multipliant Judas par Attila,
Même en mêlant Bismarck et Bonaparte au crime,
Pourraient à quelque dieu que ce soit dans l’abîme
Donner, dans l’ombre affreuse où le jour s’engloutit,
Le droit de se ruer sur ce pauvre petit,
Et de faire, en versant sur lui l’ombre ou la flamme,
Rouler le doux berceau dans le sépulcre infâme!

LE CHŒUR
Ainsi ces deux fléaux ne sont point, l’un, l’erreur

De la science, et l’autre, un crime d’empereur,
Des coteaux mal boisés, des villes mal gardées;
Non, c’est le châtiment, de quoi? De nos idées,
Et des pas en avant que fait le genre humain!
LE POËTE
C’est pour venir jeter dans notre dur chemin
Cette explication sourde, bigote, athée,
Que tu te couronnais d’une mitre argentée,
Prêtre, et que d’un camail sacré tu t’empourprais!
La France est accablée, et Dieu l’a fait exprès!
LE PRÊTRE
Oui.
LE POËTE
Quoi! l’assassinat des villes et des plaines,
Quoi! la peste exhalant ses infectes haleines,
Quoi! le silence affreux mêlé d’un affreux bruit,
Quoi! toute cette trombe éparse dans la nuit,
Immense, noyant l’homme et la terre féconde,
Et délayant la mort pour engloutir un monde,
Quoi! ces horribles flots lâchement triomphants,
Quoi! ces vieux laboureurs, quoi! ces petits enfants,

Ces nouveau-nés cherchant des seins, trouvant des fosses,
Quoi! ces mères pleurant leurs fils, ces femmes grosses
Qui flottent, l’œil fermé, dans le gouffre écumant,
Et dont le ventre mort apparaît par moment
Sous le glissement noir de cette transparence,
Quoi! toute cette horreur, toute cette souffrance,
L’eau jetée au hasard comme on jette les dés,
Quoi! la brutalité des fleuves débordés,
Ce serait lui! ce Dieu ferait ces catastrophes!
Lui qu’adore le rêve obscur des philosophes,
Lui devant qui l’on sent tressaillir la forêt,
Lui, que l’uléma chante au haut du minaret

Et que l’évêque loue en élevant sa crosse,
Lui, ce père! il serait cette bête féroce!

Ah! si vous disiez vrai, myopes de l’autel,

Si ce prodigieux et sublime Immortel
Avait de tels accès, et s’il était possible
Qu’ainsi qu’un archer sombre il eût l’homme pour cible,
S’il pouvait être pris dans ce flagrant délit,
S’il chassait les torrents farouches de leur lit,
S’il tuait, fou lugubre, en croyant qu’il se venge,
Alors la Justice, âpre et formidable archange,
Se dresserait devant le pâle Créateur,
Questionnerait l’être immense avec hauteur,
Et le menacerait, elle, cette éternelle,
De fuir et d’emporter l’aurore sous son aile,
Et rien ne serait plus sinistre, ô gouffre bleu,
Que le balbutiement épouvanté de Dieu!

Non! non! non! Je vous plains. J’ai l’horreur infinie
De voir comment un dogme avorte en calomnie,
Mais je vous absous. L’ombre est dans vos tristes murs;
L’obscurité n’est pas la faute des obscurs.
Plus qu’ils ne le voudraient les prêtres sont funèbres;
Votre âme est la noyée informe des ténèbres
Et flotte évanouie au fond des préjugés.
Je vous plains. Mettez-vous à genoux, et songez.

LE CHŒUR
Et nous, les survivants, secourons ceux qui meurent.
Au-dessus des grands deuils les grands devoirs demeurent.
Donnons! donnons! Vidons le reste du sac d’or.
Les barbares n’ont pas tout pris. Donnons encor!
Les rois sont les plus forts et les cieux les tolèrent;
Mais qu’importe! faisons rougir ceux qui volèrent
Cette France, toujours prête à tout secourir.
Soyons le cœur profond que rien ne peut tarir;

La France a toujours eu la bonté pour génie;
Donnons, et penchons-nous sur la vaste agonie.
Donnons! La France, hélas! en est à ne plus voir
Que des bras suppliants dans un horizon noir;

Cette nuit qu'on nous fait, ce n'est pas notre crime,
Et nous la subissons. Soit. Le peuple est sublime
Qui n'éteint pas l'amour quand l'ombre emplit le ciel,
Et devient ténébreux mais reste fraternel.
Des misères sont là, nos âmes leur sont dues.
Ah! que des mains vers nous soient vainement tendues,
Cela ne se peut pas! Donnons! donnons! donnons!
Qu'au moins le désespoir nous ait pour compagnons;
Que pas un affamé ne demeure livide,
Et que pas une main ne se referme vide.
Donnons. Surtout gardons l'espoir. L'espoir est beau;
Nous sommes dans le deuil, mais non dans le tombeau.
LE POËTE
Nous sommes un pays désemparé qui flotte,
Sans boussole, sans mâts, sans ancre, sans pilote,
Sans guide, à la dérive, au gré du vent hautain,
Dans l'ondulation obscure du destin;
L'abîme, où nous roulons comme une sombre sphère,

Murmure, comme s'il cherchait ce qu'il va faire
De ce radeau chargé de pâles matelots;
Délibération orageuse des flots.
Mais, ô peuple, ayons foi. La vie est où nous sommes.
Je le redis, la France est un besoin des hommes;
Après sa chute comme avant qu'elle tombât,
L'immense cœur du monde en sa poitrine bat.
Nous vivons. Nous sentons plus que jamais notre âme.
Ah! ce que nous a fait le destin est infâme,
Et j'en suis indigné, moi qui songe la nuit!
Hélas! Strasbourg s'éclipse et Metz s'évanouit,
Faut-il donc renoncer au Rhin, notre frontière?
Non, nous ne voulons pas. Et la volonté fière,

Avec l’accroissement de nos ongles, suffit.
Ce que le sort fait mal toujours Dieu le défit;
Espérons. Il serait en effet bien étrange
Que le peuple qui va vers l’aurore et dérange
Le vieil ordre du mal rien qu’en se remuant,
Aigle, fût désormais captif du chat-huant,
